(3.) Some think, that this Moſaic Spirit of God, is the Will and Appointment of God, which is ſometimes called his Spirit, Pſal. 33. 6. By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt of them, ſpiritu oris ejus, by the Breath of his Mouth. The Heavens were made by his word of Will and Command, which is repreſented as a vocal word; for ſo the Breath of his Mouth ſignifieth. (t) So the Pſalmiſt explaineth his Senſe in the Ninth Verſe. He ſpake and it was done, he commanded and it ſtood faſt. His word of Will and Command is ſometimes called (not only the Spirit of his Mouth, but) ſimply and without addition his Spirit, Job 33. 4. The Spirit of God hath made me, and the Breath of the Almighty hath given me Life. Of this Spirit ſome expound Job 26. 13. By his Spirit he hath garniſhed the Heavens. But it is more agreeable to the Context and to the uſual Language of Scripture, to interpret Spirit in this Text, to ſignifie his Underſtanding, which is elſewhere called his Spirit, as Pſal. 139. 7. Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? that is, from thy cognitive Mind; for ſo the cognitive Mind of Man is called his Spirit. And as our vital Breath is called

---

(k) S. Chryſoſt. T. 7. p. 591.

(l) Grot. de v. R. C. l. 1. S. 16. in Annot.

(m) Idem Not. in loc.

(n) Grot. de v. R. C. l. 1. S. 16. in Annot.

(o) Gale Not. in Jambl. p. 303.

(p) Plotin. En. 3. l. 5. c. 2.

(q) Souls were ſuppos'd to reſort τῷ ὕδατι θεοπνόῳ ὄντι, to the Water divinely inſpir'd, as Numenius ſaith; whence he alſo affirmeth, τὸν προφήτην εἰρηκέναι, ἐμφέρεσθαι ἐπάνω τοῦ ὕδατος θεοῦ πνεῦμα, the Prophet to have ſaid, that the Spirit of God moved upon the Waters. Porphyr. de Antro. p. 256.

(r) Divinum Spiritum eſſe ubique diffuſum, eoque omnia contineri. Lactant. l. 7. c. 3. & l. 2. c. 9. Animalia non terra per ſe gignit, ſed ſpiritus Dei, ſine quo nihil gignitur. Vid. Grot. Not. in ſap. Solom. c. 1, 7.

(s) Et ſane valde eo inclinat animus, ut à Moſe per ſpiritum Dei aquis incubantem, non quidem intelligatur tertia ſacroſanctæ Trinitatis perſona, ſed ſpiritus primo die à Trinitate creatus, ac poſtea etiam foſſilibus atque aliis, quæ inanima dicuntur, inditus, ut vehiculum foret facultatis motricis, cumque luce caloris vehiculo cauſa eſſet, per quam ſpecies quidem rerum conſervantur, nova autem individua generantur. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 6. c. 1.

(t) Spiritu oris, id eſt verbo, periphraſis qualis, Eſa. 11. v. 4. & 2 Theſſ. 2. v. 8. Alii per verbum intelligunt Filium Dei: per ſpiritum verò oris ſpiritum ſanctum. Sed noſtram expoſitionem confirmat tum repetitio ejuſdem ſententiæ aliis verbis prophetis uſitata, tum collatio verſus noni. Piſcat. in loc.

called our Spirit, ſo it is ſometimes called the Spirit of God as being of his cauſation, Job 27.3. All the while my Breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my Noſtrils. The Spirit of God is that ſpiraculum vitæ, which God breathed into the Noſtrils of Man, as Moſes relateth. But as this Moſaic Spirit of God is very remote and diſtant from that other, which moved upon the face of the Waters: So is the will and appointment of God, which is the Cauſe of Cauſes, but could not be the immediate mover upon the face of the Waters.

(4.) Some think, that this Moſaic Spirit of God is Chriſt, as he is the abſtract Logos; for conſider'd as ſuch he is called by the ancient Writers of the Church a Spirit, the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, and according to Prudentius (u) this Abſtract Logos is the Moſaic Spirit of God, that moved upon the face of the Waters. A large Collection of ſuch Sayings of the ancient Writers is made by Grotius, to which it is eaſie to add many more. For others have obſerv'd (w) that Hermas calleth the Son of God Spiritum Sanctum, and that Ignatius calleth him πνεῦμα ἄμωμον, an immaculate Spirit. Such he was antececently to his Human-divine Generation, as the ancient Writers ſuppoſe; and therefore the Holy Ghoſt in theſe words of Scripture the Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee (x) the Author of the imperfect work upon Matthew interpreteth ipſum unigenitum Deum, to be meant of the unigenit God himſelf. Scimus nihil Spiritum Dei paſſum, ſaith S. Hilary. We know, that the Spirit of God ſuffered nothing. Corpus ſublime in cruce pendebat (ſaith Euſtathius Antiochenus) at divinus ſapientiæ Spiritus & intra corpus degebat, & cæleſtibus inſidebat, & totum ambiebat terram, & abyſſos continebat, & ſingulorum animas perluſtrans dijudicabat, atque omnia uti ſolebat, tanquam Deus adminiſtrabat. The Body did hang upon the Croſs on high, but the Divine Spirit of Wiſdom did both continue in the Body and alſo was ſeated on the Celeſtials, and encompaſſed the Earth, and contain'd the Deeps, and judicially view'd the Minds of every one, and as it was wont, adminiſtred all things as God. So Stephanus Æduenſis a Biſhop ſaith. Qui Spiritus eſt in circumſcriptus, Sanctus Sanctorum, Deus homo factus, in utero Virginis circumſcriptus. He that is an uncircumſcrib'd Spirit, Holy of Holies, God made Man, in the Womb of the Virgin circumſcrib'd. Such is the Language of the Scholaſtic Theology of the ancient Writers of the Church, which is extremely Diſſonant from the Language of the holy Writers of Sripture, wherein we never find the leaſt mention of an Abſtract Logos, that is called by any of theſe Names. [illegible] Spirit, the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of [illegible] and is not ſo great a Diſſonance in the Language of the ancient Writers a plain Argument, that their Senſe is Diſſonant, that they have miſtaken the Conſtitution of Chriſt's Perſon and the Trinity of our Religion? Neither God the Father nor the Son ought to be called the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God; for this is the definitive Name and Notion of the third Perſon of the Chriſtian Trinity. The Son of God cannot be the Spirit of God ſo called in the Scriptures, and therefore is not the Moſaic spirit of God. If the Son of God may be called the Holy spirit, the Spirit of God, then the Spirit of God may be called the Son of God. And this is not all; for by as good Reaſon as the ſecond in the Trinity may be called the Spirit of God, the third in the Trinity may be called the Son of God. If the ſecond in the Trinity may be called the Spirit of God (y) becauſe Spirare, προβολὴ, procedere, are in a large ſenſe applicable to him: The third in the Trinity may be called the Son of God (z) becauſe generare in a large ſenſe is ſaid to be applicable unto him. But theſe are Confuſions and Incongruities intolerable and irreconcileable with the Doctrine of the Trinity. With the Muhammedans who are Anti-Trinitarians, it is no ſuch Incongruity, to call (a) Iſa (Jeſus) Spiritus Dei fortis, as it is with Chriſtians and Trinitarians.

(5.) Many are of Opinion, that this Moſaic Spirit of God is the Chriſtians Holy Ghoſt, for which Interpretation ſeveral Reaſons may be alledg'd, that are ſuch as deſerve to be conſider'd, but may be clearly anſwer'd. One of theſe Reaſons is the Saying of the Jews in their Bereſchit Rabbi and R. Lakiſch, who concerning the Moſaic Spirit of God ſay (b) hic eſt Spiritus Regis Meſſiæ, as it is ſaid, the Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, Pſal. 33. 6. By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made: and all the Hoſt of them by the Breath of his Mouth. Which laſt words (c) R. Aharon an eminent Cabaliſt interpreteth to be meant of the Holy Spirit. But to the Sayings of theſe Hebrew Doctors we may oppoſe the Sayings of many others, and particularly of Maimonides (d) who by the Moſaic Spirit of God and the Breath of his Mouth underſtandeth no ſuch thing as the Chriſtians Holy Spirit, nor would he be the judicious Maimonides, did he ſo interpret them. The Pſalmiſt ſaith again, Pſal. 104. 30. Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are created: And thou reneweſt the face of the Earth. Which words ſeem to argue, that the Geneſis of mundane Nature was by the Agency of the Holy Spirit. But they that with Wiſdom and Judgment interpret theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, do not ſuppoſe, that by the Spirit of God he meaneth the Holy Spirit, but his vivific influence in ſecular Benedictions. As Iſa. 44. 3. I will pour my Spirit upon thy Seed, and my Bleſſing upon thine Off-ſpring; and they ſhall grow up as among the Graſs. Iſa. 32. 15. Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the Wilderneſs be a fruitful Field.

But ſome argue, (e) that the Moſaic word Merachepheth denoteth ſuch Actions, that are attributed to the Chriſtians Holy Ghoſt; which are overſhadowing, Luc. 1. 35. and (appearing in the form of a Dove, Matth. 3. 16.) brooding or hatching כיונה as a Pigeon. Whence S. Baſil thus interpreteth the word ἐπεφέρετο. He cheriſh'd and enliven'd the Nature of the Waters κατὰ τὴν εἰκόνα τῆς ἐπωαζούσης ὄρνιθος, after the manner that a Bird hatcheth, and put into them a certain vital Virtue. (f) The Arabic word רק is the ſame with

---

(u) ——— qui Spiritus olim
Ore ſuperfuſus Patrio, volitabat in undis
Nondum diſcretis nec certo litore clauſis.

J. Mart. calleth this Logos τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τὴν παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Spirit and the Virtue which is from God. Tatianus intituleth him λόγος ὁ ἐπουράνιος πνεῦμα γεγονὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς the Celeſtial Logos, a Spirit generated by the Father, οὗτος ὢν πνεῦμα Θεοῦ, this being the Spirit of God, ſaith Theophilus. Verbum Patris & Spiritus Dei, the word of the Father and Spirit of God, ſaith Irenæus. By Tertullian this Logos is intituled Dei Spiritus & Dei Sermo & Dei Ratio, de Spiritu Spiritus & de Deo Deus, Spiritus Creatoris, Chriſtus Paternæ Perſonæ Spiritus. Jeſus de Cælo manare dignatus eſt, Spiritus ſalutaris. Semper Spiritus Dei fuit ante carnem. Carnem Spiritus Sanctus induitur, ſaith S. Cyprian. In corruptibilem & irreprehenſibilem Spiritum genuit, quem Filium nuncupavit, ſaith Lactantius. Teſtificamur illum bis eſſe natum (ſaith he) primùm in Spiritu, poſtea in carne. Deſcendens itaque de Cælo Sanctus ille Spiritus, Sanctam virginem cujus utero ſe inſinuaret, Elegit. Grot. Not. in Marc. 2. 8.

(w) Dr. Bull Def. Fid. Nic. S. 1. c. 2.

(x) Petav. T. 4. l. 7. c. 5. S. 3. & ibid. l. 3. c. 7. S. 4. & ibid. l. 10. c. 8. S. 4. & ibid. c. 9. S. 9.

(y) Grot. supr.

(z) Petav. de Trin. l. 5. c. 5. S. 11. & l. 7. c. 14. S. 12.

(a) Hotting. Hiſt. Or. l. 1. c. 4. p. 135. ed. 1.

(b) L'Emper. Not. in Jachiad. p. 248.

(c) Dr. H. More op. phil. vol. 1. p. 494.

(d) More Nev. Par. 1. c. 23. 40, 55.

(e) Hotting. Hexaem. c. 1. Qu. 32. p. 42.

(f) Item The. Phil. p. 2[illegible] with the Hebrew רחף, which Arabic word in this place ſo plainly denoteth an Action of the Holy Spirit, that ſome Muhammedan Writers accuſe the Jewiſh Scriptures of corruption in this place, becauſe they make the Spirit of God a Body, attributing thereto a Motion proper to bodily things. Agreeably to theſe Argumentations which are deſign'd to prove the Holy Ghoſts brooding or hatching as a Dove doth, (g) Grotius citeth from Nigidius (in the Scholiaſt of Germanicus) theſe words. Ibi ovum inveniſſe miræ magnitudinis, quod volventes ejecerunt in terram, atque ita columbam inſediſſe, & poſt aliquot dies excluſiſſe Deam Syriæ, quæ vocatur Venus. In which Fable (h) the Egg is ſuppoſed to denote the Chaos and the Dove the Holy Spirit. So the Heathen Fables are interpreted by them, that ſuppoſe a Moſaic Philoſophic Cabala. But is it imaginable, that the Pagans Goddeſs Venus ſhould be the Off-ſpring of the Chriſtians Holy Spirit? Or that the Pagans (i) had any notice of our Holy Ghoſt? Or that either Jews or Pagans knew, that the Holy Ghoſt would appear in the form of a Dove, or that ſuch a form ſhould be the Symbol and Hieroglyphick thereof? For it cannot be ſuppoſed with Grotius, that the Holy Ghoſt was called a Dove, becauſe Moſes uſeth the word Merachepheth, which when it ſignifieth Incubation, ſignifieth the Incubation of any other Bird as well as a Dove. (k) But Semiramis was the Oriental Venus and the Syrian Goddeſs; the Name Semiramis ſignifieth a Dove, as Heſychius affirmeth; the Oriental Pagans therefore aſcrib'd the Origin of their Venus to the great Egg of a Fiſh in the River Euphrates and the Incubation of a Dove. They aſcrib'd it to an Egg, that being ἀρχὴ γενέσεως, the beginning or principle of Generation; they aſcrib'd it to the Egg of a Fiſh in the River Euphrates, the Origin of Venus being fom the Waters; and they aſcrib'd it to the Incubation of a Dove, becauſe of the Cognation of that Animal with their Venus, which was Semiramis. Thus to interpret a Paganical putid Fable, is much more Paganical (and therefore much more probable) than to interpret the Egg of a Fiſh to mean the Chaos, and the Incubation of a Pigeon the overſhadowing of the Holy Ghoſt. Of which overſhadowing or incubation there is not any Indication in the Text of Moſes: But the ſuppoſal of it claſheth with the Order and Texture of his Hiſtory. For if when the Creation was in fieri, as it was in every Days-work, or if in his account of the fifth Days-work (when the Waters brought forth abundantly) he had ſaid the Spirit of God Merachepheth upon the face of the Waters, the Context would have determin'd the word, to ſignifie brooding or incubation. But Moſes uſeth the word in his Deſcription of the turbid and tumultuous State of the Chaos. His Creation is on this ſide the Kingdom of God and the Chriſtians Holy Spirit (the Gifts and Graces thereof,) his Creation is not the Saint of God-kind of Creation (but meerly the Creation of mundane Nature;) therefore by the Spirit of God he doth not mean the Chriſtians Holy Spirit, nor doth Merachepheth ſignifie the incubation thereof. If he had deſign'd any account of the holy Spirit, the Agency and Operations thereof, and the Life which it inſpireth, he would have taken eſpecial Notice of it in his Hiſtory of the Creation of Man (his Sanctity and Spirituality:) But throughout that whole Hiſtory there is not the leaſt Syllable touching the Holy Spirit, the Agency and Operations thereof. His Hiſtory of the Coſmopœia is ſo alien from the things inviſible and ſublime, that it taketh no Notice of their Exiſtence (of the Exiſtence of the Holy Angels and the Heaven of Beatitude;) and is it likely, that an Hiſtory ſo Craſs and Plebeious doth reveal the Trinity and the Holy Spirit the ſublimeſt of Spiritual Myſteries? It is not probable therefore, that this Moſaic Spirit of God is the Chriſtians Holy Ghoſt, or that the Geneſis of mundane Nature was by the Agency thereof, or that there is ſuch an unlimited Truth in this uſual Maxim, as the Scholaſtic Theology ſuppoſeth, (l) producta ſunt omnia à patre, per filium, in ſpiritu, all things were produc'd by the Father, through the Son, in the Spirit.

(6.) Some ſuppoſe (m) that this Moſaic Spirit of God is God himſelf, which is ſaid to be the Opinion of R. Solomon. And it muſt be acknowledg'd, that in many places of the Old Teſtament the Spirit of God ſignifieth his mental Self (for ſo we may ſpeak of God, ſeeing we may ſpeak of him ἀνθρωποπαθῶς) or the Spirit that he conſtitutively is, as Zech. 6. 8. Thoſe that go toward the North-country, have quieted my Spirit in the North-country. Gen. 6. 3. My Spirit ſhall not always ſtrive with Man. Iſa. 63. 10. They rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit. The ſenſe of which place may be underſtood by comparing it with Numb. 14. 11. Pſal. 95. 10. (n) Nimirum Deus quia Sanctus eſt, impietatem ferre non poteſt. Iſa. 40. 13. Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his Counſeller hath taught him? Mic. 2. 7. Is the Spirit of the Lord ſtraitned (as to Goodneſs, Wiſdom or Power?) Iſa. 59. 19. When the Enemy ſhall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord (the Spirit that he conſtitutively is exerting its Vigour and Puiſſance) ſhall lift up a ſtandard againſt him. Iſa. 63. 14. As a Beaſt goeth down into the Valley, the Spirit of the Lord cauſed him (Iſrael) to reſt. Spiritus Domini, i. e. Deus ipſe, more Hebræo, ſaith Grotius. Zech. 4. 6. This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, ſaying, not by (human) Might, nor by Power, but by my Spirit, that is, by my ſelf. So that the ſenſe of the place is Parallel to Hoſ. 1. 7. I will have mercy upon the Houſe of Judah, and will ſave them by the Lord their God, and will not ſave them by Bow, nor by Sword, nor by Battel, by Horſes, nor by Horſemen. Pro. 1. 23. Behold, I will pour out my Spirit unto you, ſaith Wiſdom. Spiritum meum, id eſt voluntatem, ſenſa, ſaith Mercerus. When I pour out my Mind and Affection unto any, I pour out my Spirit unto them, and to this ſenſe that of the Prophet may be underſtood, Ezek. 39. 29. Neither will I hide my face any more from them: For I have poured out my Spirit upon the Houſe of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord God. But this acceptation of the Spirit of God is hugely alien from that which moved upon the Waters in the Moſaic Coſmopœia, which was below God's creative Agency, and could not be an Agency immediately agreeable to God himſelf.

II. If theſe Names the Spirit and the Spirit of God are hugely ambiguous and of great variety of Acceptations, this inferreth, that the Spirit of God is of various ſorts and kinds, and muſt be variouſly diſtinguiſh'd; and that ſome one is eminently called the Spirit of God, and is diſtinguiſh'd from all other by this Name the Holy Spirit. The Spirit of God muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into Natural and Supernatural, Verbal

(g) Ubi ſup. de V. S. C.

(h) Burnet. Tell. Theor. Sacr. p. 255.

(i) V. Didym. de Sp. Sanct. initio.

(k) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 23. l. 2. c. 55, & 76. l. 4. c. 51. Selden. de D. Syr. Synt. 2. c. 3.

(l) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 3. p. 98.

(m) Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 1. c. 3.

(n) Grot. Not. in loc.

and Real, that which God conſtitutively is, and that which God communicatively is. And this muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into that which God communicatively is in Nature and ſecular Benedictions, and in Religious Inſpiration. This latter is that which the holy People call the Holy Spirit or (Ghoſt being in the Saxon Language the ſame with Spirit) the Holy Ghoſt. Which Name is purely and peculiarly Judaical, the Chriſtian Church deriveth it from the Jews, the Pagans knew nothing of it, ſave only ſome few of them that learn'd it from the Jews and Chriſtians. (o) The Name of the Holy Spirit is altogether unknown to them, that Philoſophiz'd without the holy Scripture. (p) S. Auſtin thinketh, that the Heathen Philoſophers made mention of the Father and the Son, but ſine Spiritu Sancto Philoſophati ſunt, their Philoſophy was wholly ſilent touching the Holy Spirit. The Name being purely Judaical, in all Reaſon the meaning of it in the firſt place and in ſome degree muſt be learned from the Jews, from their Scriptures and their Doctors that ſtudy them, who give us this account of it. (r) The Spirit ſignifieth that divine Intellectual influence inſtilled by God into the Prophets, by Virtue whereof they Propheſie. As Numb. 11. 17, 26. I will take of the Spirit which is upon thee and will put it upon them. And the Spirit reſted upon them. (s) The firſt degree of Propheſie is, when any one is by Divine aid (auxilio divino) moved and animated to do ſome great and heroical work, and diſcerneth in himſelf that Motion. This Endowment is called the Spirit of the Lord, and of the Man endow'd with that Virtue it is ſaid, the Spirit of the Lord came or reſted upon him, or the Lord was with him. This was the Caſe of the Judges, of Saul, of Amaſai. 1 Chron. 12. 18. Of Moſes and of David, whereby the one ſlew the Egyptian, the other prevail'd againſt the Bear, the Lion and the Philiſtin. But none of theſe were by this Virtue moved or excited to ſpeak or ſay any thing, that is a ſecond degree of Propheſie. When a Man feeleth a thing to ariſe in him, and to reſt upon him, which impelleth him to ſpeak, ſo that he ſpeaketh either of Sciences and Arts, or Pſalms and Hymns, or ſalutary Precepts of Life, or things Political, or laſtly things Divine, being awake and in the ordinary vigour of his Sences. And this is the Perſon, of whom it is ſaid, that he ſpeaketh by the Holy Spirit. By the inſtinct of this Species of the Holy Spirit David wrote his Pſalms, Solomon his Proverbs and his other Books. By this Afflation the Hagiographa were written, whence they are called Kethubbim, which ſignifieth, that they are written by the Holy Spirit. 2 Sam. 23. 2. The Spirit of the Lord ſpake by me, and his word was in my Tongue, ſaith David, to ſignifie, that he ſpake by the impulſe of the Holy Spirit. Such was Jahaziel, Zechariah, Azariah, and ſuch were all thoſe Prieſts, of whom Counſel was ask'd by Urim and Thummim, as our wiſe Men ſay, Majeſtas divina habitat ſuper eum, & loquitur per Spiritum Sanctum. The Divine Majeſty (the Schecinah) reſteth upon him, and he ſpeaketh by the Holy Spirit. In this Rabbinical account of the Holy Ghoſt it importeth extraordinary ſupernatural Gifts, Abilities and Powers, and alſo an extraordinary ſupernatural impulſe and incitation. As in Saul, when the Spirit of God came upon him, and his Anger was kindled greatly, there was an extraordinary impulſe and incitation. 1 Sam. 11 6. In Samſon there was an extraordinary Power, when the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and he rent a Lion, as he would have rent a Kid. Judg. 14. 6. So the Prophet ſaith, Mic. 3. 8. I am full of Power by the Spirit of the Lord. So our Saviour chargeth his Diſciples, to tarry in Jeruſalem, until they were endu'd with (the Holy Spirit) Power from on high. Luc. 24. 49. Himſelf is ſaid, to be anointed with the Holy Ghoſt and with Power. Act. 10. 38. In Spiritu Dei virtus (s) ſaith Tertullian. So in the Book Coſri (t) the Holy Spirit is called אומץ Robur Divinum and העזר האלהי Auxilium Divinum. Maimonides therefore by his firſt degree of Propheſie call'd by him Auxilium Divinum, and the Spirit of the Lord meaneth a Species of the Holy Spirit. And this muſt be his Senſe; for he calleth his ſecond degree of Propheſie a Species of the Holy Spirit.

III. From this Rabbinical account of the Holy Spirit it appeareth, in what ſenſe (according to the mind of the chiefeſt Rabbins) the Holy Ghoſt may be called the Schecinah, namely in the ſenſe of this Rabbinical Maxim cited by Maimonides, Majeſtas divina habitat ſuper eum & loquitur per Spiritum Sanctum. Many have obſerv'd, that the Jews call the Holy Ghoſt the Schecinah, and there is great truth in the Obſervation. For Elias in his Tisbi ſaith (u) our Doctors call Ruach Hakkodeſh (the Holy Spirit) Schecinah, becauſe it reſteth upon the Prophets, Whence it is, that where the Hebrew Text ſaith Gen. 45. 27. The Spirit of Jacob their Father reviv'd, R. Solomon thus expoundeth it; the Schecinah reſted on him, which had departed from him, becauſe of his Grief and Sorrow. Onkelos thus rendreth it; The Holy Ghoſt reſted upon Jacob. Sometimes therefore the Jews uſe Schecinah and Ruach Hakkodeſh promiſcuouſly, as if they confounded them: But ſometimes they plainly diſtinguiſh them. For Schecinah and Ruach Hakkodeſh are reckoned as two of the five diſtinct Ornaments, in which the ſecond Temple came ſhort of the firſt. They inquire, why the word by which God ſignifieth, that he would be glorified in the ſecond Temple, Hagg. 1. 8. ſuffereth an Apocope of He, which is numerally Five? and their Anſwer is, that five things were wanting in the ſecond Temple, whereby it differ'd from the firſt. Namely, the Ark (with the Propitiatory and Cherubim) the Schecinah, Ruach Hakkodeſh (which is Propheſie) Urim and Thummim and the Fire from Heaven. Sometimes the Jews connect the Schecinah and the Holy Spirit. For whereas Hannah ſaith to Eli (who ſuppos'd, that ſhe was drunk) no, my Lord, I am a Woman of a ſorrowful Spirit: R. Solomon thus expoundeth the words. Thou art not a Judge in this Cauſe, thou bewrayeſt thy ſelf, that the Holy Spirit doth not reſt upon thee. But the Talmud thus expoundeth them; Thou art not a Judge in this Cauſe: The Schecinah and the Holy Ghoſt is not with thee. This Talmudical mode of ſpeaking is moſt accurate and accommodate, moſt agreeable to the ſenſe of the principal Hebrew Doctors; for their ſenſe is, That the Holy Ghoſt is the Holy Inſpiration of the Schecinah. In ſome ſort therefore (according to their ſenſe) it is the Schecinah, and in ſome ſort it is not the Schecinah. For being the Holy Inſpiration of the Schecinah (the Divine Majeſty) ſo far it is the Schecinah, and ſo far it is not the Schecinah. Secondarily alſo and conſequentially the Holy Ghoſt is the Schecinah and reſteth on the Prophets; for the Divine Majeſty with his

---

(o) Appellatio Spiritus Sancti penitus ab his ignoratur, qui extra ſacram Scripturam Philoſophantur. Didym. de Sp. Sanct. l. 1. Initio.

(p) Qu. ſuper Exod. l. 2. Qu. 25.

(r) Maimon. Mor. Nev. Par. 1. c. 40.

2 Chron. 20. 14. and 24. 20. and 15. 1.

(s) De Carne Chriſt. c. 19.

(t) P. 213.

(u) Buxtorf. Lex. Talm. in Rad. שכן Col. 2395. &c.

Holy Inſpiration (the Holy Ghoſt) is the Schecinah and reſteth on the Prophets: That Holy Inſpiration therefore ſecondarily reſteth on them and is the Schecinah. The Schecinah and the Glory of God are the ſame. (w) For the Glory of God is his Majeſty, and the Majeſty of God is his Glory. So Gen. 28. 16. The Lord is in this place, is in Onkelos thus rendred; the Glory of the Lord dwelleth in that place. The Glory of the Lord being the ſame with the Schecinah, the Spirit of the Schecinah muſt neceſſarily be the Spirit of Glory, as the Apoſtle ſtileth it. 1 Pet 4. 14. If ye be reproach'd for the Name of Chriſt, happy are ye; for the Spirit of Glory and of God reſteth upon you. The Spirit of Glory and of God is the ſame with the Spirit of God and of Glory (the Text muſt be expounded, as if there was in it an ὑστρολογία,) and accordingly the Syriack thus rendreth the words, the glorious Spirit of God. The Spirit of God is the Spirit of Glory in reſpect of God, as being the Spirit of the Schecinah (which is the Glory of God;) and to us it is the Spirit of Glory, as conſtituting us Illuſtrious, Magnificent, of Royal and Divine Condition (in reſpect of Endowments) and cauſing us to glory in Tribulation. By the Pſalmiſt according to the ſyriac Verſion, Pſal. 51. 12. it is called thy glorious Spirit, according to the vulg. Lat. Spiritus tuus principalis, which I would render thy Royal Spirit; for by Clemens it is intituled (x) χρυσὸς ὁ βασιλικός, the Royal Gold.

(w) Idem ibid.

(x) Strom. l. 5. p. m. 434.

IV. From this Rabbinical account of the Holy Spirit it appeareth, that amongſt the Jews it is of a larger and ſtricter Acceptation, but in both Acceptations it is the Inſpiration of ſupernatural Gifts and Graces. For although they diſtinguiſh but four Modes of ſupernatural Revelation, and call but one of them the Holy Spirit, namely, Bath Kol, Urim and Thummim, Propheſie (by Dream or Viſion) and Ruach Hakkodeſh (the Holy Spirit,) yet it muſt not be ſuppos'd, that they confine the Holy Spirit to this laſt Mode of ſupernatural Revelation. For Maimonides having defin'd it, calleth it a Species of the Holy Spirit; and he ſuppoſeth, that the Prieſts who were ask'd Counſel by Urim and Thummim, ſpake by the Holy Spirit. By his firſt degree of Propheſie alſo he meaneth a species of the Holy Spirit; and when the Jews mention the Holy Spirit as one of the five things, wherein the ſecond Temple was defective, thus they ſpeak of it, ſpiritus ſanctus qui eſt Prophetia. (y) Sometimes the ancienteſt Monuments of Jewiſh Learning call all Propheſie by the Name of Spiritus Sanctus, which they attribute to Eſaiah and Ezekiel, which were known Prophets. (z) Certain Dreams conſider'd in themſelves they depreſs below any degree of Propheſie, yet the Interpretation of them they attribute to the רוח הקדש Holy Spirit. So Joſeph becauſe of his Oneirocriticks is ſaid, to be a Man, in whom the Spirit of God is, that is, the Inſpiration of God (which inſpireth with ſupernatural Gifts) ſpiritus prophetiæ à facie Dei, ſaith Onkelos. And upon the ſame account it is ſaid of Daniel, that in him was the Spirit of the Holy Gods. The light and underſtanding and excellent Wiſdom that was found in him (ſupernatural Gifts and Abilities) his Heathen Admirers deriv'd from the Spirit of the Holy Gods, by whoſe Spirit they meant their Inſpiration, for the Pagan inſpired Vates becauſe they were inſpired, are called by Apuleius (a) Numinis divino ſpiritu repleti, ſuch as were filled with the Divine Spirit of God. So Celſus calleth the ſublime Philoſophers of ancient times (b) Men that were filled with the Spirit, whereby they declared many good things. And Orpheus becauſe inſpired he calleth (c) ἄνδρα ὁμολογουμένως ὁσίῳ χρησάμενον πνεύματι, a Man undoubtedly endowed with an Holy spirit. The Jews and Pagans therefore agree, that the Holy Spirit or Spirit of God is definitively his Inſpiration, which inſpireth ſupernatural Gifts. So in Scripture the Spirit ſometimes ſignifieth that Gift the Inſpiration of Propheſie, as Hagg. 2. 5. According to the word that I covenanted with you, when you came out of Egypt, ſo my Spirit remaineth among you. Sometimes the Spirit (the Spirit of God) ſignifieth the Prophetic Doctrine, which is of God's Inſpiration. Iſa. 30. 1. They take Counſel but not of me, and cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add ſin to ſin. Sometimes the Spirit ſignifieth the Eſtate of Prophetic Inſpiration. Ezek. 37. 1. The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the Spirit of the Lord. Apoc. 1. 10. I was in the Spirit (the Prophetic Inſpiration) on the Lord's day. So Apoc. 4. 2. and 17. 3. and 21. 10. to be in the Spirit ſignifieth, to be in the Viſion and Inſpiration of Propheſie, which Inſpiration of Propheſie was an influx from God (d) but not without the Miniſtery of an Angel (that furniſhed the Prophetic Scene, and repreſented the Prophetic Viſions to the Phancy of the Prophet) as the generality of the Hebrew Doctors ſuppoſe agreeably to their Holy Scriptures. Which alſo repreſent the Holy Spirit as רוח החן the Spirit of Grace (which is the Title of (e) an Hebrew Doctor's Book) and as the Inſpiration of Graces as well as Gifts ſupernatural. Zech. 12. 10. I will pour upon the Houſe of David and upon the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem the Spirit of Grace and ſupplications. Iſa. 11. 2. The Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, the Spirit of Wiſdom and Underſtanding, the Spirit of Counſel and Might, the Spirit of Knowledge and of the Fear of the Lord. Ezek. 36. 27. I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my Statutes. Thus far the Jews and Pagans together with the Old Teſtament conduct us to a definitive Notion of the Holy Spirit; for according to theſe Notices of it this muſt be the definitive Notion of it; it is the God inſpiration (that Agency and Virtue) which inſpireth ſupernatural Gifts and Graces. Or it is the ſupernatural Inſpiration, Agency and Virtue, that God communicatively is. Ἀπόῤῥοια, an Efflux or Aporrhœa (f) ſaith Athenagoras.

(y) Mr. Smith of Propheſie. c. 6. p. 233.

(z) Ibid. c. 3. p. 189.

Gen. 41. 38.

Dan. 4. 8, 9. and 5. 14.

(a) Amict. min. el. p. 65.

(b) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 363.

(c) Ibid. p. 367.

(d) Mr. Smith. ſupr. c. 5.

(e) Buxtorf. Bibliothec. Rab. p. 323.

(f) P. 27.

V. It appeareth from this Rabbinical account of the Holy Spirit, that it properly belongeth to the comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial, and is the Inſpiration-virtue thereof. For to this comprehenſion the Schecinah, the Divine Majeſty, and the Glory of God (wherewith the Holy Spirit is intimately connex'd) do properly belong; and the Name Spiritus Sanctus ſheweth, that it properly belongeth to this comprehenſion. The Holy Spirit is not a thing on this ſide Sanctity Imperial, or extrinſecal thereto, but it is intrinſecal thereto, and is of Sanctity Imperial as to Kind and Quality, and conſtitutively as being a principal conſtitutive Ingredient of the comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial. It is the Spirit of God, not as he is Parental Nature or a Parental Providence, but as he is the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial; It is the Spirit of the Holy Government, of the Holy People, and of the matters of their Holineſs,

(g) &

(g) & eſſe apud profanos & extraneos non poteſt. It is the Spirit of the Sanctity Imperial in the diviſive ſenſe, ſo as to be alſo the Spirit of Sanctity Imperial in the comprehenſive ſenſe. Upon which account (amongſt many other) it is denominated the Holy Spirit; whence it appeareth, how unskilful and irreligious a thing it is, (h) to aſſert in the firſt place, that the Moſaic Spirit of God, which moved upon the Waters, is the Holy Spirit, and in the next place, that it is the Platonic Soul of the World, ſo identifying the Holy Spirit with the Platoniſts Mundane Soul. So ſeveral of the ancient Writers of the Church that ſuppoſe the Platonic Triad the ſame with the Chriſtian Trinity, implicitly affirm, that the Holy Spirit is the Mundane Soul. Several of them (which will be hereafter cited) ſuppoſe the Holy Spirit, to be Parental Nature, and ſo far identify it with the Mundane Soul. Gr. Naz. is more modeſt than to call it ſo, yet is not uncriminal, when ſpeaking of the Holy Spirit he ſaith of the Pagan Theologers, (i) ἐφαντάσθησαν μὲν νοῦν τοῦ παντὸς προσαγορεύσαντες, they had an Imagination of it calling it the Mind of the Universe. But P. Abailardus expreſly taught, (k) Spiritum ſanctum eſſe animam mundi, that the Holy Spirit is the Soul of the World. Of this Sentiment are Poſtellus and Eugubinus, who ſaith of Theodorus the Platoniſt. (l) The third Opificer he called the Fountain of Souls, than which nothing is more divine and profound: for our Theology calleth him the Creator of Spirits; and this is the Soul Vivificatreſs of the World, the Mother of Souls. Of the Platoniſts in general he ſaith, This third King they as it were, make (what our Theology ſo much proclaimeth) the Font of Souls: for that Soul is the Holy Spirit, as is plain, and we have every where taught. The Spirit we call the Vivificator, Creator, ſower of Souls: Thou art called the Paraclet, the Gift of the moſt High, the Living Fountain, Fire, Charity and Spiritual Unction. At this rate the Kingdom of God is confounded with Mundane Nature, the Religion of the Chriſtian Trinity with Heathen Coſmolatry and Mundane Theiſm; the Chriſtian Theology is miſrepreſented, which is ſaid, to proclaim things that it knoweth nothing of (that the Spirit is the Creator and Font of Souls and Spirits) and thus an Irreligious Jumble is made of unholy, philoſophic, mundane things, the Platoniſts Vivificatreſs of the World and Fountain of Souls, with the Chriſtians Holy, Spiritual and Saint of God-kind of things, with their Spiritual Unction and Fountain of Living Waters, their Paraclet and Holy Spirit, which common ſenſe would diſtinguiſh from a Mundane Spirit, as Tertullian doth, * à quo ſpiritum ſanctum poſtulem, à quo nec mundialis ſpiritus præſtatur? So the Apoſtle oppoſeth the Spirit of the World to the Spirit which is of God, 1 Cor. 2.12. The Holy Spirit is not to be confounded with the Spirit of the World in the beſt Senſe imaginable, much leſs with a Perſian Arimanius or a Pagan Demon.

(g) S. Cypr. Ep. 74.

(h) Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c 23. Gale Court of the Gent. par. 2. p. 60, 324, 334.

(i) Or. 37.

(k) Vaſqu. T. 1. Diſp. 22. Qu. 3.

(l) Tertium opificem vocabat Fontem animorum, quo nihil divinius & profundius. Quippe & noſtra Theologia vocat eum Creatorem ſpirtuum; & hæc eſt Anima mundi vivificatrix, mater animarum. De Per. Phil. l. 2. c. 7. Hunc tertiam Regem quaſi faciunt (quod noſtra tantopere vociferatur Theologia) fontem animarum: eſt enim Anima illa ſpiritus ſanctus, ut apparet, & ut docuimus ubique. Spiritum autem nos vivificatorem, creatorem, ſatoremque animarum dicimus: Tu paracletus diceris, donum Dei altiſſimi, fons vivus, ignis, charitas & ſpiritalis unctio. Ibid. c. 8. vid. Jacob. Thomaz. Diſſert. 21. & 14.

* C. Marcion. l. 4. c. 26.

Section III.

Of the various Significations of the Holy Spirit in the New Teſtament, and chiefly of the Perſonal Acceptation thereof.

I. THE Holy Spirit in the New Teſtament often ſignifieth in the Imperſonal Acceptation of the Old Teſtament (That Agency the Inſpiration of God, or meerly the Holy Inſpiration-Virtue:) but the New Teſtament ſuperaddeth thereto the Perſonal Acceptation; and ſo the Holy Spirit ſignifieth the Holy Inſpiration-virtue perſonal, the Agent (immediate yet mediate) of the Holy Inſpirations. For it muſt be underſtood, to ſignifie in the perſonal acceptation in all ſuch places, which are Characteriſtical of an Inſpiration-virtue perſonal; and it is moſt reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that it ſo ſignifieth in all thoſe places, wherein ſuch as ſpeak of it, and thoſe to whom it is ſpoken of, were ſuch to whom the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt was known: but in all other places it is moſt reaſonable, to underſtand it, to ſignifie only in the imperſonal acceptation, which is the Notion of the Jews and of the Old Teſtament. For the Hebrew Doctors (m) non credunt. As they believe not the Trinity, ſo they deny the Subſtantiality and Perſonality of the Holy Spirit, making it nothing more than a Quality or Energy (an Afflatus) although there are ſome fond Conceits amongſt them touching a ſpiritus ſanctus of another nature; for in one place of the Book Coſri (n) the Intellectus agens is called ſpiritus ſanctus and in ſome places (citing the Book Jezirah) that Author telleth us, (o) That the Spiritual Forms are created or formed out of a ſubtil Spiritual Body, which is called by them ſpiritus ſanctus. But theſe Philoſophic Fopperies touching a ſubſtantial or perſonal ſpiritus ſanctus are of no affinity with the Subſtantiality and Perſonality of the Chriſtians Holy Spirit: Nor is the Triad which that Author citeth from the Book Jezirah of any affinity with our Trinity. (p) By three God created the World ספר סיפור & ספר Sephar, Siphur and Sepher, Mental Conception, Speech, or word of Command and Writing (for ſo theſe Hebrew words are us'd to ſignifie in this Triad) and theſe three are one, which in Man are three; for he conceiveth a thing in his Uunderſtanding, ſpeaketh it by his Mouth, and writeth it with his Hand: but the Writing of God is his Creatures, and the Speech of God is his Writing, and the Mental Conception of God is his Speech or Word. This is the Triad of the Book Jezirah, which hath nothing in it remarkable but a Jingle of three Hebrew words, yet Learned Men and Chriſtian Divines Rabbinically infer from it, (q) That the Jews had a Notion of three diſtinct Subſiſtences in the Deity ſuitable to theſe of Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. As if the Creatures were ſuitable to the Holy Ghoſt, The word of command (let there be Light) to the Son, and Mental Conception to the Father. The ſame Inference is made from Philo, although he knew no other Trinity than that of the School of Plato. But great ſtreſs is laid upon the Chaldee Paraphraſt, in whom notwithſtanding there is not the leaſt ſhadow or indication of three Subſiſtences in the Deity ſuitable to theſe of Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt: for it will hereafter appear, that ממרא דיי in the Chaldee Paraphraſt is of no affinity with the ſecond Perſon in our Trinity, and is there any thing in the Chaldee Paraphraſt touching the Perſonality and Deity of the Holy Ghoſt? (r) P. 113. Yes, ſaith Rittangel, (r) in ſeveral places of the Pentateuch יהוה ſignifieth the Holy Ghoſt, and in ſuch places it is render'd by the Chaldee Paraphraſt שכינתא. But this whole Pretenſion is moſt enormouſly falſe, that in the Pentateuch either the Name יהוה in the Hebrew Text, or the Name שכינתא in the Chaldee Paraphraſt is ever meant of the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore Buxtorf ſpeaking of the Holy Ghoſt's being called (s) Lex. Talm. col. 2396. Shecinah ſaith, (s) ſic forte apud Rabbinos communes: non autem in Targum. If the Shecinah in the Chaldee Paraphraſt is never uſed to ſignifie the Holy Ghoſt, it is to no purpoſe, to obſerve with Rittangel, that it is never us'd in this Paraphraſt, to ſignifie the Divine Glory as ſuch. It is not for this reaſon, becauſe he appropriateth it to ſignifie the Holy Ghoſt, that he doth not uſe it, to ſignifie the Divine Glory as ſuch; (t) Ibid. col. 2394. but he ordinarily uſeth it (t) to ſignifie the Divine Majeſty as a needful honourary Periphraſis of God, and to remove all ſuſpicion of Corporeity from him (for which Maimonides very much commendeth him) to this uſe he appropriateth it, and therefore doth not uſe it, to ſignifie the Divine Glory as ſuch, becauſe he ſuppos'd the Divine Glory ſo wholly the ſame with שכינתא, as that it ſuited not with that honourary Periphraſis. From the Chaldee Paraphraſt therefore it doth not appear, that the Jewiſh Church had any Cabala of the Trinity, or that the Jews had amongſt them a Notion of three Subſiſtences in the Deity ſuitable to theſe of Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. But it ought to be acknowledg'd, that the Jews Philoſophic-paganiz'd in the latter times of their Commonwealth, that others of them beſides Philo might be as good Trinitarians as he was, and that the Jewiſh Cabaliſts ten Sephiroth (or Numerations) were deriv'd from the Platonic and Pythagoric Theology.

II. The Hebrew Doctors do not acknowledge the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe it is not notic'd in their Scriptures of the Old Teſtament; nor in that miſtaken place (whence ſome ſinfully infer, that Chriſt is inferiour to the Spirit, becauſe the ſent is inferiour to the ſender) Iſa. 48. 16. The Lord God and his Spirit hath ſent me: for the Text muſt be expounded as Hagg. 1. 13. Then ſpake Haggai the Lord's Meſſenger in the Lord's Meſſage. The Lord's Meſſage doth not ſignifie any thing of it ſelf authoritative, but only declarative. So Zech. 7. 12. The words which the Lord of Hoſts hath ſent in his Spirit by the former Prophets. The Prophetic Spirit here doth not ſignifie any thing of it ſelf authoritative, but only declarative, and ſo it ſignifieth in the Text under conſideration, which is rightly thus expounded by Grotius; Dominus Deus miſit me & Spiritus ejus, i. e. Dominus per ſpiritum hæc mihi imperavit. God ſent the Prophet (a Type of Chriſt) by his Spirit, which ſignifieth only his Inſpiration in the actual and virtual acceptation; for not any thing characteriſtical of a Perſon, not any thing of Perſonal Agency is aſcrib'd to the Holy Spirit in any place of the Old Teſtament. Nor was it needful, that his Perſonality ſhould be notic'd, till the times of the Religion of Chriſtianity, which is Spirituality of Religion and Piety, and the diſpenſation of the Holy Spirit; then and not before it was neceſſary, that the Theology of the Holy Ghoſt touching his Nature, Attributes, Offices, Operations, Worth, Importance, and our Duty towards him ſhould be introduc'd; and therefore then and not before it was neceſſary, that his Perſonality ſhould be notic'd; which Perſonality doth not hinder, but that the Holy Spirit is (for the main) of the ſame definitive Notion both in the Old and New Teſtament-times, only his contracted definition muſt be now enlarg'd and expanded. For when we define the Holy Ghoſt, The Holy Inſpiration-virtue, this muſt not be underſtood, to confine the Holy Ghoſt to internal Inſpirations, and to exclude external miraculous Operations; for theſe are attributed to the Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament. If according to the Senſe of Jews and Pagans we define the Holy Ghoſt, the God-inſpiration, this muſt be underſtood, to ſignifie not only that Agency, but that Agent (the God-inſpiration Agent) which is Virtus Divina in the perſonal acceptation. He is the Agent of the Holy Inſpirations (they are his Operations.) He is the Ghoſtly Agent of the Holy Inſpirations (as being his Spiritual Internal Operations;) he is an Agent of the Holy Inſpirations, ſo as to be Chriſt's (or God's) Agent, that is imploy'd to do his work, and ſo as to be his vicarious Agent, that adminiſtreth his Affairs in his place and ſtead. Chriſto vicariam navat operam. miſit vicariam vim ſpiritus ſancti, qui credentes agat, ſaith Tertullian. All which perſonal Agency is attributed in the New Teſtament to the Spirit of Chriſt, by which Name the Apoſtle calleth the Prophetic Spirit of the Old Teſtament-times, 1 Pet. 1. 11. which ſheweth, that then the Prophetic Spirit was in eſſe reali the Holy Ghoſt in the perſonal acceptation, but not in eſſe cognito, his Perſonality not being notic'd in the Old Teſtament. Nor doth the New Teſtament throughout a great part of it ſpeak of the Holy Ghoſt in any other Notion than that of the Old Teſtament, which is not the perſonal, but only the actual and virtual acceptation. So the Apoſtle ſaith of the Old Teſtament, 2 Tim. 3. 16. All Scripture is given by Inſpiration of God. He expoundeth himſelf therefore, and what he meaneth by the Holy Ghoſt, when he ſaith, Act. 28. 25. Well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt by Iſaias. Our Saviour, his Apoſtles, and other Holy Men and the Holy Angels ſpake and preach'd to the Jews touching the Holy Ghoſt, without giving them any new Notices of the Holy Ghoſt; and becauſe they muſt be ſuppos'd, to ſpeak to them intelligibly, not in an unknown ſenſe and ſignification of the Holy Ghoſt, therefore they ſpake of the Holy Ghoſt to the Jews in their own Judaical Notion taking the Holy Ghoſt only in the actual and virtual acceptation. So it ſignifieth in the Angel's Meſſage to Zacharias Luk. 1. 15, 41, 67. touching John the Baptiſt; He ſhall be filled with the Holy Ghoſt. In the Narrative touching his Parents; they were filled with the Holy Ghoſt (the holy Inſpiration-Virtue real;) and in the like Narrative touching Simeon Luk. 2. 25, 26, 27. (for theſe Narratives were originally Judaical and ſpeak in the Phraſe and Senſe of the Jews) the Holy Ghoſt was upon him, it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghoſt, that he ſhould not ſee Death, before he had ſeen the Lord's Chriſt. And he came by the Spirit into the Temple. So it ſignifieth in our Saviour's arguing with the Jews touching the Meſſiah. David Mar. 12. 36. himſelf ſaith by the Holy Ghoſt, The Lord ſaid to my Lord; in S. Peter's Sermon to the Jews, Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; Act. 5. 32. in his Diſcourſe with the Jewiſh Senators, We are his Witneſſes, and ſo is alſo the Holy Ghoſt. Non nos tantùm ſed & ſpiritus S. virtus divina, ſaith Grotius. In John Baptiſts

Sermon to the Jews touching Chriſt, both in reſpect of the Senſe of the Speaker and the Hearers, The Holy Ghoſt was only of the actual and virtual Matth. 3. 11. acceptation. He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire.

III. So in the Sayings of the Angel unto Jews touching the conception and birth of our Saviour there is no appearance of an Intention, that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be taken in the perſonal acceptation, Matth. 1. 20. That which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt; i.e. it is of the virtus divina commonly called the Holy Ghoſt by the Holy People, becauſe it is the Holy-inſpiration-virtue. Of the ſame ſenſe is Luk. 1. 35. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee (ſaith the Angel to the Bl. Virgin) and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: For by the Power of the Higheſt is meant the virtus divina called the Holy Ghoſt by the Holy People. So our Saviour ſaith, that by the Spirit of God he wrought thoſe Miracles, which the Phariſees imputed to the Devil, whence he chargeth them with blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, Matth. 12. 28, 31. In which Diſcourſe of his to the Jews there is no appearance of his Intention, that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be taken by them in the perſonal acceptation, nor is Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt compar'd with Blaſphemy againſt the Son univerſally (for it is ſuch Blaſphemy againſt God and Chriſt, which is againſt the Holy Ghoſt:) but this is plain and apparent in our Saviour's Diſcourſe, he repreſenteth the Holy Ghoſt as operative of external Miracles in Chriſtianity (calling it the Finger or Hand of God, that is, his doing, Luk. 11. 20.) whence it is manifeſt, that the Holy Spirit is, The holy internal Inſpiration-virtue, ſo as to be alſo of external miraculous Efficiency and Power. The Holy Luk. 24. 49. Act. 1. 8. and 10. 18. Ghoſt is in the New Teſtament ſignify'd by the Name of Power (divine) which Power operateth internally (as Jeſus returned in the Power of the Spirit (an holy Magnanimity) into Galilee; Luk. 4. 14. and 1. 17. Eph. 3. 16. John Baptiſt went before him in the Spirit and Power (the inſpir'd Virtue and Magnanimity) of Elias; and Believers are ſtrengthen'd with all Might by his Spirit in the Inward Man;) and it operateth alſo externally; for the Goſpel came not unto the World in Word only, but alſo in Power and in the Holy Ghoſt, confirmatum potentiâ & efficaciâ miraculorum, confirmed by the Power and Efficacy of Miracles, which the Preachers of it wrought by the Holy Ghoſt. Not only the ſupernatural Gifts of the Mind wherewith the Apoſtles were endow'd by Inſpiration (the Gift of Tongues, Prophecy, diſcerning of Spirits, and ſuch more) but all the External Miracles which they wrought (their cauſing the Blind to ſee, the Lame to walk, healing the Sick, raiſing the Dead, diſpo- 1 Cor. 2. 4. ſeſſing Devils) are called the demonſtration of the Spirit and of Power. They were a demonſtration of the Verity of Chriſtianity by Miracles wrought by the Power of the Holy Spirit. The truth of the Chriſtian Religion was demonſtrated and the World of Gentiles was converted Rom. 15. 19. (ſaith the Apoſtle) through mighty Signs and Wonders by the Power of the Spirit of God: Which words not only denote the external miraculous efficiency of the Holy Ghoſt, but are alſo a conſiderable Notice of his Perſonality; for it is not a meer Power, to which the Apoſtle attributeth Power.

IV. But to prove his Perſonality ſome places of the New Teſtament are commonly alledg'd, which are thought irrefragable proofs of it, that are really very great Objections againſt it. Theſe places are, Act. 10. 19. The Spirit ſaid unto Peter, Behold, three Men ſeek thee. Ariſe therefore and get thee down and go with them, doubting nothing, for I have ſent them. Act. 13. 2. To the Prophets and Teachers at Antioch the Holy Ghoſt ſaid, ſeparate me Barnabas and Saul for the Work whereunto I have called them. In theſe places multifarious perſonal Actions ſeem to be attributed to the Holy Spirit, namely, commanding, ſending, calling to a Work, taking care of and ordering the Affairs of the Goſpel and of the Church, (as elſewhere the Apoſtle ſaith, Take heed unto your ſelves and to all the Flock, over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers, Act. 20. 28.) and the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, I have ſent, I have called, which ſeemeth a direct and expreſs attribution of Perſonality to the Holy Ghoſt. But this cannot be the genuine Expoſition of theſe places; for God is manifeſtly the Doer of the things ſpoken of and the Speaker in one of them, Act. 10. 19. ὁ δὲ ποιεῖ ὁ θεὸς, ſaith S. Chryſoſtom upon the place. It was God (not the Holy Spirit) who by his Angel ſent the Men, which came unto Peter. And ſeeing God was the Doer of the things ſpoken of, therefore God (yet by his Spirit) was the Speaker in this place, and the Spirit ſpeaketh not in its own perſon, but in the perſon of God. So that the place muſt be underſtood, as Grotius expoundeth it, εἶπεν αὐτῷ τὸ πνεῦμα, i. e. Deus non per viſum ſed per afflatum: The Spirit ſaid unto him, that is, God ſaid unto him by Inſpiration. The Inſpiration of God ſpeaking as the Inſpiration of God, which is the ſame with God ſpeaking by Inſpiration, ſaid unto Peter, I have ſent them. In the one of theſe places therefore the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh not in the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, but in the perſon of God; and the other place being of the ſame Nature, is neceſſarily of the ſame Interpretation: which alſo the Phraſe of it inferreth; for it muſt be underſtood according to the Phraſeology of Scripture, which repreſenteth the Apoſtles as ſeparated, not to the Holy Ghoſt, but unto God (wherein Sanctity conſiſteth) to the Goſpel of God and to the Miniſtry of his Word. Nor (according to the Phraſe of Scripture) were they called and ſent by the Holy Ghoſt, as the Perſon from whom they had their election, calling and appointment to their Work, their Miſſion and Commiſſion, but by God. This whole Buſineſs being by his appointment, not by the Holy Ghoſt's, therefore the Text ſaith, Act. 13. 2, 4. As they miniſtred to the Lord and faſted, by his appointment the Holy Ghoſt (the Inſpiration of the Lord, ſpeaking as his Inſpiration, which is the ſame with the Lord ſpeaking by Inſpiration) ſaid, ἀφορίσατε δή μοι, ſeparate to me Barnabas and Saul for the Work whereunto I have called them. So they being ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt (the Inſpiration of the Lord ſpeaking as ſuch, or the Lord ſpeaking by Inſpiration) departed unto Seleucia. This method of interpreting theſe two places is not only demonſtrable from themſelves (the Arguments which they afford) but from the whole tenour and current of the Holy Scriptures: for there is not any one place either in the Old or New Teſtament, wherein it can be ſhew'd, that the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh in the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt; but this Holy Ghoſt always ſpeaketh in the perſon of God or Chriſt, when it ſpeaketh in the firſt perſon I; as Act. 28. 27. The Holy Ghoſt ſaith, leſt they ſhould be converted and I ſhould heal them: but the words are manifeſtly ſpoken in the perſon of God, not of the Holy Ghoſt. So in the Apocalyptick Epiſtles to the Seven Churches, the words are manifeſtly ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt and they are in ſuch ſenſe his words (To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the Tree of Life; repent or elſe I will come unto thee quickly) yet this is conſtantly the Phraſe in thoſe Epiſtles, He that hath an Ear, let him hear, what the Spirit ſaith unto the Churches. The Socinians have objected againſt the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt, that he did never appear in the form of a Perſon; but they had made a ſtronger Objection, if they had obſerv'd, that the Holy Ghoſt never ſpeaketh in his own perſon (or of himſelf) when he ſpeaketh in the firſt perſon. This difficulty was diſcern'd by Origen diſcourſing of thoſe words of S. Peter; The Scripture muſt be fulfilled, which the Holy Ghoſt foreſpake by the Mouth of David touching Judas; his Biſhoprick let another take. (u) If it is our Saviour (ſaith he) that ſpeaketh theſe words, how is it that Peter ſaith, The Scripture muſt be fulfilled, which the Holy Ghoſt foreſpake by the Mouth of David? Is this the thing, we ſhould learn from hence, that in the Prophets the Holy Ghoſt perſonateth? And if it perſonateth God, it is not God that ſpeaketh, but the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh in the perſon of God. And if it perſonateth Chriſt, it is not Chriſt that ſpeaketh, but the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh in the perſon of Chriſt. Origen might have ſaid, that the Spirit ſpeaking is the ſame thing as the Inſpiration ſpeaking; that the Inſpiration ſpeaking is the ſame thing as God or Chriſt ſpeaking by Inſpiration; that his ſpeaking by Inſpiration is ſpeaking by his Inſpiration-Virtue and Agency (Real and Perſonal) which the Holy Ghoſt is; and that although the Holy Ghoſt is a Perſon, yet he is ſuch a kind of Perſon, as that it doth not belong to him, to ſpeak in his own Perſon, but in the Perſon of God or Chriſt (as will hereafter appear;) and by this Origenical Proſopopæia the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt is not injur'd. For this Origenical Proſopopæia is not like the common Rhetorical Proſopopæia, which is deſtructive to the Perſonality of the Holy Spirit, as it is made uſe of by the Followers of Socinus, who ſuppoſe the Holy Ghoſt to be meerly a Power, Virtue or Efficacy of God, a quality and unſubſtantial kind of thing. On the contrary, we aſſert a certain Perſonality of the Holy Spirit, which we ſuppoſe, to be clearly notic'd in the New Teſtament.

2. 7,
17, 29.
3. 6,
22.

V. The Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt appeareth from our Saviour's Notices of him, Joh. 14. 26. The Comforter (or Advocate) which is the Holy Ghoſt, whom the Father will ſend in my Name, he ſhall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance. Joh. 15. 26. When the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth which proceedeth from the Father, he ſhall teſtifie of me. Joh. 16. 7, 8, 13, 14, 15. It is expedient for you, that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will ſend him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the World of Sin, and of Righteouſneſs, and of Judgment. When the Spirit of Truth is come, he will guide you into all Truth: for he ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf; but whatſoever he ſhall hear, that ſhall he ſpeak: and he will ſhew you things to come. He ſhall glorifie me; for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you. In theſe Diſcourſes of our Saviour his deſcriptive Notices of the Holy Spirit are by perſonal Names, Offices, Attributes and Operations, which are plainly Notices of his Perſonality. He ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf (ſaith our Saviour,) and what can He and Himſelf ſignifie but a Perſon? Speaking of τὸ πνεῦμα τ̃ ἀληθείας (the Spirit of Truth) which is of the Neuter Gender, our Saviour doth not ſay, when it ſhall come, but ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐκεῖνος, τὸ πνεῦμα τ̃ ἀληθείας, when he cometh, the Spirit of Truth; which would not be good Grammar and Syntax, nor an agreeable Expreſſion, if the Holy Ghoſt was not a Perſon; of an Imperſonal Quality or Energy it would be intolerably incongruous, to ſay (as our Saviour doth of the Holy Ghoſt) he ſhall be ſent, he ſhall come, he ſhall hear, he ſhall ſpeak (receive from one and communicate to another by way of hearing and ſpeaking) he ſhall reprove, he ſhall inſtruct, he ſhall teſtifie; for theſe and ſuch more are plainly perſonal Actions. An Office alſo is proper to a Perſon, and this our Saviour aſſigneth to the Holy Ghoſt; for he is appointed to be the Chriſtian's Teacher, and Guide, and Comforter (as the word παράκλητος properly ſignifieth, and as ſeveral of the Ancients render it,) our Saviour promiſeth them another Comforter, ἄλλον ὡς ἐμὲ, another ſo as I am, as S. Chryſoſtom well expoundeth his words. But the word παράκλητος ſignifieth alſo an Advocate (one that patronizeth another, pleadeth and maintaineth his Cauſe:) So the Holy Ghoſt was ſent (according to our Saviour's Notices of him) to be Chriſt's and the Chriſtians Advocate, to plead and maintain their Cauſe againſt their Adverſaries, that accus'd and perſecuted them; even the Spirit of truth, whom the World cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you, Joh. 14. 17. The Holy Spirit is of kind and quality Holy, an Alien from and contrary to the World, and ſo the World is to him; not one of the World's Acquaintance, but peculiarly one of the Regenerate Chriſtian's Acquaintance; thus the Holy Spirit is notic'd by our Saviour; therefore he is deſcrib'd, not as a meer Quality, but as a Perſon of Quality. As he is the Chriſtians, ſo he is alſo Chriſt's Advocate, ſent and appointed, to plead his Cauſe againſt the World's Criminations and Tyranny, to teſtifie of the truth of his Meſſias-ſhip (as a convincing Evidence,) is by Office Chriſt's Witneſs, and therefore is a Perſon, as the other Witneſſes of Chriſt were, with whom he is conjoyn'd, Joh. 15. 26, 27. He ſhall teſtifie of me, and ye alſo ſhall bear witneſs. He doth not come of himſelf, (but is ſent, deputed and appointed,) nor ſpeak of himſelf (without antecedent Notice or Inſtruction from another,) but he ſpeaketh what he heareth (what is notic'd unto him) and receiveth the things of Chriſt, which he communicateth to his Apoſtles; therefore he is Chriſt's Agent and his Legate, and conſequently he is a Perſon. Nor can our Lord's Diſcourſe be expounded by a Proſopopæia (attributing to a meer Energy all the Properties and Deſcriptive Notices of a Legate) without Ineptitude intolerable.

Notandum Dei ſpiritui qui eſt παράκλητος opponi ſpiritum malignum qui eſt κατήγορος, & ſic dicitur Apoc. 12. 10. Grot. Not. in Joh. 14. 16

VI. The Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt appeareth from the Apoſtle's Notices of him; for when S. Paul ſaith, τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, the things

1 Cor. 2. 10, 11, 12,

(u) Πῶς οὖν, εἰ ὁ Σωτήρ ἐστιν ταῦτα λέγων, φησὶν ὁ Πέτρος, δεῖ πληρωθῆναι τὴν γραφὴν, ἣν προεῖπε τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον διὰ στόματος Δαβίδ; μήποτε οὖν διδασκόμεθα ἐνταῦθα πανταχοῦ προσωποποιεῖ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐν τοῖς προφήταις· καὶ ἐὰν προσωποποιήσῃ τ̃ Θεὸν, οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ Θεὸς ὁ λαλῶν, ἀλλὰ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ Θεοῦ λαλεῖ· καὶ ἐὰν προσωποποιῇ τ̃ Χριστὸν, οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ Χριστὸς ὁ λαλῶν, ἀλλὰ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ Χριστοῦ λαλεῖ. Philocal. c. 7.

of God knoweth none but the Spirit of God, he plainly attributeth Knowledge and Underſtanding to the Holy Spirit, and the term οὐδεὶς, ſheweth, that he ſpeaketh of Perſons, and that the Holy Spirit belongeth to and is comprehended under the Genus of Perſons, and of Perſons diſtinct from God in the ſtrict Acceptation. For it is a Vanity, to argue (w) as ſome are prone to do, that if no Perſon knoweth the things of God but the Spirit of God, then the Father and the Son are excluded; for the Apoſtle conſidereth the Spirit of God as diſtinct from God in the ſtrict Acceptation (that is, from the Holy Government in the ſtrict Acceptation) and touching all Perſons diſtinct from God in the ſtrict Acceptation he pronounceth, that none of them knoweth the things of God but the Spirit of God. But touching the Spirit of God the Apoſtle affirmeth, that he knoweth the things of God, and can and doth reveal them; and this he affirmeth very plainly. For he compareth the Spirit of a Man and the Spirit of God, and affirmeth, that as (and in the ſame Senſe that) the Spirit of a Man knoweth the things of a Man, ſo the Spirit of God knoweth the things of God. He affirmeth it again, when he ſaith, the Spirit ſearcheth all things (penetrateth to the knowing them) yea even the deep things of God. Which words cannot be rightly expounded by a Metalepſis in this manner; the Spirit is ſaid to ſearch the great myſterious things, becauſe he cauſeth Men to inveſtigate them; for as theſe words are part of the Apoſtle's Reaſoning about the Holy Spirit, ſo they are manifeſtly his Reaſon, why the Holy Spirit revealeth the great myſterious things; and the Senſe of them is, the Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea the deep things of God, and therefore can and doth reveal them. His Knowledge and Underſtanding is conjoin'd with Will and Affection; for Will the Apoſtle attributeth to the Holy Spirit, when to his Enumeration of ſupernatural Gifts (Gifts of the Spirit) he ſubjoineth 1 Cor. 12. 8,--11. All theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every Man ſeverally as he will. His diſtribution of ſupernatural Gifts is from his own Volition (which ſpeaketh him a Perſon;) the Apoſtle alſo deſcribeth the Holy Spirit as an Agent of the Holy Inſpirations, and he is ſollicitous, that they ſhould be conſider'd as iſſuing from one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit: But if the Holy Spirit is not a Perſon, there is no reaſon, why as great a diverſity of Holy Spirits might not be acknowledg'd, as there is diverſity of Inſpirations, Afflations and Energies. But although there are diverſities of Gifts and Operations, yet there is but one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit (which therefore is not a meer Operation) and to this Holy Spirit the Holy Apoſtles attribute, Act. 5. 9. the Affection of Anger (he may be tempted or provok'd, which is incompetible to a meer Energy or Virtue) the Affection of Grief or Diſplicence, Eph. 4. 30. (and who can grieve a meer Virtue or Efficacy?) and how is it poſſible, to lye unto or go about to deceive a meer Energy or Power, that is incapable of underſtanding and judging? Act. 5. 3.

(w) Crellius de uno Deo. l. 1 S. 3. c. 14.

VII. The Perſonality of the Holy Spirit appeareth from the preſcript form of Baptiſm, and other Parallel places of the New Teſtament, for the form of Baptiſm preſcrib'd by our Saviour ſheweth, that there is a Ternary or Trinity in the Chriſtians Holy Sovereignty or Godhead, that theſe are the Imperial Party or of the Imperial Eſtate in the Kingdom of God (the comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial) whereof Chriſtians become the Citizens and Subjects by their Baptiſm. They are Baptiz'd in the Name of every one of theſe three, as Diſciples and Religioniſts are Baptiz'd in the Name of the Perſon, to whom they become Diſciples and Religioniſts. 1 Cor. 1. 13. The Holy Ghoſt therefore (in whoſe Name they are Baptiz'd) is a Perſon, whoſe Diſciples and Religioniſts they become by Baptiſm: But ſo as primarily and immediately to be Chriſt's Diſciples and Religioniſts, ſecondarily and conſequentially the Holy Ghoſt's Diſciples and Religioniſts. Being in ſuch ſenſe Baptiz'd in his Name, and becoming (ſo far as is competible to him) his Diſciples and Religioniſts, they avow his Authority, his Superiority of Relation, his ἀξιωματικὴν προστασίαν, honourary prefectſhip which he hath as to themſelves and the Church; they enter into Covenant with him, own him for their Subrector (a kind of Sub-rector, and ſuch a Subrector which is of the Godhead) all which Notices of the Holy Ghoſt and of our Religion demonſtrate, that he is a Perſon. The form of Baptiſm ſheweth his Conſortſhip with the Father and the Son (as a Collegue) in the Holy Sovereignty and Government of Chriſtians (who are the Creature or Subject-party in the Kingdom of God) in the Benefits which they receive from this their Holy Sovereignty, in the Duties alſo which they owe unto it; and this Conſortſhip plainly proveth his Perſonality. It would be extremely incongruous, to join him with the Father and the Son (who are manifeſtly Perſons) in the Inſtitution of Baptiſm, if he was not a Perſon, and it would be extremely needleſs and ſuperfluous. For he that believeth and profeſſeth the Father or the Son, doth by ſo doing ſufficiently believe and profeſs his divine Virtue and Power; he that ſubjecteth himſelf to the Father or the Son, doth by ſo doing ſufficiently ſubject himſelf to his divine Virtue and Power: As he that acknowledgeth the Sovereignty of a Prince, doth by ſo doing ſufficiently acknowledge his Sovereign Virtue and Power. If therefore the Holy Ghoſt is nothing but the Sovereign Virtue and Power of God, this is ſufficiently acknowledg'd in the acknowledgment of the Father and the Son: And as it would be thought an abſurdity and an extravagance, for one that hath made an acknowledgment of the Sovereignty of a Prince, to be called to make a diſtinct acknowledgment of his Sovereign Virtue and Power: So after an acknowledgement of the Father and the Son to be called, to make a diſtinct acknowledgment of the Holy Ghoſt, muſt be thought abſurd and extravagant, if he is nothing but the Sovereign Virtue and Power of God. Our Saviour might as reaſonably appoint, that we ſhould be Baptiz'd in the Name of the Sovereign Goodneſs and Holineſs of God as of his Sovereign Virtue and Power; and conſequently if the Holy Ghoſt is nothing but that Sovereign Virtue and Power, his Inſtitution of Baptiſm muſt be thought extremely abſurd and incongruous. And we may juſtly ask touching the Holy Ghoſt, what doth he here in the Buſineſs of our Confederating with the Chriſtian Sovereignty, if he is not a Perſon of the Chriſtian Sovereignty? Why is he rank'd with Perſons, if he is altogether Heterogeneous and no Perſon? Why is he rank'd with Divine Perſons, that muſt be ador'd, if he is incapable of any Adoration? And if he is incapable of any Adoration, why is it, that he is ſo propos'd in Baptiſm, as that unavoidably he muſt be ador'd? For it is impoſſible, that an intelligent and pious Perſon ſhould be Baptiz'd in his Name without doing him ſome act of Adoration. His Conſortſhip with other Divine Perſons that muſt be ador'd, appeareth not only in the form of Baptiſm, but in divers other places of the New Teſtament, wherein he is one of the Enumeration of a Ternary, which is in the Chriſtian Sovereignty contradiſtinct to the Creature-party in the Kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Ye are ſanctified, ye are juſtified in the Name of the Lord Jeſus and by the Spirit of our God. 1 Cor. 12. 4, 5, 6. Now, there are diverſities of Gifts, but the ſame Spirit. And there are differences of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord. And there are diverſities of operations, but it is the ſame God, which worketh all in all. 2 Cor. 13. 13. The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all. Eph. 3. 18. Through Chriſt we have an acceſs by one Spirit unto the Father. Eph. 4. 4, 5, 6. There is one Body and one Spirit, one Lord, one God and Father of all. Three Divine Witneſſes our Saviour ſpeaketh of, which can be no other than three Divine Perſons. Joh. 8. 18. I am one that bear Witneſs of my ſelf, and the Father that ſent me, beareth Witneſs of me. Joh. 15. 26. The Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he ſhall teſtifie of me. Agreeably to our Saviour his belov'd Diſciple ſpeaketh of three Divine Witneſſes of Chriſtianity. 1 Joh. 5. 7. There are three that bear Record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt. Some reaſon there is, to doubt of the Authentickneſs of this place, the Objections againſt it are not inconſiderable: But the Arguments for it are ſtronger than the Objections againſt it. The principal Arguments for its Authentickneſs are its exact Agreement with the Senſe of our Saviour, with S. John's both Senſe and Phraſe, with the Context both Antecedents and Conſequents, with the form of Baptiſm, and with the Senſe of the Primitive Chriſtians, who were manifeſtly Trinitarians. Accordingly this Verſe is cited (x) by Tertullian and S. Cyprian, which ſheweth, that it was in the ancient Copies of the African Churches. But many of the ancient Fathers knew nothing of it, which ſheweth, that it was wanting in the ancient Copies of many other Churches as it is wanting in the Syriac, Arabic and Æthiopic Verſions. Which difference amongſt the ancient Copies muſt be thought caſual, not wilful and out of deſign, becauſe it was to no purpoſe. The Verſe therefore muſt be thought to have been caſually omitted, not inſerted; for it could not be inſerted but wilfully and out of deſign. And if it was not inſerted, it ought to be retain'd, and to be acknowledg'd genuine, not ſuppoſitious. Hitherto we have argu'd for the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt only from particular places of the New Teſtament: But the cleareſt and fulleſt demonſtration of it will be a Deſcription of the Nature of the Holy Spirit in the next Section.

(x) Tertull. adv. Prax. c. 25. S. Cypr. de Unit. Eccl. c. 4.

SECTION IV.

Of the Holy Spirit as it is Spiritual-vital formally and Efficient-cauſally, or as it is Vital-ſanctity in it ſelf and to us.

I. AS there are ſeveral Eſſentialities of a Man and a Chriſtian (without which he cannot be a Chriſtian in the Plenary Senſe:) So the Spirit without ſeveral Eſſentialities cannot be the Spirit in the Plenary Senſe of the Science of Sanctity. For it cannot be the Spirit without Inviſibility, which our Saviour ſignifieth by reſembling it to the Wind, which produceth very great and ſenſible Effects, and the force of it is very ſenſibly felt, yet cannot be ſeen by the Eye of Man. Joh. 3. 8. and becauſe (y) the World regardeth only the things that are ſeen, therefore he ſaith of the Spirit of truth, the World cannot receive him (for it regardeth not, mindeth not, nor affecteth the receiving him) becauſe it ſeeth him not. Joh. 14. 17. The Spirit cannot be the Spirit without Operation. (z) For in all Languages the Name Spirit denoteth Motion and Agitation or the cauſe of it; and therefore denoteth Operation. Nor can the Spirit be the Spirit, unleſs it be an operative unbodily kind of Virtue. (a) For that is the Spirit, which moveth the Animal. The Spirit muſt be an Energy, a Superlative and Creature-tranſcendent Energy, or elſe it cannot be the Spirit. (b) The Holy Scripture every where attributeth Energy to the Spirit, whence the Spirit is called the Power of the higheſt. The mighty Energy of this Divine Spirit was ſignified by the ruſhing mighty Wind on the day of Pentecoſt, and the appearance of flaming Fire that accompany'd it (Fire being of all things corporeal the moſt Energetical) and by John the Baptiſt's Character of our Saviour, he ſhall Baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with Fire (Spiritu qui eſt veluti ignis quidam Spiritualis) Matth. 3. 11. Act. 2. 2, 3. So ſome Expoſitors think, that this Divine Spirit is called the Spirit of Judgment and of Burning, Iſa. 4. 4. but it is more probable, that in this place of the Prophet the Spirit ſignifieth the Spirit that God conſtitutively is, which is a Spirit of punitive Severity, and was to the improbous Jews both in the times of the Old and New Teſtament in ſuch Senſe a Spirit of Judgment and of Burning. But to this Divine Spirit which God communicatively is, the Name of the Spirit of Burning is very accommodate, to ſignifie the holy Incitations and Ardours which it enkindleth, the mighty Energy and purifying Virtue thereof, by Reaſon whereof our Saviour (who diſpenſeth it) is as a Refiner's Fire to purifie the Sons of Levi. Malach. 3. 3. Which Energy of this Divine Spirit is Vital or Vivificative, otherwiſe it could not be the Spirit; for Vivification is from a Spirit both in Nature and in Religion. The one is called by Irenæus (c) afflatus Vitæ qui animalem efficit hominem, the other Spiritus vivificans, qui ſpiritalem efficit eum. The Spirit quickneth unto Spiritual Life, and therefore is Spiritual-vital or Vital-ſanctity, which is the grand Eſſentiality of

(y) Grot. not in Joh. 14. 17.

(z) Nam nomen Spiritus, ait S. Thomas, in rebus corporeis impulſionem quandam & motionem ſignificare videtur. Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 12. S. 6 In omnibus linguis vocabulum Spiritus, Ruach, πνεῦμα, generaliter ſignificat vel motum & agitationem, vel naturam ſeu cauſam quamcunque agitantem & moventem. Melanchon. Exam. Theol. p. m. 190.

(a) Τὸ πνεῦμα γὰρ κινεῖ τὸ ζῶον. V. Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 165.

(b) Paſſim S. Scriptura Spiritui tribuit τὸ ἐνεργητικὸν, hinc idem Spiritus vocatur δύναμις ὑψίστου. Grot. Not. in Matth. 12. 28.

(c) L. 5. c. 12.

it. For it cannot be the Spirit, unleſs it is that Spirituality, which is the genuine Sanctity, and which this Name the Spirit ſignifieth in the New Teſtament. Which Spirituality is Vital Sanctity: This therefore is that which the Holy Spirit is.

II. The Spirit is confronted and oppos'd to the Letter and to the Fleſh, which ſpeaketh it to be Spiritual-vital or Vital-ſanctity in it ſelf and to us. For the Apoſtle oppoſeth τὸ πνεῦμα & τὸ γράμμα, the Spirit and the Letter, meaning by the one the Goſpel-religion, and by the other the Law-religion. (d) For Moſes brought us not τὸ πνεῦμα, the Spirit, ἀλλὰ γράμματα, but only dead external Letters. There is a wide difference therefore between theſe two Religions. (e) This is the difference of the Old and New Teſtament; there the Law is written in Tables of Stone, here in the fleſhy Tables of the Heart; ſo that there a Man is made a Sinner by the Letter that killeth, here he is made a lover (of God and Holineſs) by the Spirit that quickneth into Spiritual Life. To the one of theſe oppoſite Religions the Apoſtle attributeth Oldneſs, the oldneſs of the Letter, which is without the newneſs of Spiritual Life: To the other he attributeth Newneſs, the newneſs of the Spirit, which denoteth Vital Sanctity; for it ſignifieth the newneſs of Spiritual Life. As the Spirit is oppos'd to the Letter, ſo it is uſually confronted and oppos'd to the Fleſh, and theſe are contrary the one to the other (in their Inclinations and Deſires) as the Apoſtle ſaith. (f) Lucta & bellum inter hæc eſt, qualis inter lucem & tenebras, inter aquam & ignem. This contrariety between Fleſh and Spirit (which ſpeaketh them of a contrary Nature) infeſreth, that if the one of them is known, the Nature of the other connot be unknown, the Inveſtigation of the one of them is the Inveſtigation of both. Now, the Fleſh is manifeſtly of a Vital Nature, and ſo far as it muſt be mortified and crucified, it is of a criminal Vital Nature; therefore it is definitively Vital Carnality and Wickedneſs. Which alſo appeareth from the Works of it; for all poſitive Sin and Wickedneſs is the Luſt of it, it is Prolific and Parturient thereof. All the Sins that Men commit, are from the Appetites and Inclinations, the Motions and Suggeſtions thereof, and are for Fleſh-pleaſing. And if the Fleſh is definitively Vital Carnality, the Spirit muſt be of this definitive Notion Vital Sanctity. Which alſo appeareth from the Fruits of it; for the Fruits of the Spirit are ſo many Branches of Vital Sanctity; Love, Joy, Peace, Long-ſuffering, Gentleneſs, Goodneſs, Faith, Meekneſs, Temperance, Gal. 5. 22, 23. Divines look upon it as a thing indifferent, whether by the Spirit we underſtand the Holy Spirit, or the New Nature implanted in God's Children (the Spirit may well be underſtood, to ſignifie both of them:) But our Argument muſt be underſtood touching the Holy Spirit; which is the Spirit, that the Apoſtle certainly meaneth, when he ſaith, if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the Law (which diſpenſeth not the Holy Spirit.) Gal. 5. 18. Rom. 8. 14.

Rom. 7. 6. 2 Cor. 3. 6.

(d) S. Chryſoſt. in 2 Cor. 3. 6.

(e) Hæc apparet diſtantia veteris & novi teſtamenti, quòd lex ibi in tabulis, hic in cordibus ſcribitur, ibique fiat prævaricator per occidentem literam, hîc dilector per vivificantem Spiritum. S. Aug. de Spir. & lit. c. 25.

(f) Pareus in Gal. 5. 17.

III. The Spirit is the Efficient of the Chriſtians Regeneration, which ſpeaketh it to be Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. That which is born of the Fleſh is (live) Fleſh, and that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit, ſaith our Saviour. Agreeably whereto the Fathers ſay (g) Spiritus plerunque ponitur pro gratia Spiritali, the Spirit for the moſt part is put for Spiritual Grace, which is Vital Sanctity. S. Baſil ſaith (h) when we conceive ἐνεργουμένην χάριν, Grace to be wrought in us, we ſay, that the Spirit is in us. Origen ſaith of one, that liveth according to Virtue (i) ἀποφαινόμεθα πληροῦσθαι ἢ μετέχειν θείου πνεύματος, we pronounce him to be full of, or to partake of a Divine Spirit. (k) Divines ſay, that the Apoſtle by the Spirit meaneth our new Nature, which according to our Saviour is Spirit (Spiritual-vital) of the ſame Nature with the Holy Spirit, who therefore is Spiritual-vital in himſelf and to us. A new Nature is ingendred in Regenerate Souls, which is a Vital Nature and an Holy Vital Nature. Their new and divine Birth is their noble Birth (whereby they are well-born indeed) their holy kind of Generation and Birth (whereby they are born of the holy kind and are holy by Birth and by Kind, as ſome are ſtirpe & ingenio bellicoſi) their heavenly kind of Generation and Birth (whereby they are born of the Divine Family, and are of another kind from Worldly Men;) and as in our Natural Generation and Birth Natural Life is ingendred, ſo in this Spiritual Generation and Supernatural Birth Spiritual Life is ingendred by the Spirit of Life; (l) ζωὴ γὰρ ἐστιν ἡ ἄνωθεν ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ γέννησις, for the Supernal Generation from God is Life. Interiour Grace and Holineſs is a Vital Nature, the Fountain of Vital Acts; and if this Effect reſembleth the Cauſe, if our Regeneration is (m) conformis ſuæ appropriatæ cauſæ ſpiritui ſancto, conformable to its proper cauſe the Holy Spirit, this Holy Spirit muſt be in it ſelf Spiritual-vital, as our Saviour repreſenteth it, when he ſtileth it a Well of Water ebullient (and therefore living)) Job. 4. 14. A Fountain of Rivers of living Water. Joh. 7. 38, 39. The ancient Writers of the Church ſuppoſe (n) that the Water of Baptiſm is made Vital or Vivificative unto us by the Spirit. Which is no extravagant Conceit, if it be ſeparated from an extravagance, which ſome of them have combin'd with it, that this benefit of Baptiſm was prefigured by the Moſaic Spirit of God, which moved upon the face of the Waters. So the Syrians in their forms of Baptiſm are ſaid (o) together with the Father and the Son to have made mention of the Spirit that brooded upon the Waters.

(g) S. Ambroſ. de ſp. ſanct. l. 3. c. 12.

(h) De ſp. ſanct. c. 26.

(i) C. Celſ. l. 4. p. 164.

(k) Nomine Spiritus intelligit Apoſtolus naturam reformatam, ſeu gratiam Regenerationis per Spiritum Sanctum. Piſcator in Ep. ad Gal. c. 5. In antitheſi carnis & ſpiritus, quoties de moralibus agitur, Spiritus vel donum Spiritus Sancti, vel partem hominis Spiritu Dei renatam, ſeu novum hominem ſignificat. Pareus in Gal. 5. 16.

(l) Macar. Hom. 30.

(m) Cajetan. in Tit. 3. 5.

(n) Bp. Taylor great Exemplar p. 154--162.

(o) Hen. Ariſtarch. p. 76, 77.

IV. The Spirit as it is conſtitutive of the Regenerate Eſtate, appeareth, to be Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. For Mankind are diſtributed into two contrary Parties, Kinds and Families, thoſe that are in the Fleſh (that are after it, and live after it) and thoſe that are in the Spirit (that are after it, and live after it.) Rom. 8. 8, 9. They that are in the Fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. But ye are not in the Fleſh, but in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. The Spirit is in Regenerate Chriſtians, and they are in the Spirit: So the uſual Phraſe of Scripture repreſenteth a mutual and reciprocal inexiſtence and indwelling of Chriſt and Chriſtians, and an ἀλληλουχία, a mutual having each other. Joh. 15. 4. Abide in me, and I in you. Joh. 6. 56. He that eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me and I in him. 1 Joh. 3. 24. He that keepeth his Commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him. 1 Joh. 4. 15. Whoſoever ſhall confeſs, that Jeſus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. He is in Society with God, and God is in Society with him, which is a mutual ſociative Inexiſtence. But the Phraſe denoteth alſo a mutual vital Inexiſtence according to that of the Evangeliſt. Mar. 1. 23. and 5. 2. There was in the Synagogue a Man in an unclean Spirit. The Man was in an unclean Spirit, and an unclean Spirit was in him, there was a mutual Inexiſtence. So in our Unregeneracy the Fleſh is in us (predominantly) and we are in the Fleſh. In our Regeneracy, we are in Chriſt and Chriſt is in us, we are in the Spirit and the Spirit is in us, and the Apoſtle uſeth theſe Phraſes as ſignifying the ſame thing, ye are in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Regenerate Chriſtians are in the holy Spiritual Life, if the holy Spiritual Life is in them (which is a mutual Vital Inexiſtence) and if the Spirit is in them, the holy Spiritual Life is in them. If the Spirit is in them, they are in the Light and Life and Love of it (in that Vital Sanctity which is conſtitutive of their Regenerate Eſtate) they dwell in Love, and dwell in God and God dwelleth in them. 1 Joh. 4. 16. (p) Quia hoc agit ſpiritus ſanctus in homine, ut ſit in illo dilectio & charitas, for this is the Effect of the Holy Spirit dwelling in a Man, the Divine Love and Charity is in him. By its Inexiſtence the new Nature exiſteth in the Regenerate, they have their Life in the Spirit and live according to God in the Spirit (living the holy Spiritual Life) 1 Pet. 4. 6. The Spirit exiſteth in them as a Spiritual-vital Principle, which ſpeaketh him Spiritual-vital in himſelf and to them.

(p) S. Aug. Tract. 6 Expoſ. Ep. 1. Joan.

V. The Spirit as Holy appeareth, to be Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. For as the Spirit of Power and of Love and of a ſound Mind ſignifieth the Efficient of them: So upon this account (amongſt others) the Spirit is called Holy, becauſe he is the Efficient of Grace and Holineſs; which is a ſufficient Reaſon for denominating him our Sanctifier, as the Apoſtle repreſenteth him, when he ſaith of God, Tit. 3. 5. He ſaved us by the waſhing of Regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. Rom. 15. 16. That the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Ye are ſanctified, ye are juſtified in the Name of the Lord Jeſus and by the Spirit of our God. So the Holy Spirit is by the ancient Writers of the Church denominated (q) ἡ ἁγιαστικὴ δύναμις, virtus ſanctifica, the ſanctifying Virtue or Power, and this they account his ὑποστατικὸς χαρακτὴρ, or perſonal Property, whereby he is diſcriminated from the other Perſons of the Holy Trinity. And ſo our uſual Theology teacheth, that although all Operations ad extrà are common to the whole Trinity, yet Creation is peculiarly attributed to the Father, Redemption to the Son, Sanctification to the Holy Ghoſt. But againſt theſe uſual Maxims of Theology the Anti-Trinitarians object (r) that God and Chriſt are ſeveral times in Scripture ſaid to Sanctifie us, but the Holy Ghoſt is never ſaid to Sanctifie us (the Phraſe in Scripture is, that we are ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt) that ſuch a Partition of Works or Offices amongſt the Perſons of the Trinity is altogether an unſcriptural Imagination. And it muſt be acknowledged, that the Holy Scripture knoweth no ſuch Partition, yet nevertheleſs our Creator, our Redeemer, our Sanctifier, may ſerve for good diſtinctive Names of the Perſons of the Trinity, and are legitimate differencing Notices of them. For although God the Father (of whom are all things) is all theſe, Creator, Redeemer, Sanctifier, yet the Father is peculiarly Creator, the Son is peculiarly the immediate Redeemer, and the Holy Ghoſt is peculiarly the immediate Sanctifier. The Holy Ghoſt is never ſaid to Sanctifie us, nor is he ever ſaid to Comfort us: Yet becauſe of the Comforts of the Holy Ghoſt he is rightly denominated the Comforter, ſo becauſe of the Graces of the Holy Ghoſt he is rightly denominated the Sanctifier. And if that Name is competible to him, it ſpeaketh his Perſonality, and that he is Spiritual-vital in himſelf and to us. His Vital Sanctity appeareth from his Vital Sympathy with and Complacence in Holineſs, and his Vital Diſplicence and Antipathy againſt Sin and Wickedneſs. For that there is in the Holy Spirit ſuch a Vital Sympathy and Antipathy appeareth from his delighting to inhabit Holy Souls (talia Pectora quærit ille Spiritus, as Grotius ſpeaketh) and from the annoyance which Sin and Wickedneſs is to the Holy Spirit, which driveth him away from his Habitation, ὥσπερ καπνὸς περιστερὰς ϗ δυσωδία μελίσσας φυγαδεύει, (as S. Baſil ſpeaketh) as ſmoke and ill ſavour driveth away Doves and Bees. This Argument may be illuſtrated from the Book of Wiſdom. Ch. 1. 5, 6, 7. The Holy Spirit of Diſcipline will fly Deceit and remove from Thoughts that are without Underſtanding; and will not abide when Unrighteouſneſs cometh in. For Wiſdom is a loving Spirit: And will not acquit a Blaſphemer of his Words: For God is a Witneſs of his Reins, and a true beholder of his Heart, and an hearer of his Tongue. For the Spirit of the Lord filleth the World, and that which containeth all things hath knowledge of the Voice. By the Spirit of the Lord that filleth the World is meant the Spirit which God conſtitutively is, who ſeeth and heareth all things and is privy to all the Wickedneſs of the Ungodly. From whence it followeth, that the Holy Spirit of Diſcipline will fly from the Ungodly and will not abide there, where Unrighteouſneſs entreth; for by the Holy Spirit of Diſcipline is meant the Holy Inſpiration of inſtructive Wiſdom conſider'd as the Inſpiration of God, who knoweth all the Wickedneſs of the Ungodly, and hath a Vital Antipathy againſt it. Therefore his Holy Inſpiration (called his Holy Spirit, ch. 9. 17.) muſt not abide in them, that are a noiſome diſguſted Habitation.

(q) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 13. S. 21, 22.

(r) Crellius de uno Deo l. 1. S. 3. c. 8.

VI. The Holy Spirit as it is animative of Regenerate Chriſtians and of the whole Church appeareth, to be Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. For as there is an Analogy between Divine and Human things, ſo the Hypotheſis of a mundane Soul illuſtrateth the Nature of the Holy Spirit, which is as a Soul, that animateth, informeth, enliveneth and actuateth the whole Church of God, uniting all the Members thereof. (s) Chriſt with his whole Church, whether that on Earth, or that which reigneth with him in Heaven, is one Perſon; and as there is one Soul which enliveneth the divers Members of the Body, ſo one Holy Spirit vegetateth and illuminateth the whole Church. (t) What the Soul is to the Body of a Man, that

(s) Chriſtus cum tota ſua Eccleſia, ſive quæ adhuc verſatur in terris, ſive quæ cum eo jam regnat in cœlis, una perſona eſt; & ſicut eſt una anima quæ diverſa corporis membra vivificat, ita totam ſimul Eccleſiam unus ſpiritus ſanctus vegetat & illuſtrat. Gregor. M. Explan. 4. Pſal. pœnit. adv. 1.

(t) Quod eſt anima corpori hominis, hoc eſt ſpiritus ſanctus

the

corpori Chriſti quod eſt Eccleſia: hoc agit ſpiritus ſanctus in tota Eccleſia, quod agit anima in omnibus membris unius corporis. S. Aug. de Temp. Ser. 186.

the Holy Spirit is to the Body of Chriſt, which is the Church: the Holy Spirit doth that in the whole Church, which the Soul doth in all the Members of one Body. Chriſt's univerſal Church is one Body conſiſting of many united Members; and becauſe it is a Spiritual-living Body, it muſt be animated by a Spiritual-vital Principle, which is animative and formally vital (as well as efficient-cauſally) for it is as a Soul, and thoſe are formally live-natures that are animative; ſuch therefore is the Holy Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 13. By one Spirit we are all baptized into one Body, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. The Univerſality of Regenerate Chriſtians are every one of them implanted and joyned into one Body in Baptiſm, by being made to drink into one Spirit, which animateth, enliveneth and actuateth the whole Body, and connecteth all the Members thereof. They are vitally united (which they could not be, if this divine animative univerſal Spirit is not formally vital) and every true Member of this Myſtical Body is joyned unto the Lord, the imperial head of it, and is one with him, not ſo as to be one Fleſh, but ſo as to be one Spirit, 1 Cor. 6. 16, 17. The Fornicator that is joyned to an Harlot is one with her as to the Fleſh of them both, and therefore ſo as to be one Fleſh: but he that is joyned to the Lord, is one with him as to the Spirit of them both, and therefore ſo as to be one Spirit: which Union is not an Union of Subſtance and Accidents, but of Subſtance with Subſtance, of Live-ſubſtance with Live-Subſtance; for ſuch is the Union of a Fornicator's Fleſh with the Fleſh of an Harlot; therefore ſuch is the Union of the Spirit of a Man with the Spirit of Chriſt; and conſequently the Spirit of Chriſt is a live-ſubſtance, as the Fleſh of a Fornicator and his Harlot is, and as the Spirit of a Man manifeſtly is. With great reaſon the Humane Soul (which animateth, guideth and governeth the Body) is thought a Vital Subſtance, and there is the ſame reaſon, why the Holy Spirit ſhould be counted a Vital Subſtance, which is to the Soul of Divine Believers what their Soul is to their Body, which is Life, and Sence, and Motion to them, and Vigour and Vivacity, which exciteth and encourageth them to all the Duties of Godlineſs, reſtraineth them from Sin and Error, filleth them with an holy Ardour and Alacrity, upholdeth and ſtrengtheneth them in their holy Courſe (whereby the ways of God become eaſie and connatural to them) they are led and acted by its Animation and Conduct, its holy Inſtinct and Suggeſtions in all the Circumſtances of their Life, and their Holineſs conſiſteth in being thus guided and animated by the Spirit of Holineſs.

VII. The Virtues, Duties and Comforts of Regenerate Chriſtians ſhew, that the Holy Spirit is Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. For as they are ſaid, to be thoſe that are in the Spirit, ſo their Virtue is ſaid to be in the Spirit, to ſignifie, that it is Vital Sanctity, Rom. 15. 30. I beſeech you for the Lord Jeſus Chriſt's ſake, and for the love of the Spirit. Col. 1. 8. Epaphras declar'd unto us your love in the Spirit. The Chriſtian's Love is ſaid, to be in the Spirit, to ſignifie, it is that, which is Vital Sanctity (the Life of Grace;) therefore the Spirit is Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us, as Theodorus Studita in his Hymn to the Holy Spirit ſaith, (u) Σὺ ζωὴ, ἔρως, φῶς, Thou art Life, Love, Light. (w) The Life which the Spirit produceth (ſaith S. Baſil) is not ſeparated from it; but as the heat of Fire is, partly that which remaineth in it, and partly that which it communicateth to the Water or ſome ſuch thing: So the Spirit αὐτὸ ϗ ἐν ἑαυτῷ ἔχει τὴν ζωὴν, hath both Life in himſelf, and they that are partakers of him live divinely, ζωὴν θείαν ϗ οὐράνιον κεκτημένοι, poſſeſſing a Divine and Heavenly Life. So the ancient Writers of the Church generally ſay, (x) that not only the Graces of Sanctification are produc'd in holy Souls by the Spirit, but the Spirit it ſelf (in the Subſtance and Perſon of it) dwelleth in them, is united to them, and is in them, tanquam forma ſanctificans, an informing ſanctifying vital Form as it were.

(u) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 12. S. 2.

(w) S. Baſil. adv. Eunom. l. 5. p. 141.

(x) Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 4, 5, 6.

Chriſtians are injoyn'd, to worſhip God in the Spirit, to pray in the Holy Ghoſt, and in the Spirit, the meaning whereof is, that their God-ſervice muſt be in Vital Sanctity, which Vital Sanctity is not ſeparate from, but conjunct with the Spirit it ſelf (which ſheweth, that the Spirit is Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us;) for the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 8. 26, 27. We know not, what we ſhould pray for, as we ought; but the Spirit it ſelf maketh Interceſſion for us with groanings which cannot be uttered. And he that ſearcheth the Hearts, knoweth what is the Mind of the Spirit, becauſe he maketh Interceſſion for the Saints according to the Will of God. Chriſtians pray by the Holy Spirit and cry Abba Father, Gal. 4. 6. Rom. 8. 15. He is their παράκλητος, as that word ſignifieth, an Intreator or Interceſſour (that maketh Intreaty or Petition for another;) for they breath, and ſigh, and cry in Prayer by him; he exciteth in them Holy Deſires (whereby they ask thoſe things that are pleaſing to God) thoſe Holy Deſires are called the Mind of the Spirit, which is ſaid, to be known unto God; therefore the Holy Spirit hath a Mind and a Mind in ſome ſort diſtinct from God, and conſequently is of a certain Perſonality: which alſo appeareth from the Interceſſion of the Holy Spirit, which is a Perſonal Action, and ſuch a Perſonal Action that cannot be attributed to God; for although the Spirit intercedeth for the Saints according to the Will of God, yet it cannot properly be ſaid, that God intercedeth for them by his Spirit; therefore in this Attribution of Interceſſion to the Spirit ſuch a Perſonal Action is attributed thereto, which is certainly his Perſonal Action and a manifeſt proof of his Perſonality, and conſequently that he is formally Vital Sanctity.

Phil. 3. 3. Eph. 6. 18. Jude 20.

Chriſtians are ſaid, to have their Joy and Conſolation in the Holy Ghoſt, which (at leaſt for the greateſt part of it) is ſuch Joy and Conſolation, as ſpeaketh the Holy Ghoſt, to be Spiritual-vital in himſelf and to them. For the Holy Spirit as the Fountain of Holineſs (the Health of the Soul) of all Divine Graces (that are ineffably comfortable) of Light, Life and Truth (touching which the Egyptian Prieſts ſaid, γλυκεῖα ἡ ἀλήθεια, ſweet is Truth) as a ſure guide (that keepeth us out of harm's way) as ſhedding abroad the love of God in our Hearts, giving us a ſenſe of his Paternal Favour (and that we are his Children) as cauſing us to love and fear him with a Filial Love and Fear, as giving peace and ſatisfaction of Conſcience (to the afflicted and diſconſolate for their Soul-intereſts) as ſaving us from the thraldom of Sin and Servile Fears (that have Torment) as ſuſtaining us in our Holy Courſe and in Doubts and Diſtreſſes, as inabling us to bear up under all Afflictions, Rom. 14. 17. Act. 9. 31. Gal. 5. 22.

to confeſs the Truth in the Face of Death and Torments, and making a ſtate of Sufferings tolerable, ſweet, joyous and triumphant, as diffuſing an Heavenly Sweetneſs in the Soul (which none knoweth, but he that hath it) as making Death eaſie, and as being an earneſt of our Heavenly Inheritance, an antepaſt and prelibation of Heaven (Heaven-begun) is to us an Immenſity of Spiritual and Vital Conſolation. And becauſe it is (y) as an ebullient Well of Water, a live Spring of Spiritual Solace and Refeſhment (a living Fountain of the Water of Life) therefore it is Spiritual-vital in it ſelf and to us.

(y) S. Chryſoſt. in Act. Hom. 4. p. 631.

VIII. The ſuper-eminent Good which the Holy Spirit is, ſheweth, that it is Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us; for in the New Teſtament it is ſtiled (z) The Promiſe and the Spirit of Promiſe as being the great and eminent Promiſe. Our Saviour counteth it, (a) The Gift of God (the ſuperlative tranſcendent Gift) a greater good than his bodily preſence (better want his Body than his Spirit) and the Apoſtle accounteth it nothing leſs than the Bleſſedneſs promiſed to Abraham, Gal: 3. 14. It muſt be counted therefore the chief of Bleſſings, the ſummity and top-flower of them, the Sovereign Good (apex & faſtigium bonorum) and not only one of the Saint of God-kind of Goods (in compariſon of which all the common mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies ought to be depreciated and trampled into the Dirt) but the ſummary and comprehenſion of the choice and ſaving kind of Goods (more eſpecially of the holy vital Goods) in which ſenſe ſome ancient Writers might juſtly call the Spirit, (b) plenitudinem donorum Dei, the plenitude of the Gifts of God; divitias & promptuarium bonorum omnium donorum, the plenty and Store-houſe of all good Gifts. S. Auſtin argueth (not amiſs) that the Holy Ghoſt is Charity, becauſe Charity is the greateſt Gift of God and ſuch is the Holy Spirit. Chriſtianity knoweth nothing higher, nothing better than the Holy Spirit: therefore it ſelf is glorious, the only Religion of Saving Grace, of Life and Salvation, becauſe it is the Diſpenſation of the Spirit, which ſanctifieth foul Sinners, reneweth in them the Divine Image, planteth a new Life in them that were dead, maketh them the genuine Saints and Sons of God, the holy Habitation of God (and therefore bringeth them the preſence and enjoyment of God) is the Kingdom of God to them (for the Kingdom of Heaven is the communication of the Holy Spirit, (c) ſaith the Alexandrian Cyril) the Seal of God, the Reſt of God, the Royal Unction, whence they derive their Spiritual Light and Wiſdom, their habitual Grace and holy Agency, their Ghoſtly Might and Strength, their Chriſtian Heroical Magnanimity, Fortitude and Patience, their Divine Conduct, their ſolid Comforts, well-grounded Peace, and ſublime Joy, the Inchoation of their Eternal Joy. But if devoid of the Holy Spirit, they could be no better than putrid noyſom Fleſh, Animal having not the Spirit, unable to do any holy Duty, uncapable of any holy Comfort, aliens from Chriſt and Chriſtianity, as Chriſtianity, if devoid of the Holy Spirit, would be an Alien from it ſelf, no Diſcipline of the New Man, no Religion of Regeneration; the Laws of it would be no more than a dead Letter, and the Sacraments of it but the Fleſh that profiteth nothing.

(z) Luk. 24. 49. Act. 1. 4. and ch. 2. 39. Eph. 1. 13.

(a) Luk. 11. 13. Joh. 4. 10. and ch. 16. 7.

(b) Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 3. S. 5.

(c) Ibid. c. 4. S. 13.

The ineſtimable Goods which the Holy Spirit is, are not confined to this Life, nothing below Divinity can reach them, nothing ſhort of Immenſity can fathom them, nothing leſs than Eternity can meaſure them; for Chriſtians in conformity to Chriſt ſhall be raiſed by it to Life Eternal. Chriſt was raiſed by the Spirit of Holineſs, Rom. 1. 4. which is ſo called, not only with reſpect to Interiour Holineſs, but alſo with reſpect to the Exteriour Holineſs of our Saviour's Perſon in his Heavenly Sacerdotal Condition, wherein he is perfectly holied (made perfectly Illuſtrious or Unvile) exempt from and beyond every thing that is Stain or Blemiſh, Pollution or Corruption, whatever may ſoil or diſparage his glorious Perſonage; being made holy, harmleſs, undefiled, and wholly ſeparate from Sinners, never to know Sin, or Sorrow, or Death any more, Heb. 9. 14. Through the Eternal Spirit he offer'd himſelf without Spot to God, becauſe thereby he was perfectly ſacrated or holied, raiſed to a ſacerdotal condition indeed, freed from all Stain and Defilement (to live in perfect Sanctity, Holineſs and Unvileneſs as God liveth) and in this ſenſe the Spirit was unto him the Spirit of Holineſs, as Holineſs ſignifieth, Apoc. 20. 6. Bleſſed and holy is he, that hath part in the firſt Reſurrection (ſuch are beatify'd and perfectly holied or made unvile) on ſuch the ſecond death hath no power; but they ſhall be Prieſts of God and of Chriſt, ſhall live in a Divine Sacerdotal Condition. In the ſame Senſe therefore that the Spirit was unto Chriſt, it will be to Chriſtians the Spirit of Holineſs; as Polycarp at his Martyrdom hop'd for a Reſurrection to Life both of Soul and Body, (d) ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ πνεύματος ἁγίου, in the Incorruption of the Holy Spirit. Chriſtians have their Reſurrection by the Holy Spirit, which will be alſo unto them in Life Eternal (where Joy and Comfort will be in an Eternal Spring and ever-ever flowing) a Fountain of Joy and Conſolation, according to our Saviour's Promiſe, Joh. 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever. The Holy Spirit therefore is at the higheſt rate the Water of Life, Living Water (as our Saviour calleth it) and is in a plenary, not in a ſcanty diminutive Senſe Spiritual-vital; which it cannot be, unleſs it be Spiritual-vital in it ſelf and to us.

Rom. 8. 11.

(d) Daille de rel. cult. object. l. 3. p. 78.

We have now ſufficiently prov'd and illuſtrated the Subſtantiality and Perſonality of the Holy Spirit and this eminent Branch of its Idea (which is overlook'd in the Socinian Theology) that the Holy Spirit is Spiritual-vital or Vital Sanctity in it ſelf and to us. This agreement there is in the Idea of all the Perſons of the Holy Chriſtian Trinity; The Father is Sanctity Vital, The Son is Sanctity Vital, The Holy Ghoſt is Sanctity Vital; but the Holy Ghoſt is Vital Sanctity only as an Inſpiration-virtue, which is next to be conſider'd.

CHAP. II.

Sect. 1. The Holy Ghoſt is no Political kind of Perſon. The meaning of the Aſſertion. 2. The firſt Argument to prove it. 3. A ſecond Argument. 4. A third Argument. 5. A fourth Argument. 6. A fifth Argument. 7. A ſixth Argument. 8. A ſeventh Argument. 9. An eighth Argument. 10. An Argument from the Objections againſt his Perſonality. 11. Further Objections againſt his Perſonality anſwer'd. 12. More Objections againſt it, with an Anſwer to them. Sect. 2. Of the Eternity and Unoriginateneſs of the Holy Spirit. 1. Its Exiſtence cannot be prov'd to be orignated. 2. Indications of the falſity of it. 3. The ſilence of the Scripture concerning it. 4. The Account which the Scholaſtic Theology giveth of it. 5. If his Exiſtence is originated, it muſt be by Generation. 6. Neither Generation nor Creation is competible to the Holy Ghoſt. 7. An originated Exiſtence repugnant to the Holy Ghoſt. 8. His Eſſentiality to the Godhead. 9. His Idea as to his Eſſence. Sect. 3. Of Creaturizing the Holy Spirit. 1. The Holy Spirit is one of the Trinity. 2. The Holy Spirit is in God 3. Is of God-Agency and Efficiency. 4. Of Creature-tranſcendent Properties. 5. Differences between Creatures and the Holy Spirit. 6. Of his Inhabitation of the People of God. 7. Sinning againſt the Holy Ghoſt proveth him to be no Creature. 8. So doth the Crime of Ananias. 9. Great Abſurdity to ſuppoſe him a Creature.

SECTION I.

What kind of Perſon the Holy Ghoſt is, that he is no Political kind of Perſon.

I. FRom the Subſtantiality and Perſonality of the Holy Spirit we may not preſently infer, that he is an Imperial Eſtate, the Lord, the King, the Creator, Governour, Lawgiver and Judge of the World, the Citizens of whoſe Kingdom we ought to be as his Subjects and Servants, to whom we owe all the Service due unto God and all the Duties of Godlineſs; for theſe things are alien from the Scriptural Notices of the Holy Ghoſt, claſh with his Idea and are incompetible to his kind of Perſon, who is no political kind of Perſon. Political kind of Perſons are ſuch as are or may be the Citizens of a Polity either the ruling or the ruled; ſuch are God, Chriſt, Angels (good and bad) and Mankind; and theſe only we mean, when we commonly ſpeak of Perſons. But the Holy Ghoſt (that neither is, nor can be the Citizen of a Polity either the Imperant or the Subject-party) is no political kind of Perſon, his Perſonality is of another kind, and if we will call him by a Name agreeable thereto, he may be denominated (as being The holy Inſpiration-virtue in the perſonal acceptation) An Agent-virtual or Ghoſtly Agent-kind of Perſon: Which Idea of his Perſonality may be illuſtrated from ſome Notices of the Holy Spirit in the Scholaſtick Theology. (e) The Name Spirit is of a peculiar Notion, ſo as to ſignifie that Subſtance, which illaps'd and inſinuated into the Minds of Men infuſeth into them the knowledge of hidden things, chiefly of things to come; which therefore the Greeks call Inſpiration, the Latins Inſpiration and Afflation: to both which words the ſame origin of Breath or Spirit amongſt the Greeks anſwereth; as amongſt the Latins Flation and Spiration are of the ſame ſignification. The Name of the Holy Spirit therefore (which ſignifieth Inſpiration) denoteth nothing of political quality, but repreſenteth the Holy Ghoſt as a Non-political and only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon. The God Apollo amongſt the Heathen was a great Inſpirer, ſo is the true God, and both are political kind of Perſons; but the Spirit of God which he inſpireth, and whereby he inſpireth, is ſaid to be, (f) the very Energy of God it ſelf, a ſubſtantive and ſubſiſtent Energy, a living Energy and Virtue, (g) as an Odor of the Subſtance of the Son living and operative, the natural and ſubſtantial Virtue of the Son, the Spirit of the Mouth of God, his Virtue, a Virtue proceeding from the Father and the Son, a Subſtantial Virtue. By all which Names and Notices the Holy Ghoſt is repreſented not as a Political, but as only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon. So if we conſider the Holy Spirit as it is Spiritual-vital (or Vital Sanctity) in it ſelf and to us, it is ſtiled in this Theology, (h) A certain natural and living Energy, and as we may ſo ſay, Quality of the Deity. (i) Velut qualitas divinitatis Filii, qualitas ſubſtantiæ Patris, (k) ἡ ἁγιαστικὴ δύναμις, the Sanctificative Virtue; and theſe Notices repreſent him as only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon or Ghoſtly Agent; which Non-political kind of Perſon may be competently illuſtrated by the Ariſtotelians Intellectus agens, of which a late Writer ſaith, (l) Averroes and the Rabbins (ſome of them) ſuppoſe the Intellectus agens to be called the Holy Ghoſt. And Gr. Naz. ſaith of the Gentiles, (m) that they had an Imagination touching the Holy Spirit, calling it τὸν θύραθεν Νοῦν, the Intellect that cometh from without, which is ſuppoſed to be the Intellectus agens, that irradiateth the Phantaſms and educeth the paſſive Intellect de potentia in actum. Various conjectures have been made touching this Intellectus agens, ſome ſuppoſe it the Mundane Soul, (n) Averroes and Maimonides ſuppoſe it that Ariſtotelic Intelligence, whereby the laſt and loweſt Orb is moved. But whatever may be thought of it, it may reaſonably be thought the reſemblance (not of a Political, but) of a meerly Agent-virtual kind of Perſon. And ſuch a Mundane Soul will be, if we ſuppoſe it beyond a Plaſtic Nature (as being intellective) yet on this ſide an Imperial Eſtate (not ſuch as the Platoniſts and Stoicks Mundane Soul which is an Imperial Eſtate;) for this Mundane Soul is no Citizen or Political, but only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon. We may conceive in our Mind a mighty Polity conſiſting of Men as the Subject-party and of a Divine Sovereign as the Imperial Eſtate of it, and that this Divine Sovereign by an Univerſal Spirit which he communicatively is as his Ghoſtly Agent connecteth, inſpireth, animateth and animatively governeth the Subject-party of this mighty Polity, that this Univerſal Spirit is of all Inſpiration-virtue, is Intellective and Spiritual-vital as an Inſpiration-virtue, but is no Citizen, (neither a Subject nor a Sovereign of the Polity) but is only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon; and ſuch is the Holy Spirit. A Perſon he is ſui generis, but ſuch a Perſon, that cannot be a Citizen, that is perſonal only as an Holy Inſpiration-virtue, that is, intellective, volitive, animative, energetical, ſpiritual-vital, but ſo as is proper for an Holy Inſpiration-virtue, not ſo as is proper to a Political Perſon. Intellective he is of the matters of the wonderful Wiſdom of the Holy Government (ſearching the deep things of God,) but he is not ſo intellective, as to be that wonderful Wiſdom. Volitive he is and ſo Holy-volitive, that his Inſpirations are according to the Will of God, and he willeth them ſo to be; but he is not ſo holy-volitive, as to make the Decrees and Appointments of God. Animative he is, but not as a Political Perſon, who may be called A ſelf-animative, that is not an Extra-animative (or animative of others as a Ghoſtly Agent:) but the Holy Ghoſt is ſuch an Extra-animative, and is not properly a Self-animative. Spiritual-vital he is (formally as well as efficient-cauſally) but not ſo as to be an Holy Spiritual Liver (in the uſual ſenſe of the Phraſe) as every Holy Political Perſon is. An intelligent free Agent he is, but as an Agent-virtual, not as a political kind of Perſon. Let us ſuppoſe, that the Imperial Eſtate of the Papacy is like the Imperial Eſtate of the Godhead, that the Papal Empire is like the true Catholic Church, and that the Pope's Holineſs communicatively is a Spirit, which is his Inſpiration-virtue and Ghoſtly Agent, which pervadeth, connecteth, inſpireth and animateth the whole Papal Empire; that this Univerſal Spirit is fitly called The Spirit of Popery, and is like to the Spirit of Sanctity. Touching this Spirit of Popery common Underſtanding will pronounce, that if there is in it all Inſpiration-virtue, and if it is as a Soul to the Papal Empire, it muſt be a Subſtance and a Perſon ſui generis; but it cannot be thought a political kind of Perſon; and the ſame Judgment muſt be made of the Holy Spirit, for it is plainly demonſtrable by many Arguments, that he is no political kind of Perſon.

(e) Habet enim ſpiritus vox peculiarem quandam notionem, ut eam ſubſtantiam ſignificet, quæ illapſa inſinuataque animis hominum occultarum iis rerum notitiam infundit, maximè futurarum: quam Græci propterea ἐπίπνοιαν Latini inſpirationem afflatumque nominant. cui utrique vocabulo eadem apud Græcos τῆς πνοῆς vel τοῦ πνεύματος origo reſpondet: ſicut apud Latinos flare & ſpirare eandem habent ſignificationem. Petav. de Trin. l. 3. c. 8. S. 19.

(f) Ἐνέργεια ipſa Dei, ἐνέργεια οὐσιώδης καὶ ἐνυπόστατος, ἐνέργεια ζῶσα. Idem T. 1. l. 5. c. 9. S. 1, 2.

(g) Inſtar jucundi odoris qui ex Filio halat, & afflatur. Nam ut odor è flore tanquam è principio manat ac diffunditur: ſic è Filio Spiritus oritur. Eſt hic velut odor quidam illius ſubſtantiæ, vivens & efficax. viva virtus eſt ac divina natura. Spiritus ſanctus oris Dei ſpiritus vocatur. virtus ipſius eſt ſpiritus ipſius. φυσικὴ καὶ οὐσιώδης τοῦ υἱοῦ δύναμις. Idem de Trin. l. 7. c. 5. S. 3, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12. Ex patre & filio procedens virtus. Ibid. c. 8. S. 6. Δύναμις οὐσιώδης. Ibid. c. 10. S. 3.

(h) Ἐνέργειά τις φυσικὴ καὶ ζῶσα, καὶ ἵν' οὕτως εἴπω ποιότης τῆς θεότητος. Ibid. c. 5. S. 12.

(i) Ibid. S. 8.

(k) Ibid. c. 13. S. 21.

(l) Averrhoes & Rabbini Intellectum abſtractum (idem hic cum agente) ſeu Neſchamah ſciſcunt vocari ſpiritum S. ut me docuit Joſephus de Voyſin. Jac. Thomaz. diſſ. 14. S. 164.

(m) Or. 37.

(n) Scalig. exerc. 307. S. 18. Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 2. c. 4.

II. The Holy Spirit hath no Throne, no Exteriour Houſe or Temple, no Court, no Attendants, no Hoſt or Army, no Imperial Chariot, no Scepter, no Crown, no Tribunal; therefore he is no Political Perſon: for if he is a political kind of Perſon, he muſt be a political kind of Regial or Imperial Perſon, as God and the Son of God is: but this he cannot be without any of the Badges and Enſigns of a Perſon of ſuch Quality, and which are uſually in Scripture attributed to God and the Son of God, to denote them Perſons of ſuch Quality and Condition. For,

(1) To God a Throne is attributed (o) in the Prophetic Viſions of him both in the Old and New Teſtament, (p) in Devotional Hymns and Laudatory Deſcriptions of God, (q) in Notices of Heaven, Jeruſalem, and the Temple, which are called the Throne of God, (r) the Name of God is he that ſitteth upon the Throne. So to the Son of God (s) a Throne is attributed both in the Old and New Teſtament. To Kings or Secular Rulers a Throne is uſually attributed, Job 36. 7. Prov. 20. 8. Jer. 17. 25. To Eccleſiaſtical Rulers alſo Thrones are attributed, Luk. 22. 30. Apoc. 4. 4. And to the Archangels Thrones are attributed, Col. 1. 16. If to all political kind of Perſons that are ruling Powers the Scripture attributeth a Throne, what can be the reaſon, why it never attributeth a Throne to the Holy Ghoſt? doubtleſs the reaſon is, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is not ſuch a Political Perſon and Ruling Power to which a Throne belongeth, but is only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon.

(2.) To God the Scripture attributeth an Exteriour Dwelling-houſe (his Temple and Sanctuary) for ſuch is Heaven, and ſuch was the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple (an umbratile Repreſentation of Heaven) the Seat of his Imperial Majeſty, wherein he reſided as the place of his reſidence, 2 Chron. 6. 30. and 30. 27. Pſal. 2. 4. and 33. 14. and 123. 1. Pſal. 11. 4. The Lord is in his holy Temple, the Lord's Throne is in Heaven. The Throne is the Seat of Government, whence all Acts of Government are diſpens'd, thence is the iſſuing out Laws and Commands, hearing Suppliants, determining Cauſes, decreeing Rewards and Puniſhments. So it is from Heaven, that God iſſueth forth Laws and Commands, Heb. 12. 25. in and from Heaven he heareth Prayers, Pſal. 20. 6. therefore all our Prayers and Adorations muſt be directed thitherwards; for praying to and worſhipping God is an addreſſing to him as on his Throne, Heb. 4. 16. On this Throne the Son of God ſitteth, as the Scripture repreſenteth him, to whom alſo it attributeth the ſame Tabernacle and Sanctuary, the ſame Exteriour Dwelling-houſe with God, Heb. 8. 2. and 9. 11. But to the Holy Ghoſt the Scripture never attributeth any Exteriour Dwelling-houſe, Tabernacle, Temple or Sanctuary (his only Dwelling-houſe is the Souls and Bodies of the Regenerate) which is a manifeſt Indication, that he is no political kind of Perſon.

(3.) Heaven is the Court as well as the City of the great King, deſcrib'd by analogy to the Courts of the Eaſtern Princes, adumbrated by the Temple of Jeruſalem, where God kept Houſe (all things were in it requiſite to a ſumptuous Regial Houſe and Houſekeeping) which Houſekeeping in a Mundane Temple was ſymbolical

and

(o) 1 King. 22. 19. 2 Chron. 18. 18. Iſa. 6. 1. and 66. 1. Ezek. 1. 26. and 10. 1. Apoc. 1, 4. 3, 21. 4, 2—10. 5. 1, 6, 7, 11, 13. 6, 16. 7. 9, 10, 11, 15. 8, 3. 12, 5. 14, 3, 5. 16, 17. 19, 4, 5. 20, 4, 11. 21, 5. 22, 1, 3.

(p) Pſal. 9. 4, 7. and 11. 4. and 47. 8. and 79. 2. and 89. 14. and 93. 2. and 103. 19. Lam. 5. 19.

(q) Matth. 5. 31. and 23. 22. Heb. 4. 16. and 8. 1. and 12. 2. Iſa. 66. 1. Jer. 3. 17. and 14. 21. and 17. 12. Ezek. 43. 7.

(r) Apoc. 4. 9, 10. and 5. 1, 7, 13. and 6. 16. and 7. 10, 15. and 21. 5.

(s) Pſal. 45. 6. Iſa. 9. 7. Matth. 19. 28. and 25. 31. Luk. 1. 32. Heb. 1. 8. and 8. 1. and 12. 2. Apoc. 3. 21. and 22. 3.

and figurative of his Houſe-keeping in Heaven, where he liveth in magnificence like himſelf, is ſerv'd in State and Honour, his Entertainment is Royal and he is royally attended. Matth. 26. 29. Dan. 7. 10. So the Son of God is repreſented as keeping Houſe in Heaven, making Royal Entertainment and having Royal Attendance. Luc. 22. 30. 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. Apoc. 19. 14. But touching the Holy Ghoſt, who ever heard of his keeping Houſe or Court? Of his making Royal Entertainment in an exteriour Palace or of his having Royal Attendants? Therefore he is no Political kind of Prince, Potentate or Perſon.

(4.) The whole World of Creatures are as Hoſts and Armies unto God (he as a Lord General ordereth and governeth them, draweth them forth and muſtereth them, ſummoneth them to a Rendezvous and Embattels them, as there is occaſion, Iſa. 40. 26.) to Old Iſrael he was their Military Lord and King, the God of their Armies, the Prince of their Hoſt, and their Hoſt was the Hoſt of the Lord (he reſided amongſt them in a Tent or Tabernacle as their Military King, walk'd in the midſt of their Camp, went out with their Hoſt, fought their Battels, and when they went out to Battel, he went before them in the Ark) whence his uſual honourary Name is the Lord of Hoſts. The Name is not competible to the Son of God, yet the Son is a certain Military Lord and King, that hath his Hoſt or Army (Apoc. 19. 14. The Armies of Heaven follow him:) But ſo is not the Holy Spirit of God, which hath no Hoſt or Army. God and the Son of God may properly be ſaid, to wage War againſt their Enemies: But this cannot be ſaid of the Holy Ghoſt. Nor doth the Holy Ghoſt iſſue forth his Orders to the Inferiour Creatures (which are called a great Army and the Lord's Army, Joel 2. 11.) to fight his Battels againſt his Enemies, as God and the Son of God doth. Nor are wicked Angels and wicked Men (which belong to God's Hoſt) imploy'd by the Holy Ghoſt in his Wars as his Agents and Executioners: But ſo they are imploy'd by God and the Son of God. Iſa. 10. 5, 6. and 13. 4. Ezek. 30. 24. 1 Cor. 5. 5. They are (t) τεταγμένοι ἐπὶ τῶν σκυθρωπῶν πραγμάτων, ſet over and imployed in ſad and punitive Works and Miniſteries, but not by the Holy Ghoſt. Nor are the Holy Angels imploy'd by the Holy Ghoſt, to bring Meſſages, to guide and defend the Juſt, to oppoſe the Enemies of the Church and the malice of evil Spirits, to diſpenſe Benefits to, and to execute Judgments upon the World. They are God's Hoſts, his attendant Train, that are rul'd and manag'd by him, receive and execute his Commands (per miniſtros more potentiſſimi Regis omnia facit, ſaith Bonaventure) and they are Chriſt's Hoſts (as will appear at the laſt Day, Jude 14.) But the Holy Ghoſt ſendeth forth no Angels, hath no attendant Train of them, doth not do any of his Works by their Miniſtry, nor hath he any Angelical Hoſt or Army. All which Notices diſcriminative of the Holy Ghoſt from God and the Son of God plainly demonſtrateth, that he is no Political kind of Prince or Perſon.

1 Sam. 17. 45. Dan. 8. 10, 11. Joſh. 5. 14.

(5.) Unto God the Old Teſtament uſually attributeth a Seat between the Cherubims, which Seat was as his Regial Throne, and repreſented him as the great King, the Lord of Hoſts reſiding amongſt the Holy Angels his Guard and Attendants (on the Right-hand and on the left) which were repreſented by the Cherubims. The Cherubims are called the Chariot of the Cherubims. 1 Chron. 28. 18. And in Ezekiel they appear in the form of a Chariot with Wheels (whence that Viſion is called by the Jews Mercavah) and ſo the Pſalmiſt calleth the Holy Angels. Pſal. 68. 17. The Chariot of God are twenty thouſand, even thouſands of Angels. The words immediately following in the next Verſe the Apoſtle applieth to Chriſt's triumphant Aſcenſion (when he aſcended on high, he led captivity captive. Eph. 4. 8.) He ſuppoſeth therefore, that the Holy Angels are an Imperial Chariot unto Chriſt, as they are unto God (and that the Pſalmiſts words are meant of both) both the Imperial Perſon of the Father and the Son reſideth among them, ruleth and manageth them and imployeth them in the Works of his Providence. But to the Holy Ghoſt the Scripture never attributeth an Imperial Angelical Chariot or any thing of that Nature.

(6.) The Son of God is deſcrib'd with his Bow, with his Sickle, with his Sword, with his Crown and Scepter, with many Crowns, (Enſigns of his Regality, Spiritual Huſbandry, Judicial Severity, Military Prowefs aud Victoriouſneſs) with his Tribunal alſo or Judgment-Seat. Rom. 14. 10. And why is it, that no ſuch things as theſe are ever attributed to the Holy Spirit, but becauſe they are incompetible to him, as being no Political kind of Perſon or Potentate?

Apoc. 2. 12. and 6. 2 and 14. 14. and 19. 12.

III. Not any Authority proper to a Political Potentate, or any proper Act thereof is ever attributed in Scripture to the Holy Spirit. Not the Act or Authority of remitting and retaining Sins, of juſtifying and condemning, of bleſſing and blaſting us, of ſaving and deſtroying us, not the Law-giving Authority, not the Authority of ſitting in Judgment upon us and of diſtributing Rewards and Puniſhments. For whoever heard, that the Holy Ghoſt is Judge both of quick aud dead, that he will Crown the Righteous with Immortality and Sentence the Wicked to eternal Fire? To God we rightly attribute univerſal Dominion and Sovereignty (over Heaven, Earth and Hell,) the fulleſt height of Dominion and Sovereignty, all Creature-tranſcendent Dominion and Sovereignty, the Dominion of an univerſal Providence, and irreſiſtible All-diſpoſing Authority, a Monarchic Empire of commanding Power over all, and therefore Stile him the moſt high God, the bleſſed and only Potentate, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, the Lord of Hoſts, the Lord of Heaven and Earth, Omni-imperial or the Almighty (in point of Right and of Might) whoſe Kingdom is an everlaſting Kingdom and his Dominion endureth throughout all Ages. But none of theſe Attributions are ever made in Scripture to the Spirit of God, and it would be an abſurdity claſhing with Piety, to ſay to the Holy Ghoſt, as David doth unto God. Thine O Lord, is the Greatneſs, and the Power and the Glory, and the Victory and the Majeſty: For all that is in the Heaven and in the Earth is thine; thine is the Kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as Head above all. Both Riches and Honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all, and in thine Hand is Power and Might, and in thine Hand it is to make Great, and to give Strength unto all. So to the Son of God we rightly attribute an univerſal Lordſhip and Domination, which may juſtly be ſtiled Plenary, full Juriſdiction and free Empire (compriſing a right of diſpoſing of Affairs in in a ſupreme way of Regency, and of all Perſons by way of Precept and of Power, a Right of conſtituting Principalities and Powers Dominium vitæ ac necis, even as to Souls) whence he muſt be intituled Lord of all, King of Kings and Lord of Lords: But theſe Attributions of Political Potentacy are as incompetible to the Holy Spirit, as this other the Imperial Head of the Church. For Chriſt is Sovereign Lord both of the World and of the Church, and as he is Sovereign Lord of the Church, he is both an Head of Government and an Head of Influence: But the Holy Spirit is ſo far from being ſuch, that it is the Influence, which this Imperial Head deriveth upon the Body, and is therefore called the Spirit of Chriſt, becauſe he is the Owner, Donor and Diſpenſer of it. In his Kingdom and the Adminiſtration of his Government the Holy Spirit hath not the place and authority of a Political Potentate, nor doth any proper Act of ſuch a Potentate (in enacting Laws, protecting Subjects, exerciſing Judgment over them) but is only an Inſpiration-virtue and ghoſtly Agent.

1 Chron. 29. 11, 12.

(t) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 378.

A Divine obſerveth (u) remittere peccata rarò & obſcurè ſp. ſancto attribuitur, the remitting Sins is rarely and obſcurely attributed to the Holy Spirit. But this Obſervation is not well made; for he ought to have ſaid; that the remitting Sins is never attributed to the Holy Spirit, who throughout the Bible is never ſaid, to Forgive us our Sins. Yet ſeveral of the ancient Writers of the Church (w) pretend, to prove the Deity of the Holy Spirit by this Argument, becauſe he forgiveth Sins. To prove, that the Holy Spirit forgiveth Sins, they alledge, Joh. 20. 22, 23. He breathed on them and ſaith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghoſt. Whoſoever Sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them. Which words prove, that the Apoſtles were qualified for the diſcharge of their Apoſtolic Office by receiving the Holy Ghoſt, and that by this their Apoſtolic Office they had a Power of remitting Sins: But of the Holy Ghoſts remitting Sins the Text ſaith nothing. Another Argument they uſe, to prove, that the Holy Ghoſt remitteth Sins; for Sins (ſay they) are remitted in Baptiſm, wherein is the operation of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghoſt. But the Holy Scriptures allot to the Holy Ghoſt another operation in Baptiſm than that of remitting Sins. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Tit. 3. 5. As Sins are not remitted by him; nor in his Name, ſo (which is of good Remark) Miracles are ſaid to be wrought in the Name of God and Chriſt, but not in the Name of the Holy Ghoſt.

(u) Baxter Meth. Theol. Par. 3. p. 349.

(w) Petav. de Trin. l. 1. c. 14. S. 20. & l. 2. c. 16. S. 4.

IV. The Holy Ghoſt is not any Political perſonal Relation (or Relative) unto God or Chriſt; therefore he is no Political kind of Perſon. The Greeks ſay of the Latin Church (x) that by ſuppoſing the Holy Ghoſt, to proceed from the Son, they make him the Nephew (or Grandſon) of the Father, which they account a groſs abſurdity. And they tell us of a certain Hereſie called υἱοπατρίας, which was therefore an Hereſie, becauſe it affirm'd, that the Son was the Father of the Holy Spirit, and the Holy Spirit was the Nephew of the Father. But other Hereticks are ſaid, thus to have argued againſt the Deity of the Holy Spirit. (y) Si ſpiritus ſanctus creatus non eſt, aut frater eſt Dei patris, aut patruus eſt unigeniti Jeſu Chriſti; aut filius Chriſti eſt, aut nepos Dei patris, aut ipſe filius eſt Dei. Every one of theſe Political perſonal Relations they accounted a groſs abſurdity, as the Catholicks alſo did, who ſaid of the Holy Spirit (z) οὐ γεννητὸν οὐ κτιστὸν, οὐ συναδελφὸν, οὐ πατραδελφὸν, οὐ προπάτορον, οὐκ ἔκγονον, not generated, not created, not Brother, not Uncle, not Grandfather, not Nephew. Unto God the Holy Spirit is not related either as Subject or Servant, or Son or Grandſon. Nor is he of ſuch Sanctity, of ſuch Holy Office, of ſuch Practice of Piety towards God, as he muſt neceſſarily be of, if he was a Political kind of Perſon. For if he is a Political kind of Perſon, he is an holy Political kind of Perſon belonging to God, and therefore is neceſſarily a Saint of God. Every Political Perſon that is in the State and Life of Sanctity, is neceſſarily a Saint of God (ſuch is the Son of God the King of Saints:) But the Holy Ghoſt is no Saint of God; therefore he is no Political kind of Perſon. God is his Proprietor (or Owner) he is Holy as ſet apart for God (for * omne ſanctum eſt Deo ſanctum;) if therefore he is a Political Perſon, he muſt be in ſome Office as to God, and ſuch an Office which is competible to a Political kind of Perſon; and conſequently he muſt be God's Prophet, or Prieſt, or King: But the Holy Ghoſt is none of theſe Offices (or officiary Dignities;) therefore he is no Political kind of Perſon. If he is ſuch a Perſon, he is a Political Prince or Potentate; and if he is ſuch a Prince and Potentate, he is God's Political Prince and Potentate: But this is a peculiarity of our Saviour's incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. God is his Proprietor and he belongeth unto God: And if he is a Political kind of Perſon, God muſt neceſſarily be unto him a God, as he is unto other holy Political kind of Perſons; and conſequently the Holy Ghoſt muſt be obliged to take him for his God and to make him his God by practiſing ſome Duties of Piety towards him, ſuch as Political Perſons practiſe: But of ſuch dutiful Piety ſome Judgment may be made from what a Scholaſtic Divine ſaith. (a) Spiritus ſanctus nulli unquam ſupplicavit, neque precibus quidquam petiit. The Holy Ghoſt never made ſupplication to any, nor asked any thing by Prayers. But another Author ſpeaketh without Book, when without any diſtinction or limitation of Senſe he ſaith of the Holy Ghoſt (b) debitum amorem rependit, he repayeth the due Love to the Father and the Son, and therein is an imitable Pattern to us.

(x) Petav. ibid. l. 7. c. 16. S. 3. & c. 2. S. 1.

(y) Ibid. c. 13. S.

(z) Ibid. c. 3. S. 3.

* Sanctitas illis rebus attribuitur, quæ in Deum ordinantur. Aquin. 1. Qu. 36. Art. 1.

(a) Petav. T. 4 l. 12. c. 8. S. 11.

(b) Idem de Trin. l. 8. c. 3. S. 11.

But as unto God, ſo unto Chriſt, the Holy Ghoſt is no Political perſonal Relation. For he is not one of Chriſt's Members, nor one of his Sheep, not his Lord, nor his Servant, not his Father, nor his Son, not his Brother or Couſin-German, or any ſuch Political perſonal Relation. A Divine ſaith (c) the Holy Spirit is no part of Chriſt's Myſtical Body, but by its Graces doth produce and conſerve it.

(c) Scrivener Body of Divin. p. 111.

V. The Holy Ghoſt is not any Political perſonal Relation (or Relative) unto us; he is no ſuch Proprietor, as he would neceſſarily be, if he was a Political kind of Perſon. For Chriſtians would be the People of the Holy Ghoſt, in the ſame Senſe that they are the People of God and Chriſt, and the Church would be his Church, in the ſame Notion that it is the Church of God and of Chriſt, if the Holy Ghoſt was a Political kind of Perſon. The Church would be his Vineyard and Inheritance, his Flock and his Kingdom; but to talk of the Church and People, the Vineyard and Inheritance, tance, the Flock and the Kingdom of the Holy Ghoſt, is as great an Abſurdity, as a Neighbour Nation is guilty of, that createth Knights of the Order of the Holy Ghoſt. Chriſtians are Chriſt's Soldiers, the Miniſters of the Church are the Miniſters and Stewards of God and of Chriſt: But Religion knoweth no Soldiers, no Stewards, no Miniſters of the Holy Ghoſt (for Chriſt's Miniſters are called Miniſters, not of the Letter, but of the Spirit, only becauſe their Religion is the Diſpenſation of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 3. 6.) the Holy Ghoſt hath no Church nor People, no Vineyard nor Inheritance, no Flock nor Sheepfold, no City nor Kingdom, as a Political Proprietor and Prince.

The Church is join'd to the Holy Ghoſt by Covenant, and by ſuch a Covenant which is rightly called a Marriage-covenant, yet the Church is not his Spouſe, nor is the Holy Ghoſt Sponſus Eccleſiæ, as God and the Son of God is. God is ſaid, to Betroth the Church of Iſrael, and ſo Chriſtians by their ſolemn Covenant are eſpouſed and married unto Chriſt, and the Church becometh his Bride, his Spouſe or his Wife. But although the Church of Chriſtians are join'd to Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt by one and the ſame Marriage-covenant, yet Chriſtianity knoweth no ſuch thing as a Bride, Spouſe or Wife of the Holy Ghoſt. Therefore the Holy Ghoſt can be no Bridegroom nor Husband; he is neither Head nor Member, neither the Vine nor a Branch, neither the Husband nor a Member of the Spouſe. He is not the Maſter of our Family, nor the King of our Kingdom, he is not our Father, or our Shepherd, or our Guardian, or our Phyſician. In ſome Senſe he is our Patron (or Advocate) our Guide and Teacher, and may be fitly called our Sanctifier: But he is not any of theſe, as thoſe Names ſignifie certain Political perſonal Relations. Our Chriſtianity conſiſteth in owning Chriſt for our Sovereign Lord: But of our Lord the Holy Spirit there is not a Syllable in the Book of God. Wherefore as the ancient Writers of the Church dare not ſay (d) that the Holy Spirit is either ingenitus or genitus (begotten or unbegotten:) So thoſe in S. Baſil's time were much in the right, who ſuppos'd, that the Holy Spirit was neither Lord nor Servant. They were much more in the right than S. Baſil himſelf (e) who pretendeth to prove, that the Holy Spirit is called the Lord in Scripture, yet his Allegations of Scripture are altogether Impertinent. (f) Without diſtinction or limitation of Senſe he attributeth to the Holy Spirit the Name of a Political Potentate and Relation; So the Nicene Creed (commonly ſo called) without any diſtinction or limitation of Senſe ſtileth the Holy Ghoſt the Lord and Giver of Life, which in the moſt obvious conſtruction of the words repreſenteth the Holy Ghoſt as a Political perſonal Potentate and Relation.

VI. The Holy Spirit is not any thing, nor doth any thing to us, nor is any thing done unto him, that conſtituteth him a Political Potentate or a Political perſonal Relation. For if we conſider, what the Holy Ghoſt is, he is not any thing more, or any thing leſs, or any thing elſe than the Spirit of him that is of definitive Notion the Lord of the Creature. He that is of definitive Notion the Lord of the Creature as ſuch is of the Godhead as a Political Potentate and a Political perſonal Relation: And his being of the Godhead as this Political Potentate and as this Political perſonal Relation is the ſame thing with his being of definitive Notion he that is the Lord of the Creature. But the Holy Spirit is not of the Godhead, ſo as to be of this definitive Notion; and therefore is not of the Godhead as this Political Potentate and this Political perſonal Relation the Lord of the Creature. The Holy Spirit is not of the Godhead otherwiſe than as the Spirit of God; nor is Lord of the Creature, otherwiſe than as the Spirit of him who is definitively the Lord of the Creature; which is to ſay, the Holy Spirit is not this Political Potentate, nor this Political perſonal Relation the Lord of the Creature, which is peculiar to him that is the Lord as diſtinct from the Spirit of the Lord. For to be only the Spirit of the Lord amounteth not to the being definitively the Lord, is plainly diſtinct from it and from being that Political Potentate and Political perſonal Relation. If we conſider what the Holy Ghoſt doth; it is manifeſt, that he cannot do any thing unto us, that conſtituteth him our Father (as he cannot be the Father of Chriſt as Man,) that God is our Father and Chriſt is the Father of his Church, but to be ſuch a Political Potentate and ſuch a Political perſonal Relation, is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. And conſequently, it is incompetible to him, to be any ſuch Political Potentate and Political perſonal Relation, which involveth in it the being our Father; and all ſuch operation which neceſſarily conſtituteth him our Father is falſly aſcrib'd to the Holy Ghoſt. Whence a Judgment may be made of this uſual Scheme of the Trinity and of the Operations of the divine Perſons. All divine Operations ad extrà are aſcrib'd to them abſolutely, becauſe they are undivided in their Operation, acting by the ſame Wiſdom, Will and Power; ſo that every Perſon is Author of every Work of God, becauſe each Perſon is God. In this undivided Operation of the Divine Nature each Perſon doth the ſame Work in the order of their Subſiſtence; not one as the Inſtrument of the other, or imploy'd by the other, but as one common Principle or Authority, Wiſdom, Love and Power. As to the manner of Subſiſtence in the divine Eſſence there is a diſtinct Relation and Order between the Perſons, and hence there is no divine Work but is diſtinctly aſſign'd to each Perſon and eminently unto one. So it is in the Works of the old Creation and in the new, and in all particulars of them. Thus the Creation of the World is diſtinctly aſcrib'd to the Father as his Work. Act. 4. 24. To the Son as his. Joh. 1. 3. And alſo to the Holy Spirit. Job 33. 4. But by way of eminence to the Father, and abſolutely to God, who is Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. The Holy Ghoſt is the immediate Efficient of all divine external Operations. In the Senſe of this Scheme a Council at Rome under Pope Damaſus decreed (g) ſi quis negaverit, patrem omnia per filium incarnatum & ſpiritum ſanctum condidiſſe, hoc eſt viſibilia & inviſibilia; anathema ſit. The Council meaneth, that the Holy Ghoſt was conjunctly with the Father and the Son the Creator of all things viſible and inviſible, and they muſt be held accurſed, that believe not ſuch Maxims as theſe, which muſt neceſſarily carry a ſtrange appearance in the Eyes of thoſe that underſtand the Goſpel-Theiſm. But as the Holy Spirit hath not done any thing, ſo neither is any thing done to him, that conſtituteth him a Political kind of Potentate or a Political perſonal Relation. For God hath not given to Matth. 22. 2. Joh. 3. 29. 2 Cor. 11. 2. Rom. 7. 4. Eph. 5. 23…33. Apoc. 21. 9.

(d) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 6. S. 3.

(e) De Sp. Sanct. c. 21.

(f) Ibid. c. 18.

(g) Barn ad an. 373. n. 12

his Spirit as to his Son Dominion and Glory and a Kingdom. The Holy Spirit is it ſelf a Gift (the ſupereminent Gift) but we never read in Scripture of any Gift given to the Holy Spirit, which is a plain Indication, that he is no Political kind of Perſon. But ſeeing that from Beneficence and Liberality Princes have their Name in Hebrew (נדיבים) and in the ancient Heroic times, as Ariſtotle ſaith, (h) ἀπ' εὐεργεσίας καθίςησαν τοὺς βασιλέας, Men were made Kings becauſe of a precedent Beneficence; if the Holy Ghoſt is Creator and Benefactor in equality with the Father and the Son, it ſeemeth but reaſonable, that he ſhould be King in equality.

VII. The Virtues of a Political Prince are not in the Holy Ghoſt as in a Political Prince; therefore he is no Political Prince or Perſon. As our Political Governours on Earth are certain Images and Repreſentatives of God, ſo the Divine Attributes of Greatneſs and Goodneſs (commonly ſo called) are the ſame with the Powers and Virtues of our Political Governours (ſave only that they tranſcend them in meaſure and the manner of having them;) for Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power are requiſite Qualifications in all Political Governours, and the great Virtues and Glories of a ſecular Prince are thoſe that Claudian attributeth to Honorius. —— mitis precibus, pietatis abundans, pœnæ parcus erat. Agreeably whereto God repreſenteth himſelf, Exod. 34. 6, 7. The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, and that will by no means clear the guilty. Such are the attributes of Goodneſs, that are in the holy happy Government, which God is; and the like amiable Virtues are known to be in Chriſt as in a Political Prince (for his Government is that of a Shepherd, of the Lamb of God, and of the Son of Man, of a contrary make and mold to that of Lions, Bears and Leopards, ſuch as the Eaſtern Monarchies were, Dan. 7.) But the Scripture never taketh Notice, that theſe amiable and beneficent Vertues are in the Holy Ghoſt as in a Political Prince, or that his adminiſtration of Government is an exerciſe of them; yet if they were ſo in him, the Scripture could not be ſilent concerning them, becauſe they are of greateſt concern to the Intereſt of a Government, the Honour and Service of it, and to our Duty and Benefit.

VIII. The Holy Ghoſt is an Holy Perſon, yet is not a Pattern of our Holineſs, as the Political holy Perſons are, God, Chriſt and the Saints of God; therefore he is not a Perſon ejuſdem generis, with the Political holy Perſons. The chief good of Man, his higheſt Excellency and Felicity, that which he ought to propoſe to himſelf as his ultimate end, and that which Religion ultimately deſigneth, is ὁμοίωσις θεῷ, his Conformity and Aſſimilation to God, to be God-like and Son of God-like in Grace and Glory, in Sanctity and Immortality. God and Chriſt are the Archetype, Model and Platform, according to which all the holy Virtuous are formed; for they are regenerated into the living Image of God now in Holineſs and Goodneſs, into his glorious Image at their Reſurrection, and are predeſtinated to be conformed to the Image of his Son. God and Chriſt are alſo the great Exemplar, whom all muſt ſtudiouſly imitate and reſemble, that belong to God and Godlineſs: And ſo they muſt ſtudiouſly imitate the Saints of God in that which maketh them Saints. But who ever heard, that the ultimate Deſign of Religion, and that which ought to be our ultimate Deſign, is Conformity and Aſſimilation to the Holy Ghoſt in Grace and Glory? That the holy Virtuous are renew'd and transform'd into the Image of the Holy Ghoſt now and at their Reſurrection? That we ought ſtudiouſly to imitate and reſemble the Holy Ghoſt, to put him on by Aſſimilation (as we put on Chriſt) to be Followers of the Holy Ghoſt as our Captain, or as the dear Children of God are Followers of God? Is the Holy Ghoſt ever propos'd to us as a Pattern and Exemplar of Humility, Self-denial, Contempt of the World, of Mercifulneſs, Benignity and walking in Love? No, nothing of this Nature is to be found in Chriſtianity or in the Scriptures, which every where inculcate our imitation of God, Chriſt and the Saints, but know nothing of our imitation of the Holy Ghoſt. Whence we make a Judgment of a Branch of the Scholaſtic Theology of elder Times, which ſtileth the Holy Ghoſt (i) εἰκὼν ἀληθὴς ϗ φυσικὴ θεοῦ ϗ χριςοῦ, the true and natural Image of God and Chriſt, μορφὴ τοῦ υἱοῦ, the Form of the Son, εἰκὼν ἀπαράλλακτος τοῦ υἱοῦ, the Image of the Son in nothing differing, πρόσωπον τοῦ υἱοῦ, the Face or Countenance of the Son, εἰκὼν ἀκεραιφνὴς τοῦ πατρὸς ὁ υἱός, ὁμοίωσις δὲ φυσικὴ τοῦ υἱοῦ τὸ πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ, the Son is the ſincere Image of the Father, but the natural reſemblance of the Son is his Spirit; the Son is called the Prototype (or Archetype) of the Holy Ghoſt, as the Father is of the Son. All which uſual Maxims of the Scholaſtick Theology (and many more) are repugnant to this great Principle (which is as demonſtrable as any Propoſition in Euclid) the Holy Ghoſt is no Political kind of Perſon.

IX. The Holy Ghoſt never appeareth in the form of a Political kind of Perſon, as the other Divine Imperial Perſons do; therefore he is no Political kind of Perſon, as they are. For unleſs we will entertain a fond and irreligious Conceit of ſome Scholaſtick Theologers (k) that the three Men which appear'd to Abraham were the three Perſons of the Trinity, and that the two Angels which appear'd to Lot, were the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, it cannot be ſuppos'd, that the Scripture ever maketh mention of any appearance of the Holy Ghoſt in the form of a Political Perſon. In the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt on the day of Pentecoſt he made no viſible appearance but that of fiery cloven Tongues. His deſcent upon our Saviour at his Baptiſm is ſaid, to have been in a bodily ſhape like a Dove, but not in the form of a Political Perſon. In the Viſion of the Prophet Daniel ch. 7. 9, 13. The ancient of Days appeareth as an Imperial Majeſty and one like the Son of Man appeareth (both appear in the form of a Political kind of Perſon:) But there is no appearance of the Holy Ghoſt. In the Book of the Apocalypſe the Son of Man appeareth in a Viſion, Ch. 1. 13. God appeareth as an Imperial Majeſty ſitting on a Throne, Ch. 4. 2, 3. Seven Lamps of Fire appear before the Throne (which are the ſeven Spirits of God, Ch. 4. 5.) But there is no viſible appearance of the Holy Ghoſt. When the other Divine Perſons appear in the form of Political Perſons, the Holy Ghoſt appeareth not; and whenſoever he maketh a viſible appearance, is not in their form of a Political Perſon; which is a manifeſt Indication, that he is no ſuch kind of Perſon. And why are we ſaid, to be converted and turned to the other two Divine Perſons God and Chriſt (called the Lord) yet are never ſaid to be converted and turn'd to the Holy Ghoſt, but becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is not the Holy Sovereignty and Government ſtrictly ſo called, and therefore is no Political Prince or Potentate, and conſequently is no Political Perſon?

(h) Polit. l. 3. c. 14, 15.

(i) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 7

(k) Idem ibid. l. 8. c. 2.

X. The truth of this Hypotheſis may be inferr'd from the Anti-Trinitarians Objections againſt the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt; for their Objections may be clearly aſſoiled by this Hypotheſis, but not without it. They argue (l) that the Holy Ghoſt is left unmentioned in many places of the New Teſtament, wherein the Father and the Son are mention'd, and wherein the Holy Ghoſt would not be left unmentioned, if he was a third Perſon diſtinct from the Father and the Son, there being the ſame reaſon in thoſe places for mentioning the Holy Ghoſt, if he is a Perſon, as for mentioning the other Perſons, and no reaſon to the contrary. But from our Hypotheſis it appeareth, that there is not par ratio, but there is a vaſt diſparity in the Caſe, the Holy Ghoſt not being a Political Imperial Perſon of our Religion, as the other two Divine Perſons are. Wherefore in all ſuch places of the New Teſtament which deſign to mention only the Political Imperial Perſons of our Religion by themſelves, or which deſign to mention only the Political Perſons of our Religion both thoſe of the Subject and thoſe of the Imperial Party together, in all ſuch places the Holy Ghoſt is omitted and unmention'd. Many places of the New Teſtament deſign, to mention only the Political Imperial Perſons of our Religion by themſelves (as without enumerating the Subject-party, ſo without proceeding to mention the Holy Ghoſt in Conſort with the Father and the Son) and this is done with great reaſon; for becauſe they are the only Political Imperial Perſons of our Religion and Polity, therefore it is fit, that oftentimes they ſhould be mention'd and celebrated by themſelves, and oftentimes it is not needful, or not proper, to mention the Holy Ghoſt in Conſort with them. In the Inſtitution of Baptiſm (which is for receiving the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt, is the Sacrament of Regeneration by the Holy Ghoſt, and wherein we profeſs the Chriſtian Religion as receiv'd from the Apoſtles inſpir'd by the Holy Ghoſt) and upon ſome eſpecial occaſions alſo it was requiſite, that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be mention'd in Conſort with the Father and the Son and as their Divine Ghoſtly Agent: As in the beginning of the Apocalypſe it was requiſite, that ſeven Arch-angels ſhould be mention'd in Conſort with God and Chriſt as their Providential Agents. But as in other places of the New Teſtament God and Chriſt are uſually mention'd without any Arch-angelical Agents: So ordinarily in the New Teſtament God and Chriſt are mention'd and celebrated without mentioning in Conſort with them their Divine ghoſtly Agent the Holy Ghoſt. Which would be an unreaſonble and an unaccountable Omiſſion, if the Holy Ghoſt is a Political Imperial Perſon of our Religion (as the Father and the Son is;) there would be a culpable defect in our Saviour's Saying, that the Chriſtian Religion is the knowledge of the only true God and the only true Meſſiah without mentioning the Holy Ghoſt. S. Paul could not rightly call it the Myſtery of God and of the Father and of Chriſt: Nor make this Deſcription of it; to us there is but one God the Father, of whom are all things and we in him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt by whom are all things, and we by him, without making any mention of the Holy Ghoſt. S. John could not rightly ſay, our Fellowſhip (Society) is with the Father and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt; if that which ye have heard from the beginning, ſhall remain in you, ye alſo ſhall continue in the Son and in the Father (Societively,) he that abideth in the Doctrine of Chriſt, he hath both the Father and the Son, without making any mention of the Holy Ghoſt as in Conſort with them. S. John's Salutation could not rightly be of this form; Grace be with you, Mercy and Peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Son of the Father; S. Paul's Salutations in the beginning of all his Epiſtles could not rightly be of this form; Grace be unto you and Peace from God our Father and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; his Prayers could not rightly run in this form; God himſelf and our Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt direct our way unto you; our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our Father which hath loved us, comfort your Hearts, without adjoining the Holy Ghoſt in Conſortſhip with God and Chriſt. Heaven this Apoſtle calleth the Kingdom of Chriſt and of God, but not of the Holy Ghoſt; calleth himſelf an Apoſtle by the Commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is our Hope; giveth Charge to Timothy in the ſight of God who quickeneth all things and before Chriſt Jeſus; and before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the quick and the dead; prayeth for Peace to the Epheſians with Love and Faith from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; writeth to the Church of the Theſſalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; prayeth, that the Name of Chriſt may be glorify'd in them and they in him, according to the Grace of our God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and that the Lord would direct their Hearts into the Love of God and into the patient waiting for Chriſt; deſcribeth their Converſion to be a turning to ſerve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from Heaven; and his preaching was a teſtifying both to Jews and Greeks Repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; in all which paſſages of this Apoſtle (and ſeveral ſuch more) there is not any mention of the Holy Ghoſt in Conſortſhip with the other Divine Perſons. In like manner S. Jude writeth to them that are ſanctified by God the Father and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and againſt them, that deny the only Lord God and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and S. Peter writeth to them, that have obtain'd like precious Faith with us through the Righteouſneſs of God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: Grace and Peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Jeſus our Lord. The holy Writer of the Apocalypſe had Heaven opened to him, but could not ſee the Bl. Trinity there (although the People and they that ſhould be wiſer than the Community of the People, talk confidently of ſeeing the Bl. Trinity in Heaven) he ſaw no Divine Perſons there but God and the Lamb, and accordingly the Creatures make their Doxology only to him that ſitteth upon the Throne and to the Lamb; the wicked call to the Rocks and Mountains, to hide them from the

Joh. 17. 3.
Col. 2. 2.
1 Cor. 8. 6.
1 Joh. 1. 3.
ch. 2. 24.
Eph. 2.
2 Joh. 3.
1 Theſſ. 3. 11
2 Theſſ. 2. 15.
Eph. 5. 5.
1 Tim. 1. 1.
ch. 6. 13.
2 Tim. 4. 1.
Eph. 6. 23.
2 Theſſ. 1. 1, 12. and ch. 3. 5.
1 Theſſ. 1. 9, 10.
Act. 20. 21.
Jude 1. 4.
2 Pet. 1. 1, 2.
Apoc. 5. 13. 6, 15. 14, 4.

(l) Crellius de uno Deo l. 1. S. 3. c. 3.

the Wrath of him that ſitteth on the Throne and from the Wrath of the Lamb; the Saints are ſaid 20, 6. to be the firſt fruits unto God and to the Lamb, to 12, 17. be Prieſts of God and of Chriſt; to be thoſe that 14, 12. keep the Commandments of God and the Faith of Jeſus, and have the Teſtimony of Jeſus; the Martyrs are ſaid, to be beheaded for the witneſs of Je- 20, 4. ſus and for the word of God; the Kingdoms of the 11, 15. World are ſaid to become the Kingdoms of our Lord and of his Chriſt: And now is come Salvation 12, 10. and Strength, and the Kingdom of our God and the
21. 22, 23. Power of his Chriſt. Of the New Jeruſalem it is ſaid,
22. 1, 3. The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the Tem- ple of it; the Glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof; a pure River of Water of Life proceeded out of the Throne of God and of the Lamb; and the Throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it. Thus the Stream of the New Teſtament runneth, and this is the tenour of it; in the main current of it the Holy Ghoſt is not mention'd in conſortſhip with the Political Imperial Perſons of our Religion. But ſo great an omiſſion could not be in the New Teſtament, if the Holy Ghoſt is a Political Imperial Perſon.

Some places of the New Teſtament deſign, to mention the Political Perſons of our Religion, both thoſe of the Subject and thoſe of the Imperial Party together, and theſe only: And in ſuch places the Holy Ghoſt is not mention'd; as Apoc. 3. 5. He that overcometh, I will confeſs his Name before my Father and before his Angels. 1 Tim. 5. 21. I charge thee before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the elect Angels. Luk. 9. 26. Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and my words, of him ſhall the Son of Man be aſhamed, when he ſhall come in his own Glory, and in his Father's, and of the Holy Angels. Heb. 12. 22, 23. Ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the City of the living God the Heavenly Jeruſalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the general Aſſembly and Church of the firſt-born which are written in Heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the Spirits of juſt men made perfect: And to Jeſus the Mediator of the New Covenant. (m) Who can believe (ſaith Crellius) that in ſo prolix an enumeration of Perſons, who for their great excellency may be called Divine, the Holy Spirit could be omitted, if it is ſuch a Perſon as the Father or Chriſt? It ought to be acknowledg'd, that the Holy Spirit is not ſuch a Perſon as the Father or Chriſt; for this is the only imaginable reaſon, why in ſo prolix an enumeration of Divine kind of Perſons the Holy Ghoſt is omitted: but this will not ſerve a Socinian's purpoſe, that deſigneth abſolutely to deſtroy the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt. The Divine Author to the Hebrews propos'd to himſelf, to enumerate only the holy Political Perſons (Subject and Imperial) that make our Polity; and the Holy Spirit not being one of theſe therefore hath not a place in his illuſtrious Syſtem.

(m) Quis credat in tam prolixa enumeratione perſonarum, quas ob præſtantiam ſummam divinas appellare licet, potuiſſe omitti ſpiritum ſanctum, ſi is ejuſmodi perſona divina eſſet, qualis Pater aut Chriſtus?

XI. Againſt the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt many other Objections are made, which may be clearly aſſoil'd from our Hypotheſis.

Crell. ſupr. c. 1. & 4. (1.) An Objection is rais'd from this Text of the Apoſtle, The things of God knoweth no Man but the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. 2. 11. but of this Text of the Apoſtle we have before given an account. A like Objection is rais'd from the words of our Saviour, Matth. 11. 27. No Man (no Perſon) knoweth the Son but the Father: neither knoweth any Man (any Perſon) the Father ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him. This cannot be true (ſaith the Objector) if the Holy Ghoſt is a Perſon and a Divine Perſon diſtinct from the Father and the Son; for if ſo, when our Saviour ſpake theſe words, there was a Perſon, that knew the Father beſides the Son, and there was a Perſon that knew the Son beſides the Father (and that without the Revelation of any) namely the Holy Ghoſt. But it is manifeſt, that in the words of our Saviour he confineth his Conſideration to the political kind of Perſons (ſuch only are Perſons commonly ſo called) ſuch as the Father and the Son, and Men and Angels are, but ſuch as the Holy Ghoſt is not, who therefore may be a Perſon ſui generis, and yet the words of our Saviour may be unexceptionably true.

(2.) A principal Objection againſt the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt is a ſuppos'd abſurd conſequence of it; for it inferreth (ſaith the Objector) that the Holy Ghoſt is the Father of Chriſt, and that Chriſt is his Son; for Chriſt was generated by the Holy Ghoſt, and the Spirit of Holineſs was the proper and proximate cauſe of his filiation at his Reſurrection, Rom. 1. 4. But this Objection is wholly invalidated by our Account of the Holy Ghoſt: for by the Holy Ghoſt whereby our Saviour was generated of the Bl. Virgin is moſt probably meant the Holy Ghoſt in the imperſonal acceptation: but if we ſuppoſe it, to be meant of the Holy Ghoſt in the perſonal acceptation as alſo the Spirit of Holineſs whereby he was rais'd, yet ſeeing the Holy Ghoſt in the perſonal acceptation is no political kind of Perſon, he can be no political perſonal Relation, neither Sovereign nor Subject, nor Father nor Son; and therefore he cannot be either the Father of Chriſt by generation or our Father by regeneration. In the Scholaſtick Theology indeed the Holy Ghoſt is a political kind of Perſon, and is ſtiled (n) omnium qui in Chriſto renaſcuntur, parens ac genitor; it maketh the Holy Ghoſt our Father by Spiritual Regeneration, and by parity of reaſon the Father of Chriſt by Generation. It ſuppoſeth alſo the Holy Ghoſt naturæ conditor, the Creator of our Nature, and the Creator of Chriſt's Humane Nature, which is a making the Holy Ghoſt both his Father and our Father; for our Creator, as ſuch, is (in a duely limited ſenſe) the Father of Mankind, Mal. 2. 10. Luk. 3. 38. Act. 17. 29. Theſe Conſequences are unavoidable otherwiſe than by ſuppoſing the Holy Ghoſt, to be a Perſon incapable of having Children, no political kind of Perſon, Relation, Potentate, Governour or Agent, but only a ghoſtly virtual Agent, which is in God and which God communicatively is, and which is his ghoſtly virtual Agent, which he inſpireth, and whereby he inſpireth into us and ingendreth in us the holy Light and Life, whereby we become God's Children. For the Holy Ghoſt in this Generation-work is not the Perſon of the Father, but is only the Holy Ghoſt (the ghoſtly virtual Agent of him who is the Father,) nor are we generated the living Images of the Holy Ghoſt, but of God; and from him we have our Parental Origin and Deſcent, not from the Holy Ghoſt otherwiſe than as his Agent and his Agency and Virtue. For the Illuſtration whereof let us ſuppoſe, that there is in Parental Providence, and that Parental Providence communicatively is, ſuch a Spirit of the World, which is an intellectus agens to Mankind and Crell. ibid. c. 7.

(n) Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 10. Digr. 5. c. 1.

and alſo vivificative to the World of Mankind. It is manifeſt, that although this Spirit of the World is illuminative and vivificative to the World of Mankind, and conſequently a Light and Life is ingendred in them by it, yet this Spirit of the World is not the Father of Mankind, but Parental Providence is their generative Father by this his Spirit. And if it cannot be ſuppos'd, that the Holy Ghoſt (notwithſtanding his ſort of Perſonality) is our Father by Regeneration, much leſs can it be ſuppos'd, that he is the Father of Chriſt by Generation; for he is infinitely more the Son of God than Chriſtians are his Sons, and hath God for his generative Father at an infinitely higher rate than they.

Crell. ſupr. c. 6. (3.) It is objected, that by the Holy Ghoſt the Scripture meaneth the Divine Virtue or Efficacy, the Energy or Power of God; for ſo the Holy Ghoſt is called in Scripture, and therein theſe Names are equipollent to the Holy Ghoſt, Luk. 24. 49. and ch. 1. 35. 1 Cor. 2. 4, 5. Act. 10. 38. Matth. 12. 28. compar'd with Luk. 11. 10. Eph. 3. 7, 20. Accordingly, thoſe Supernatural Gifts and Operations which proceed from that Divine Energy and Power, which we call Divine Inſpiration, holy People without any Revelation or further Inquiry impute to the Holy Ghoſt as the proximate cauſe of them; and when the holy Writers would ſignifie, that any one is divinely inſpir'd, they ſay, he is full of the Holy Ghoſt (or uſe the like Phraſe:) but if the Holy Ghoſt is not this Divine Virtue and Energy it ſelf, but a Perſon diſtinct from the Father and the Son, how could they be aſſur'd from the Nature of the thing, that Prophecy and all other the like Supernatural Gifts and Operations proceeded immediately from the Holy Ghoſt? Much of Truth and Solidity there is in this Objection, which is really no Objection againſt our Hypotheſis, but is plainly a confirmation of it: For agreeably to this Objection we have defined the Holy Ghoſt, The holy Inſpiration Virtue; and how is it poſſible, but that the holy People and the holy Writers ſhould impute Prophecy and all other Gifts of Supernatural Inſpiration to the holy Inſpiration-Virtue either in the imperſonal or perſonal acceptation? In the imperſonal (or meerly real) acceptation the Holy Ghoſt is this real Divine Virtue and Energy it ſelf meerly ſuch. In the perſonal acceptation the Holy Ghoſt is this real Divine Virtue and Energy it ſelf but not meerly ſuch; which is all the difference, that is between theſe two Acceptations, the one of which cannot be ſuppos'd, wholly to exclude the other out of the Holy Scriptures. But becauſe virtus divina in the perſonal acceptation is the definitive Notion of the Holy Ghoſt in the perſonal acceptation, this ſpeaketh the Holy Ghoſt, to be no Political, but an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon, and therefore fitly called Virtus Divina or Vis Enthea.

Crell. ſupr. c. 6. n. 445, 450. XII. Other Objections are raiſed againſt the Perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt. (1.) From certain tropical Phraſes of Scripture: for who will ſay, that any thing is marked or ſealed by a perſon, that any perſon is poured out upon Men, that they are baptiz'd with it, made to drink into it, anointed with it? To ſay theſe things of a political kind of Perſon (that we are marked or ſealed with him, that he is poured forth, ſhed abroad, falleth on us, that we are baptiz'd with him, made to drink into him, and anointed with him) is indeed intolerable Language, as every ingenuous Mind muſt acknowledge. If we ſuppoſe this political kind of Perſon, King, Prieſt or Prophet, to be communicative of Gifts and Graces (as the Son of God is) yet to ſay of him, I will pour him out upon all Fleſh, I will baptize you with him and with Fire; Believers are anointed with him, marked or ſealed with him (intending theſe Sayings of him to be underſtood metonymically in reſpect of his Gifts and Graces) is as great ineptitude of Language as the Socinians Proſopopæia's touching the Holy Ghoſt. The Holy Ghoſt muſt be ſuch a thing, to which theſe Phraſes are applicable and accommodate, and therefore he cannot be a political kind of Perſon, but is definitively The holy Inſpiration-virtue as an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon; for to ſuch a kind of Perſon, to ſuch an holy Inſpiration-virtue perſonal theſe Phraſes are fitly applicable and accommodate. They are accommodate to his Nature and to his kind of Perſonality, as he is Agent-virtual. For as he is Agent-virtual (an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon) He is poured out his Supernatural Gifts and Graces being poured out (in pouring out theſe he is poured out) and ſo we are baptized with him, made to drink into him, and anointed with him. As let us ſuppoſe, that the Spirit of the World is an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon and an Inſpiration-virtue of the Gift of Worldly Languages; this Gift of Worldly Languages may fitly be ſaid, to be poured out, and God in pouring out this Gift of Languages poureth out this perſonal Inſpiration-virtue, as it is Agent-virtual; for he poureth out its Agency and Virtue, becauſe this Gift of Languages is that which is its Agency and Virtue. The other Scripture-phraſe of being marked or ſealed is alſo accommodate to the Nature of the Holy Ghoſt and the kind of its Perſonality: for Believers cannot be marked or ſealed with a political Perſon, becauſe ſuch a Perſon cannot be their interiour Endowment: but an Inſpiration-virtue that is no political Perſon, but only an Agent-virtual, may be their Interiour Endowment, and therefore they may be marked or ſealed with it. God ſetteth his mark of Property upon them (as it were) and owneth them for his, by giving them his Holy Spirit as their Interiour Endowment; and how eaſie is it, to conceive, that the Holy Spirit is the Interiour Endowment of all Regenerate Souls, and dwelleth in them as a Spiritual-vital Principle, which is not unſubſtantial, nor imperſonal, nor yet a political kind of Perſon, but its Perſonality is that of a ghoſtly virtual Agent? This being clearly intelligible and conceivable, we may infer from it, that the Holy Ghoſt (as an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon) might be the Interiour Endowment of thoſe Believers, that were inſpir'd with the Supernatural Gift of it, and they might fitly be ſaid, to be marked or ſealed with the Holy Spirit.

(2.) It is further argued; that God is ſaid, to have given us of his Spirit, to give a meaſure of it, a double portion of it (ſo much as is ſufficient for two, or the elder Brother's Portion, Deut. 21. 17.) and the Gifts of the Holy Spirit are called μερισμοὶ, partitions or diſtributions of it; all which Phraſes argue, that the Holy Spirit may be divided into Parts and Portions, which is incompetible to a Perſon. Some of theſe Phraſes indeed are incompetible to a Political Perſon, and but ſome of them (for we are rightly ſaid, to have ſomething of God and Chriſt in us) and ſo far the Objection may ſeem to have difficulty in it. But this difficulty will vaniſh, if we ſuppoſe the Holy Ghoſt an holy Inſpiration-virtue as an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon. For let us ſuppoſe the Spirit of the World, to be ſuch a Perſon, and Ibid.

there will be no difficulty in conceiving, that as it is an Inſpiration-virtue and a virtual Agent, it is capable of ſuch a Partition (notwithſtanding its Perſonality) that Men may be ſaid, to have more or leſs of the Spirit of the World in them: Nor is it otherwiſe with the Spirit that is of God.

(3.) To deſtroy his Perſonality, it is further objected, That a Perſon cannot be given to many Perſons, much leſs to infinite, ſo as really to be and dwell in them; but ſo the Holy Ghoſt is given. If we ſay, that the Holy Ghoſt is an Infinite Perſon, the Objector urgeth; that if ſo, he needeth not be given unto Men, to be and to dwell in them; for he was always in them, and cannot but be ſo becauſe of his Infinity. Thus the Anti-Trinitarians have their Fopperies of Philoſophy, as well as the Scholaſtick Theologers, who argue, (o) that Miſſion importeth the changing place, and therefore is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe God is every where. But as to all modes of exiſting, efficiencies, and reſiding in a place as his Houſe or Temple, God is not every where; and therefore the Holy Ghoſt may be an Infinite Perſon, yet may be given to innumerable Perſons, to be and dwell in them. In this Objection there is not ſo much ſtrength of reaſon as in the Argument of an ancient Writer (Didymus) who proveth the Deity of the Holy Spirit by this reaſon; becauſe to the Saints living in all parts of the World, adeſt inhabitator ſpiritus ſanctus, the Holy Spirit is preſent as an Inhabitant having an unbounded Subſtance.

SECTION II.

Of the Eternity and Unoriginateneſs of the Holy Spirit.

I. THE Divine Author to the Hebrews ſpeaketh of the Eternal Spirit, ch. 9. 14. and it appeareth from the conſtant ſenſe of Language in the New Teſtament, that by the Spirit in this place is meant the Holy Spirit (ſo the Vulg. Lat. readeth the place per ſpiritum ſanctum) and if inſtead of this Name The Spirit we ſubſtitute the definitive Notion thereof, which is virtus divina, thence it will appear, that the Spirit is denominated Eternal, as being from Eternity to Eternity. This the Scholaſtick Theology rightly acknowledgeth: but it ſuppoſeth the Exiſtence of the Holy Spirit from Eternity, to be originated by an Eternal proceſſio divinarum perſonarum productiva, productive proceſſion of the Divine Perſons (the Son and the Holy Ghoſt:) On the contrary, I ſuppoſe, that the Exiſtence of the Holy Spirit from Eternity is not originated by a productive proceſſion, but that (like the Divine Attributes) the Holy Spirit exiſteth from Eternity as an unoriginated eſſentiality of the Godhead. For the Scholaſtick Theology cannot prove its Maxim, nor ſhew by any good reaſon, that the Holy Spirit's Exiſtence from Eternity is originated (by a productive proceſſion) the only reaſons which it alledgeth being theſe of Aquinas. As all Multitude ought to be reduc'd to one, ſo it ought to be deriv'd from one Principle. (p) The Philoſophers ſuppos'd but one Principle. To ſuppoſe two Innaſcibles (underſtood in a large ſenſe, to ſignifie ſuch as do not proceed from another) is to ſuppoſe two Gods and two Divine Natures. Whence Hilary ſaith in his Book of Synods, Seeing there is but one God, there cannot be two Innaſcibles. And for this reaſon chiefly, becauſe if there were two Innaſcibles, one of them would not be from another; and ſo they would not be diſtinguiſh'd by a relative oppoſition. They muſt be diſtinguiſh'd therefore by diverſity of Nature. This Theology acknowledgeth, that the Holy Spirit is ingenit and innaſcible in the narrow ſenſe of the words, as they ſignifie that which is not generated (for it denieth, that the Holy Ghoſt is generated:) but it diſputeth, that the Holy Ghoſt is not in ſuch ſenſe ingenit and innaſcible, as not to have its Exiſtence from another: for if it was ſo ingenit and innaſcible, this Theology argueth, there would be two Gods and two Divine Natures. But this is no conſequence; for the unoriginated Exiſtence of the Holy Spirit from Eternity doth not at all claſh with the Mono-theiſm of God the Father, but on the contrary, it will appear preſently, that his Deity, and conſequently his ſole Deity cannot be without it. God and his Holy Spirit are not two Gods, nor two Divine Natures; they are but one Divine Eſſence and one Divine Sovereignty; and are no more two Principles or Heads of Beings, than Chriſt and his Holy Spirit are two Heads of the Church. The unoriginated Exiſtence of the Holy Spirit therefore doth not at all claſh with the due and rational deriving all Multitude from Unity. In this Scholaſtick Theology there is a Maxim, that (q) in divinis omnia ſunt unum, ubi non obviat relationis oppoſitio: In the Trinity all things are one, where the relative oppoſition, which is caus'd by the origination of one perſon from another, doth not hinder. But we have demonſtrated the falſity of this Maxim by proving, that the Holy Ghoſt is not a Perſon ejuſdem generis with the Father and the Son. God and his Holy Spirit therefore may be diſtinguiſh'd, without ſuppoſing the Holy Spirit, to have an originated Exiſtence from Eternity. Theſe Scholaſtic Reaſons for its originated Exiſtence being of no avail, it is requiſite, that ſome place of Scripture ſhould be produc'd, to prove it, if it muſt be believ'd as an Article of the Catholick Faith. But the Scholaſtick Theology proveth it not by any place of Scripture ſave only that celebrated one, which it inculcateth at a great rate, and at as great a rate miſunderſtandeth, Joh. 15. 26. When the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth, which proceedeth from the Father.

II. In this Theology there are ſeveral ſuch Indications of the falſity of this originated Exiſtence of the Holy Ghoſt, as ſpeak it not veriſimile, likely to be a Truth. For, (1.) The Proceſſion productive of the Son hath a proper Name, and a very intelligible one, It is called Generation; but the Proceſſion productive of the Holy Ghoſt, (r) non habet proprium nomen, hath not any proper Name; from whence we may juſtly infer, that there is no ſuch thing; for Name and Nature are connex'd, as in this Saying of Arnobius, (s) Attis nomine ſpoliaverat ſe viri, Attis bereav'd himſelf of the Name of a Man, when he bereav'd himſelf of the Nature of a Man; and his being bereav'd of the Name of a Man importeth, that he was bereav'd of the Nature of a Man. So if the Proceſſion productive of the Holy Ghoſt is of no proper Name, it is of no proper Nature, and therefore is nothing. If it

Ibid c. 8. n. 439.

(o) Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 1. S. 4.

(q) Idem Ibid. Q. 36. Art. 2. Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 9. S. 6.

(r) Aquin. Supr. Qu. 36. Art. 1.

(s) Adv. Gent. l. 5. p. 160.

(p) Philoſophi poſuerunt unum tantum principium. ponere duos innaſcibiles, eſt ponere duos Deos, & duas naturas divinas. unde Hilar. dicit in lib. de Synodis. Cum unus Deus ſit, duo innaſcibiles eſſe non poſſunt. Et hoc præcipue, quia ſi eſſent duo innaſcibiles, unus eorum non eſſet ab alio. Et ſic non diſtinguerentur oppoſitione relativa. oporteret igitur quod diſtinguerentur diverſitate naturæ. 1. Con. Gent. c. 4. Summ. 1. par. Qu. 11. art. 3. & Qu. 33. art. 4. ad 4.

is of no proper Name, it is not ſignify'd in Scripture, nor is a reveal'd truth. And if it is ſo innominable, it is unknowable, and muſt be left as much in the dark, as S. Bernard found it, when he ſaid, (t) Licet proceſſio ſpiritus ſancti obſcuriſſima ſit, & poſuerit tenebras latibulum ſuum.

(2.) Relations in God are ſaid to be (u) of ſo great Dignity, Nobility and Majeſty, that the moſt Sacred Myſtery of the Trinity is founded and ſubſiſteth meerly in the Relations of Origination, and by them the Divine Perſons are conſtituted and diſtinguiſh'd. The Foundations of theſe Divine Relations are the Proceſſions of the Divine Perſons: as Generation is the Foundation of the Relation of Paternity and Filiation. The Relation of the Principle of this Proceſſion is called Paternity, the Relation of the Perſon proceeding is called Filiation. But is there any thing anſwerable to theſe Relations in the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt? No, (w) The Relations which are ſuppos'd to be according to this ſort of Proceſſion, have no Name: (x) but the Relation of the Principle of this Proceſſion is called Spiration: the Relation of the Perſon proceeding, Proceſſion: although theſe Names do not belong to the Relations, but to the Proceſſions or Originations. But are theſe two Names or either of them the proper Name or Names of theſe Proceſſions or Originations? No, (y) The Proceſſion which is not Generation, is without any ſpecial Name: but it may be called Spiration, becauſe it is the Proceſſion of the Spirit. This Name Scholaſticks have given it, and it is left to them, to name it; which could not be, if either Name or Thing was found in the Bible. It is not ſo much as likely, that there is ſuch a perſonal productive Proceſſion, which cannot be called by any Name expreſſive of a perſonal productive Proceſſion, and which doth not found any nominable Relation; Nor is it likely, that one of the Divine Perſons is conſtituted and diſtinguiſh'd by ſuch an innominable Relation, which is nothing like a Relation, nothing like the Relations of Kindred, or the other Relations in the Trinity, Paternity and Filiation. (z) Proceſſio & ſpiratio ſecundum proprietatem ſignificationis magis videntur ſignificare actus notionales, quàm relationes: Proceſſion and Spiration according to the propriety of their ſignification ſeem rather to ſignifie the Notional Acts (ſo called) than Relations.

(3.) This Theology further obſerveth, (a) In the Creatures there is not any communication of Nature by Spiration, or by any other proceſſion than Generation. (b) None ought to wonder, if no ſimilitude can be taken from Creatures and uſual things, which is fit, to illuſtrate the proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt; ſuch as we have in treating of the Production of the Son, which is properly called Generation: for that Proceſſion (of the Holy Ghoſt) is ſingular and agreeing only to the Divinity, whereby one Perſon both naturally and of the ſame Subſtance is ſo produc'd by two, as to be generated by neither of them. This ſtrange productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is ſo ſtupendiouſly exotick, that there is not any reſemblance of it in the whole Univerſe, much leſs in this lower World. But ſeeing Senſibles are the Imitamina of the Intelligibles, the things below of the things above, and there is an Analogy between Divine and Humane Affairs, this ſtupendious exotick Nature of the productive proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is a great Indication, that there is no ſuch thing.

III. And this we may be well aſſur'd of, if we conſider, that the Holy Scriptures are wholly ſilent concerning it: nor would the Scholaſtick Theologers think otherwiſe, if it was not their humour, to diſtort the Holy Scriptures from a Chriſtian and Holy Popular to a School-metaphyſical and Philoſophic Senſe: for ſo our Saviour's words touching the Holy Spirit, Joh. 16. 13, 14. He ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf; but whatſoever he ſhall hear, that ſhall he ſpeak; for he ſhall receive of mine; are in the Scholaſtick Theology diſtorted, to ſignifie (c) the productive Proceſſion and ſubſtantial Production of the Holy Spirit: for this Theology diſputeth, (d) One perſon is not ſaid, to receive, or hear, or learn of another, ſave only by a productive proceſſion from him, and being the thing which he receiveth: becauſe in God Science is the ſame with Eſſence. Our Saviour is ſuppos'd to preach School-metaphyſicks inſtead of Goſpel; for (e) when the Father is ſaid to ſpeak, and the Son to hear, the meaning is, that Subſtance is communicated from the Father to the Son, in which that thing is, which he ſpeaketh; which alſo muſt be affirmed touching the Holy Spirit: (f) as Generation expreſſeth the proceſſion of the Son from the Father according to Subſtance: ſo πνεῦσις, Spiration, ſignifieth the proper proceſſion of the Holy Spirit according to Subſtance: Our Saviour's breathing on his Diſciples therefore ſignifieth this Subſtantial Proceſſion of the Holy Spirit from the Divine Subſtance. So the Name of Living Water which our Saviour giveth to the Holy Spirit, (g) is in this Theology ſuppos'd, to relate to the οὐσιώδης, ſubſtantive production of it, and in the ſame ſenſe it underſtandeth ἐκπορεύεσθαι, to proceed: πηγάζειν, idem eſt quod ἐκπορεύεσθαι, hoc verò ſubſtantialem proceſſionem ſignificat: To pour out (as out of a Fountain) is the ſame with proceeding, which ſignifieth a Subſtantial Proceſſion. At the ſame rate this Theology underſtandeth thoſe other Terms which it uſeth, προχεῖσθαι, προϊέναι, ἀναβλύζειν (to be poured out, to come forth, to burſt out) for theſe (h) ſignifie a ſubſtantial Emanation, and ſuch a proceſſion, whereby a perſon receiveth Subſiſtence, which the Greek Theologers call Proceſſion. (i) So the Ethiopians inſtead of the word Vazza went forth or proceeded, and in the Preterperfect Tenſe, uſe the word Saraz, to bud or ſprout forth. Thus Claudius in his Confeſſion.

> I believe in the Holy Ghoſt, reviving Lord, Zaſratz em Ab, who proceeded or ſprung from the Father.

Thus the Holy Scriptures are diſtorted and the words of our Saviour perverted (from the

---

(t) Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 2. Art. 4. S. 2.

(u) Ibid. Diſp. 3. in Proœm.

(w) Relationes quæ ſecundum hujuſmodi proceſſionem accipiuntur, innominatæ ſunt. Aquin. ſupr. Qu. 36. Art. 1.

(x) Sed vocatur relatio principii hujus proceſſionis ſpiratio: relatio autem procedentis, proceſſio: quamvis hæc duo nomina ad ipſas proceſſiones vel origines pertineant & non ad relationes. Ibid. Qu. 28. Art. 4.

(y) Proceſſio quæ non eſt generatio, eſt ſine ſpeciali nomine: ſed poteſt nominari ſpiratio, quia eſt proceſſio ſpiritus. Ibid. Qu. 27. Art. 4.

(z) Ibid. Qu. 36. Art. 1.

(a) In creaturis communicatio naturæ non eſt niſi per generationem. Ibid. Qu. 27. Art. 4. ad 3.

(b) Mirum eſſe nemini debet, ſi nulla creatis & uſitatis ex rebus transferri ſimilitudo poteſt, quæ ad ſpiritus ſancti proceſſionem declarandam idonea ſit; cujuſmodi in Filii productione ſuppetit: quæ propriè generatio dicitur. Eſt enim ſingularis, ac ſoli Divinitati congruens illa proceſſio, qua ſic ab ambobus & naturaliter, & ejuſdem ſubſtantiæ perſona una producitur, ut ab neutra generetur. Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 10. S. 4.

(c) Petav. ibid. c. 5. S. 4, 5. & c. 2. S. 6. & l. 3. c. 8.

(d) Nihil vel accipere, vel audire, vel diſcere ab una perſona dici alteram, niſi ab eadem oriendo, & exiſtendo idipſum quod accipit: quoniam hoc eſt ſcire in Deo, quod eſſe. Ibid.

(e) Loqui patrem, vel audire Filium, eſt eam Filio ſubſtantiam communicari à Patre, in qua idipſum eſt quod loquitur. Quod etiam de ſpiritu ſancto fatendum eſt. Ibid. l. 3. c. 8. S. 2.

(f) Ibid. l. 7. c. 5. S. 9, 11.

(g) Ibid. c. 4. S. 4.

(h) Subſtantialem emanationem ſignificant, ac proceſſionem ejuſmodi, qua perſona ſubſiſtentiam accipit, quam ἐκπόρευσιν appellant Græci Theologi. Ibid. S. 3.

(i) Ludolph. Hiſt. B. 3. c. 5. Ed. 1682.

Preſent to the Preterperfect Tenſe) and this is ἄιτιον τȢ ψεύδȢς, that which cauſeth our grand Miſtakes of the Holy Scriptures and of the Articles of our Faith, they have fallen into the Hands of Scholaſticks (Platonic and Ariſtotelian, of ancient and later times,) who will have them underſtood in their Scholaſtick Metaphyſical Senſe, which is both Unpopular and Unholy. Thus they interpret the Words of our Saviour touching the Miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. Joh. 15. 26. Whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth which proceedeth from the Father. For the Holy Ghoſt's proceeding from the Father in reſpect of ſubſtantive Production into Exiſtence is nothing like any Popular or Holy-popular Affair: Nor is it pertinent to the matter, which our Saviour ſpeaketh of, which is only the (temporary) Miſſion and Communication of the Holy Ghoſt: Nor is it pertinent to our Saviour's Scope, which is to repreſent the Holy Spirit as the Spirit of Truth and the Authentick Witneſs, becauſe he proceedeth from the Father: Nor could the Hearers of his Words underſtand them in the Scholaſtick Senſe; for the terms of proceeding from the Father are not amongſt Mankind expreſſive of an ȣ̓σιώδης, ſubſtantive Production into Exiſtence: Nor is his Speech touching a thing infinite Ages paſt; for he ſpeaketh in the Preſent Tenſe, and therefore ſo ſpeaketh, becauſe he ſpeaketh of a thing coming on and at hand. S. Auſtin himſelf (who uſually maketh Scholaſtick Interpretations, yet) ſometimes ſaith of the Holy Spirit ſpoken of in the Goſpel (k) exiit, non quomodo natus, ſed quomodo datus, the Holy Spirit as given unto Men proceeded from the Father. Beza upon the place ſaith; it is certain, that our Saviour here doth not ſpeak of the Eſſence of the Spirit, but the Virtue and Efficacy of it in us, of which he maketh the Father the Origin. Such Teſtimonies as theſe therefore are not appoſitely cited either by the Greeks or againſt the Greeks, to prove the Eſſence of the Holy Spirit. No Scripture informeth us, that there is any ſuch thing as a Scholaſtick productive Proceſſion of the Holy Spirit, yet the Greek and Latin Church (profoundly Scholaſticizing) for many Ages have been divided about it, and no body can tell, whence the Controverſie aroſe.

IV. The Scholaſtick Theology giveth not a tolerably good account of that productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt which it ſuppoſeth; the whole of it is an incongruous human Invention, that claſheth with ſound Reaſon. For,

(1.) This Theology ſuppoſeth, that there are in the Godhead two Proceſſions productive of two Divine Perſons, which are equal and equally Divine. But this cannot be known, unleſs by Divine Revelation it be made known (which it is not:) Nor is it reaſonable, to believe theſe Proceſſions from God of two Divine Perſons that are equal and equally Divine; for but one of them is celebrated as the ſupereminent Object of his Love, one of them is counted his יחיד unus & unicè dilectus, but one of them is his Heir of all things (hæres ex aſſe;) one of them is his Iſaac, whom he hath dealt with, as Abraham dealt with Iſaac, Gen. 25. 5, 6. Unto Iſaac he gave all that he had.

(2.) One of theſe two Divine Perſons is ſuppoſed to be produc'd by Spiration, which is purely a matter of Scholaſtick Invention and not of reaſonable Conception; for it is as reaſonable, to ſuppoſe Inſpiration in the Godhead as Spiration, nor did our Saviour's Spiration (his breathing on his Diſciples) ſignifie any thing but Inſpiration. And is it probable, that any Spiration (although it may be the Origin of Life) can be the Origin of a perſonal ſubſtantive Production? It would do well, if the Schoolmen would hold to their own Rule (l) de divinis Philoſophari debemus per analogiam & ſimilitudinem ad res creatas, ſecluſis imperfectionibus (touching divine things we ought to Philoſophize by Analogy and Similitude to created things, Imperfections being remov'd) for amongſt created things there is no perſonal ſubſtantive Production by Spiration.

(3.) Nor are perſonal ſubſtantive Productions like to meer Emanations, that are neither Generation nor Spiration, which are Similitudes that do not diſtinguiſh the Perſons and their Origination, but confound them. Such as theſe Similitudes. (m) The Fountain of living Water is the Father: The River proceeding from the Fountain is the Son: The Water of the River is the Holy Spirit. One ſaith (n) the Holy Spirit is a ſweet Odour of the Subſtance of the Son, patrem roſam, filium florem, ſpiritum ſanctum odorem. And the ſame Author ſaith, ὁ υἱὸς ὀσμή τις τῆς πατρῴας ȣ̓σίας, the Son is as a certain Odour of the Father's Subſtance, he is from the Father as ἐξ ἀνθέων εὐωδία, a ſweet Odour from Flowers. He ſaith alſo, the Son is according to Nature begotten from the Father ὡς ἐκ πυρὸς θερμότης, as heat from fire; and Athenagoras ſaith (o) ὡς φῶς ἀπὸ πυρὸς τὸ πνεῦμα, the Spirit is from the Father as light from fire. The ſame Author ſaith of the Logos υἱὸς τȢ πατρὸς ϗ ἀπόρροια, he is the Son and Aporrhæa of the Father: And he alſo ſaith (p) τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα ἀπόρροιαν εἶναι φαμὲν τȢ θεȢ, we ſay, that the Holy Spirit is an Aporrhæa of God. Of theſe incongruous Imaginations (that confound two very diſtinct Perſons and their ſuppos'd diſtinct Originations) not God, but Man is the Author, Man Scholaſticizing the matters of God injudiciouſly and injuriouſly. For let us ſuppoſe, that the Son iſſueth from the Father by neceſſary Emanation (as things unſubſtantial and imperſonal may iſſue from one another) that his Sonſhip conſiſteth in being (q) ἀπόρροια τῆς τȢ πατρὸς ȣ̓σίας, (as Theognoſtus in Athanaſius calleth him) an Emanatory Aporrhæa of the Father's Subſtance; and that the Holy Spirit did emerge into Exiſtence as ἀπόρροια τȢ θεȢ, an Emanatory Aporrhæa of God; the conſequence is; the Holy Spirit will be moſt properly the Son, as being moſt properly an Emanatory Aporrhæa. For ſo the Spirit whence the Pagans had the Faculty of Divination, is called by their Theologers (r) πνεῦμα τὸ κατιὸν ϗ ἀπόρροια ἐκ τῆς ἐπȣρανίȣ δυνάμεως, a Spirit deſcending and an Aporrhæa from the celeſtial Power. The Holy Spirit therefore is not (in Conjunction with the Son) thus producible into Exiſtence, as will more clearly appear from the Schoolmens Diſputes.

(4.) For the Schoolmen Diſpute (s) that theſe Emanations muſt be ſuch, as are true and proper Actions, becauſe Generation is a true and proper Action, ſubſiſtent Perſons muſt be produc'd by a true and proper Action (or Actions,) and theſe Emanations cannot be immediately from the divine Eſſence without the Intervention of the divine Intellect and Will. For if they are not immediately from the divine Intellect and Will, no reaſon can be given, why (k) V. Petav. ſupr. l. 7. c. 13. S. 19, 20.

(l) Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 2. Art. 3. S. 2.

(m) Πηγὴ ὕδατος ζῶντος ὁ πατήρ· Ποταμὸς ἐκ τῆς πηγῆς προερχόμενος ὁ υἱός· Ὕδωρ τȢ ποταμȢ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 4. S. 1.

(n) Ibid c. 5. S. 8.

(o) Legat. p. 27.

(p) Ibid. p. 10.

(q) Petav. ſupr. l. 5. c. 8. S. 13.

(r) Gale in Jambl. p. 235.

(s) Gonet. ſupr. Art. 2. S. 1. & Art. 3. S. 2.

the one productive Proceſſion precedeth the other; why the one is Generation and not the other; why the Verbum is but from one Perſon and the Holy Spirit from two; (t) and this is the only Reaſon, why there are but two productive Proceſſions in the Godhead, becauſe in an intellectual and divine Nature there are but two immanent Actions Intellection and Volition. (u) They argue, that theſe Proceſſions in the Godhead muſt neceſſarily be from Immanent (not tranſient) Operations; that one of them being called Verbum and Sapientia Genita is manifeſtly from the Operation of Intellect (as the generality of the Fathers ſuppoſe;) therefore the other being a different Proceſſion, is from the Operation of the Will (Volition which is Spiration;) agreeably whereto S. Auſtin and ſome other Fathers, have called the Holy Spirit Amor, Love, Amor Patris & Filii, the mutual Love of the Father and the Son; for Love is from the Will. The Father and the Son by their mutual Love (w) are ſuppos'd, to produce the Holy Spirit, which is, Charitas ſubſtantialis & conſubſtantialis amborum, the ſubſtantial and conſubſtantial Love of both: But not the Eſſential Love whereby they Love each other (for the divine Eſſence is not one Perſon but three) but the product and terminus of their mutual Love.

(5.) Becauſe of his Origination the Holy Ghoſt is called in this Theology (x) the notional Love of the Father and the Son (who are ſaid to Love by the Holy Spirit) the Conjunction, Kiſs, Embracement, Undiſturbable Peace of the Father and the Son, the firm Connexion, inſeparable Love, individual Unity, indiſſoluble Bond of the Trinity. Of all which Appellations and Expreſſions a good Senſe might be made, if the Holy Ghoſt was peculiarly the divine Affection of Love and Charity: But (although oftentimes of the words of this Theology no other Conſtruction can be made, but that they ſignifie in this ſenſe, yet) it cannot be pretended, that the Holy Ghoſt is more Love than the Father is Love, and the Son is Love, as Love ſignifieth the divine Affection of Love and Charity, which is the only Bond of Union and undiſturbable Peace. But this Theology deludeth it ſelf and us with Ambiguity of words, calling the Holy Ghoſt peculiarly Love only (y) as being amor expreſſus, dilectionis terminus, expreſſed Love, the termination of it, and whoſe productive Proceſſion is from Will and Love; which ſignifieth nothing to his being peculiarly the divine Love and Charity, which is the Bond of Union. But becauſe his productive Proceſſion is from Will and Love, hence the Holy Ghoſt (ſaith this Theology) is by Perſonal Propriety, Donum Dei, the Gift of God, the Son is not the Gift although given by the Father (and celebrated as the ſupereminent Gift of God in Scripture, whence this Theology is no derivative) becauſe his productive Proceſſion is from Mind and Intelligence, not from Will and Love, as the Holy Ghoſts is. (z) Who therefore is called the Spirit, as being by his productive Proceſſion the ſweet breathing (halitus & Spiratio) of the Father and the Son. Spiritus Spirantis alicujus eſt. Spirit relateth to ſome one that Breaths, whence the Holy Spirit hath its Name, ſaith this Theology. As if the holy People which in antient times impos'd and us'd this Name the Spirit, were acquainted with the Scholaſtick Metaphyſicks touching the Love-breathings of the Father and the Son.

(6.) The Reaſonings of this Theology whereby it explicateth the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt have no Parallel. (a) Becauſe God was never ἄλογος, without Reaſon, hence this Theology inferreth, that the perſonal Logos muſt exiſt from Eternity: And becauſe God was never ἀθελής, without Will or Volition, hence it inferreth, that the Holy Ghoſt muſt exiſt from Eternity; nam quid eſt aliud Charitas, quam voluntas (as S. Auſtin ſaith) for what elſe is Love but Will? The Generation of the Verbum in this Theology is likened to the Generation of Accidents, not of Subſtances (b) yet this Verbum is ſuppoſed to be Verbum ſubſiſtens, λόγος οὐσιώδης, a ſubſiſtent and ſubſtantial Verbum: So the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is likened to the productive Proceſſion, not of any Subſtance, but of an Accident (Volition or Affection) yet it is called Amor ſubſtantialis & conſubſtantialis, the ſubſtantial and conſubſtantial Love. Of the Verbum this Theology thus interpreteth the Scripture. (c) I came out of the Mouth of the moſt High: That is, out of the Intellect of the Father, which is as it were the Mouth of a Spiritual Subſtance. And in like manner it ſaith of the Holy Spirit (d) it is called the Spirit of the Mouth of God: By which Name the Son is called by the ancient Doctors. (e) Theſe compare the Son to a Word or Speech that goeth out of our Mouth, and the Holy Spirit to the Breath or Spirit that accompanieth it. Whence they infer, that there is a Spirit of God, becauſe his Word muſt not be of worſe condition than ours, without Spirit. Verbum ſine Spiritu non eſt, ut neque mens ſine Verbo. The Verbum is not without Spirit, as the Mind is not without the Verbum. For by our Intellection which produceth a Mental-conceptional Verbum, or Notion (which is the Product-termination thereof) this Theology explicateth the Generation of the Son, and this it accounteth a very clear Explication (although the Generation of a Notion is nothing like the Generation of a divine Perſon:) But touching the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Will or from Love this Theology maketh an unanſwerable Objection againſt its own Hypotheſis. For it ſuppoſeth (f) that we cannot otherwiſe underſtand and declare the things divine than from our things. With great Reaſon therefore a Schoolman thus argueth; (g) in nobis nihil procedit per voluntatem: Ergo nec in divinis. In us there is no productive Proceſſion by the Will: Therefore it is ſo in the Godhead. Others obſerve, (h) that in the buſineſs of Intellection there are diſtinct Names, whereby the Intelligence it ſelf is diſcern'd from the Terminus and Product of it; for this is called Logos and Verbum: But in the Will and the Action thereof the Matter is more obſcure and undiſcernable. Quoniam in creaturis actionis ejus terminus, quam θέλησιν Grecè nominant, Scholæ Volitionem, (t) Aquin. 1. Qu. 27. Art. 5.

(u) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. Punct. 3.

(w) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 12.

(x) Amor notionalis Patris & Filii, nexus, oſculum, amplexus, imperturbabilis pax Patris Filiique, gluten firmum, individuus amor, individua unitas, indiſſolubile vinculum Trinitatis. Petav. Ibid. S. 5, & 8. Pater & Filius diligunt ſe Spiritu Sancto.

(y) Ibid. l. 8. c. 3. S. 6.

(z) Ibid. l. 7. c. 10. S. 8. & c. 12. S. 7.

(a) Ibid. c. 12. S. 12.

(b) Non huic ſed illi debet divina generatio aſſimilari. Gonet. ſupr. Diſp. 2. Art. 3. S. [illegible]

(c) Ego ex ore altiſſimi prodii: id eſt ex intellectu Patris, qui eſt veluti os ſpiritualis ſubſtantiæ. Gonet. ibid. Diſp. 2. Art. 1. in Proœm.

(d) Appellatus eſt Spiritus oris Dei: Os autem Patris ab antiquis Doctoribus nominatur Filius. Petav. ſupr. l. 7. c. 5. S 9, 10.

(e) Ibid. c. 10. S. 1, 2. & c. 11. S. 8, 9.

(f) Non aliunde quam [illegible] ex rebus divinas capere ac declarare poſſumus. Petav. ſupr. l. 7 c. 12. S. 8.

(g) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 3.

(h) Petav. ſupr. l. 7. c. 12. [illegible] nem, ab ipſa ἐνεργείᾳ, & actione vix abjungitur. Becauſe in Creatures the Terminus of Volition is ſcarce diſtinguiſhable from the Energy and Action it ſelf. So far therefore the Scholaſtick Theology favoureth our Hypotheſis touching the Non-production of the Holy Ghoſt, it is really agreeable to ſome principal Maxims thereof (much more agreeable than the contrary Hypotheſis) and if violence is not done them, they plainly infer it; for there is no productive Proceſſion from Will. But ſeeing the Scholaſtick Theology will have it otherwiſe, let us ſuppoſe the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from Will, which is the principal Faculty (not the Underſtanding) and from Love, which is a far higher Perfection than Knowledge, χρεῖττον λόγȣ ϗ ἐπιςήμης. better than Reaſon and Knowledge. The Holy Ghoſt being thus originated is much more nobly originated than the Son, whoſe productive Proceſſion is but from Intellect; and being appropriately Love or Charity, whereas the Son is but Reaſon and Knowledge; the Holy Ghoſt is neceſſarily far above the Son.

V. Scholaſtick Divines for many Ages have been extremely at a loſs, to aſſign a Difference between the eternal Generation of the Son and the eternal (productive) Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt; and to ſhew a Reaſon, why the one is a Son and the other is no Son. (i) We know that there is a difference between Generation and Proceſſion, but this manner of exiſting can neither be comprehended nor explain'd by us, but is only known to the Holy Trinity. (k) Proceſſion doth not ſignifie meer Egreſſion, but the ſubſtantial manner of exiſting, which cannot be apprehended by us. The Maſter of the Sentences ſaith (l) while we live here, we are not able to diſtinguiſh between the Generation of the Son and the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. So ſeveral other Schoolmen ſay. (m) It is impoſſible, that this difference (between Generation and Proceſſion) ſhould be explicated in this Life by ſuch as we are, without ſome peculiar Revelation. S. Auſtin ſaith (n) How to diſtinguiſh between the Generation of the Son and the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, I know not, I cannot, I am not ſufficient. Who can ſay, what is the difference between being generated and proceeding? So Joh. Damaſcen ſaith (o) that there is a difference between Generation and Proceſſion, we have learned: But what that Mode of difference is, we have not learned. To thoſe that ask'd, if the Holy Spirit is from the Father, why is he not ſaid to be generated, or to be a Son? (p) Athanaſius can give no other anſwer but only a reprehenſion for their ſearching (as he ſaith) into the deep things of God, which no Man knoweth but the Spirit of God. For the Reſolution of theſe great Queſtions S. Baſil can ſay nothing (q) but the inconvenience of calling the Holy Spirit a Son, that the manner of his Exiſtence is ineffable, and that he is from God ȣ̓γεννητῶς ὡς ὁ υἱὸς, ἀλλ' ὡς πνεῦμα ςόματος αὐτȣ̃, not generatively as the Son, but as the Spirit of his Mouth. He would have us not aſham'd, to confeſs our Ignorance touching the manner of the Holy Spirits Exiſtence (r) τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ἀῤῥήτως ἐκ τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃, the Holy Spirit is from God inexplicably. To ſearch therefore into this Myſtery, ſeemeth a great Folly, as being impoſſible, to be found out; and Gr. Naz. repreſenteth it as an Irreligious boldneſs being a ſearch into that which is hidden from us. (s) Τίς ȣ̃ν ἡ ἐκπόρευσις; you will ſay, what is Proceſſion? Do you explain to me the Ingenitneſs of the Father, and I will explain to you the Generation of the Son and the Proceſſion of the Spirit, ϗ παραπληκτίσομεν ἄμφω εἰς Θεȣ̃ μυςήρια παρακύπτοντες, and ſo we will both be out of our Wits, looking into the Myſteries of God.

But notwitſtanding this affrightment of danger the Scholaſtic Divines have look'd into this Myſtery, many of them have attempted an Explication of it, and have alledg'd many Reaſons, to ſhew, why the Holy Ghoſt is not a Son, or (which is the ſame thing) why his Proceſſion is not a Generation: But this they have done with mighty Diſagreement among themſelves, and with a Confutation of one another's Reaſons, which are ſo frivolous and unreaſonable and ſo devoid of probability, that no more than one of them is worthy to be taken into conſideration. This reaſon is that which Aquinas and his Followers give (t) That the Verbum or Second Perſon having his productive Proceſſion from Intellect, and therefore being like his Original as Intelligent, and like to the Object underſtood, (which is the Divine Eſſence) hath a Similitude of Nature to his Original formally by Virtue of his Proceſſion, and therefore his Proceſſion is Generation (omne generans generat ſibi ſimile) and he is a Son: But the Holy Spirit having his productive Proceſſion from Will and Love (wherein there is no Similitude of the Object belov'd, but only an Inclination thereto) hath not a Similitude of Nature to his Original formally by Virtue of his Proceſſion, and therefore his Proceſſion is not Generation, nor is he a Son. Intellectus eſt aſſimilativus, voluntas verò non eſt potentia aſſimilativa. Intellection is ſo aſſimilative, that every mental conceptional Verbum is the Image and Similitude of the thing underſtood, and in the Godhead the Verbum (produc'd by the Self-intellection of the firſt Perſon) is by the Nature of his Origin and Proceſſion the Image and Similitude of the firſt Perſon that produceth him: But the Operation of the Will is not by ſuch aſſimilation to the beloved Object, it is not by a Similitude to it, but by a Motion and Impulſe unto it; and in the Godhead the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe Proceſſion is from the Will and by way of Love (not by way of Similitude) is not by this Nature of his Origin and Proceſſion the Image and Similitude of any, but is Amor ſubſiſtens, ſubſiſtent Love, which is not ſo to be underſtood, as if the Holy Spirit is not ſubſiſtent in the Divine Nature, or is not a Perſon like to the Verbum and Conſubſtantial: But that he is not this by his diſtinct productive Proceſſion, as it is an Operation of the Will and of Love, which tendeth not to expreſs the Similitude of any one, and therefore is not Generation (as the productive Proceſſion of the Verbum is) nor doth it conſtitute him a Son. Such are the frivolous Philoſophic Subtilities and vain Speculations of this Scholaſtick Theology (much more agreeable to Phyſiology than Theology;) for that this Scholaſtick Speculation touching the Reaſon of the Non-generation and Sonſhip of the Holy Spirit is very vain and frivolous will appear from theſe following Remarks.

(i) Quid inter generationem & proceſſionem diſcrimen ſit, compertum habemus: Modus autem exiſtentiæ à nobis neque comprehendi, nec verbis explicari poteſt, ſed ſoli duntaxat ſanctæ Trinitati cognitus eſt. Elias Cret. in Gr. Naz. or. 23.

(k) Proceſſio non ſimplicem egreſſionem ſignificat: Sed ſubſtantialem & naturalem quoque modum exiſtendi declarat, qui à nobis percipi nequit. Idem in Or. 37.

(l) Inter generationem Filii & proceſſionem ſpiritus ſancti, dum hic vivimus, diſtinguere non valemus. 1. Diſt. 13.

(m) Ap. Vaſqu. in 1. Par. T. 2. Diſp. 113. c. 3. Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 4.

(n) Diſtinguere inter illam generationem & hanc proceſſionem, neſcio, non valeo, non ſufficio. C. Maximin. l. 3. c. 14. Quid inter naſci & procedere interſit, explicare quis poteſt. Ibid.

(o) L. 1. c. 9.

(p) Ep. ad Serap. p. 556. Com. & T. 2. p. 23.

(q) C. Eunom p. 121. de ſp. ſanct. c. 18.

(r) Or. c. Sabell. p. 609, 610.

(s) Or. 37. p. 597.

(t) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 14. Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 2. Art. 4. S. 4.

(1.) In this vain Speculation the main Queſtion is overlook'd, which ought to be clearly ſtated in order to a clear reſolution of it. For the main Queſtion is, Whether the Holy Ghoſt is a Perſon producible into Exiſtence? And the Scholaſtick Theology before it determineth this Queſtion, ought clearly to Anſwer this Argument. If the Holy Ghoſt is a Perſon producible into Exiſtence, it muſt be by Generation: But the Holy Ghoſt is not producible into Exiſtence by Generation; therefore he is not a Perſon producible into Exiſtence. This Theology taketh it for granted that the Holy Ghoſt is a Perſon produc'd into Exiſtence, and that there is a productive Proceſſion of him in the Godhead, which is petitio principii, and a taking that for granted, which it cannot ſolidly prove.

(2.) In this vain Speculation two different Conſiderations of the Scholaſtick Proceſſion of the Son and the Holy Ghoſt are ſo confounded, that the one of them maketh no appearance. For the Scholaſtick Proceſſion of the Son and the Holy Ghoſt ought in the firſt place, to be conſider'd in their more general Nature, wherein they agree, as they are both Proceſſions of Divine Perſons: And in the next place they ought to be conſider'd in their more Special Nature, wherein they differ, as the one of them is from Intellect, and the other from Will and Love. So the Scholaſtick Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt ought in the firſt place, to be conſider'd in its more general Nature, as it is the productive Proceſſion of a Divine Perſon: And in the ſecond place it ought to be conſider'd in its more Special Nature, as it is the productive Proceſſion of a Divine Perſon from Will and Love. The former of theſe Conſiderations maketh no appearance in this Speculation, which yet is of principal regard. For ſuppoſe, that the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, as it is from Will and Love, is not a Generation, what doth this ſignifie, if his productive Proceſſion as it is the productive Proceſſion of a Divine Perſon is neceſſarily a Generation? That this is a Generation, is manifeſt from the Scholaſtick definition of Generation. (u) Whatever of a live Similitude of Nature proceedeth from one alive, that is a conjunct Principle, neceſſarily proceedeth ſuch (not by accident, but) by Virtue of its very Production, and ſo cannot but be truly generated and be a Son.

(3.) This vain Speculation acknowledgeth, that the definition of Generation agreeth to the productive Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt: But it maketh an addition thereto, ſuch an addition which is ambiguous and equivocal. (w) The productive Proceſſion of the Holy Spirit is, according to the definition of Generation, an Origination into Similitude of Nature of one that liveth, from one which liveth, that is a conjunct Principle. For the Holy Spirit is one that liveth, that is originated from one that liveth, and is a conjunct Principle, becauſe he is the Terminus of an immanent Action, and is intimately conjoin'd with his Principle or Original by an indentity of Nature. He is like in Nature, becauſe the Nature of the Father and the Son (the ſame Nature) is communicated to him by his productive Proceſſion, which therefore is a Generation, according to that known Maxim, cui convenit definitio, ei convenit & definitum. Not ſo, ſaith this Theology; for although the Holy Ghoſt hath a Similitude of Nature to his Original by his productive Proceſſion, yet not formally by Virtue thereof, and thence it is, that it is not a Generation. But theſe words formally by Virtue of his productive Proceſſion are ambiguous and equivocal. For they may be underſtood touching his productive Proceſſion both in its more general and in its more ſpecial Nature. If they are underſtood touching his productive Proceſſion in its more ſpecial Nature, this Theology diſputeth, that he hath not a Similitude of Nature to his Original formally by Virtue of his productive Proceſſion, which is the addition that it maketh to the definition of Generation. But if we underſtand theſe words touching his productive Proceſſion in its more general Nature, we may affirm, that the Holy Spirit hath a Similitude of Nature to his Original formally by Virtue of his productive Proceſſion (which therefore is a Generation) and this Theology hath nothing to ſay againſt it.

(4.) This vain Speculation implieth, that the productive Proceſſion of the Second Perſon is a Generation upon two accounts. For it is certainly a Generation in its more general Nature, as it is the productive Proceſſion of a Divine Perſon; and this Theology diſputeth, that it is a Generation in its more ſpecial Nature, as it is a productive Proceſſion from Intellect. In both theſe Conſiderations the productive Proceſſion of the Second Perſon muſt be thought a Generation, becauſe he proceedeth into a Similitude of Nature (in both theſe Conſiderations) formally by Virtue of his productive Proceſſion (or quatenus talis proceſſio eſt) and both theſe Reaſons, why his Production is Generation, have either the Scriptures or the Authority of the Fathers, to Countenance them: But the Reaſon which this Speculation aſſigneth, why the Production of the Holy Ghoſt is not Generation, hath neither Scripture, nor the Authority of the Fathers to Countenance it: But it is purely an Invention of the Modern Schoolmen, of which themſelves have ſo little Aſſurance, that one of them ſaith (x) ſomething there is certainly in the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, that hindreth the adequate definition of Generation from agreeing to his Proceſſion, which agreeth to the Proceſſion of the ſecond Perſon: But what that is, God knoweth. To us it is enough, to know in general from the Faith, that certainly there is ſomething.

(5.) This vain Speculation ſuppoſeth, not only that Intellect is more generative than Will and Love, but that Intellect alone is generative, and Will and Love are not generative. Whereas, not Intellection, but Will and Love is the Principle of Fecundity; not Intellection, but Will and Love is Inclination and Propenſion. Not Intellection, but Will and Deſire is properly the Principle of Action, and therefore of Generation. All the World knoweth, that Theory is barren, that it is Love (not Intellect) which is γενεσιουργὸς, generative, as Love was denominated by the Heathen; the better ſort of whom made Love and Deſire the Principle of the Generation of the Univerſe. And what is it, that maketh God and Men communicative nicative but Love? What maketh Men incommunicative but want of Love? If there is a Correſpondence between Divine and Humane Affairs, this Propoſition of the Schoolmen muſt be infinitely falſe. (y) The Intellect in the Godhead is the faculty of it ſelf primarily deſign'd to communicate Nature, but not the Will.

(u) Quicquid procedit ſimile in Natura vivente, à vivente & à principio conjuncto, non poteſt non procedere tale (non ex accidenti, ſed) vi ipſius productionis, & ita non poteſt non verè generari, & eſſe filius. Vaſqu. in 1 Par. T. 2. Diſp. 113. c. 6.

(w) Hæc definitio origo viventis à vivente conjuncto in ſimilitudinem naturæ, convenit proceſſioni ſpiritus ſancti. Gonct. ſupr. S. 1.

(x) Aliquid omninò eſſe in proceſſione ſpiritus ſancti, quod reipſa obſtat, quo minus illius proceſſioni conveniat adæquata ratio generationis divinæ, quæ convenit proceſſioni divini verbi: Quid autem illud ſit Deus ſcit. Nobis ſatis eſt ex fide generatim ſcire, quod id omnino eſt aliquid. Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Q. 1. Punct. 4.

(6.) This vain Speculation ſuppoſeth, that a Communication of the Divine Nature from the meer Intellection of it is generative, but the Communication of the Divine Nature from the love of it is not generative; for the mutual Love of the Father and the Son is ſaid to produce the Holy Spirit, but ſo that the Love of each of them to himſelf is alſo ſaid to produce it; (z) as God underſtanding and contemplating himſelf produceth the Perſon of the Son (or the Verbum:) ſo loving and willing himſelf he produceth the Holy Spirit. The Perſon thus originated from Love is of a more noble Origination, than he that is originated meerly from Intellect; therefore he cannot be leſs a Son, nor his Origination leſs a Generation. And God's communication of the Divine Nature from the love of it neceſſarily tendeth and is intended to produce a Perſon like to himſelf in Nature, who therefore (if produc'd) hath a ſimilitude of Nature formally by virtue of his Production, and conſequently his Production is (in the ſenſe of this Scholaſtick Speculation) a Generation.

(7.) This vain Speculation maketh the Holy Ghoſt far more God-like than the Son of God, and therefore much more his genuine Son, as being much more his reſembling Off-ſpring. For the Son of God is only the Scholaſtick Verbum; but God is Love, and the Holy Ghoſt (according to this Theology) is definitively and diſtinctively Love; therefore this Theology maketh the Holy Ghoſt far more God-like than the Son of God. The Scholaſtick Son of God is not in his uſual Scholaſtick Names ſuch a Divine and God-like thing, as the Scholaſtick Holy Ghoſt is: for what is idea, ratio, proles mentis, with the generation of it, dictio, locutio, verbi productio (and the like unholy Metaphyſical Crotchets) in compariſon of the Love that God is? The Love that God is, is the Divine Nature, and this Love is the Holy Spirit, (a) as S. Auſtin and the Schoolmen his Followers ſay; but an Abſtract Son of God that is but the product of Speculative Intellect, is of a lower Houſe than the Divine Nature.

(8.) This vain Speculation maketh the production of the Holy Ghoſt, to be much more a true and real Generation than the production of the Son: for Generation being a vital Production, the more vital a Production is, cætera ſi ſint paria, the more it is a true and real Generation. If we ſuppoſe two Productions, of which the one is ſingularly and eminently the vital Production, and the other is ſingularly and eminently the notional Production, it is manifeſt, that (cæteris paribus) the notional Production cannot pretend, to be ſo much a true and real Generation as the vital Production. Now, the Scholaſtick Production of the Holy Spirit being peculiarly the production of Amor Subſtantialis is ſingularly and eminently the Vital Production; and the Production of the Scholaſtick Verbum (the Abſtract Son) is ſingularly and eminently the notional Production: for the Scholaſtick Divines ancient and modern (b) affirm, that the Divine Production is therefore a Generation truly and properly ſo called, becauſe thereby a word and notion of the Mind is produc'd into Exiſtence.

(9.) As Generation is an Origination into Similitude of Nature, the Scholaſtick Production of the Holy Ghoſt is a much more true and real Generation than the Scholaſtick Production of the Son: for the Scholaſtick Son by his Production is properly the Image of God as intelligent; but the Scholaſtick Holy Ghoſt is properly the Image of God, as God is Love. And this he is formally by virtue of his Production: For as Chriſtians do not only love divinely, but they love that Love at a ſuper-eminent rate: ſo if God did produce the Holy Ghoſt out of love to his Divine Nature (as the Scholaſtick Theology ſuppoſeth) God did produce him out of love to the Love that he is; and conſequently (according to this Theology) The Holy Ghoſt is Subſtantial Love produc'd from Love to the Love that God is. He is therefore like produc'd from the love of like, and is the Image and Similitude of the Love that God is formally by virtue of his Production and by the primary Intention thereof; whence it appeareth, that the productive proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is neceſſarily and unavoidably Generation and Sonſhip; therefore a productive Proceſſion is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. All pretending Explications of it are deluſory Vanities unconceivable and impoſſible.

VI. Neither Generation nor Creation is competible to the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt; therefore he is not producible into Exiſtence, but is Unoriginate. One perſon may be the production of another two ways: γεννητικῶς, generatively, and κτιστικῶς, creatively. If one perſon is the production of another in the natural way of production (of perſons) he is the production of that other Generatively: but if he is his Production otherwiſe than in the natural way, he is his Production creatively. So the Fathers diſtinguiſh Generation and Creation in the ſtrict acceptation. (c) To make or create is a buſineſs of efficiency (and is called by the Fathers Effection;) but Generation is a buſineſs of Nature: by making or creating one is an opificer or a maker; by generating he is a Father. (d) That which is naturally generated of one, and not extrinſecally acquired, Nature counteth a Son, and this is the ſignification of the Name; for a Man maketh an Houſe, generateth a Son. (e) If one Man could make another Man two ways (ſaith Aquinas) namely by generation or ſome other way, as in an artificial way out of his own Fleſh, the one muſt be called a Son, not the other, though both alike in Subſtance. Here are two ways of producing Perſons; the one is the way of Natural Production, which is the generative; the other is alio modo ſome other way, which is the factive, and there are but theſe two ways of producing Perſons. Let us ſuppoſe, that a God generateth a Son, and cauſeth another perſon to exiſt otherwiſe than by Generation. This perſon ſo cauſed to exiſt being not born of him, is therefore made by him; being his production otherwiſe than in the natural way of producing Perſons, he is therefore his Production creatively, as his Son is his Production generatively. As all Jews are either the Native or the Factive (which are the adventitious to the Native:) So all the perſonal productions of any one are either the Native or (the adventitious to the Native which is) the Factive. All his perſonal productions are either natively or factively originated from him; and there can be no medium between theſe two, as Gr. Naz. ſuppos'd, when he anſwer'd this Objection, which a certain Heretick is ſaid to have made. (f) There is no medium in the Godhead between ἀγέννητον & γέννητον, unbegotten and begotten, the former whereof belongeth to the Father, the latter to the Son. He anſwer'd, that there is a medium between theſe two, τὸ ἐκπορευτὸν, that Proceſſion of which the Goſpel maketh mention, The Spirit which proceedeth from the Father. The ſame anſwer Gr. Naz. would have made, if the Heretick had made this Objection; There is no medium between Generation and Creation, the former whereof belongeth to the Son, the latter to Creatures; for ſo the Athanaſian Creed ſaith, that the Holy Ghoſt is neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding. But ſeeing all the Perſonal Productions of any one which are not the Native, are neceſſarily the adventitious to the Native and therefore the Factive: And ſeeing all his Perſonal Productions which are not in the way of natural Production (which is the Generative) are neceſſarily in the non-natural way of production (which is the Creative) therefore as to Perſonal Productions there can be no medium between γέννησις and ποίησις, Generation and Effection or Creation.

(y) Intellectus in divinis eſt potentia per ſe primò deſtinata ad communicandam naturam, non autem voluntas. Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 2. Art. 4. S. ult.

(z) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 12. S. 14.

(a) Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 6. S. 9.

(b) Divinam productionem ideo generationem eſſe propriè veréque dictum adſtruunt, quod per eam Verbum ac notio mentis exiſtit. Petav. ibid. l 7. c. 14. S. 7.

(c) Τὸ μὲν ποιεῖν ἐνεργείας ἐστὶ, φύσεως δὲ τὸ γεννᾷν. S. Cyr. Theſaur. p. 184. Τῷ ποιεῖν δημιουργός τις ἐστι· τῷ δὲ γεννᾷν πατήρ. Ibid.

(d) Τὸ ἐκ τινὸς φύσει γεννώμενον, καὶ μὴ ἔξωθεν ἐπικτώμενον, υἱὸν οἶδεν ἡ φύσις, καὶ τοῦτο τοῦ ὀνόματός ἐστι τὸ σημαινόμενον. S. Athanaſ. de Decret. Syn. Nic. p. 408. Com. Καὶ γὰρ ἄνθρωπος κτίζει μὲν οἰκίαν· γεννᾷ δὲ υἱόν. Ibid. p. 410.

(e) Si duplici modo poſſet unus homo facere alterum hominem, ſcilicet per genituram aut alio modo, ſcilicet modo artificiali ex propria carne, ille diceretur filius, non iſte, licet uterque eſſet ſimilis in ſubſtantia. Aquin. l. 4. c. Gent. c. 23.

(f) Orat. 37. p. 597.

VII. Production into Exiſtence therefore is repugnant to the Holy Spirit as he is no Son: for to ſuppoſe him to be of the Godhead and produc'd into Exiſtence, is to ſuppoſe him generated and to be a Son.

Production into Exiſtence is repugnant to the Holy Spirit, as he is no Saint; for if Vital Sanctity was communicated to him, he muſt be in ſome ſort ſanctify'd (caus'd to be Holy) and conſequently muſt be a Saint. But becauſe he is no Saint, therefore he is in God unoriginately without having Vital Sanctity communicated to him.

Production into Exiſtence is repugnant to the Holy Spirit, as he is ἡ ἁγιαστικὴ δύναμις, the ſanctifying Virtue and Power; for Vital Sanctity cannot be communicated to him without the ſanctifying Agency, Virtue and Power of God; whereas himſelf is that Sanctifying Agency, Virtue and Power.

So production into Exiſtence is repugnant to the definitive notion of the Holy Spirit, which is virtus divina; for this virtus divina which is the Holy Ghoſt, and which the Holy Ghoſt is, is not producible into Exiſtence by it ſelf or otherwiſe.

Production into Exiſtence is repugnant to the Name of the Spirit of God; for as the Spirit of a Man (to which the Apoſtle compareth the Spirit of God) is not producible into Exiſtence, unleſs Man is producible into Exiſtence: So the Spirit of God is not producible into Exiſtence, unleſs God is producible into Exiſtence.

Production into Exiſtence is repugnant to this other Name of the Holy Spirit Donum (the Gift) which ſeveral of the Fathers and Schoolmen that follow them, (g) account the peculiar perſonal Name of the Holy Spirit: from their Principles they can give no tolerably good reaſon, why it ought to be ſo accounted; but ſuch a reaſon may be given ſuppoſing the Holy Ghoſt's Exiſtence to be unoriginate: for if ſo, the Holy Ghoſt is Donum cui nihil donatum eſt (the Gift to whom nothing is given) which is his peculiar and perſonal property. But if Eſſence and Exiſtence is as much given to the Holy Ghoſt, as it is to the Son, Donum cannot reaſonably be thought his peculiar Name.

(g) Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 3.

VIII. The Holy Spirit is a grand Eſſentiality of God Imperial (the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial;) therefore his Exiſtence is unoriginate and unproduc'd. The ſenſe and force of this Argument will be eaſily intelligible, if we conſider our Lord Chriſt as Chriſt Imperial (the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial) who cannot be ſuch without this eſſentially neceſſary qualification, fons omnis ſpiritus ſancti (the fulneſs and fountain of the Holy Spirit) which therefore is a grand Eſſentiality of his Imperial Eſtate. He muſt be ſo qualify'd, as not only to be a Politically Imperial, but an animatively vital Imperial Head; not only an Head of Government, but an Head of Influence, from whom the Holy Spirit is deriv'd, and by whom it is communicated: (h) For the Holy Scriptures ſay that the whole Church of God is the Body of Chriſt, ὑπὸ υἱοῦ τοῦ θεοῦ ψυχούμενον, that is animated by the Son of God. His Holy Spirit enliveneth and animateth the Body of his Univerſal Church conjoyning the Head and Members (there is one Body and one Spirit, Eph. 4. 4.) and as in our Body the Head is the nobleſt part, whoſe Office is to guide the Body, to impart Spirit, Life, Sence and Motion to it: So it is with Chriſt and the Church. And as in our Body a Nervous Juice deſcendeth from the Head upon the Members of the Body, whereby it is nouriſh'd (as to the nervous parts of it) a Nutriment is deriv'd upon it from the Head: So the Members of the Body of Chriſt have their Nutriment and Growth from him, Col. 2. 19. From him the whole Body having Nouriſhment miniſtred increaſeth with the increaſe of God. His Believers have all their holy vital Goods from his Holy Spirit, and thereby he diſpenſeth all ſupernatural Gifts and Graces. His Holy Spirit muſt be in the Comprehenſion of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs, or elſe there can be no ſuch thing as ſaving Chriſtianity and Godlineſs. The Holy Spirit therefore is his grand eſſentially neceſſary Qualification, without it he cannot be qualify'd, to be Chriſt Imperial.

(h) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 309.

Theſe things appertain and muſt be apply'd not only to the Son of God, but (with ſome few limitations and abatements which are manifeſt) unto God the Father; for the Holy Spirit is his grand eſſentially neceſſary Qualification, without it he is not qualify'd, to be God Imperial. Now, it is not poſſible, but that God muſt be from Eternity qualify'd, to be God Imperial; and he muſt be from Eternity ſo qualify'd by that neceſſary Exiſtence, whereby himſelf doth exiſt; therefore the Holy Spirit muſt be in God from Eternity, and it muſt be in God from Eternity by that neceſſary Exiſtence, whereby himſelf doth exiſt without any production of the Holy Spirit into Exiſtence. Num Deus unquam ſine Spiritu ſuo potuit eſſe, could God ever be without his Spirit? (i) ſaith Eugubinus. He meaneth, that God could never be without his Spirit produc'd, as the Scholaſtick Theology

(i) De Per. Phil. l. c. 12.

gy ſuppoſeth. But he had ſpoken more agreeably to his profeſſion, if he had ſaid, that God can no more exiſt without the Spirit of God, than Man can exiſt without the Spirit of a Man, which exiſteth by the ſame Exiſtence, whereby the Man exiſteth without any production thereof conſequent to his Exiſtence. God exiſteth by meer neceſſary Exiſtence (antecedently to his production of any thing into Exiſtence;) in this God that exiſteth by meer neceſſary Exiſtence, no eternally and eſſentially neceſſary Qualification of the Godhead can be wanting; the Holy Spirit is ſuch an Eſſentiality of the Godhead (as all muſt grant, who will not abſurdly ſuppoſe, that God may αὐτουργεῖν ἅπαντα, do all thoſe things immediately which are the operations of the Holy Ghoſt;) therefore the Holy Ghoſt did from Eternity exiſt in God by meer neceſſary Exiſtence. That this may not be thought improbable, we will here conſider and repreſent a true and ſummary Idea of the Holy Spirit.

(k) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 13. S. 14.

IX. The School-Divines ſay, (k) In order of Nature, prior eſt Dualitas quàm Trinitas, a Duality of Perſons is before a Trinity. And Epiphanius ſaith, (l) In Moſes one ſingle perſon of the Godhead is chiefly notic'd: In the Prophets a Binary is preach'd at a great rate: in the Goſpel and the new Law a Trinity is manifeſted: Conforming therefore our Sentiments to the Holy Scriptures, we ought not to proceed to a Trinity of Perſons in the Godhead, till we come to the New Teſtament and the Times thereof: but antecedently thereto we ought to contemplate only a Duality or Binary in the Godhead, which is repreſented in the Old Teſtament, and is there repreſented as in one Divine Eſſence (for there is no appearance of more than one Divine Eſſence throughout the Old Teſtament) and from the New Teſtament it appeareth, that this Duality or Binary is a Duality of Perſons: for ſuch is God and his Holy Spirit (which is that Binary of Perſons in the Godhead, which Epiphanius ſaith, is preach'd at a great rate in the Prophets) of which Grotius ſaith, (m) Spiritus ille quo agitati ſunt prophetæ, non eſt aliquid creatum, & tamen diſtinguitur à mittente: That Spirit whereby the Prophets were moved, is not a created thing, yet is diſtinguiſh'd from the ſender of it. This Duplicity therefore muſt be diſtinguiſh'd in one and the ſame Divine Eſſence, and it is diſtinguiſhable without any Abſurdity or Incongruity. For the one Divine Vital Eſſence is The Vital Sanctity, which is the Communicative, and alſo the Vital Sanctity which is meerly the Conſtitutive. That Vital Sanctity which is meerly the Conſtitutive, is that which is meerly conſtitutive of the Political Imperial Perſon of God: But the Holy Spirit is that Vital Sanctity which God communicatively is. For this is the Eſſence of the Holy Spirit (who is eſſential to the Godhead) He is the Vital Sanctity the Communicative, which is contradiſtinguiſh'd to the meerly Conſtitutive: as the Spirit which God is meerly conſtitutively, is contradiſtinguiſh'd to the Spirit which God communicatively is. Such is the Holy Spirit, of which God is communicative ad extrà, and who is Vital Sanctity only as the Holy Inſpiration-virtue, or as an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon, whoſe proper Function and Operation it is, to be communicative of what is in God as an Inſpiration-virtue, ſo that all ſupernatural Gifts and Graces are ἡ κοινωνία τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, the Communication of the Holy Spirit, 2 Cor. 13. 14. The Holy Spirit is a Perſon of the one Divine Sovereignty as well as a Perſon of the one Divine Vital Eſſence. As he is a Perſon of the one Divine Sovereignty (or Imperial Eſtate) there is no difficulty in his Idea, and therefore it needeth no illuſtration. But as he is a Perſon of the Vital Eſſence of God (which is Vital Sanctity) his Idea is not of ſo eaſie conception, as not to need illuſtration. And ſome illuſtration we may give it by conſidering the Perſon of our Lord Chriſt, in whom we muſt neceſſarily diſtinguiſh Vital Sanctity, which is meerly the conſtitutive, and Vital Sanctity the communicative. The former of theſe is the Vital Sanctity which is meerly conſtitutive of his Political Imperial Perſon; and as he is fons omnis ſpiritus ſancti, he is Vital Sanctity the Communicative. He muſt be this duplicity of Vital Sanctity, as he is the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial: and ſo in God (the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial) in his one and the ſame numerical Divine Vital Eſſence there is the ſame duplicity of Vital Sanctity, which is the Eſſence of God, ſo as to bè the Eſſence of a Binary of Perſons in the Godhead, ſuch a Binary of Perſons as may and muſt be in the Godhead unproduc'd, namely, The Eternal God (the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial) and the Eternal Spirit his Holy Inſpiration-virtue, which is the Divine Vital Eſſence (the Vital Sanctity which is it) as it is the communicative.

(l) Apud Moyſem ſingularis divinitas præcipuè prædicata legitur: apud prophetas perſonarum binarius diligentius commendatur: Trinitas denique in Evangelio ac nova lege demonſtratur. Apud Petav. ibid. l. 2. c. 7. S. 1.

(m) De V. R. C. l. 5. c. 21.

This being the Nature and Notion of the Holy Spirit, our Hypotheſis doth not imply (as will be objected againſt it) that there are (n) δύο τὰ ἄναρχα, two unprincipiates in any culpable, abſurd or irreligious ſenſe: for although it aſſerteth the Holy Spirit, to be unprincipiate as to any production into Exiſtence, yet it ſuppoſeth him, to have his Exiſtence by and in the Exiſtence of God; and it is far from ſuppoſing him ſo unprincipiate as not to be the Spirit of of God, his Agent-virtue and meerly an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon. It aſſerteth, that God the Father is the only unprincipiate, yet ſo, as that his Spirit is (as to production into Exiſtence) unprincipiate: as genuine Trinitarians aſſert, that God the Father is the only God, but ſo as that his Son is God. If God the Father is the only God, this inferreth and implieth, that his Son is God: So if God the Father is the only unprincipiate, this inferreth and implieth, that his Spirit is unprincipiate. To ſay, that God the Father is unprincipiate, is to ſay, that the Holy Ghoſt is unprincipiate, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is unprincipiate as an Eſſentiality of his; and therefore it is a true Propoſition, to ſay, that God the Father only is unprincipiate, which is not prejudic'd by ſaying, that the Holy Ghoſt is unprincipiate. To ſay, that another Perſon of the Godhead is unprincipiate, ſo as that no prejudice is done to this Propoſition, God the Father is the only Unprincipiate, is moſt true: but to ſay, that God the Father only is unprincipiate, ſo as that no other Perſon of the Godhead is ſuch, is not true: for becauſe he is unprincipiate, and the only unprincipiate, therefore his Holy Spirit (as to production into Exiſtence) is unprincipiate. But the Scholaſtick Theology ſaith, (o) to ſuppoſe that there are duo Innaſcibiles in Trinitate, eſt hæreticum, two Innaſcibles in the Trinity, is heretical: for the Maxims of the Scholaſtick Theology will be thought the Catholick Faith, and to contradict them, muſt be counted Hereſie: whence Melancthon is counted

(n) Gr. Naz. or. 37. p. 596.

(o) Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 2. p. 153.

ed an Heretick for ſaying (as if the Divine Eſſence admitted a partition) (p) Quando ſpiritus ſanctus mittitur, aliquid eſſentiæ divinæ mitti: yet this is the ſenſe of the Fathers. (q) He is a certain fruit of the Divine Eſſence, being in it and proceeding from it undividedly and inſeparately. The Holy Spirit cometh out of the Divine Nature and is in it naturally: Which may beſt be underſtood from our Idea. The Holy Spirit is the Divine Vital Eſſence, as it is the Communitative.

Section III.

Of Creaturizing the Holy Spirit.

I. FRom the Idea of the Holy Spirit hitherto repreſented we are inabled, to make a Judgment touching his Deity, and what we ought to believe concerning it; which is, That he is one of the Godhead (the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial) as an Inſpiration-virtue and Agent and as to his Inſpiration-virtue and Agency (in the Senſe before explained) but no further. Sinful extremes on both hands ought to be avoided: On the one hand he ought not to be creaturiz'd, on the other hand he ought not to be extravagantly deify'd. He is ſinfully creaturiz'd by two ſorts of erroneous Conceits (of Ancient and Modern Times;) for ſome creaturize him denying his Perſonality, and others aſſerting it. Thoſe who diſpute, (r) that the Holy Spirit is not God, but meerly a Quality, a Virtue, Power or Efficacy flowing from God, do make him a Creature. Theſe creaturize him denying his Perſonality; but the Arians aſſerted his Perſonality, (s) yet made him a Creature. So did the Semiarians and Macedonians (called Pneumatomachi) and ſome that were no Arians as to the Son, yet as to the Holy Ghoſt ſymboliz'd with them and with Valentinus, and ſuppos'd the Holy Ghoſt, to be only an Angel, but greater than the reſt. Origen and Dionyſius of Alexandria are charg'd with creaturizing the Holy Spirit, Euſebius is manifeſtly guilty of it, for having ſaid, that the Holy Ghoſt is neither God nor Son, he addeth, that he is one of thoſe things, that were made by the Son, by whom all things were made. Againſt all which erroneous and irreligious Conceits of creaturizing the Holy Spirit the form of Baptiſm and thoſe other places of the New Teſtament which reckon a Trinity (or Ternary) in the Holy Sovereignty of our Religion, are peremptory Allegations; for they plainly demonſtrate the Holy Ghoſt's Conſortſhip with God as one of the Godhead, ſo far as is competible to him, that is only the Holy Inſpiration-virtue and Agent, Matth. 28. 19. 1 Cor. 6. 11. ch. 12. 4, 5, 6. 2 Cor. 13. 13. Eph. 3. 18. ch. 4. 5, 6. 1 Joh. 5. 7. Creatures are ſometimes conjoyn'd with God, as Moſes, Samuel, and the elect Angels, Exod. 14. 31. 1 Sam. 12. 18. 1 Tim. 5. 21. but Creatures are never conjoyn'd with God in an enumeration of the Perſons of an holy Sovereignty. Now, the reaſon why we are baptiz'd in the Name of the Father and the Son, is, becauſe they are the Perſons of our Holy Sovereignty; therefore the form of Baptiſm is an enumeration of the Perſons of our Holy Sovereignty. Of thoſe words prefatory to the Decalogue, I am the Lord thy God, Abarbinel ſaith, (t) A King before he proceedeth, to make his Laws, ſettleth an acknowledgment of his Sovereignty; ſo our Saviour in his Inſtitution of Baptiſm ſettleth an acknowledgment of the Chriſtians Sovereignty; therefore his form of Baptiſm is an enumeration of the Perſons of it. And is it imaginable, that a Creature ſhould have a place in ſuch an Enumeration of Perſons, and that the Subject-party and the Sovereignty ſhould be confounded by our Saviour? The Kingdom of God conſiſteth of two Parties: the one is the Subject or Creature-party, the other is the Imperial or Godhead-party. The Subject or Creature-party are the Saints meerly ſuch (for the Son of God is a Saint but not meerly ſuch) and to this Party the Ternary or Trinity (enumerated in the places before cited) is always contradivided; therefore that Ternary is the Supra-ſubject or Imperial Party (which is the Godhead-party) and the Holy Spirit being one of theſe is therefore one of the Godhead-party as the Holy Spirit thereof. The Body is the Creature-party, the Spirit that is no Member of the Body, but above the Body, is of the Creature-tranſcendent Party, Eph. 4. 5, 6. The Saints are the receivers of Supernatural Gifts, the Spirit (whoſe Gifts they are by an Univerſal Inſpiration-virtue) is of the Party that is above this recipient Party, and therefore is of the Creature-tranſcendent Party, 1 Cor. 12. 4, 5, 6. As he by whom the Saints are juſtified, is of the Party that is above the Saints: ſo is he by whom they are ſanctified, 1 Cor. 6. 11. So when the Apoſtle together with the Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt and the Love of God prayeth for the κοινωνία, Communication of the Holy Ghoſt, he manifeſtly repreſenteth the Holy Ghoſt as an univerſal Principle of Grace, of Creature-tranſcendent Condition, and of the Creature-tranſcendent Party; therefore the Ternary or Trinity before enumerated is an enumeration of the Perſons of the Godhead-party. They muſt be counted the Godhead-party; for by being baptized into their Name, we profeſs, to owe unto them our Faith and Obedience, and the other Duties of Religion due to the Imperial Party in Religion, to each one of them according to his Nature, State and Relation. (u) is it not madneſs therefore, to ſay, that the Spirit is a Creature? for if he was a Creature, ὐ συνετάσσετο τῇ τριάδι, he had not been ranked in the Trinity, the whole of which is one God. But in this Trinity there is a certain τάξις, Order or Subordination; for the Holy Spirit can be but (w) ἐν τρίτῃ τάξει, the third in order, becauſe the Father and the Son are political imperial Divine Perſons, and therefore are ſtrictly the Imperial Eſtate of the Godhead, of which the Holy Ghoſt is only the Inſpiration-virtue and Agent.

II. Athanaſius inculcateth this Notice as of very great conſideration, (x) that the Holy Spirit is ἐν θεῷ, in God. He is in God as God is the Imperial Eſtate and the Imperial Head in Religion; for the Holy Spirit is Intrinſick and Eſſential to ſuch an Imperial Head; therefore the Holy Spirit is of the Imperial Party in Religion. The Holy Spirit is in God alſo, as God is a Nature or Eſſence; as ſome of the Socinian Writers have obſerv'd, with deſign to infer from thence, that the Holy Spirit is not a Perſon.

(p) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 1. S. 24.

(q) Καρπός τις ὥσπερ ἐστὶ τῆς θείας οὐσίας, ἐν αὐτῇ τε ὄν, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῆς ἀμερίστως καὶ ἀχωρίστως προερχόμενον. S. Cyr. Theſaur. p. 343. Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον ἐξ αὐτῆς θείας φύσεως καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ φυσικῶς. Ibid. p. 340.

(r) Crell. de uno Deo l. 1 S. 3. n. 491.

(s) Petav. de Trin. l. 1. c. 10. S. 6. c. 11. S. 12. & c. 14.

(t) Comparat ſe cum rege regionem aliquam ingrediente, quem ſervi ſui affantur: conſtitue nobis leges: reſpondet vero iis Non: ſed poſtquam imperium meum admiſeritis, tunc vobis ſtatuta præſcribam: ſi enim dominium meum non reciperetis, quomodo ſtatuta mea eſſent ſtabilia? Apud Vorſt. de cap. Fid. p. 85, 86.

(u) S. Athan. Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 35 Com.

(w) [illegible]

(x) Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 565 C. Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 25. C ſon. (y) It is manifeſt, that the Holy Spirit is not without God by Nature, but in God himſelf. For if it was not by Nature in God, Paul could not compare the Spirit of God with the Spirit of Man, which is by Nature in Man, as he doth in that place, where he ſaith: What Man knoweth the things of a Man, ſave the Spirit of a Man which is in him? Even ſo the things of God knoweth no Man but the Spirit of God. From which Text of the Apoſtle it appeareth, that the Holy Spirit is not without as to the Eſſence and Subſtance of God, as all created Nature is. For a Creature is (z) ἔξωθεν τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐσίας, without as to the Eſſence and Subſtance of God; therefore the Holy Spirit cannot be a Creature. The Spirit of God is in him, as the Spirit of Man is in him, of Exiſtence unoriginated by any Act of his, and ſo as to be an Eſſentiality of the Godhead, which ſpeaketh him far remote from created Nature. So doth this Name the Spirit, which denoteth him, to be the Inſpiration-virtue of the Godhead, that ſearcheth the deep things of God, which he revealeth, and therefore is in God. And he not only is in God, but becauſe he penetrateth to the knowing the deep things of God, he is of Creature-tranſcendent Condition, (a) divinæ enim ſolius eſt Poteſtatis arcana noviſſe, for it belongeth to Divine Potentacy only (and to the Holy Spirit that is intimate therewith at a Creature-tranſcendent rate) to know thoſe Recondites. If his Name the Spirit ſpeaketh him, to be of the Godhead, his uſual Name the Holy Spirit muſt be ſuppos'd, much more to denote his Deity; for the attribute Holy importeth, that he is of the God-eminence and Nobilitation. (b) Nos nihil precioſius invenimus, quo Deum prædicare poſſimus, niſi ut ſanctum appellemus. In celebrating the Praiſes of God we can riſe to nothing higher than the attribute Holy. He only is Holy, and his being Holy denoteth his God-eminence; therefore the attribute Holy in the Name of the Holy Spirit denoteth his Creature-tranſcendence, and that he is of the God-eminence. His Unity and Identity with God is ſuch, that we cannot but ſuppoſe him, to be denominated Holy as being of the Godhead.

III. The Agency and Virtue of the Holy Spirit is the God-agency and Virtue, therefore if he is a Perſon, he is a Perſon of the Godhead. (c) Operatio ſpiritus eſt operatio divina. For ſo in Scripture theſe Names the Spirit, the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of God oftentimes plainly ſignifie that which is the God-agency and Virtue, the Divine and Creature-tranſcendent. So the Spirit of God and the Spirit of the Lord manifeſtly ſignifie in the Old Teſtament, as when the Spirit of the Lord is ſaid to come upon Gideon, Jephtha, Sampſon, upon Saul, Azariah and Zechariah (that propheſied) the Scripture meaneth, that the God-agency and Virtue came upon them. And of the ſame ſignification thoſe Names are uſually in the New Teſtament. For in Matth. 1. 18. She was found with Child of the Holy Ghoſt; in Matth. 1. 20. That which is conceiv'd in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt; The Holy Ghoſt ſignifieth, as it doth Luc. 1. 35. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee (the God-agency and Virtue) and the Power of the higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee. Matth. 3. 11. Our Saviour is ſaid, to Baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, whereby is meant, vis divina, the God-agency and Virtue, as Expoſitors (d) rightly underſtand the place. In many places the Holy Ghoſt (e) is conjoin'd with Power and is ſignified by the Name of Power (Divine) which ſpeaketh the Holy Ghoſt, to be no leſs than the God-agency and Virtue, which the Apoſtle ſometimes calleth the Power of the Spirit of God, ſometimes the Power of God, and ſometimes the effectual working of his Power. In this Senſe our Saviour is ſaid to caſt out Devils by the Spirit of God, and ſo the Power which is attributed to the Spirit of Holineſs in his Reſurrection (whereby he was declared to be the Son of God with Power, Rom. 1. 4.) is the God-agency, Virtue and Power. And as in his Reſurrection, ſo in ours, in quickning our mortal Bodies, Rom. 8. 11. in re-enlivening and renewing our Souls alſo the Spirit of God appeareth, to be of God agency, Virtue and Power. 2 Cor. 3. 3. Ye are manifeſtly declared, to be the Epiſtle of Chriſt, miniſtred by us, written not with Ink, but with the Spirit of the living God. The Holy Spirit is called the Spirit of the living God, becauſe the Chriſtian Religion is the Diſpenſation of the Spirit and of Life: Or as Beza ſaith, it denoteth (that which the Holy Spirit is) virtutem Dei vivificam ad regenerandos animos, the vivific Power of God to regenerate Souls. As he is the Spirit of vital Regeneration, this Divine Spirit appeareth, to be of Creature-tranſcendent Agency and Efficiency: But more viſibly he appeareth to be ſuch from the miraculous Works, which in the Apoſtle's time were wrought by the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from Heaven and by the Power of the Spirit of God; and from thoſe ſupernatural Gifts and Endowments which were given them, Wiſdom, Tongues, Propheſie. If the Holy Spirit is of the Creature-tranſcendent Agency, he cannot be a Creature.

IV. The ancient Writers of the Church inſiſt upon many Creature-tranſcendent Properties belonging to the Holy Spirit, and (though we build nothing upon their bare Authority, yet) ſuch is the truth and ſolidity of ſeveral of their Obſervations and Reaſonings, as cannot be conteſted.

As one inſiſteth, that the Holy Spirit is ἐν Θεῷ, in God: So another inſiſteth (f) that the Holy Spirit is ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ex Deo, not ex Deo as all things are, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ προελθόν, but as proceeding out of God. The Holy Spirit being the vital Eſſence of God as it is the Communicative, is both in God, and proceedeth out of God, ſo as no Creature doth. (g) The Holy Spirit is one, as the Father is one, and the Son is one, οὐ γὰρ ἓν τῶν πολλῶν ἐστι, for he is not one of the many, which are the Creatures. (h) Whatever is made, is liable to change and turning: Τὸ πνεῦμα οὔτε τροπῆς οὔτε μετασκευῆς ἐστὶ δεκτικόν, the Spirit is not ſuſceptible of any turning or mutation; therefore is no Creature. (i) The Holy Spirit is inſeparably conjoin'd and ſo one with God, that it is no more ἀλλότριος υἱοῦ καὶ πατρὸς, alien from the Son and the Father than the Spirit of Man is from Man. Who then ſhall ſeparate and disjoin him? (k) Every Creature is of the Subject-ſervient Party and Condition: Ἀλλ' οὐ τὸ πνεῦμα δοῦλον, but ſo is not the Holy Spirit. (l) It is he that maketh Saints: Ἀνάγκη δὲ τὸ θεοῖς αἴτιον τοῦ θεοὺς εἶναι, θεῖον πνεῦμα καὶ θεὸν εἶναι, but he that cauſeth Gods to be ſuch, muſt neceſſarily be a Divine Spirit and God. There cannot be θεοποιὸς ἡ κτίσις, a deifying Creature. (m) Every rational Creature ſometimes ſpeaketh of himſelf:

(y) Patet, quod non ſit extra Deum natura, ſed in ipſo Deo niſi enim natura Deo ineſſet, non potuiſſet Paulus Spiritum Dei cum Spiritu Hominis, qui Homini ineſt natura, conferre, idque eo loco, ubi ait: Quis hominum novit quæ ſunt hominis, niſi ſpiritus hominis qui eſt in homine: Ita quæ ſunt Dei nemo novit niſi ſpiritus Dei. Catech. Racov. c. 6.

(z) Athan. Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 365.

(a) S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 2. c. 12. V. S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 19. in fine. c. Eunom. l. 2. p. 83.

(b) S. Ambroſ. ſupr. l. 3. c. 18.

(c) Ibid. l. 2. c. 11.

(d) Grot. Beza.

(e) Luc. 1. 17, 35. 4, 14. 11, 20. Matth. 12. 28. Act. 1. 8. and 10. 38. 1 Cor. 2. 4, 5. Eph. 3. 7, 16, 20. Rom. 15. 13, 19.

1 Pet 1. 12. Rom. 15. 19. 1 Cor. 12. 8, 9, 10.

(f) S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 18.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Idem c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 109.

(i) Ibid. p. 118, 120, 125.

(k) Ibid. p. 110. & 125.

(l) Ibid p. 140.

(m) Ibid. p. 137.

Τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ἐχ οὕτως, But it is not ſo with the Spirit ; for all his words are the words of God. (n) Every Creature is circumſcrib'd and bounded within certain limits: Spiritus Sanctus non habet circumſcriptam Virtutem, the Holy Spirit is of unbounded Virtue. (o) Sempiternus eſt Spiritus, Creatura autem omnis in tempore eſt. Every Creature's Exiſtence hath a beginning in time, but the Spirit is from Eternity. (p) Sicut Pater Lumen, ita & Filius Lumen, & Spiritus Lumen eſt. As the Father is Light, ſo the Son is Light, and the Spirit is Light. (q) Sicut Pater Vita, & Filius Vita, & Spiritus Sanctus Vita. As the Father is Life, ſo the Son is Life, and the Holy Spirit is Life. (r) Sicut & Pater & Filius, ita & Spiritus Sanctus regenerat. As the Father and the Son, ſo the Holy Spirit regenerateth. In this and other the divineſt Works the Operation of theſe three is inſeparably conjoin'd. In our new Creation, as in our ſolemn Benedictions, the Holy Spirit is rank'd and conſorted with the Father and the Son. (s) Large Catalogues of the Creatures and of the Holy Angels are recited in Scripture, but the Holy Spirit is never rank'd amongſt them, as he would have been, if he is πνεῦμα διακονίας, a Spirit of Miniſtry, as the Angels are. (t) Τὸ μὴ μετέχον ζωῆς, ἀλλ' αὐτὸ μετεχόμενον, that which doth not participate of Life (as Creatures do) but is it ſelf participated, what Cognation hath it with the things that are made? (u) Ἐνεργεῖν δυνάμενῳ τὰ θεȣ̃, being operative of the things proper to God, how can the Holy Spirit be a created Spirit? Or how can τὸ ἐνεργὲς τȣ̃ θεȣ̃, the God-agency and Virtue be in a Creature? (w) Ἐπεὶ μὴ ἑτερόντι παρ' αὐτὸ τὸ ἐνεργὲς αὐτȣ̃, ſeeing the Virtue and Energy of it is not a thing different from it. (x) Qui Spiritu Sancto plenus eſt, ſtatim univerſis donationibus Dei repletur. He that is full of the Holy Ghoſt, is filled with all the Gifts of God, Wiſdom, Knowledge, Faith and the other Vertues. He therefore that filleth all capable Creatures, is not one of thoſe whom he filleth.

(n) S. Ambroſ. de ſp. ſanct. l. 1. c. 7.
(o) Ibid. c. 8.
(p) Ibid. c. 16.
(q) Ibid. c. 18.
(r) Ibid. l. 2. c. 9.
(s) Athanaſ. Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 353.
(t) Ibid. p. 362.
(u) S. Cyr. de Trinit. Dial. p. 662.
(w) Ibid. p. 651.
(x) Didym. de ſp. ſanct. l. 1.

V. Thus the Creature is differenc'd from the Spirit. (y) The Creature is of Subject-ſervient Condition: But the Spirit maketh Free. The Creature needeth Life: But the Spirit is Vivificative. The Creature needeth to be taught: But the Spirit teacheth. The Creature is ſanctified, but the Spirit ſanctifieth. Although you Name Angels, Arch-angels and all the ſupramundane Powers, they have their Holineſs by the Spirit. (z) But the Spirit it ſelf hath Holineſs by Nature not receiving it by Grace, but it is Nature and Eſſence unto him. (a) Πνεῦμα ἅγιον, ὡς ἅγιος ὁ πατὴρ ϗ ἅγιος ὁ υἱὸς, the Spirit is Holy, as the Father is Holy, and the Son is Holy. (b) Οὐδὲν κτιςὸν κατ' ȣ̉σίαν ἅγιον. No Creature is eſſentially Holy, Grace and Holineſs (vital Sanctity) is in Creatures an accident: But of the Spirit of Grace and Holineſs vital Sanctity is the Eſſence.

(y) Ἡ μὲν κτίσις δȣλεύει· τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ἐλευθεροῖ· ἡ κτίσις ζωῆς προσδεής ἐςι· τὸ πνεῦμά ἐςι τὸ ζωοποιȣ̃ν. Ἡ κτίσις διδασκαλίας δεῖται· Τὸ πνεῦμά ἐςι τὸ διδάσκον. Ἡ κτίσις ἁγιάζεται· Τὸ πνεῦμά ἐςι τὸ ἁγιάζον. S. Baſil. Ep. 387.

(z) Αὐτὸ δὲ τὸ πνεῦμα φυσικὴν ἔχει τὴν ἁγιότητα ȣ̉ κατὰ χάριν λαβὸν, ἀλλὰ συνȣσιωμένην αὐτῷ.

(a) Idem de ſp. ſanct. c. 19.
(b) Idem c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 110.

As the Grace and Holineſs which Creatures have, is an Adjunct of their Nature, ſo they have it by Sanctification from ſome other. (c) Ἑτέρωθεν ἐπεισήχθη, it was introduc'd from elſewhere: (d) But the Holy Spirit being κατ' ȣ̉σίαν ἅγιον, Holy by his Eſſence, ȣ̉ δεῖται τȣ̃ ἔξωθεν ἁγιασμȣ̃, needeth not Sanctification from abroad (e) Having it οἴκοθεν ϗ ȣ̉σιωδῶς, of its own Nature and Eſſentially. (f) Non eſt aliqua in Spiritu Sancto fortitudo, aut operatio Sanctificationis virtutiſque ab extraneo quodam. In the Holy Spirit there is not any work of Sanctification and Virtue from any extraneous one.

(c) Idem de ſp. ſanct. c. 19.
(d) Idem c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 110.
(e) S. Cyr. de Trin. p. 665.
(f) Didym. ſupr.

If Creatures are Sanctified, yet they do not Sanctifie (Communicate to others Grace and Holineſs;) But the Holy Spirit is not only incapable of Sanctification from another, but he is the Sanctifier of all that are Holy. (g) Οὐχ ἁγιαζόμενόν ἐςι, ἀλλ' ἁγιάζον, he is not ſanctified, but ſanctifieth. Whence he is excellently well intituled by S. Athanaſius (h) ἡ ἁγιαςικὴ ϗ φωτιςικὴ ζωὴ, the Sanctificative and Illuminative Life. And by the Alexandrian Cyril (i) ȣ̉σία ϗ φύσις ἁγιαςικὴ, a Sanctificative Eſſence and Nature.

(g) S. Baſil. de ſp. ſanct. c. 19.
(h) Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 351. Com.
(i) De Trin. p. 673.

Creatures that are Virtuous and Holy, cannot be duely called by the abſtract Names of Virtue and Perfection: But the ancient Writers ſay (k) that the Holy Spirit is αὐτὸ ἀλήθεια, αὐτὸ δικαιοσύνη, Truth it ſelf, Righteouſneſs it ſelf, Life it ſelf, Love it ſelf. But that theſe Names may be agreeable to the Holy Spirit, they ought to be underſtood with the addition of Communicative, and ſo underſtood they are very agreeable to the Holy Spirit, and ſhew the Creature-tranſcendency of it. For the Holy Spirit is the Communicative Light, Life and Love, Truth and Grace it ſelf.

(k) Petav. T. 1. l. 2. c. 6. S. 15. S. Baſil. de ſp. ſanct. c. 19.

No Creature can be the Spirit of Adoption to us in the Senſe of the Apoſtle. For it muſt be a Spirit that is in God, and more than a Servant, which is ſo well acquainted with the Secrets of God, as to be able, to bear Witneſs with our Spirit, that we are God's Children, to ſhed abroad his Love in our Hearts, to give us the Senſe of our Adoption and of his Paternal Love and Favour. Nor can any Creature be the Spirit of Adoption to us in the Senſe of the ancient Writers of the Church, who do not mean by the Spirit of Adoption what the Apoſtle meaneth. For they ſuppoſe (l) that the Holy Spirit is called the Spirit of Adoption, becauſe by Sanctification he maketh us the Sons of God (which are more than meer Creatures;) and it is irrational to ſuppoſe, that more than meer Creatures are made ſuch meerly by the Operation of a Creature.

(l) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 15. S. 5.

To be Born of God and of the Spirit (m) is the ſame thing. Therefore as the World and the Spirit of the World are ſo one, that to be Born of the World (as Philoſophers ſpeak) and of the Spirit of the World, is the ſame thing: So God and the Spirit of God are ſo one, that to be Born of God and of the Spirit of God, is the ſame thing. But no Creature can be ſo one with God; therefore the Holy Spirit cannot be a Creature. It is that of himſelf, that of God or of the Godhead his Holy Spirit.

(m) S. Cyr. Theſaur. p. 349, 350.

VI. The Holy Spirit appeareth, to be of the Godhead from his Inhabitation of the People of God. For it cannot be ſuppos'd (n) διὰ κτίσματος θεὸν ἡμῖν ἐνοικίζεσθαι, that by a Creature God dwelleth in us. Nor can it be ſuppos'd, that by a Creature's inhabiting our Souls we are made Partakers of the Divine Nature. Thus to inhabit the Soul, is peculiar to an Holy Spirit, that is Creature-tranſcendent. (o) If an Angel or Arch-angel ſpeaketh or operateth in us, yet God or Chriſt doth not thereby dwell in us. (p) If the Spirit dwelleth in us and Chriſt by him, δύναμις ἄρα αὐτȣ̃ τὸ πνεῦμα, then the Spirit is his Virtue or Power (which is an excellent Notice of the Holy Spirit) and is no Creature. (q) He is in us and (n) S. Cyr. de Trin. p. 660. Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 15. S. 5.

(o) S. Cyr. Theſaur. p. 335.
(p) Ibid. p. 358.
(q) Ibid. p. 353. & de Trin. p. 637.

and dwelleth in us, τὴν τȣ̃ Θεȣ̃ πρᾶξίν τε ϗ ἐνέργειαν ἀποπληρȣ̃ν, as no leſs than God and doing the Operation of God. For if the Holy Spirit worketh in us, it is God that worketh in us. Phil. 2. 13. and if the Holy Spirit teacheth us, we are taught of God. 1 Theſſ. 4. 9. He dwelleth in us as no leſs than God (and therefore is the Inſpiration-virtue of the Godhead, ſo as to be one of the Godhead;) for his Inhabitation maketh us a Temple, which is the holy Habitation or Dwelling-houſe of God. R. Alſchech ſaith (r) that the People of Iſrael are called the Temple of God: Whether ſo or otherwiſe, doubtleſs the Church of Chriſtians and all the genuine Members thereof are called the Temple of God. And they are ſuch a Temple, as that Rabbi ſaith, is to be expected, Templum: רוחני & כותלים רוחניים a Spiritual Temple and Spiritual Walls. Ye are built up a Spiritual Houſe. 1 Pet. 2. 5. God hath now no material Temple, Regenerate Chriſtians are a Spiritual Temple and a Living Temple (not a Structure of dead Stones) which God inhabiteth in a Spiritual vital way, by his Spirit, which is Spiritual vital in it ſelf and to us. Eph. 2. 22. You are builded together for an Habitation of God through the Spirit. 1 Cor. 3. 16. Know ye not, that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? Ver. 17. The Temple of God is Holy, which Temple ye are. 2 Cor. 6. 16. What agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? For ye are the Temple of the living God; as God hath ſaid I will dwell in them, and walk in them. The Church of God is called his Temple by the Holy Writers, and it is manifeſt, in what Notion, in what Reſpect, and on what account they call it his Temple, namely, as being habitaculum Dei, the holy Habitation of God by his Spirit. (1.) Therefore it is not, nor is called a Temple, as being an Houſe or Habitation of the Schecinah, the Divine Majeſty as dwelling amongſt Men in the Jews Notion, which they call Schecinah he that dwelleth. (2) It is not, nor is called a Temple, as being an Houſe or Habitation of God's eſpecial Preſence in an exteriour Symbolical way (by external Symbols) but in a Spiritual-vital way. (3.) It is not, nor is called a Temple, as being a Regial Houſe or Habitation of God, wherein he dwelleth as an Imperial Eſtate of Religion unto Men (towards which they muſt perform their Adorations) as he ſometimes dwelt in the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple, and always dwelleth in Heaven. (4.) It is not called the Temple of God, his Temple, as being dedicated to his Honour, as that material Edifice Solomon's Temple was. The holy Writers in calling the Church of God his Temple, have no regard to any Dedication of it ſave only this (which the Holineſs of it implieth) it is rightfully ſet apart for God, to poſſeſs and inhabit, to uſe and enjoy. It is thus conſecrated and ſo far dedicated. (5.) It is not called the Temple of God, his Temple, in this Senſe, as being his proper Goods (like a material inanimate Houſe) or that which he poſſeſſeth by his own divine Right; for the holy Writers in calling the Church of God his Temple have no regard to any right of Poſſeſſion ſave only this; the Church is rightfully ſet apart, for him to poſſeſs and inhabit, and is actually poſſeſs'd and inhabited by him. (6.) It is not called the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, ſo as not to be the Temple of God definitively ſo: Nor is it called the Temple of God (definitively ſo) ſo as not to be the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, but incluſively and comprehenſively. 1 Cor. 6. 19. Know ye not, that your Body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, which ye have of God? Chriſtians becauſe they are the Temple of God, are the Temple of the Holy Spirit. 1 Cor. 3. 16. Know ye not, that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? The Spirit of God is that of himſelf (that of God or of the Godhead) the Inſpiration-virtue of the Godhead and of the Church. If the Church is the Temple (or Habitation) of the Spirit of God, it is neceſſarily the Temple (or Habitation) of God: And if it is the living Temple (or Habitation) of God, it is neceſſarily the Temple (or Habitation) of the Spirit of God. (7.) The Inhabitation of the Holy Spirit maketh us the Temple of God definitively ſo; and the Habitation of the Holy Spirit alſo is as ſuch a Temple, and his Temple, as the Apoſtle expreſly affirmeth touching our Body; therefore the Holy Spirit is no Creature, but is of the Godhead; for no (s) δȣλικὸν οἰκητήριον, Creature-habitation is a Temple. But ſay the Adverſaries of the Deity of the Holy Spirit (t) if becauſe our Body is called the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, we will infer from thence his Deity, we muſt ſhew that our Body is ſo called the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, as that he is a Perſon, to whoſe Honour it is dedicated, and by whom our Body is poſſeſs'd by his own divine Right. To which Objection I anſwer; that thus to Diſpute, is plainly to Diſpute againſt the expreſs words of the Apoſtle; and the Objection is of no force upon this account. Becauſe the Holy Writers in calling the Church the Temple of God, have no regard to any Dedication of it to his Honour, or any Poſſeſſion of it by his own Divine Right ſave only thus far; they conſider it as rightly ſet apart for him to Poſſeſs and inhabit, and that it is actually poſſeſs'd and inhabited by him. And becauſe our Body is rightfully ſet apart, for the Holy Ghoſt to poſſeſs and inhabit, and is actually poſſeſs'd and inhabited by him, therefore the holy Writers fitly call it his Temple, which inferreth his Deity or Creature-tranſcendence.

(r) L'Emper. cod. mid. in præfat. Grot. Not. in 1 Cor. 3 16.

(s) S. Baſil. de ſp. ſanct. c. 21.

(t) Crell. de uno Deo l. 1. S. 3. c. 1.

VII. Sinning againſt the Holy Ghoſt could not be ſo horrendous, as the Scripture repreſenteth it, if the Holy Ghoſt is a Creature. For there are two Inſtances, wherein it is repreſented as the unpardonable Sinning. The one is the Caſe of total Apoſtacy, the other is the Caſe of the Phariſees Blaſphemy, both which agree in one general Nature; for they are a blaſphemous malicious infidelity, not only againſt Chriſt, but againſt the Holy Ghoſt and his Teſtimony to Chriſtianity by Miracles. The total Apoſtates wholly revolted from the Chriſtian Religion and Profeſſion to downright Infidelity (Judaiſm or Paganiſm) and their Infidelity was Blaſphemous both againſt Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt. For (as when a Subject renounceth his Allegiance and taketh up Arms againſt his Sovereign) the total Apoſtates became downright Adverſaries to Chriſt, his Religion and Kingdom, Heb. 10. 27. and counted his Blood, the Blood of the Covenant wherewith they are ſanctify'd an unholy thing, no better than the Blood of a Villain and Malefactor. Doing deſpight to the Spirit of Grace, Heb. 10. 29. rejecting, depelling, extinguiſhing, contumeliouſly treating and uſing the Holy Spirit, and counting the miraculous Gifts of it (whereof they had been Partakers, Heb. 6. 4.) a Diabolical Deluſion. It was not without Spight and Maliciouſneſs that they were thus contumelious (for they ſinn'd at this horrible rate after they had been inlightned and had receiv'd the knowledge of the Truth) and therefore their Apoſtaſie was a Sin unpardonable, a Sin unto Death, not only deadly, but irrecoverably deadly to the Sinner. Heb. 8. 6. and 10. 26. 1 Joh. 5. 16. But as their contumely againſt Chriſt would not have been any thing near ſo atrocious as it was, if Chriſt had been ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος, but a Man or a Creature: So the contumely of theſe Apoſtates againſt the Holy Ghoſt could not have been any thing near of ſo black a Character, as it was, if the Holy Ghoſt had been a Creature.

The ſame Inference muſt be made from the Phariſees Blaſphemy, which is commonly called the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, and which from Matth. 12. 24 —— 33. appeareth to be of this Deſcription. It is the blaſphemous malicious Infidelity of thoſe that are not unacquainted with the Holy Ghoſt, againſt his Teſtimony to Chriſt and Chriſtianity by Miracles. But to make this Deſcription ſufficiently full and clear, it is requiſite to add, that our Saviour was mentium inſpector (as Grotius ſaith) and ſaw that the Phariſees (who were not unacquainted with the Holy Ghoſt) were ſo maliciouſly minded, as to be unconvincible of the truth of Chriſtianity and unconvertible thereto by that divine Atteſtation, which was given by the Holy Ghoſt in his Miracles. Men may reproach the Perſon of Chriſt without reflecting on the Holy Ghoſt or that Divine Power whereby his Miracles were wrought. They may Blaſpheme the Holy Ghoſt without committing the Sin unpardonable. For S. Auſtin obſerveth, that the Jews and Gentiles to whom the Goſpel was preach'd, did ordinarily Blaſpheme the Holy Ghoſt, yet were not further from Converſion and Salvation than the reſt of this evil World. But ſo to Blaſpheme the Holy Ghoſt, as the Phariſees did and with their maliciouſneſs of Mind, is according to our Saviour's Commination the Sin unpardonable both becauſe of its atrociouſneſs and incurableneſs. For there was no cure for the obſtinate malicious Infidelity of the Phariſees, either by internal Grace (which upon horrible Affronts is withdrawn) or by External Evidence; for they defeated the higheſt External Evidence, that God can give. And what can be more atrocious, than to make that of God the Spirit of Holineſs, an unclean Spirit? But if the Spirit of Holineſs is a Creature, it is not imaginable, that the Phariſees Blaſphemy againſt him ſhould be far more atrocious than Blaſphemy againſt the Son of Man, or than the more uſual ſort of Blaſphemy againſt God. What is a Creature, that Blaſphemy againſt him ſhould be the ſuperlative capital Crime?

VIII. The Hiſtory of Ananias's foul fact of Lying, Act. 5. 3, 4. is an illuſtrious Teſtimony of the Creature-tranſcendency of the Holy Ghoſt. For without ſtraining any thing, without wire-drawing the Story (to look another way than it naturally doth) without altering the Tranſlation (which is not capable of Emendation) it plainly containeth theſe three Propoſitions. (1.) That the Apoſtles were at an extraordinary rate endow'd with the Holy Ghoſt. For S. Peter thus reproveth Ananias. Why hath Satan filled thine Heart, to lye to the Holy Ghoſt? (u) That is, to go about to deceive Apoſtolos ſpiritu ſancto inſtructos, the Apoſtles that are furniſh'd with the Holy Ghoſt, guided by the Spirit, and to whom it revealeth what is needful for the Church? 1 Theſſ. 4. 8. He that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not Man, but God, who hath alſo given unto us his Holy Spirit. S. Paul therefore ſaith, Rom. 9. 1. I ſay the truth in Chriſt, I Lye not, my Conſcience alſo bearing me Witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt. In Chriſt and in the Holy Ghoſt are like Phraſes and of like Interpretation. The Apoſtle uſeth them by way of Conteſtation, to make ſacred his Atteſtation to what he ſaith. He ſpake the truth in Chriſt as in his ſight and cogniſance; and his own mind did bear him Witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt, as in his privity and conſciouſneſs to it and all the ſecrets of it. (w) Tres veritatis teſtes in vocat: Chriſtum, conſcientiam ſuam, ſpiritum ſanctum, qui fallere aut falli nequit. He appealeth to three Witneſſes of his ſpeaking Truth: Chriſt, his Conſcience and the Holy Ghoſt (that reſided on him and inſpir'd him) which can neither deceive nor be deceiv'd. If the Holy Ghoſt in like manner as Chriſt, is appealed to as a Divine Witneſs, this demonſtrateth both his Perſonality and Creature-tranſcendency. (2.) That Ananias in lying to the Apoſtles (Men inſpir'd) did not lye meerly unto Men, but to the Holy Ghoſt, and his lying to the Holy Ghoſt as ſuch was not a lying unto Men, or unto an Angel or any other Creature. Why hath Satan filled thine Heart, to lye to the Holy Ghoſt? Saith the Apoſtle. Why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine Heart? Thou haſt not lyed unto Men. He did not lye at all meerly unto Men, as his lying was unto the Holy Ghoſt, it was not at all a lying unto Men. Nor could it be as ſuch a lying to an Angel or any other Creature; for this was the great aggravation of it, which rais'd it to a far higher pitch than lying unto Men, it was a lying to the Holy Ghoſt. Therefore his lying to the Holy Ghoſt as ſuch was not a lying to an Angel or any Creature; for ſo it could not be rais'd to a far higher pitch than lying unto Men. v. 9. The Apoſtle ſaith to Sapphira; how is it, that ye have agreed together, to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? This was their Crime, it was a lying to the Holy Ghoſt, which was a tempting the Spirit of the Lord; and this is a far greater Crime than lying unto and tempting a Creature. Therefore the Spirit of the Lord is not a Creature. (3.) That Ananias's lying to the Holy Ghoſt was as ſuch a lying not unto Men, but unto God. For this is the Charge, that the Apoſtle draweth up againſt him: Why hath Satan filled thine Heart, to lye to the Holy Ghoſt? —— thou haſt not lyed unto Men, but unto God. His lying to the Holy Ghoſt was as ſuch a lying unto God, not unto Men, which was the great Aggravation and Criminality of it. But if the Holy Ghoſt is a Creature, if this lying unto God muſt be interpreted from what the Apoſtle ſaith of God's Meſſengers, he that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not Men, but God: (1 Theſſ. 4. 8.) His lying unto God was but a ſlender and diminutive ſort of lying unto God. For it was but a partial and very remote ſort of lying unto God, and far from being that highly aggravated ſort of lying unto God, which lying to the Holy Ghoſt is, ſuppoſing him to be of the Godhead. Inſtead of Ananias's let us ſubſtitute an Apoſtate, that doth deſpite to the Holy Spirit; and inſtead of lying let us ſubſtitute offering contumely. Let us ſuppoſe this Holy Spirit, to be but an Angel, and that S. Peter thus ſpeaketh to this Apoſtate. You offer contumely to the Holy Spirit, and in ſo doing you do not offer

contumely

(u) Grot. & piſcat. in loc.

(w) Pareus in loc.

contumely unto Men, but unto God: how ſlender and diminutive would this Contumelionſneſs be, ſuppoſing the Holy Spirit to be but an Angel? how much more highly aggravated would it be, ſuppoſing the Holy Spirit's Creature-tranſcendence?

IX. Mr. Selden citeth a Muhammedan Author, who ſaith; The Holy Ghoſt is no Creature, but hath a ſingular production proper to it ſelf: for it is not a Spirit after the manner of other Spirits, becauſe it is the Spirit of God. The Spirit of a Man is a Creature, but the Spirit of God is not. Creaturizing the Holy Ghoſt claſheth with common underſtanding; for (according to that controverted place which I ſuppoſe to be genuine, The Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt are one, 1 Joh. 5.7.) the Spirit of God muſt not be disjoyned from God. (x) How groſs an Ingeny are we of καὶ πόῤῥω τοῦ πνεύματος, and far from the Spirit, if we doubt of this, and need to be taught it? And how groſs an abſurdity is it, to ſuppoſe, that thoſe things which were done to Chriſt himſelf by the Holy Ghoſt, were done by a Creature? that the Bl. Virgin was with Child by a Creature; that which was conceiv'd in her, was of a Creature; that in Chriſt's Generation a Creature came upon her and overſhadow'd her; that when Chriſt was full of the Holy Ghoſt, he was replete by or with a Creature; that when the Spirit of the Lord was upon him, a Creature was upon him; that when anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, he was anointed with a Creature; when he caſt out Devils by the Spirit of God, it was by a Creature; that when the Spirit was given to him without meaſure, nothing more than a Creature was given him; that when raiſed from the dead by the Spirit of Holineſs, it was by a Creature; and that when he offer'd himſelf without Spot to God by the Eternal Spirit, this Eternal Spirit was a Creature: Who ſeeth not, that all theſe Sayings of the New Teſtament (and many ſuch more) touching the Holy Ghoſt, muſt be underſtood touching a Creature-tranſcendent Virtue and Agency, and that otherwiſe they are not intelligible? (y) ἡ τοῦ παρακλήτου προσηγορία, the Name of the Paraclete doth not a little conduce, to ſhew the Glory of the Holy Spirit; for our Saviour promiſeth to his Diſciples another Paraclete, whereby is meant (z) ἄλλος ἐγώ, another I. And he muſt have very mean thoughts of his Saviour, who can ſuppoſe a Creature, to be ſuch another Paraclete as he was, like him in Worth and Dignity.

(x) Gr. Naz. or. 37. p. 611.

(y) S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 3. p. 81.

(z) Gr. Naz. or. 44. p. 713.

CHAP. III.

The Introduction touching extravagant Deifying the Holy Spirit. 1. In making him God definitively ſo. 2. In making him the Imperial Eſtate of God. 3. In the Attribution of an extravagant Identity to the Divine Perſons. 4. In the Attribution of an extravagant Equality. 5. In the Scholaſtick Theology's Monarchy or Unity of Principle. 6. In making the Holy Spirit the moſt high God without a due limitation of Senſe. 7. In exempting him from all Superiour Authority. 8. In making him properly the Author of his Gifts, Graces and Benefits. 9. In making him the Honour-perſon of the Lord. 10. In ſuppoſing him a Political kind of Potentate in the Godhead. 11. In ſuppoſing him the Creator, Vivificator, Benefactor and Providential Governour of the World and the preſerver of all things. 12. In making incongruous and heterogeneous Attributions to him. 13. In making incongruous Attributions to him about Chriſt.

Of the Scholaſtick Theology's extravagant Deifying the Holy Spirit.

Extravagant Deifyings of the Holy Spirit are Miſtake, Error and Folly, which muſt not be counted ſmall and inconſiderable, becauſe it is about (the great thing) the Godhead it ſelf, and conſequently the Religion of the Godhead. They are a great blemiſh to the Chriſtian Theology, a miſrepreſentation of the Chriſtian Religion in the main and ſummary of it (which is the Holy Trinity) a ſpoiling the Wiſdom and reaſonableneſs of it, an affront to the Reaſon of Mankind (upon whoſe belief they are impos'd as the Catholick Faith) a perverting the Holy Scriptures, a grand occaſion of the Infidelity of the World, and of the Schiſms and Hereſies which infeſt the Church, and (which ſeemeth to be the worſt of thoſe Evils that are in them) they are very injurious unto God, to his Divine Majeſty and Honour and the dues of his Godhead. Theſe Evils are owing to the Scholaſtick Theology, which introduc'd the extravagant deifyings of the Holy Spirit, and wherein they are to be found in great plenty (in one ſmall Book the third of S. Ambroſe de Spiritu Sancto, there is a competent number of them) as we will ſhew by producing numerous Inſtances of them.

I. In the Scholaſtick Theology the Holy Spirit is made God definitively ſo, which is an heinous Extravagance; for this is undeniably plain and certain, that God is not the definitive Name and Notion of the Son, but the Son of God (the Son of him who is God;) that God is not the definitive Name and Notion of the Holy Spirit, but the Spirit of God (the Spirit of him who is God) and conſequently God is peculiarly the definitive Name and Notion of God the Father. But although this is undeniably plain and certain, yet the Scholaſtick Theology ſo marvellouſly overlooketh it, that it accounteth the Scholaſtick Divine Eſſence together with the three Perſons, to be God definitively ſo; and likewiſe each one of the three Divine Perſons it accounteth God definitively ſo: but it doth not acknowledge, that it is peculiar to any one Perſon of the Godhead, to be God definitively ſo. Yet if the Spirit of God is rightly ſo denominated, God muſt be the definitive Name and Notion of one, to whom the Holy Spirit belongeth, and from whom by this Name the Spirit of God (the Spirit of him who is God) he is plainly diſtinguiſh'd. But inſtead of being duely diſtinguiſh'd this Theology maketh the Spirit of God, to be God definitively ſo; in the application of places of Scripture and the divine honourary Names inſtead of God (definitively ſo) oftentimes it ſubſtituteth the Spirit of God; and it applieth places of Scripture and the divine honourary Names both to God (definitively ſo) and to the Spirit of God without making a due diſtinction between them. (a) It is the Spirit (ſaith this Theology) which Iſaiah ſaw, when he ſaid, I ſaw the Lord ſitting on a Throne, high and lifted up, and his Train filled the Temple. Above it ſtood the Seraphims: each one had ſix Wings; with twain he covered his Face, and with twain he covered his Feet, and with twain he did flie. And one cried unto another, and ſaid, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hoſts, the whole Earth is full of his Glory. The Holy Ghoſt never appear'd, was never ſeen in any Prophetick Viſion, yet the ancient Scholaſtick Divines (whom the modern follow) are of Opinion, that he was ſeen in this Viſion of Iſaiah, and (as they imagine) they prove from S. Paul, that the Holy Ghoſt as appearing in this Viſion ſpake thoſe words, which follow a little after it: Go and tell this People, Hear ye indeed but underſtand not; and ſee ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the Heart of this People fat. (b) Ergo idem eſt Dominus Sabaoth ac ſpiritus ſanctus: therefore the Lord of Hoſts and the Holy Spirit is the ſame, as Gr. Nyſſen, Baſil, Idatius, Cerealis, Victor Utic. the Alexandrian Cyril and Proclus argue, to prove the Deity of the Holy Spirit. S. Paul is ſuppos'd to ſay, (c) Hunc Deum verum ac Dominum exercituum eſſe ſpiritum ſanctum, that this true God and Lord of Hoſts is the Holy Spirit. To God and the Lord of Hoſts the Seraphims cried three times, Holy, holy, holy, becauſe Holineſs by nature is ſeen in three Hypoſtaſes, which three Hypoſtaſes are one Lord of Hoſts, that was ſeen in this Viſion, as S. Baſil ſuppoſeth. But the Lord of Hoſts according to the Senſe of Scripture is only God definitively ſo, and ſo is the God of Iſrael: Yet theſe words of David, 2 Sam. 23. 3. Spiritus Domini loquutus eſt per me, & ſermo ejus per linguam meam, dixit Deus Iſrael, mihi loquutus eſt fortis Iſrael dominator hominum, are thus interpreted; (d) Quo loco annon manifeſtè Spiritum Domini vocat etiam Deum Iſraelis, fortem & dominatorem? In which place doth not David manifeſtly call the Spirit of the Lord the God of Iſrael, ſtrong and dominator? The ſame Author thus argueth: It was the true God, that commanded Moſes to ſpeak to Aaron, not to come at all times into the Holy Place within the Vail, Lev. 16. 2. Hunc autem qui ſic præcipit, fuiſſe ipſum ſpiritum ſanctum: But the Giver of this Commandment was the Holy Spirit himſelf. Pſal. 95. God ſpeaketh thus; Harden not your Heart, as in the day of temptation in the Wilderneſs: Hunc verò Deum ſpiritum ſanctum fuiſſe, qui fuit in deſerto ſic tentatus: But this God was the Holy Spirit, who was ſo tempted in the Deſart. This Theology ſo aſſerteth (and endeavoureth to prove) the Deity of the Holy Spirit, as to aſſert, that he is God definitively ſo. (e) Thus Athanaſius, Gr. Nyſſen, Paſchaſius and others argue; Deus Iſrael eſt is, The God of Iſrael is he, who promiſed a new Covenant, Jer. 31. but this was the promiſe of the Holy Spirit himſelf.

II. According to this Theology the Holy Spirit not only is of the Imperial Eſtate of the Godhead, but is the Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God and God abſolutely, which none but one Perſon of the Godhead can be, as in the Papacy or a Secular Monarchy but one Perſon can be the Imperial Eſtate. Nor can the Holy Spirit abſolutely be this Imperial Eſtate, which is Self-originate, the firſt Cauſe, Αὐτοκέφαλος (its own Head) abſolutely independent, omni-imperial, and is not without a certain poteſtas over all (but which muſt be underſtood with due abatement of ſenſe, when it is apply'd to Perſons of the Godhead) as S. Hilary ſaith, (f) Qui mittit, poteſtatem ſuam in eo quod mittit, oſtendit: He that ſendeth, ſheweth his Authority in ſending. So this Theology ſaith, (g) Sending denoteth in him that ſendeth Dignity or Authority. The Father hath the Prerogative of Authority both in reſpect of the Son and the Holy Spirit, and conſequently it is his Prerogative to be the Imperial Eſtate of God. The Father alſo giveth his Son and Spirit: He that giveth, doth give that which is his own; therefore the Father is the Owner and Superiour Proprietor both of his own Son and of his own Spirit; which implieth a certain right and power of diſpoſing of them, and ſpeaketh it his Peculiarity, to be the Imperial Eſtate of God. One would think, it is as plain as any common Notion, that the Imperial Eſtate of God is in order of Nature antecedent to the productive proceſſion of thoſe Divine Perſons, which (in this Theology) are ſuppos'd, to have a productive Proceſſion from it, and that it cannot be communicated to them (ſo as to be it) unleſs the before-named Attributes (ſelf-originate the firſt Cauſe, αὐτοκέφαλος, abſolutely independent, abſolutely omni-imperial) can be communicated to them, which is ſelf-contradictious and impoſſible; therefore neither of the Divine Perſons that are ſuppos'd, to have a productive Proceſſion from it, muſt be counted and called God, ſo as to make either of them the Imperial Eſtate of God, but they muſt be ſo counted and called in a duely limited ſenſe. The Son muſt be counted and called God as being of the Godhead as the Son of it and no further. The Spirit muſt be counted and called God as being of the Godhead as the Spirit of it and no further. And by this acknowledgment of their Deity the Faith of the Trinity is ſufficiently acknowledg'd; for all the Controverſie (ſaith Gr. Nyſſen) which thoſe that follow the Church have with the Anomæans is this; (h) whether we ought to ſuppoſe the Son and the Spirit, to be of created nature, according to the Saying of the Adverſaries, or of uncreated nature, as the Church hath believed. The Church ought to believe, that the Holy Spirit is of the uncreated nature, and conſequently is one of the Godhead-party, and one of his Godhead, who alone is definitively and abſolutely God (the Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God) theſe Bounds ſhe may not tranſcend, nor deviate from this Rule of Faith, as her Scholaſtick Theology doth, that maketh the Holy Spirit, The Lord of Hoſts, the God of Iſrael, God definitively and abſolutely, The Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God. That doth not acknowledge ſuch an Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God, the Being which is peculiar to one Perſon, but its Trinity is a threefold Imperial Eſtate of God in one Eſſential God, (i) unus Deus habens tres perſonas, one eſſential God having three Perſons, each of which is the Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God, as the Athanaſian Creed ſaith; The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt is all one. The Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty, and the Holy Ghoſt Almighty, yet they are not three Almighties,

(a) S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 3. c. 22.

(b) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 13. S. 2.

(c) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 1. S. 24. S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 3. p. 81. & l. 5. p. 115.

(d) Valentia ibid.

(e) Petav. ſupr. S. 3.

(f) De Trin. l. 8.

(g) Miſſio quidem in eo qui mittit ἀξίωμα, id eſt, dignitatem ſive auctoritatem ineſſe teſtatur. Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 1. S. 8.

(h) Περὶ τοῦ δεῖν ἢ κτιστὸν εἶναι τὸν υἱὸν καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα κατὰ τὸν λόγον τῶν ἐναντίων, ἢ τῆς ἀκτίστου φύσεως καθὼς ἡ ἐκκλησία πεπίστευκε. Gr. Nyſſ. c. Eunom. l. 1 p. 66.

(i) Pet de Tri 4. c. 4 43

ties, but one Almighty. The Senſe is (a very heinous miſrepreſentation of the Godhead and of the Trinity) that although they are not three Almighties as to Eſſence, yet each Perſon is the Imperial Perſon (or Imperial Eſtate) of Almighty God, and this is the only Imperial Eſtate of God which this Theology acknowledgeth; which alſo thus repreſenteth the Holy Spirit, and proveth, that he ought to be worſhipp'd. (k) For he that is God and Lord of the Univerſe, is to be worſhipp'd by all; for ſo it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

III. Such an Identity this Theology attributeth to the Divine Perſons, which is of this meaning, that there is no difference of one from another as to the being God definitively and àbſolutely and the Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God. (l) The three Perſons in Eſſence, Potentacy, Goodneſs, Wiſdom, Will, Power, and in all other Attributes which are abſolute, not relative, are the ſame, they are one, that is, one and a moſt ſimple thing without any difference. (m) Whoſoever doth not affirm, that of Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt there is one Deity, Power and Authority, Divinity, Virtue, one Glory, Domination, Empire, one Will and Verity, let him be accurſed. An Identity or numerical Unity of Scholaſtick Eſſence, a ταὐτότης τῆς φύσεως vel οὐσίας, ſameneſs of Nature or of Subſtance (which the term ὁμοούσιος, conſubſtantial, is us'd to ſignifie) this Theology attributeth to the three Divine Perſons, and alſo an Identity of Imperial Eſtate; for God is the Name of a Nature and an Imperial Eſtate. (n) We acknowledge one Deity, one Kingdom, one Potentacy, one Virtue, one Action, one Will, one Domination. (o) Becauſe they are God, there is one Deity, one Majeſty, of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. This is that Unity in Trinity and Trinity in Unity, which this Theology celebrateth, which are terms that admit of a very good and laudable Senſe, and ſo the Unity and Identity of the Divine Perſons may be underſtood in a good Senſe; but in this Theology it is of this meaning, that they do not differ one from another as to the being God definitively and abſolutely and the Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God: for did they ſo differ, one might be ſaid to differ from another quà Deus eſt, which is contrary to the Maxims of this Theology.

IV. The Equality which (not without ſelf-contradiction) this Theology attributeth to the Divine Perſons, is of this Senſe; that they do not differ one from another as to the being God definitively and abſolutely, and the Imperial Eſtate of God Almighty. For it is a grand Maxim in this Theology, that the Father is greater than the Son, quà Pater eſt, non quà Deus eſt, as he is the Father (in reſpect only of his perſonal relative Property) but not as he is God (in reſpect of any thing that belongeth to him as God) ſo the Father is not greater than the Son or the Holy Ghoſt, theſe Divine Perſons having the very ſame Deity; and this is ſaid, to be the meaning of the Athanaſian Creed; In this Trinity none is afore or after other; none is greater or leſs than another: Of the Father this Theology ſaith, (p) A greater Dignity is attributed to him without inequality of Perfection. It is an Article of the Catholick Faith, from which none diſſenteth but an Arian and Heretick, that the Father is not greater than the Son in Nature or Eſſence, or is more perfect in any thing, but altogether equal, yea the ſame in all Attributes and Perfections ſo called in the Schools. But amongſt theſe Attributes or Perfections ſo called in the Schools one is Potentacy and Authority; and this Theology ſaith, (q) Deus naturæ nomen eſt & poteſtatis: therefore the Father is greater than the Son quâ Deus eſt (as he is God) if he is greater in Potentacy and hath any Power or Authority over the Son, which this Scholaſtick Theology ſometimes acknowledgeth, and ſometimes denieth; (r) Patri non eſt auctoritas. So this Theology ſometimes acknowledgeth, that ſending and giving the Holy Spirit importeth Dignity and Authority in the Sender and Giver, and ſometimes denieth it. (s) The Holy Spirit is called the Gift of the Father and the Son (only) upon this account, becauſe he proceedeth from them. But giving is free, whereas this proceſſion of the Holy Spirit is ſuppos'd to be (t) naturalis ac neceſſaria (natural and neceſſary) which ſpeaketh it no Gift. But much of this ſort of giving there is in this Theology, which ſaith of the generation of the Son, that it accounteth natural and neceſſary, (u) By generating the Father gave power to the Son. All things that he hath in his Subſtance he gave to him by generating, neither is the Son any thing elſe but only thoſe things that are given him by the Father. He begat him equal, becauſe he gave him nothing leſs than Equality. A marvellous Equality of the Divine Perſons this Theology deriveth from the ſame Father (S. Auſtin) from whom theſe Maxims are derived; (w) for the Son is ſaid, to be equal to and of as much Perfection as the Father, and not only ſo, but to be equal unto, and of as much Perfection as the Father and the Holy Spirit together; and not only ſo, but to be equal unto and of as much Perfection as the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt together. So the Holy Spirit is ſaid, to be equal unto and of as much Perfection as the Father; and not only ſo, but to be equal unto and of as much Perfection as the Father and the Son together; and not only ſo, but to be equal unto and of as much Perfection as Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt together. Whether theſe marvellous Propoſitions are remote from good Senſe or not, a Judgment may be made by comparing them with the Idea of God and of the Holy Spirit.

V. In-

(k) Qui enim Deus Univerſitatis & Dominus, utique ab omnibus adorandus eſt. ſic enim ſcriptum eſt: Dominum Deum tuum adorabis & ipſi ſoli ſervies. S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 3. c. 19.

(l) Perſonæ tres in eſſentia, poteſtate, bonitate, ſapientia, voluntate, potentia, ac cæteris quæ abſolutè, non relativè dicuntur, ſunt idem, unum ſunt, hoc eſt, una & ſimpliciſſima res, ſine ulla differentia. Petav. ſupr. l. 7. c. 10. S. 11.

(m) Si quis non dixerit Patris & Filii & Spiritus ſancti unam deitatem, poteſtatem, divinitatem, virtutem, unam gloriam, dominationem, imperium, unam voluntatem & veritatem, anathema ſit. Ibid. l. 4. c. 13. S. 14. & 11.

(n) Unam novimus deitatem, unum regnum, unam poteſtatem, unam virtutem, unam actionem, unam voluntatem, unam dominationem. Ibid. c. 15. S. 4.

(o) Quia unus Deus, una divinitas, una majeſtas eſt Patris Filii & Spiritus Sancti. S. Ambr. de Sp. Sanct. l. 1. c. 14.

(p) Majus ei ἀξίωμα tribuitur citra perfectionis inæqualitatem: Majorem non eſſe Patrem Filio naturâ vel eſſentiâ, vel perfectiorem re ullâ; ſed æqualem penitùs; imò eundem in iis omnibus, quæ attributa vulgò & perfectiones in ſcholis appellantur, Catholicæ eſt dogma Fidei, à quo nullus diſſentit niſi Arianus & Hæreticus. Petav. ſupr. l. 7. c. 6. S. 8. & l. 8. c. 9. S. 15. & T. 4. l. 6. c. 13. S. 7.

(q) Petav. de Trin. l. 4. c. 14. S. 1.

(r) Ibid. l. 5 c. 5. S. 12.

(s) Spiritus Sanctus donum Patris & Filii appellatur, quia ab utroque procedit. Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 10. Digreſſ. 1. p. 618.

(t) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 12. S. 15.

(u) Gignendo dedit potentiam Pater Filio. Omnia quæ habet in ſubſtantia ſua, gignendo dedit ei. Neque quid aliud eſt Filius, exceptis his quæ ei dantur à Patre. Æqualem utique genuit, quoniam nihil minus dedit. Petav. de Trin. l. 5. c. 9. S. 15.

(w) Tanta eſt æqualitas in ea Trinitate, ut non ſolùm Pater non ſit major quàm Filius, quod attinet ad divinitatem: ſed nec Pater & Filius ſimul majus aliquid ſint quàm Spiritus Sanctus, aut ſingula quæque perſona, quælibet trium minus aliquid ſit quàm ipſa Trinitas. Tantus eſt ſolus Pater, vel ſolus Filius, vel ſolus Spiritus Sanctus, quantus eſt ſimul Pater, & Filius & Spiritus Sanctus. Idem T. 1. l. 6. c. 7. S. 13.

V. Inſtead of the true Monarchy of God the Father (his being peculiarly God definitively and abſolutely and the Imperial Eſtate of God) this Theology ſubſtituteth the bare Unity or Singularity of a firſt Principle and calleth it a Monarchy. For to ſhew, that a Trinity of Perſons is conſiſtent with the Unity of God, this Theology aſſerteth a certain Monarchy, (x) which word is not meant in the uſual Senſe, to denote the Empire or Domination of one (as an Imperial Head) but an Unity or Singularity of the Principle. Sometimes by the Monarchy this Theology meaneth the Divine Perſons which though three in number and different in their relative Properties, yet in Eſſence and Attributes are the ſame. This is a Trinity in Unity, becauſe the ſame Deity is in all the Divine Perſons, and therefore is called the Monarchy. But by the Monarchy this Theology meaneth alſo, quod totius divinitatis vel deitatis principium Pater eſt, that the Father is the Principle of the whole Divinity or Deity. So that there is a Trinity in Unity both becauſe the very ſame Deity is in all the Divine Perſons, (y) and becauſe of the ſingularity of a firſt Principle. Touching which ſingularity of Principle theſe three things are obſervable. (1.) This Unity or Singularity of a firſt Principle is diſcours'd of in this Theology, as a cauſe or reaſon of the Unity of the Trinity in this reſpect, the Trinity of Perſons are one in the Father (who is called the ἕνωσις, or Unition of the Trinity;) and likewiſe to ſhew the cauſe or reaſon, why all the Divine Perſons have the ſame Nature or Eſſence; which is, becauſe the Son and the Holy Ghoſt are from one Principle; whereas otherwiſe they would have a different Eſſence, and there would be more Gods than one. (z) But this Reaſon this Theology (in the ſame Breath) acknowledgeth, to be no ſufficient Reaſon; for the origination of the Son and the Holy Ghoſt from one Principle inferreth no more than a Specifick (not a Numerical) Unity of Nature and Eſſence. (2.) This Unity or Singularity of a firſt Principle is called a Monarchy, yet this Theology ſaith, it is no Monarchy (in the proper uſual ſenſe) which is as much as to ſay, that God is not the Imperial Eſtate of God (not the Almighty God) antecedently to a Trinity. Agreeably whereto this Theology ſaith, (a) That the Son ſending the Holy Spirit hath ſome Authority over him: but not of Dominion or Majority; therefore of origine. (b) That Authority or Dignity is nothing elſe but the Notion of a Principle or Origin. (c) Many Ancients have ſaid, the Father to be greater than the Son, even according to his Divinity; not by Eſſence or any Perfection, but by Authority, that is, by Origine. In which three Paſſages of this Theology there are more than three ſelf-contradictions: for the Authority which is of conſideration in the Buſineſs of Miſſion (the ſending the Holy Ghoſt) is poteſtas, which in theſe Paſſages of Scholaſtick Theology is ſaid to be no Perfection, which is to ſay, it is no Nobilitation, no Eminence, Preeminence or Power, no Glory or Magnificence, no Honour or Dignity, yet it is called Dignity. Authoritas Originis is call'd Authority, yet it is made no Authority; for it is no Authority, if it is not Authoritas Majoritatis vel Superioritatis. It is made to be nothing more than the Notion of a Principle or Origine; whereas Authority neceſſarily reſulteth from being a Principle or Origine, as Paternal Authority reſulteth from Generation. The Father is ſaid to be Major than the Son Authoritate, but not Authoritate Majoritatis. (3.) This Unity or Singularity of a firſt Principle and Scholaſtick Monarchy is in ſome reſpect not ſo agreeable to true Religion, as that one firſt Principle and Monarchy that is in the Pagans Polytheiſm (which yet ſignified nothing conſiderable to the advantage of the Unity of God and the diſadvantage of their Polytheiſm;) for the Pagans one firſt Principle was βασιλεὺς, an Imperial Eſtate or Monarchy in the proper uſual ſenſe: whereas this Scholaſtick Monarchy is ſaid, to be nothing more than the Notion of a Principle or Origine, as being no Dignity or Authority in the proper uſual ſenſe: therefore it is rather a Phyſiological kind of firſt Principle than a Political or Monarchical; and although it is called Deus Pater, yet it is neither like a God or a Father; for a God is a Potentate, and a Father is a Father-King.

VI. The Scholaſtick Theology maketh the Holy Spirit the moſt High God (the Supreme God) without intending a due limitation of Senſe, ſo making him to be the Imperial Eſtate of God and God definitively and abſolutely. For this Theology underſtandeth thoſe Propoſitions abſolutely and without limitation of ſenſe, which ought to be underſtood relatively and with due limitation of ſenſe: as our Saviour being God only as the Son of God, this Saying of his All that the Father hath are mine, ought to be underſtood relatively and with this limitation of ſenſe, that being God as the Son of God, the ſelf-exiſtent and independent Sovereignty of the Father is as being ſuch and in ſuch ſenſe his. But we may not infer from thence, that ſelf-exiſtence and ſelf-originate independence are Attributes of the Son as well as of the Father, yet at this rate the Scholaſtick Theology underſtandeth our Saviour's Saying, to ſignifie, (d) proprietates Patris omnes in eſſe Filio, that all the Attributes of the Father are alſo Attributes of the Son. So this Theology argueth, that the Son and the Holy Ghoſt cannot be God without being ſo abſolutely perfect as the Father; (e) that to ſuppoſe any the leaſt Perfection in the Father, to be wanting in the Son, is inconſiſtent with his being the Son of God, and alſo with his being God. It is inconſiſtent with his being the Son of God (produc'd by true and proper Generation;) for there is no Perfection in God the Father, which is not his Divinity or Deity (his Eſſence) which muſt be communicated intire and unmutilated to the Son. And it is inconſiſtent with his being God, becauſe it implieth his being imperfect. (f) So in the Holy Ghoſt there muſt be all τὰ κοινὰ τῷ πατρὶ ϗ τῷ υἱῷ, the things that are common to the Father and the Son, and τὰ προσόντα τῷ πατρὶ ὡς θεῷ, thoſe things that are

(x) Qua voce, non ut alias ſolet, unicus & ſingularis principatus, vel dominatus exprimitur, ſed principii unitas & ſingularitas. Petav. de Trin. l. 4. c. 15. S. 10. & l. 7. c. 10. S. 11.

(y) Ibid. l. 4. c. 15. S. 9, 14.

(z) Ibid. S. 12.

(a) Mittens aliquam authoritatem habet in miſſum: oportet igitur quod Filius mittens ſpiritum ſanctum, habeat aliquam authoritatem in illum: ſed non dominii vel majoritatis, ut patet: ergo originis. Aquin. c. Gent. l. 4. c. 24.

(b) Quam auctoritatem dignitatemve nihil aliud eſſe, quàm principii notionem & originis demonſtravimus. Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 1. S. 8.

(c) Veteres multi patrem etiam ſecundum divinitatem majorem eſſe Filio dixerunt; non eſſentia aut perfectione aliqua, ſed auctoritate, hoc eſt origine. Ibid. l. 5. c. 5. S. 13.

(d) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 8. S. 15.

(e) Nam ſi Filius verè Deus eſt, utpote ab vero Deo vera & propria generatione productus, veram in ſe divinitatem habeat oportet: non aliam utique, vel numero diverſam ab ea, qua Deus eſt Pater: quia plures eſſe nequeunt: ſed neque mancam ac defectam ulla ſui parte; vel proprietate ac perfectione minorem aliqua; quia nihil in Deo eſt, quod non totus ipſe Deus, ac divinitas ſit ipſa. Proinde nihil in patre eſt omnino præter paternitatem, quod non in Filio ſit, imo ipſe ſit Filius. Ac ſi vel minima in eorum aliquo perfectio eſſet, quæ abeſſet ab altero, propter quam minor vel non æqualis eſſet, ne Deus quidem eſſet, quia imperfectus eſſet. Petav. ſupr. c. 9. S. 4.

(f) Gr. Naz. or. 24. p. 429. S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 109.

in the Father as God. (g) I read in the Scripture, that there is one Name, that is, Authority, Majeſty and Power of thoſe three. There I read all things that are proper to the ſupreme Deity, attributed to the three Perſons together, and to every one of them ſingly. What the Apoſtle ſaith of God (that in him we Live and Move and have our Being) this Theology applieth to the Holy Spirit (h) αὐτὸ κτ' φύσιν ὑπάρχον ὅσα ϗ Θεὸς, he being according to Nature whatſoever God is. (i) Quomodo non Deus, qui omnia habet quæ Deus habet? How is he not God, who hath all that God hath? The extravagance of theſe Argumentations appeareth from the true Idea of God (wherewith the Scholaſtick Theology is unacquainted) which is that of the Imperial or Kingdom-eſtate of God, in which there can be but one Perſon, that is the imperial Perſon of God definitively and abſolutely, but one that is the firſt Being and a Being abſolutely perfect, but one that is abſolutely ſupreme and the moſt high. That the Sayings of Divines which follow the Scholaſtick way, may not be injurious unto him, it is to be wiſh'd, that they had a prudent limitation, which they have not. (k) We do aſſert, that the Holy Spirit is God, that moſt high God, moſt abſolutely and properly ſo. (l) We have a clear deſcription of the Bleſſed Spirit, that he is the moſt high and eternal God, of the ſame Nature, Attributes and Operations with the Father and the Son, as receiving the ſame Eſſence from the Father and the Son, by proceeding from them both. This Origin of the Holy Spirits Deity is not ſo certain as this other (m) τῇ πρὸς Θεὸν ἑνώσει τὸ πνεῦμα Θεὸς, the Spirit is God by Union with God. And he that is ſo God, is not the moſt high God otherwiſe than as one of his Godhead, who alone is abſolutely the moſt high God.

VII. The Scholaſtic Theology maketh a ſhew of acknowledging, that there is in God a ſuperiour Authority in reſpect of the Holy Spirit, and that the Miſſion and Donation thereof implieth ſo much: But this Theology ſo explaineth it ſelf, that this ſeemingly acknowledged Authority amounteth to nothing of Authority. It attributeth to the Holy Spirit (n) ſummam auctoritatem, the ſupreme Authority, without diſtinction or limitation of Senſe; and in like manner it affirmeth, that the three divine Perſons have (o) not diſparity, not inequality, but unity of Potentacy, unity of Empire, unity and identity of Majeſty (without diſparity or inequality) one Deity, one Kingdom, one Domination. For theſe Attributions to the three divine Perſons do not mean, that the Son of God and the Holy Spirit of God as being ſuch are of the one Imperial Eſtate of God the Father, and as ſuch have his one Deity, Domination and ſupreme Potentacy (which is ſound Theology:) But this Theology ſuppoſeth, that every one of the divine Perſons is definitively and abſolutely God; and therefore whatever belongeth to the Father as God, muſt alſo belong to the Son and the Holy Spirit (becauſe each of them is God in this ſame ſenſe with the Father) and conſequently they muſt be abſolutely exempt from all ſuperiour Proprietors, Authorities and Powers. This Theology alſo contemplateth the three divine Perſons as three Hypoſtaſes (Subſiſtences) in one Scholaſtic divine Eſſence, which although they differ in their perſonal Properties, and one in reſpect of his perſonal Property may be counted greater than another (the Father is Ingenit, the Son is begotten by him, the Spirit is neither Ingenit, nor begotten, but proceedeth) yet the Eſſential Deity or the Scholaſtic divine Eſſence with all the eſſential Attributes is equally in all the three Hypoſtaſes, which having one and the ſame eſſential Deity, divine Majeſty, ſupreme Potentacy and Domination in perfect Identity and Equality, and being every one of them ſo abſolutely perfect as the other, every one of them is neceſſarily the Eternal, Almighty, moſt high God and ſupreme Potentate abſolutely (without limitation of Senſe) and therefore is the Imperial Eſtate of Almighty God, exempt from all ſuperiour Authorities, Proprietors and Powers. So the Holy Spirit (who in reſpect of us breatheth where he liſteth, and diſtributeth his Gifts as he will) is repreſented in this Theology as (p) a Self-diſpoſer of his own Liberty, unſubject to the Power of any, diſtributing all things by the Authority of his own Will. He is free and hath the Rights of Domination. Hath Authority above all of breathing where he willeth and inſpiring how he willeth. Hath the Effuſion of Charity at his own diſpoſal. Operateth not by Command, but according to his own Will, as being at his own diſpoſal, not a Servant under the Power of another. For he doth not obey as commanded, but as a Donour is the diſpoſer of his own Bounty. We read, that it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us (as we read, that it pleaſed God) which ſpeaketh him to have the arbitrement of things by his own Authority. And how can it be otherwiſe with him, who ſpeaketh what he willeth, and commandeth what he pleaſeth? Theſe Propoſitions are not without Exceſs and Extravagance (the Holy Spirit being the divine Agent of the abſolutely ſupreme Authority) nor is this other. (q) The Spirit παραχωρεῖ, yieldeth or giveth place to the Father as not being Ingenit, to the Son as not being generated: Τὰ δ' ἄλλα συμφυὲς ϗ σύνθρονον, ϗ ὁμόδοξον ϗ ὁμότιμον, but as to all things elſe he is of the ſame Nature, of the ſame Potentacy, of the ſame Glory and Honour. He is ſo (according to this Theology) becauſe (r) vera Deitas in nullo eſſe aut minor aut major poteſt. True Deity can be in none leſſer or greater. And for this reaſon; nulla ratione verè eſt unum, quod aliqua eſt in æqualitate diverſum. That is not by any reaſon truly one, which is different by any inequality. (s) Neſcit unitas ordinem, gradum neſcit æqualitas. Unity knoweth no Order, Equality knoweth no Degree. But if we will take things by the right handle, and conſider the Deity of the Son and of the Holy Ghoſt relatively and with due limitation of Senſe, it is not hard to diſcern, that the Son and the Holy Spirit are one God with the Father in due Equality and in due Inequality, as being his Son and his Spirit, of both which he is ſuperiour Proprietor. Yet S. Baſil ſaith of the Spirit (t) οὐ κτῆμα Θεοῦ οὐδὲ κτίσμα, it is no Poſſeſſion of God, nor any Creature: As if God the Father

(g) Lego trium iſtorum unum eſſe nomen, id eſt, auctoritatem, majeſtatem & potentiam. Lego omnia quæ ſunt propria ſummæ divinitatis, tribus ſimul, & trium ſingulis attributa. Petav. de Trin. l. 3. c. 11. S. 5.

(h) S. Cyr. de Trin. Dial. 7. p. 655.

(i) S. Amb. de ſp. ſanct. l. 3. c. 19.

(k) Dr. Barrow on the Creed Ser. 34. p. 497.

(l) Bp. Pearſon on the Creed Art 8. p. 645. ed. 1.

(m) S. Cyr. de Trin. Dial. 7. p. 648.

(n) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 16. S. 12.

(o) Non diſparilitatem, non inæqualitatem, ſed unitatem poteſtatis, unitatem imperii, unitatem & ταυτότητα Majeſtatis, unam deitatem, unum regnum, unam dominationem. S. Ambr. de ſp. ſanct. l. 1. c. 2, 14. l. 2. c. 1, 2, 12. l. 3. c. 6. 14, 21.

(p) Suæ libertatis arbiter, non alienæ poteſtati ſubjectus aut juri, omnia pro authoritate propriæ voluntatis dividens. Liber eſt, habet jura dominatus. Spirandi ubi velit, & inſpirandi quomodo velit, habens ſuper omnia poteſtatem. Divinæ arbiter charitatis eſt. Non eſt dubium, quin ea quæ operatur pater, operetur & ſpiritus. Nec ex præcepto, ſicut qui corporaliter audit operatur: Sed ex voluntate, qui ſui eſt liber arbitrii, non alienæ famulus Poteſtatis. Non enim quaſi juſſus obtemperat, ſed quaſi largitor ſuæ moderator eſt largitatis. Sicut enim de Deo legitur, placuit Deo, ita etiam cùm dicitur, quia viſum eſt ſpiritui ſancto, arbiter ſuæ exprimitur poteſtatis. Et quomodo non arbiter, qui ea quæ vult loquitur, quæ vult mandat? S. Ambroſ. de ſp. ſanct. l. 1. c. 1, 3, 7, 10. & l. 2. c. 12.

(q) Gr. Naz. or. 26. p. 445.

(r) Petav. ſupr. l. 8. c. 9. S. 15.

(s) S. Ambroſ de ſp. ſanct. l. 3. c. 18.

(t) C. Eunom. l. 5. p. 117.

ther could be Proprietor and Poſſeſſor of none but Creatures. But ſometimes this Father may ſeem to exceed on the other hand. (u) Ὀυτι ἀυτὸς ὁ Θεὸς, ἀλλὰ Θεοῦ πνεῦμα. He is not God, but the Spirit of God.

VIII. The Scholaſtick Theology ſuppoſeth, that the Operations of the Holy Spirit ad extrà, his Gifts, Graces and Benefits, are his doings as properly the Author of them. For ſo he is intituled (w) the Author of the Prophets. And as to the Apoſtles (x) not only the Operator of Grace, but the Author of their Command touching what was to be done about circumciſing the Gentiles. (y) The Author of our Spiritual Generation, whereby we are created according to God. We cannot keep the Benefit, if we exclude the Author; the Author cannot be without the Gift, nor the Gift without the Author. If the Author be vile, how can the Gifts be precious? (z) We cannot doubt, but that the Spirit is Creator, whom we know to be the Author of our Lord's Incarnation. (a) The Apoſtles and Prophets were deſignati (ordinatively deſign'd) to Propheſie and Evangelize by the Holy Spirit, as by the Father and the Son. The Holy Spirit being (b) of omnimodous Equality in reſpect of Nature, operating and ſpeaking. The Holy Ghoſt ſaid, ſeparate me Barnabas and Saul, Act. 13. 2. The Spirit ſaid unto Peter touching the Meſſengers of Cornelius, I have ſent them. Act. 10. 20. In which miſtaken places (before conſider'd) the Scholaſtick Theology obſerveth, that (c) ſpiritus ſanctus αὐθεντικῶς, & ut majeſtate ſuprema dignum eſt, loquitur. The Holy Spirit ſpeaketh with the Authority of a Sovereign and as becometh ſupreme Majeſty. The Holy Spirit (d) as being perfectly co-ordinate with the Father and the Son in the ſame Scholaſtick devine Eſſence, of one and the ſame Potentacy, Majeſty, and Authority without Inequality, of one and the ſame Will, Counſel and Operation, is ſuppos'd, to be properly and equally with the other divine Perſons the Author of his Gifts, Graces, Benefits, and all his Operations ad extrà. Of which Branch of the Scholaſtick Theology we ſhall be able to make a Judgment from theſe following Obſervations.

Firſt, This Branch of the Scholaſtick Theology is an Errour of very bad Conſequence, yet is not very remote from the Truth. For as Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt are the one holy Sovereignty or Government in our Religion: So they are the one holy Author of it and of the ſupernatural Gifts, Graces and Benefits that are in it. But as the Father and the Son are only the holy Government in the ſtrict Acceptation: So the Father and the Son are only the holy Author in the ſtrict Acceptation; and therefore the Apoſtle (repreſenting the Author of our Religion) taketh no Notice of the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. 8. 6. To us there is but one God the Father, of whom are all things; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt by whom are all things. As the Holy Spirit is of the Party of the Government, and muſt be reckon'd with the Government, yet is not the Government in ſtrict Acceptation, but the Agent thereof: So the Holy Spirit is of the Author-party and muſt be reckon'd with the Author, yet is not the Author in ſtrict Acceptation, but his divine Agent. And to repreſent him otherwiſe, is a miſrepreſentation of the Chriſtian Theology of very bad Conſequence in the Devotional part of Religion.

Secondly, In proving this Branch of Scholaſtick Theology the ancient Scholaſtick Divines ſtrangely miſ-apply the Scripture, miſtake the Senſe of it, and their Premiſes are a contradiction to their Concluſion. For God is ſaid, to reveal his Arcana to us by his Spirit, to ſanctifie us by his Spirit, to ſtrengthen us by his Spirit, to renew us by the Holy Ghoſt, and to quicken our mortal Bodies by his Spirit; which Phraſeology of Scripture manifeſtly implieth, that the Operation of the Holy Spirit is not that of the Author ſtrictly and properly ſuch, but that of the Agent of the Author. Yet from ſuch Premiſes the ancient Scholaſtic Divines infer a contrary Concluſion, namely, that the Holy Spirit is the Author of thoſe Operations, Gifts, Graces and Benefits in Parity and Equality with the Father and the Son. (e) It is not to be doubted, but that all things are of him (as the Author) by whom are all things. Regeneration therefore is the work of the Holy Spirit, who is the Author of the new Man created after the Image of God. God hath this, he raiſeth the dead. For as the Father raiſeth the dead and quickneth: So the Son quickneth whom he will. But the Spirit alſo raiſeth the dead, by whom God raiſeth them. Therefore the Spirit hath whatever God hath. The Spirit ſpake in the Perſon of God, when he ſpake to S. Peter touching the Meſſengers of Cornelius, and his Speech was imperium Dei Patris, the Command of God the Father, Act. 10. 20. But from this place S. Ambroſe raiſeth this Argument, to prove the Deity of the Holy Spirit. (f) Peter being ſent by the Spirit did not tarry for the Command of God the Father. He confeſs'd, that this was the Oracle of the Spirit himſelf, and that this was his Grace, ſaying, God gave them (the Gentiles) the like Gift, as he did unto us. (g) Therefore it is the Holy Spirit, who (as the Author) cleanſed us from that Gentile filth. So becauſe God is ſaid, to ſanctifie us by his Spirit, hence S. Baſil inferreth (h) it is the Spirit that maketh Saints to be Saints, and affordeth to them that ask God of him a divine Life; which ſpeaketh him the Author of their Sanctification. The Spirit is ſuppos'd, to be the Author of his Benefits, as the Son is the Author of his Benefits. (i) For as our Lord giveth Power to them that receive him, to become the Sons of God: So the Holy Spirit πνεῦμα υἱοθεσίας ἐστὶ, is the Spirit of Adoption. Whereby this Father meaneth, that the Spirit adopteth us to be Sons.

Thirdly, In this Branch of Scholaſtic Theology the Cauſality of the Holy Spirit is miſtaken in ſeveral reſpects. For this Theology affirmeth, (k) that there is one Counſel of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghoſt touching things

(u) Hom. 17. de Bapt. p. 511.

(w) Author Prophetarum. S. Ambr. de ſp. ſanct. l. 2. c. 12.

(x) Non ſolum operator gratiæ, ſed etiam author imperatæ executionis. Ibid.

(y) Spiritalis generationis author, qua ſecundum Deum creamur. Non poteſt manere beneficium, cùm author excluditur; nec author ſine munere, nec ſine authore munus. Si author vilis, quomodo dona precioſa? Ibid. c. 9.

(z) Dubitare non poſſumus ſpiritum creatorem, quem dominicæ cognoſcimus incarnationis authorem. Ibid. c. 5.

(a) Ibid. l. 3. c. 1.

(b) Εἰσάπαν ἰσοφυὲς, ἰσουργοῦντε ϗ ἰσοεπές. S. Cyr. de Trin. Dial. 7. p. 657.

(c) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 16. S. 12.

(d) S. Cyr. ſupr. p. 659.

(e) Non eſt dubium, quia per quem omnia, ex eo omnia. Sancti igitur ſpiritus opus eſt regeneratio, & novi hujus hominis qui creatur ad imaginem Dei, author eſt ſpiritus. Habet Deus quod ſuſcitat mortuos. Sicut enim pater ſuſcitat mortuos & vivificat: Sic & filius quos vult vivificat. Suſcitat autem etiam ſpiritus per quem Deus ſuſcitat. Habet igitur quod habet Deus S. Ambr. de ſp. ſanct. l. 2. c. 10. & 9. & l. 3. c. 20.

(f) Petrus miſſus ab ſpiritu, non expectavit imperium Dei patris. Ibid. l. 2. c. 11.

(g) Spiritus ergo ſanctus eſt, qui nos ab illa gentili colluvione mundavit. Ibid.

(h) Αὐτό ἐστιν ὁ τοὺς ἁγίους ἁγίους ἐποίησε, ϗ τὴν θείαν ζωὴν παρέχει τοῖς αἰτοῦσι παρ' αὐτοῦ τὸν Θεόν. C. Eunom. l. 5. p. 135.

(i) Ibid. l. 3. p. 83.

(k) Unum conſilium Patris & Filii & Spiritus Sancti de rebus præcognitis & ſtatutis. S. Ambroſ. ſupr. l. 2. c. 2.

things fore-known and fore-determin'd. But the Scripture hath no acquaintance with ſuch Maxims as theſe, nor doth it ever inform us, that the Holy Spirit worketh all things after the Counſel of his own Will. The ordinative Cauſality, the Right and Authority of making Decrees (which are the prime Cauſes of things) the Scripture never attributeth to the Holy Spirit; and becauſe he is ſent, given, ſhed abroad, poured forth authoritatively by another Perſon, who alſo anointeth and ſealeth us with the Holy Spirit, therefore he can be no ſuch Author, no ſuch Arbiter, no ſuch αὐθέντης, Self-ſovereign as this Theology ſuppoſeth. And as the ordinative Cauſality doth not properly belong to him, which therefore cannot conſtitute him the Author: So if we conſider his effective Cauſality (in his Gifts, Graces, Benefits) it muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from that of the Author. For the Government in the ſtrict Acceptation (which is the Father and the Son) is the actual Efficient by the original effective Cauſality as the Author: The Holy Spirit is the actual Efficient by the mediate effective Cauſality of the Agent of the Author. 1 Cor. 12. 6. It is the ſame God (the Father) which worketh all in all. But this original effective Cauſality of God is by the mediate effective Cauſality of his Spirit. Ezek. 36. 27. I will put my Spirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my Statutes. 2 Cor. 1. 21, 22. Now he which eſtabliſheth us with you in Chriſt, and hath anointed us, is God. Who hath alſo ſealed us, and given the earneſt of the Spirit in our Hearts. As the Father, ſo the Son is the Author (by the original effective Cauſality) and the Cauſality of the Holy Spirit is that of an Agent (the ghoſtly virtual divine Agent) of this Author. 2 Cor. 3. 3. Ye are the Epiſtle of Chriſt written with the Spirit. Joh. 16. 14. He ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.

Fourthly, This Branch of the Scholaſtick Theology therefore involveth in it manifold contradictions to the true Idea of the Holy Spirit, and ſome very great Abſurdities. For, (1.) To be the Perſon of the Author (the Efficient by the original Cauſality) in reſpect of theſe Gifts, Graces, Benefits and Operations ad extrà, is peculiar to the Government in the ſtrict Acceptation (which is the Government in theſe Affairs) which the Holy Spirit is not, but is the Inſpiration-virtue and Agent of the Government. (2.) To be the Perſon of the Author in reſpect of theſe Gifts, Graces, Benefits and Operations ad extrà is peculiar to the imperial Proprietor and Diſpoſer of the Holy Spirit and of his Operations ad extrà, who as an imperial Head influentially communicateth the Holy Spirit to the Body and the Members thereof; for the Holy Spirit cannot be a Self-owner and Self-diſpoſer as the imperial Head of a Body; and therefore this the original Cauſality is incompetible to him. (3.) To be the Perſon of the Author in reſpect of theſe Benefits (the efficient Cauſe of them by the original Cauſality) is peculiar to him, that is unto us the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity or of Chriſtianity Imperial (the Father and the Son;) for as we owe unto him the Duty-part of Religion, ſo theſe are the Benefit-part of Religion, and are ſuch things, which belong unto him, to do unto us, as he is the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity or Chriſtianity Imperial. But the Holy Ghoſt is not, cannot be, the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity or Chriſtianity Imperial, but is characteriſtically and definitively the divine Agent and Miſſionary thereof. (4.) To be the Perſon of the Author in reſpect of theſe Gifts and Graces (the efficient Cauſe of them by original Cauſality) is peculiar to the King of the Holy Empire. For the original Cauſality of them is his Goodneſs, and the Holy Spirit with its Gifts, Graces, Benefits are his Royal Bounty, Largeſſes and Donatives: But to be the King of the Holy Empire, is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. (5.) To be the Perſon of the Author in reſpect of theſe Graces (the efficient Cauſe of them by the original Cauſality) is peculiar to him, that is of Paternal Goodneſs, from which the Graces of God's Children (and their being God's Children) iſſue. Which original Cauſality is neceſſarily peculiar to the Father and the Son (the Father of his Church) for the Holy Ghoſt cannot be of the Paternal Goodneſs. (6.) If the Holy Spirit is the Author of theſe Gifts, Graces, Benefits and Operations ad extrà, the Spirit of Propheſie was the Father of the Prophets. Which was not the ſenſe of him that ſaid to the People (that were ſurpriz'd to ſee Saul among the Prophets) But who is their Father. 1. Sam. 10. 12. The Holy Spirit, if he is properly the Author of theſe Operations, is properly our Father by our Spiritual Generation, and we are properly his Sons and Children; which is an abſurd Suppoſition of the ſuperlative Degree. He is alſo, if properly the Author of theſe Operations, properly the Father of Chriſt Jeſus by his natural Generation, and Chriſt was properly the Son and Child of the Holy Ghoſt, which is an abſurdity beyond a Parallel. Yet this monſtrous Suppoſition is manifeſtly implied in the Argumentations of ſome learn'd Divines of our own, who otherwiſe follow the Scholaſtic Theology, yet thus far they recede from it; they hold that Chriſt Jeſus was the Son of God as begotten by the Spirit of the Virgin Mary. (l) And the reaſon is clear (ſaith one) becauſe that the Holy Ghoſt is God. For were he any Creature, and not God himſelf, who thus begat our Saviour of the Virgin, he muſt have been the Son of a Creature, not of God. Which Argumentation implieth, that Chriſt was the Son of the Holy Ghoſt, by whom he was begotten of the Bl. Virgin, and therefore (the Holy Ghoſt being God) was the Son of God. The ſame Author thus proveth the Deity of the Holy Spirit. (m) He by whoſe Operation Chriſt was conceiv'd in the Womb of the Virgin, was no created Perſon; for by virtue of that Conception he was called the Son of God; whereas if a Creature had been the cauſe of his Conception, he had been in that reſpect the Son of a Creature. Chriſt is ſuppos'd, to be the Son of that non-created Perſon (the Holy Ghoſt) by whoſe Operation he was conceiv'd in the Womb of the Virgin. And this is the Senſe of another Divine, who thus proveth the Deity of the Holy Spirit. (n) Our Lord as Man was conceiv'd by the Holy Ghoſt, and for that reaſon was the Son of God: The Holy Ghoſt (ſaid the Angel) ſhall come upon thee, and the Power of the Higheſt ſhall over-ſhadow thee; therefore that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God; what conſequence were there of this, if the Holy Ghoſt is not God? This is a great inſtance of extravagant deifying the Holy Ghoſt, the making the Son of God his Son. Which prodigious miſtake is a natural Fruit and Conſequence of this erroneous Idea of the Holy Spirit, that he is properly the Author of his Gifts, Graces, (l) Bp. Pearſon on the Creed Art. 2. p. 210. ed. 1.

(m) Ibid. Art. 8. p. 630.

(n) Dr. Barrow on the Creed. Ser. 34. p. 498.

Benefits and Operations ad extra. For the Proof whereof the Scholaſtick Theology hath little to ſay but the Spirit breatheth where he liſteth, and divideth to every Man as he will. Which is to be underſtood with reſpect to us.

IX. The Holy Spirit is, and muſt be ſaid, to be God and Lord with due diſtinction and limitation of Senſe; for he is God as being one of the Divine Sovereignty (the Godhead) and he is ſo far Lord, he is one of that Imperial Eſtate. But he is not Lord, as that Name ſignifieth the Honour-perſon of the Lord, nor is he God as being the Divine Sovereignty in ſtrict Acceptation. The ancient Pneumatomachi had uſually this Objection in their Mouths. (o) Πόθεν ἡμῖν ἐπεισάγεις ξένον θεὸν καὶ ἄγραφον, whence do you bring in to us a ſtrange God and unwritten (that is no where in Scripture called God or Lord) οὐδαμοῦ γέγραπται, it is no where written, that the Spirit is God. To which Objection this Anſwer is made in the Dialogues againſt the Macedonians in Athanaſius's Works (p) δῶμεν ὅτι οὐ γέγραπται, let us grant, that the Holy Spirit is not any where in Scripture called by the Name God. This Anſwer is a Conceſſion, that the Holy Ghoſt is not by expreſs Nomination in Scripture called God or Lord; which is a true Anſwer, and that which ought to be made. But the other Adverſaries of the Pneumatomachi (Ancient and Modern) diſliking this Anſwer, have in their Diſputes for the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt alledged ſeveral places of Scripture, wherein they ſuppoſe the Holy Spirit, to be called by expreſs Nomination God and Lord. But theſe their Allegations of Scripture are ſuch palpable miſapplications of it and ſo manifeſtly impertinent to their purpoſe, that ſcarce any of them are worthy to be taken into conſideration; there are indeed but two places, that can be ſaid with any ſhew of probability, to call the Holy Spirit by expreſs Nomination God or Lord. And in the one of theſe there is no difficulty; for when the Apoſtle ſaith 2 Cor. 3. 17. Now the Lord is that Spirit, it is ſufficiently plain and evident, that his intention is not to ſay, that Spirit is the Lord (Jehovah) with whom Moſes ſpake, when he took the Vail off; and is the Lord to whom the Jews ſhall turn, when the Vail covering their Minds is taken off (as they that diſpute againſt the Pneumatomachi will have his words conſtrued and underſtood;) for that Spirit (the Holy Ghoſt) is not the Imperial Eſtate of a Religion, nor the Imperial Eſtate of a Religion contrary to that of the Jews, to whom the Jews ought to turn, and to whom they will turn at that time, when the Vail is taken away. Who is it, that is the Imperial Eſtate of this Religion, but the Lord Chriſt uſually called the Lord in the New Teſtament? But the Holy Ghoſt is never ſo called in any other place of the New Teſtament, nor are we ever ſaid, to be converted or to turn to the Holy Ghoſt, but only to God and Chriſt. Therefore the Lord of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in the precedent Verſe (the ſame with the Lord in the words under conſideration) is not the Holy Ghoſt, but the Lord Chriſt. Nevertheleſs, when it ſhall turn to the Lord, the Vail ſhall be taken away. The Vail is done away in Chriſt (ſaith the Apoſtle, v. 14.) therefore it is the Lord Chriſt that he ſpeaketh of in the Verſe precedent to the words under conſideration. The Hiſtory to which the Apoſtle referreth, ſaith; when Moſes went in before the Lord, he took the Vail off. (q) Τοῦτο δὲ τύπος ἦν, this was a Type of what ſhould be in time to come, and this Type the Apoſtle thus interpreteth. When it ſhall turn to the Lord (ſo called in the New Teſtament, as Moſes went in before the Lord ſo called in the Old Teſtament) the Vail ſhall be taken away. Now the Lord is that Spirit (or is the Spirit) both as being in himſelf wholly Spiritual, Divine and Heavenly; and as being unto us that Spirit ſpoken of in the former part of the Chapter (which is the Spirit of the Goſpel-diſpenſation) the Spirit of the living God which he miniſtreth, whereby we become Spiritual, are freed from the Vail of Judaical Blindneſs and Carnality, and have liberty of Acceſs, to behold the Glory of the Lord with open Face, as Moſes went in before the Lord with the Vail taken off. For where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all with open Face, beholding as in a Glaſs the Glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame Image, from Glory to Glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. v. 17, 18. What Lord is it, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of in theſe ſubſequent words but the Lord Chriſt? And is it not abſurd, to ſuppoſe, that by the Lord and the Spirit of the Lord the Apoſtle meaneth the ſame Perſon? Therefore when he ſaith, the Lord is that Spirit (or is the Spirit) it is Chriſt (not the Holy Ghoſt) that he calleth the Lord. So Expoſitors generally interpret his Senſe, Cappellus, Druſius, Camero, Eraſmus, Menochius, Beza, Calixtus, Piſcator, Vorſtius, Hammond aud Grotius.

The other place of Scripture which deſerveth conſideration, is S. Peter's reprehenſion of Ananias, Act. 5. 3, 4. Why hath Satan filled thine Heart, to lye to the Holy Ghoſt? Thou haſt not lyed unto Men, but unto God. In this place there is an appearance of calling the Holy Ghoſt by expreſs Nomination God, and ſome difficulty there is in arriving at the genuin ſenſe of it, becauſe of the ambiguity of the Name God. Which may ſignifie the moſt high God in abſolutely the higheſt Senſe ſuch; in which Acceptation it is the Name of God the Father only: And it may ſignifie the moſt high God, not in abſolutely the higheſt Senſe ſuch, but in a lower and limited Senſe ſuch; in which Acceptation it is the Name of the Son, and may be, as aforeſaid, the Name of the Holy Ghoſt. But ſeeing S. Peter in his reprehenſion of Ananias is aggravating his Crime to the higheſt pitch, it cannot be ſuppoſed, that he meaneth, to repreſent it as only Lying to the moſt high God in a lower and limited Senſe ſuch: But his intention is, to charge him with Lying to the moſt high God in abſolutely the higheſt Senſe ſuch. So the Name God taken abſolutely uſually ſignifieth in Scripture, and in the Language of holy People. And ſo it always ſignifieth in Scripture, when it is ſo confronted and oppos'd to Men, as it is in S. Peter's reprehenſion. The fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer then Men. 1 Cor. 1. 25. Not as pleaſing Men but God, 1 Theſſ. 2. 4. Do I perſwade Men or God? Gal. 1. 10. The Apoſtle therefore in charging Ananias with Lying unto God becauſe of his Lying to the Holy Ghoſt, doth not call the Holy Ghoſt God; for by this Name God he meaneth that Perſon of God, which the Holy Ghoſt is not: But he affirmeth, that Ananias in Lying to the Holy Ghoſt did Lye to that Perſon of God; not immediately to himſelf, but immediately to that of himſelf, aud to that which is one with himſelf, his Inſpiration-Virtue and Agency (real and perſonal) which in juſt computation

---

(o) Gr. Naz. or. 37. p. 593.

(p) Dial. 1. p. 234. Com.

Exod. 34. 34.

(q) S. Chryſoſt.

putation is the ſame thing, as to lie immediately to his Perſon. The Scholaſtick Theology therefore miſtaketh in ſuppoſing, that the Holy Ghoſt is by expreſs nomination called God or Lord in Scripture; and it is much more miſtaken in its multifarious Contradictions to the Cauſe and Reaſon, why the Scriptures are altogether ſilent in it. It muſt neceſſarily ſeem ſtrange and wonderful to any Trinitarian, that throughout the Bible the Holy Ghoſt ſhould never be called by expreſs nomination God or Lord; but when the Cauſe is underſtood, the Admiration will ceaſe. The holy Writers could not expreſly call him ſo without making an operoſe diſtinction and limitation of ſenſe, which there was no occaſion of making in their time. They could not call the Holy Ghoſt God or Lord, as thoſe Names ſignifie in the proper uſual ſenſe a Divine Imperial Perſon, ſuch a Divine Imperial Perſon that is a political kind of Perſon and Potentate; for ſuch a kind of Perſon the Holy Ghoſt is not, as we have plainly demonſtrated.

X. The Scholaſtick Theology therefore is extravagant in making the Holy Ghoſt a political kind of Potentate in the Godhead; which it doth many ways and to an high pitch of extravagance. For, (1.) As this Theology attributeth to the Holy Ghoſt one and the ſame Potentacy, Majeſty, Empire, Kingdom and Domination with the Father and the Son; ſo it ſuppoſeth him, to be a political kind of Perſon, Prince and Potentate, as the Father and the Son is. It attributeth, (r) this regal Potentacy (which belongeth to the Father and the Son) to the Holy Ghoſt alſo. (s) Τὸ βασιλικὸν ἀξίωμα, the regial Dignity paſſeth from the Father through the Son upon the Spirit. (t) The Spirit that hath the power of making free, hath the Lordly Dignity. Touching the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe before cited concerning the Lord is that Spirit the Alexandrian Cyril ſaith, The Apoſtle knew no difference of the Son and the Spirit, but calleth him (u) by the Name of Lord. A Tract attributed to Athanaſius ſaith; The Apoſtle contracteth (w) three Lordſhips into one Lordſhip. The Lord is the Name of the Father and the Son: and ſeeing there is one Name of the Father and the Son, the Holy Spirit hath the ſame Name, becauſe the Holy Spirit cometh in the Name of the Son, (x) ſaith S. Ambroſe. And to theſe three this Theology attributeth in perfect Identity and Equality, (y) the Eternal Imperial Potentacy; for as the Son is the Image of the Father, ſo the Spirit is ſaid to be the Image of the Son, and hath (z) the ſelf-ſoveraign and deſpotick Authority; (a) being glorified with the Name of Lord and God, (b) and hath a Name above every Name. The Holy Ghoſt therefore in the ſtyle of the Scholaſtick Theology is the Lord the King, as much as the Father and the Son is, (c) Eadem ratione qua Pater dominus eſt, & Filius Deus eſt, ſic & ſpiritus ſanctus dominus nuncupatur. But with this Lord the King as ſuch the Scripture hath no acquaintance.

(2.) The Scripture knoweth very well the Divine Empire the Political Kingdom of God and of the Son of God; but with the Political Kingdom of the Holy Ghoſt the Scripture hath no acquaintance, it is peculiar to the Scholaſtick Theology, which thus argueth with the Pneumatomachiſts. (d) Seeing he (the Holy Spirit) hath taken us into his Kingdom by the adoption of Sacred Regeneration, do we deny unto him that which is his? He hath made us Heirs of the Supernal Generation, do we challenge the Inheritance, and refute the Author? (e) What can be more wild, than for any one to deny, that the Holy Spirit (as a political kind of Potentate) reigneth with Chriſt? In the ſame ſenſe the Holy Spirit is ſaid to be, (f) τῆς βασιλείας κοινωνός, a Conſort of the Kingdom. And as Kings commonly ſo called or Political kind of Potentates, have Officers and Miniſters of their Kingdom, and ſuch hath God and the Son of God: So the Apoſtles are in this Theology ſuppos'd to be in the ſame ſenſe, (g) Patris & Filii & Spiritus Sancti Miniſtri, the Miniſters of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt.

(3.) As the Scholaſtick Theology maketh the Holy Ghoſt King of a Political Kingdom as much as the Father and the Son; ſo it attributeth to the Holy Ghoſt a Regial Seat or Throne (wherewith the Scripture hath no acquaintance) as well as to the Father and to the Son: For by Gr. Naz. the Holy Ghoſt is intituled, (h) σύνθρονος, ὁμόθρονος, a Conſeſſor on the ſame Throne with the Father and the Son. So he is ſtiled by Theodorus Studita, (i) τὸ πνεῦμα σύνθρονον, the Spirit the Conſeſſor on the ſame Throne with the Son. Which Epithets of the Holy Spirit are of the ſame nature with that of the Paraphraſt Nonnus, who ſuppoſing the Holy Spirit to be a political kind of Perſon and Potentate, fondly calleth him Χριστοῦ σύγγονον, the Kinſman of Chriſt. In the Dialogues againſt the Macedonians in Athanaſius's Works this Queſtion is ſtarted, (k) ποῦ καθέζεται τὸ πνεῦμα; where ſitteth the Spirit? and the Anſwer is σὺν αὐτῷ τῷ Χριστῷ, with Chriſt himſelf. For if we (as S. Paul ſaith) are Conſeſſors with him, no doubt the Spirit is ſo; for it is by him, that we are Conſeſſors. A Book attributed to Athanaſius ſaith, (l) When thoſe three that were Abraham's Gueſts ſate down, the Holy Spirit ſate on the Left-hand, that place being appointed for him: for becauſe he ſaith to the Son, ſit thou on my Right-hand, thence we may underſtand, that he ſaid to his Spirit, ſit thou on my Left-hand. S. Ambroſe argueth, (m) That the Holy Spirit is in ſede Dei, in the Seat of God, becauſe he is that River of Living Water, which proceedeth out of the Throne of God and of the Lamb. But this Water that proceedeth out of the Throne, doth it ſit upon the Throne? Becauſe the Holy Spirit is the Living Water that iſſueth out of the Throne, doth this prove, that he hath conſortium regni cum Patre & Filio, the Conſortſhip of the Kingdom with the Father and the Son, as a political kind of Potentate, as this Father affirmeth? But ſo in this Theology, (n) We confeſs the Spirit, to be eſſentially in (Political) Dignity in the Seat of the true Godhead.

(4.) The Scholaſtick Theology attributeth to the Holy Ghoſt acts and things peculiar to a Political kind of Perſon and Potentate; as to be the Proprietor of the Iſraelites Inheritance, to be their Political Sovereign, and as ſuch to condemn and puniſh the Rebels. (o) God had promiſed reſt to the Iſraelites, that reſt the Spirit calleth his. God condemneth the People of the Jews, ſo that they could not come into the Land flowing with Milk and Honey: by the ſame Sentence the Spirit condemneth them, ſaying: If they ſhall enter into my reſt. To ſit in Judgment at the laſt Day and to diſtribute the Rewards and Puniſhments of it, are Peculiarities of a political kind of Potentate, and if they belong to the Holy Ghoſt, they ſpeak him, (p) Dominum Majeſtatis (as this Theology ſtileth him,) and theſe according to the Maxims of this Theology are and muſt be attributed to the Holy Spirit: For as it ſaith of the three Divine Perſons, (q) that they have unum regnum, one Kingdom, ſo it ſaith, that they exerciſe unum judicium, one Judgment. (r) If any one weigheth things accurately (ſaith S. Baſil,) he will find, that in the time of the expected appearance of the Lord from Heaven, μὴ ἀσυντελὲς τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, ὥς τινες οἴονται, ἀλλὰ συμπαρεστάναι, the Holy Ghoſt will not be idle and do nothing, as ſome ſuppoſe, but will ſtand by him even in the Day of his manifeſtation, when the bleſſed and only Potentate ſhall judge the World in Righteouſneſs. S. Baſil addeth, τῶν δικαίων ὁ στέφανος ἡ τοῦ πνεύματός ἐστι χάρις, the Crown of the Juſt at the Day of Judgment is the Beneficence of the Holy Ghoſt. If theſe words mean, that the Holy Ghoſt diſtributeth Rewards and Puniſhments at the laſt Day, they are agreeable to the ſenſe of a Tract De Sp. Sancto in S. Cyprian's Works, wherein the Holy Ghoſt is intituled Mundanæ judex & vindex perfidiæ, the Judge and Avenger of the World's Perfidiouſneſs.

(r) Hanc regalem quandam etiam ſancto ſpiritui poteſtatem. S. Ambr. de Sp. Sanct. l. 2. c. 12.

(s) Petav. de Trin. l. 3. c. 11. S. 13.

(t) Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἐλευθεροῦν δυνάμενον, δεσποτικὸν ἔχει τὸ ἀξίωμα. S. Cyr. Theſaur. p. 339.

(u) Τῷ τῆς κυριότητος ὀνόματι. Ibid. p. 339.

(w) Τρεῖς κυριότητας εἰς μίαν κυριότητα. De Com. Eſſent. p. 373. Com.

(x) Supr. l. 1. c. 14.

(y) Imperiale jus æternæ poteſtatis. Ibid. l. 2. c. 12.

(z) Αὐθεντικὴν καὶ δεσποτικὴν ἐξουσίαν. S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 3. p. 83.

(a) Τὸ τῷ κυρίου καὶ Θεοῦ δοξαζόμενον ὀνόματι. Ibid. l. 5. p. 120.

(b) S. Ambr. ſupr. l. 3. c. 19.

(c) Didym. de Sp. Sanct. p. 226.

(d) Cum ille (Spiritus Sanctus) nos in regnum ſuum per adoptionem ſacræ regenerationis aſſumpſerit, nos ei quod ſuum eſt, denegamus? Ille nos ſupernæ generationis fecit hæredes, nos hæreditatem vindicamus, refutamus authorem? S. Ambroſ. ſupr. l. 2. c. 9.

(e) Quid dementius quàm ut neget quiſquam Chriſto conregnare ſpiritum ſanctum? Ibid. l. 3. c. 21.

(f) S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 20.

(g) S. Amb. ſupr. l. 2. c. 12.

(h) Or. 26. p. 445. & Or. 12. p. 204.

(i) Petav. ſupr. l. 7. c. 18. S. 7.

(k) Dial. 1. p. 230. Com.

(l) De Com. Eſſent. p. 377. Com.

(m) Supr. l. 3. c. 21.

(n) Τοῖς τῆς ἀληθοῦς θεότητος θώκοις οὐσιωδῶς ἐμπρέπειν ὁμολογοῦμεν τὸ πνεῦμα. S. Cyr. de Trin. Dial. 7. p. 633.

(5.) The Scholaſtick Theology ſuppoſeth the Holy Ghoſt as a Political kind of Potentate, to be by his own Authority the Author of our Spiritual Goods and Benefits; and not only of our Spiritual, but alſo of our Temporal Benefits: For in a forecited Book attributed to Athanaſius, theſe words in the Pſalmiſt are accounted the words of the Holy Ghoſt as our Liberator; (s) Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me. Of our Spiritual Benefits the principal and moſt comprehenſive is the Pardon of our Sins, of which the Holy Ghoſt is ſuppos'd the Author and the Doer of it by his own Authority; for he is ſaid, (t) to pardon them as being God and of the ſame Operation with the Father and the Son. (u) Deus ex eo cognoſcitur, quia peccata condonat, hereby he is known to be God becauſe he pardoneth our Sins. (w) The Spirit as God juſtifieth Sinners. The God of the Univerſe juſtifieth Sinners, as having authority to forgive Sins, but in equal rank the Holy Spirit alſo juſtifieth Sinners. Spiritual and Eternal Life are our great and eminent Benefits, and of theſe the Holy Ghoſt is ſuppos'd to be the Author and the Doer or Donour of them by his own Authority, as this Name of his implieth, (x) ζωῆς κύριος, the Lord of Life. (y) He gave to the Church (αὐθεντικῶς, and as the Author) firſt Apoſtles, ſecondarily Prophets, thirdly Teachers, after that Miracles, then Gifts of healing, Helps, Governments, diverſities of Tongues: and ſo he is ſuppoſed to give Graces as a Divine Political Potentate and as the Author; for in ſuch ſenſe he is intituled, (z) Dominus virtutum, the Lord of the Virtues, Creator noſter ſecundum gratiæ Sacramentum, our Creator according to the Sacrament of Grace (our new Creator) the Author of our new Creation, that ſanctifieth as he juſtifieth, (a) τὸ ἐνεργοῦν τὰ πάντα ὡς θεὸς, that operateth all things as God, and is οὐσία ζῶσα ἁγιασμοῦ κυρία, a living Eſſence the Domina of Sanctification. So in this Theology the Holy Ghoſt as a Divine Political Potentate is ſaid, (b) nos adoptare in Dei filios, to adopt us into Divine Sonſhip; and it aſcribeth to the Holy Ghoſt ſuch a Government of the Church, which is peculiar to a political kind of Potentate. (c) Gubernationem Eccleſiæ ex principali quadam poteſtate, ſicut Pater & Filius eam gubernant, the Government of the Church by ſuch a certain princely kind of Potentacy as the Father and the Son govern it.

XI. The Scholaſtick Theology is extravagant in ſuppoſing, that the Holy Ghoſt is the Creator, the Vivificator, the Benefactor and providential Governour of the World, and the Preſerver of all things. For this is a principal Maxim in this Theology, (d) The Father by the word (or Logos) in the Holy Spirit doeth all things. In this ſenſe S. Baſil ſaith, (e) the Word, or Logos, and the Spirit are the two Hands of God, whereby the Heavens were made: For by the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made (which are ſaid to be the Work of his Hands) and all the Hoſt of them by the Breath of his Mouth, (which is ſuppos'd to ſignifie the Spirit.) The Spirit is co-ordinate and conjunct with the living Word, εἰς τὸ δημιουργεῖν, in order to creating; for God createth not by corporeal Hands, ἀλλ' ἐνεργείᾳ ζῶντος λόγου καὶ πνεύματος μεταδόσει ζωοποιοῦ, but by the Energy of the living Word and the communication of the vivificative Spirit, ἐκ πομπῇ καὶ μεταδόσει πνεύματος, by the emiſſion and communication of the Spirit, and the Son is ſaid to be the Donour of it, εἰς ὑπόστασιν καὶ μόρφωσιν κτίσεως, for the ſubſiſting and forming the Creation. The three Divine Perſons are ſuppos'd to be undivided in their Operation, and every Perſon to be Author of every Work: (f) The Father is the procatartick Cauſe of the things that were made, the Son the demiurgick, the Spirit the teleiotick or perfective. (g) No Gift cometh to the Creature without the Holy Spirit. (h) πᾶσα ἡ τελειότης, all the Perfection that the Creatures have is by the Spirit, ſaith the Alexandrian Cyril; who alſo calleth the Spirit, (i) τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ υἱοῦ τὸ παντουργικὸν, the Father's and the Son's Opificer of all things. He is therefore our Creator, (k) ſecundum carnem, creator totius, creator omnium, qui patri & filio co-operator eſt in omnibus (our Creator after the Fleſh, Creator of the Univerſe, Creator of all things, that is in all things Co-operator with the Father and the Son) how can we ſuppoſe, that the Subſtance of the Earth was without the operation of the Holy Spirit, without whoſe operation the Convexities of the Heaven do not ſubſiſt? for ſo it is written, Verbo Domini cœli firmati ſunt & ſpiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum. If the Holy Ghoſt is the Creator, Vivificator and Conſervator of all things, he is neceſſarily their providential Governour; for Conſervation is a Branch of Governing Providence. Beſides, the three Divine Perſons are ſuppos'd to operate by the ſame individual Action, and the doing of one is the doing of every one, whence the Holy Spirit, (l) ἐνεργεῖ ὅσα θεός, operateth whatſoever God operateth, (m) whether it be ἡ ἡμετέρα πρόνοια,

---

(o) Requiem Judæis promiſerat Deus, eam requiem ſpiritus ſuam dicit. condemnat Deus populum Judæorum, ut in terram fluentem lac & mel pervenire non poſſet: eadem ſententia condemnat & ſpiritus dicens: Si introibunt in requiem meam. S. Ambr. ſupr. l. 3. c. 9.

(p) Ibid. l. 3. c. ult.

(q) Ibid. l. 2. c. 2.

(r) S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 16.

(s) De com. Eſſent. p. 378. Com.

(t) S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p 113.

(u) S. Amb. ſupr. l. 3. c. 19.

(w) Ὡς θεὸς δικαιοῖ τὸ πνεῦμα τοὺς ἡμαρτηκότας. δικαιοῖ τοὺς ἁμαρτάνοντας ὁ τῶν ὅλων θεὸς, ἅτε δὴ καὶ ἔχων ἐξουσίαν ἀφιέναι ἁμαρτίας, ἀλλ' ἐν ἴσῃ τάξει δικαιοῖ καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον. S. Cyr. de Trin. Dial. 7. p. 647, 667.

(x) S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 13.

(y) Ibid. c. 16.

(z) S. Ambroſ. ſupr. l. 3. c 23. l. 2. c. 8, 9.

(a) S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 131. de Sp. Sanct. c. 18.

(b) Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 10. p. 638.

(c) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 1. S. 24.

(d) Ὁ πατὴρ διὰ τοῦ λόγου ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ τὰ πάντα ποιεῖ. Athanaſ. Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 366. Com.

(e) C. Eunom. l. 5. p. 110, 118, 119, 122, 123.

(f) Idem de Sp. Sanct. c. 16.

(g) Ibid. c. 24.

(h) S. Cyr. Theſaur. p. 344.

(i) De Trin. Dial. 6. p. 619.

(k) S. Amb. ſupr. l. 2. c. 8. & c. 5. & l. 3. c. 19.

(l) Gr. Naz. or. 37. p. 610.

(m) Gr. Nyſſen. ad Ablab. p. 454.

πρόνοια, the Providence of us, or whether it be ἡ τῶ παντὸς οἰκονομία, the Adminiſtration of the Univerſe, the Operation of three is but one; for as their Eſſence, Potentacy, Domination, ſo their Operation and Efficiency is one and the ſame. The Holy Ghoſt therefore is ſuppos'd, to be the great Benefactor of the World; for ſuch is the Creator and Providential Governour of it, and ſo a Tract de Sp. Sancto in S. Cyprian's Works repreſenteth him. (n) This Holy Spirit the Soul of all things living, infuſeth of his Bounty ſo abundantly into all things, that all Rationals and Irrationals have their Being of him according to their kind, and their Agency agreeable to their Nature in their order: not that he is a ſubſtantial Soul to every one, but that remaining ſingularly in himſelf, he is a magnificent diſtributor of his fulneſs, beſtoweth and divideth his Efficiencies to every one, and as the Sun heating all things ſubject, he nouriſheth all things, and without any diminution of himſelf of his inexhauſted abundance he beſtoweth and imparteth what is ſufficient to all. Much of vain and ſinful Extravagance is without a Comment viſible in this Mundane Creatorſhip and other Scholaſtick Elogies of the Holy Spirit; and more of it will appear from theſe following Remarks concerning it.

(1.) This Mundane Creatorſhip and theſe other Scholaſtick Elogies of the Holy Spirit are wholly groundleſs and unſcriptural, there is not a Syllable of them in the Bible (which could not be wholly ſilent concerning them, if they were true Elogies of a Divine Perſon) but all the Proofs of them from Scripture are ſo many impertinent Allegations unbecoming the Character of thoſe that alledge them: For we have prov'd, ſaith S. Ambroſe, (o) that the Spirit is Creator, becauſe it is written, Spiritus divinus qui fecit me. The Spirit hath the Divinity, becauſe it is written, Spiritus divinus qui eſt in naribus meis. The Spirit of God which is in my Noſtrils is my Breath, and the Spirit of God which is ſaid to have made me, is his Breath (his Word of Command, which is repreſented as a Vocal Word) and both theſe are hugely remote from the Holy Ghoſt in the Chriſtian Religion. But as Athanaſius obſerveth of the Pneumatomachiſts, that (p) ἀκούοντες πνεῦμα, hearing Spirit ſpoken of in Scripture, which is a Creature, they preſently imagin'd, that the Holy Spirit was ſaid to be a Creature: So whenſoever the Scripture ſpeaketh of a Spirit of God, the Scholaſtick Theology imagineth, that it ſpeaketh of the Holy Spirit: Whence a Divine of our own following the common track (not agreeably to his Learning and Piety) thus proveth the Deity of the Holy Spirit. (q) Moſt Divine Operations are aſcrib'd to the Holy Ghoſt: Such are, to create things and to make the World; for it was the Spirit which reſting upon the unſhapen Maſs did hatch the World: By his Spirit (ſaith Job) he hath garniſh'd the Heavens; and by the word of the Lord (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt of them by the Breath of his Mouth (or by his Spirit.) To conſerve things: Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are created, and thou reneweſt the Face of the Earth, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking about the continu'd production or conſervation of things; particularly, to produce Man both at firſt and continually: for the Soul of the Protoplaſt was deriv'd from the Spirit of God; and good Elihu profeſſeth of himſelf: The Spirit of God hath made me, and the Breath of the Almighty hath given me Life. —— In fine, there is no work either of Nature, or of Providence, or of Grace, ſo ſublime, or ſo difficult, which is not aſcrib'd to the Efficacy of the Holy Spirit; the which doth ſhew his Sovereign Authority, and his Almighty Power. His Sovereign Authority and Almighty Power muſt be acknowledg'd, if it be underſtood relatively and with due limitation of ſenſe; but not in the ſenſe of the Scholaſtick Theology, which is ſo blind, that it affirmeth, (r) Spiritus ſanctus, creator ac mundi opifex paſſim in Scripturis appellatur. In Scripture the Holy Spirit is every where called Creator and Maker of the World.

(2.) This Mundane Creatorſhip and theſe other Scholaſtick Elogies of the Holy Ghoſt are agreeable to the perverſe Genius of the Scholaſtick Theology, which wretchedly confoundeth (doth not duely diſtinguiſh) the things of the Old and New Teſtament, and thoſe things which in the New Teſtament are ſpoken of the New Creation (the things of the Chriſtian Religion) it perverteth to the old Mundane Creation. So the Pſalmiſts words (Thou ſendeſt forth thy Spirit, they are created and thou reneweſt the Face of the Earth) are in this Theology interpreted to mean, (s) the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt and the production of worldly things thereby; whereas the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt is purely for the production of Supernatural Gifts, Graces and Benefits that are Spiritual Benedictions. But it is not ſtrange, that this Theology which confoundeth things Supernatural and Natural, the Holy Ghoſt with the Breath of our Noſtrils, ſhould confound Secular and Spiritual Benedictions, the things of the Old and of the New Teſtament. In the Old Teſtament the Pſalmiſt ſaith unto God, the Heavens are the work of thine Hands: but becauſe this Theology ſuppoſeth, (t) that the Heavens were created by the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, therefore thoſe words are interpreted, to ſignifie, that the Son and the Holy Ghoſt are the two Hands of God; and Athanaſius ſaith, that the Son or Logos is called by David Manus and Dextra, and that theſe words of the Pſalmiſt are meant of him, Why withdraweſt thou thy Hand, even thy Right-hand? pluck it out of thy Boſom. In the New Teſtament the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 8. 6. To us there is but one God the Father, of whom are all things; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things. And the all things which he ſpeaketh of are only the All things of the New Creation (or of the Chriſtian Diſpenſation of things;) for theſe only are by one Lord Jeſus Chriſt as Mediator; theſe only are the All things of us the Chriſtian Religioniſts as ſuch; and theſe only are the Apoſtle's All things, 2 Cor. 5. 18. All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt. But the Scholaſtick Theology perverteth this illuſtrious Text to the old Mundane Creation, (u) ſuppoſing that all things in that Creation were by one Lord Jeſus Chriſt (as if he was then the Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Mediator,) and thence it proceedeth to form its Maxim in this manner, (w) τί ἐστι Θεός; ἡ πάντων ἀρχή· What is God? the beginning of all things according to the Apoſtle's ſaying, One God of whom are all things: for the Logos is from him γεννητῶς, generatively, and the Spirit ἐκπορευτῶς, proceſſionally, then the whole Creation is by the Logos in the Spirit δημιουργικῶς, demiurgically.

(3.) This

(n) His ſpiritus ſanctus omnium viventium anima, ita largitate ſua ſe omnibus abundanter infundit, ut habeant omnia rationabilia & irrationabilia ſecundum genus ſuum ex eo quod ſunt, & quod in ſuo ordine ſuæ naturæ competentia agunt: non quod ipſe ſit ſubſtantialis anima ſingulis, ſed in ſe ſingulariter manens, de plenitudine ſua diſtributor magnificus proprias efficientias ſingulis dividit & largitur; & quaſi ſol omnia calefaciens ſubjecta, omnia nutrit, & abſque ulla ſui diminutione integritatem ſuam de inexhauſta abundantia, quod ſatis eſt & ſufficit omnibus, commodat & impartit.

(o) S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 3. c. 19.

(p) Ep. ad Serap. T. 1. p. 328. com.

(q) Dr. Barrow on the Creed, Ser. 34. p. 300.

(r) Genet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 10. p. 626.

(s) Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 2. S. 2.

(t) Idem T. 1. l. 5. c. 8. S. 8.

(u) Idem de Trin. l. 3. c. 11. S. 7. S. Athanaſ. de Syn. Nic. decr. p. 405. com.

(w) Idem de com. Eſſent. p. 390.

(3.) This Mundane Creatorſhip and theſe other Scholaſtick Elogies of the Holy Ghoſt are repugnant both to his Idea and the Idea of God (the Father) who as being Maker of Heaven and Earth, the Univerſal Creator and Benefactor, the Vivificator, Preſerver and Providential Governour of all things is as ſuch in a large ſenſe a Father in nine ſeveral reſpects. For he is a Father of the Univerſe (πατὴρ τῶν ὅλων) a Father of all living Creatures, a Father in reſpect of Mankind, a Father in reſpect of the Souls of Men, a Father in reſpect of the Poor and Afflicted, Pſal. 68. 5. a Father in reſpect of Kings, Potentates and High Ones above Men, Pſal. 82. 6. and 89. 6. a Father in reſpect of the Holy Angels, Job 1. 6. and 38. 7. a Father in reſpect of Holy Men, the Divine Family which he hath founded, Eph. 3. 14, 15. and a Father in reſpect of Chriſt as Man, Luk. 1. 35. If therefore the Holy Ghoſt is the Univerſal Creator and Benefactor, the Vivificator, Preſerver and Providential Governour of all things, he is as ſuch in nine ſeveral reſpects God the Father; which is a grand repugnance, both to the Idea of the Holy Ghoſt, and to his Idea whoſe propriety it is, to be God the Father as the maker of Heaven and Earth. Moreover, this Mundane Creatorſhip and theſe Scholaſtick Elogies of the Holy Ghoſt are repugnant to the eminent Branches of the Idea of the Holy Ghoſt; and if they are certainly true, this Branch of the Scholaſtick Theology is neceſſarily falſe. For although the Holy Spirit was with God at the time of his Creation, when the original Kingdom of God was made, and the Holy Souls that then were made had their Holineſs by the operation of the Holy Spirit, (x) ἁγιασμὸς γὰρ οὐκ ἄνευ πνεύματος, for Sanctification is not without the Spirit; yet the Holy Spirit did not thereby become the King of Saints or the Imperial Head of the Church, and therefore was not the Creator of Saints, as they are ſuch, nor is he our new Creator. Nor can he be the Creator and Providential Governour of the World, unleſs he is the Author of all the Benefits of Creation and of all the Bleſſings of Providence, and is the great Houſekeeper of the World, (who giveth Food to all Fleſh and whoſe Alms-houſe the World is) nor unleſs he is the Lord, the Lord of all Creatures (as a political kind of Potentate,) the Lord of Sabbaoth, the great Proprietor of the World and of the Church, παμβασιλεύς, reigning as the King of Kings, whoſe is the Monarchick Empire and Kingdom over all, who is the Sovereign Superintendent, Superviſor and Diſpoſer of all, having Heaven for his Throne and the Earth for his Footſtool. Nor can the Holy Ghoſt be the Creator and Providential Governour of the World, unleſs he is the Imperial Eſtate of Religion, and by the Light of Nature ſuch, the Lawgiver of the World, who by his Laws eſtabliſh'd by agreeable Rewards and Puniſhments obligeth and inſtituteth all his capable Creatures to Gratitude, Subjection and Service, and to do all the Duties of Religion towards him, having and exerciſing the power of pardoning and condemning, of ſaving and deſtroying, as being God the Judge of all. All which inſeparable and eſſential Attributes of the Creator of the World are incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt.

(4.) This Mundane Creatorſhip and theſe other Scholaſtick Elogies of the Holy Ghoſt are repugnant both to the Pagan and Chriſtian Theology, both to Natural and Supernatural Religion and Diſpenſations of things, as will appear by debating with the Scholaſtick Theology this Queſtion; Whether God as he is Parental Nature (or Providence) that pervadeth the World and is the true Zeus or Vivificator of the World (that vegetateth and animateth it) muſt be apprehended, conſider'd and notic'd as the Holy Ghoſt or as the Father only? He muſt be ſuppos'd, to be the Father only, and cannot be conſider'd otherwiſe without a repugnance to the Senſe of the Pagan Theology, which ordinarily ſtileth its Coſmical Zeus Ζεῦ πάτερ, Jupiter, which is Jovis Pater or Juvans Pater, Dieſpiter or Διὶ πάτερ, φίλος πατὴρ, Friend-Father, πατὴρ τοῦδε τοῦ παντὸς, the Father of this Univerſe (the great Father of Nature) πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θεῶν τε, Divumque hominumque Pater rex. The Senſe of the Chriſtian Theology may be underſtood from S. Paul's Comment upon the Popular Pagans Coſmical Zeus, Act. 17. 25, 28. wherein he acknowledgeth, that the true Zeus (Vivificator of the World) is the true God; that Mankind are his Off-ſpring as being his Vital Production and in many reſpects his reſembling Off-ſpring; that the Pagans in conſidering God as an Inviſible One that pervadeth the World and is a Mundane Parental Providence, were ſo far right in their Theology; and that this Providence (as being Parental) is a loving helpful Benefactor to Mankind. And becauſe he affirmeth, that this Mundane Parental Providence is the Father of Mankind, therefore he conſidereth this Creator and Vivificator of the World, not as the Holy Ghoſt, but as the Father only. This Animal-world is from God as he is Mundane Parental Providence: but the Holy Spirit cannot be underſtood, to be in God as he is ſuch, but only as he is the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial: nor is the Life that we derive from the Holy Spirit (according to the Chriſtian Theology) Life Natural but Supernatural only. The Goods that belong to Mundane Nature and Common Providence are of Natural Diſpenſation: but the Goods that we have from the Holy Spirit, are only thoſe that are of ſupernatural Diſpenſation (the Goods of the Kingdom of God;) therefore it ought not to be ſuppos'd, that he is Vivificator and Benefactor to the World as to the Goods of Mundane Nature and Common Providence. Nor doth any Chriſtian give thanks to the Holy Spirit as his Benefactor for theſe common Goods (nor perhaps for any Goods:) nor are the Operations of common Providence, and the Creation of the Earth with its Animal-inhabitants of any affinity with this Divine Spirit: nor is the Scholaſtick Theology well conſiſtent with it ſelf in attributing Creation and Providence to the Holy Spirit. For it affirmeth, (y) that the three Divine Perſons produce the Creatures, as they are but one in Eſſence and the abſolute Attributes, not as they are manifold in Relation and differ in Property, whence they are but one ſingular Principle of created Beings, yet it aſſigneth them as diſtinct Operations in the production of the Creatures as in the Chriſtian Religion; and that Operation in the Creation which one allotteth to the Holy Ghoſt, another allotteth to the Son. One ſaith, the Operation of the Holy Spirit is Teleiotick (or Perfective) which in Rational Beings is Sanctification, (z) in Beings not Rational it is the adorning them; but this Methodius allotteth to the Son: We affirm (ſaith he) that there are two effective Powers: one that by his meer Will produceth what he will make, and this is the Father: the other that adorneth and variegateth the things

(x) S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 16.

(y) Petav. de Trin. l. 7. c. 10. S. 11.

(z) Gonet. Clyp. T. 3. Diſp. 10. p. 627.

things that are made. (a) The Son is the Omnipotent and mighty hand of the Father, whereby he adorneth the matter, after he hath produc'd it out of nothing. Such Speculations of this Theology touching the Creation are not to be commended for their Wiſdom and Sanctity.

XII. This mundane Creatorſhip and theſe other Scholaſtic Elogies of the Holy Ghoſt are an Inſtance of an Irreligious extravagance uſual in the Scholaſtic Theology, which is to make Attributions to the divine Perſons, that are incongruous, alien and heterogeneous, ſo depraving the Chriſtian Theology and ſpoiling the Divinity of it. For by the untoward Notions of this Theology the Divine Spirit is made, to look like Parental Nature, or the Spirit of Nature a Principle of mundane Phyſiology. (b) Adam was formed by the Hand of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghoſt. Lactantius ſaith of Cod's creating Man (c) having formed his Body he breath'd into him a Soul from the vital Fountain of his Spirit, which is ever flowing. Which is an high ſtrain of Platoniſm, a making the Holy Spirit the Fountain of Souls, as the Platoniſts make the Soul of the World, which alſo they denominate the third Opificer. Theſe and other Philoſophers are in the Tract de ſp. ſancto in S. Cyprian's Works commended for inveſtigating the Soul of the World, but their ſhort ſightedneſs is pitied, becauſe they proceeded no further, and did not believe, (d) That the Spirit is the Lord and Creator and Vivificator and Nouriſher of all that are under him. Of this Holy Spirit this Theology ſaith (e) In him we Live and Move and have our Being. The Divine Spirit ſuſtaineth all things in Being. (f) God gave the Spirit to the Creation (as a Soul unto Man) εἰς ζωογόνησιν, for Zoogony, or that it might produce living Creatures. (g) For the Spirit of God is Vivificative to all living things, being it ſelf according to its Nature Life from the Life of the Father. (h) The Spirit vivificateth all things that live and proceedeth from the living Father by the Son. For that is true, which our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſaith, it is the Spirit that quickneth. Thus the Holy Scriptures of the New Teſtament that ſpeak of the Chriſtian and Saint of God-kind of things are diſtorted to the things of Nature and common Philoſophy; for the Holy Spirit is ſuppos'd, to be the procreative and conſervative cauſe of the Life of all things, and in this ſenſe it is ſtiled (i) ζωὴ, Life, ζῶσα δύναμις, a living Power. (k) Τὸ ζωοποιοῦν ἅγιον πνεῦμα, ἐν ᾧ τὰ πάντα ζωοποιεῖται, the vivificative Holy Sprit by whom all living things have Life. (l) The vivificating Holy Spirit proceedeth indeed from the Father, but the Son affordeth it to the Creation. At this rate this Scholaſtic Theology perverteth the Doctrine of the Trinity and the things of the New Teſtament (which are the Saint of God-kind of things) into things of another Nature, Kind and Quality. It affirmeth, that the Holy Spirit is (m) the Maker or Doer of all things, and that by him they are created, vegetated, animated, and every thing that exiſteth is made. (n) That although he is barren ad intrà (not by any Vice of his Nature, but by an ineffable Secret) yet he is of greateſt Fecundity ad extrà, imò & totius Fœcunditatis Author & Parens, yea the Author and Parent of all Fecundity. (o) For by his infinite Virtue and Power he doth not only moderate and govern all things, but alſo by his vivific Breath he cheriſheth, conſerveth, fecundeth, moveth and vivificateth them. And if this Philoſophic-paganizing the Holy Spirit is agreeable to his Nature, one of the moſt proper Hymns to the Holy Ghoſt is that of Virgil,

> Hinc hominum pecudumque genus vitæque volantum
> Et quæ marmoreo fert monſtra ſub æquore pontus.

If the Holy Ghoſt is the Creator, Vivificator and Providential Governour of the World, he may reaſonably be thought to have rain'd down the Iſraelites Manna, and to have written their Law in two Tables of Stone (as that forementio'd Tract in S. Cyprian's Works affirmeth:) But then he muſt be ſuppos'd to write the Law of Nature in the Hearts of all Men, our natural Reaſon and Conſcience (with all the reſt of our Faculties) as alſo Rain from Heaven and fruitful Seaſons, muſt be counted the Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt. This Chriſtianity will not allow; nor will it allow us to ſuppoſe, that the Ethical and Political Virtues of the Heathen (which S. Auſtin often acknowledgeth, to be the Gifts of God) the ſingular Endowments of Princes (who are thought by Plato, to have a divine touch) the good Life of unregenerate Mankind (Aliens from the Spirit of Holineſs) are of his Vitality or Vivification. Much leſs may we ſay, that Mankind Live and Move and have their Being in him, which may in ſome ſenſe be ſaid of holy Mankind. As Euſebius calleth Melito (p) τὸν ἐν ἁγίῳ πνεύματι πάντα πολιτευσάμενον, he whoſe Converſation was in all things in the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is manifeſtly peculiar to the Church and People of God, and is a Saint of God-kind of thing (not an univerſal Principle of natural Life) whence Origen, who Philoſophic-paganizeth both the Father and the Son, yet Chriſtianizeth in his Idea of the Holy Spirit. (q) Operatio virtutis Dei patris & filii indiſcretè ſuper omnem pertendit creaturam: Spiritus ſancti verò participationem à ſanctis tantummodo haberi invenimus. The Operation of the Father (in giving Exiſtence) extendeth to every Creature, and the Operation of the Son (in giving Reaſon) extendeth to every rational Creature: But they only that are holy participate of the Holy Spirit.

XIII. In the Actions about Chriſt which the Scholaſtick Theology attributeth to the Holy Ghoſt it is extravagant; for upon account of theſe Actions it attributeth to the Holy Ghoſt ſuch a Superiority above Chriſt, which is not agreeable to Chriſtianity and the Truth. (r) The Holy Ghoſt, ſaith this Theology, is Superiour to Chriſt as Man; from whence it inferreth the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt; becauſe no Creature is Superiour to Chriſt as Man, none but God only; therefore the Holy Ghoſt is God.

(a) Ἔστι δὲ ὁ υἱὸς, ἡ παντοδύναμις καὶ κραταιὰ χεὶρ τοῦ πατρὸς ἐν ᾗ μετὰ τὸ ποιῆσαι τὴν ὕλην ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων κατακοσμεῖ. Phot. cod. 234. Col. 938.

(b) Epiphan. Her. 46. n. 3.

(c) Ficto corpore ſpiravit ei animam de vitali fonte ſpiritus ſui, qui eſt perennis. Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 24.

(d) Spiritum & Dominum & Creatorem & Vivificatorem & Nutritorem omnium quæ ſub ipſo ſunt.

(e) S. Cyr. c. Jul. p. 34. S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 128.

(f) Theoph. ad Autol. l. 2. p. 92.

(g) Ζωογονεῖ γὰρ τὰ πάντα τὸ τοῦ θεοῦ πνεῦμα, ζωὴ καὶ αὐτὸ κατὰ φύσιν ὑπάρχον ἐκ ζωῆς τοῦ πατρός. S. Cyr. ſupr. l. 2. p. 55.

(h) Ζωοποιεῖ δὲ τὸ πνεῦμα, καὶ πρόεισιν ἐκ ζῶντος πατρὸς δι' υἱοῦ· ἀληθεύει γὰρ λέγων ὁ κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστι τὸ ζωοποιοῦν. S. Cyr. ſupr. l. 1. p. 34.

(i) S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 118.

(k) S. Cyr. ſupr. l. 4. p. 147.

(l) Πρόεισι μὲν ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς τὸ ζωοποιοῦν ἅγιον πνεῦμα χορηγεῖται δὲ τῇ κτίσει δι' υἱοῦ. Ibid.

(m) Effector omnium rerum, per eamque creari, vegetari, animari, effici denique quicquid uſpiam exiſtit. Petav. T. 1. l. 5. c. 9. S. 1.

(n) Gonet. Clyp. T. 5. Diſp. 10. p. 627.

(o) Ibid. p. 633.

(p) Eccl. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 24.

(q) Peri archon. l. 1. c. 3.

(r) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 1. S. 24.

(s) Chriſt even as a Man is elevated in Dignity and Eminence above all Creatures (above every Name, far above all Principality, Authority and Power, as the Apoſtle teacheth us) yet is he in that reſpect Inferiour and giveth place to the Holy Spirit. For as ſuch he did receive his Nature from the Holy Spirit; that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt, ſaith the Evangeliſt; and more Honour than the Houſe hath he that made it, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Hebrews. (t) The ſupernatural Body of Chriſt is of the Holy Ghoſt, but cannot be of him by Generation, for that which is born of the Fleſh is Fleſh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit: Therefore it is of him ὡς κτίσμα ἀυτȣ̃, as his Creature. (u) Si ex operatione & poteſtate ejus virgo concepit, quis neget ſpiritum creatorem? If the Virgin conceiv'd by his Operation and Power, who can deny, that the Spirit is (in that reſpect) his Creator? (w) Spiritus ſanctus qui creavit dominicæ incarnationis ſacramentum, quod ſuper omnes eſt creaturas, quomodo eſſe poteſt creatura? The Holy Ghoſt who created the Myſtery of our Lord's Incarnation, which is above all Creatures, how can he be a Creature?

(x) Chriſt was ſent by the Holy Spirit; the Lord God (ſaid the Prophet of him) and his Spirit hath Sent me. But the Apoſtle (ſaith he of himſelf, Joh. 13. 16.) is not greater than he that ſent him; the ſent is not greater, that is (by a λιτότης or μείωσις, the figure of Diminution) he is inferiour to the Sender. (y) As Chriſt ſent the Spirit, ſo the Spirit ſent the Son of God. For the Son of God ſaith: The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me: He hath ſent me to preach the Goſpel to the Poor. The Lord and his Spirit hath ſent me. Therefore both the Father and the Spirit ſent the Son. I am bold, to ſay, that he who was ſent by the Spirit, was given by the Spirit (gratia Trinitatis, by the Grace of the Trinity.)

(*) Chriſt was conſecrated and inaugurated into his Offices by the Holy Spirit: The Spirit of the Lord (foretold Eſaias of Chriſt, as the Evangeliſts interpret) is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me: But without Controverſie the leſſer is bleſſed by the greater, ſaith the Apoſtle. Chriſt was by the Holy Ghoſt endowed with excellent Gifts abundantly and beyond meaſure; but it is more bleſſed to give than to receive is an Aphoriſm out of our Saviour's own Mouth. In fine our Lord did by Virtue of the Holy Spirit perform Miracles; by the eternal Spirit he offered himſelf to God; by the Spirit he was raiſed from the dead; which things are manifeſt Arguments, that the Holy Spirit doth excel Chriſt as Man. (z) He ſaid well, the Spirit of the Lord is above me, becauſe he ſpake as the Son of Man. For as the Son of Man he was both anointed and ſent to preach the Goſpel.

(a) The Father deliver'd the Son to Death, and the Son deliver'd himſelf. But as the Father deliver'd the Son, and the Son deliver'd himſelf, ſo know, that the Spirit alſo deliver'd him to death. For it is written: Then was Jeſus led by the Spirit into the Wilderneſs, to be tempted by the Devil. Therefore the Spirit out of Love to us deliver'd to Death the Son of God. (b) The Holy Spirit anointeth and ſendeth Chriſt, as appeareth from what he ſaith of himſelf from the Prophecy of Iſaiah, Chriſt is alſo predeſtinated by the Holy Spirit.

To make a Judgment of theſe Scholaſtick Attributions to the Holy Ghoſt, we muſt diſtinguiſh his meer Precellency to Chriſt conſider'd as meer Man from the Acts of his Superiority to Chriſt ſo conſider'd. For there is not any ſuch thing as the Acts of his Superiority to Chriſt as Man, nor would the Scholaſtic Theology entertain ſuch a conceit, if it did not ſuppoſe, that the Holy Ghoſt is a Political kind of Perſon and Potentate, and that his Gifts, Graces, Benefits, Operations ad extrà are his Doings as properly the Author of them. But as this Idea of the Holy Ghoſt is a great miſtake, ſo theſe Attributions, that the Holy Ghoſt bleſſed Chriſt, as the leſſer Perſon is bleſt by the greater; that Chriſt had his Endowments from him as a Beneficiary from a Benefactor; that out of love to us he deliver'd Chriſt to Death; and that Chriſt was predeſtinated by the Holy Ghoſt; are manifeſtly very vain and falſe Imaginations. Of the ſame Nature is this other Attribution, that Chriſt was the Miſſionary of the Holy Ghoſt, which is founded upon a Text of the Prophet Iſaiah, that we have before rightly expounded. Iſa. 48. 16. And it is obſervable, that Origen hath cited this Text (upon which this extravagant Attribution is founded) and although he doth not make an exactly right Interpretation of it, yet he rejecteth the Scholaſtic Theology's Interpretation of it as falſe and erroneous. (c) Καὶ νῦν κύριος ἀπέστειλέ με καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα ἀυτȣ̃, and now the Lord hath ſent me and his Spirit. The ſenſe of the words is doubtful (ſaith Origen) whether the Father and the Holy Spirit ſent Jeſus, or whether the Father ſent both Chriſt and the Holy Spirit: Τὸ δεύτερόν ἐστιν ἀληθές, the latter of theſe is true. As for the Firſt of theſe extravagant Attributions to the Holy Ghoſt, that Chriſt in ſome reſpect had his Nature from him as a Creature from his Creator, it is the moſt extravagant of all the reſt. For if the Holy Ghoſt was the Creator of Chriſt as Man, he was the Father of Chriſt as Man (d) which is ſo abſurd (ſaith S. Auſtin) that no faithful Ears are able to endure it. But this abſurd Suppoſition of the Scholaſtic Theology touching the Holy Ghoſt's Creatorſhip of Chriſt's Body may be clearly confuted from the Scholaſtick Theology it ſelf. For this Theology acknowledgeth (e) ſementivam ſpiritus efficaciam, that the Energy and Operation of the Holy Ghoſt in our Saviour's Conception was as that of Seed. As in human Generation a Father by his Seed generateth an human vital Body in the Womb of the Mother: So God by the Holy Ghoſt did generate the ſupernatural Body of our Saviour in the Womb of the Bl. Virgin. In which Generation there is no contrariety to our Saviour's Sayings touching Regeneration (which the aforecited Fathers object;) for it is manifeſt, that thoſe Sayings of our Saviour muſt have this due limitation of Senſe. Not that which is born of the Spirit, but that which is born of the Fleſh, is Fleſh, unleſs that which is born of the Spirit be withall born of the Fleſh. That which is born of the Spirit is Spirit, not Fleſh, unleſs it be ſo born of the Spirit, as withall to be born of the Fleſh. Theſe Sayings of our Saviour therefore do not prove, that his ſupernatural Body was produc'd by Creation, not by

(s) Dr. Barrow on the Creed Ser. 34. p. 501.

(t) S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 111.

(u) S. Ambroſ. de ſp. ſanct. l. 2. c. 5.

(w) Ibid. c. 8.

(x) Dr. Barrow ſupr.

(y) Sicut Chriſtus ſpiritum miſit, ita & filium Dei ſpiritus miſit. Dicit enim filius Dei: Spiritus Domini ſuper me, propter quod unxit me. Evangelizare pauperibus miſit me. Miſit me Dominus & ſpiritus ejus. Ergo & pater filium miſit & ſpiritus.——— Datus eſt autem audeo dicere & ab ſpiritu, qui miſſus ab ſpiritu eſt. S. Ambroſ. ſupr. l. 3. c. 1, 2.

(*) Dr. Barrow ſupr.

(z) Benè ſuper me dixit, quia quaſi filius hominis loquebatur. Quaſi filius enim hominis & unctus & miſſus eſt ad Evangelium prædicandum. S. Ambr. ſupr. l. 3. c. 1.

(a) Pater tradidit filium, & filius ipſe ſe tradidit. Sed ſicut pater tradidit filium, & filius ipſe ſe tradidit, accipe quia & ſpiritus eum tradidit. Scriptum eſt enim: Tunc Jeſus ductus eſt in deſertum ab ſpiritu, ut tentaretur à diabolo. Ergo & ſpiritus diligens tradidit Dei filium S. Ambr. ſupr. l. 1. c. 12.

(b) Ungit quoque Chriſtum ſpiritus ſanctus, ac mittit, ut ex Iſaiæ oraculo de ſe ipſe confirmat. Prædeſtinatur item Chriſtus per ſpiritum ſanctum. Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 16. S. 13.

(c) C. Celſ. l. 1. p. 35.

(d) Petav. T. 4. l. 7. c. 5. S. 1, 2, 5.

(e) Ibid. S. 3.

by Generation: But an acknowledg'd ſementiva ſpiritus efficacia plainly proveth, that it was produc'd γεννητικῶς, generatively, not κτιστικῶς, creatively. There is a miſtake therefore in the Fathers thus arguing for the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt (f) Quomodo creatura dicitur, qui Domini Creator ex Maria comprobatur? How is he ſaid to be a Creature, who is prov'd to be the Creator of our Lord of Mary?

(f) S. Aug. Ser. 5. de Temp. in Natal. Dom. Ser. 2.

CHAP. IV.

1. The Rule of the Holy Ghoſt's Religious Honour and Worſhip. Concluſ. 1. That there is a due and agreeable Religious Honour and Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt. Concluſ. 2. There is great miſtake and extravagance in the Scholaſtick Theology touching the Religious Honour and Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt. Concluſ. 3. The main Body of Religious Honour and Worſhip incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. Concluſ. 4. There is no ſuch thing as doing Service to the Holy Ghoſt, or Conſecrations to his Service, or his Servants, Saints, Prieſts, his God-Service or his Religion. Concluſ. 5. Great difference and inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory, and of Aſcriptions of Glory to the Holy Ghoſt. Concluſ. 6. The preſent Church ſymbolizeth with the ancient Church in the Scholaſtick Theology's Miſtakes touching the Religious Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt.

Of the Religious Honour and Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt.

I. FROM our Idea of the Holy Ghoſt this great Rule touching his Religious Honour and Worſhip is a natural Conſectary. We ought to be Religious and to give the Religious Honour and Worſhip to the Holy Ghoſt as to the Spirit of the Lord, ſo far as is due and agreeable thereto: But not as being the Honour-perſon of the Lord (the Holy Sovereignty and Government in the ſtrict Acceptation) not ſo far as is peculiarly due and agreeable to him that is ſo. Which is to ſay in other words. We ought to be Religious and to give the Religious Honour and Worſhip to the Holy Ghoſt, ſo far as is due and agreeable to the Divine Spirit of the Imperial Eſtate of our Religion (which is God and Chriſt,) but not ſo far as is peculiarly due to the Imperial Eſtate of our Religion, the Holy Ghoſt being only the Inſpiration-virtue and Agency thereof real and perſonal. The ſenſe and truth of this Propoſition will clearly and fully appear by expanding it into ſeveral Concluſions, which are Inferences from it and are virtually contain'd in the Bowels of it.

CONCLUSION I.

There is a due and agreeable Religious Honour and Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt.

I. THIS appeareth from what Philoſophy noticeth, that every thing hath (g) ἰδίαν ἀξίαν, its proper Dignity, and accordingly muſt be eſtimated and treated. To the Holy Spirit therefore we owe our Sovereign Eſtimation and Affection, as being of Sovereign Excellency in himſelf, of Sovereign Worth and Importance unto us, the Sovereign Gift of God and Benefit of the Chriſtian Religion, the comprehenſion of all Spiritual vital Goods (the peerleſs, choice, ineſtimable Goods, without which Man is non minor miſeriarum multitudo quàm criminum, an equal abundance of Sins and Miſeries) and our Sovereign Good, that is the Knowledge, Life, Image and Enjoyment of God to us, a Kingdom of Righteouſneſs, Peace and Joy, and (h) πηγὴ ὂν τῆς ἀϊδίου ζωῆς, being alſo the Fountain of Life Eternal. Our great Intereſt therefore is, to have the Holy Spirit (his Preſence and Inhabitation, his Light and Life, his Animation and Guidance, his ghoſtly Might and Aid, his Graces and Comforts, and the high and happy Priviledges that belong to the holy ſpiritual Livers) which is of infinite indiſpenſable Neceſſity; earneſtly to deſire and pray for the Holy Spirit, to prepare our Souls (i) εἰς ὑποδοχὴν τοῦ θείου, for the Reception of ſo divine a Gueſt, not to ſlight or reſiſt his Motions, not to rebel againſt his Light, not to quench his Holy Inſpirations, not to abuſe his Gifts, not to Blaſpheme his Operations, not to defile his Temple, not to prefer the pleaſures of Sin before his Joys, not to be an annoyance to him, not to treat him contumeliouſly, not any way to provoke or diſpleaſe him, but to be infinitely thankful for all the ineſtimable Goods of Sanctity, Divinity and Bleſſedneſs, which he is, and bringeth with him, and not to loſe him at any rate. All which Religious Honour is plainly injoin'd Duty to the Holy Ghoſt.

(g) M. Ant. l. 4. S. 32.

(h) S. Baſil. c. Eunom. l. 5. p. 139.

(i) Gale not. in Jambl. p. 234.

II. The Attribute Holy in the Name of the Holy Spirit denoteth his Creature-tranſcendence, and that he is of the God-eminence and Nobilitation. His Holy Inſpiration ſignifieth the God-inſpiration (which is of that Eminence) his Holy Agency ſignifieth the God agency (which is of that eminence Creature-tranſcendent) his Name the Holy Spirit ſignifieth the God-inſpiration-virtue (which is of that eminence Creature-tranſcendent;) and if he is of that Eminency the Godhead as the Inſpiration-virtue and Agent thereof, he is neceſſarily of the God Honour and Worſhip (the Holy or Religious Honour and Worſhip) ſo far as is competible to one of his Quality and Condition an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon, the Holy Inſpiration-virtue and Agent. As God muſt be honour'd and ſo honour'd as to be Holied, becauſe he is Holy: So the Spirit of God becauſe he is Holy, muſt be honour'd, and ſo honour'd as to be Holied, ſo far as is agreeable to one of his Idea. Therefore he muſt be Holied in reverential acts of Thought and Mind, for this is agreeable to his Idea, this his Sanctity and Divinity of Perſon neceſſarily requireth; and this Religious Honour muſt not be counted nothing; for Plato as cited by Card. Beſſarion ſaith in his Epinomis, the moſt ſuitable Worſhip of God is to think honourably of him. Beſides, the Religious Honour that muſt be done to the Holy Ghoſt in reverential Acts of Mind and Thought, may be done in due devotional Expreſſions.

III. According to the Inſtitution of our Religion we Confederate with the Holy Ghoſt in Baptiſm as with a Perſon of our holy Sovereignty and Government. Our being Baptiz'd in his Name therefore is our Profeſſion of Faith touching his Exiſtence, Eminence, Sanctity and Divinity of Perſon, the verity of his Revelations and Atteſtations to our Religion, his holy Functions and Operations (in illuminating, ſanctifying, guiding, confirming, corroborating, enlivening and comforting God's People;) and thereby we profeſs and undertake an agreeable Obedience to him, and a due Subjection to his Conduct and Regency. And as by entring into the holy Covenant we take God for our God, and undertake, to make him our God (by a due Behaviour towards him:) So by confederating with th Holy Ghoſt we take him for our Holy Ghoſt in all his holy Offices and Operations (our Teacher, Leader, Sanctifier, Comforter, as is before explain'd) and engage our ſelves, to make him ſuch by a due Demeanour towards him through our whole Life. A late Critick diſcourſing of the Followers of Socrates, Plato and Ariſtotle, ſaith of them (k) jurant in nomen magiſtrorum, eorumque ſpiritui quaſi conſecrantur. They Swear into the Name of their Maſters, and are as it were conſecrated to their Spirit. So Chriſtians in their Baptiſm are ſworn into the Name of Chriſt, and are conſecrated to his Spirit. For a Dialogue againſt the Macedonians in Athanaſius's Works obſerveth (l) that the offering our Bodies as a living Sacrifice is beyond all other Sacrifice; that every Sacrifice is made to the Honour of God; that we have offer'd this Sacrifice to the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt in Baptiſm, not honouring the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt either in a different place or in a different manner. In which diſcourſe there is thus much of truth; in Baptiſm we conſecrate our Body to the Holy Ghoſt, to be his Temple and holy Habitation, which is an eminent Branch of Divine Honour, and is a doing the Religious Honour and Worſhip to the Holy Ghoſt.

IV. According to the New Teſtament the Paſtor's Benediction of his People is to be precationary to the Holy Ghoſt; for ſuch is that of the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 13. 4. The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the Love of God, and the Communion (Communication) of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you all. Amen. Which Benediction plainly demonſtrateth both the Perſonality and Deity of the Holy Ghoſt; for if he is not both a Perſon and of the Godhead, it would be a great Abſurdity, to make a Benediction (ſuch as the Apoſtle's is) precationary to the Holy Ghoſt. His Benediction alſo plainly ſheweth, what kind of Perſon in the Godhead the Holy Ghoſt is. For the Apoſtle deſireth for the Corinthians the beſt and choiceſt things, that are in the comprehenſion of Chriſtianity Imperial; wherein Chriſt being the Sovereignty of ſuch Favour and Kindneſs which is Grace (and ſaving Grace) this the Apoſtle deſireth, that they may have; and God being to us in Chriſt Love ſuperlative and tranſcendent, this the Apoſtle deſireth, that they may have; and the Communication of the Holy Ghoſt from God together with his Communication of himſelf to us being the great Priviledge and Peculiarity of our Religion, this the Apoſtle deſireth, that they may have. But why doth he not deſire for them the Favour and Love of the Holy Ghoſt as well as of God and Chriſt? Why doth he deſire for them only the Communication of the Holy Ghoſt? The Reaſon is plainly this, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is not a Political kind of Perſon or Potentate, not the Holy Sovereignty of our Religion in the ſtrict Acceptation, but is only an Agent-virtual kind of Perſon, and the communicative Agent of our Holy Sovereignty and Government. But becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is one of our Holy Sovereignty, or one of that Trinity of Perſons that conſtitute it, to every one of which Perſons the Apoſtle in his Benediction maketh diſtinctly a ſort of application; therefore the Communication of the Holy Ghoſt which he mentioneth, muſt be underſtood, to ſignifie actively the Communication of the Holy Ghoſt in his Gifts, Graces and Comforts. And as the Maledictions or Curſings which are ordinary in the Mouths of wicked Men, are not meer Wiſhes, but more than ſo, yet they are not Prayers, but are Precationary and of Affinity with Prayers (whence they are called Imprecations:) So the Apoſtle's Benediction or Bleſſing is not a meer Wiſh (ſuch as that of S. John, I wiſh that thou mayeſt Proſper) but is more than a meer Wiſh, yet is not properly and formally a Prayer, but is of ſuch affinity with a Prayer, that it muſt be called Precationary, and a Benediction Precationary to the Holy Ghoſt. So far therefore the Religious Worſhip belongeth to the Holy Ghoſt; Chriſtians muſt make Benedictions Precationary to the Holy Ghoſt as in Conſortſhip with God and Chriſt and of the imperial Party in Religion. And this maketh the difference between Benedictions Precationary to God, Chriſt or the Holy Ghoſt, and thoſe that are Precationary to the Holy Angels. (m) Operatio divina habet imperium, non habet miniſterium. It is a Miniſtery that we attribute to the Holy Angels, but not to the Lord, nor to the Spirit of the Lord. It is uſual with Chriſtians to ſay, the Lord be with you; and almoſt as uſual to ſay, the good Angel attend you: But the one of theſe Benedictions is Precationary to the Party imperial (as ſuch,) the other is Precationary to the Angel as no more than Miniſterial, an Angel of Miniſtery. In the one therefore there is a giving the Religious or Divine Honour, in the other no more than a Religious reſpect or regard. So S. John's Benediction, Apoc. 1. 4, 5. as it is Precationary to God and Chriſt, is a giving the Religious or Divine Honour; for it is a making them of the Party imperial: But as it is Precationary to the ſeven Archangels (a ſort of ſupernal Potentates, the great Miniſters of Providence, for whom S. John had a great regard) it is not a making them of the Party imperial in Religion, but only Grandees of the Party miniſterial, which is giving them only a Religious great reſpect. But if a Paſtor in a time of approaching Sufferings did make this Benediction to his People; God keep you, Chriſt ſtrengthen you, the Holy Spirit of Light and Truth illuminate and guide you; this Benediction as Precationary to the Holy Ghoſt muſt be ſuppos'd a giving to him the Religious or Divine Honour, becauſe it is a making him of the imperial Party in Religion. And of this Nature is the Apoſtle's Benediction to the Corinthians.

V. All this Religious Honour or Worſhip is manifeſtly agreeable to the Holy Ghoſt, nothing of it maketh any change of his Idea; for it doth make him to be the Lord, or any thing more or leſs, or any thing elſe than the Spirit of the Lord. (1.) That Sovereign Eſteem and Affection which belongeth to him, doth not belong to him as being our Sovereign Lord himſelf, but as being that of himſelf (that of his Godhead) his emiſſarious Divine Spirit, who is vital Sanctity in himſelf and to us, and the Sovereign good which our Sovereign Lord is communicatively to his People. So our Religious dutiful demeanour to the Holy Ghoſt doth not belong to him as being our Sovereign Lord, but as being according to his Idea his Divine Spirit. Peter ſaid to the Wife of Ananias; how is it, that ye have agreed together, to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God. If we live in the Spirit, let us walk in the Spirit. As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the Sons of God. Quench not the Spirit. Know ye not, that ye are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? Know ye not, that your Body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, which ye have of God? We have the Spirit of God not as a Sovereign Lord from our Sovereign Lord, but as our Divine Sovereign Lord's Inſpiration-virtue, which ought to have our choiceſt Eſteem, Affection and Demeanour, as being his choiceſt Communication, and compriſing our (n) τὰ πνευματικὰ, Spiritual Goods and Bleſſings, according to that of our Saviour, your heavenly Father will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him. Luc. 11. 13. (2.) The Holy Spirit being of the Godhead (as the Inſpiration-virtue and Agent thereof) is Holy as ſuch; and this Sanctity and Divinity of his Perſon muſt be practically acknowleg'd; it requireth, that by reverential Acts of Thought and Mind he be Holied according to his Idea. But the ſo ſanctifying and deifying him is not a making him the Lord, as the Apoſtle doth not make him ſuch. 1 Cor. 12. 4, 5, 6. There are diverſities of Gifts, but the ſame Spirt. And there are differences of Adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord. And there are diverſities of Operations, but it is the ſame God, which worketh all in all. Eph. 4. 4, 5, 6. There is one Body, and one Spirit, one Lord, one God and Father of all. (3.) In Baptiſm we confederate with the Holy Ghoſt, profeſs the Chriſtian Faith concerning him, promiſe and undertake an Obedience to him, but not as to our Sovereign Lord, but his vicarious Agent. For there is one Faith, one Baptiſm, one Lord, and this one Lord is not the Holy Ghoſt. Eph. 4. 5. In Baptiſm we are conſecrated to his Spirit, but not ſo as to live to the Spirit, for we live to the Lord, Rom. 14. 8. but ſo as to live in the Spirit, to ſerve him in the Spirit, and to be of his Spirit. For by one Spirit are we all Baptized into one Body. 1 Cor. 12. 13. In Baptiſm we conſecrate our Body to the Holy Ghoſt, to be his Temple, but not as ſuppoſing him the Lord and Proprietor of the Temple. For the Body is not for Fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the Body. 1 Cor. 6. 13. (4.) The Apoſtle's Benediction although meerly Precationary is deifying to the Holy Ghoſt (it is a making him of the Godhead) but not ſo deifying, as to make him the Honour-perſon of the Lord, (from which he is plainly diſtinguiſh'd) but only the communicative Agent of the Godhead. As elſewhere the Apoſtle repreſenteth him as the illuminative Agent. For we do not behold the Glory of the Holy Spirit, but we behold as in a Glaſs the Glory of the Lord by his Holy Spirit as the illuminative Agent. 2 Cor. 3. 18. We pray (ſaith Origen) that the light of the Knowledge of the Glory of God may ſhine in our Hearts. (o) the Spirit of God viſiting our imaginative Faculty and ſhewing us the things of God; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the Sons of God. Thus far a certain Religious Honour and Worſhip appeareth, to be agreeable to the Holy Ghoſt. To the Anti-Trinitarians therefore who make this Objection againſt his Perſonality and Deity (p) that there is neither Precept nor Example in Scripture of Worſhipping the Holy Ghoſt; we make this Anſwer. That it appeareth plainly from the Nature of the thing and the Notices of Holy Scripture, that ſuch a Religious Honour and Worſhip belongeth to the Holy Ghoſt, which is agreeable to one of his Idea. And ſo much of Religious Honour and Worſhip as we have mention'd, therefore belongeth to him, becauſe it is agreeable to his Idea.

(k) Beroald in Apul. Aſ. p. 914.

(l) Dial. 1. p. 227. Com.

(m) S. Ambroſ. de Sp. Sanct. l. 2. c. 12.

Act. 5. 9. Eph. 4. 30. Gal. 5. 25. Rom. 8. 14. 1 Theſſ. 5. 19. 1 Cor. 3. 16, 17. and 6. 19.

Conclusion 2.

In the Scholaſtick Theology there is much of Miſtake and Extravagance touching the Religious Honour and Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt.

I. FOR as the Adoration which it aſſerteth, is hugely extravagant, ſo the Grounds which it proceedeth upon (in aſſerting it) are great Miſtakes, and ſuch are alſo the Anſwers, which it maketh to the principal Objections of the Adverſaries. The Adverſaries made this Objection (q) the Spirit is in us as a Gift from God: But the Gift is by no means to be honour'd with the ſame or equal Honour as the Giver. To which Objection S. Baſil anſwereth. The Spirit is indeed the Gift of God ἀλλὰ δῶρον ζωῆς, but the Gift of Life; for he ſaith, the Law of the Spirit of Life hath made me free; καὶ δῶρον δυνάμεως, and the Gift of Power; for he ſaith, ye ſhall receive Power, after that the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you. But a Man of a meaner Underſtanding than S. Baſil might have diſcern'd the impertinence of this Anſwer, and that it is one thing, to Honour the Holy Ghoſt as our Sovereign Good, and another thing to Honour him as our Sovereign Lord. The Matter in Queſtion (as it ought to be ſtated) is not whether the Holy Ghoſt muſt have the Honour due to our Sovereign Good, but whether he muſt have the Honour and Worſhip peculiarly due to our Sovereign Lord? Which is the God-ſervice (or the Divine Service) the Service which is Religion, of which S. Auſtin ſaith. (r) Hic eſt Dei cultus, hæc vera religio, hæc recta pietas, hæc Deo debita ſervitus. This is the Worſhip of God, this is right Religion, this is true Piety, this is due ſerving God or due ſervice to God. Diſcourſing once with a Phyſician a follower of Socinus, I argu'd that Chriſt could be no leſs than God, becauſe we muſt Love him at the rate of God. To which he anſwer'd, that ſo we muſt Love our own Souls. But this Anſwer was an Impertinence; becauſe it is one thing, to Love our own Souls with our Sovereign Love as being our Sovereign concern, and another thing to Love Chriſt with our Sovereign Love as ſerving our Lord with the Honour and Service of Religion; for ſo we do not ſerve our own Souls, nor may we ſo ſerve any Perſon who is not our Lord. (s) Gr. Naz. bringeth in a Pneumatomachiſt thus arguing; Who ever worſhipped the Spirit? Who of the Ancients,

(n) S. Chryſ. in Matth. 7. 11.

(o) Ἐπιδημοῦντος ἡμῶν τῷ φανταστικῷ πνεύματος θεοῦ καὶ φαντάζοντος ἡμᾶς τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ· ἐπεὶ ὅσοι πνεύματι θεοῦ ἄγονται, ἔτι υἱοί εἰσι θεοῦ. C. Celſ. l. 4. p. 227.

(p) Crell. de uno Deo l. 1. S. 3. c. 2.

(q) S. Baſil. de ſp. ſanct. c. 24.

(r) De C. D. l. 10. c. 4.

(s) Or. 37. p. 599.

ents, who of the Moderns? Who ever pray'd to him? Where is it Written, that we ought to Worſhip him and Pray to him? To this uſual and great Objection this is the firſt Anſwer which this Father maketh. It is the Spirit in whom we Worſhip and by whom we Pray. (t) To Worſhip or Pray in the Spirit, ſeemeth to me nothing elſe, but that the Spirit it ſelf offereth up Prayer and Worſhip to it ſelf. In a Dialogue against the Macedonians in Athanaſius's Works a Pneumatomachiſt maketh an Objection to this Senſe. (u) We cannot draw nigh to do the Religious Worſhip but in the Spirit: If we muſt do the Religious Worſhip to the Spirit, by whom muſt we draw nigh to him? By another Spirit? To this Objection the Anſwer that is made, is an Equivocation of Words. As we muſt Worſhip in the Spirit, ſo we muſt Worſhip in Truth, and alſo Worſhip the Truth that is Chriſt. But the truth of Worſhip wherein we muſt Worſhip (as our Saviour ſpeaketh) is not together with the Father and the Son προσκυνητὸν ϗ λατρευτόν, to have the Religious Worſhip and the Divine Service, as this ancient Author diſputeth, that the Spirit ought to have.

II. For inſtead of the genuin Chriſtian Trinity (in which there is but one Divine Perſon, that is abſolutely the imperial Eſtate of God) theſe ancient Scholaſtick Divines ſubſtituted the Scholaſtick Trinity, which is a threefold imperial Eſtate of Almighty God; and upon this Ground they allot to the Holy Ghoſt the Religious Worſhip and the Divine Service (ſimply ſo called) ſuppoſing, that the ſo ſerving him is a ſerving the living and true God, no leſs than ſerving the Father and the Son is. For this Trinity implieth, that not one of the Divine Perſons hath above the other (w) εἰς δόξαν ὑπερβολὴν, a Tranſcendence as to Glory, (x) that there is an ὁμότιμον τῆς ἀξίας ϗ τῆς θεότητος, an equality of Dignity and Deity equally to be honour'd in thoſe three; that there is μία σύνταξις, λατρεία, προσκύνησις, one Co-ordination, one Divine Service and Worſhip; that every one of the Divine Perſons is ὁμόθρονος, ὁμόδοξος, ὁμότιμος, of the ſame Throne, of the ſame Honour and Glory; and the Trinity is τῶν ἴσων ϗ ὁμοτίμων σύλληψις, a comprehenſion of Equals and of thoſe that are equal in Honour. So a Tract attributed to Athanaſius argueth; (y) ὅπου γὰρ ὁμότιμος ἡ ἀξία, ὁμότιμος ϗ ἡ προσκύνησις, where there is equal Dignity, the Adoration muſt be equal. The three Divine Perſons therefore (as a threefold imperial Eſtate of God Almighty) being of the ſame Deity, Majeſty, Potentacy, Domination and Glory are of the ſame Worſhip and God-ſervice. (z) Ideo unitas honoris, quia unitas poteſtatis, therefore they muſt have the ſame Honour, becauſe they are of the ſame Potentacy, and are equally and in the ſame ſenſe God, the Lord, the Lord our God, the imperial Eſtate of Religion. As the Athanaſian Creed ſaith; the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt is all one: The Glory equal, the Majeſty co-eternal. Such as the Father is, ſuch is the Son, and ſuch is the Holy Ghoſt. The Father is God, the Son is God, the Holy Ghoſt is God (in the ſenſe of this Theology) the Father is Lord, the Son Lord, the Holy Ghoſt Lord. Agreeably whereto the Church hath decreed and practiſeth. For the Nicene Creed (commonly ſo called) ſaith of the Holy Ghoſt; who with the Father and the Son is worſhipped and glorified. The ſenſe whereof may be underſtood from what S. Baſil ſaith of the Church. (a) In it the Son is confeſs'd Conſubſtantial to the Father, and the Holy Spirit ὁμοτίμως συναριθμεῖται τε ϗ συλλατρεύεται, is with equality of Honour connumerated and Co-worſhipped. To the Holy Ghoſt therefore the Scholaſtick Theology allotteth (b) τὰς παντοδαπὰς τιμὰς, omnifarious Religious Honours as much as to the Father and the Son. But if this is not a great Extravance, our Idea of the Holy Ghoſt muſt be one.

Conclusion 3.

The main Body of the Duties of Religious Honour and Worſhip is manifeſtly incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt.

THIS appeareth (1.) from the multitude of Divine Attributes that are incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. For it is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, to be made (by way of honouring) God definitively and abſolutely ſo, the Honour-perſon of the Lord the imperial Eſtate of Religion, the Almighty or moſt High God (without a due limitation of Senſe) abſolutely exempt from all ſuperiour Proprietors, Authorities and Powers, a Political kind of Potentate in the Godhead, a Political kind of Relation (as Father, Sovereign, Shepherd, imperial Head,) the Donour of our Goods and Bleſſings αὐθεντικῶς (as the Author by his own Authority) properly the Author of his Gifts, Graces, Benefits, Operations ad extra, the Proprietor of a People, Kingdom, Inheritance, of a Throne, external Houſe, Court, Attendants, Hoſts, a Crown or Tribunal, the Law-giver that ſaveth and deſtroyeth, the Judge of all, the Diſtributor of Rewards and Puniſhments, the Creator and Providential Governour of us and the Univerſe, the Exemplar and Pattern of our Holineſs, the great Benefactor to the World, of univerſal Dominion (the great Monarchic Empire) our new Creator, our Saviour-Lord and King, as God and Chriſt is. The main of the Honourary Attributes of Chriſt therefore are incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt; ſuch as the Lord of all, the Lord of Glory, the Lord and Saviour, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, the Lord's anointed, the King of Righteouſneſs, the Prince of Life, the Prince of Peace, the everlaſting Father, the Captain of our Salvation, the Lord our Righteouſneſs, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, the firſt and the laſt, the great Shepherd, the righteous Judge, the Donour of our Spiritual Goods and Bleſſings (of the Holy Spirit) and of the Crown of Life. The main of our Honourary Attributions to God are manifeſtly incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. Such as, the Lord is a great God and a great King above all Gods. Great and marvellous are thy Works Lord God Almighty, juſt and true are thy Ways, O thou King of Saints! Thy Righteouſneſs is like the great Mountains, thy Judgments are a great Deep, O Lord thou preſerveſt Man and Beaſt. The Lord reigneth, let the People tremble. Let them Praiſe thy great and terrible Name, for it is Holy, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty! The Lord's Throne is in Heaven, his Eyes behold, his Eye-lids try the Children of Men. Thy Kingdom is an everlaſting Kingdom, and thy Dominion endureth throughout all Generations. I thank thee, O Father, Lord of Heaven and Earth. The Earth is the Lords and the fulneſs thereof, the World and they that dwell therein. The Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, forgiving Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion

(t) Τὸ ἐν πνεύματι προσκυνεῖν τῷ πνεύματι ἢ προσεύχεσθαι, οὐδὲν ἄλλο εἶναί μοι φαίνεται, ἢ αὐτὸ ἑαυτῷ τὴν εὐχὴν προσάγειν ϗ τὴν προσκύνησιν.

(u) Dial. 1. p. 225. com.

(w) S. Baſil de ſp. ſanct. c 19.

(x) Gr. Naz. or. 37. p. 599 or. 44. p. 712. or. 12. p. 204. or. 13. p. 211. or. 26. p. 445.

(y) De com. eſſent. p. 375.

(z) S. Amb. de ſp. ſanct. l. 2. c. 1.

(a) Ep. 61.

(b) Idem de ſp. ſanct. c. 22.

ſion and Sin. The main of our natural Relations to God and our dutiful honourary Acknowledgements of them are manifeſtly incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. As that we are his reſembling Off-ſpring (made after his Image) his Creatures, Beneficiaries, Dependents, Servants, Subjects, that ought to be the Subjects of his Kingdom. The People of his Paſture and the Sheep of his Hand. That we owe our All to him, and are not our own, but his intirely, of whom are all things, through whom are all things, and to whom are all things: To whom be Glory for ever. Amen.

(2.) The Jews Worſhip of Oblations and Sacrifices always was in the main of it incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt as not being the Honour-perſon of the Lord, the Lord of the Creatures, the Lord God of a People (the Lord their God) and the Lord of their Goods and Evils. And for the ſame reaſon the Chriſtian Worſhip of Evangelical Oblations and Sacrifices (which Anſwer to the Judaical and were typified by them) is in the main of it incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt. (c) All the Judaical Sacrifices were made to God, either as to the Maker, Preſerver and Lord of all (who is worthy of all Honour and Worſhip:) Or as to the Donour of all Goods, to obtain them or return Thanks for them: Or as to him that hath the ſupreme Right of puniſhing and pardoning, to impetrate his Favour. Every Sacrifice was as an Oblation made to a King, either to impetrate his Favour, or to make a grateful return to him. The Chriſtians Oblations and Sacrifices are founded upon the ſame Reaſons with the Judaical, and therefore in the main are not Oblations to the Holy Ghoſt, as the Apoſtle's words imply. Rom. 15. 16. That the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt. (d) The Apoſtle maketh himſelf a ſort of Prieſt, and his Oblation is the converted Gentiles, which is repreſented, not as an Oblation made to the Holy Ghoſt, but as ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, that it may be acceptable to God. (e) The univerſal Church is an univerſal Sacrifice offer'd by the great Prieſt (Chriſt Jeſus) who offereth not this Sacrifice to the Holy Ghoſt, but unto God. Yet we duly Conſecrate our ſelves to the Holy Ghoſt; for the Conſecration of our ſelves unto God is incluſively a conſecrating our ſelves to the Holy Ghoſt as to the Spirit of God, to be his Habitation: But the abſolute Conſecration of our ſelves and all that is ours is (not to the Holy Ghoſt, but) unto God; and the Oblation of our ſelves finally is (not to the Holy Ghoſt, but) unto God: Nor are our Alms-givings a Sacrifice to the Holy Ghoſt, nor can we Conſecrate our Eſtates and Worldly Goods to him, unleſs he was our Sovereign Lord the King. (f) Per munus erga regem honos & affectio oſtenditur. A broken Heart is a great Goſpel-ſacrifice: But this Propitiatory kind of Sacrifice for Sin is not an Oblation to the Holy Ghoſt, to whom it doth not belong, to forgive Sin. Prayer (as it is the practice of ſeeking God) is put for the main of Piety and is an highly valuable Sacrifice: But it is an Addreſs to the Throne of Grace, a calling upon the Lord, not the Holy Ghoſt, who hath not a Throne, nor is he our Saviour-Lord, and it is incongruous to Pray to him for the Remiſſion of Sin, for the Holy Spirit and everlaſting Life. The ſame account muſt be given of the Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving.

(3.) The Holy Euchariſt was look'd upon in the elder Times of Chriſtianity as the great Oblation and Sacrifice of the New Teſtament; and in thoſe times they were ſo ſenſible, that this great Oblation could not be made to the Holy Ghoſt, that the Third Council of Carthage made this their XXIII. Canon; ut cùm ad altare aſſiſtitur, ſemper ad patrem dirigatur oratio, that Prayer at the Altar be always made to the Father. This Sacrifice of the Holy Euchariſt is the great Sacrifice of the New Teſtament, not only becauſe it is the Commemoration of Chriſt's Sacrifice, but becauſe it is the Comprehenſion of our Chriſtian Sacrifices. For therein we offer the Sacrifice of Prayer, of Thankſgiving and Praiſe (Sacrificium laudis,) therein we offer the Sacrifice of our ſelves and alſo the Sacrifice of our Worldly Goods unto God for the Maintenance of his Service. For ſo the Chriſtians anciently brought part of their Goods, to furniſh the Lord's Table (they brought ſome of the Fruits of the Earth with them and offer'd them at the Lord's Table) and out of theſe Oblations Bread and Wine was taken for the Sacrament (ſo the Elements became God's Goods, his Viands, and the Feaſt was his, becauſe it was furniſh'd by conſecrated Goods) part of the Service therefore was called the Offertory, becauſe Chriſtians made an Oblation of a Portion of their Goods; and their Phraſe was τὰ σὰ ἐκ τῶν σῶν, of thine own we give thee. Which is ſuch an Oblation, as is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt.

(4.) It is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, to be made our Fear and our Dread, as the Lord our God muſt be made (becauſe of his imperial Greatneſs, governing Juſtice, and punitive Severity;) therefore the Scripture ſaith of the Diſciples, Act. 9. 31. They walk'd in the fear of the Lord, and (not in the fear of the Holy Ghoſt, but) in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt.

It is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, to be made our Hope and our Truſt, as not being relatively our Saviour-Lord (as he muſt be, whoſe Confidents and Dependents we are) nor having made us any Promiſe, that he will be actually ſo. Holy People are often ſaid, to place their Hope and Affiance in God and Chriſt, but never are ſaid, to Hope or Truſt in the Holy Ghoſt.

It is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, to be the object of our paſſive Obedience or Patience (our contentedneſs with his allowance of external things and ſubmiſſion to his Corrections) as being no Providential kind of Lord and Governour.

It is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, to be the object of our ſtudious imitation; yet the main of Piety is imitari quem colis, to imitate him whom you Worſhip.

That the generality of Men ſhould make Oaths by him and Vows to him, is incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, as not being mundanæ perfidiæ judex & vindex, the Judge and Avenger of the World's perfidiouſneſs.

(c) Judæorum omnia ſacrificia Deo facta fuerunt, vel ut omnium conditori ac Domino, vel ut omnium bonorum largitori, vel ut ſummum pœnæ ac veniæ jus habenti. Outram de Sacrif. l. 1. c. 19. p. 226. & c. 10. p. 107, 108. Deus in omni cultûs genere tanquam omnium Conditor ac Conſervator omniumque Dominus ſpectari debet. Ibid. Sacrificium omne Deo factum inſtar rei fuit Regi oblatæ. Quid ergo res Regi oblata? Sanè vel ad impetrandam gratiam ejus, vel ad gratiam ei referendam pertinet. Ibid. c. 19. p. 224.

(d) Ibid. p. 221.

(e) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 6.

(f) Iren. adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 34.

Concluſion 4.

There is (regularly) no ſuch thing as the God-ſervice (the Divine Service) of the Holy Ghoſt, or the doing him Service, or Conſecrations to his Service, or his Prieſts, Saints, Servants.

FOR (1.) The Holy Ghoſt was not in Judaiſm, nor is he in Chriſtianity the Imperial Eſtate of a Religion or God-ſervice. God Imperial is his Religion Imperial; Chriſt Imperial is his Religion Imperial. But none ever heard of the Holy Ghoſt Imperial with his Religion Imperial. Men may be impious and they ought to be pious towards the Holy Ghoſt, but not as to an imperial Eſtate of Religion, or as to a Political-imperial divine Perſon, that is, the Lord; for neither Chriſtianity nor any other Religion knoweth any thing of the holy Offices of his Service; although S. Ambroſe ſaith (g) that he (the Holy Spirit) hath the Subject-ſervices of the Juſt; for it is written, Spiritui Deo ſervimus, We ſerve God the Spirit. (h) So in the time of S. Ambroſe and S. Auſtin that place in the Epiſtle to the Philippians was miſ-read in moſt of the vulgar Latin Bibles; we are the Circumciſion, that Worſhip God in the Spirit; and the former of theſe Fathers complaineth, that the Text in ſome Bibles was falſified by the Arians, becauſe in thoſe Books it was read, as we rightly read it at this day. In our Bibles there is no appearance of any ſuch thing as ſerving the Spirit (or doing the Divine Service ſimply ſo called to the Holy Ghoſt) either in the Old or New Teſtament. In Judaiſm a Temple was built, an Altar was erected, Sacrifices were appointed, and Sacrificing Prieſts were ſet apart for God and his Divine Service, but not for the Holy Ghoſt. The Prieſts were conſecrated to the holy Office and Dignity of miniſtring the Divine Service (to draw near and have acceſs unto God, to wait and attend upon him in his immediate Worſhip) which conſiſteth in making Oblations and Preſents unto God both under the Law and the Goſpel. (i) Oblationes & illic, oblationes & hic: Sacrificia in populo, ſacrificia in eccleſia. So Chriſtians are a ſacerdotal Generation (a Generation of Prieſts) that have the Dignity and Priviledge, the Office and Imployment, to attend and wait upon God in his immediate Worſhip, to have acceſs unto him and to miniſter to him the Divine Service, and to this high and holy Office and Imployment they are conſecrated and ſet apart, being ſeparated from the reſt of the World and from profane Uſes, to be holy unto God. The Prieſts Motto is Holineſs to the Lord, but not to the Holy Ghoſt. They are Prieſts unto God, but not to the Spirit of God. They are ſaid, to miniſter to the Lord, but not to the Holy Ghoſt; to attend upon the Lord (his Divine Service) not the Holy Ghoſt; to draw nigh unto God and to have acceſs to him (in the holy Worſhip) not to the Holy Ghoſt. And in Heaven theſe Prieſts to God and to Chriſt are ſaid, to be before the Throne of God and to ſerve him day and night in his Temple: But we read not of any heavenly Temple, that the Holy Ghoſt hath, nor of any Divine Service that is done him there. Nor is the miniſtring to him the Divine Service agreeable to the God-ſervice of Chriſt's People, which is not to, but through the Holy Spirit. For by him we have an acceſs by one Spirit unto the Father. Eph. 2. 18. The Chriſtians God-ſervice is not to the Majeſty of the Holy Ghoſt, but by the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt through a Mediator to the Majeſty of God.

(g) De ſp. ſanct. l. 3. c. 19. & l. 2. c. 16.
(h) Petav. de Trin. l 2. c. 13. S. 3.
(i) Iren. ſupr.
1 Pet. 2. 9. Apoc. 1. 6.
Exod. 15. 28.
Act. 13. 2.
1 Cor. 7. 35.
Heb. 7. 19.
Eph. 2. 18.
Apoc. 7. 15.

(2.) There is much of miſtake in S. Auſtin's uſual Argument for the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt. (k) If we were commanded, to build a Temple unto him, ſuch as Solomon made, of Wood and Stones, certainly by making a Temple we ſhould be convicted of giving him the Divine Worſhip. How much more do we owe it to him, to whom we do not make a Temple, but are a Temple? If we ſhould be Sacrilegious by making a Temple to any Creature, how is not he the true God, to whom we do not make a Temple, but we our ſelves are a Temple? This Argument ſuppoſeth, that the Divine Service and Worſhip is as much and more given to the Holy Ghoſt by our ſelves being his Temple, as by erecting to him a material Temple, ſuch as Solomon's was, or ſuch as the Gentiles erected to Creatures; which is a great miſtake. For if we were commanded, to erect a Solomon-like Temple to the Holy Ghoſt, it muſt be his Regial Seat and Habitation as a God in the uſual ſenſe (a Political-imperial Divine Perſon;) it muſt be dedicated to his Honour and Service as a God; appertaining to his Temple he muſt have his Feſtivals, Sacrifices, Altar, Sacrificing Prieſts as a God; he muſt dwell in his Temple as a σέϐασμα, an object of Religion and God-ſervice, and muſt be in it an imperial Eſtate of Religion unto Men (that muſt perform their Adorations to him as in his Temple,) and he muſt be the Lord and Proprietor of his Temple. But nothing of this Deifying, nothing of this God-ſervice is imply'd in our Chriſtian Hypotheſis, that we are the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, but the contrary. For our Holy Ghoſt is not a Political-imperial Divine Perſon, nor are we dedicated to his Service, nor doth the Apparatus of a Temple-Service belong to him, nor doth he dwell in us as a σέϐασμα, or an imperial Eſtate of Religion unto Men (that muſt pay their Adorations to him as dwelling in us) nor is he the Lord and Proprietor of this Temple, as is plain from the Apoſtle's Text, 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. Know ye not, that your Body is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? —— therefore glorifie God in your Body, and in your Spirit, which are God's. The Apoſtle doth not ſay, glorifie the Holy Ghoſt: But glorifie God. Nor doth he ſay, that our Body and Spirit are the Holy Ghoſt's: But he ſaith, they are God's. It is God, to whom this Temple is primarily dedicated and conſecrated, and to the Holy Ghoſt only as he is the Spirit of God, who inhabiteth it as his locum tenens, and as his Inſpiration-virtue and Agent. It is in ſuch ſenſe conſecrated to the Holy Ghoſt, to be his Habitation, but is not conſecrated to his Honour and Service, nor is he the Lord and Proprietor of it; for theſe things are peculiar to the Lord. So though a certain agreeable Religious Honour or Worſhip belongeth to the Holy Ghoſt, yet not ſuch Religious Honour or Worſhip which is his Service, nor ſuch God-ſervice which is a doing him Service; for theſe things are peculiar to the Lord. S. Auſtin's Argument may be thus retorted;

the

(k) Nam ſi templum ei facere, ſicut Salomon fecit, de lignis & lapidibus juberemur, utique faciendo templum latriam exhibere convinceremur. Quanto magis latriam debemus, cui non templum facimus, ſed ſumus? Si ſacrilegi eſſemus faciendo templum cuicunque Creaturæ, quomodo non eſt Deus verus, cui non templum facimus, ſed nos ipſi templum ſumus? Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 16. S. 11.

The Holy Ghoſt hath no Temple but within us; therefore he is not the σέβασμα or Divine Majeſty, to which we muſt perform our God-ſervice.

(3.) Both under the Law and under the Goſpel there are many Conſecrations of Things and Perſons (Sacred Edifices, a Sacred Revenue, Sacred Times, Sacred Utenſils) made to the Service of the Lord: but no Conſecration of Perſons or of Things either under the Law or Goſpel was ever made to the Service of the Holy Ghoſt; therefore neither Law nor Goſpel knoweth any ſuch thing as doing Service to the Holy Ghoſt, or his God-ſervice (ſimply ſo called) which cannot be without a Conſecration of Things and Perſons thereto. Nor can it be without an Holy People, that are holy to the Holy Ghoſt (the People of his Holineſs) which Holy People muſt be the Saints of the Holy Ghoſt: but neither the Old nor New Teſtament knoweth any ſuch Saints; therefore they know not any ſuch thing as the Service (or God-ſervice ſimply ſo called) of the Holy Ghoſt, nor do we conſecrate our Eſtates and worldly Goods for the maintenance of his Service. Nothing is more uſual in Scripture than the Lord's Servant (the Servant of God and Chriſt) it is the Name of all pious Perſons and their Title of Honour. The Elogy and honourable Name of Moſes is The Servant of the Lord. So of David, Pſal. 36. in the Title of the Pſalm. All the Prophets are ennobled with this Title his Servants the Prophets. All the Apoſtles and all the Godly throughout the World are noted with this Elogy, Apoc. 19. 5. Praiſe God all ye his Servants and all ye that fear him both ſmall and great. The Son of God himſelf is noted with this honourable Title and Elogy, Behold my Servant whom I have choſen, Iſa. 42. 1. ſo are the Holy Angels and all the Inhabitants of Heaven, Apoc. 22. 3. And in the elder times of Chriſtianity it was the honourable Inſcription upon the Tombs and Monuments of Pious People. (l) Being dead they ſpake this uſual Language of pious People, The Servant of God, The Servant of the Lord, the Servant of Chriſt (which is S. *Paul*s Title of Honour:) but if the Holy Ghoſt hath in equality with God and Chriſt right to a Service, our Service, a Divine Service, if by divine appointment he ought to have ſuch Service, there ought to be alſo in Religion this Title of Honour The Servant of the Holy Ghoſt, and this ought to be the familiar Language of holy People: which yet is ſo alien from Religion and incongruous, that it is not us'd in the Church, and the Scriptures know nothing of it. Nothing is ſo much inſiſted on in Scripture as ſerving the Lord (ſerving him with our All and at any rate, ſerving him Night and Day) Religion and Piety conſiſteth in ſerving the Lord (in being his Servants in State and Practice;) and ſeeing the whole concern of the Scriptures is Religion and Piety, if this conſiſted in ſerving the Holy Ghoſt (no leſs than in ſerving the Lord, or as well as in ſerving the Lord) the Scriptures could not be totally ſilent concerning it.

Deut. 24. 5. Apoc. 10. 7. Jud. 1. 1.

(l) In hoc tumulo jacet famulus Dei Gregorius. Paula clariſſima fœmina famula Chriſti. Hoornbeeck Theol. Pract. T. 2. l. 5. c. 2. p. 180.

(4.) The Lord and the Servant are Relatives; therefore if the Spirit of the Lord is not properly the Perſon of the Lord, Chriſtians are not properly his Servants: their Service is due only to their Lord, and the only reaſon why they are bound to do him ſervice (or to be actually his Servants) is, becauſe he is their Lord; therefore they are not of right and by obligation properly his Servants, who is not properly the Lord, nor their Lord. Their Lord hath plenary right to command them and demand their Service (abundance of Duty and Service) they are not their own but his, to whom they muſt be affected as to their Divine Sovereign Lord, whom they muſt revere and love (love at the higheſt rate of Love) obey, imitate and truſt; to whom they muſt loyally adhere, living for him, dying for him, making it their End and Buſineſs, to live for his Service, and to promote his Intereſts (the Intereſts of his Kingdom;) who is alſo their Beneficent Lord and Patron, that alone can and will reward his Servants with Eternal Life. Chriſtians are they that ſay (in Faith and Profeſſion, in Life and Practice) that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, their Sovereign Lord, not that the Holy Ghoſt is ſo; for we are not dedicated to his Service, or to live for his Service, and to promote the Intereſts of his Kingdom (who hath no Kingdom;) nor is he an Object of our Imitation and Truſt, nor the Donour of Life Eternal to any of his Servants. Chriſtians therefore muſt not look upon themſelves as properly his Servants, but in all reſpects the Spirit of the Lord muſt be treated as the Spirit of the Lord; for ſingly conſider'd and conſider'd in conſort with the other perſons of the Trinity he is no other than the Spirit of the Lord.

CONCLUSION 5.

It is certain, that there is great difference and inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory; as will appear by ſhewing, that Glory is the thing that God is, and that Religion conſiſteth in giving him a Reputation-kind of Glory.

I. ONE of the Jews Names of God is כבוד The Glory, and their Doctors obſerve, (m) that the Glory of the Lord in Scripture ſignifieth God himſelf; as when Moſes ſaith, Lord ſhew me thy Glory, God anſwereth, No Man can ſee me and live, Ezek. 3. 12. Bleſſed be the Glory of the Lord, Iſa. 3. 8. To provoke the Eyes of his Glory, Iſa. 60. 7. I will glorifie the Houſe of my Glory, Iſa. 63. 15. Behold from the Habitation of thy Holineſs and of thy Glory, 2 Cor. 3. 18. We beholding as in a Glaſs the Glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. 4. 6. The Light of the Knowledge of the Glory of God, Eph. 1. 12. To the praiſe of his Glory, Jude 24. The preſence of his Glory (his glorious Preſence) 2 Pet. 1. 17. There came a Voice from the excellent Glory (the Glory which the Divine Majeſty is) 1 Pet. 4. 13. When his Glory ſhall be revealed (that is, the Glory which he is) Apoc. 15. 8. The Temple was filled with Smoke from the Glory of the Lord (that is, from God himſelf) Heb. 1. 3. Chriſt is ſaid to be the Brightneſs of his Father's Glory and the expreſs Image of his Perſon: (n) where the latter words are an expoſition of the former; Image expounding Brightneſs, and Perſon or Subſtance expounding Glory. The Names of God are The God of Glory, Act. 7. 2. The King of Glory, Pſal. 24. 8. The Father of Glory, Eph. 1. 17. that is, who is the Peerleſs Divine Majeſtatick Glory; for what is God but the Glory of the incorruptible God? Rom. 1. 24. And this is according to the general ſenſe of Mankind, who ſuppoſe, that God is of great affinity with Light, which is a pure unſtained Brightneſs and Glory.

(m) Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 64.

(n) Mr. Mede on Luk. 2. 13, 14.

Glory. The Perſians thought (o) Light to be the firſt God. (p) Hermes ſaid, that God had Light for his Body and Truth for his Soul. One of the Hebrew Doctors thinketh, that Light is the Garment of God (becauſe the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Thou covereſt thy ſelf with Light as with a Garment;) and the Councils ſay, that the Son of God is Light of Light. Lactantius derideth the Heathen for lighting Candles in their Divine Service, as if God needed Light (q) whoſe Light and Brightneſs far tranſcendeth that of the Sun: whence in the New Jeruſalem there is no Sun, for the Glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof, Apoc. 21.23. But if there is no difference of the Divine Perſons as to Glory, why is it not ſaid, that the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt did alſo lighten it as well as the Glory of God and of the Lamb? Common Reaſon will infer from hence, that the Holy Ghoſt is not the Divine Majeſtatick Glory, not the King of Glory as God is, not the Lord of Glory as the Lamb is, 1 Cor. 2. 8. The Scripture that aboundeth and ſuperaboundeth in mentioning the Glory of the Lord, that every where repreſenteth and deſcribeth him as the Glory, and noticeth to us, that Glory is the thing that the Lord is, yet never ſo much as once maketh mention of the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt; only in one place he is ſtiled The Spirit of Glory and of God; which doth not mean (as is before diſcours'd) that he is the Shecinah (or the Glory of God) but the Inſpiration-virtue thereof. And is it imaginable, that the Scripture could be ſo totally ſilent touching the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt, that it ſhould never mention the Preſence of his Glory, or the Praiſe of his Glory, or the Eyes of his Glory, or the Glory of his Majeſty, if there is no difference or inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory? If the Holy Ghoſt is a Political kind of Perſon, a Political Imperial Divine Perſon, and the Glory of a Divine Majeſty? which he cannot be otherwiſe than as the Inſpiration-virtue thereof.

(o) Pocock. Spec. p. 146.
(p) Gale in Jambl. p. 192.
(q) L. 6. c. 2.

II. Glory is the thing that God is in his Appearances; for always the Appearance that he exhibiteth of himſelf is a Glory (either the Glory of the Angels his Attendants, or an Emanation from him, or a Splendor which he createth, to ſhew his Magnificence, as Maimonides ſuppoſeth) as Exod. 24. 16. The Glory of the Lord abode upon the Mount. This Glory reſided upon the Ark between the Cherubims (who becauſe they attended upon this Divine Majeſtatick Preſence, are called the Cherubims of Glory, Heb. 9. 5.) whence the Glory is ſaid to reſide amongſt the Jews, Rom. 9. 4. And becauſe when the Ark was taken by the Philiſtins, this Glory was taken away, therefore the cry then was Icabod, where is the Glory? the Glory is departed from Iſrael, for the Ark of God is taken: He delivered his Strength into Captivity, and his Glory into the Enemies Hand. Of this Glory the Pſalmiſt muſt be underſtood to ſpeak, Pſal. 63. 2. That I may ſee thy Power and thy Glory, ſo as I have ſometime ſeen thee in the Sanctuary, 1 Chron. 16. 27. Glory and Honour are in his Preſence. Where his Preſence is the Glory is; and where he appeareth, there the Glory appeareth; as the Glory of the Lord ſhone round about the Shepherds, Luk. 2. 9. In Heaven therefore (where God exhibiteth the moſt illuſtrious appearance of himſelf) there muſt be a viſible Glory of the Divine Majeſty reſiding there (typify'd by the Glory that reſided in the Judaical Tabernacle and Temple) which S. Stephen ſaw with his bodily Eyes, and which the Holy Angels Behold, Act. 7. 55. Matth. 18. 10. A Divine of our own calleth it, (r) A Divine Shecina, a peculiar viſible Glory of God ineffable and unimitable, which is of this great conſequence, that the Holy Saints and Angels receive Commands from thence as from the very Mouth of God, are recreated more by that wonderful Luſtre than we Mortals are by the Light of the Sun, and that it is an Oracle with whom they may conſult, and receive Anſwers of clear and indubitable Certitude. As the Glory of God appeareth in Heaven, and hath appeared on Earth, ſo in Prophetick Viſion it hath uſually appear'd (Ezekiel eſpecially hath many Viſions, wherein the Glory of the Lord appeareth) and it will appear at the laſt day, when Chriſt ſhall come in the Glory of his Father. In like manner the Glory of the Son of God appeareth in Heaven, where he is crowned with Glory (rais'd to the fulleſt height of Glory) it hath appear'd on Earth (for Paul ſaw it in his way to Damaſcus, a brightneſs above that of the Sun, Act. 26. 13.) it hath appeared in Prophetick Viſion an amazing, overcoming Glory (his Countenance was as the Sun ſhining in his ſtrength, Apoc. 1. 16.) and it will appear at the laſt day, when his Glory ſhall be revealed, and he ſhall ſit in his Glory. But now let us turn our Eyes to the Holy Ghoſt, and we ſhall find him of a very diſſonant Character. For nothing of his Glory appeareth in Heaven, nor did he ever make an appearance upon Earth in Glory, nor was any Glory of his ever ſeen in Prophetick Viſion, nor will any Glory of his appear at the laſt day: for there is not a Syllable of this nature in all the Book of God. What then ſhall we ſay to theſe things? ſhall we ſay (as the Scholaſtick Theology repreſenteth the Trinity) that there is no difference or inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory? that the Holy Ghoſt is a political kind of Perſon and Prince and the Glory of a Divine Majeſty? Not an Angel in Scripture appeareth like himſelf, but the appearance of his Glory is deſcrib'd in Scripture, only touching the Holy Ghoſt the Scripture never taketh the leaſt notice of the appearance of his Glory.

1 Sam. 4. 21.
Pſal. 78. 61.
(r) Dr. H. More Myſt. of Godlin. B. 5. ch. 4.
1 Pet. 4. 13. Matth. 19. 28.

III. Glory is the thing that God is in his glorious and glorifying Excellencies (or Attributes) and the glorious beaming forth or manifeſtation of them is his Glory: So the Heavens declare the Glory of God; the whole Earth is full of his Glory. His appearances in the World, which are glorious, are his Glory, Numb. 14. 21. As truly as I live, ſaith the Lord, all the Earth ſhall be filled with the Glory of the Lord. His miraculous Works are his Glory, 1 Chron. 16. 24. Declare his Glory among the Heathen, his marvellous Works among all Nations. So his divine miraculous Power is his Divine Glory, Joh. 2. 11. Theſe things did Jeſus in Cana of Galilee, and manifeſted forth his Glory, the Glory of his Divinity (of Perſon) of which his divine miraculous Power was a Branch, Joh. 17. 22. The Glory which thou gaveſt me (the Divine Glory of doing Miracles) I have given them. Thus every where the Scripture reſoundeth with the Glory of God and the Son of God (like a Book of Divine Heraldry or Blazonry it imployeth it ſelf in diſplaying their Glory) but of the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt there is altum ſilentium! yea though it often ſpeaketh of the miraculous Power of the Spirit of God, yet this it doth not count the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt, but only the Glory of God or Chriſt: for the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Chriſt's being raiſed from the Dead by the Spirit of Holineſs, doth not ſay, that he was raiſed by the Glory of the Holy Ghoſt, but by the Glory of the Father, as Lazarus was raiſ'd by the Glory of God, Rom. 6. 4. Joh. 11. 40. What account can we give from the Principles of the Scholaſtick Theology of this marvellous Phænomenon or rather non-appearance of the Holy Ghoſt? hath the Scripture no regard to the diſplaying his Glory, yet muſt we ſuppoſe, that there is no difference of the Divine Perſons as to Glory, and that he is the Glory of a Divine Majeſty? The Majeſty of God is his Glory, and Man (being a Majeſtick Lord-like Animal) is the repreſentation of it, and is there- 1 Cor. 11. 7. fore ſaid to be the Image and Glory of God (he is the Glory of God repreſented:) but of the Holy Ghoſt there is no ſuch Image, no ſuch Glory.

Pſal. 19. 1.
Iſa. 6. 3.
Habak. 3. 3.

IV. Glory is the thing that God is in his Conſtitutive Divine Vital Nature and Eſſence; for if this was not Glory, it could not conſtitute him the Divine Majeſtatick Glory. (s) To that ſimple and unchangeable Eſſence Clarity is not one thing and Nature another: but Nature it ſelf is to him his Clarity, Clarity it ſelf is Nature, ſaith Gregor. M. He ſuppoſeth, not without reaſon, that the Beatifick Viſion is a ſeeing the very Eſſence and Subſtance of God; for though the appearances of his Glory on Earth are of a lower nature, yet the Glory which the Holy Angels and glorify'd Saints behold in the Heavenly Manſions is no leſs than the glorious Eſſence of God. The common Opinion is, that this Glory is to be ſeen only by Intellective Intuition; but an Intellective Intuition we may have of a very diſtant Object, whereas the Juſt ſhall ſee his Face. If his Glory is External, it may be externally ſeen; and that it is external, appeareth from the nature of Vital Sanctity; which cannot be in us, or in the Holy Angels in perfection without being both an Internal and an External Glory; and we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that it is ſo in God; whoſe Vital Sanctity is called by the Holy Writers 1 Joh. 1. 5. Light (which is pure Luſtre) in his regenerate 2 Cor. 3. 18. Children it is called Glory (they are ſaid to be changed from Glory to Glory, from Internal to External Glory) and ſo Chriſt's fulneſs of Vital Sanctity is called his Glory, Joh. 1. 14. which Internal Glory of his was not without an External Glory, that was vailed for a time, but ſhew'd it ſelf in his Transfiguration, when his Divinity (the fulneſs of this Divine Glory that dwelt in him) beaming forth and diſplaying it ſelf, changed the Complection of his Face, and made it ſhine as the Sun, and ſhone forth through his Raiment alſo, and made it as white as the Light. Theſe things ought to be believ'd, becauſe they are creditably atteſted; his Apo- Joh. 1. 14. 2 Pet. 1. 16. ſtles ſaw his Glory and were Eye-witneſſes of his Majeſty. But of the Divine Majeſtatick Glory of the Holy Ghoſt who were ever Spectators? and where are the Eye-witneſſes? No Holy Writer pretendeth to ſo much as an Intellective Intuition of it, or ever repreſenteth it as an Object of the Beatifick Viſion. None ever ſtileth him moſt high in the Glory of God the Father, or deſcribeth him as a Citizen (Soveraign or Subject) of the Kingdom of Glory; yet ſuch he muſt be, if he is the ſame conſtitutive divine vital Nature and Eſſence with the Father and the Son, if there is no difference of the Divine Perſons as to Glory, if he is properly שכינתא the Shecinah (as Rittangel ſuppoſeth) or if (as the Scholaſtick Theology affirmeth) all that the Father hath, the Son hath except the being ingenit; and all that the Son hath, the Spirit hath, except the being generated, (t) τὰ δ' ἄλλα συμφυὲς ϗ σύνθρονον, ϗ ὁμόδοξον ϗ ὁμότιμον, but as to all things elſe, of the ſame Nature, of the ſame Throne, of the ſame Honour and Glory.

(s) Neque enim illi ſimplici & incommutabili eſſentiæ aliud eſt claritas & aliud natura: ſed ipſa ei natura ſua claritas, ipſa claritas natura eſt. Greg. M. Moral. l. 18. c. 28.

(t) Gr. Naz. or. 26. p. 445.

V. Glory is the thing that God is in his Kingdom-eſtate, his Plenary Dominion and Sovereignty over all; for the Kingdom-eſtate amongſt Men is the height of Mundane Glory (Refulgency and Illuſtriouſneſs) unſtained with Abjectneſs and Meanneſs, and the higheſt remove from exteriour Vileneſs and Sordidneſs. (u) The greateſt Glory on Earth is that of a mighty King, when he appeareth in ſtate; his Robes glorious, his Attendants glorious, every thing about him order'd to be as glorious as may be (Solomon in all his Glory, Matth. 6.) There is, I grant, no proportion here (finiti ad infinitum:) But becauſe we are acquainted with no higher, it is the beſt reſemblance we have, whereby to take ſome ſcantling of the infinite Glory of our Heavenly King. And therefore the Scriptures fitted to our Capacity, ſpeak of it to us moſtly in that Key (The Lord is King and hath put on glorious Apparel, Pſal. 93. O Lord my God thou art become exceeding glorious: thou art cloathed with Majeſty and Honour, Pſal. 104.) But as I ſaid before, it holdeth no proportion. —— A Divine Infinite Incomprehenſible Glory belongeth to him as Supreme King of Kings, as his peculiar Prerogative, and the choiceſt Flower in his Crown. Kings in Scripture are called Glories. The high Eſtate of 2 Pet. 2. 10. the Kingdom is called the Glory of the Kingdom. And the Throne of Mundane Princes is called Dan. 2. 37. and 7. 14. and 11. 20. 1 Sam. 2. 8. the Throne of Glory. Agreeably whereto the Aſcriptions of Glory to God in Scripture are principally Aſcriptions of Dominion and a Kingdom, of Empire and Power, Pſal. 145. 11, 12. They ſhall ſpeak of the Glory of thy Kingdom and talk of thy Power. To make known to the Sons of Men his mighty Acts and the glorious Majeſty of his Kingdom, Jude 25. To the only wiſe God our Saviour, be Glory and Majeſty, Dominion and Power both now and ever. Amen. So in the cloſe of our Lord's Prayer and in the Jews Benedictions the Aſcriptions of Glory to God are the Glory of the Kingdom and the Throne of Glory, which the New Teſtament aſcribeth alſo to the Son of God together Apoc. 5. 12, 13. with the Kingdom and Dominion over all the Power and Glory thereof. But not any one Branch of this Political-imperial Glory belongeth to the Holy Ghoſt, therefore the Holy Ghoſt is not the Divine Majeſtatick Glory otherwiſe than as the Inſpiration-Virtue thereof; therefore there is great difference and inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory.

(u) Biſhop Sanderſon Ser. on Rom. 15. 6.

VI. The thing that we have to do in Religion, is the giving unto God a Reputation-kind of Glory (by glorifying Apprehenſions, Affections and Demeanour, by ſpeaking forth his Glories and living to his Honour, Service and Glory;) which although it is but a Reputation kind of Glory, yet it is the great reality as being of the greateſt importance: for he is unto us the Imperial Eſtate of God, who if he is not religiouſly ſerv'd and glorify'd, is undeify'd, for (the Godhead being an Eſtate of Honour and Dignity and of ſuperiour Relation) not to glorifie him as God (as is due to God) not to give unto God his due Honour, is a denying him to be God, a making him no God, a deſpoiling him of his Godhead.

head. He muſt have the Honours and Glories that are due unto his Godhead, which are ſingular, proper and incommunicable, which himſelf cannot part with or communicate, nor can he allow them, to be alienated or communicated by us; for he cannot part with them any more than he can part with his Godhead, nor can he chuſe but exact and demand them. He muſt have the Glory of his Glories (the Glory that belongeth to him upon account of his Glories;) for not dutifully to acknowledge them, is to bereave him of them, and to put upon him the contrary Infamies and Contumelies: which diſhonour is the extreme Injuriousneſs of Impiety; as Piety conſiſteth in doing Honour unto him. And as all the Duty of Children to their Parents, of Subjects to their Sovereign, is compris'd in honouring them; ſo all the multifarious Duties of Piety towards God are but various modes of doing Honour and giving Glory unto him. The Bible therefore that is our infallible, full and ſufficient Inſtitution and Rule of Piety, is our infallible, full and ſufficient Inſtitution and Rule of giving Glory to God. And ſeeing we give Glory to God, not by way of Communication, but by way of Aſcription, the Bible muſt neceſſarily be an infallible, full and ſufficient Rule and Inſtitution of making Aſcriptions of Glory to God. But the Bible doth not make ſo much as one Aſcription of Glory to the Holy Ghoſt (or one Doxology unto him;) therefore Piety doth not at all conſiſt in making ſuch Aſcriptions of Glory as we call Doxologies, to the Holy Ghoſt; and conſequently the Holy Ghoſt is not a Divine Majeſty or Majeſtatick Glory (otherwiſe than as the Inſpiration-virtue thereof;) therefore there is great difference and inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory. Moreover, there are manifold Aſcriptions of Glory (before-mention'd) which are peculiar to God, and the Son of God, and incompetible to the Holy Ghoſt, which plainly ſhew, that the Holy Ghoſt is not a Divine Majeſty, and that there is great difference and inequality of the Divine Perſons as to Glory.

CONCLUSION 6.

The preſent Church ſymbolizeth with the ancient Church in the Scholaſtick Theology's Miſtakes touching the Religious Worſhip of the Holy Ghoſt.

I. IT is too viſible, that the Church of God in her Publick Offices may not agree with God and his Holy Scriptures, and that the Church's Scholaſtick Trinitarians are diſſonant from the Scriptural and Chriſtian Trinitarians: for the Holy Writers of the New Teſtament and the Holy People that liv'd in their time, were Trinitarians, as well as thoſe that liv'd in after-ages; but not ſuch Trinitarians either in their Doctrine or their Worſhip: for after that the Scholaſtick Theology and Trinity was introduc'd into the Church (which was very early) it made a change in her Worſhip (by degrees) and this change for the worſe is ſtill continued unto this Day. For although we have the Maxim of Socrates in our Mouths, (w) unumquemque Deum ſic coli oportere, quomodo ſe ipſe colendum eſſe præceperit (every God is to be worſhipp'd according to his own appointment) although as Proteſtants we profeſs, that the Bible only is our Religion, and that the Holy Scriptures are the Rule of our Faith and Worſhip, a ſufficient and only ſure Rule (as being the only ſure Revelation of the Mind of God) yet we are not ſo careful as we ought to be, to conform our Belief to their Doctrine, our Lives to their Laws, or our Worſhip to the devotional part of Scripture. Of this Nature (according to our Idea of the Holy Ghoſt) there are many paſſages in our publick Liturgy, ſome of which with the Modeſty becoming a private Man I ought to propoſe, to be review'd and conſider'd by Learned and Holy Men, and more eſpecially by our Governours in Church and State. The firſt of theſe is the Collect upon the Feaſt of Trinity in the Communion-ſervice. It is very meet, right and our bounden duty, that we ſhould at all times, and in all places give thanks unto thee, O Lord, Almighty Everlaſting God: who art one God, one Lord, not one only Perſon, but three Perſons in one Subſtance. For that which we believe of the Glory of the Father, the ſame we believe of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, without any difference or inequality. Therefore with Angels and Archangels, and with all the Company of Heaven, we laud and magnifie thy glorious Name, evermore praiſing thee and ſaying, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hoſts, Heaven and Earth are full of thy Glory. Glory be to thee, O Lord moſt High. If we ask, who this one God and one Lord is, that is thus celebrated as the Almighty and moſt High God, the Lord God of Hoſts, the Creator of all things? It muſt be anſwer'd, that it is not peculiarly God the Father (whoſe Name is commanded to be left out of this Hymn on the Feaſt of Trinity) but it is one eſſential God with three Perſons, who are all this one God and a threefold Imperial Eſtate of Almighty Everlaſting God, the Lord moſt High, the Lord God of Hoſts, the Creator of Heaven and Earth, without (as to Glory) any difference or inequality. This eſſential God with three Perſons is made a Name (which is a Perſon) and one Lord, which denoteth but one Perſon (yet the Hymn ſaith not one only Perſon) and as the Holy Ghoſt is made God definitively and the Sovereign Lord, ſo the Divine Service and the Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving is communicated and offered to him without making any difference of the Divine Perſons: as in the ſame Communion-Service thus we exhort the People; Above all things ye muſt give moſt humble and hearty thanks to God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt for the Redemption of the World by the Death and Paſſion of our Saviour Chriſt: Which Exhortation plainly ſpeaketh the ſenſe of S. Ambroſe, that the Holy Ghoſt gave our Saviour to death, that he is the Author and Donour of all our Goſpel-bleſſings, and it implieth an Offering of the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt to him, as in the Church of Rome the Sacrifice of the Maſs is offer'd up to the whole Trinity; Suſcipe ſancta Trinitas, unus Deus, hanc oblationem.

II. That ſhort Hymn or Doxology to the Trinity called Gloria Patri was expreſs'd in the elder times of the Church, σὺν ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, with the Holy Spirit. And S. Baſil affirmeth, that this form of Doxology (x) was an uſage older than Humane Memory, and that it was in uſe in the Church ever ſince the Goſpel was preach'd. To ſhew the Antiquity of it, he citeth the Alexandrian Dionyſius, who ſaith (in his ſecond Epiſtle to Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome) that he followed the Form and Rule of the Elders before him in this Doxology, (y) To God the Father and the Son our Lord Jeſus Chriſt with the Holy Spirit

be

(w) S. Aug. de Conſenſ. Evang. l. 1. c. 18.

(x) De Sp. Sanct. c. 29.

(y) Τῷ δὲ θεῷ ϗ πατρὶ ϗ υἱῷ τῷ κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ σὺν τῷ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, δόξα ϗ κράτος εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων.

be Glory and Dominion for ever and ever. He citeth alſo Clemens Romanus, Irenæus, Euſebius, Origen, and ſaith, that the ſame form of Doxology was us'd in the Church of Neocæſarea, and was brought in by Greg. Thaumaturgus. He affirmeth, that Firmilianus and Meletius were of this mind, the Orientals alſo and thoſe of the Weſt almoſt from Illyricum to the end of the World. He citeth alſo Africanus the Hiſtorian, who in the Fifth Book of his Chronicon hath this Doxology. We give thanks to him, who afforded to our Fathers the Saviour of all and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ᾧ ἡ δόξα ϗ ἡ μεγαλωσύνη σὺν ἁγίῳ πνεύματι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, to whom be Glory and Magnificence with the Holy Spirit for ever. But touching theſe Ancients cited by S. Baſil it muſt be acknowledg'd, that ſeveral of them are either not good Authorities or not for his Purpoſe. For the Sayings of Clem. Romanus and Irenæus which he hath cited, are not Doxologies, nor are thoſe of Origen; and Euſebius certainly was of Opinion, that the Holy Spirit is a Creature. As for the Alexandrian Dionyſius, S. Baſil himſelf ſaith (z) that he was παντοδαπὸς, various and inconſiſtent with himſelf, ſometimes admitting conſubſtantial and ſometimes deſtroying it, and creaturizing the Holy Spirit. And ſo he is dealt with by ſome learned Men (a) that ſometimes ſuſpect him of Hereſie, and ſometimes cite his Sayings as Oracles. So notwithſtanding the high Character that S. Baſil giveth of Greg. Thaumaturgus, yet he reporteth of him (b) that he called the Son κτίσμα, ποίημα, Creature and Facture, which maketh it very improbable, that he ſhould introduce into the Church of Neocæſarea the commonly reputed Orthodox Doxology. But beſides the incompetency of S. Baſil's Authorities, there is another conſideration which very much blemiſheth his Diſcourſe touching the Antiquity of this Doxology; and that is an ancient uſage (as he calleth it) among the Chriſtian People, who when light in the Evening was brought in, were wont to ſay, αἰνοῦμεν πατέρα ϗ υἱὸν ϗ ἅγιον πνεῦμα θεοῦ, we praiſe the Father and Son and the Holy Spirit of God. If this blind ſuperſtitious Uſage was coeval with the Doxology uſed in Churches, as S. Baſil ſeemeth to think it (for he ſaith, none can tell who brought it in) neither of them could be of Apoſtolical Original and Antiquity. Nor doth S. Ambroſe think, that the Doxology uſed in Churches was of Apoſtolical Original; for he aſſigneth another Origin of it (c) majores noſtri, our Anceſtors (ſaith he) did conjoin the Glory of Chriſt, cum Spiritu, with the Holy Ghoſt. S. Baſil ſo far agreeth with S. Ambroſe, he is content (d) that his form of Doxology be reckon'd amongſt unwritten Traditions, and ſaith, our Fathers were the Authors of it.

They that inſtituted it, are the beſt Expoſitors of the Senſe of it: But the form of Words may be underſtood, to ſignifie in a twofold Senſe. Which that I may intelligibly illuſtrate, let us ſuppoſe, that the Spirit of Holineſs belongeth to the Pope's Holineſs, and that I aſcribe Glory and Dominion to his Holineſs with the Spirit of Holineſs, or to him with the Holy Spirit. This Doxology may be underſtood in a twofold Senſe. For it may be underſtood, to mean, that I aſcribe Glory and Dominion to his Holy Spirit as to an Honour-perſon of Glory and Dominion as well as himſelf, and as much as himſelf. And it may be underſtood, to mean only, that I aſcribe Glory and Dominion to him conſider'd as in ſeparate and undivided from (or conjoin'd with) his Holy Spirit; that to this one complex Object himſelf as duly conſorted with his Holy Spirit I make my Doxology. In this latter ſenſe our being Baptiz'd in the Name of the Father and the Holy Ghoſt is an Aſcription of the Glory of the Godhead to the Father with the Holy Ghoſt; it is an Aſcription of it in Faith and in Fact, although not in expreſs form of Words: And that which muſt be done in Faith and in Fact, may be done in an expreſs devotional form of Words. But it is the former, not this latter ſenſe, that is the meaning of the Doxology expounded according to the ſenſe of the Church, the Scholaſtic Theology, the Fathers and them that inſtituted it. (e) Our Anceſtors in their Doxology did therefore conjoin the Glory of Chriſt with the Holy Ghoſt, to ſignifie, that Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt (are in the Senſe of the Scholaſtic Theology) of one Potentacy, each one being equally the Lord, God, the Lord our God. The Doxology of Gloria Patri thus expounded is ſuch as I cannot juſtifie; it is not (as all our Religious Worſhip ought to be order'd) to the Glory of God the Father, but the contrary; it claſheth with the main of our Idea of the Holy Ghoſt, more eſpecially with this eminent Branch of it; that the Holy Ghoſt is neither a Perſon of external Glory, nor of Political Imperial-perſonal Glory (of Dominion and Glory and Kingdom) which is the Glory that our Hymns and Doxologies do and ought to expreſs. For ſo the Hymn of Dinonyſius (before cited) aſcribeth δόξαν ϗ κράτος, Glory and Dominion or Empire; and the Hymn of Africanus aſcribeth δόξαν ϗ μεγαλωσύνην, Glory and Majeſty, which denoteth Political Imperial Majeſty.

III. That form of Gloria Patri which is now us'd, and that other form which the (above cited) Fathers commend, are both of them ſo far amiſs, that it is much to be deſir'd, that a better and more ancient form of Gloria Patri was ſubſtituted in their ſtead. For it is certain, that the more ancient form of Gloria Patri is not that which was us'd by the Fathers of the Fourth Century (when the Church began to be hugely degenerate) but that which was us'd in the days of Polycarp, much nearer to the Apoſtles times. This form of Gloria Patri was thus expreſs'd by him at his Martyrdom. (f) I praiſe thee, I bleſs thee, I glorifie thee, by the eternal High Prieſt Jeſus Chriſt thy beloved Son, δι' οὗ σοὶ σὺν αὐτῷ ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ δόξα, by whom Glory be to thee together with him in (or through) the Holy Spirit, now and for ever. J. Mart. giving an account of the Religion of Chriſtians ſaith more than once (g) we Worſhip the Father, Son and Prophetic Spirit; the Son in the ſecond place, and the Prophetic Spirit ἐν τρίτῃ τάξει, in the third Rank or Order. In calling the Holy Spirit the Prophetic Spirit he clearly expreſſeth our Idea of the Holy Ghoſt, which is the Holy Inſpiration virtue and Agent: But what Worſhip the Chriſtians of his time gave to this Prophetic Spirit, this Father doth not clearly expreſs. Yet from ſome Paſſages in him it ſeemeth to have been a conjoining the Holy Spirit with the other divine Perſons in a Doxology, which was ſo far a Worſhipping the Holy Ghoſt. For deſcribing the Chriſtians Celebration of the Euchariſt and the Preſident's conſecrating it he ſaith

(z) Ep.41. p.803.

(a) Petav. de Trin. l. 1. c. 14. S. 13. & l. 3. c. 7. S. 9.

(b) Ep.54.

(c) De ſp. Sanct. l. 2. c. 10.

(d) Supr. c. 27, 28.

(e) Ideo ut unam patris & filii & ſpiritus ſancti majores noſtri dicerent poteſtatem, cum ſpiritu ſancto gloriam Chriſti eſſe memorabant. S. Ambroſ. de ſp. ſanct. l. 2. c. 10.

Phil. 2. 11.

(f) Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 15.

(g) Apol. 2. p. 56, 60.

(h) He ſendeth up laud and glory to the Father of all by the Name of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Again he ſaith, in all our Oblations (i) we bleſs the Maker of all things by his Son Jeſus Chriſt and by the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is not the Mediator, as the Son is, yet this Father ſaith, they offer'd up their Praiſe to God, not only by the Son, but alſo by the Holy Spirit. Which ſeemeth to argue, that as they offer'd up their Praiſe to God through Chriſt Jeſus, ſo they offer'd it up alſo in Polycarp's form of Doxology ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, in (or through) the Holy Spirit. Did our ſhort Hymn of Gloria Patri run in this form it would be expreſſive of the right Faith of the Trinity, purely Scriptural and agreeable to Chriſtianity, and ſo agreeable to the Doxologies of the holy Writers, that we ſhould delight to uſe it in Conjunction with them and them with it, and it would not (as that form of Gloria Patri which now we uſe, doth) exclude out of our Aſſemblies and God-ſervice theſe many heavenly Doxologies of the New Teſtament. Who is the bleſſed and only Potentate, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords; who only hath Immortality, dwelling in the light which no Man can approach unto, whom no Man hath ſeen nor can ſee: To whom be Honour and Power everlaſting. Amen. Now unto the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, the only wiſe God, be Honour and Glory, for ever and ever. Amen. To God only wiſe be Glory through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. Amen. Now unto God and our Father be Glory for ever and ever. Amen. According to the Will of God our Father, to whom be Glory for ever and ever. Amen. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, unto him be Glory in the Church by Chriſt Jeſus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen. The God of all Grace who hath called us to his eternal Glory by Chriſt Jeſus, to him be Glory and Dominion for ever and ever. Amen. To the only wiſe God our Saviour be Glory and Majeſty, Dominion and Power, both now and ever. Amen. To our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to him be Glory both now and for ever. Amen. Through Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be Glory for ever and ever. Amen. Unto him that loved us, and waſhed us from our Sins in his own Blood, and hath made us Kings and Prieſts unto God and his Father; to him be Glory and Dominion for ever and ever. Amen. Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, which was and is, and is to come. Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain, to receive Power and Riches, and Wiſdom and Strength, and Honour and Glory and Bleſſing. Bleſſing and Honour, and Glory and Power be unto him that ſitteth upon the Throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen.

1 Tim. 6. 15, 16.
1 Tim. 1. 17.
Rom. 16. 27.
Phil. 4. 20.
Gal. 1. 4, 5.
Eph. 3. 20 21.
1 Pet. 5. 10.
Jude 25
Heb. 13. 21.
Apoc. 1. 5, 6.
Apoc. 4 8. and 5. 12, 13.

IV. In the beginning of the Litany we make a proper ſolemn Prayer to the Holy Ghoſt (doing the Service of Religion unto him) and this Prayer is, to have Mercy upon us miſerable Sinners; which muſt ſignifie his forgiving our Sins, that doth not belong to him, nor doth it belong to him as a Political-imperial divine Potentate, to exerciſe Mercy or punitive Severity in ſaving or deſtroying miſerable Sinners. In the ſame place we pray again for the ſame thing to the whole Trinity at once; which it is marvellous, that we ſhould do, conſidering that in ſo doing we venture (in high and holy Things) a great way further, than we have any clear light to guide us; that we our ſelves confeſs, we do not underſtand the Scholaſtic Trinity, which we pray to; that we recede from our own Rule, which is to make the Bible our Religion; that this mode of praying claſheth with the main of our Idea of The Holy Ghoſt, and with the ſenſe of our firſt Reformers. (k) For Luther blotted theſe words out of his German Prayers, Sancta Trinitas, unus Deus, miſerere nobis, Holy Trinity, one God, have mercy on us. Calvin in one of his Epiſtles ſaith (l) hæc precatio vulgò recepta, Sancta Trinitas, unus Deus, miſerere noſtri, non mihi placet, & omninò barbariem ſapit. This commonly receiv'd Prayer, Holy Trinity, one God, have mercy on us, pleaſeth not me, plainly it ſavoureth of rudeneſs. He ſeemeth, to think it rudeneſs in Grammar; and there is reaſon, to think it ſo; for it is the making that a Name, which is no Name. For Prayer is a calling upon the Name of God or the Lord (as the Scripture defineth it, and as the People of Chriſt are they that call upon this Name, Act. 9. 21.) and the Name of God or the Name of the Lord ſignifieth the Perſon of God or the Perſon of the Lord (that Honour-perſon:) But the Perſon of God or the Perſon of the Lord is not the Trinity, nor is the Trinity the Perſon of God or of the Lord. Every Perſon of the Trinity is not upon the Throne, nor is every one of them our Saviour-Lord (and to whom ſhould we make our Prayers but to our Saviour-Lord only?) Nor is every one of them God definitively, or the Imperial Eſtate of God abſolutely, or the moſt high God without limitation of ſenſe, or the Honour-perſon of the Lord, or a Political imperial divine Potentate, or a Political kind of Relation, or the Proprietor of a People and Kingdom, or the Author of our Spiritual Goods and Bleſſings, or the Pattern of our Holineſs, or the Judge of All, or the Creator, Benefactor and Providential Governour of the Univerſe; if in our Aſcriptions of Glory and in our Prayers we make them ſuch, whether this muſt be counted rudeneſs, or be called by ſome other Name, is left to them, to determine, that are competent Judges in ſuch matters. But of the ſame Nature with our Prayer to the Trinity is this Form of Prayer to be uſ'd at Sea. God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghoſt have mercy upon us, ſave us now and evermore. Amen. In Benedictions precationary to the Holy Ghoſt we ought to mention only his proper Functions and Operations (which he performeth as the Inſpiration-virtue and Agent of the Lord, ſuch as illuminating, ſanctifying, ſtrengthening, and the like:) But in ſolemnizing Matrimony we make the Holy Ghoſt a Providential kind of Governour in this Benediction. God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghoſt bleſs, preſerve and keep you. In our Book of Ordination we have an Hymn, which in the Title of it maketh the Holy Ghoſt the Creator; throughout the Body of it (which is twofold) it maketh the Holy Ghoſt the Honour-perſon of the Lord; it is a proper formal Prayer to him not only for the Spiritual, but Temporal Bleſſings (external Peace and Safety,) in this ſtrain it prayeth to him for Bleſſings, according to thy Promiſe Lord; and the cloſe of it maketh Aſcriptions of Excellency, Laud and Praiſe to the Holy Ghoſt as to the Father and the Son without any difference or inequality. Whoſo is wiſe, he will underſtand theſe things, prudent and he ſhall know them.

CHAP.

(h) Αἶνον ϗ δόξαν τῷ πατρὶ τῶν ὅλων διὰ τȣ̃ ὀνόματος τȣ̃ υἱȣ̃ ϗ τȣ̃ πνεύματος τȣ̃ ἁγίȣ ἀναπέμπει. Ubi ſupr. p. 97.

(i) Εὐλογȣ̃μεν τὸν ποιητὴν τῶν πάντων διὰ τȣ̃ υἱȣ̃ αὐτȣ̃ Ἰησȣ̃ Χριςȣ̃, ϗ διὰ πνεύματος τȣ̃ ἁγίȣ. Ibid. p. 98.

(k) Valentia T. 1. Diſp. 2. Qu. 1. punct. 1 S. 7.

(l) Cancel. Diſ. de voc Trin. S. 44.

CHAP. V.

1. An Idea of the Nature of the Holy Scriptures. That the Bible is the Holy Popular Book. Sect. 1. A diſtribution of Things and Perſons into Popular and Idiotically Philoſophical. 1. Of the Philoſophers Acroaticks and Exotericks. 2. Perſons and Things fitly denominated Idiotically Philoſophical. Sect. 2. Of the People in the narrower Acceptation. 1. The word Populus in one narrower Acceptation ſignifieth the common People contradiſtinguiſh'd to Philoſophers. 2. Of Philoſophers Contempt of them. 3. A due Vindication of the common People from many Conſiderations. Sect. 3. In our Idea the Scriptures are denominated Popular in the large ſignification; and that they muſt be ſo prov'd. 1. Becauſe they are the Book of Religion. 2. Becauſe they are the Book of the Chriſtian Religion. 3. Becauſe they are the Book of the Law. 4. Becauſe they are the Book of Life. Several Inferences from thence. Sect. 4. The Scriptures are Popular ſo as to be Holy-popular, and as ſuch oppoſite to Philoſophers and their Schools. 1 Becauſe the Holy People are the People. 2. The Holy People and their Paſtors make one Holy People. 3. The Church a Popular Syſtem. 4. The New Iſrael the New Holy-popular Syſtem, as the Old Iſrael was the Old Holy-popular Syſtem. 5. A Connexion between Holy and Popular.

I. Although an Idea of the Son of God might reaſonably be expected, to be connex'd with the Idea of God and of his Holy Spirit, yet it is too ſoon, to proceed to ſuch an Idea, which muſt not be repreſented, till we come to the times of the New Teſtament. But this is a proper place for an Idea of the Nature of the Holy Scriptures (that are connex'd with the Holy Spirit that inſpir'd them) which will be a Rule, to fix and determine the Ambiguity of their Senſe, and therefore will prepare the way for a true Idea of the Son of God. For a principal thing that incumbreth his Idea, is an ambiguity of Senſe in ſeveral places of Scripture that relate to his Perſon. His Generation, his Incarnation, his Name the Logos (and ſome others) are commonly underſtood in a Scholaſtical and Philoſophical kind of Senſe, which is unpopular and unholy (of Kind and Quality Philoſophic-pagan:) But they may be underſtood in an Holy-popular kind of Senſe; and which of theſe is the true Interpretation, muſt be determin'd by an Idea of the Nature of the Holy Scriptures. If the Scriptures are a Scholaſtical and Philoſophical kind of Book (a Book of Scholaſtical and Philoſophical Matters) then a Scholaſtic Deity, a Scholaſtic Trinity, a Scholaſtic Logos, a Scholaſtic Generation and Incarnation of the Logos, are true and genuine Articles; then a late Pretenſion muſt take place, Philoſophia Scripturæ interpres (the Scripture muſt be interpreted by Philoſophy) then we muſt have recourſe to Philo and the Schools of the Philoſophic Pagans, to interpret to us the Logos of our Religion. But if the Holy Scriptures are no Scholaſtical or Philoſophical kind of Book, but of a quite alien Nature and Character, then theſe great Articles of Religion are miſunderſtood by Scholaſtic Divines (Ancient and Modern) and they ought, to change their Idea's, to conform them to the Holy Scriptures. Whoſe true Nature and Character is compriſed in theſe very few words, the Bible is the Holy-popular Book (of Kind and Quality ſuch) a Book of the Holy-popular Matters (the Popular-religious Matters) not of Matters unpopular and unholy; and conſequently it is a Book of the Holy-popular Learning, not of the Unholy and Unpopular, the Scholaſtical and Philoſophical.

SECTION I.

A diſtribution of Things and Perſons into Popular and Idiotically Philoſophical.

I. THIS Idea and Character of the Holy Scriptures implieth, that the Popular Philoſophy muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from that which is proper and peculiar to the Schools of Philoſophers, which may be called the Philoſophy idiotically Philoſophical. All Popular Syſtems and Communities conſiſt of a ſort of Men denominated by Ariſtotle οἱ πολιτικοὶ ϗ πρακτικοί, Men of the Political and Practic kind of Life, whoſe Character may be underſtood from a Diſcourſe of Salmaſius touching his Acroaticks and Exotericks. (m) Andronicus in Agellius (ſaith he) ſheweth the difference between Ariſtotle's Exotericks and Acroaticks. “Which is not what the Paraphraſt of his Ethicks hath fondly told the “World, that his Exotericks were Diſcourſes, “which he deliver'd by word of Mouth, and “the other ſuch as he wrote: But they differ “from one another in Matter and Method of “handling, in reſpect of Auditors, and the “time alſo of their delivery. The one was de-“liver'd in the Lyceum, the other in the Even-“ing. At the one none but his Scholars might “be admitted, who were called ἀκροαταὶ pro-“perly (for ſo in Suidas, ἀκροατὴς ὁ μαθητὴς, an “Auditor ſtrictly ſo called is a Diſciple) whence “came the Name of ἀκροατικοὶ λόγοι, the Acroa-“ticks. But at the other all might be promiſ-“cuouſly preſent, the People as well as his “Scholars, they were free and open to any, e-“ven τοῖς ἐξωτερικοῖς, to extraneous Perſons who “had not embrac'd his Diſcipline. Thoſe were “οἰκειακοί, and Domeſticks, theſe Aliens and “thoſe that were without. To his Acroaticks “none were lightly admitted, only thoſe whoſe “natural Wit he had made trial of, together “with their induſtry in Study, and whether “they were furniſh'd with the Elements of “Learning. And as the Perſons were different, “ſo was the Matter and Argument of his Diſ-“courſes; for he did not Diſcourſe of the ſame “Matters before the rude and unskilful, nor “the young and newly initiated, and thoſe “that were great Proficients, but accommoda-“ted things to the capacity of his Hearers, “more eaſie things to the leſs intelligent. Be-“ſides, not only their capacity, but their re-“liſh “ liſh was regarded. He did not (its likely) open the ſecrets of his Philoſophy to Men of Buſineſs, neglecting what was proper for their purpoſe things Moral and Political. Therefore Andronicus ſaith, that the Exotericks concern'd Rhetorick and civil Buſineſs; but to the Students in Philoſophy and ſuch as affected the Knowledge and Contemplation of things Natural, and to ſuch as were his Diſciples, to theſe he opened thoſe Arcana. (n) His Acroaticks treated of the more remote and ſubtil Philoſophy, of Phyſical Contemplations or Metaphyſical and Logical Diſquiſitions. Himſelf ſaith in his Ethicks (o) Theſe are variouſly treated of both in the Exoterical Diſcourſes and in thoſe that are according to Philoſophy. “ Exoterical Diſcourſes are contradiſtinguiſh'd to thoſe that are according to Philoſophy; this latter being the Study of extraordinary, remote and recondite Wiſdom, the knowledge of things Natural and Divine and the Contemplation of them. And thoſe that imploy'd themſelves in theſe, were σοφοὶ and θεωρητικοί, the wiſe and contemplative Men, whoſe deſign and buſineſs of Life was Contemplation: But the Practic Life was another thing, in which they that imploy'd themſelves, were not called σοφοὶ, wiſe Men, but φρόνιμοι, prudent Men, as Ariſtotle ſaith in his Politicks. Hence alſo he putteth a diſtinction between the νοῦς θεωρητικὸς and πρακτικὸς, the Speculative and Practic Mind, and it is a Queſtion in him, (p) Whether a Political and Practical Life be more eligible, or a Life ſequeſtred from external Buſineſs, ſuch as the Speculative Man's, who ſome ſay, is the only Philoſopher. “ In his Exotericks therefore he diſcourſed of the things that appertain to the πρακτικὸς καὶ πολιτικὸς βίος, the Practic and Political Life: In the other of what appertain'd to the φιλόσοφος καὶ θεωρητικὸς, the Philoſophic and Theoretic Life. Hence Arts and Sciences were diſtributed according to his Auditors. Rhetorick, Ethicks and Politicks were called Exoterical Diſciplines (ſo Plutarch (q) Ethicos & Politicos libros, ἐξωτερικῶν, nomine cenſet appellatos, counteth the Books of Ethicks and Politicks Exotericks:) But Logick, Metaphyſicks, Phyſiology, Acroatical. Likewiſe in the manner of handling they were different from one another. For as his Exoterical Diſcourſes were accommodate to Popular uſe, ſo his way of diſcourſing in them was more Popular, more large and plain: In the other more curt and obſcure.

(m) Not. in Epiſtet. p. 228, 229.

Here are two very different Families of Things and Perſons. The one are thoſe that live the Political and Practic, the Popular-ſocial Life, that conſtitute the Popular and Exoterical Syſtems and Societies, Cities, Commonwealths and Empires, to whom therefore all the great things of the World do belong, and are Homogeneous to their Character, Popular and Exoterical (ſuch as the Principality and the Prieſthood, the Matters of Religion and Government, of War and Peace, of Courts, Camps and auguſt Aſſemblies, of Laws, Honours and Inheritances, of Mechanic Arts and Works) and theſe are repreſented as unconcern'd in the Acroaticks. Not as if they were wholly alien from them (for what Ariſtotle ſaith of Rhetorick and Logick, is true of the other Diſciplines of the Circle (r) πάντες τρόπον τινὰ μετέχουσιν αὐτῶν, all in ſome ſort and degree partake of them:) But becauſe in great degree they are alien from them, and are aſymbolous to them and their Character. Yet theſe that have nothing Characteriſtical of a Philoſopher, are allow'd to have their Philoſophy (the Ethicks and Politicks) which therefore muſt be called the Popular and Exoterical Philoſophy. And conſequently we Chriſtians muſt allow them, to have their Theology or Philoſophy, which muſt be called the Holy-popular Theology or Philoſophy (ſuch is the Theology that belongeth to Chriſtians as Chriſtians and therefore to all Chriſtians) in contradiſtinction to the Theologia Scholaſtica, Metaphyſica, Philoſophica, which anſwereth to the Acroaticks of Ariſtotle. Theſe are repreſented as proper and peculiar to his School, to his οἰκειακοὶ, Privado's or Domeſticks, and they may be ſaid, to be peculiar to all the Schools of Philoſophers; for all of thoſe ſegregate Syſtems had ſomething like the Acroaticks (although ſeveral both of the Italic and Ionic ſucceſſion did diſcard the Acroaticks) and theſe their τὰ ἴδια, or peculiarities may be fitly called their τὰ ἰδιωτικὰ, (as ἴδιος and ἰδιωτικὸς is oppos'd to δημόσιος, Popular-publick) and therefore may be ſaid, to be idiotically Philoſophical, as being at leaſt in ſome reſpect and degree ſuch.

II. They may be called idiotically Philoſophical either in a Senſe of reproach and diſparagement, or without reproach and diſparagement. And the accommodateneſs of this Name to the Nature of the things will appear by conſidering, (1.) The deſcriptions of a Philoſopher in Plato, who in the Perſon of Callicles thus declaimeth againſt Philoſophy. “ Philoſophy is indeed, O Socrates, a very ornamental thing, if a Man converſeth with it moderately and in the time of his Youth; but it ſpoileth the Men, that are immoderately converſant in it. For though they be furniſh'd with a good Wit, yet if they Philoſophize long, they will inevitably become unskilful in all thoſe things wherein a good and excellent Man ſhould be expert. They are rendred Ignaro's as to the Laws of the City, and Diſcourſe, which is requiſite for private and publick Converſation, and as to all the pleaſures and purſuits of Mankind, and in ſhort as to the whole buſineſs of Manners. So that if they ſet themſelves about any private or publick Action, they become ridiculous, as Political Men are, when they intermeddle with Philoſophical Diſputations.—— But the beſt way is, to have ſomething of both: So much Philoſophy doth well, as may ſerve for Juvenile Erudition; for it is not unbecoming Youth to Philoſophize. But for a Man at Age to Philoſophize, is as incongruous, as for a Man to ſpeak and play like a Child; for Childiſh Imperfections in Speech and Sports are pleaſing in that Age, and more Man-like is offenſive: So in a young Man Philoſophy is decorous, but not to forſake thoſe Studies at Age, is ſervile and ignoble. For ſuch the Man will become, that ſhunneth the converſe of Men, and never meddleth with any thing that is great and generous. You neglect, O Socrates, what you ſhould take care of, and render your generous Soul puerile, not knowing how to ſpeak in publick Conſultations, nor

(n) Ἀκροατικὰ autem vocabantur, in quibus Philoſophia remotior ſubtiliorque agitabatur, quæque ad naturæ contemplationes diſceptationeſve dialecticas pertinebant.

(o) Ἐπέσκεπται δὲ πολλοῖς περὶ αὐταῖς τρόποις, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἐξωτερικοῖς λόγοις καὶ ἐν τοῖς κατὰ φιλοσοφίαν.

(p) Πότερον ὁ πολιτικὸς καὶ πρακτικὸς βίος αἱρετὸς, ἢ μᾶλλον ὁ πάντων ἐκτὸς ἀπολελυμένος, οἷον θεωρητικός τις, ὃν μόνον τινές φασιν εἶναι φιλόσοφον.

(q) Ibid. p. 236.

(r) Rhet. l. 1. c. 1.

“ nor make a good choice for your ſelf, nor how to adviſe others; is it not a diſhonourable thing, that if any ſhould caſt you into Priſon and accuſe you as a Criminal, you would not know what to do, but ſweat and gape only, not able to ſay any thing for your ſelf? And if any wretched fellow be your accuſer, you muſt die, if he will have it ſo? and how is this Wiſdom, that maketh an ingenuous Man worſe than he was before, a Man that can neither help nor deliver himſelf or others out of any great dangers: but all he hath is expos'd to Spoil and Rapine, and he liveth diſhonourably in the City and every Man may abuſe him impune? away therefore with Arguments and mind Buſineſs, and imploy your ſelf in thoſe things, whence you may become wiſe indeed; leave thoſe Trifles and delirous Trinkets, which will leave you to an empty Houſe, and imitate them that acquire Riches and Glory and many other Goods. That this Oration of Plato may be no diſcredit to its Author Agellius diſtinguiſheth a twofold Philoſophy: For Plato ſpeaketh not, ſaith he, (s) touching that Philoſophy which is the Diſcipline of all Virtues, and which excelleth in publick and private Offices, and virtuouſly adminiſtreth Cities and the Commonwealth (which is the popular Philoſophy:) but touching the frivolous and puerile ſtudy of Subtilties (ſuch is the Scholaſtick Theology) which conduceth nothing to Life, either to preſerve or regulate it. In his Theætetus Plato maketh this Deſcription of his Philoſophic Theoriſts (which Clemens and Theodoret (t) count a Deſcription of the Chriſtian Life;) “ Even from their Youth they are ignorant of the way to the places of popular Conventions, to the place of Judicature or the Senate-houſe, or any other Common-Council of the City; as for the Laws and publick Decrees whether written or publiſh'd by word of Mouth, they neither ſee nor hear them. The Factions of the Sodalities, their Meetings, their Suppers and their Revels they do not ſo much as dream of: Whether good or evil hath been done in the City, or whether any be infam'd by his Anceſtors, they are more unacquainted with, than with the Sand of the Sea; yea ſuch a Man doth not know, that he knoweth them not, for he doth not abſent himſelf from them, to be taken notice of, but in reality his Body is only in the City, but his Mind accounting all theſe things little or nothing, reſteth no where, according to Pindar, but is meaſuring by Geometry the things below and the things above the Earth, and tranſcending the Heavens in her Aſtronomical Exerciſes: ſearching into the Univerſal Nature of all Beings, not condeſcending to any particular thing that is near at hand. And as Thales being intent upon the Stars and looking upwards fell into a Ditch, a certain Thracian Girl is ſaid, to have wittily ſcoff'd at him, that he endeavour'd, to ſee thoſe things that were in Heaven, and could not ſee thoſe things that were before his Eyes and at his Feet: the ſame jear may be put upon all that are converſant in Philoſophy; for indeed ſuch a Man is a ſtranger to his next Neighbour, not only as to what he doth, but he ſcarce knoweth, whether he be a Man or ſome other Animal. But what Man is, and what Action or Paſſion is agreeable to ſuch a Nature, this he is inquiſitive about, and induſtrious in the reſearch: Yet if ſuch a Man be forc'd to diſcourſe either privately or in publick about ſuch things that are at hand and before his Eyes, he moveth Laughter, not ony to Thracians, but to the reſt of the People, falling into Ditches and Heſitations becauſe of his unskilfulneſs in ſuch Affairs, and his great Ineptitude gaineth him the Reputation of a Fool. It can be no injurious Contumely, to call ſuch Philoſophy as this (in great degree) Idiotically Philoſophical and Unpopular in a ſenſe of Reproach.

(2.) The Myſtic-Metaphyſical (or Acroamatical) Theology of the Philoſphic Pagans. For the Philoſophers who had nothing to do with Religion more than other Men, would be always meddling with the Gods. (u) Philoſophy and the Religion of the Gods are very diſtant things: the Profeſſors of Philoſophy by whom none cometh to the Gods, are another ſort of Men than the Prelates of Religion. Religion is a popular Buſineſs, (not peculiar to the Schools of Philoſophers) yet the Philoſophers in their Schools buſied themſelves with multifarious Diſquiſitions about the Gods, and their Theology is called The natural Theology by Varro, (w) yet he remov'd this Theology from the People, and ſhut it up within the Walls of the Philoſophers Schools. There the Scholaſtick Theology may reign ſecurely, but it ought not to ſtep beyond thoſe Walls, to be a Theology or Religion for the People, to make Articles of Faith for them, to form their Creeds, and to compoſe their Liturgies; for theſe things (although they are done in the Chriſtian Church) the ancient Pagans were too wiſe to allow. Their Myſtic-Metaphyſical Theology and the Deities thereof was had in great admiration by its Privado's; but they never pretended, to introduce their Scholaſtick Deities into Religion. Plato was ſenſible, that his firſt Scholaſtick Deity was ſo idiotically Philoſophical and unpopular, (x) that he would not allow any mention of him to be made amongſt the Vulgar, leſt they ſhould make it a matter of deriſion, as being altogether remote from what is popular. When Dionyſius deſir'd, to be further inſtructed touching this Deity, Plato anſwer'd, I muſt ſpeak to you enigmatically, that if the Writing ſuffereth any thing by Sea or Land, he that readeth it may not underſtand. Take heed, that theſe things fall not into the Hands of the (ἀπαίδευτοι) illiterate; for as I think, οὐκ ἔστι τούτων πρὸς τοὺς πολλοὺς καταγελαστότερα ἀκούσματα, there are not any things more ridiculous amongſt the Multitude than theſe things.

(3.) The Philoſophic Pagan Aſceticks their Maxims and Inſtitutes of the Philoſophic Life, which was in great part nothing better than unpopular Humour, and therefore deſerveth the Name of ἰδιωτικὸς βίος (an idiotical unpopular Life) although that Name uſually ſignifieth, (y) the Vulgar Life contradiſtinct to the Philoſophic. Of the ſame Character is the Platoniſts Intellectual Life, and the Mighty (or rather Almighty) Goods of Virtue which the Stoicks aſſum'd to themſelves, (z) calcatis popularibus bonis, the popular Goods being diſcarded and trampled on. (a) Amongſt the Jews (ſaith Joſephus) three ſorts of Men philoſophize (have their ſeveral Dogme's and Inſtitutes) the Phariſees, Sadducees, Eſſens. The Phariſees

(s) De illa Philoſophia quæ virtutum omnium diſciplina eſt, quæque in publicis ſimul & privatis officiis excellit, civitateſque & Rempublicam, ſi nihil prohibeat, conſtanter & fortiter & perite adminiſtrat: ſed de illa futili atque puerili meditatione argutiarum nihil ad vitam neque tuendam neque ordinandam promovente.

(t) Strom. l. 5. p. m. 434. Theodoret. Therapeut. Ser. 12. p. 169.

(u) Philoſophia & religio Deorum disjuncta ſunt, longeque diſcreta: ſiquidem alii ſunt profeſſores ſapientiæ, per quos utique ad deos non aditur: alii religionis antiſtites. Lactant. l. 4. c. 3.

(w) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 6. c. 5.

(x) Eugubin. de Per. Phil. l. 5. c. 3.

(y) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 2. p. 67. vid. Lactant. l. 3. c. 14.

(z) Sen. Ep. 31.

(a) Selden. de J. Nat. & G. l. 1. c. 2.

riſees are counted a Sect of Philoſophy, and they were a Generation of idiotical unpopular Aſceticks, (b) that look'd upon the populus terræ (the ordinary ſort of Jews as well as Gentiles, the Unlearned and Plebeians) as devoid of intellectual Endowments, whereby they might know the Law and attain to Wiſdom. In purſuit of their own profeſſion of ſuperabundant Sanctimony they ſhunn'd all converſe with the Populus Terræ, not touching them or ſuffering themſelves to be touch'd by them (walking on the ſides of the High-ways, leſt they ſhould be polluted with the touch of any Plebeians;) not eating or drinking with them; and their Maxims were, The Garments of the Plebeians are a Calcation to the Phariſees (that is, they polluted them as much as any thing that a Gonorrhaic had trod upon) The People of the Earth are the Footſtool of the Phariſees. The Laws of their Fraternity were, that no Man muſt receive any thing liquid from a Plebeian, nor be his Gueſt, nor give him entertainment in his own Garment; if ſuch an one had lodg'd in their Houſes a purgation was neceſſary.

(4.) The Application of the Scholaſtick Acroaticks to the Interpretation of Scripture; for ſuch Interpretations muſt be called Idiotically Philoſophical and Unpopular. (c) In Abarbinel Maimonides proveth, that God alone is true or truth, and there is no other truth in any like his truth (that is, nothing beſides truly is;) for though we ſay, that created things exiſt, yet the word Exiſtence is not univocal, but equivocal or analogical (not equally predicated) when attributed to God and created things: for they have Potentia mix'd with Act, Neceſſity with Contingence, and Exiſtence with Privation: but there is none of this in God, and therefore his Truth and theirs is not alike. And this he proveth from that Saying of the Prophet Jeremiah, Dominus Deus veritas eſt, Jer. 10. 10. The Prophet ſaith, The Lord is the true God (in oppoſition to Idols) and Maimonides interpreteth it to mean, that he is Metaphyſical Truth of Exiſtence. From the ſame Philoſophic Vanity theſe Hebrew Doctors will have the Scripture to mean, Deut. 4. 35. (there is none elſe beſides him) not that there is no other God, but that nihil eſt in exiſtentia præter Deum, as if the Scripture deſign'd, to teach the Jews Metaphyſicks. The Tetragrammaton, ſay they, docet de exiſtentiæ neceſſitate (teacheth neceſſary Exiſtence) and ſo the meaning is (there is none beſides him) there is no Exiſtent of neceſſary Exiſtence, there is no true Exiſtent but he alone. So the Men of this ſtrain interpret the Name of God I am, (d) ὡς τῶν μετ' αὐτὸν οὐκ ὄντων κατὰ τὸ εἶναι, as ſignifying that other things which are after him do not exiſt in reality (although they are Spiritual and Eternal things) but they are only by Opinion ſuppos'd to exiſt: τὸ δὲ ὂν τοῦ ἀϊδίου δηλωτικόν ἐστι, this Name denoteth that which is every way Eternal, (e) ſaith Theodoret. Accordingly Theophylact upon the words of our Saviour, Before Abraham was, I am, thus noteth, The very word I am is ἐπὶ θεοῦ κυριώτερα, proper unto God as ſignifying that which perpetually and ever is. So his Father in the Old Teſtament uſeth I am; but touching Abraham he uſeth the word τὸ γενέσθαι, he being corruptible, for that which is made, is corrupted; but I am denoteth an incapability of all Corruption and a Divine Eternity. Agreeably to this mode of Interpreting Scripture, Clemens expoundeth the Darkneſs, which Moſes entred into, where God was (f) to ſignifie τὰς ἀδύτους καὶ ἀειδεῖς περὶ τοῦ ὄντος ἐννοίας, the arcane and informous Notions touching him that is: For which Expoſition he giveth us this Philoſophic Reaſon, God is not in Darkneſs, or in Place, but above Place and Time and every Creature-property. But Gr. Naz. giveth another Philoſophic (or Unpopular) Account of the Darkneſs wherein God is; for poſuit tenebras latibulum ſuum he interpreteth to ſignifie, (g) τὸ σωματικὸν γνόφον, τὴν ἡμετέραν παχύτητα, our Craſſitude, that Corporeal Darkneſs which is between God and us. A like Interpretation is that of the ancient Scholaſticks of the Church, (h) who ſuppoſe, that the infinite Eſſence of the Father is the τόπος φυσικός, natural place of the infinite Eſſence of the Son, wherein he reſteth, and this is the meaning of the Evangeliſts popular Phraſe, The Son is in the Boſom of the Father. But all Such Interpretations of Scripture (wherewith the Scholaſtick Theology aboundeth) are of kind and quality Philoſophic-pagan, Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical, and ought to be denominated idiotically Philoſophical and Unpopular.

Section II.

Of the People in one narrower Acceptation.

I. THE Name Populus (the People) is of various Acceptations, for it is of a larger and ſtricter Acceptation, and ſometimes it is taken in a magnifying, ſometimes in a vilifying, and ſometimes in an indifferent Senſe. (i) By nature all Mankind make but one People. But the Community of Mankind being cantoniz'd into ſeveral Families, Cities, Kingdoms and Empires, every one of theſe ſeveral and diſtinct Societies are accounted a ſeveral and diſtinct People; for ſo we read of (k) familiæ ejus populus, populus Romanus, a Citizen is called Popularis, the Community is called in Scripture, the Daughter of my People, Diſeaſes common thereto are called Morbi populares, and the Pagans civil Theology is ſaid to belong (l) ad urbes populoſque, to Cities and People. The Imperial Lawyers contradiſtinguiſh Nobiles & Populares; but they ſay alſo, (m) Populi appellatione non tantùm ignobiles, ſed & nobiles quoque comprehenduntur, the Name of the People comprehendeth not only the Ignoble but the Noble alſo. Populi appellatione univerſi cives ſignificantur. Homer calleth Agamemnon ποιμένα λαῶν, the Paſtor of the People, in which Appellation the other Kings were contained. The Name Populus therefore is of ſtricter and larger Acceptation, and it is of the number of the τὰ μέσα, and doth ſometimes ſignifie לשבח ad laudem, and ſometimes לגנאי ad contumeliam (as the Jews diſtinguiſh the different Acceptations of the ſame word) and ſometimes in an indifferent Senſe without reſpect either to praiſe or diſparagement; as when it denoteth only τὸ πλῆθος, a multitude or great number. (n) So ſtellarum populus, and civitas omnis in populum effuſa, denoteth only the multitude of Stars and throng of Men. But it ſignifieth in the laudatory or magnifying Senſe, when Scipio in Cicero defineth Rempublicam rem populi, and defineth populum, cœtum multitudinis juris conſenſu & utilitatis communione ſociatum. A multitude of Men combin'd together by a Common Law (a comprehenſion of Rights and Dues) and common Utility are a People. Whence S. Auſtin inferreth, (o) where Juſtice is not, and Right is not obſerv'd, there is no People, only a Multitude which deſerveth not the Name of a People. The publick good is commonly called ſalus populi, and populi cura. And in the Greek Writers τὰ τοῦ δήμου πράγματα (the things

(b) Vorſt. in Maimon. de fund. leg. p. 71.

(c) De cap. Fid. ap. Vorſt. p. 95.

(d) Hæſchel. in Philon. opuſc. p. 239.

(e) Qu. in pentat. proœm.

(f) Strom. l. 2. p. m. 264.

(g) Or. 34. p. 544.

(h) Ap. D. Bull Def. Fid. Nic. p. 285, 28-, 288. ed. an. 1703.

(i) The Anarchy of a limited or mixed Monarchy, p. 8.

(k) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 170.

(l) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 6. c. 8.

(m) Tiraquell. [illegible] p. 526, 527.

(n) [illegible] tan. in Macrob. p. 651, 652.

(o) De C. D. l. 19. 21. C[illegible] in Per[illegible] 319. La[illegible] Hart. l[illegible] c. 7.

things of the People) are the concerns of the Publick. For the Notion of a People or Popular Community is not confin'd to Democracies and popular Commonwealths; (p) the People remaineth the ſame, though the form of Government altereth; as the Roman People was the ſame under Kings, Conſuls, Emperours. With relation to the Roman People in general (Noble and Ignoble) S. Auſtin declaiming againſt the fabulous Theology ſaith, (q) O religioſas aures populares, atque in his etiam Romanas! Under the Name People he comprehendeth the more honourable ſort of Citizens, yet conſidering them as Irreligious, he uſeth the word in ſome ſort in a ſenſe of Infamy and Diſparagement. And ſo doth Antiſthenes in that known Saying of his, (r) multos quidem eſſe populares Deos, unum tamen naturalem (there are many popular Gods, yet but one natural;) for it is manifeſt, that by the People he underſtandeth the whole Multitude of more honourable and leſs honourable Citizens, that follow'd the receiv'd Polytheiſm of his time, yet he taketh the word People in a ſenſe of Diſparagement. But uſually when it ſignifieth in a ſenſe of Diſparagement, it denoteth the meaner ſort of Citizens (the Plebeians or common People) as in the fourth of Xenophon's Memoirs touching Socrates, ὁ δῆμος, the People, is uſed to ſignifie τοὺς πένητας τῶν πολιτῶν, the poorer ſort of Citizens. So Arnobius ſpeaketh of (s) popularis vulgaritas (the vulgar Populace) populus plebeiæ multitudinis, the People of the Plebeian Multitude.

> (t) Præſtat divitem eſſe ac popularem, quàm nobilem & mendicum.
>
> It is better (ſaith Plautus) to be rich and popular (Ignoble) than Noble and a Beggar.

But in Holy Scripture the word Populus is never us'd in a vilifying Senſe, unleſs when it ſignifieth the Heathen People; as Hoſ. 7. 8. Ephraim hath mixed himſelf among the People (the Holy People among the Prophane,) Jer. 10. 7. The Cuſtoms of the People are vain. So Joel 2. 17. Zech. 10. 9. Several times in Holy Scripture the word Populus is us'd in a magnifying Senſe; ſometimes ſignifying a Secular or Civil Popular Community or Republick; as Iſa. 7. 8. Ephraim ſhall be broken, that it be not a People (a Polity or Republick) Jer. 48. 42. Moab ſhall be deſtroyed from being a People. Sometimes ſignifying a Church or an Eccleſiaſtick Popular Community, which conſiſteth of the People of God, Rom. 10. 19. I will provoke them to jealouſie by them that are no People (no People as to God) which in time paſt were not a People, but are now the People of God, 1 Pet. 2. 10. Something of a magnifying Senſe the word Populus hath in it, as it is us'd by Job, ch. 12. 2. No doubt but ye are the (eximious) People.

From which various Acceptations of the word Populus it appeareth, that the Philoſophers and their Schools are comprehended under that Name in a large Acceptation: For they are of the Community of Mankind, the Greek Philoſophers were of the Grecian People in a large Acceptation (and counted themſelves Citizens) and their Philoſophy is called by Clemens, (u) τοῦ λαοῦ φιλοσοφία, the Philoſophy of the (Mundane) People. But it appeareth, alſo, that the Philoſophers and their Schools are contradivided to the People both in a larger and narrower Acceptation; for they are contradiſtinguiſh'd to the People, as the Name Populus comprehendeth both the Noble and Ignoble, the Body of the Citizens and of the Republick, that are no Philoſophers; for with reſpect to all theſe Ethicks and Politicks are denominated The Popular Philoſophy (which is oppos'd to Philoſophy ſtrictly ſo called) and a great Man calleth (w) Moralities, Laws and the like, The Sciences popular. The Philoſophers never were a People, their Philoſophy properly ſuch (x) ab hominum cætu abhorret, they are therefore contradiſtinguiſh'd to People, Nations and the Community of Mankind, that are no Philoſophers. But moſt uſually they are contradiſtinguiſh'd to the People in a narrower Acceptation, as the word Populus denoteth the common People or vulgar ſort (y) οἱ πολλοί, the Plebeian People. A Philoſopher is oppos'd to (z) ὁ πολὺς καὶ δημώδης ἄνθρωπος, a Plebeian and Popular Man; whence Lactantius ſaith of Arceſilas (the Sceptical Philoſopher) that he ought to have diſtinguiſh'd thoſe things which may be known, and thoſe things which cannot be known: (a) Sed ſi id feciſſet, ipſe ſe in populum redegiſſet, but if he had done this, he had ſpoil'd his being a Philoſopher, and reduc'd himſelf to be one of the People.

II. From the People (the vulgar ſort) the Philoſophers had ſo great an averſion, (b) that the Platoniſts for this reaſon (amongſt others) would not become Chriſtians, leaſt they ſhould be called by the ſame Name with the Vulgar, and thereby be commoniz'd and vulgariz'd. The Philoſophic Writers and others in conſort with them uſually reproach and vilifie the People, as if they were writing Satyrs againſt them. (c) The whole Philoſophic Chorus is according to Seneca of the ſame Mind with Epicurus, who ſaid, that he never deſign'd to pleaſe the People; for my Maxims the People do not like, and what they like is alien from my Notices. The People are not to be pleas'd but by thoſe that are like themſelves, which are not the Virtuous. (d) The Vulgar have rude Minds, (e) a baſe Soul, (f) look upon all things with childiſh Minds, are pleas'd with Trifles, (g) but not with any thing that is moderate. They are celebrated for their τὸ ἄκριτον, injudiciouſneſs (being tenacious of their abſurd Conceits, yet eaſily carry'd away with ſhews and appearances, admiring ſlight things, not diſcerning great and weighty things;) they are bad judges of every good thing, ſaid Pythagoras; and they are as bad at practice (ſome have ſtiled them colluviem quandam omnis generis ſordibus inquinatam) a Philoſopher compareth them (h) to our Animal Body, being fooliſh, multifarious, vehement in Anger, violent in Luſt, diſſolute in Pleaſure as the Body, and alike tranſported to Rage, of which the beſt Men that have ſerv'd them the beſt, have felt the ſad effects, and have had cauſe to complain of their ungrateful impious Minds. Ingratos animos atque impia pectora vulgi. Lucret. (i) There is nothing more unintelligent and more inſolent than the popular Multitude, that neither know of themſelves, nor have learned what is well-doing, and that do things without Counſel impetuouſly, χειμάῤῥῳ ποταμῷ ἴκελοι, like a Torrent, (k) ὁ δῆμος οὐδὲν οὔτ' ἀκούων οὔθ' ὁρῶν, they have no Ears to hear, nor Eyes to ſee. (l) The People are a ſtrange Beaſt with

(p) Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 2. c. 9.

(q) De C. D. l. 6. c. 5.

(r) Lactan. l. 1. c. 5.

(s) Adv. Gent. l. 3. p. 101, 102.

(t) Tiraquell. ſupr. p. 527.

(u) Strom. l. 6. p. m. 497.

(w) Lord Bacon Adv. of Learning B. 2. p. m. 192.

(x) Lactan. l. 3. c. 25.

(y) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 5. p. 260.

(z) Porph. de Abſt. l. 1. S. 13.

(a) L. 3. c. 5.

(b) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 16.

(c) Epicurus Ep. 29. Nunquam volui populo placere. nam quæ ego ſcio, non probat populus; quæ probat populus, ego neſcio. Subjungit Seneca; idem hoc omnes tibi ex omni domo conclamabunt, Peripatetici, Academici, Stoici, Cynici. quis enim placere poteſt populo, cui placet virtus? V. Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 97, 98. & p. 76, 364.

(d) Vulgi rudes animi. Ammian. l. 30.

(e) Βάναυσος ἡ ψυχή. M. Tyr. diſſ. 34.

(f) Animis puerilibus ſpectat omnia, oblectatur frivolis. Lactant. l. 2. c. 3.

(g) Cui nihil moderatum gratum eſſe ſolet. Verulam. de ſap. vet. p. 101.

(h) M. Tyr. diſſ. 40.

(i) Herodot. l. 3. p. 196.

(k) Sappho ap. Athen.

(l) Charroon. B. 1. c. 5. Non ego ventoſæ plebis ſuffragia venor. Horat. Nec quidquam ingenuum poteſt habere officina. Cic. ap. Herald. in Arnob. p. 140.

many Heads, inconſtant and variable (mobile vulgus) without ſtay like the Waves of the Sea; Confuſion maketh them deſire Order, and when they have it, they like it not. They are light to believe, without Judgment, Reaſon, Diſcretion. Plebi non judicium non veritas. Tacit. The common People are devoid of Judgment and of Truth, Envious and Malicious, Enemies to good Men, contemners of Virtue, mutinous, deſiring nothing but Novelties and Changes, Seditious, Enemies to Peace and Quietneſs, always muttering and murmuring againſt the State, very unthankful towards their Benefactors, caring neither for the publick good, nor common honeſty, but for their private good only. They have nothing but a Mouth, they ſpeak all things, but know nothing; they look upon all things, but ſee nothing; they never know how to hold a Meaſure, nor to keep to an honeſt Mediocrity. The People are a Savage Beaſt, all that they think, is Vanity; all that they ſay, is falſe and erroneous; that they reprove, is good; that they approve, is naught; that which they praiſe, is infamous; that which they do and undertake, is folly. The vulgar Multitude is the Mother of Ignorance, Injuſtice, Inconſtancy, Idolatry, Vanity, which never yet could be pleaſed. Their Motto is vox Populi vox Dei, the Voice of the People is the Voice of God: but we may ſay, vox Populi vox Stultorum, the Voice of the People is the Voice of Fools. Petrarch ſaith the ſame in Latin, Quicquid vulgus cogitat, vanum eſt: quicquid loquitur, falſum eſt: quicquid improbat, bonum eſt: quicquid approbat, malum eſt: quicquid prædicat, infame eſt: quicquid agit, ſtultum eſt: (m) Philoſophers therefore great Orators and great Artiſts have ſuſpected, that they have done or ſpoken ill, when they have had the acclamation and applauſe of the Multitude; and with ſome it is a Rule of Wiſdom, always to ſuſpect whatever pleaſeth and is approved by the People. But a better Rule is that of Pythagoras, (n) to do always what we judge to be well-doing deſpiſing the diſreputation and applauſe of the People.

> Ου γὰρ πλῆθος ἔχει συνετὴν κρίσιν οὔτε δικαίαν.
>
> For the Multitude hath not an intelligent or juſt Judgment.

Whence Jo. Philoponus (o) ſuppoſeth in vulgar Men nequaquam mentem ſed veſtigium mentis, not a Mind, but only a footſtep of Mind.

III. Much of truth there is in this diſparaging Character of the common People: but it ought to be underſtood with many and great abatements, elſe right is not done them. For,

(1.) Of the Vices of the common People none are ſo great, as that deadly Pride, which inſpir'd a late ſwaggering Philoſopher, when he wrote thus of the Platoniſts, (p) Though they could artificially conform their Behaviour to the more refined and gentile ſort of Men, yet as for that ſavage Beaſt the popular Rout, they valued no more, to pleaſe them, than to gratifie Wolves or Tigres, for really Folly is ſo moulded into the Conſtitution of the common and mechanical ſort of Men, that that Philoſopher muſt be well nigh as abſurd as they, who ſuppoſeth them capable of Wiſdom, when they have ſcarce Wit or Judgment enough, to think a thought that is not inept and ridiculous. So that 'tis not poſſible for any Man who aſpireth to Wiſdom, to condeſcend to any compliance with their baſe and abſurd Humours; and therefore theſe Sons of Wiſdom were as regardleſs of them as of Apes and Baboons. So the Grandio's of the Church of Rome vilifie the common People (although they are the People of Chriſt) they will not allow them, to read the Scriptures for this genuine Pontifician reaſon; becauſe they are the Beaſt that may not touch the Mount. The like contumelious uſage they have from thoſe puffy Magnifico's the Jewiſh Rabbins; for they ſay, (q) The People of the Earth never come within ſight of the King's Palace; none of the People of the Earth is חסיד one of the Chaſidim or Saints. The People of the Earth do not live. An illegitimate Diſciple of a Wiſe Man is greater than a Prieſt, that is of the People of the Earth. To ſit in the Congregation of the People of the Earth, is one thing, that is deſtructive of the life of Man. A Companion of the Wiſe is of this Character; he doth not go and lodge with a Plebeian, nor entertain him as a Gueſt; a Diſciple of the Wiſe muſt make no Contracts with him; and though he ſeemeth to be pious, yet the Wiſe muſt not have his dwelling near him. Six things the Rabbins ſay of the People of the Earth: They are incapable of being Witneſſes, or receiving a Depoſition; they intruſt them not with a Secret; if they have loſt any thing, they cry it not; they do not walk with them, nor make them Tutors or Guardians: (r) They call them accurſed and their Wives an abomination, and diſſwade from the marriage of their Daughters, becauſe he is curſed that lieth with any Beaſt, which is to be underſtood of their Daughters; they ſhall not riſe to life, except it be for the ſake of ſome learned Man; as if they have given a great Portion to a Daughter of his in Marriage, or have taken pains for his Subſiſtence, that he may have leiſure to follow the ſtudy of the Law; for this will be imputed to them, as if they had adher'd to the Divine Majeſty. (s) It is by Science and Intellectual Virtue that a Man becometh a Man; before he is furniſh'd with Science, he is like the Brutes; but Science advanceth him to be actually a Man, that was ſo before in potentiâ only, and in reſpect of his Capacity. Of the Gentiles they ſay, the Iſraelites defile a Tent; but the Gentiles do not defile it: For this is the Law, when a Man dieth, Numb. 19. 14. you are called a Man and are a Man, but the Nations of the World are not called a Man. Such idiotical Conceits are eminently Rabbinical, but not peculiarly ſo. For the Greek Philoſophers (thoſe intellectual gay Gallants) vilifie the Barbarians, much what at the ſame rate, that the Rabbins vilifie the Gentiles. They are repreſented by Plato as Enemies by Nature, and Ariſtotle ſaith, (t) the Greeks are born, to rule over the Barbarians. Their City (Athens) was ſo tranſcendent in Wiſdom and Eloquence, that the Name of a Grecian (u) μηκέτι τοῦ γένους, ἀλλὰ τῆς διανοίας τεκμήριον, was no more the Name of a Nation, but of an accompliſh'd Mind, and ſignify'd the partakers of their Learning and Diſcipline rather than the Natives of their Country. But the Golden Graſhopper in their Hair was a Badge of their Nobleneſs in reſpect of their Country, and ſignify'd, that they were no Inmates, but αὐτόχθονες, originated from themſelves and their own Land; and that not only Arts, Learning and Philoſophy, (w) but the whole Race of Mankind were their derivatives, though (it ſhould ſeem) their Kindred with the Barbarians was worn out. It were happy, if this their Mercury could be well kill'd, that ſuch as derive their Wiſdom from the Greek Philoſophers, might not ſwell with their puffy Vanity, nor ſmell ſo rank of their faſtuous Arrogance; (x) τί γὰρ μέγα, εἰ Γαλιλαίους δέκα μία χεὶρ Ἑλληνικὴ κατειργάσατο; for is it a great matter, if a gentile refin'd Grecanic Hand hath killed ten Galileans of the popular Rout? Such was the Bravado of a Grecanic Sophi; which ſheweth, that next to the Men

---

(m) Gat. ſupr. p. 125.

(n) Ibid. p. 332.

(o) Ap. Joh. Bapt. Criſp. Quin. 1. p. 311.

(p) Sa. Parker Cenſure of the Plat. Philoſ. p. 34.

(q) Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 2. c. 51. Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 1526. Not. in Coſri p. 191, 192. Druſ. de 3. Sect. l. 2. c. 3. & p. 83. Verſ. in Maim. de fund. Leg. p. 71. Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 351, &c. p. 394, &c.

(r) Druſ. in Joh. 7. 49.

(s) Maimon. ſupr. par. 3. c. 54. Pocock. port. Moſ. p. 96. 283.

(t) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 43.

(u) Iſocrat. Panegyr. p. 108. ed. Wolf.

(w) Laert. in proœm.

(x) Julian ap. Gr. Naz. or. 3. p.

Men of Phariſaical Sacroſanctity the Glorioſo's of profane Grecanic Wiſdom and Erudition are the greateſt Idioticks in Nature. But it is ſome ſlur to their Grecanic Glory (what Origen obſerveth) that their Apollo (y) gave his Oracles, not by a wiſe Man, not by a Man, not by a choice Virgin, but by a vulgar Plebeian Woman; (z) and the Authors of their Eleuſinian Sacra (the moſt illuſtrious amongſt the Greeks) were poor Country Swains; Triptolemus a Neat-herd, Dyſaules a Goat-herd, Eubulus a Swine-herd, Eumolpus a Sheep-herd.

(2.) In the whole compute of things the Schools of Philoſphers are of a blacker Character than the common People, whoſe greateſt Vices are far ſhort of the Greek Philoſophers, Scepticiſm and Atheiſm. For the common People are not to be perſwaded out of their Sences, nor to disbelieve the plain Notices of their Underſtandings, nor to ſay ſuch abſurd, inhumane and irreligious things, as ſome Philoſophers have ſaid (for nothing is ſo abſurd, which ſome Philoſophers have not ſaid:) But as God is the Founder, Preſerver, and Providential Governour of their Popular Societies (a) calumna Populi: So they are for a God, a Providence and a Religion. But as God is no Founder of the Philoſophers Schools, nor is his Providence charg'd with their Conſervation and Government: So (b) multi philoſophorum religiones ſuſtulerunt, the Philoſophers have been the Authors of ſeveral Sects, Schemes and Forms of Atheiſm (the Anaximandrian, the Democritical or Atomical, the Hylozoick or Stratonical, the Pſeudoſtoical or Coſmo-plaſtick Atheiſm,) and they have not been leſs unpopular than irreligious. For Epicurus was ſo unpopular (c) that he would not have us to bring up Children, nor meddle with the Commonwealth. The better ſort of Philoſophers that were no Atheiſts (d) were generally ſpeaking not better in their Religion and Lives than the common People; and the worſer ſort of Philoſophers far tranſcended their pitch of Impiety.

(3.) Before Thales began his Philoſophizing, the Greeks had their Popular Wiſdom of Morality, Laws and Politicks, (e) and their Civil-popular Wiſdom made them wiſer than Scholaſticks. (f) Thales (as Plutarch ſaith in the beginning of the Life of Solon) raiſed Wiſdom above Practice into Speculation: But the other ſix wiſe Men were denominated wiſe from Civil Virtue. Theſe with their Wiſdom may juſtly be denominated common Popular; for they were no Philoſophers, and the great Men of thoſe times follow'd the ſame Imployments with the common People) Shepherdizing, Husbandry, Mechanicks) they did their buſineſs with their own Hands (as the common People do) and thereby they got their living. Varro ſaith (g) De Antiquis illuſtriſſimus quiſque paſtor erat, every illuſtrious Perſon of the Ancients was a Shepherd. (h) Ulyſſes follow'd the Imployment of a Carpenter, his Father that of Agriculture (from the res ruſtica many great Families had their Names, Fabii, Piſones, Lentuli, Cicerones, Bubulci, Bupecii, Juvenci, Porcii, Scrofæ and many more) one of the Grecian wiſe Men Pittacus King of Mitylene (i) did the buſineſs of a Miller, and thence the Women ſang, Ἄλει μύλα, ἄλει, grind Mill, grind; for Pittacus King of Great Mitylene grindeth. In theſe ancient times (k) every Artificer σοφὸς ἐκαλεῖτο, was called Wiſe (as having the Wiſdom which his Art is) and every Mechanic Art was called a Wiſdom, Wiſdom being us'd to ſignifie Skill as Exod. 28. 3. The Wiſe in Heart, ſignifieth the Skilful, and the Spirit of Wiſdom is Spiritus Peritiæ, the Spirit of Skill. Sapientiâ gubernator torquet navem haud valentiâ. By Wiſdom the Pilot guideth his Ship, not by ſtrength. Σοφία ἐςὶν ἡ ἡνιοχεία, the driving a Cart is a Wiſdom. In this large ſenſe Wiſdom is us'd by Crates the Philoſopher and by Homer ἔθει ἀρχαίῳ, after the manner of the ancient times, wherein every Artificer's Art was called Wiſdom, as Euſtathius ſaith. So Phidias and Polycletus are called Wiſe by Ariſtotle (a wiſe Stone-cutter, a wiſe Statuary;) and Plato uſeth Wiſdom in a threefold Senſe. In the moſt ſtrict Senſe ἀντὶ τῆς τῶν νοητῶν ἐπιςήμης, to ſignifie the Science of the Intelligibles; in a leſs ſtrict Senſe ἀντὶ τῆς φιλοσοφίας, to ſignifie Philoſophy; in a common and large Senſe ἀντὶ τῆς ἐμπειρίας, for Skill or Expertneſs. The common and Mechanical ſort of People therefore are not without their Wiſdom and their Wiſe-men, which they had in the elder times of Greece (and before the Greek Philoſophy was born) when they had alſo (l) the Wiſdom of the ancient Poets, which is common-popular (m) and ſuited to the reliſh of the common People. (n) The Poet is indeed the right Popular Philoſopher.

(4.) Amongſt the common People of Greece there are remarkable and celebrated Inſtances of Wiſdom; for ſuch is that of (o) Aglaus Pſofidius one of the common People of Arcadia (Arcadum pauperimus) who was pronounc'd by the Oracle, to be happier than Gyges; for in his extreme old Age he had never ſtirr'd beyond the bounds of his little Field, & minimâ cupidine minimum in vita mali expertus eſt, and by deſiring little of the World he felt little of the Evils of the World. (p) Anacharſis came into Greece, with deſign to find Inſtances of Wiſdom, but could find none in Athens: Whereupon he determin'd, to take a view of the Country of Greece, to ſee, if he could find any dwelling of Wiſdom there; and he found what he look'd for in a little obſcure Town called Chenes. For there he found one Myſon, who knew nothing but rightly to govern his Family, rightly to till the Ground, to keep conjugal Chaſtity, and to educate his Children ingenuouſly. The Scythian Philoſopher was ſatisfied herewith, and thought that he needed not, to ſeek for verboſe Wiſdom having found the real Works of it in one, in whom he much admir'd τὴν ἀφθονίαν τῶν ἔργων ϗ τὴν φειδὼ τῶν λόγων, the abundance of his Works and the paucity of his Words. If ſuch Inſtances of Wiſdom are found amongſt the common People, their diſparaging Character is not without a mixture of injurious extravagance. And as in the imperial Law it is counted Criminal (and will bear an Action) to ſpeak evil of any whole Nation: So it is alike Criminal without limitation or exception to ſpeak evil of the common People. In ſome of whom there are more than common Faculties, wherein they tranſcend many of thoſe, that conceit themſelves wiſe, becauſe they can decline Nouns and Verbs, and know Genus and Species (as Arnobius ſpeaketh) and many of thoſe that think themſelves wiſer than others, becauſe they are greater than they in external Circumſtances. For as one ingeniouſly ſpeaketh (q) in natural Wit and Sagacity many times the Groom exceedeth the young Gallant, who aſſigneth

(y) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 335.

(z) Marſham. can. chr. p. 259. ed. Lipſ.

(a) Hot. ting. diſſ. de nom. Dei or. p. 276.

(b) Lactant. l. 2. c. 3.

(c) Epictet. diſſ. l. 1. c. 23.

(d) Lactant. l. 3. c. 15.

(e) Barclay Icon. Anim. p. 122, 123.

(f) Quid tandem Thales poſt innumeros conatus ſuos & indefeſſa ſtudia, propter quæ & rempublicam & maximos magiſtratus abjecit? Quid, inquam, jugiter ſcrutando invenit, quod eſſet hujus illuſtris machinæ quam cernimus, condignum fundamentum? Audi quàm celebris ſit excogitatio, Aqua eſt principium univerſorum. Reuchlin. de verb. mirif. p. 35.

(g) De R. R. c. 1.

(h) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p 491, 492, 512.

(i) Gat. in Ant. p 4, 5.

(k) Idem c. Pſychen. p. 150, &c.

(l) Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 10. c. 4.

(m) M. Tyr. diſſ. 29

(n) Sir Phil. Sidney Def. of Poeſy. p. 499.

(o) Plin. l 7. c. 46. Valer. Max. l. 7. c. 1.

(p) M Tyr. diſſ. 15.

(q) Dr. H. More Immort. of the Soul. l. 3. c. 17.

him to keep his Dogs and Horſes. So Naaman's Servant was wiſer than his Maſter. And as there is in ſeveral of the common People more than common Faculties, ſo there is in all of them that Faculty, which is moſt eminently in the mind of Man, and which is an eminent Endowment of their Minds, namely, a natural juris prudentia or ſcientia juſti & æqui, a Science of what is Juſt and Equal.

(5.) If the common People would recriminate, they might draw as bad a Character of any other ſort of Men, as their Adverſaries have drawn of them. For although there are many particular Perſons, that are of more than vulgar worth, yet we know not any order of Men, that conſidering the whole of it, is much better than they, but they that tranſcend them in worldly Reſpects, uſually tranſcend them in Vice and Wickedneſs. Joſephus ſaith; they that ſided with the Sadducees were only the rich and high Ones, they that ſided with the Phariſees were all the common People (the Plebeians) or as it is in Gorionides דלת העם τὸ λεπτὸν τοῦ λαοῦ, the meaner ſort of People. And which of theſe were the better (the more virtuouſly and religiouſly diſpos'd) whether the rich and high ones of the World, that were for the Sadducees, or the meaner and lower ſort of the People, that ſided with the Phariſees? (r) The Phariſees were ſevere in their Lives, they held the Immortality of the Soul, Rewards and Puniſhments in the Life to come, and it was by the (ſeeming) goodneſs of their Life and Doctrine, that they gained their great Authority with the common People. But the Sadducees becauſe they deny'd theſe great Fundamentals of Religion and Virtue, were therefore acceptable to the rich and great, and therefore they were odious and intolerable to the common People. Which ſheweth, that the vulgar are otherwiſe affected towards Religion and Virtue than the ſenſual and high minded Bravo's of the World, and that Lactantius rightly attributeth to them (s) a plain and uncorrupt Judgment of Things. The Imperial Lawyers that call them Ignoble, and contradiſtinguiſh them to their Nobiles, repreſent the generality of their Nobiles (agreeably to Juvenal) as made up of nothing but Vice and Title. (t) Thoſe of them that are alien from prodigious Vices profectò rari ſunt, are rare Birds upon Earth; whence they ſay with Macrobius Rara Nobilitas, Nobility indeed is a great Rarity. For Maimonides rightly maketh this the Character of the vulgar Men (u) the delights of Ceres and Bacchus and Venus are their End and Scope. Some have diſcours'd (w) that the Vices of the common People are to be aſcrib'd to the high ones of the World. For ſeeing all imitate them and deſire to reſemble them, the common People had never defiled themſelves with ſo great and nefarious Wickedneſs, if they had not been incited to immenſe Luxury and Luſt by the Example of the Nobility. The Luſts of the Citizens which the great Men by the meer Example of their Continence ought to reſtrain and keep under, they increaſe and vehemently inflame by their filthineſs of Life. Omne itaque malum videtur à ſummis viris tanquam à fonte defluere. All evil therefore ſeemeth as from a Fountain to flow from the great Men. More eſpecially from evil Princes, who are ſo generally evil, that one had reaſon to ſay (x) omnes bonos principes uni annulo facillimè inſcribi poſſe, all good Princes may very eaſily be written in one Ring.

(6.) At the riſe of Chriſtianity almoſt all the well diſpos'd Perſons (as to the Kingdom of God) were of the vulgar ſort. For all the ſecular wiſe Men and Philoſophers, the rich and great, οἱ χαριέστεροι, the polite gentile People of the World were then (a very few only excepted) the Blaſphemers and Perſecutors. 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27, 28. Jam. 2. 5, 6. Matth. 5. 3. and 11. 5. and 19. 24. From our Saviour's Sayings, (ſuch as the poor have the Goſpel preach'd to them) Celſus took occaſion for this Raillery. (y) The Man of Nazareth ἀντινομοθετεῖ, giveth contrary Laws to thoſe that the God of the Jews gave by Moſes, as that there is no acceſs to the Father for one that is Rich, or ſeeketh Dignity, or affecteth Wiſdom or Glory. (z) The Chriſtians ſay, let none that is Learn'd come, none that is Wiſe, none that is Prudent (theſe things are accounted evil) but if any one is unlearned, if any one is unintelligent, if any one is a fool, let him come with great aſſurance. (a) The Syſtem of Chriſtians drive away every one that is Wiſe, and call μόνους ἀνοήτους ϗ τοὺς ἀνδραποδώδεις, only thoſe that are fools and of ſervile Condition. (b) They are Jugglers, that avoid τοὺς χαριεστέρους the Polite ſort of People as not being eaſily deceiv'd, but they inſnare τοὺς ἀγροικοτέρους, the more Ruſtick ſort. Much of Calumny there is in this Raillery: But in thoſe times the Conteſt was (and is indeed in all times) between two kinds of Glories and Excellencies: The Chriſtian, ſaving and divine kind of Excellencies on the one hand; the ſecular and mundane kind of Excellencies on the other hand. The Chriſtians had the ſaving and Saint of God-kind of Excellencies, but the illuſtrious Pagans had the ſecular and mundane kind of Glories and Excellencies (the ſecular Learning, Philoſophy, Riches, Honours and Power) which marvellouſly mould the Minds of Men and indiſpoſe them for the Kingdom of God. They were therefore the floweſt to embrace Chriſtianity, inſomuch that in the time of the Emperor Arcadius (c) when the Senate-Houſe was burnt upon the account of Chryſoſtom and the Statues of Jupiter and Minerva (which ſtood before the Door) were preſerved intire in the Rubbiſh, οἱ χαριέστεροι, the more Polite ſort of Men (who were yet Pagans) conceiv'd good Hopes of the City. And Fraiulus a great Man under Arcadius profeſs'd in that Emperour's hearing. (d) That he worſhipped the Gods according to the Cuſtom of his Country, and would not ſuffer himſelf in this, to be made obſequious to the multitude. The vulgar multitude, although they were (e) the forward furious Perſecutors of Chriſtianity (it was the Popular cry the Chriſtians to the Lions) yet were much more forward Embracers of it than the politer ſort; (f) ſo that for one Sergius that believ'd the Goſpel, there were multi piſcatores, multi ſellularii, multitudes of Fiſher-men and of ſordid Artificers. (g) Eccleſia Chriſti non de Academia & Lyceo, ſed de vili plebicula congregata eſt. The Church of Chriſt was not gathered from the Academy and Lyceum, but from the vile vulgar ſort of People. Not but that the Church from the riſe of it had Men that were learned in Exotick Learning. Origen ſaith of his time (h) the Churches now have ὀλίγους σοφούς, ſome that are learned in Exotick Learning, but theſe in compariſon of the multitudes are but a few. (i) Arnobius glorieth in Orators, Grammarians, Rhetoricians, Lawyers, Phyſicians, Philoſophers, coming into to the Faith, but not many. The generality of the Chriſtians were in thoſe elder times of the vulgar ſort, whence they were reproach'd by the Pagans —— ſometimes for their want of (ſecular) Learning, for the Names that they gave them were (k) Plebeii, indocti, imperiti, impoliti, rudes, agreſtes, ſtudiorum rudes, literarum profani, (l) bebetes, ſtolidi, fatui, obtuſi, bruti. Plebeians, unlearned, unſkilful, unpolite, rude, ruſtick, unpoliſh'd with Study and Learning, dull, ſtolid, fooliſh, blockiſh, brutiſh. (m) Deſpuitis nos ut rudes (ſaith Arnobius) you diſdain us as rude; (n) turba imperita, illiterata frequentia, an illiterate Rabble they were called by Aſclepeiades. And (becauſe a great number of them were Women) their Religion was called (o) muliebris & annilis ſuperſtitio, a Womaniſh and Old-wife Superſtition. Celſus ſaith of them (p) they endeavour to perſwade and are able to perſwade μόνους τοὺς ἠλιθίους ϗ ἀγεννεῖς ϗ ἀναισθήτους, ϗ ἀνδράποδα, καὶ γύναια, καὶ παιδάρια, only the ſtolid, the ignoble, the ſenſleſs, ſlaves, Women and Boyes. —— ſometimes for their ſordid Occupations and Trades; ſuch as the Romans and Lacedæmonians would not practiſe themſelves, but devolv'd them upon Slaves and Foreigners. When therefore they called the Chriſtians expertes artium niſi ſordidarum ſuch as knew no Arts but thoſe that were ſordid (ſuch as were below an ingenuous Man) this was to call them (q) the dregs of the vulgar. (r) None that is wiſe or learned (ſaid they) is made a Diſciple to Jeſus, ἀλλ' ἢ ναῦται καὶ τελῶναι πονηρότατοι, but ſuch as Mariners or improbous Publicans, (s) the Teachers of the Church are Lanarii, Sutores, Fullones, Wooll-ſellers, Shooe-makers, Fullers. Agreeably to which Paganical reproaches Theodoret ſaith; the Fountain of Widſom would have Chriſtianiz'd the Learned and Unlearned, (t) and Coblers, and Weavers, and Blackſmiths, and Servants, and Beggars, and Plowmen, and Wood-keepers, and Women, and ſuch as are neceſſitated to live by their Hand-labour. Such were the conſtitutive Members of the Church of Chriſt, and ſuch as theſe only had (ordinarily) his Converſe, when he was here on Earth. —— ſometimes for their Poverty. For Pauperes (u) was one of the reproachful Names which the Pagans gave the Chriſtians. (w) Plerique pauperes dicimur (ſaith the Apologiſt) the moſt of us are called poor People. And this ſeemeth to be Origen's meaning, when he ſaith (x) the unbelieving Jews call thoſe that believe in Chriſt Ebionæi, that is poor People. The Chriſtians ſo called themſelves; for Pius I. Biſhop of Rome in an Epiſtle to Juſtus Viennenſis ſaith of his Clergy, ſalutat te ſenatus pauperum, the Senate of the Poor ſalute thee. And Cornelius Biſhop of Rome (y) in his Epiſtle to Fabius reckoneth up in his Church more than Fifteen Hundred Widows, impotent and poor People. The Chriſtians were not aſham'd of their Poverty, which they look'd upon as of Affinity with Sanctity; for which reaſon the Arabians are not aſham'd of the Poverty of their great Prophet Muhammed (z) they willingly acknowledge it. And the Hebrew Book Coſri obſerveth (a) that the Chriſtians do not glory in Kings, potent Hero's and the Rich, but in thoſe Men that follow'd Jeſus, who were exiles and obſcure. They glory of their Poverty and their vulgar Plebeian Quality (calling them (b) ruſticanos & piſcatores noſtros, our Ruſticks and Fiſhermen) and this their vulgar Quality is by them that write in defence of the Chriſtian Religion, alledg'd as an Argument of their virtuous Diſpoſition; which Argument would ſignifie nothing, if the vulgar ſort was univerſally ſo vile and bad, as their diſparaging Character ſpeaketh them. (c) It is manifeſt, that rude and illiterate Men are for the moſt part candid, veracious and uncrafty; but they that by learning and experience are become more skilful, exceed others in craft and ſubtilty. Poverty was look'd upon as of Affinity with Sanctity by that Council of Carthage, which made a Canon, that the poor and the aged of the Church ſhould be honoured above the reſt.

(r) Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.

(s) Vulgus cui ſimplex incorruptumque judicium eſt. Lactant. l. 5. c. 20.

(t) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 526.

(u) Mor. Nev. Par. 3. c. 8.

(w) Oſor. de Nobil Civil. l. 1. p. 286.

(x) Ap. Grot. Not. in Matth. 20. 25.

(y) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 343.

(z) Ibid. l. 3. p. 137.

(a) Ibid. p. 121.

(b) Ibid. l. 6. p. 284.

(c) Zoſim. Hiſt. p. 328.

(d) Ὅτι σέβοιτο ϗ τιμῴη θεοὺς κατὰ τὰ πάτρια, ϗ οὐκ ἀνέξεται κατὰ τοῦτο τοῖς ἀπὸ πλήθους ἀκολουθῆσαι. Ibid. p. 321.

(e) Nec ulli magis depoſtulatores Chriſtianorum quàm vulgus. Tertull. Apol. c. 32, 50.

(f) Grot. Not. in 1 Cor. 1. 26.

(g) S. Hieron. in l. 3. com. ad Galat. Proæm.

(h) C. Celſ. l. 6. p. 285.

(i) Adv Gent. l. 2. p. 44. Balduin. Proleg. in Min. Fel.

(7.) In all the great and general concerns of Mankind the common People have the greateſt concern, and ought (ſo far as impartial Goodneſs and Juſtice alloweth) to be of greateſt regard, as being οἱ πολλοί, (the many) the far greateſt part of Mankind, and not only our Fellow-citizens and Fellow-members (to which all Fellow-members ought to be Auxiliaries) but the far greateſt part of the publick (of which every particular Man is a Member, a part of that whole;) their Good therefore is the great Good (commune multitudinis bonum) to which every Man ought to be faithfully ſubſervient with all his Gifts and Abilities, his Wiſdom and Power. (d) Celſus thinketh it not fit to diſcourſe with them, that he calleth Ruſticks, impure, irrational, ſeditious: Whereas he ought as a lover of Mankind to help the Ruſticks. For Beneficence is not ſo narrow, as to be with-held from Brute-animals, much leſs from the more ruſtick ſort of Men. But our Creator hath made us communicative to all Men. We ought therefore to diſcourſe with the Ruſticks, and (according to our Power) make them more urbane; with the impure; and (ſo far as we can) make them more pure; with thoſe that act without Reaſon and have diſtemper'd Souls, that they may not act without Reaſon, nor be diſeaſed in Soul. If they are incapable of any great Improvements of their Reaſon, if as Clemens ſometimes ſaith (e the vulgar cannot be Philoſophous, yet they are capable of that which is infinitely better, of divine Grace and Love, and if they can Love as they ought, they can be Holy and Happy (f) Good Women had the firſt Fruits of the Apparition of our raiſed Saviour. For their forward Love and the Paſſion of their Religion made greater haſt, to entertain a Grace, and was a greater endearment of their Perſons to our Lord than a more ſober reſerved and leſs active Spirit. (g) It was a Saying of Ægidius, that an old and ſimple Woman, if ſhe loveth Jeſus, may be greater than Brother Bonaventure. The common People are capable of the beſt and greateſt things, and their Saviour had the greateſt regard for the Soul-intereſts of (h) that multitude of Mankind, whom he came to deliver from the Domination of evil Demons. So in Matters of Civil Government the Welfare of the common People ought to be of greateſt regard, if impartial Goodneſs and Juſtice did not require, that a due difference be made between the more and leſs excellent and uſeful Citizens; otherwiſe without any needful limitation we might argue both touching their Secular and Soul-intereſts. The good of two is twice as good as the good of one; the good of three is thrice as good as the good of one; the

(k) Min. Fel. p. 123, 112, 32, 11.

(l) Arnob. ſupr. l. 1. p. 15.

(m) Ibid. l. 3. p. 109.

(n) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 31.

(o) Ibid. p. 71.

(p) Orig. ſupr. l. 3. p. 137.

(q) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 33.

(r) Orig. Philoc. p. 48.

(s) Herald. in Arnob. p. 139.

(t) Καὶ σκυτέας καὶ ὑφάντας, καὶ χαλκοτύπους, καὶ οἰκέτας, καὶ προσαίτας καὶ γηπόνους, καὶ ἀλσοκόμους, καὶ γυναῖκας, καὶ ἐκ χειρῶν βιοτεύειν ἠναγκασμένας. Θεραπ. Ser. 8. & 5.

(u) Min. Fel. p. 122.

(w) Ibid. p. 335.

(x) C. Celſ. l. 2. p. 56.

(y) Euſeb. H. Eccl. l. 6. c. 43.

(z) Hotting. H. O. l. 1. c. 4. p. 136. ed. 1.

(a) P. 69, 298.

(b) S. Hieron. ſupr.

(c) Conſtat enim rudes & indoctos homines, fere candidos eſſe eoſdem, veraces & incallidos; qui verò doctrina & uſu rerum peritiores extiterint, vafriciè eos, verſutiaque præſtare. Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 9. c. 147. S. 4.

(d) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 410.

(e) Strom. l. 5. p. m. 408.

(f) Bp. Taylor great Exempl. p. 537. ed. an. 1667.

(g) Ibid. p. 68.

(h) Iſta hominum multitudo, propter quos à dæmonum dominatu liberandos Chriſtus advenit. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 27.

good of many thouſands is many thouſand times as good as the good of one. The dignity of their Nature alſo, their Relation to God, their near Cognation to us, their needfulneſs and uſefulneſs to all other Ranks and Orders of Men and to our ſelves alſo (for it is not ingenuous, to throw Dirt upon them that make us clean and fine) rendreth the common People of great regard. And it ought to be a matter of great regard, not to make Diſcriminations of Perſons from worldly Reſpects, which are not agreeable to Chriſtianity. (i) Chriſtianus nec in pauperem ſuperbit. A Chriſtian is not proud no not toward a poor Man.

(8.) The common People Chriſtianiz'd although they may be little ſet by in the World, yet it is they that do Buſineſs. Sergunt indocti & rapiunt Cœlum. Their Holineſs is alſo their Unvileneſs, thereby they are of (k) τὸ θεῖον γένος, the divine Nation (a Name that Origen giveth the Jews) which is alſo intituled (l) ἀρχιερατικὸν τὸ ἀληθινὸν γένος, the true Sacerdotal Generation, the Holy Nation, the Royal Prieſthood. 1 Pet 2. 9. Although in reſpect of Externals they are no better than ſuch as Sidonius Apollinaris calleth (m) bubſequas ruſticanos, ſubulcoſque roncantes, ruſtick Cow-herds and ſnorting Swine-herds, yet upon their Converſion to God and Piety they become ἐξαίρετοι, the eximious Perſons (the elect of God) the truly Excellent and Honourable, of the divine Family and the holy City; their deadly foulneſs and ſordidneſs is waſh'd away, and they are dignify'd and ennobled in State and Relation, in Life and Nature, in Spirit and Practice, and in their Underſtandings alſo. (n) For every where the Matters of our Faith are known, not only by them who are Teachers in the Church, but even of Coblers, Smiths and Weavers, and all kind of Artificers, and of Women alſo which get their living by their Hands, yea Maid-ſervants and Waiting-women: Husbandmen alſo do very well know them, and Ditchers, and Neat-herds and Wood-ſetters. Plato maketh God unknowable by the vulgar eſpecially: (o) But Deum quilibet opifex Chriſtianus & invenit & oſtendit. Every Chriſtian Mechanick hath found and ſheweth God. Of this divine Knowledge of Chriſtian Mechanicks learned Men have ſpoken ſuch great things, as may be of bad Conſequence in an Age, that aboundeth with extravagant Preachers; yet I will mention ſome of their Sayings, becauſe they illuſtrate the Holy Popular Nature of the Holy Scriptures. (p) The Shreds and Clouts of Taylors and Coblers may have greater Knowledge perhaps and better Judgment of the Senſe of Scriptures, than the Scarlet Gowns of learneder Men than they. (q) More of true Wiſdom is often found in one mean Man, not taught by ſubtle Scotus but by a Divine Spirit, than in many formal Theologers turgid with their Ariſtotle. Ruſticks may excell Scholaſticks, Plebeians ſurmount the Doctors in the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, which is a far greater ennoblement to the Mind than Exotick Learning. (r) And as Socrates, Zamolxis, Epictetus (one of which was originally but a Statuary, the other but Servants) were in ſome ſort ennobled by Philoſophy: So the Holy Scriptures do not find Men truly learn'd, rich, free and noble, but they make them ſuch, learn'd in their want of Exotick Learning, rich in Poverty, free in Servitude, and noble in their Ignobleneſs.

SECTION III.

The Holy Scriptures are Popular in the large Signification.

I. THE Holy Scriptures are the Book of Religion (not as appropriated to Schools of Philoſophy, or Theology, but) as it is of univerſal Concernment. They are therefore in our Idea denominated Popular in a large Senſe, not meerly with reſpect to the common People, but to the community of Mankind (to all the People) and conſequently to the common People as well as others. They are the Book of Religion; for although many think (s) that there are ſeveral Hiſtorical Narrations in Scripture (as Genealogies, the Names and Places of Families) which are of no utility; and the Rabbins have a Tradition, that ungodly Manaſſes ſitting with his light Companions made it his Buſineſs to Cavil at theſe Narrations; yet Maimonides diſputeth, that they are all uſeful, either to confirm ſome fundamental Article of Faith, or for the Correction and Emendation of ſome Immorality, that Iniquity and Violence may not Reign. The Holy Scriptures are Holy in the deſign of the whole of them, which is Sanctity, that we Sin not. (t) Religio quæ nullam patitur impietatem, Religion that can endure no Impiety. As they tranſcend ſecular Philoſophy, becauſe they teach Piety and true Religion: So they are diſſonant from Human Arts and Sciences, becauſe the only Learning and Science which they teach, is Religion. (u) Non philoſophiam, non eloquentiam, non reliquas artes & diſciplinas mundo præclaras atque admirabiles: Unica hic eſt ars, noſſe & colere Deum. They teach not Philoſophy, not Eloquence, nor the other Arts and Diſciplines, which are excellent and admirable in the Eye of the World: The only Art here is, to know and Worſhip God, which is the true Popular Philoſophy. (w) Here is the only true Ethicks; for a good and honeſt Life cannot be formed otherwiſe than by loving thoſe things that ought to be loved, that is, God and our Neighbour. The Holy Scriptures therefore are Popular in the ſame ſenſe that the Popular Philoſophy is ſo, which is Exoterical to the Schools, and is Popular with Reſpect to the univerſality of Mankind. (x) Paucorum eſt, ut literati ſint, omnium ut boni. All muſt not be Learn'd, but all muſt be Virtuous and Religious. It is indiſpenſably requir'd of every Soul of Man, and is the Wiſdom and Goodneſs, the End and Uſe of Man. Rom. 2. 8. Mic. 6. 8. Job 28. 28. Piety and Religion is ſo far of univerſal Concernment, that Human Society cannot tolerably well ſubſiſt without ſome Religion. It is ſo far of univerſal Concernment, the World of Mankind concern themſelves about it, and are at variance about Religion. And it is ſo far of univerſal Concernment, it is the proper work and buſineſs of Man, and (in reſpect of Virtue, Duty and Intereſt) is indiſpenſably the chief buſineſs of every Man. (y) Γεώργει φαμὲν, εἰ γεωργὸς εἶ. Art thou a Plowman? Till the Ground; for that is thine Office and Buſineſs. Art thou a Man? Know God and be Religious; for that is thine Office and thy

---

(i) Tertul. Apol. c. 46.

(k) Orig. Philocal. p. 11.

(l) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 344.

(m) L. 1. Ep. 6.

(n) Theodoret. Θεραπ. Ser. 5. ſub. fin.

(o) Tertul. Apol. c. 46.

(p) Dr. Raynolds Confer. with Hart c. 2. Div. 2. p. 63.

(q) Non raro plus veræ germanæque ſapientiæ deprehendas in uno quopiam homuncione, juxta vulgi opinionem, idiota ſimplici ac ſemifatuo: Cujus mentem non ſubtilis (ut vocant) Scotus, ſed cœleſtis ille Chriſti docuit ſpiritus, quàm in multis Theologorum tragicis perſonis, ac terque quaterque magiſtris noſtris, Ariſtotele ſuo turgidis, magiſtralium definitionum, concluſionum & propoſitionum turba differtis. Eraſm. Adag. ſilen. Alcibiad.

(r) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 207, 208.

(s) Maim. Mor. Nev. Par. 3. c. 50.

(t) S. Hilar. c. Conſtant.

(u) Vir. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 28.

(w) Hic Ethica, quoniam vita bona & honeſta non aliunde formatur, quàm cùm ea quæ diligenda ſunt, diliguntur, hoc eſt, Deus & proximus. S. Aug. Ep. 3.

(x) Petrarch.

(y) Clem. Προτρεπτ. p. m. 47.

thy general Calling. No Man can ſay, It is alienum opus, another Man's Buſineſs, that appertaineth not to me; for it is indiſpenſably the chief Buſineſs and Concernment of every one, that is of the Name of Man. The Book of Piety and true Religion therefore muſt be popular with reſpect to the univerſality of Mankind. And ſo the Holy Writers of it were Debters both to the Greeks and Barbarians, to the Wiſe and to the Unwiſe. They have written the Scriptures (z) & plebi & peritis (as one ſpeaketh) both to the Common People and to the Learned. So S. Auſtin ſaith of the Scripture, (a) ad cor loquitur indoctorum atque doctorum, it ſpeaketh to the Heart both of the Unlearned and the Learned. And ſo the Jews ſay, (b) Lex doctis & imperitis data, proinde omnium captui accommodata eſt. The Law is given both to the Learned and Unlearned, and therefore is adapted to the Capacity of all. If the Scriptures were Scholaſtical and Unpopular, they could not be virtuouſly and duely Popular.

II. The Holy Scriptures are the Book of the Chriſtian Religion (not as appropriated to Schools of Philoſophy or Theology, but) as it is of univerſal concernment. They are therefore in a large ſenſe Popular (not Scholaſtical and Unpopular) of the ſame Character with our Religion, which (as to the deſign of it) maketh no difference between High and Low, Rich and Poor, Learned and Unlearned, Jew and Gentile, Barbarian, Scythian, Bond or Free, but is open and acceſſible to all, as the Air, the Earth and Sea, and the Lights of Heaven are. (c) The Goſpel receiveth all Men, Noble and Ignoble, Rich and Poor, old and young Women; for every one that is ſaveable, is with God equal. (d) Let the Learned, the Wiſe, the Prudent come, whoſoever is willing: but nevertheleſs, let the Rude, the Unintelligent, the Unlearned and Fooliſh come. Theſe the Word calleth, to make them better, and thoſe alſo which much excel theſe; for Chriſt is the Saviour of all Men, eſpecially of them that believe, whether the Intelligent or leſs Intelligent; and he is with the Father the Propitiation for our Sins, and not for ours only, but for the Sins of the whole World. (e) The Word of God our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſeeing he came to all, and gathering both the Learned and Unlearned alike, he gave the Precepts of Salvation to every Sex and every Age. (f) Not from this or that place only, but from every place out of all Nations the Goſpel vehemently inviteth Men, to come to the God of all, to make haſt, and with all readineſs of Mind to receive the offered Gift, both Greeks and Barbarians, Men, Women and Younglings, Poor and Rich, Wiſe and Unlearned, not deſpiſing to call even thoſe of the ſervile ſort. For the Parent of them having made one Subſtance and Nature of all, did agreeably vouchſafe unto all this one and equal Munificence, the Gift of the knowledge and friendſhip of himſelf, to all that will obey and readily receive the Grace. This Friendſhip with his Father the Word of Chriſt came, to Evangelize to the whole World; for God was reconciling himſelf to the World, not imputing their Treſpaſſes; and came and preached Peace to them that were afar off and to them that were nigh. Theſe things of old the inſpir'd Sons of the Hebrews predicted to the whole World: One of them proclaimeth, All the ends of the World ſhall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the Kindreds of the Nations ſhall worſhip before him. The Church of the Jews was the Incloſure of one Nation; but the Chriſtian Church of right extendeth to all Nations, the Goſpel was commanded to be preach'd to Families, Cities, Nations univerſally (that all might be Chriſtianiz'd and ſaved) and the effect of it was (g) the changing Nations, altering the Perſwaſions of People, the deſtroying the Cuſtoms of their Foreſathers, radicated Cuſtom, the tyranny of Pleaſure, the force of Wickedneſs, their Altars, their Temples, their Images, their Myſteries, their impure Feſtivals and Sacrifices. It withdrew them from Senſuality, and drew them to faſting; it withdrew them from the love of Riches, and drew them to Poverty; it withdrew them from Laſciviouſneſs, and drew them to Chaſtity; it withdrew them from Paſſion, and drew them to Meekneſs; it withdrew them from Envy, and drew them to Benevolence; it withdrew them from the broad way, and drew them to the ſtrait and narrow way. (h) Mechanic Idiots and Plowmen and ſuch as tended Cattle, were taught to philoſophize, they philoſophiz'd touching Immortality, the Reſurrection and the ineffable Goods. Such is the Philoſophy of the Chriſtian Religion, not that of the Schools, of which Plato (whom Syneſius followeth) was ſo highly conceited, (i) that he doth not allow τῷ μὴ φιλοσοφήσαντι, to any that is not of the Secular Philoſophic Learning, to aſcend into the Society of the Gods. But in Chriſtianity things are quite otherwiſe; for the meaneſt of the Vulgar may be truly holy, and without any Secular Philoſophic Learning may be a Chriſtian Philoſopher. (k) Whoſo leadeth a Life according to our Inſtitution, although it be a Barbarian, or a Greek, or a Servant, or an old Man, or a Boy, or a Woman, may philoſophize without Secular Learning.

III. The Holy Scriptures are the Book of the Law, which ſpeaketh them in a large ſenſe Popular (not Scholaſtical and Unpopular;) for the Old Teſtament is the Law of the Jews, and the New Teſtament is the Chriſtian's Law. (l) The whole Old Teſtament is called by the Jews תורה, which ſignifieth a Law, Doctrine or Inſtitution. The Pſalms are the Law and the Prophets are the Law (ſay they;) and in this large Senſe they underſtand the Law (though more eſpecially they mean thereby the Pentateuch) when they make their magnificent Elogies of it: with them the Law and the Word of the Lord (their whole Scripture) are identical Expreſſions, as they are in the Prophet, Iſa. 2. 3. ſo in ſome of our Saviour's Sayings the Law ſignifieth the whole Old Teſtament; as Joh. 10. 34. Is it not written in your Law (the Book of Pſalms) I ſaid, ye are Gods? Joh. 15. 25. This cometh to paſs, that the Word might be fulfilled, that is written in their Law (in the Book of Pſalms) they hated me without a cauſe. So the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 14. 21. In the Law (in the Prophet Iſa 28. 11.) it is written, with Men of other Tongues and other Lips will I ſpeak unto this People. Theſe things Expoſitors have obſerv'd, who have alſo given this good reaſon, why the whole Old Teſtament is called The Law of the Jews, becauſe in ſome degree the whole of it was Law to their Belief and Practice. The Old Teſtament conſiſteth of very various parts; for part of it is Doctrinal (Doctrinal-preceptive) part of it is Devotional, part of it is Hiſtorical, part of it is Prophetical; and

Dr. H. op. vol. 584. Ep. 3.

Menaſſ. Iſr. Qu. Deuter. 35.

(c) Evangelium omnes homi- recipit, nobiles & ignobiles, ites & pauperes, anus & a- leſcentulas, quando omnis apud m, qui ſalvari poteſt, æqua- eſt. Elmenhorſt. in Min. l. p. 122.

(d) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 141.

(e) Cùm Dei ſermo dominus ſter Jeſus Chriſtus omnibus ve- it, & colligens doctos pariter indoctos, omni ſexui atque æ- ti præcepta ſalutis edidit. S. ypr. de orat. dom.

) Euſeb. . Ev. l. 1. 1.

(g) S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 634, 635.

(h) Ibid. p. 590, 623.

(i) Stob. Ecl. Phyſ. p. 135. Niceph. in Syneſ. p. 382.

(k) Ἔξεστι γὰρ τῷ καθ' ἡμᾶς πολιτευομένῳ, καὶ ἄνευ γραμμάτων φιλοσοφεῖν, κἂν βάρβαρος ᾖ κἂν Ἕλλην, κἂν δοῦλος, κἂν γέρων, κἂν παιδίον, κἂν γυνή. Clem. Str. l. 4. p. m. 362.

(l) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 982. Cartwr. Mellif. Hebr. l. 4. c. 7. Pool's Syn. in Joh. 10. 34.

and every one of theſe parts of their Holy Scripture was in ſome degree Law to their Belief and Practice, although only the Doctrinal part was plenarily and eminently ſo. For ſo the Law of God often ſignifieth only the comprehenſion of his Statutes or Judgments (his Appointments) and the Law and the Teſtimony (what he hath teſtify'd of his Will) are ſynonymous Expreſſions, Iſa. 8. 20. So the Doctrinal-preceptive part of the New Teſtament is moſt properly and eminently the Chriſtians Law; but the whole New Teſtament is alſo (in greater or leſſer degree) the Chriſtians Law for the ſame reaſon, that the whole Old Teſtament is the Law of the Jews. So in Chriſtian Writers (m) Lex nova, Teſtamentum novum, are terms ſynonymous; and conſequently all the Books of the New Teſtament are as much the New Law as they are the New Teſtament, and as much as they are the Goſpel; for the Goſpel is the New Law, Rom. 3. 27. and 8. 2. Gal. 6. 2. As therefore all the Books of the Jews Sacred Code were the Jews Law; ſo all the Books of the Chriſtians Sacred Code (peculiarly ſuch) are the Chriſtians Law: and both theſe Sacred Codes are rightly called by Origen (n) νόμος τῆς γραφῆς, the Law of Scripture; for they are not a meer Directory, but they are the Canon, (o) a perfect Rule of Faith and Manners that is of Divine Authority, and therefore is no leſs than Law. Accordingly they are read to the People as Law, agreeably to what Varro ſaith, (p) Leges quia lectæ & ad populum, quas obſervet, Laws are ſo called, becauſe they are read to the People, that they may obſerve them. If the Holy Scriptures are Law, they muſt be in a large ſenſe Popular (not Scholaſtical and Unpopular) for Law is in a large ſenſe Popular Science. The Jews Law was Popular and Exoterical in reſpect of a great Community of People of all ſorts, and therefore of the ſame nature with that which is Popular and Exoterical in reſpect of the Community of Mankind. The Chriſtian Law is manifeſtly popular in reſpect of the Community of Mankind; for it is the Univerſal Law. The Chriſtian Religion is the Kingdom of God, of which all Mankind are of right and by obligation Subjects; they are indiſpenſably oblig'd, actually to become ſuch, if the Goſpel is publiſh'd to them. The Law of this Kingdom therefore (the Scriptures of the New Teſtament) muſt be in a large ſenſe Popular, not Scholaſtical and Unpopular.

IV. The Holy Scriptures are the Book of the Law of Life (and in ſuch Senſe the Book of Life) which is wholly for the Life of the People, and therefore is alien from Scholaſtick and Unpopular Notion, which is alien from Life. They are Popular in a large Senſe (not Scholaſtick and Unpopular) as are Ethicks and Politicks, and as is the Civil Law of every Commonwealth, which is a Law of Life. (q) It is manifeſt, that Laws are made for the welfare of the Citizens, the ſafety of Civil Societies, and for the quiet and happy Life of Men. The Imperial Lawyers ſay, that by the Law (r) benè beatéque vivimus, we live well and happily. The publick Felicity which the Law deſigneth, is called by Proclus, (s) Civitatis vita, the Life of the City. And Democritus ſaid of Polity and Government, that theſe are the things that afford (t) μεγάλα καλὰ εἰς τὸν βίον, great Goods unto Life. So the deſign of the Law of the Jews was, that they ſhould live well and happily; the preceptive part of it oblig'd them to the Duties of Life (vitæ officia) and to the obſervance of it a long and happy Life was promis'd, Lev. 18. 5. Ye ſhall keep my Statutes and my Judgments; which if a Man do, he ſhall live in them. The Son of Sirach therefore calleth it the Law of Life (Eccluſ. 17. 11.) and ſo the Jews account it; for they call the Wood, to which the Volumn of their Law is annex'd, (u) Etſchajim, the Wood of Life; and they ſuppoſe, that ſuch as touch it ſhall live the longer for it. To which groſs Superſtition they add this groſs Profaneneſs: (w) If a Gentile ſetteth upon an Iſraelite, and will compel him, to tranſgreſs one of the Precepts of the Law, or elſe he will kill him; then let him violate that Precept, and not ſuffer himſelf to be kill'd; as it is ſaid of the Precepts, if a Man do them, let him live by them. If they ſay to a Man, commit Idolatry, and you ſhall not be killed, let him commit it, and not offer himſelf to death; for the Law is, he ſhall live in them, not let him die. Amongſt the Jews (who are generally no great Friends to Martyrdom) there are diverſities of Opinion touching theſe Matters; ſome are more ſtrict, others are of great Latitude: Of which latter ſort Maimonides was one, not only in his Opinion, but in Practice; (x) for being in Spain and under ſome force, he profeſs'd the Muhammedan Religion, till he got an opportunity to remove himſelf into Egypt, and then he reſum'd his profeſſion of Judaiſm, which he had never relinquiſh'd in his Heart. But the Jews have as much reaſon, to fear Death from the Violation of their Law, as to hope for Life from the obſervance of it; for it ſetteth before them Life and Death, which are the premiant and penal Sanction of their Law agreeably to the Laws of other Commonwealths, which are not made, to inſtitute Mankind in ſubtil Sciences, but for civil Life. So the Jews Law was made, to be the Inſtrument of governing a People, whoſe Buſineſs is Life, by the hopes and fears of Life and Death, Ezek. 18. 19, 20. Nor was their Learning that of the Schools of Philoſophers, but their Law, from the Promiſes whereof and their obſervance of it they hop'd not only for a temporal, but an eternal happy Life. And they might have entertain'd ſuch hopes from the temporal Promiſes of it, if they had been ſuch, as the truly pious Men of the Old Teſtament-times were, who look'd upon the temporal Promiſes (wherewith the Old Teſtament aboundeth) not only as typical, but as ſymbolical, not only as prefiguring what would be promis'd in the New Teſtament-times, but as ſignifying thoſe Spiritual and Divine Felicities, which in all times (by virtue of the New Teſtament) were the Portion of the Righteous, Heb. 11. 16. But thoſe temporal Promiſes muſt be conſider'd as temporal Promiſes, and becauſe ſo conſider'd they are ſtill in force ſo far as is needful, therefore the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament in conjunction are the Law of Life, Temporal, Spiritual and Eternal, and Godlineſs hath promiſe of the Life that now is, and of that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4. 8. She is a Tree of Life, her Fruit is Life, and in the path-way thereof there is no Death (no deadly Calamity) Pſal. 34. 12. Prov. 3. 2, 18. and 12. 28. Some Branches of Piety more eſpecially have the Promiſe of this Life, as Obedience to Parents, Eph. 6. 2. (y) And the Arabians have a true Proverb (one of the Emperour Ali's) Eleemoſyna vitam auget, Alms increaſe Life.

The

(m) Tertull. c. Jud. c. 6. S. Aug. de Sp. & lit. c. 18.

(n) Philocal. c. 9.

(o) Biſhop Taylor Duct. dub. B. 2. c. 3. r. 14. p. 359, &c.

(p) L. 5.

(q) Conſtat profectò ad ſalutem civium, civitatumque incolumitatem vitamque hominum & quietam & beatam conditas eſſe leges. Cic. de Leg. l. 2.

(r) Ferdin. ABDvenſ. or. pro jur. civ. p. 11.

(s) De An. & Dæm. p. 235.

(t) Plut. Non poſſe vivi ſuav. p. 1100.

(u) Buxt. Syn. Jud. c. 22. p. 424

(w) Vor in Maim. de fund. Leg. p. &c. D Voſſ. in Maimon. Idol. c. S. 8. Sel de Syned. l. 3. p. 24

(x) P Spec. p. 357.

(y) L'E per. Sa Kimch. 229.

The Holy Scriptures are the Law of Life, as they are the Law of Piety and true Religion, and they are eminently ſo, as they are the Law of the Chriſtian Religion; for Theologia vita eſt, non ſcientia: The Chriſtian Theology is a Life, not lifeleſs Science. Chriſtus magiſter eſt vitæ, non ſcholæ, Chriſt is the Maſter of Life, not of School-learning. (z) He is the Teacher of our Life making alive the People of his Believers. His Baptiſm is the vital Laver, the Death of Crimes, the Life of Virtues, and thereby we are animated into a new Life. He was given unto Men for Life, and ſent to make us alive. His Precepts are the Vital Commandments, Vital Remedies. We are reſtor'd to immortality by the vivification of his Blood. By Ignatius as cited by Athanaſius, (a) Chriſt is intituled ἐν θανάτῳ ζωὴ ἀληθινή, true Life (to us) in Death. The Food that he is (b) ſalutem largitur & vitam, giveth Life and Salvation, and by the Bread that he is miſeræ mortis vincuntur exitia, the deadly deſtruction of miſerable Death is vanquiſh'd. He is Vital Food and his Benefits are vitalia beneficia (Vital Benefits) whence Epiphanius hath made this compariſon between Eve and the Bl. Virgin, (c) as one is called the Mother of all living, ſo by the other αὐτὴ ἡ ζωὴ τῷ κόσμῳ γεγέννηται, Life it ſelf was brought into the World. His Inſtitution is (d) pulchrum vivendi genus, an excellent and amiable ſort of living, his Followers ſay of themſelves non eloquimur magna ſed vivimus, we do not ſpeak but live great things; when aſſembled they call themſelves (e) populum circumvitalem, a vital ſort of People aſſembled about their Lord; every one of them is by his Profeſſion (f) vitæ negotiator, a Trafficker for Life; and the Life that he aſpireth after, and expecteth from his Saviour (the Guardian of the Tree of Life) will not be (g) vita mortalis, ſed plenè certéque vitalis, a mortal Life, but plenarily and certainly vital. From the Tenour of the Chriſtian Religion therefore and of the Old Teſtament the Holy Scriptures appear, to be of this Character, The Law of Life, the Book of Life. Whence we may infer,

(1.) The Motives of Religion are accommodate to Nature, the natural Inclination of Mankind, and are ſuited to work upon the deepeſt Principle thereof; for ſuch is the love of Life, and Religion according to their own Heart's deſire bringeth them Life. The Lawyers ſay, (h) Life is the beginning and foundation of all Law (Right and Due) and therefore dearer and more belov'd than all things elſe. Whence it is not abſurd, that the Lives of Men ſhould be preferr'd before other things whatſoever. If the Fame of a Man is to be ſpared, much more his Life; and he is thought excuſable, that would have his Life ſav'd any how. Some ſay that (i) τὸ εἶναι, or being, is πάντων ἐρώτων πρεσβύτατος καὶ μέγιστος, the oldeſt and greateſt of all our Loves: but by our Being they mean our Life; for (k) vivere in viventibus eſt eſſe, in living Beings to live is to be, Life is their Eſſence; for a dead Man is not a Man.

(2.) The great Excellency and Utility, Importance and Neceſſity that Religion is of (becauſe it is Life;) for all Things and Perſons have their worth and weight, their value and importance from Life. The Soul is ennobled, becauſe it is (l) ſcintilla vitæ, the Vital Subſtance, and Jupiter was highly ennobled and celebrated by the Heathen as being the Author of their Life, Livelyhood and the ſafety of their Lives.

> Jupiter qui genus colis aliſque hominum, per quem
> vivimus
> Vitale ævum: quem penes ſpes, vitæque ſunt > hominum omnium.
>
> Plautus pænul. Act. 5. ſc. 3.

They worſhipp'd their Gods and Demons, becauſe they ſuppos'd, (m) that they receiv'd from them the things needful for Life; deify'd the things profitable and the perſons highly beneficial to Life, thoſe eſpecially that found out (n) τὰ πρὸς τὴν βιωτικὴν χρείαν, the Neceſſaries for Life. So Ariſtæus was deify'd, (o) as βιοσώος, a ſaver of Life, and many others as præclarè de vita meriti, having highly deſerv'd of Life. So Men and Families become Noble by thoſe Virtues, (p) which are vitæ communi ſalutares, beneficial to common Life; and Pliny (who was little better than an Atheiſt) hath a favourable Opinion of the belief of a Providence, becauſe it is of utility to Humane Life. Deos agere curam rerum humanarum credi, ex uſu vitæ eſt. (q) The Imperial Lawyers diſpute for precedence of the Phyſicians, but this Objection lieth againſt them, the Phyſicians Profeſſion and Buſineſs is to ſave Life. To which the others anſwer, that their Profeſſion and Buſineſs alſo is converſant about that which is in juſt computation the Life of Men (their Subſtance and Livelyhood which hath in Greek the ſame Names with Life βίος and βίοτος) whence it hath its Ennoblement. Life ennobleth Arts and Sciences; for that is valuable Learning (r) which is μάθημα βιωφελές, Learning profitable for Life; but that can be of no great value, which is like (s) Nobility that feedeth no body, or like the Hay (t) which one gave Socrates to eat inſtead of Bread, or which (as Agellius complaineth of the common Arts and Sciences) hath nihil ſolidum ad rationem vitæ pertinens, nothing ſolid pertaining to the Buſineſs of Life. So Socrates is celebrated for this Saying, Cæleſtia nihil ad benè vivendum pertinere, the deep Speculation of the Celeſtial Bodies is not of importance, as not being of importance to good Life. But therefore true Religion is of greateſt importance, becauſe it is Life and Vitality, the Diſcipline of Life, the Law of Life, the Way of Life, the Settlement of Life, the State of Life, the Concern of it is Life (ubi de religione, ibi de vita agitur) it ſaveth from the deadly Evils, is a vivification of the Dead, raiſeth them to Life, and in the final iſſue of things crowneth them with Life and Immortality. Life is the Way (the Life of Duty and Virtue) and Life is the End (Life which is the Benefit and Reward;) it inſtituteth Aliens to the Holy-virtuous Life, the Life of God and the Life of Bleſſedneſs, that far tranſcendeth Humane Life (which is (u) Life-no-life, lifeleſs Life) to which no Learning can inſtitute Men but only the Book of Life, that is alſo as the Element of Life, whereby alone Life is conſerv'd, as an Hebrew Doctor ſaith, (w) The Sons of Men are compar'd to the Fiſhes of the Sea; for as Fiſhes brought upon the Land die preſently, ſo do Men, when they ſeparate themſelves from the Words and Precepts of the Law.

(3.) Philoſophers and Theologers may be diſtributed into the Vitaliſts and the Sophiſts; for they are fitly called the Sophiſts, that ſubſtitute

---

(z) Doctor vitæ noſtræ vivificans credentium populum. lavacrum vitale. mors criminum, vita virtutum. in novam vitam animati. Hominibus ad vitam datus. vivificandis nobis. mandata vitalia. remedia vitalia. Sanguinis ſui vivificatione. S. Cypr. de op. & Eleemoſ. Ep. 73. Ep. 2. de Idol. van. & ad Demetr. Ep. 25. de Lapſis.

(a) Lib. de Synod. p. 510. Com.

(b) Jul. Firmic. de err. prof. rel. p. 36, 38.

(c) Hær. 78. S. 18.

(d) Min. Fel. p. 312.

(e) Petav. T. 4. l. 12. c. 14. S. 2.

(f) Tertull. Apol. c. 46.

(g) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 17.

(h) Vita eſt initium & fundamentum omnis juris, & proinde omnibus aliis charius & antiquius. unde non abſurdum eſt, animas hominum quibuſcunque rebus præferri. Et cujus famæ, ejus vitæ multò magis parcendum eſt. Sed & ignoſcitur ei, qui ſanguinem ſuum qualiter qualiter redemptum voluit. Zouch. Elem. Juriſprudent par. 2. S. 2.

(i) Plut. Non poſſe vivi ſuav. p. 1104.

(k) Gonet. Clyp. T. 1. Diſp. 4. Art. 7. S. 1.

(l) Tertull. de An. c. 23.

(m) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 399.

(n) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 22. Min. Fel. p. 162.

(o) Huet. Dem. Ev. pr. 4. S. 17.

(p) Oſor. de Nobil. civ. l. 1. p. 294.

(q) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 412, &c.

(r) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 10. c. 4.

(s) Tiraq. ſupr. p 41.

(t) Plut. adv. Colot. p. 1108.

(u) Plut. de Conſ. ad Apol. p. 120. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 12. c. 20.

(w) R. Samuel ap. Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 94.

Notion and falſe Philoſophy inſtead of Life: Such as Maimonides, who (in conſort with ſeveral Platoniſts) deriveth the moral Evils of Men from their Terreſtrial Matter as ſuch; and this is one of his Maxims, (x) The Sins and Vices of Men have their origin, not from the Form, but from the Matter; (y) whereas it is not the Matter, but the Evil Life that is in the Matter, that is (in part) the origin of the Sins of Men. There is in Man a Vital Carnality and Wickedneſs, which can be no more a Privation, than the Diſeaſes of the Body are Privations; yet without any diſtinction or limitation of Senſe the Scholaſtick Theologers ſay, (z) nulla vitiis ſubſtantia, nulla vita, Vitioſities have no Subſtance, no Vitality. They ſay alſo, (a) that our conjunction with God is by Apprehenſion and (ſpeculative) Intellection; (b) that the Life of God is pure Intellect, that is He, and He is that; as Ariſtotle is known to ſay, (c) that the Life of God and his Beatitude is Theoretical. (d) It is uſually ſaid in the Schools of Philoſophers, He that liveth according to Sence, liveth a brutal Life: He that ordereth his Life according to the practical Intellect, liveth an Humane Life; but he that liveth according to the Theoretick Intellect, liveth a Divine Life. So the Alexandrian Cyril and Julian his Adverſary agree, (e) that the Felicity of Men principally conſiſteth ἐν θεωρίᾳ τῶν ὄντων, in the contemplation of Beings. So Knowledge and to be in perpetual contemplation, is with Clemens (f) τελειότατον ἀγαθῶν, the moſt perfect Good; his Gnoſtick doth not deſire it, becauſe he would be ſaved, but counteth Knowledge ſufficient, and referreth his all to it. Origen by the Bread of Life which the Saints ſhall eat in the World to come, underſtandeth (g) the Bread of Wiſdom, the Knowledge of the Truth and of the Cauſes of Things; and by the Water of Life which according to the Doctrine of Jeſus they ſhall drink in that World, he underſtandeth (h) ποταμοὺς τῶν θεωρημάτων, Rivers of Theorems; agreeably to the Hebrew Book Coſri, which by the Sabbath of Reſt and the Angelical World underſtandeth, (i) the exercitation of the Intellect, a ceaſing from Bodily Works that the Intellect may be perfected. So Aquinas ſuppoſeth, (k) that the Nature, Life and Beatitude of God conſiſteth in Intellection, and following Ariſtotle he placeth the Eſſence of our Beatitude in Contemplation, as ſome others place our future Beatitude (l) in the knowledge of the Univerſality of Beings; ſo making an Heaven not ſo agreeable to any as to Ariſtotle's Intelligences (m) that are wholly intent upon Contemplation (and circumvolving the Spheres) an Heaven much more fit for Sophiſts than for the Saints of God; for Knowledge and Contemplation (ſo called in Philoſophy) are no peculiarities of the Saints of God, nor their kind of Goods and Excellencies, but the mean and humane, the common and external kind of Goods, ſuperficial and dilute, comparatively of ſmall concernment (in order to a bleſſed Life) that make none truly good, holy and happy, nor recommend them to God, nor ſave them from being vile and miſerable; and theſe common Goods may be no Goods at all, but common Miſchiefs to our ſelves and to the World. Porphyry therefore hath a mean eſteem of (n) πᾶν μάθημα, μαθημάτων πλῆθος, τὰ ἔξωθεν μαθήματα, all Learning, the multitude of Learnings, the the external Learnings (as he calleth them) the Collection of them being inſufficient, to make the poſſeſſour of them happy; and not only ſo, but he reckoneth the Learning of his Platonic Intelligibles (the things that truly are) ineffectual, ἐὰν μὴ προσῇ ϗ ἡ κατ' αὐτὰ φυσίωσις ϗ ζωή, if there be not a conformation of our Nature and Life to them; for this he accounteth the final Good, τὸ ζῆν κατὰ νοῦν, the Platonic Intellectual Life. Becauſe he depreciateth Learning in compariſon of Life, he is ſo far a Vitaliſt; but becauſe the Life which he magnifieth, is the Myſtic-metaphyſical and Platonic-ſcholaſtical kind of Life, he is no genuine Vitaliſt (but in the main a Sophiſt) not knowing that which is Life as to God and the Soul, and which is our true Nobilitation, Perfection and Felicity.

(4.) The genuine Chriſtians are neceſſarily and peculiarly the Holy Vitaliſts; for their Religion is peculiarly vital, the Religion of Vital Sanctity, of the Vital People, and which is their Vivification, the Law of the Spirit of Life. (o) The Jews call the Chriſtians Dead, and themſelves they call אומת החיה the People of Life; but Spiritual Life is peculiarly the Chriſtians Character, their conſtitutive form and eſſence, and ſpecific difference, whereby they are diſtinguiſh'd from all other Religioniſts, who are devoid of the ſence and ſavour of Life, of an holy vital Nature, and holy vital Operations, (of real living Righteouſneſs) who proceed not beyond an outſide Civility, or dead Morality, or external Ceremony, or a Soul-leſs Piety and God-ſervice, that is but a dead external-formal Buſineſs. To theſe lifeleſs and ſuperficial, ſuch ſpurious and illegitimate kind of Religioniſts the Spiritual-vital kind of Religioniſts are contradiſtinguiſh'd; and ſuch are Chriſt's Religioniſts: for if any Man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his. Living Chriſtianity is the only genuine and ſaving Chriſtianity: if there be no Life in us, there is no Life for us.

(5.) The Scriptures are manifeſtly popular, becauſe they never ſpeak of Life in the peculiar ſenſe of Scholaſticks and Metaphyſicians, but always ſymbolize with the People. Theſe that are called by Ariſtotle οἱ πρακτικοί, the practic ſort of Men, are alſo denominated οἱ βιωτικοί, ſuch as are converſant about and intent upon τὰ βιωτικά, the things of Life and Livelyhood. Their Imployment and Concern is not about Chips of Entity and jejune Theory, but ſavoury Vitality and the Goods of Life, which are called their οὐσία or Subſtance; with theſe Vitaliſts the Scriptures always ſymbolize, when they ſpeak of Life; they mean by it real Vitality, not meer Notion. This they never call Life, and therefore never ſpeak in the Senſe of the Schools of Chriſtendom, who call ſpeculative Intellection and meer Notion Life; nor in the Senſe of the Platonic Scholaſticks, who call Intellect and Intellection the firſt and moſt perfect Life. Theſe in words agree with the Scriptures, (p) θέμενοι τὸ εὐδαιμονεῖν ἐν ζωῇ, placing Happineſs in Life: but their Senſe is extremely diſſonant from the Scriptures; for they mean by Life the Platonic intellectual form of Life. This cannot be the Senſe of the Scriptures (what they mean by Life) becauſe it is peculiarly Scholaſtical and Unpopular; therefore nothing that is Unpopular and peculiarly Scholaſtical can be the Senſe of the Scriptures.

SECTION IV.

The Holy Scriptures are Popular as being Holy-popular.

I. They are Holy-popular; for they are Litera Eccleſiaſtica, the Book of the Church or People of God and of the Matters of their Learning.

(x) Mor. Nev. par. 3. c. 8.

(y) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 14. c. 3.

(z) Petav. T. 1. l. 6. c. 4. S. 7. & c. 5. S. 5.

(a) Maimon. ſupr. par. 3. c. 8. &c. 51.

(b) Coſri, p. 365.

(c) Ethic. l. 10. c. 8.

(d) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 3. c. 42.

(e) L. 3. p. 84. & l. 5. p. 171.

(f) Strom. l. 6. p. m. 478. & l. 4. p. 385. & l. 1.

(g) Περὶ ἀρχ. l. 2. c. 12.

(h) C. Celſ. l. 6. p. 289.

(i) P. 337.

(k) 1. qu. 18. art. 3. qu. 26. art. 2. 12*æ*. qu. 3. art 4, 5.

(l) White Stat. mor. p. 52.

(m) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 41.

(n) De Abſt. l. 1. S. 29.

(o) Coſri, p. 108.

(p) Plotin. En. 1. l. 4. c. 3.

Learning. Inter ſacras literas & profanas, Between the Books of ſacred and profane Learning, there is this difference; the latter are τὰ ἔξω μαθήματα, the Learnings without the Church: But the ſacred Books are (q) proprius Theſaurus, the proper Treaſure of the People of God. He ſheweth his word unto Jacob, his Statutes and his Judgments unto Iſrael, he hath not dealt ſo with any Nation. Pſal. 147. 19, 20. What advantage then hath the Jew, or what profit is there of Circumciſion? Much every way: Chiefly becauſe that unto them were committed the Oracles of God. Rom. 3. 1, 2. The Jews therefore are called by the Muhammedans (r) Populus Libri, as having a Book given them from Heaven containing their Religion. And by the ſame Name they call the Chriſtians, becauſe we have (s) Scripturam divinam, qua Chriſtiana eruditio continetur, the Divine Scripture which containeth the Chriſtian Learning. The Chriſtian Learning is the Chriſtian-popular (the Holy-popular) the Jews ſacred Books are the Holy-popular Books (the Books of the Holy People;) the Old and New Teſtament therefore are Books of the Holy-popular Matters, the Holy-popular Religious Matters and Learning, not of Matters and Learning peculiarly Scholaſtical, Unholy and Unpopular. In ancient times they were called (t) Scriptura Populorum, the Scripture or Book of the People; which Name denoteth this their true Nature and Character, they are Popular as being Holy-popular.

II. For the holy People are the People as contradiſtinct to the Philoſophic Scholaſticks and their Schools. Their Holineſs doth not hinder them from being the People but only from being the profane People. It maketh them the People in a magnifying ſenſe (that were no People) and they are moſt properly λαός. (u) For λαὸς, populus ſanctus, cæteri ἔθνη, unde ἐθνικός. The Name People is moſt apply'd to the Holy People, others are the Nations, from whoſe Greek Name the name Ethnic is deriv'd. Uſually in the Councils and in Eccleſiaſtic Writers (as contradiſtinct to their Paſtors) they are called Plebs (w) Divina plebs, plebs Dei, ſancta plebs gentium, the Divine People, the People of God, the holy People of the Gentiles. (x) Nothing is more uſual in S. Cyprian (eſpecially in his Epiſtles) whoſe definitive Notion of a particular Church is Plebs paſtori ſuo adunata, a People united to their Paſtor. The Biſhops Chairs are (in the Life of Fulgentius) called Plebium Cathedræ (the Chairs of the People) and the Rule was (y) Epiſcopus deligatur plebe præſente, de univerſæ fraternitatis ſuffragio. Let a Biſhop be choſen in the preſence of the People, by the Suffrage of the whole Fraternity. The Fraternity, the Brethren, the Faithful, the Saints and Chriſtians, the Flock, the Sheep, are the uſual Names of this Plebs Chriſti; and it is not unuſual, to call them (z) τὸ πλῆθος, the multitude, and ſometimes they are called beata congregatio. Uſually they are called Eccleſia, taking the word in a narrow contradiviſive Senſe, as the Kingdom is taken, when it is contradiſtinguiſhed to the King; and as a Family is taken, when it is contradiſtinguiſh'd to the Maſter of it. He that propheſieth, edifieth the Church, ſaith the Apoſtle. Which words are thus interpreted by the Commentaries under S. Ambroſe's Name.

(q) Beza in Rom. 3. 1.

(r) Hot-ting. H. O. p. 220, 221 ed. 1.

(s) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 9. c. 5.

(t) S. Hieron. in Pſal 85.

(u) Grot. Not. in Gen. 31. 13.

(w) Lactant. l 4. c. 26. J. Firmic. de error. prof. rel. p. 44. S. Ambroſ. com. in Luc. 8.

(x) Plebs Dominica, plebs Chriſti. plebs obſequens præceptis dominicis, convocata plebe, plebe præſente, plebis majeſtas, ad eam plebem cui præpoſitus ordinatur, apud plebem univerſam, ſine conſenſu plebis meæ. Ep. 3, 5. 10, 11, 13, 14, 26, 27, 28, 31, 33, 40, 55, 68, 69. de op. & Eleemos.

(y) Idem Ep. 67.

(z) Clem. Rom. Ep. p 69. Ignat. Ep. p. 33.

Omnem plebem ædificat, he edifieth all the People. Ordinations were made by Men of great account τῆς ἐκκλησίας πάσης, the whole Church conſenting, (a) ſaith Clemens Romanus. So Regimen Eccleſiæ ſignifieth the Government of the People, and Biſhops are ſaid (b) Gubernare ſibi ſubjectas Eccleſias, to Govern the Churches that are under them. Theſe are called (c) cuncta Eccleſia, all the Church, the Presbyters are called Eccleſiæ Corona, the Crown of the Church, the Deacons are alſo called (d) ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ ὑπηρέται, Miniſters of the Church of God. So in Scripture the People as contradiſtinct to the Paſtors are called the Church of God. 1 Tim. 3. 5. Act. 20. 28. Uſually and from ancient times they are called the Laity; which is a Name diſlik'd by many, for although in it ſelf it only ſignifieth the People, yet it is us'd in a ſenſe of Diſparagement. But ſo they are called by Tertullian, (e) in ſome ancient Paſſages recorded by Euſebius and in S. Cyprian's Epiſtles. In thoſe Epiſtles and generally in Eccleſiaſtic Writers their uſual and agreeable Name is Populus. (f) From flagitious Prieſts populus ſeparetur, let the People be ſeparated. Ordinations of Prieſts muſt be made ſub populi aſſiſtentis conſcientia, under the Conſcience of the People aſſiſting, (g) Sacerdotes populo præſunt, Prieſts preſide over the People, the Biſhop is ſaid (h) toti præeſſe populo, to preſide over the whole People, the Preſident having finiſh'd his Prayers and Thankſgivings at the Euchariſt (i) πᾶς ὁ παρὼν λαός, all the People preſent ſaith Amen.

III. As the common People with their Civil Magiſtrates are one Civil People: So the Holy People with their Paſtors are one Eccleſiaſtical People, and both alike are the People contradiſtinct to the Philoſophic Scholaſticks and their Schools. The Paſtors are of the number of the Holy People in the more large comprehenſive Acceptation, the Paſtors and the People together are one populus Sanctus, populus Chriſtianus, populus Dei, populus Chriſti, conſider'd as in Conjunction they are the Faithful, the Saints, the Brethren, the Fraternity, and ſo conſider'd they are intituled (k) Grex Chriſti, the Flock of Chriſt, (l) credentium populus, the People of Believers, that make up one Church of God both particular and univerſal. The Paſtors of a Church are one with it, and as ſuch are Popular-kind of Men, not Civil-popular, but analogous to Civil-popular, as Origen compareth (m) the Church of God at Corinth, with the ſecular People of Corinth, the Church of God at Alexandria with the ſecular People of Alexandria, the Senate of the Church of God (the Eccleſiaſtical Senate) with the ſecular Senate that is in each City, and the Archon of the Church of every City, with the ſecular Archon of the People of it. So Clemens (n) compareth to Magiſtrates and thoſe that are under them the Presbyters and Deacons of the Church; becauſe the one hath τὴν βελτιωτικὴν εἰκόνα, a reſemblance of the ſuperiour Miniſtration, the other τὴν ὑπηρετικήν, a reſemblance of the inferiour and ſervient. The Paſtors of the Church are Holy-popular in the ſame reſpects and for the ſame reaſons, that ſecular Magiſtrates are Civil-popular, both are remote from the Schools of the Philoſophers, nor did thoſe Schools furniſh the Church with Paſtors or her Paſtors with Learning at the riſe of Chriſtianity. Hegeſippus in Euſebius relateth (o) that ſome of our Saviour's Kindred were brought before Domitian upon ſuſpicion of Danger to the Government

(a) P. 57.

(b) Concil. Antioch. c. 10.

(c) Clem. conſtit. l. 2. c. 18, 28.

(d) Ignat. Ep. p. 48.

(c) Blondell. de jur. Pleb p. 25, 26, 29. S. Cypr. Ep. 68.

(f) Idem Ep. 68.

(g) Blondell. ſupr. p. 5.

(h) Clem. conſt. l. 2. c. 26.

(i) J. Mart. Apol. 2. p. 29.

(k) S. Cypr. de zel. & Liv.

(l) Idem de op. & Eleemoſ.

(m) C. Celſ. l. 3. p. 129.

(n) Strom. l. 7. p. m. 01.

(o) H. E. l. 3. c. 20.

ment becauſe of their Title to the Kingdom (being of King David's Poſterity :) But they relating, that the ſmall Eſtate which they had, lay in certain Grounds, which themſelves tilled, getting their living by their Labour and ſhewing the callouſneſs of their Hands contracted thereby they were diſmiſſed with Contempt, and hereupon they were choſen ἡγήσασθαι τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, to be Paſtors of the Churches. Such were the Church's Paſtors in thoſe times, ſhe was furniſh'd with them from the Country or from Trades, yet theſe were not unfurniſh'd with requiſite Abilities; for they were ſuch as were ſignified ὑπὸ τȣ͂ πνεύματ☉-, by the Spirit (p) ſaith Clemens (the Holy Ghoſt made them Overſeers) and by Inſpiration they had extraordinary Gifts (in the Spring-time of the Church ſhowers of ſupernatural Gifts deſcended upon her) he gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers. Theſe Paſtors and Teachers were Holy-popular kind of Men, who were great ſtrangers to the Philoſophers Schools and their Scholaſtic Literature; and not only ſo, but Tertullian ſaith (q) doctrinam ſecularis literaturæ ut ſtultitiæ apud Deum deputatam aſpernamur. We deſpiſe the ſecular Learning as fooliſhneſs with God. The Philoſophers were the chief Enemies of the Chriſtian Religion, upon which account moſt of the Chriſtians had an exceſſive Averſation from Philoſophy. Which errour ſuch learned Men as Clemens and Origen endeavour'd to correct, but they did it by running into a contrary extreme. Yet from Clemens it appeareth, that the Church in his time without having any thing to do with the Schools of Philoſophers, made her Paſtors out of the Members of her own Body, having eſpecial regard to thoſe, that were of the choiceſt Parts and Abilities. (r) The Paſtor taketh care of every one of his Sheep, but his care is chiefly intent upon thoſe, ὅσοι διαπρεπεῖς τὰς φύσεις, that are of excellent Ingeny, and are of Abilities to be profitable to the People, ἔτοι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ ἡγεμονικοὶ ϗ παιδευτικοὶ, theſe are thoſe that are fit to make Paſtors and Teachers of. Which words probably relate to Alexandria, where greater and more early care was taken than by others (as appeareth from the School there) to have able Paſtors and more Philoſophical Men. But (as appeareth from ſeveral monſtrous Barbarities which they perpetrated) they leaſt deſerved the Name of Holy People there.

IV. The Church is of the ſame Names with the Civil-popular Syſtems, and is a Popular Syſtem, as they are. The word Popular commonly ſignifieth Civil-popular, as in good Authors civilis & popularis religio are terms coincident; and in Cicero. (s) Man's Nature is ſo fram'd, as to have ſomething innate in it as it were Civil and Popular, which the Greeks call Political. In ſuch ſenſe the Church is not Popular, but is that which is analogous thereto. The Holy-popular City, Kingdom and Commonwealth. (t) Our holy Authors by the command and help of God have propagated and govern'd that People, that Commonwealth, ſuch a Kingdom, where that would be Sacrilege, which to the Pagans was Religion. (u) In the Church, that is, in the People, which he hath vouchſafed to adopt to himſelf. (w) Let us wait for the coming of Chriſt, to vindicate the People of his Church. The Church is denominated Populus as being in her general Nature a Popular Syſtem or Society, which the Name of a Republick alſo ſignifieth her to be; but with this Specific Difference, ſhe is the Holy-popular Syſtem or Commonwealth. A Kingdom ſhe is alſo in her general Nature, as being a great Body of People viſibly profeſſing in common Subjection to a common Sovereign Power lodg'd in a ſingle Perſon. And as Civil-popular Kingdoms conſiſt of leſſer particular Syſtems called Corporations: So doth the Catholick Church conſiſt of particular Churches, which are viſible Societies (of Paſtors and their Flocks) which anſwer to thoſe Corporations in the Civil-popular Kingdoms. In a Civil-popular Kingdom (ſuch as the Kingdom of England) all the chief Magiſtrates of the ſeveral Corporations are not one common Authority over the whole of it, ſo as to make it one Corporation (one Ariſtocratical Corporation) beſides the Kingdom: Nor may we ſuppoſe, that in the Catholic Church there is of Right one common Authority of Eccleſiaſtic Men-governours over the whole of it, making it one viſible Corporation ſo govern'd; for this is not only a groundleſs and Unchriſtian Conceit, but it alſo ſpoileth the Analogy between the Church and the Civil-popular Kingdoms.

The Name of a City is alſo an eximious Name of the Church, which ſpeaketh her a Popular (the Holy-popular) Syſtem. For a City is not a rude Multitude, a Chaos or unformed Maſs, a rout and herd of People (x) nor a concourſe of Thieves, Robbers and Cut-throats (Rome ceaſed to be a City, when Senate, Laws and Magiſtrates had no longer place in it) but an ordinate and regular Syſtem (y) σύςημα ἱδρυμένον κατὰ νόμον διοικȣ́μενον, a ſettled Syſtem adminiſtred according to Law. As a City the Church is a Popular Syſtem. (z) From people living together Cities have their Name; therefore the Name fitly denoteth particular Churches in the ſeveral parts of the World, which make one Catholick Church, wherein all the faithful live in Concord. As a City the Church conſiſteth of Free-men (infranchis'd and endeniz'd) that are not of ſervile Condition, but in a bleſſed State of Freedom. And as a City ſhe is an Incloſure (not a wide open Common) as a Town-Corporate or priviledg'd Place; none can be her Members, but they that are admitted, nor can any be admitted (but remain Strangers and Foreigners) ſave only they that confederate and enter into Covenant. But this is that which diſcriminateth her and maketh her of a different kind from all other Cities and Societies, her Citizens are made ſuch by confederating with God as Holy new Covenanters, whereby they are in the State of Society with God and God with them as a God and a People. Other Cities (civil Societies) may be very religious, but they are not Societies made and conſtituted ſuch by Religion. They are but common civil Societies made ſuch by a civil Government, civil People, civil Pacts and Laws: But it is Religion or Society with God (his being to us a God in Covenant and our being to him a People in federal Society) that maketh this Society, to be a Society. That Party the (p) Ap Euſeb. H. E. l. 3 c. 23.

Party

Eph 4.11, 12.

(q) Herald. in Arnob. p. 137, 138.

(r) Strom. l. 6. p. m. 499.

(s) Sic hominis natura generata eſt, ut habeat quiddam innatum quaſi civile atque populare, quod Græci πολιτικὸν vocant. De Fin. 5.

(t) Sancti auctores noſtri eum populum, eam rempublicam, tale regnum, imperante & adjuvante Deo, propagaverunt atque rexerunt, ubi ſacrilegium eſſet, quod iſtis (paganis) religio fuit. S. Aug. c. Fauſt. l. 13. c. 15.

(u) In Eccleſia, id eſt, in populo quem ſibi adoptare dignatus eſt. S. Ambroſ. com. in Epheſ. 3.

(w) Chriſtum expectemus Eccleſiæ ſuæ populum vindicaturum. S. Cypr. de bon. Patient.

(x) V. Cicer. Paradox. quod omnes ſtulti inſan.

(y) S. Baſil. in Pſal. 45. p. 269.

(z) Quia civitates à conventibus populis appellantur, non immeritò civitatum nomine vocantur ſunt Fidei eccleſiæ deſignatæ, quæ in ſingulis mundi partibus deſignatæ, unam catholicam faciunt, in qua fideles omnes de Deo rectè ſentientes concorditer vivunt. Gregor. M. in Job 24. l. 16. c. 25.

Government here is the Holy Sovereignty; that Party the People here is the Liege-people of God (as ſuch;) the Pact between Prince and People here is the Holy Covenant; the Laws here are the Laws of Holineſs; the State of Citizenſhip here is the State of Holineſs; and conſequently the People here are peculiarly the People of God, the People of his Holineſs. This City therefore is the City of God (the divine imperial City) the Holy and Holy-popular kind of Syſtem, an Alien in the World and of an Alien Nature from the World. (a) For this celeſtial City in its Peregrination on Earth calleth to it ſelf Citizens out of all Nations, and in all Languages collecteth a Stranger-ſociety. (b) But whether we call this Society the City of God or his Houſhold and Family (which is another Name of the Church) it is the ſame thing. (c) Our Anceſtors (ſaith Seneca) domum noſtram puſillam rempublicam eſſe judicarunt, accounted our Houſhold a little Commonwealth. A Family is a leſſer City, and a City is but a greater Family, and both are alike Popular Syſtems. Some think, that the word Eccleſia hath ſomething Popular in it more than other Terms of Language. (d) The word Eccleſia (Church) hath ſomething in it, that is Popular and apt to conciliate the Minds of Men. For it doth not denote an eximious Aſſembly conſiſting of the chief Men, as a Senate doth; but a promiſcuous multitude of any ſort of Men, not rude and confus'd, yet ſuch as no Man is excluded from becauſe of the lowneſs of his Condition.

(a) Hæc cæleſtis civitas dum peregrinatur in terra, ex omnibus gentibus cives evocat, atque in omnibus linguis peregrinam colligit ſocietatem. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 17.

(b) Ibid. l. 15. c. 19.

(c) Sen. Ep. 43.

(d) Habet ἐκκλησία neſcio quid populare, & quod hominum mentes conciliare aptum natum eſt. Denotat enim non cœtum eximium & ex optimatibus conflatum, ut eſt ſenatus & βȣλὴ, ſed quorumvis hominum promiſcuam multitudinem, non inconditam, ſanè, atque confuſaneam, ſed talem tamen ut nullus ab ea ob conditionis humilitatem excludatur. Theſ. ſalmur. Par. 3. p. 404.

V. The Old Iſrael was the Old Holy popular Syſtem correſpondent to the Civil-popular Syſtems; and the New Iſrael is the New Holy-popular Syſtem correſpondent to the Old Iſrael. For the Commonwealth of Old Iſrael was founded and conſtituted as the Civil-popular Societies are, ſave only that there was this great point of difference between them (which is alſo a great point of difference between the Commonwealth of Iſrael and the Chriſtian Church) they took God for their King and their God, and God took them for his People, yet their Commonwealth was not the Kingdom of God; (e) as ſeveral of the beſt learned of the Fathers have obſerv'd, that the Kingdom of God or the Kingdom of Heaven is not ſo much as once named in the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament. They had a particular reaſon to examine the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament touching this Name; for they were concern'd in the Controverſie of Pelagius (f) who in the Dioſpolitan Synod in Palæſtine was accus'd for aſſerting that the Kingdom of Heaven is promis'd in the Old Teſtament. He by a ſlight Allegation made a ſhift, to ſatisfie that Synod; but theſe Fathers were not ſo eaſily ſatiſfied; they ſuppos'd, that there was a material Errour in his Aſſertion, and therefore they continu'd, to inculcate (g) reading the Law, reading the Prophets, reading the Pſalms, I never heard of the Kingdom of Heaven but in the Goſpel. Which implieth, that the Commonwealth of Old Iſrael was not the Kingdom of God, nor was it conſtituted a Kingdom by his being King thereof. As when the Jews ſaid Joh. 19. 15. We have no King but Cæſar, they had a King, but ſo as to have no ſuch King, that conſtituted them a Kingdom: In like manner before Iſrael had a King to Reign over them, the Lord their God was their King (1 Sam. 12. 12.) but then they had a King, ſo as to have no ſuch King, that conſtituted them a Kingdom. In this reſpect and ſo far their Conſtitution was diſſonant from the Civil-popular Syſtems, which upon taking a ſingle Perſon for their King, and his taking them for his People, immediately become a Kingdom and his Kingdom. But they were a great People, a Nation and Commonwealth, as the Civil-popular Syſtems are; agreeably to them they had their Civil Government and Laws, Judges, Senates, Aſſemblies of the People, Judgments and Executions, Wars and Armies, Cities and Villages, Tribes and Tribute, their Prieſthood, Oracles, Inſtitutes of Religion (in abundance) and in proceſs of time they had their King and Kingdom like to all the Nations round about them: But ſo as to be the Holy-popular Commonwealth (h) gens illa, illa civitas, illa reſpublica, illi Iſraelitæ, quibus credita ſunt eloquia Dei, that Nation, that City, that Republick, thoſe Iſraelites, to whom were committed the Oracles of God.

(e) Voſſ. Reſp. ad. Judic. Ravenſp. c. 23.

(f) Idem Hiſt. Pel. l. 2. Par. 2. Theſ. 10.

(g) S. Chryſoſt. ap. Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 20.

Deut. 17. 15.

(h) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 18. c 41.

The New Iſrael is an Holy-popular Syſtem correſpondent to Old Iſrael, which was a Type thereof. Whence in the New Teſtament (eſpecially in the Apocalypſe) the Affairs of the Chriſtian Church are ſpoken of under the Names and with Alluſion to ſuch Things and Perſons, as did of old concern Iſrael and the People of the Jews. And becauſe their holy Commonwealth was a Type of our Divine Republick, and alſo becauſe the Church of the Gentiles was to be ſuccedaneous to the rejected Jews, hence the Oeconomy and Government of the Chriſtian Church was ſo order'd as to be correſpondent (not to the Temple and the Hierarchy of Prieſts and Levites which was Ceremonial, but) to the Civil Government of that People, ſo far as the Nature of the Goſpel would permit. Accordingly, the Chriſtian Church hath the Names of the Twelve Tribes put upon it. Apoc. 7. Our Saviour founded it by Twelve Apoſtles, which anſwer to the Twelve Patriarchs (whence Old Iſrael deſcended) and to the Twelve φυλάρχαι, Princes of the Tribes preſerved in David's time. 1 Chron. 28. 1. Theſe are ſaid (i) to have been next in Dignity to the King, and in publick Aſſemblies to have ſate about his Throne in Twelve Thrones or Chairs. But theſe Twelve Princes of the Twelve Tribes did not as a common Authority govern the whole Twelve Tribes (each govern'd apart (k) in his own Circuit;) nor did this their Government conſtitute Old Iſrael one Body Politick. The Correſpondence therefore of the Tvvelve Apoſtles to theſe Twelve Princes of the Tribes is deſtructive of that Pretenſion, which it is alledg'd to prove (l) namely, that the Tvvelve Apoſtles (and conſequently their Succeſſors) were ſet over the whole Catholick Church, to Govern the whole of it as one common Eccleſiaſtic Authority, ſo conſtituting it one viſible Corporation and Body Politic by this one Political Regiment thereof. But the Chriſtian Church knovveth no ſuch Body Politic nor Political Regiment; it muſt be govern'd by Parts, as the Tribes of Iſrael were govern'd by their ſeveral Princes and by their ſeveral Sanhedrin (or Senates) in their ſeveral Cities, to which Sanhedrin the Government of the Chriſtian Churches vvas conform'd. As that Apoſtolical Perſon Clemens Romanus intimateth,

(i) Grot. Not. in Matth. 19. 28.

(k) Dr. Hamm. on Matth. 19. 28.

(l) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 1. c. 15.

(m) P. 54. mateth, when he ſaith (m) that the Apoſtles in their Travels conſtituted the firſt fruits of their Converts Biſhops and Deacons, ϗ τοῦτο οὐ καινῶς, and this was no novel Inſtitution, ἐκ γὰρ δὴ πολλῶν χρόνων ἐγέγραπτο περὶ ἐπισκόπων ϗ διακόνων, for in ancient times the Scripture ſpeaketh of Biſhops and Deacons, and preſently he citeth Iſa. 60. 17. I will make thy Rulers (as the word in the Original ſignifieth) Peace, and thine Exactours Righteouſneſs. He maketh Biſhops Analogous to the Judges of the Jevviſh Conſiſtories, and the Deacons to the שוטרים Exactours or Serjeants that attended them. It is not probable, that the Apoſtles (being Jevvs) in ſettling Church-government receded from the laudable Cuſtoms of their Fore-fathers, or from that Precept of the Law Deut. 16. 18. Judges and Officers ſhalt thou make thee in all thy Gates, that is, in all thy Cities. For hovv like to this is S. Paul's Order to Titus, to ordain them Elders in every City? They have the ſame Name πρεσβύτεροι, Elders; the ſame Office to govern God's Iſrael; thoſe made a Senate, Bench or Conſiſtory, and ſo did theſe, which is often called in Ignatius's Epiſtles συνέδριον, the Church's Sanhedrin. Thoſe ſate in an Half-round vvith an Head over them (the ἀρχισυνάγωγος, Head of the Conſiſtory or Synogogue:) So did theſe, the Biſhop ſitting in a Chair more elevated than the reſt becauſe of the eminency of his place. Thoſe were made Judges or Rulers by Impoſition of Hands, whereby the Schecinah vvas ſuppos'd to reſt upon them (vvhence they did not uſe Impoſition of Hands out of the Land of Canaan, to vvhich Country they ſuppos'd the Schecinah confin'd:) So Timothy receiv'd the Holy Ghoſt by the laying on of the Hands of the Presbytery. 1 Tim. 4. 14. In Scripture we never read of more than one Church in one City, and conſequently in Scripture-times there vvas but one Eccleſiaſtical Senate in one City; which may ſeem ſtrange conſidering the multitude of Believers, that then vvere in ſome populous Cities; and it is not eaſie to imagine any valuable Reaſon of it ſave this only. (n) With the Jews it was a general rule, not to have two Senates in one City, to avoid diſſenſion; for it is ſaid לא תתגודדו non facietis diverſos cœtus, ye ſhall not divide your ſelves into diverſe Aſſemblies. Thus far the Church appeareth, to be an Holy-popular Syſtem correſpondent to Old Iſrael in her external Polity. But the Nature of Chriſtianity neceſſitateth in ſome reſpects a Non-correſpondence between the Church and the Commonvvealth of Iſrael. For they dwelling in one Land might be govern'd by one Supreme Court (their Sanhedrin of Seventy Elders,) but Chriſtians not ſo, becauſe the Goſpel vvas to diſpread it ſelf over the vvhole Earth. Our Saviour therefore only choſe Seventy Diſciples and ſent them forth to Preach, but did not appoint them to be a Court vvith Authority over all Chriſtians (as the great Sanhedrin of Iſrael had Authority over all that People) nor is any mention made of thoſe Seventy in after-times, as if our Saviour by the choice of them intended only to ſignifie that his Church ſhould ſucceed in the place of Old Iſrael with great Correſpondence, yet not without neceſſary difference in her Polity. For as it was not his intention, that his Catholick Church ſhould live in one Land, under one ſecular Prince, and have but one Altar and one Tribe of Levi, becauſe ſuch vvas the State of things in Old Iſrael: So neither did he deſign to ſubject her to one common Authority of Eccleſiaſtic Men-governours over the whole Church, ſo making her one viſible Political Body beſides the Body of Chriſt.

(n) Maimon. de Idol. c. 12. S. 13.

VI. The Church is the Holy Catholick Church, vvhich ſhe could not be, if ſhe vvas not an Holy-popular Syſtem. For ſuch a Connexion there is betvveen Holy and Popular, that whatever is Unpopular and peculiarly Scholaſtical is Unholy. Things muſt be diſtributed into the Holy-popular kind of things, and the oppoſite Unholy, Unpopular and Scholaſtic. As the Scholaſtic Life of God (which is Intellection) is not the Holy-popular Life of God, but of oppoſite kind thereto, and therefore the Unholy. The Spirituality of the Metaphyſical Rabbins and Philoſophers (which is Metaphyſical Incorporeity) is not the Holy-popular kind of Spirituality, but the Unpopular, Scholaſtic and Unholy. So neither of thoſe Myſtic metaphyſical Deities τὸ ἓν, the Henotety, τὸ ὄν, the Entity, is the Holy-popular kind of God, but of oppoſite kind, Unpopular, Scholaſtical and Unholy. The Unpopular and Scholaſtic Logos (which is a Notion of the Mind, or Natural Reaſon or a Platonic Idea) is Unholy and of oppoſite kind to the Holy-popular kind of Logos, vvhich is the Word of Life. The Unpopular Scholaſtic Generation of the Son of God (which is Dictio interna) is ſo Unpopular and Scholaſtic, that it is of oppoſite kind both to the common Popular Generation and to the Holy-popular Generation (vvhich is Regeneration) and therefore is in more Senſes than one of kind both Unpopular and Unholy. And who needeth to be told, that a Platonic mundane Soul is of oppoſite kind to the Holy Spirit? Holineſs is the God-kind or the Saint of God-kind of Excellency, Sanctity is the Saint of God-kind (the Holy-popular kind) of thing; therefore the things that are of oppoſite kind to the Holy-popular, are neceſſarily the Unholy. They are τὰ ἔξω, the things without and on this ſide the Specific Comprehenſion of Sanctity. To introduce them therefore into the Scriptural Theology, what is it, but (o) to bring to and uſe ſtrange Fire at the Altar of the Lord? For the Scriptures are Holy, and they are Holy as being Holy-popular, and therefore what is Scholaſtical, Unpopular and Unholy, is alien from, and oppoſite to their Nature and Character. They are the Holy Books 1 Maccab. 12. 9. τὰ ἱερὰ γράμματα, the Holy Scriptures. 2 Tim. 3. 15. αἱ γραφαὶ ἅγιαι, the Holy Writings. Rom. 1. 2. So the Jevvs call them (p) כתבי הקדש the Writings of Sanctity, ספרי הקדש the Books of Sanctity, or the Holy Books, and ſometimes they call them the Sanctuary of the Lord. They are Holy, as that ſignifieth Sacred, having an inviolableneſs as being ſegregate and remote from what is common. And they are Holy, becauſe of their uncommon kind of Excellency and Unvileneſs, which is Sanctity or Holineſs. Their Holineſs is pure and perfect without any mixture of Sin and Evil. They are Holy by their Special Relation to God (being his Oracles) Holy in Reſpect of their efficient Cauſe (as iſſuing from the Holy Inſpiration) Holy in reſpect of their Effect (ſanctifying us) Holy in reſpect of their End and Deſign, which is to make us Holy. Their manner of treating of things is the Holy; and the Matters which they contain and treat of, are the Holy things, which are no other but the Holy-popular kind of things; for all things that the Scripture calleth Holy, are the (o) Verulam. de Sap. vet. p. 105.

(p) Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 102.

Holy-popular kind of things; ſuch as the Holy God, the holy One, the holy Name, the holy Nation, the holy People, the holy Seed, the holy Fleſh, the holy Place, the holy Temple, the holy Houſe, the holy Habitation, the holy Mountain, holy Ground, holy Prieſthood, holy Garments, holy Convocation, holy Camp, holy Land, holy Oyle, holy Sabbath, holy Crown, holy Coat, holy Inſtruments, holy Veſſels, holy Ark, holy Gifts, holy Offerings, holy Oracle, holy Solemnity, holy City, holy Jeruſalem, holy Day, holy Water, holy Flock, holy Chambers, holy Covenant, holy Angels, holy Child, holy Commandment, holy Men, holy Women, holy Brethren, holy Calling, holy Apoſtles and Prophets, holy Spirit, holy Converſation, and ſuch more. If all things that in Scripture are denominated Holy, are the Holy-popular kind of things, the Scriptures themſelves that are ſo denominated, muſt be (according to our Idea) Holy-popular; and if they were not of this Character The Holy-popular Book, they could not be the Scriptures of the Church of God, which is the Holy People or the Holy-popular Syſtem; and is thus defin'd by Clemens, (q) ὁ ἐκ νόμυ ϗ ἐξ ἐθνῶν εἰς τὴν μίαν πίστιν συναγόμενος λαός, A People gather'd out of Jews and Gentiles into one Faith. (r) Eccleſia populus eſt Chriſtianus, the Church is the Chriſtian People. (s) Chriſtians are a Nation brought forth in one Day (ſuch was their ἀθρόα γένεσις, Generation by heaps) and they are the Holy Nation, which ſpeaketh them the Holy-popular Syſtem.

(q) Strom. l. 6. init.

(r) Eraſm. Adag. Silen. Alcib.

(s) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 405.

CHAP. VI.

1. The Holy Scriptures are Popular in reſpect of their Nature and Character, which ſpeaketh them wholly and intirely Popular, not at all Scholaſtical and Unpopular. 2. They are Popular in reſpect of their Theology. 3. They are Popular in reſpect of their Learning, Science and Wiſdom. 4. They are Popular in reſpect of their Notices of God. 5. They are Popular in reſpect of their Notices of the Viſible World. 6. They are Popular in reſpect of the Authors of them. 7. They are Popular as being without Art, the Arts and Terms of the Secular Learning. 8. They are Popular in reſpect of their final Object. 9. They are Popular in reſpect of Unexactneſs. 10. They are Popular in reſpect of their Figurations of Speech. 11. They are Popular in reſpect of their End and Effect.

I. THE Holy Scriptures in our Idea are denominated Popular without limitation or reſtriction; to ſignifie, that they are intirely and in all reſpects Popular (not at all Scholaſtical and Unpopular) as being in reſpect of their Nature and Character the Holy Popular Book. If in ſeveral parts of them they are Scholaſtical to the utmoſt height and extremity (as the Scholaſtick Theology ſuppoſeth) or if in any conſiderable part of them they are Scholaſtical and Unpopular and as ſuch Unholy, they muſt be counted but in part The Holy Popular Book, and in part of a contrary Nature and Character: Whereas he that writeth a Book of Civil-popular Learning, muſt not make it at all Scholaſtical and Unpopular (for that is contrary to its Nature and Idea) the whole of it muſt be ſo far homogeneous, as to be Civil-popular; and there is the ſame reaſon for the Holy-popular Book as for a Civil-popular: or, as if one ſhould propoſe, to write an Hebrew-popular Book, and ſhould treat therein of the Literature proper to the Grecian Philoſophic Schools, this would be as great an Abſurdity, as to treat of Geometry in a Book of Grammar, or of the Modes of Courtſhip in a Book de re Ruſticâ; and it is alike incongruous, for the Holy-popular Book of the Scriptures to treat of the Matters of unholy and unpopular Scholaſtick Learning and Theology. (t) Why do we commix things ſo repugnant? the Terrene and Celeſtial, the Vileſt and the Chiefeſt, things Pagan and Chriſtian, Profane and Sacred, why do we jumble them together? (u) You mix the things of Scholaſtick Darkneſs with the luminous divine things. (w) What affinity hath Athens with Jeruſalem? the Academy with the Church? our Inſtitution is of the Porch (or School) of Solomon: let them ſee to it, that have produc'd a Stoical, Platonical and Dialectical (Scholaſtical) Chriſtianiſm. The Holy Scriptures are not like him, that in a Carnaval-time went dreſs'd half in the Spaniſh and half in the French Faſhion: nor like the Statue and Teleſm in Photius (x) that is ſaid, to have carry'd in one Leg perpetual burning Fire, and in the other Leg conſtantly running Water. They that forbid the commixing and combining the heterogeneous things (the plowing with an Ox and an Aſs together, the wearing a Garment of divers ſorts, of Woollen and Linnen together, the ſowing our Vineyard with divers Seeds) muſt not be thought, to commix and combine with their Holy-popular kind of things the things Unpopular, Scholaſtical and Unholy, ſo making thoſe heterogeneous things of one piece; but they are wholly and in all reſpects an uniform Book of the Holy-popular Learning, and not any one place in the Bible is of Scholaſtick Interpretation.

The Logicians have preſcrib'd a good Rule for interpreting Scripture, which is (y) carefully to conſider what Things, what Subject and Predicate are ſpoken of in the Propoſition, and to what Diſcipline that Subject and Predicate do belong; from which Diſcipline the nature of the thing may be underſtood, and to that Diſcipline the words of the Author muſt be accommodated. Agreeably to which Rule, when we are to interpret an obſcure place of Scripture, we ought carefully to conſider, whether it ſpeaketh of matters Unholy, Unpopular and Scholaſtical, or of the Holy-popular kind of things? The words of it perhaps are ambiguous, and if taken alone may be underſtood either of the Holy-popular kind of things, or of Matters Scholaſtical, Unpopular and Unholy; but conſidering the Writer of them, thoſe to whom they are written, the Book wherein they are written, the Deſign of them, the Context, parallel places, the Tenour of the Scriptures, and above all their true Nature and Character, we may be aſſured, that the holy writer ſpeaketh not of the Matters Scholaſtical, but of the Holy-popular kind of things. So any Man may be reaſonably ſatisfy'd, that the Logos, the Life, the Light ſpoken of

(t) Quid tam inter ſe pugnantia miſcemus? Quid terrena cæleſtibus, quid infima ſummis, quid Ethnica Chriſtianis, quid profana ſacris confundimus? Eraſm. ubi ſupr.

(u) Miſcetis tenebroſa lucentibus. Jul. Firmic. de err. prof. rel. p. 19.

(w) Quid Athenis & Hieroſolymis? Quid Academiæ & Eccleſiæ? Noſtra inſtitutio de porticu Salomonis. viderint qui Stoicum & Platonicum & Dialecticum Chriſtianiſmum protulerunt. Tertull. de præſcript. c. 7.

(x) Cod. 80. col. 1082.

(y) Keckerman. Log. l. 2. S. 2. c. 1.

of in the Proem of S. John's Goſpel are not meant of Unholy, Scholaſtical, Philoſophical and Unpopular Matters, but of the Holy-popular (the Chriſtian-popular) and Evangelical kind of things. If any one ſhould interpret the Life there ſpoken of, to be meant of the Platoniſts intellectual form of Life, this would be thought a Deliration: yet the Logos there ſpoken of, is at this Day interpreted, to be meant of the Platonic Logos (for Philo's Logos is no other than the Platonic) and this is thought an Orthodox Interpretation: (z) So we force into a Conſortſhip with the Matters of the Chriſtian Religion the Matters of the Heathen Writers, which are alien and further diſtant from it than Darkneſs from Light.

(z) Phot. cod. 170. col. 382.

II. The Holy Scriptures are Popular in reſpect of their Theology, which is The Science of Sanctity, The Holy-popular or Saint of God-kind of Theology, that is of an oppoſite kind to the Theologia Scholaſtica, Metaphyſica, Philoſophica, which is Unpopular (appropriate to the Schools) and Unholy. This Theology is like the Tribe of Dan in the Confines of the Gentiles; for the Matters of the genuine Theology of the Holy Scriptures the Maſters of this Theology, (a) ad philoſophicas ſententias adulteraverunt, have adulterated into Illegitimate-philoſophical: So that the Scriptural Theology muſt be conſider'd as remaining in its proper Nature, and as in the Schools of Jews and Chriſtians it is made into a Metaphyſical kind of Theology. For the Scholaſtick Rabbins have turn'd their Judaical Theology into a Philoſophic kind of Theology, perverting the Senſe of their Law, to accommodate it to the Senſe of the Philoſophic Pagans (ſometimes the Platonic and ſometimes the Peripatetic, but) chiefly the Peripatetic, as is viſible in their Doctrine of God, of the Orbs, the Angels, the Intelligences, and of Prophecy, which they derive from the Intellectus Agens. The ſame change hath been made in the Chriſtian Theology both in the elder-times of the Church, when Platoniſm prevailed, and in her later times, when the Philoſophy of Ariſtotle was thought oracular, when the Hebrew Book Coſri was written, (b) as amongſt the Chriſtians, ſo alſo amongſt the Arabians and ſome Jews, the Study of the Scholaſtick Philoſophy was chiefly in vogue to the neglecting and ſetting aſide the Scripture. The Scripture is neceſſarily in great degree ſet aſide in this Scholaſtick Theology, (c) Academiis & porticibus Atticis partam ſapientiam ructat, it ſavoureth of an origination from the Grecanic Schools, and is either a Platonic or an Ariſtotelian Scholaſticiſm mix'd with Chriſtianity (like the Vintners mixtures with Wine) to the ſophiſticating and changing the nature of it, and ſo great is this change in the Theology of the Ariſtotelian Schools, that their Learning cannot reaſonably be called the Chriſtian Theology, being only an exotick (pretending) Science touching the matters of it. As if we ſhould ſuppoſe a ſort of Men, to have only a Scholaſtick kind of Learning touching the matters of the Stoical Philoſophy, (d) δογματίζοντες μετάτινων σοφισμάτων, dogmatizing with certain Sophiſms concerning them, this their Learning muſt not be counted the true Stoical Philoſophy: So for the ſame reaſon this Theology, which is neither the Science of Sanctity inſtitutive or conſtitutive, but is only a Scholaſticizing touching multifarious matters of our Inſtitution of Sanctity, muſt not be counted the true Chriſtian Theology, but as it is called by Melancthon, (e) Prophana Scholaſtice, a Profane or Exotick Scholaſticiſm touching the matters of it. It ſo mixeth Philoſophy with Theology, as (f) μιαίνειν βεβήλοις τὰ θεῖα, to contaminate the things Divine with Profane by making them of one piece, and ſubſtituting Scholaſtical kind of Notions inſtead of the Saint of God-kind of things. It deſpoileth the Chriſtian Theology of its native Simplicity and Purity, its enraviſhing Pulchritude and Pretioſity, its lively Energy and Efficacy upon the Soul (for this Scholaſticiſm is a jejune and ſteril Science) of its native θειασμὸς, Sanctity and Divinity (its Saint of God-kind of Excellency) and maketh it, to be of the meanneſs and baſeneſs of a common School-Philoſophy. And as one dialectic Sect of the Philoſophers (the Megarenſes) were called ἐριστικοὶ, contentious: So this Scholaſtick Theology is (g) contentioſa ac ſubtilis; for the matters of Sanctity it turneth into Sophiſtical Vanities and matters of School-diſputes, being like the Theology of the Arabian Scholaſticks Ars diſputatoria, an Art of diſputing Logically, Metaphyſically and Scholaſtically. It underſtandeth not Sanctity, nor is this the ſubject and chief ſcope of it; it knoweth not the Life of God, ſcarce taketh any notice of his Kingdom (which is the true Chriſtian Theology) it is far better at intricating and perplexing matters of Theology than explaining them; it filleth the Mind with vain Ratiocinations, and is it ſelf full of difficiles nugæ, frivolous, ſubtil, nice, difficult Queſtions, that are good for nothing (vermiculate Queſtions, (h) as one calleth them) and its Notions are as ſpurious as its Language is barbarous. A Science it is, but of Sophiſts, not of Saints; a Divinity it is, but ſuch as is not of the divine kind (whence Morinus having to do with ſome Scholaſtick Theologers (i) complain'd, that he had to do with Metaphyſicians rather than Divines) as alien from the Scriptures, as it is from the People, from whom nothing is more alien than the Scholaſticks Philoſophic Genius. The modes of Reaſoning and Diſcourſe, (k) the more alien they are from the Genius of the Schools, the more pleaſing they are to the reſt of Mankind, as a modern Author obſerveth: Yet the ſame Author ſaith; (l) To Theology the exact knowledge of the Scholaſtick Philoſophy is prerequir'd; for this ſpeaketh the native Language of that. Another of the ſame Communion ſaith of Calvin, (m) I have ſaid in the Hiſtory of Calviniſm, and I ſay it again, that that Man having never entred the Schools of Divinity, underſtood nothing at all of that Sacred Science; which is a Key abſolutely neceſſary for unlocking the Sentiments and Sentences of the holy Fathers, that contain the Principles of true Theology, as they are to be found in a lovely order in the Maſter of the Sentences. Thus things go in this World, Men of Learning ſee not what is as viſible as the Day, but applaud what they ought to explode with a Paſſage in Epictetus, (n) ἆρον ἐκεῖνα τὰ τῶν σχολαστικῶν καὶ τῶν μωρῶν, away with thoſe matters of Scholaſticks and fond Men.

III. The Holy Scriptures are Popular (as being Holy-popular) in reſpect of their Learning, Knowledge and Wiſdom, that which they mention with approbation, that which they uſe and expreſs, that

(a) Tertull. Apol. c. 47.

(b) Sicut inter Chriſtianos, ita etiam inter Arabes & quoſdam etiam Judæos, philoſophiæ ſcholaſticæ ſtudium maximè viguit, neglectâ & poſt habitâ ſcripturâ. Buxtorf. præfat.

(c) Tertull. de Anim. init.

(d) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 155.

(e) Ap. Melch. Can. Loc. Theol. l. 8. c. 1.

(f) Philo opuſc. p. 42.

(g) Petav. T. 1. proleg. c. 1.

(h) Ld Bacon Advanc. of Learn. B. 1. p. 38.

(i) Vita Morini, p. 75.

(k) Quò à Scholarum genio alieniores, eò ſunt cæteris mortalibus acceptiores. Ars cogitandi, par. 3. c. 13.

(l) Ad Theologiam accurata Scholaſticæ Philoſophiæ notitia prærequiritur, cùm hæc illius linguam vernaculam loquatur. Ibid. Diſſert. 2. p. 20.

(m) Maimbourg Hiſt. Treat. of the found. of the Ch. of Rome, p. 24.

(n) D[illegible] 3. c. 26. p. 358.

that which they commend and teach. For, (1.) although the Scripture mentioneth other parts of Learning as laudable, yet it never mentioneth the Metaphyſical Philoſophy (which was the Philoſophers Scholaſtical Theology) with good Approbation, nor without a damnatory Sentence, Col. 2. 8. Beware leſt any Man ſpoil you through Philoſophy. The Philoſophy which the Apoſtle condemneth, is the old Pythagoric and Platonic Metaphyſical or Scholaſtical Theology (which pretended to be θεοπαράδοτος, a Divine Tradition, and therefore the Apoſtle calleth it a Philoſophy after the Tradition of Men) which was the ground-work, upon which the Gnoſticks ran their deſcant in multiplying their imaginary Gods or Æons, and of the Cabaliſts Emanations; for upon this account the Athenian Philoſophers are ſeveral times call'd by Tertullian, (o) The Patriarchs of Hereticks, and Plato condimentarius Hereticorum, the Sauce-maker of the Hereticks. Agreeably whereto he expoundeth this place to the Coloſſians. (2.) The Scripture maketh uſe of and expreſſeth Mathematical Learning, Mechanical Wiſdom, and there are in it ſeveral Branches of Natural Philoſophy: but of theſe Acroaticks of the Philoſophers Platonic and Ariſtotelian their Scholaſtick Philoſophy Logical-metaphyſical (which was eminently their School-philoſophic Learning) there are not any footſteps to be found in all the Book of God: which is not the Book of God, as he is meerly the firſt Cauſe, Ens Entium, or the Supreme Being, but as he is the Sovereign of the Holy People; and therefore the inſpir'd Learning and Wiſdom of it is neceſſarily analogous to the Civil-popular, which is hugely alien and remote from the Scholaſtick Philoſophy (or Theology) Logical-metaphyſical. So the Bible is ſuch a Stranger to it, that there is not one word in that Sacred Volume, of which a Man may ſay, as Cicero doth of one, (p) Non eſt vulgi verbum ſed Philoſophorum, it is not a word of the Vulgar but of the Philoſophers. Not a Logical word (properly ſuch) is to be found in the Bible, nor any Metaphyſical Diſtinctions, Abſtractions, Quiddities, Formalities, Suppoſitalities, or any thing of like nature; for (q) rem populi tractat, it treateth of the concerns of the People; and the Philoſopher obſerveth, that the Logicians artificial things are (r) τοῖς ἰδιώταις φορτικὰ, burdenſom to the People that are no Philoſophers. The Holy Writers do not diſpute or diſcourſe of any Subject logically, metaphyſically and ſcholaſtically, but popularly. (3.) The Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 12. 8. To one is given by the Spirit the word of Wiſdom; to another the word of Knowledge by the ſame Spirit. He maketh a difference between Wiſdom and Knowledge; and probably in the Apoſtle's Notion of them in this place they differ as the gift of ſpeaking with Tongues and the gift of the Interpretation of Tongues. For the gift of the Word of Wiſdom ſeemeth to ſignifie the gift of ſpeaking an arcane, myſterious and recondite Doctrine; and the gift of the Word of Knowledge is the gift of doctrinally expounding and declaring ſuch a myſterious and recondite Word of Wiſdom. So γνῶσις, Knowledge, ſometimes in Scripture ſignifieth, (s) the skill of underſtanding and expounding the involved Myſteries of the Old Teſtament, and ſo a learned Expoſitor underſtandeth it, to ſignifie in this place that ſort of Chriſtian Knowledge, which conſiſteth in explaining Parables or myſterious Expreſſions in Scripture. So Wiſdom in this Apoſtle's Diſcourſes ſignifieth arcane and recondite Wiſdom, 1 Cor. 2. So ſapientia veterum (of which an excellent perſon hath written a little Book) ſignifieth the Wiſdom of the Ancients as involved in Parables and Fables: and ſo Wiſdom in Solomon's Notion ſignifieth, the words of the wiſe and their dark Sayings, Prov. 1. 6. The word of Wiſdom therefore may reaſonably be underſtood, to ſignifie Doctrine arcane and myſterious unexpounded: but none of this myſterious Doctrine, becauſe it was expounded and underſtood in Chriſtian Aſſemblies, can be ſuppos'd, to be the Myſteries of Scholaſtick Theology; nor amongſt all the Languages which the Apoſtles ſpake, was there ſuch an one as the Language of the School-divinity. (4.) There is a Wiſdom that we ſpeak among them that are perfect, 1 Cor. 2. 6. as the Apoſtle ſaith; whereby he meaneth an higher, more perfect and difficult knowledge of the Matters of Chriſtianity, which in a lower degree were known by the Community of the Faithful. In this Senſe we may ſay with Gr. Naz. (t) τὰ πολλὰ τῶν ἡμετέρων μυστηρίων, many of our Myſteries (or rather many things appertaining to our Myſteries) are not to be carry'd forth or expos'd to thoſe that are without: Nor is it fit to diſcourſe them to all that are within; (u) τὰ συνετὰ συνετοῖς λέγομεν, we ſpeak the things of Underſtanding to them that are of Underſtanding. Such a Wiſdom therefore which is the matters of our Holy-popular Theology underſtood in an higher degree (which maketh the difference between Divines and other Chriſtians) our Inſtitution acknowledgeth; but it knoweth not the Metaphyſical Acroaticks of the Schools of Philoſophers, nor their Acroamatical Theology with the Scholaſtick Deities thereof, nor an Arcane Theology like that of the Egyptians concealed from the Vulgar, nor any ἱερὰ γράμματα, or Sacred Letters, but the Holy Scriptures (which are open to all) nor any ſuch Arcane Tradition of matters of Faith as the Pontificians ſuppoſe, which is very like the Gnoſticks pretended Arcane Tradition of Knowledge: For they ſuppoſe, (w) a Tradition of matters of Faith by the Apoſtles and their Succeſſours; that the more ſublime and remote from common apprehenſion theſe Myſteries were, the more they were hidden and kept in the Boſom as it were, and the more cautious and arcane was the Tradition of them; nor were they lightly committed to writing: or if that was unavoidable, it was done ſparingly and obſcurely, that without being helped by the Interpretation of the Learned none might be able clearly to underſtand them. By ſuch an Arcane Tradition they pretend, to have receiv'd the ſublimeſt Articles of their Scholaſtick Theology, which their Doctors will have, not only to be a Science, but Sapience, according to (x) Ariſtotle's definition thereof, which is not much for the credit of their Scholaſtick Theology; for according to Ariſtotle Sapience is converſant about things of the ſublimeſt nature, but ſuch as are ἄχρηστα, of no uſe or benefit. (5.) Science and Sapience, Knowledge and Wiſdom in a large and uſual Senſe are one and the ſame accompliſhment of the Underſtanding; for in the Holy Writers Wiſdom and Underſtanding (the good underſtanding of things) are terms ſynonymous, Job 28. 12. Where ſhall Wiſdom be found? and where is the place of Underſtanding? Prov. 4. 5. Get Wiſdom, get Underſtanding. But theſe Names are us'd both in a Vulgar Senſe and in a Senſe of Nobilitation (to denote what is of more than vulgar quality) in which latter Senſe Wiſdom is the good underſtanding of things, ſo as to be a perſon of good Uunderſtanding, not one that lacketh Underſtanding. In a vulgar Senſe all Men have a degree of that which is materially Wiſdom,

and

(o) De præſcr. c. 7. adv. Hermog. c. 8. de Anim. c. 3. & 23.

(p) Academ. Qu. l. 1.

(q) Perſ. Sat. 4.

(r) Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 12.

(s) Dr. Hamm. on 1 Pet. 3. 7. and on 1 Cor. 1. 5.

(t) Or. 42. p. 687.

(u) M. Tyr. diſſ. 6.

(w) Petav. de Trin. præf. c. 1. S. 5.

(x) Idem. l. 1. proleg. c. 8.

and are in ſome degree wiſe and intelligent. In ſome degree they have a good underſtanding of the true nature, worth, importance and uſe of things, are adviſ'd and conſiderate, provident for the future, ſuit Means to Ends, prefer Neceſſaries before Superfluities, diſcern their own good and chuſe it, and will not barter away their valuable Commodities for Trifles; of every one of which Particulars (and ſuch more) we muſt pronounce, It is Wiſdom (a point and part of it) the good underſtanding of things, the oppoſite to Folly and the being wiſe. But this Name The Wiſe ſignifieth thoſe Perſons of Quality that are of good underſtanding, ſo as not to be thoſe that lack Underſtanding; and Wiſdom is that good underſtanding of things which conſtituteth them ſuch. In which Senſe of Nobilitation Wiſdom is too high for a Fool, Prov. 24. 7. Wiſdom is according to her Name, and ſhe is not manifeſt unto many, Eccluſ. 6. 22. This is that which is graduately Wiſdom (beyond a mean and ſorry good underſtanding of things) and this Wiſdom true Piety is and the Saint of God-kind of Learning and Wiſdom, which is the Learning, Knowledge and Wiſdom, that the Holy Scriptures commend and teach.

IV. The Holy Scriptures are Popular (not Metaphyſical, Scholaſtical and Unpopular) in their Notices of God; for the Metaphyſical Rabbins obſerve, that the Scripture doth not ſpeak of God agreeably to their Scholaſtick Theology, whence they ſay, Loquitur lex ſecundum linguam filiorum hominum, The Law in what it ſaith of God is popular. (y) It would not be allowable, to make mention of any affirmative Attributes of God (ſaith Maimonides) if they were not in the Law. The pronouncing of them was not allowable ſave only in reading the Scripture: but the Men of the great Synagogue (who were Prophets) order'd them in Prayers, and from that time the uſe of them in Prayers became lawful. The Scripture aboundeth with affirmative Attributes of God, which ſort of Attributions this Scholaſtick Theology doth not approve; nor doth it allow him (as becometh the great King and the God of a People) in any tolerable Senſe, to be a God hearing Prayer, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth, keeping Mercy for thouſands, forgiving Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion and Sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty. For this Theology (z) ſo removeth all Paſſion and Mutation from God, as to remove from him all Virtue and Vital Sanctity, and all the Virtues of a Righteous Governour (juſt Love and Hatred, Favour and Wrath) and ſo aſſerteth his Simplicity (or uncompoundedneſs) as to remove from him all diverſity of Attributes (all plurality and multitude) ſo leaving him nothing but a bare naked Eſſence, which it affirmeth, to be utterly unknowable, ſo that God cannot be known (a) none can apprehend what God is beſides himſelf. But the Scripture (which is an inſtitution to the knowledge of God) is ſo far from ſymbolizing with this unpopular Theology, (b) that it ſpeaketh of God ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, and although it doth not attribute to God any thing that the Vulgar count an Imperfection, yet ſuch things as Men (when they firſt begin to think of God) do imagine to belong to him, thoſe are attributed to him in Scripture. (c) And this was a commodious beginning for Children, Women, and the reſt of the common People (ſaith Maimonides) who cannot apprehend things according to their truth and reality; (d) ἐδέοντο οἱ πολλοί, the common People had need, that it ſhould be ſo, ſaith Origen. The Scripture therefore is acknowledg'd by the greateſt Scholaſticks, to be popular in its Notices of God. Whence good Expoſitors decline the more Philoſophical Senſe of a place of Scripture that ſpeaketh of God, and prefer the more Popular. As when the Apoſtle ſaith, that God is not far from every one of us, a great Expoſitor will not have the words underſtood touching his Eſſential Preſence, but touching his Power and Providence. (e) For Paul doth not call the Athenians to ſubtil Diſputations touching the Eſſential Preſence of God (of which amongſt the Philoſophers and Jews and Chriſtians there were different Opinions) but to thoſe things which were viſible from the things of the World. A good Divine cautioneth us againſt ſuch Authors, (f) who in their Expoſition of the Holy Scriptures have more of Secular Philoſophy, than is agreeable to the Simplicity of Chriſtianity. But Secular Philoſophy is ſuch an Interpreter of Scripture, as is not only injurious to the Simplicity of Chriſtianity, but intirely deſtructive to it; for Chriſtianity is deſtroy'd, if the Kingdom of God is deſtroy'd, which the Scripture is ſo popular, as to attribute it unto God, and which ſome (pretending) Interpreters deſtroy by their Secular Philoſophy; (g) That God is a Lord and King as Men are, or doth generate or love, none that would be wiſe above the Vulgar, will aſſert: whence it is manifeſt, that the Chriſtian People, who take theſe words, as at firſt appearance they ſound, are infinitely miſtaken, and ſo are all Interpreters, that herein ſymbolize with them. According to the Scripture and common Senſe God is a Lord and King, as Men are, and is a free Agent; but according to the Philoſophy of the Schools the Action or Operation of God (more eſpecially the immanent) is abſolutely indiſtinct from his Subſtance, which implieth, that it is neceſſarily exiſtent from Eternity (and in this Senſe God is ſaid, to be a pure Act) and conſequently there can be no liberty of agency in God. So according to Ariſtotle's Metaphyſicks God is ἀκίνητος οὐσία ἧς ἡ οὐσία ἐνέργεια, an immovable Subſtance, whoſe Eſſence is Act or Energy. (h) But I would ask them, that make God immoveable, if a Man hath Subſtance, an Houſe and Family: if the Servants contemning the Patience of their Lord invade and enjoy all his Goods, and have the honour of the Family: but the Lord is contemned by all, derided and relinquiſh'd: can he be wiſe, that doth not avenge ſuch Contumelies? If the Maſter of a Family hath his Children ſlain by his Servant, his Wife killed, his Houſe burned, and never inflicteth a ſevere Puniſhment upon ſuch a Servant; doth he deſerve, to be counted gentle and merciful, or inhumane and cruel? Non eſt ergo virtutis in Deo, ad ea quæ injuſtè fiunt, non commoveri: It is not Virtue in God therefore, not to be moved at unrighteous practices. He is therefore in reſpect of his Sanctity and punitive Severity of Nature rightly repreſented in the Holy Scriptures, which are ſo far from being Metaphyſical in their Notices of God, and from treating of the Subject of Metaphyſicks, which is Incorporeity, that the word ἀσώματος, incoporeal, (y) Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 59. p. 101.

(z) Ibid. c. 54, 55.

(a) Ibid. c. 58.

(b) Ibid. c. 26.

(c) Ibid. c. 33.

(d) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 4. p. 210.

(e) Neque enim ad ſubtiles diſputationes de præſentia eſſentiali Dei, de qua variæ fuere & Philoſophorum & Judæorum & Chriſtianorum ſententiæ, Athenienſes vocat Paulus, ſed ad ea quæ rebus ſentiebantur. Grot. Not. in Act. 17. 27.

(f) Qui plus adferunt de ſeculari philoſophia in expoſitione S. Scripturarum, quam ſimplicitati Chriſtianæ conducit. Muſcul. ap. Hotting. Hexacm. p. 267.

(g) Hominum ad inſtar Deum eſſe Dominum aut Regem, aut generare aut diligere, nullus qui ſupra vulgus ſapere volet, aſſeret. unde plebem Chriſtianam, quando paſſim hæc, ut vocabula prima fronte ſonant, accipiunt, toto conſtat errare cœlo, & omnes qui cum illa hac in parte faciunt interpretes. Philoſoph. Script. interpr. p. 15, 124.

(h) Lactan. de Ira Dei, l. 1. c. 17.

corporeal is not to be found in the Bible (i) as Origen obſerveth. Our Saviour's words therefore God is a Spirit, are miſinterpreted touching the Philoſophic Spirituality.

(i) Περὶ ἀρχ. in proœm.

V. The Holy Scriptures are Popular (not Philoſophical) in reſpect of their Notices of the Syſtem of the viſible World and the Creation thereof. This is commonly acknowledg'd, and the thing is manifeſt, that the Scriptural Syſtem of the World is (k) Popularis univerſi compages, the Popular Syſtem. For (1.) Many of the Fathers, S. Chryſoſtom, Severianus, Diodorus Tarſenſis, Theodorus Mopſueſtenus, the Author of the Queſtions and Anſwers. In J. Mart. Works, Lactantius, Procopius, are of Opinion (l) that the Heavens are not round or a Sphere, but only half a Sphere, of the figure of a Tent and Arch. This Conceit they diſpute for with great vehemence and confidence, contemptuouſly exploding our Hypotheſis, that the Heavens are of a Spherical Figure (ποῦ εἰσὶν οἱ σφαιροειδῆ τὸν οὐρανὸν εἶναι ἀποφαινόμενοι, where are they that affirm, that Heaven is of a Spherical Figure? Saith S. Chryſoſtom) and the Arguments that they alledge againſt it, are certain places of Scripture (of the Pſalmiſt, the Prophet Iſaiah, and the Epiſtle to the Hebrews) wherein Heaven is called a Tent or Tabernacle. And Photius acknowledgeth, that this Conceit of the Fathers is cognate to the Holy Scriptures. Pſal. 104. 2. Who ſtretcheſt out the Heavens like a Curtain. Iſa. 40. 22. It is he that ſtretcheth out the Heavens as a Curtain, and ſpreadeth them out as a Tent to dwell in, So 2 Eſdr. 16. 59. (2.) The Prophet conſidereth (m) Cælum ut fornix, terram ut tabulatum mundani ædificii, Heaven as the arched Roof, the Earth as the Floor of the mundane Edifice. Such was the generally receiv'd Notion of the Earth in ancient times amongſt Jews and Pagans, the old Geographers and Poets, that it was (not a Globe, but) of a plane Figure, which implieth, that there are no Antipodes. If we ſuppoſe it to be a Globe incompaſs'd about with the Heavens, this will infer Antipodes, which was not thought a tolerable Opinion in ancient times. (3.) The ſuppoſed Flat or Plane of the Earth was in ancient times ſuppos'd to be Circular, whence it had the Name of Orbis (n) as appeareth from Cicero. Agreeably whereto the Scripture ſpeaketh of the Circle of the Earth. Iſa. 40. 22. Which Circle was ſuppos'd to bound it, and to bound the Heavens alſo (which ſeem to touch the Earth) whence we uſually read in Scripture of the ends of the Earth (the Extremities) the ends of the World, from one end of the Earth to the other, from one end of Heaven to the other, from the one ſide of the Heavens to the other, unto the utmoſt part of Heaven. (o) By the ends of Heaven and the ends of the Earth we underſtand the ſame thing; for we ſuppoſe the ὁρίζων, or finitor Circulus, to be the common boundary of both, and conſequently that the Earth as a Plane of vaſt amplitude hath this for its utmoſt Circuit or Termination. Coincident with this Horizon was the great Ocean, that inviron'd the Plane of the Earth, as the Ancients ſuppoſed; whence in ſeveral of the Poets the Ocean is put for the Horizon, and in Scripture the word that is us'd for the ſetting of the Sun (p) importeth his going down into the Ocean, as he ſeemeth to do. (4.) Beſides theſe Waters of the Ocean that were ſuppos'd to inviron the Plane of the Earth, there was an Imagination amongſt the Ancients of an Abyſs of Waters under the Plane of the Earth. (q) For both ancient Heathen and Chriſtian Writers held Hades (an inhabited infernal Region) to be under the Earth. So Job 26. 5. the Giants are ſaid, to lament under the Waters; not thoſe of the Flood (r) ſaith a learned Man, but thoſe that are under the Earth. So R. Eleaſar interpreteth ſome other places of Scripture. (5.) The Sun is repreſented in Scripture as moving and (miraculouſly) ſtanding ſtill, as running a Race and having his Circuit from one end of Heaven to the other: But without expreſſing any thing of that part of his Circuit, that is under our Hemiſphere; which muſt be very ſtrange and ſurpriſing to them that conſider not the Popular Nature of the Holy Scriptures. And it is alike ſtrange and ſurpriſing, that in the Old Teſtament the Clouds are repreſented as high as Heaven; the Sun and Moon are plac'd in the Heaven where the Clouds are; and God himſelf is repreſented as having his Seat and Reſidence in the Sky and amongſt the Clouds, thereby to expreſs his Highneſs and Eminence. In celebrating his Excellency on the Sky the Holy Writers deſign to celebrate his Highneſs and Eminence (as if they ſhould ſtile him celſi dominator poli) yet they are not ſolicitous to raiſe it any higher than the Sky, this being ſuppos'd a very great height, the greateſt height of our Syſtem, and the greateſt height of the viſible World according to Popular Apprehenſion. (6.) As the Scriptures ſpeak of the viſible World according to Popular Apprehenſion, ſo Moſes deſcribeth the Creation of it. (s) For the Scope of Moſes in his deſcription of the Creation was, οὔτε φυσιολογῆσαι, οὔτε ἀστρονομῆσαι, neither to do the part of a Phyſiologer, nor of an Aſtronomer (ſaith Joan. Philoponus) but to lead Men to the knowledge of God by the Creation of the World. (t) It was not his purpoſe (ſaith the Alex. Cyril) φυσιολογεῖν ἰσχνῶς, to Phyſiologize or Diſcourſe of the Nature of Things ſubtilly. He is ſo far from it, that a Scholaſtic Divine hath laid down this Rule for interpreting the Moſaic Text of the Creation. (u) Moſes hath accommodated his deſcription of natural and corporeal Things to the apprehenſion and genius of a rude and dull People. (w) Two learned Phyſicians therefore (Sennertus and Valleſius) were extremely much miſtaken in betaking themſelves to the Study of the Scriptures for underſtanding Phyſiology and the Secrets of Nature. So a certain Author hath written a Book in Hebrew (x) for acquiring the Arts by the Six Hundred Thirteen Precepts of the Law. And Salmanticenſis as cited by Druſius (y) ſaith of the Eſſens, Intendunt in ſapientiam Legis, è qua educunt ſapientias Phyſicas, ad intelligendum naturas ſtirpium & animalium. They follow the Study of the Law, whence they extract the Learning of Phyſicks, to underſtand the Nature of Plants and Animals.

(k) Windet. de vit. funct. p. 267.

(l) Phot. cod. 223. col. 698. Petav. T. 3. de op. l. 1. c. 12.

(m) Gaſſend. Inſtit. Aſtr. l. 3. c. 10.

(n) De N. D. l. 2.

(o) Grot.

(p) Grot. Not. in Marc. 1. 32.

(q) Bp. Uſher Anſw. to the Chall. p. 375.

(r) Windet ſupr. S. 12

Pſal. 19. 5, 6.

(s) Phot. cod. 240. col. 991.

(t) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 2. p. 50.

(u) Petav. T. 3. de op. in proœm.

(w) Voet. Diſp. Par. 1. p. 680.

(x) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. p. 4.

(y) De 3. Sect. p. 234.

VI. The Holy Scriptures are Popular (as being Holy-popular) in reſpect of the Authors of them. For as our God is Popular (the God of the Holy People) our Chriſt is Popular (the King of the Holy People) our Holy Spirit is Popular (the Spirit of the Holy People:) So the Writers of the Holy Scripture are Popular, as being none of the Metaphyſicians, Scholaſticks, Naturaliſts, none of the Philoſophic Life and Learning (properly ſuch,) none of any Philoſophic Sect, School or Family, but aliens from the Secular Philoſophy and the Holy-popular kind of Men. (z) Homer is commended as τηρήσας τὰ τῶν ἡρώων πρόσωπα, keeping a Decorum in the Perſons of his (z) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 355.

Hero's, and attributing to them what is agreeable; for it is an abſurdity in a Fable, to introduce an unlearned Perſon, that never heard a Philoſopher, ſpeaking Philoſophically. So it is abſurd, to ſuppoſe, that the Holy Writers have written Scholaſticiſm (Platonic or Ariſtotelian) that were none of the Philoſophic kind of Perſons, but the Holy-popular kind of Men. For

(1.) The Holy Writers conſider'd as Jews appear, to be none of the Philoſophic, but the Holy-popular kind of Men. Such was their Character as Jews, which were the Holy-popular Nation, but throughout all the times of their Commonwealth they never were a Philoſophic Nation, as ſeveral of the Pagan Nations were. What the Rabbins ſay of Abraham's addictedneſs to Aſtronomy, and that God called him from it and from all other natural dubious Science (ſo they allegorically interpret egredere forâs, Gen. 15. 5.) is groundleſs and fabulous; and ſuch is Clemens's Pretenſion (a) that the Philoſophy of the Hebrews is far more ancient than any other Philoſophy, and that the Philoſophers Dogmata were ſtollen from them. When Moſes wrote his Hiſtory of the Creation, they are ſaid to have been a rude and dull People, and it is not imaginable, whence they ſhould learn Philoſophy. Nor was that ſort of Learning the Acroaticks of the Philoſophers Schools ever conſiderably cultivated, or pretended to, amongſt that People. They never had any Schools of Philoſophy amongſt them (as the Pagan Nations had;) for the Schools or Colledges which they had before the time of their firſt Temple (b) were only Schools of the Sons of the Prophets, wherein they apply'd themſelves to Divine Studies, the ſtudy of the Law their ſacred Learning. Theſe Schools continu'd all the time of their firſt Temple; for במשנה 2 King. 22. 14. ſeemeth to be rightly rendred the Colledge, becauſe שנה ſignifieth to Learn or Teach, and משנה ſignifieth Study, and accordingly the word which we render the Colledge (c) is by the Chaldee Paraphraſt rendred the Houſe of Learning, and by Kimchi the School. But when the Jews were in their Babylonian Captivity probably they apply'd themſelves to the Learning of the Gentiles; for when they were mix'd amongſt them, they learn'd their Works, (d) and their Opinions alſo (as Maimonides ſaith;) and it is reaſonable, to believe, that to recommend themſelves to the Gentiles they would at ſuch a time apply themſelves to their Learning and Sciences, which is their way in their diſperſions, as Abul-pharagius ſaith of them. (e) The Hebrews becauſe they were ſeparated from the reſt of the Nations, thought it unlawful, to cultivate Philoſophy, confining themſelves to the Wiſdom of their Law and Prophetic Traditions; and their Doctors were moſt expert in the Hiſtory of the Prophets and of the firſt Creation, which others receiv'd from them. But when after their diſperſion in ſeveral Regions they were mix'd with the Nations, the Minds of a few of them were excited, to acquire the ſpeculative Sciences, and the Intellectual Virtues, and ſome of them attained what they would of the various ſorts of Sciences. As it is probable, that the Jews in their Babylonian captivity did not wholly neglect Philoſophy, ſo it is certain, that when the Arms of Alexander ſpread far and wide, they became acquainted with the Greek Philoſophy and imbib'd it: But it was not imbib'd by the generality of that People; if any of them imbib'd it in a great degree (as Philo) thereby they ceaſed to be genuine Jews; and the Learning and Diſcipline of that People in theſe latter times of their Commonwealth ſtill continu'd the ſame as before. (f) Ebræorum veterum ſapientia in ſui Juriſprudentia poſita erat. (g) That the chief, if not the only knowledge, to which Men of Learning were bred among the People of God from the beginning, was that of the Law, and afterwards of the other Scriptures, the Name of Scribe is evidence enough; by which Name all that made Profeſſion of Book-learning among that People were called. The generality of the more learned Jews in theſe latter times of their Commonwealth were not Philoſophic; and as for the Holy Writers, the generality of them appear, not to have been more Philoſophic than the generality of the Jews were; if any of them (as Moſes and Solomon) underſtood Philoſophy better, yet they were not the Men of that Learning and Diſcipline, but of another, the Jews Religion and Law; whence we may juſtly pronounce, that all the Holy Scriptures were written by the Holy-popular kind of Men.

(2.) The Holy Writers conſider'd as the Prophets and Apoſtles appear, to be none of the Philoſophic, but the Holy-popular kind of Men. For the Prophets were the Teachers of the People by Inſpiration and Miſſion from God. They were Teachers; for although the work of a Prophet did contain ſeveral other things, and Propheſying doth denote ſeveral other things, yet the principal part of the Prophets buſineſs was Teaching. Whence Prophets and Teachers are exegetical the one of the other. Act. 13. 1. 2 Pet. 2. 1. Matth. 7. 15. and Ch. 24. 34. Propheſying is put for expounding and declaring the Will of God. 1 Cor. 13. 2. and 14. 3. He that expoundeth another's Mind and Meaning is his Prophet. Exod. 7. 1. So an Interpreter of Ariſtotle (that expoundeth his Myſteries) is called by Themiſtius (h) Ariſtotle's Prophet. So they that declared and interpreted the Worſhip of the Gods to private Men, are called in Dionyſ. Halicarnaſs. (i) Ἐξηγηταὶ ϗ προφῆται, Declarers and Prophets. Agreeably whereto they that ſmote our Saviour, ſaid to him, Propheſie unto us, who is he that ſmote thee. Matth. 26. 68. Our Saviour as a Prophet was a Teacher ſent from God. Joh. 3. 2. and ſuch was Moſes, whoſe Chair was the Chair of Doctrine as well as of Judgment. (k) Whence Philo ſaith; that they brought the Man, who gather'd Wood on the Sabbath, before Moſes, and the multitude ſtood by him, to hear him. The Prophets therefore (l) were ſuch, as did not only predict future things by divine Inſpiration, but by teaching and reforming the People were Types of Chriſt the great Prophet. They were ſuch as exhorted Men to the obſervance of the Law, as the Book Coſri ſaith. And R. Sol. Jarchi ſaith; the word Prophet every where ſignifieth a Man that preacheth to the People and ſpeaketh words of Reproof to them. The Prophets that God ſendeth, are ſent to the People, are the Teachers of true Religion (which is the People's buſineſs) and to them their uſual Applications and Addreſſes are made. Iſa. 6. 9. Jer. 16. 10. Amos 7. 15. Mic. 2. 11. The Office of the Prophets therefore was an Holy-popular imploy (they were Holy-popular kind of Men) accordingly the vulgar, as the Book Coſri ſaith (m) do not believe the Philoſophers, as they do the Prophets. The Muhammedans ſay (n) a Nation is to a Prophet inſtead of Sons. Agreeably whereto the Apoſtles (being Prophets) are called by Tertullian (o) deſtinati nationibus magiſtri, the deſigned Teachers of the Nations. S. Paul calleth himſelf a Teacher of the

Gen-

(a) Strom. l. 1. p. m. 234.

(b) Vatabl. & Grot. in 1 Sam. 10. 5.

(c) Mr. Smith of Prophecy c. 9.

(d) Mor. Nev. Par. 2. c. 11.

(e) Hiſt. Dyn. p 22, 23.

(f) Marſham Can. Chron. p. 225. ed. Lipſ.

(g) Mr. Thorndike of Relig. Aſſemb. c. 3.

(h) Herald. in Arnob. p. 215.

(i) Antiq. Rom. l. 2.

(k) Mr. Thorndike ſupr. c. 2.

(l) Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 569.

(m) P. 2[illegible]

(n) Hotting. H. or. p. 134 ed. 1.

(o) De Præſcript. c. 20.

Gentiles, and he is called by S. Chryſoſtom (p) ὁ τῆς οἰκουμένης Ἀπόστολος, the Apoſtle of the World, ἡ γλῶττα τῆς οἰκουμένης, the Tongue of the World.

(3.) Although Moſes may be ſaid, to have been of Philoſophic Education (being learned in all the Wiſdom of the Egyptians) yet being rais'd to be a Prophet of God and the People, he became an Holy-popular kind of Man, that ought not to write as a Philoſopher, but as a Prophet of God to the People; and accordingly he hath made no uſe of his Philoſophy in his Writings. A great Expoſitor indeed ſaith (q) certè Aſtrologiæ & Medicinæ peritia paſſim in ejus legibus apparet, Skill in Aſtronomy and Phyſick appeareth in many places of his Laws. And we will acknowledge, that a meaſure of Skill in thoſe Sciences doth appear in his Laws, but no more than may juſtly be accounted Popular, the Acroaticks of thoſe Sciences are not to be found in the Laws of Moſes. He is ſo far from Philoſophical exactneſs in Aſtronomical matters (and he is not more Philoſophical in matters of Phyſick) that he left the People of Iſrael in difficulties inextricable touching their Feſtival times and in matters of Calculation. Clavius ſaith; God doth not tye his Church to the ſubtilties of Aſtronomical Calculations, but to the common judgment of Senſe. Which ſpeaketh the Holy-Scripture, not a Philoſophical, but a Popular Book. But Clemens will have the Law of Moſes, to be a Book of Philoſophy, and one part of it to be the Science of Metaphyſicks. (r) The Moſaic Philoſophy (ſaith he) conſiſteth of four Parts. One is Hiſtorical: Another is, that which is properly called Nomothetical, which is touching Ethical Matters: A third is the Hierurgical (about Sacrifices,) which is τῆς φυσικῆς θεωρίας, a buſineſs of Phyſical Theory or Phyſiology: A fourth part is the Theological, ἡ ἐποπτεία, which is our being Inſpectors, of the Myſticks, of the truly great Myſteries, as Plato calleth them. But Ariſtotle calleth this part Μετὰ τὰ φυσικὰ, Metaphyſicks. As to thoſe that have their Eyes infected with an Icteriſm all objects ſeem yellow: So this Father's Mind was ſo viciated with Conceits of Philoſophy, that the moſt Popular-religious things imaginable ſeem'd to him Philoſophical. So a learned Man of our own (over-addicted to Cabaliſm and Platoniſm) will have the 90th Pſalm (which is aſcrib'd to Moſes) a Monument of the ancient Moſaical or Cabaliſtical Philoſophy. (s) Accordingly the firſt and ſecond Verſes of the Pſalm wherein God is ſtiled our dwelling place (that is, our Houſe of Defence) are perverted, to ſignifie, that God is the Cabaliſts מקום the common place of all things, that his Divine Eſſence is that increate ſpace, which receiveth, containeth and ſuſtaineth all things as their Seat and Place. The Pſalm from the third Verſe to the twelfth according to this Philoſophic and Cabaliſtic Interpretation concerneth the Lapſe of Souls into this evanid Terreſtrial State of Life. Their State of ſilence is ſuppos'd to be intimated in the third and fourth Verſes of the Pſalm; and the fifth Verſe is ſuppos'd to intimate the Platonic Inſemination of Souls called by Plotinus ἡ εἰς γένεσιν σπορὰ, their Inſemination into Generation. That which immediately followeth (they are as aſleep) is ſaid to be hugely Moſaical and Platonical; for a deep ſleep fell upon Adam, and the Platoniſts ſay, that the Soul ſleepeth in this Body. This Interpretation of a Pſalm is an Inſtance, that ſheweth, what a wild Interpreter of Scripture Philoſophy is; for Moſes did not compoſe his Pſalm as a Philoſopher (much leſs as a Myſtic-Metaphyſical, Cabaliſtic and Platonic Philoſopher) but as a Prophet of God and of the People; he compos'd it not for a School of Platoniſts, but for a Nation of Religious People; there is nothing in it, that ſoundeth towards Platonic Philoſophy; the whole of it is plainly expreſſive of Popular-religious matters, as all Expoſitors have hitherto ſuppos'd.

(4.) The Holy Writers conſider'd with reſpect to ſecular Learning appear, to be none of the Philoſophic, but the Holy-popular kind of Men. They are an Inſtance of the Rabbins folly, who require ſeveral great Qualifications in a Prophet; (t) for they ſay, the Holy Spirit doth not reſt but upon a Man of Wiſdom, Fortitude, Riches; and they diſlike this Opinion of the ignorant vulgar (that are wiſer than themſelves) that God may chuſe Men whom he pleaſeth, and may ſend them, it matters not, whether they be wiſe and learned or unlearned, old or young; this only is requir'd; that they be virtuous and good. But the Father of the Prophets, if he doth not find Men qualified with all requiſite Endowments, to be Prophets, can make them ſuch. So in the times of the Old Teſtament Ruſticks (as David and Amos) became Prophets. And in the times of the New Teſtament the great and eminent Prophets, although they were not illiterate at the rate of the pretended Prophet Muhammed (who is called by his followers the illiterate Prophet (u) becauſe he could neither write nor read) yet they were ſuch as are commonly called (w) ἄγροικοι, ἀμαθεῖς, ἀγράμματοι, ἀσύνετοι, ἰδιῶται, ἄγλωττοι, ἄσημοι, πένητες, εὐτελεῖς, the ruſtick, unlearned, illiterate, unintelligent, ideots, uneloquent, obſcure, poor and of mean condition in the World. The Jewiſh Rulers counted them unlearned and ignorant Men. Act. 4. 13. The Gentiles objected, that our Holy Books (x) ab indoctis hominibus & rudibus ſcripta ſunt, were written by unlearned and ruſtical Men. Celſus reflecteth upon (y) τὴν ἰδιωτείαν αὐτῶν, their illiterateneſs, and the Chriſtians make large acknowledgements of it. (z) The Demagogues of our Polity are Publicans and Fiſhermen and Tent-makers. They call the Holy Founders of our Religion (a) Piſcatores, Opifices, Ruſticanos atque id genus imperitorum. Fiſhermen, Mechanicks, Ruſticks, and the like illiterates. (b) Οἱ ἡμέτεροι ἁλιεῖς καὶ τελῶναι καὶ ὁ σκυτοτόμος, our Fiſhermen and Publicans and Leather-cutter (ſo S. Paul becauſe a Tent-maker was reproachfully called by the Pagans) our Laws they call ἡ τῶν ἁλιέων νομοθεσία, the Fiſhermen's Laws, οἱ σκυτοτομικοὶ νόμοι, the Leather-cutters Laws; and O*rigen* ſaith of them too much (and ſaith, it is written in the Goſpel) that they were ſuch as had not learned (c) τὰ πρῶτα γράμματα, the firſt Rudiments of Learning. But he doth not ſpeak extravagantly, when he argueth (d) that Paul the Tent-maker, Peter the Fiſherman, and John that left his Father's Nets, were not likely to have read Plato's Epiſtles. Piſcatoribus non dialecticis credimus (ſaith S. Ambroſe) we as Believers give credence to Fiſhermen, not to Logicians, or Metaphyſicians. (e) Not to Logicians, not to Rhetoricians, not to Grammarians, but to Ruſticks and Fiſhermen our Lord committed his Secrets. Chriſtians have always thought it for the intereſt of their Religion, to repreſent the Apoſtolic Founders of it as deſtitute of the ſecular Learning and Philoſophy (and therefore as the Holy-popular kind of Men;) to ſhew (f) that their

Abilities

(p) In 1 Cor. 9. 2.

(q) Grot. Not. in Act. 7. 22.

(r) Strom. l. 1. p. m. 259, 260.

(s) Dr. H. More Scrip. Phil. T. 1. p. 170.

(t) Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 570, 572.

(u) Pocock. Spec. p. 156. 290.

(w) S. Chryſoſt. Hom. 2. in 1 Cor. & T. 6. p. 635.

(x) Arnob. l. 1. p. 34.

(y) Orig. l. 1. p. 48.

(z) Δημαγωγοὶ δὲ τῆς πολιτείας εἰσὶ ταύτης τελῶναι, καὶ ἁλιεῖς καὶ σκηνοποιοί. S. Chryſoſt. in Matth. p. 5.

(a) Arnob. l. 1. p. 30.

(b) Theodoret. Θεραπ. ſer. 5, & 9.

(c) C. Celſ. l. 1. p. 48.

(d) Ibid. l. 6. p. 279.

(e) Baron. ad an. 670. n. 3.

(f) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 48. & l. 2. p. 135.

Abilities and Endowments, their marvellous perſwaſive preaching and the ſucceſs of it, were of God, not of Man; and that there is no appearance, no place for ſuſpicion, of human Sophiſtry and Contrivance in ſuch plain Holy-popular kind of Men. And what we have ſaid of theſe eminent Prophets of the New Teſtament, is in great degree applicable to the Prophets of the Old Teſtament, who are called by Theophilus (g) ἀγράμματοι ϗ ποιμένες ϗ ἰδιῶται, Illiterates, Shepherds and Ideots amongſt the Hebrews. The Apoſtate Julian alſo counteth the Prophets of the Old Teſtament, unfit to be Prophets (h) ὅτι τὴν ἑαυτῶν ψυχὴν οὐ παρέσχον ἀποκαθᾶραι τοῖς ἐγκυκλίοις μαθήμασι, becauſe their Mind was not purged and poliſh'd by the Arts and Sciences of the Circle.

VII. The Holy Scriptures therefore are Popular as being without Art, the Arts and Terms of ſecular Learning and Philoſophy. They Symbolize with their Holy Writers (the Effect reſembleth the Cauſe) that ſpeak and write more ſuo, in their own way and agreeably to their Character. (i) A very few Fiſhermen not skilled in the Liberal Sciences, and as to their Learnings altogether impolite, not expert in Grammar, not armed with Logick, not tumid with Rhetorick, Chriſt ſent with the Nets of Faith to the Sea of this World, and ſo caught ſuch abundance of Fiſhes of all kinds, and ſo much the more wonderful as the more rare the Philoſophers themſelves. (k) They did not profeſs the Arts of Speech (l) bade adieu to the variegated compoſition of Words and the human Wiſdom (m) and were οἱ ἰδιῶται ὡς πρὸς φιλοσοφίαν Ἑλληνικήν, the illiterate as to the Greek Philoſophy. Accordingly the Scriptures are written without the art of Grammar, and without any nice or accurate obſervance of the Rules of it. For the Criticks (n) have remark'd ſeveral places of Scripture (to which others may be added 2 Cor. 8. 23. Eph. 2. 2.) wherein the Conſtruction is πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον, not with the Words, but with the Senſe; which ſort of Conſtruction is a Deviation from the Rules of Grammar, and ſheweth, that the Holy Scripture is in its way of ſpeaking Popular. Some call this ſort of Conſtruction a Solæciſm (yet no vicious Solæciſm) whence they ſay, that the Holy Writers do ſometimes (o) Solæcize with the vulgar; and if they do ſo, they are the more Popular. They are alſo written without the Art of Logick, without the Logical Definitions, Diſtributions, Argumentations and Method; nor do they uſe the Logical or Diſputatory Terms, as the Hebrew Book Coſri (p) obſerveth of the Prophets. So the Apoſtle Paul maketh uſe of no Philoſophical Terms (q) there are none ſuch to be found in his Epiſtles, but all his Writings are in the vulgar Speech. The Scriptures are alſo written without the Art of Rhetorick; (r) for all the Preachers of Truth, the Prophets and Apoſtles, were deſtitute τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς εὐγλωττίας, of the Grecanic Eloquence, their Writings are ſimple and deſtitute τῆς Ἑλληνικῆς λαμπρότητος, of the Grecanic brightning Ornaments. I believ'd the Scriptures, ſaith Tatianus (s) both becauſe of τῶν λέξεων τὸ ἄτυφον, the lowneſs of their Language, ϗ τῶν εἰπόντων τὸ ἀνεπιτήδευτον, and becauſe the ſpeakers were without artifice. A great Expoſitor ſaith of our Saviour (t) his Speech was every where clear and popular. What our Saviour ſaith of not one jot of the Law paſſing away (u) it is proverbial, as moſt of the things are in our Lord's Sermons, taken from common uſe. (w) In Chriſt's Sayings there are very many things taken from the common Speech of the vulgar or from the Precepts of the wiſe Men, but which for the moſt part be transferr'd from human to divine Things. Of the Holy Writers Divines and Expoſitors ſay (x) Lucas certè loquitur cum vulgo (y) Paulus cùm vulgo loquitur, (z) the Holy Spirit accommodateth his Speech to the cuſtomary ſpeaking of Men, and in this ſenſe the Scripture is written (Iſa. 8. 1.) Becheret Enoſh, with the Pen of Man, (a) Πᾶν τὸ ἐν λόγοις κομψὸν ἀτιμάζουσα, contemning all concinnity of Speech. So of S. John's Compoſures a Critick ſaith (b) nihil affectationis aut ex oratorum arte habent, they have nothing of Affectation (of Wit or Eloquence) nothing of the Orator's Art. The Scriptures therefore are written agreeably to what Plato ſaith (c) Art muſt not be look'd for in the greateſt things. Their true Character may be underſtood, not only from the Notices of their Friends, but from the Obloquies of their Enemies; for the Pagans objected againſt them (d) the common, ordinary, Plebeian, ſordid way of ſpeaking, Barbariſms, and Solæciſms, and Celſus calleth them ἀγροίκους ἀπάτας, ruſtick Deceits; all which reproaches ſpeak them Popular. So the Objections which other Adverſaries have made againſt them (e) from their unuſual Method, ſeemingly incoherent Ratiocinations, various Repetitions, vulgar Phraſes, ſimplicity and nakedneſs of human Embelliſhments, have all of them their Origine from this Source, they are the Holy-popular Book, which is and ought to be without Art, the Arts and Terms of ſecular Learning and Philoſophy. From which Branch of their Idea we may infer,

(1.) One of their principal Virtues of Speech is the Simplicity thereof. As the Chriſtians Religion is to be admir'd and adher'd to, in the nakedneſs and ſimplicity thereof (which is its freedom from any Heterogeneous mixture, that ſophiſticateth and adulterateth the purity of it;) and as one of their principal Virtues is an Holy-virtuous Simplicity (which is their being without Guile, Artifice or Subtilty:) So amongſt other Virtues of Speech in the Holy Scriptures (f) their Nakedneſs and Simplicity is deſervedly admir'd (g) τὸ ἁπλοῦν ϗ εὐγενὲς τοῦ λόγου, that ſimple and ingenuous way of ſpeaking, a Simplicity alien from all Affectation that reigneth in them, (h) a Simplicity unacquainted with any Arts of Sophiſtry, which knoweth not how to contrive a Lye, and which cannot be diſprov'd by ſuch an Argument, as Cicero diſproveth ſome Sibylline Oracles; for he proveth them, not to be of Divine Inſpiration (i) becauſe there is human Art in them, the Art of an Acroſtick. There was no need of artificial Eloquence in the Teachers of true Religion,

---

(g) Ad Autol. l. 2. p. 112.

(h) Fragm. Ep. T. 1. p. 541.

(i) Ineruditos liberalibus diſciplinis, & omninò, quantum ad illorum doctrinas attinet, impolitos, non peritos Grammatica, non armatos dialectica, non Rhetorica inflatos, piſcatores Chriſtus cum retibus fidei ad mare hujus ſeculi pauciſſimos miſit, atque ita ex omni genere tam multos piſces, & tanto mirabiliores quanto rariores etiam ipſos Philoſophos cepit. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 22. c. 5.

(k) J. Mart. Paran. p. 32.

(l) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 372.

(m) Ibid. l. 6. p. 276.

(n) In Luc. 22. 20.

(o) Beza digreſſ. in Act. 10.

(p) P. 361.

(q) Curcel. Diſſ. de voc. Trin. S. 18.

(r) Theodoret. Θεραπ. Ser. 5, & 8.

(s) Or. c. Græc. p. 165.

(t) Cujus ſermo ubique erat conſpicuus & popularis. Grot. Not. in Matth. 26. 26.

(u) Proverbiale eſt, qualia ſunt pleraque in Domini noſtri ſermonibus, de medio uſu ſumpta. Idem in Matth. 5. 18.

(w) Sed & in Chriſti dictis plurima ſunt, ex medio vulgi ſermone, aut ex ſapientum præceptis deſumpta, ſed quæ ipſe plerunque à rebus humanis ad divinas tranſtulit. Idem Proleg. ad Stob. Florileg.

(x) Lightfoot Hor. in Matth. 3. 15.

(y) Grot. Not. in Rom. 7. 22.

(z) Hyper. de rat. ſtud. Theol. p. 137.

(a) Gr. Naz. or. 20. p. 323.

(b) Heinſ. Ariſt. ſac. p. 275.

(c) Phot. cod. 24. col 1239.

(d) Simplicitatem communemque ſermonem, κοινότητα ϗ ἁπλαίαν ϗ ἅπασι καθημαξευμένην τὴν λέξιν, Barbariſmos & Solæciſmos. Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 32. Arnob. l. 1. p. 35. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 7. p. 232. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 17.

(e) V. Mr. Boyle Style of the Script.

(f) Inter cæteras ſacrarum literarum λεκτικὰς virtutes ſimplicitatem ac ἀφέλειαν admira Heinſ. ſupr.

(g) Gr. Naz. or. 21. p. 3

(h) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 135. Arnob. p. 3

(i) De Div. l. 2.

gion, no more than in Architects, Phyſicians, Mathematicians (whoſe Demonſtrations are obſcur'd and ſpoil'd by Eloquence) their Gold needed no gilding, (k) quo imperitior ſermo hoc illuſtrior eſt, their Speech being without the paint and pomp and flouriſhes of (artificial) Eloquence is thereby the more illuſtrious. (l) Simplex ac nuda veritas, plain and naked truth hath all the Excellency and Pretioſity of the truth to recommend it. Simplicity is moſt agreeable both to Divine and Humane Laws, (m) as the Lawyers ſay. And as they condemn over-much Subtilty in Law, ſo the Simplicity of the Holy Scriptures agreeth not with the very ſubtil Interpretations. (n) Scholaſtici quidem argutè & ſubtiliter diſputant, nos verò piſcatoriam ſimplicitatem potiùs ſequemur. The Scholaſticks diſpute acutely and ſubtilly, but we will rather follow the Fiſhermens Simplicity. Subtil Speculations twiſted with great Truths, are greatly to their prejudice; for they tempt Men, to reject thoſe ſubſtantial Verities becauſe of their ſubtil Appendages. And if thoſe ſubtil Speculations are very ſubtil Interpretations of Scripture, there is great reaſon, to ſay of them, as an Expoſitor doth upon Matth. 5. 29. (o) In hunc locum multa congeruntur ſubtiliora, quàm ferat ſermonis popularitas: Upon this place many more Subtilties are heap'd together than the popularity of the Language of Holy Scripture will bear.

(2.) The Style of the Scriptures is in great part ſuch, as the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Writers affirm it to be, who ſay of our Saviour, (p) he affecteth τὸ σμικροπρεπὲς ἐν τῷ λόγῳ, a low way of ſpeaking, (q) the Logos of God πτωχοτέραις ταῖς λέξεσι διδάσκει, uſeth in his teaching a meaner ſort of Speech, he uſed (r) τὸ ταπεινὸν τῶν ῥημάτων, a lowneſs of Language (not a ſublime majeſtick Style;) and although Longinus ſuppoſeth, that Moſes uſeth a ſublime Style, when he introduceth God thus ſpeaking, Let there be Light, and there was Light; let the Earth be, and it was ſo; yet there are thoſe that affirm, (s) that Moſes in this Narration uſeth no other than a low Style, whence they infer, that Longinus never ſaw the Text of Moſes. But the meaning of Longinus ſeemeth to be, that Moſes uſeth a ſublime Style as introducing God ſpeaking in ſuch a Style; and doubtleſs thoſe words of God are in ſome reſpect of the ſublime Style being imperatoria (as Tacitus ſpeaketh) δεινότερον τὸ βραχὺ καὶ ἐπιτακτικόν, they are conciſe and have a grandeur and agreeableneſs to Imperial Majeſty. But touching our Saviour ancient Writers ſay, (t) ἀγροικότερον εἰπών, he ſpake more homely; and in the Scriptures in general they ſuppoſe, τὸ εὐτελὲς τῆς φράσεως, a lowneſs of Speech, ἐν ἰδιωτικῇ λέξει μεγάλα πεινοῶν, compriſing great things in vulgar Language. (u) We ſpeak νοῦν μὲν ἀληθῆ, λέξιν δὲ ἀμαθῆ, things true in Senſe, but impolite in Language. (w) A great and ineffable Treaſure is brought us, not in ſplendid and tumid Speeches, but ἁπλοῖ καὶ πεζοί, ſimple, low and ordinary. Such is the ancient Writers Character of the Scriptures; but in ſome modern Authors they are of a different Character. Budæus is of Opinion, (x) that there are more ſublime and efficacious Tropes in Scripture, than are to be found in the ancient Greek and Latin Writers. Melancthon was wont to ſay (as Mollerus reporteth) that there is no Writing in the World more elegant than the Pſalter of David. (y) Mornay (with whom ſeveral others agree) preferreth the Prophet Iſaiah before Cicero. Beza preferreth Paul before Plato in Grandiloquence, before Demoſthenes in δεινότης, before Ariſtotle and Galen in exact method of teaching. But S. Chryſoſtom (z) would not thank him for doing this honour to Paul in preferring the Eloquence of his Writings before Plato; which that Father counteth both an Extravagance and an Injury to the Divinity of the Chriſtian Religion. Not that S. Paul's Writings are deſtitute of Eloquence, for there is in them and the reſt of the Holy Books (although no Grecanic artificial Eloquence, yet) an inartificial Eloquence, ſuch as is the Language of Wiſdom and of thoſe Divine Affections and Paſſions, wherewith the Holy Scriptures abound. (a) They that underſtand what they ſpeak, underſtand alſo, that they (the Holy Writers) ought not to have ſpoken otherwiſe: for as there is a ſeveral ſort of Eloquence which becometh the ſeveral Ages of Men, and that is not to be counted Eloquence, which is not agreeable to the Perſon that ſpeaketh: ſo there is a certain Eloquence, which is agreeable to Divine Men (no other is agreeable) and this is the Eloquence that they ſpeak, in which they did not follow the Precepts of Rhetorick, but their Eloquence follow'd their Wiſdom, as S. Auſtin diſcourſeth; who will have the Holy Writers accounted Eloquent, yet ſaith of the Scripture, (b) invitat omnes humili ſermone, it inviteth all by a lowneſs of Speech. The low Style of the Scriptures is not ſo alien from Eloquence, but that there are eminent ſtrains of it (ſcarce to be parallell'd) in the Holy Writers; but it is ſo mean an Accompliſhment, (c) and ſo little is the fruit of this Wiſdom of the Mouth, that to conteſt for the Holy Writers preheminence in it beyond the Pagan Writers, and to inſiſt on it as the matter of their praiſe, is as if we ſhould commend Sylla as an excellent Singer, or Appius Claudius as an excellent Dancer. And to ſlight the Holy Scriptures as deſtitute of the Grecanic Eloquence, is the ſame Vanity, that the Athenians were guilty of, who when they wanted Money for the Publick, refus'd to take the kind proffer of one, who offer'd to furniſh them with it, becauſe in his Language he did not proffer it ſatis Atticè & emendatè, Attically and finely enough. (d) They have little concern for their great and only concern, that are for fineneſs of Words, Witticiſms and Elegancies in the New Teſtament, which is the Book of Life, of that Life which knoweth none of our Concinnity of Language, no Suavity of Attick Speech or Purity of Greciſm.

(3.) The Terms of Language in Scripture muſt not be underſtood in the peculiarly Philoſophic Senſe, but being the words of Popular-religious Men touching the Popular-religious Matters they are of Popular-religious Senſe and Interpretation. (e) An Arabian is ſaid to have come to the City Dhafar to the King of the Hamyarenſes ſitting on the Roof of his Palace, who courteouſly entertain'd the Man, and ſaid to him ثب Theb, that is, ſit down. The Man anſwer'd, Know, O King, that I am ready to do whatever you command me: And immediately leaping down from the Roof of the Palace, by his fall he brake the Members of his Body and ſo died. The King wonder'd at the madneſs of the Man, till his Domeſticks told him, that the word which he had uſed, in another dialect of the Arabians did not ſignifie ſitting, but rather leaping

(k) Theodoret. Seearr. ser. 1. Min. Rel. p. 124.

(l) Lactant. l. 3. c. 1.

(m) Simplicitas legibus amica. Nimia ſubtilitas in jure reprobatur.

(n) Chemnit. loc. com. p. 12.

(o) Grot.

(p) S. Cyr. in Julian. p. 531.

(q) S. Athanaſ. de Incarn. verb. p. 76. Com.

(r) Phot. cod. 222. col. 622.

(s) Huet. Dem. Ev. pr. 4. c. 2. S. 53.

(t) Orig. c. Cel. p. 122, 371. 373. Philoc. c. 14.

(u) S. Baſil. Ep. 146.

(w) Theodoret. Therap. Ser. 9.

(x) De Aſſe l. 5. fol. 192.

(y) De ver. Rel. Chriſt. c. 25.

(z) Hom. 3. in 1 Cor.

(a) S. Aug de Doct. Chriſt. l. 4. c. 6.

(b) Ep. 3.

(c) Gr. Naz. or. 3. p. 79.

(d) Verborum elegantiam in ſcriptis novi fœderis, aut veneres ſectari, ejus eſt, qui nihil aliud ſpectavit unquam, nihil in futurum ſpectat. qui de fine eorum quæ ad alia nos ducunt, nunquam cogitavit. nullam enim linguæ venuſtatem, nullam Attici ſermonis ſuavitatem, aut Græciſmi puritatem vita novit quæ promittitur. Heinſ. proleg. in Ariſtarch. Sacr.

(e) Pocock. Not. miſc. p. 24.

leaping or flying. Surely then (ſaid he) whoſo cometh to Dhafar, had need to learn Hamyariſm. So they that come to the City of God (that inſtead of ſitting down with ſafety and ſatisfaction they may not miſtake and fall into Errors) had need to learn Scripturiſm, and what words ſignifie in the dialect thereof. For as the ſame word is of various ſignifications in various Arabian dialects; ſo there is great difference between the acceptation of a word in the Scriptural Dialect and the Philoſophical. For the Exotick Greek Writers are unacquainted with our Scriptural ſignifications of words and our Formulæ or modes of expreſſion: Such as (f) God is a Spirit, to baptize with the Spirit, that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit, the Holy Spirit was not yet, miniſtring Spirits, the Spirits of the Juſt, the unclean Spirits, the Spirit, Soul and Body, to be in and after the Spirit, to walk after the Spirit, in the Spirit of Meekneſs, diſcerning of Spirits: which Scriptural uſe of τὸ πνεῦμα (Spirit) is in very various ſignifications and very uſual, but is extraneous to the profane Greek Writers and not of their acquaintance. The ſame muſt be ſaid of the Fleſh (the oppoſite to the Spirit;) the Will of the Fleſh, the Word was made Fleſh, of the Seed of David according to the Fleſh, in my Fleſh dwelleth no good, walking after the Fleſh, being in or after the Fleſh, the Wiſdom of the Fleſh, living after the Fleſh, warring after the Fleſh, the Works of the Fleſh, the Deſires of the Fleſh, no Fleſh ſhall be juſtified, the weakneſs of your Fleſh, in the Days of his Fleſh; which Scriptural uſe of ἡ σὰρξ (the Fleſh) is in very various ſignifications and very uſual, but is extraneous to the profane Greek Writers and not of their acquaintance. And if the Greek Philoſophers were ſo great Strangers to our Scriptural Notions of Fleſh and Spirit (with many other of our Terms) is it reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that they were ſo well acquainted with our Scriptural ſignification of ὁ λόγος (the Word,) that we muſt fetch the Interpretation of this Goſpel-Logos from their Schools, whence we will not fetch the ſignification of ἡ σὰρξ and τὸ πνεῦμα? As they were great ſtrangers to the Holy Writers and to the Senſe of their Terms, ſo the Holy Writers were as great ſtrangers to them (the generality of them nunquam philoſophum pictum viderunt, as Cicero ſpeaketh;) therefore the Terms which the Holy Writers uſe (ſuch as ὁ λόγος) do not in their Writings ſignifie in the Senſe of the Philoſophers Acroaticks. When our Saviour ſpeaketh of thoſe, unto whom ὁ λόγος, the word of God came, this muſt not be underſtood of the Platoniſts fontal Logos (as ſome would have it:) nor muſt we ſuppoſe with Jobius in Photius (in a ſtrain of Philoſophic-paganizing the matters of the Chriſtian Theology) that this is a legitimate Deſcription of our Purity, (g) τὸ καθαρὸν τοῦ νοῦ ἀμιγὲς τῆς ὕλης, a purity of the intellectual Mind unmix'd with Matter; or that the deſign of Chriſt's coming was to reduce us back again πρὸς τὸ νοερὸν, to intellectuality. If Caſtellio was highly criminal (as himſelf acknowledgeth and bewaileth) becauſe ex evangelio Ciceronem facit (as Maldonate chargeth him,) are they leſs criminal, qui ex Evangelio Platonem faciunt? and there are thoſe, that ex Evangelio Zenonem faciunt. The Holy Writers of the New Teſtament (eſpecially S. John) ſpeak in Chriſtianiſm, but they are underſtood in Paganiſm; which is (according to an Expreſſion of Maimonides) as if one ſhould ſpeak in Hebrew and be underſtood in Arabick. Words are ſo ambiguous, (h) that ſometimes the ſame word is of one ſignification amongſt Grammarians, of another amongſt Philoſophers, of another amongſt Theologers, and of another amongſt the Lawyers; but common Reaſon ſuggeſteth Rules and Notices, whereby to fix and determine their ſignification: For Law-terms muſt be underſtood in the Senſe of Law, and the Terms of Art and Science muſt be underſtood according to the uſe of the Men of Art and Science. So Terms Evangelical muſt be underſtood in an Evangelical Senſe; as they are us'd by the Popular-religious Writers (that are no Scholaſticks, no Philoſophers, no Sons of Art and Science) they muſt be underſtood in a Popular Senſe; as the word στοιχεῖα, the Elements, 2 Pet. 3. 10. doth not ſignifie in Scripture in the Philoſophical Senſe, but it ſignifieth what the People call the Elements. So the Evangeliſts Logos, the Light and Life, that he is (as alſo his Creation) neceſſarily ſignifie in our Popular-religious (or the Evangelical) Senſe; a Scholaſtick Logos (Platonic or Ariſtotelian) is hugely diſſonant from the Evangeliſt's Character; certè talis loquendi modus ejus genio non convenit, (i) as one argueth concerning Ariſtotle. (k) Paſtor ſibi convenientia loquitur: ſo our Evangeliſts certainly ſpeak agreeably to themſelves. What a Philoſopher ſaith (in great degree untruly) of the Ariſtotelians and Platoniſts is moſt true of theſe Holy Writers, (l) they were ἐν δημοτικῇ λέξει καὶ διανοίᾳ εἰθισμένοι, wont to expreſs things in the Popular Laguage and Senſe. And their Writings are the more beauteous, (m) becauſe they are like a chaſt Matron, that hath no Paintings nor any gaudy aſcititious Ornaments of Art.

VIII. The Holy Scriptures are Popular in reſpect of their final Object as being duely accommodated to the Univerſality of the People of God of ſeveral Ranks (accommodated to their Apprehenſion and Genius) and for their uſe and benefit. For as they were written by thoſe that were of the People (their Teachers and Holy Popular kind of Men) ſo they are written for the People, and are directed to the People; their Doctrines are for the Inſtruction of the People; their Laws are for the dutiful Obedience of the People; their Ethicks, Oeconomicks, Eccleſiaſticks, Politicks, are a Directory to the People; their Ordinances are an Inſtitution of the People; their Devotional Parts and Forms are for the Devotion of the People of God; and the whole of them is for their Creation, Conſervation, Diſcipline, Edification and Salvation. In this Senſe they are the Book of the People, and they ſpeak themſelves to be of this Character: for the Style of the Moſaic Law is, Hear, O Iſrael, and what God ſpake to the Prophets in the Old Teſtament-times, they ſpake to the People. So the Laws of Chriſt in the New Teſtament-times are the Laws of his Church and People, and are intentionally the Laws of all People, Matth. 28. 20. So the Apoſtles direct their Epiſtles, not only to the Paſtors, but to all the Faithful; and if any of them are directed to the Paſtors only (as thoſe to Timothy and Titus) yet in the purport of them they referr to the Community of the People of God. The Holy Scriptures therefore are given to the People, and they are adapted to them, to whom they were given. They were preach'd to the People by the Holy Writers of them, that ſpake to the People in the Language of the People, (n) & quod tunc præconiaverunt, poſtea per Dei voluntatem in ſcripturis nobis tradiderunt, and what they then preach'd, afterwards

(f) Gataker. c. Phochen. p. 55, 56.

(g) Phot. col. 508, 602.

(h) Buxt. Lex. Talm. Ep. dedic.

(i) Salmaſ. Not. in Epiſt. p. 218.

(k) Grot. Not. in Amos 2. 13.

(l) M. Tyr. diſſ. 22.

(m) [illegible] de cognit. Dei p. 145.

(n) Iren. adv. Hær. l. 3. c. 1.

afterwards by the Will of God they deliver'd to us in the Scriptures. One of theſe Preachers to the People was our Bleſſed Saviour, whoſe Diſcourſes are eminently Popular (both as to τὸ λεκτικὸν, the words, and τὸ συνοηματικὸν, the Senſe) being Parabolical (which was an uſual and familiar way of teaching in the Eaſtern parts) and his Parables are taken from things popular, known and ordinary; as from Beaſts or Trees, from a Shepherd tending his Flock, from an Husbandman ſowing Corn in his Field, from a Fiſher caſting his Net into the Sea, from a Woman putting Leaven into her Dough, or ſuch like things accommodate to the Apprehenſion and Genius of the People: ſenſus eſt admodum popularis, ſaith Grotius, (o) of a Saying of our Saviour that is not parabolical. Antony the Religious Monk ſaid, (p) Deus per Filium ſuum propriis Eccleſias ditavit eloquiis, God by his Son hath enrich'd his Churches with his own Oracles. They are intirely the Church's Book (to whom the written Oracles of God are committed) and therefore the Book of the People (the Holy People) to whom they are accommodated. This Branch of their Character may be illuſtrated from the Hebrew Doctors, from the Fathers, Origen eſpecially, and from the Senſe and Sayings of Modern Divines.

(1.) Some of the Hebrew Doctors talk, (q) that the ſeven Voices at the giving of the Law repreſent the ſo many Sciences comprehended in it; that there are five things, which are Impediments in matters of Learning, all which were intimated at the giving of the Law. For the Voice of the Trumpet ſignifieth altitude of Conception (that things to be known are of high Conception;) the Lightnings ſignifie the Infirmity and Inſtability of Humane Underſtanding; the Smoak (that filled the Mount) the innumerable Propoſitions that cloud every thing; the Voices a Mind not well diſpos'd through Arrogance and Pride; the thick Cloud ſignifieth the Domeſtick Burden, Wife and Children. At this rate theſe Metaphyſical and Profane Rabbins play with their Law, repreſenting it as a Book of all the Sciences, and of all Secular Learning and Philoſophy. But theſe extravagant Conceits agree not with theſe other Accounts of it. (r) In the Law there is nothing clearly delivered touching another World, nothing touching Angels and other marvellous things, which might have been treated of; and that for this reaſon, as Aben Ezra ſaith; becauſe the Law is given to the Learned and Unlearned, and therefore is adapted to the Capacity of all. (s) Spiritual happineſs is not expreſly promis'd in the Law of Moſes, but only indicated by certain ſigns and coverings; and this is done, becauſe the Law is not only given to the Wiſe and Unlearned, but to the Univerſality of the People, which is a mixture of the Undiſcerning and the Intelligent. Wherefore in the common promulgation of it thoſe things only ought to be inſerted, which might be underſtood by all, and might move the Minds of all, which are τὰ αἰσθητὰ, the things ſenſible, whereas τὰ νοητὰ, the things intelligible avail only amongſt the Wiſe, but to the Judgement of the Vulgar they do not ſo much as ſeem credible. For this reaſon the Law propos'd expreſly things corporeal, conſpicuous and known to the Vulgar, but thoſe things that are only reach'd by the underſtanding under the covering of Signs. If the Law is ſo ſcanty in its Notices of Spiritual Happineſs, and treateth not of the great recondite things, it is far from being a Book of Univerſal Learning; nor is a Life to come more accommodate to Philoſophers than the Vulgar, who in all Ages have been more prone to believe a Life to come than the Philoſophers; but the Law is rightly ſaid to be accommodated to the Univerſality of the People of the Jews of ſeveral Ranks and Conditions.

(2.) Our Scriptures, ſaith Origen, (t) have reſpect to the multitude of the leſs intelligent, which the contrivers of the Grecanic Fables have not obſerv'd They afford to the more intelligent a Theology able to raiſe the Soul from the things that are here; nevertheleſs condeſcending to the mean Abilities of Plebeian Men, and not very intelligent Women, and of Servants and ſimply of all, that by Jeſus only have help to live better, together with thoſe dogmata concerning God, which they are capable of. The Embaſſadours of the Truth deſigning according to their power to profit many, and ſo far as is poſſible (out of love to Men) to bring to it every one whatſoever, not only the Ingenious, but the Unintelligent, and not only the Greeks but alſo the Barbarians (and it is great manſuetude to convert the moſt Wild, Ruſtick and Plebeians) it is manifeſt, that they ought to take care, that their Speech be of a Character commonly underſtood and uſeful, and ſuch as may draw every one to the hearing of it. But they that keep at a diſtance from Plebeians as of ſervile condition, and not fit to hear well compos'd Oratory, regarding only thoſe that are bred in the Arts of Learning, theſe have a very narrow communicative Virtue. Our Prophets and Jeſus and his Apoſtles took care, that their way of ſpeaking ſhould be ſuch, as not only containeth Truths, but is alſo efficacious to draw the Multitude; till being converted and brought in, every one receiveth according to his Capacity the things that are covertly ſpoken in ſeemingly mean Language. The polite and elaborate Language of Plato (who did βοστρυχίζειν, trim his Writings till the eightieth Year of his Age) and of ſuch as he hath profited but a few (if it hath profited:) but the meaner Speech of thoſe who have taught and written both efficaciouſly and accommodately to the Multitude, hath profited very many. (u) Let us ſuppoſe a Sanative Food ſtrengthening thoſe that eat it; and that ſome of it is ſo prepar'd and with ſuch Sauces, as that none of the Unlearned (the Ruſticks, thoſe that are bred in Cottages and the Poor) eat of it, but only the Rich and Delicate: otherſome of it not prepared according to the Palate of the finer People, but as the Poor, the Ruſticks and the Multitude have learn'd to eat, is eaten by Sholes of People. If by one preparation of this Food the finer People only are cured, none of the Multitude meddling with ſuch Meat, and by the other the Multitudes are cured, whom will Communicative Virtue direct us to take, to prepare this Sanative Food? thoſe that prepare it only for the Rich or Learned, or thoſe that prepare it for the Multitudes? ſuppoſing it to be equally Sanative, whether it be prepared the one way or the other. It is manifeſt, that according to Philanthropy and Communicative Virtue that Phyſician is better, as being more profitable to the Publick, that taketh care of the Health of the many, than he that taketh care of a few only. (w) Malo me populus, I had rather edifie the People with rudeneſs of words, than ſpeak nothing but pure Ciceronian without edfying them.

(3.) The Popularity of the Scripture Language was very much diſguſted by the politer ſort of Pagans. (x) For this is a principal cauſe, why amongſt the Wiſe and Learned and the the Princes of this World the Holy Scripture is not believ'd, becauſe the Prophets have ſpoken in a common and ſimple Speech as

(o) Not. in Luk. 12. 15.

(p) Vita D. Antonii.

(q) Men. ben Iſr. Qu. in Exod. p. 136, 138.

(r) Idem Qu. in Deuter. p. 235.

(s) Joſ. Albo ap. Grot. Not. in Matt. 5. 19.

(t) C. Celſ. l. 4. p. 198. l. 7. p. 360. l. 6. p. 275.

(u) Ibid. l. 7. p. 371, 372.

(w) Dr. Crakanthorp Vigil. dormit. p. 499.

(x) Nam hæc in primis cauſa eſt, cur apud ſapientes & doctos & principes hujus ſeculi ſcriptura ſancta fide careat, quòd prophetæ communi ac ſimplici ſermone, ut ad populum, ſunt locuti. Lactant. l. 5. c. 1.

as to the People. But their Speech ought to be Popular; for (y) the Buſineſs of the Apoſtles and Prophets was for the moſt part with ruſtick and plebeian Men, ſaith Beza. Be not offended with the Simplicity and as it were vility of words in the Holy Scriptures, that were ſo order'd, ut ruſticam concionem facilius inſtruerent, that they might furniſh a plebeian Sermon, (z) ſaith S. Hierom. They are called Scriptura Populorum (ſaith he) becauſe (a) Scriptura Populis omnibus legitur, hoc eſt, ut omnes intelligant. Plato ſcripſit in Scriptura, ſed non ſcripſit Populis, ſed paucis; vix enim intelligunt tres homines: Principes Eccleſiæ verò, principes Chriſti non ſcripſerunt paucis, ſed univerſo populo. The Scriptures are not like Plato's Books written only to a few, they are written to the Univerſality of God's People, and are to be read to all, and underſtood by all. The Bible is of right the Book of the People (in Conjunction vvith their Paſtors) it is the Code of their Laws, the Charter of their Liberties, the Teſtament whereby they are inſtituted Heirs, and the Deed of their Inheritance. They have right to keep it (as being their Depoſitum) right to have it tranſlated into the vulgar Languages, right to read it in private and at Meals (as it vvas read by the Primitive Chriſtians) right to have it read and expounded in their publick Aſſemblies, of Right and by Obligation they are to converſe with the Scriptures Day and Night. And S. Chryſoſtom ſaith (b) ὀ μόνον ἀνδράσι συνετοῖς, ἀλλὰ ϗ γυναιξὶ ϗ νέοις ἅπαντα εἰσὶ τὰ λεγόμενα δῆλα, all things ſaid in the Goſpel are plain and open, not only to intelligent Men, but alſo to Women and thoſe that are Young. But ſuch Sayings of the Fathers muſt be underſtood with ſeveral Reſtrictions and Limitations; for the Scriptures are not without their Difficulties and Obſcurities. But in reſpect of far the greateſt part of them they are open and manifeſt to all; in matters neceſſary to Salvation they are ſufficiently clear and perſpicuous; their Words and Terms in the whole of them are to be underſtood in the plain Popular Senſe; and the whole of them may be underſtood by the People (the People of God) remaining the People, without being inſtituted in the Philoſophers Acroaticks.

(4.) Agreeably whereto Divines ſay (c) whatſoever Notion is offer'd upon any head of Divinity by any, who perhaps are of more exquiſite Learning and ſearch in ſome things than others are, if when they are ſufficiently declared, they are not apprehenſible by common ordinary People as well as themſelves, I do count them of little worth in the Chriſtian Religion. They were plain Men, who firſt preached the Goſpel; and they were plain Men, for whoſe ſake it was firſt preached and is written. When it is evident, that there muſt go more skill to the finding ſuch or ſuch things out, more Learning, ſubtil Diſtinction and Wit, than I believe any of the Apoſtles, if they were living, ever had, I cannot but think preſently, that none of Chriſt's Diſciples would have deliver'd this. The Goſpel was addreſs'd to Perſons of very ordinary Endowments, and therefore to be underſtood in its moſt obvious Senſe. (e) The Speech of Scripture is the vulgar, and conſiſteth of words commonly receiv'd and uſed: Whereas the Scholaſtic Terms are unknown to the People, and are underſtood only by thoſe that have ſtudied Philoſophy. (f) Holy Scripture being not penn'd by Maſters of human Art or Science, nor directed to Perſons of more than ordinary Capacities or Improvements, doth not intend to uſe words otherwiſe than in the moſt plain and ordinary manner. Of theſe Sayings and of this Branch of our Idea of the Holy Scriptures theſe are the Conſequences. Although in the Scriptures there is Meat for ſtrong Men as well as Milk for Babes, yet they are accommodate to the Univerſality of the People, as the Laws of a Nation are, and there is nothing in them peculiar to that kind of Notionaliſts the Scholaſticks. The great Articles of our Faith, the Generation and Incarnation of our Saviour and the great Article of the Trinity are not (in the Main or of Kind) Unpopular, Scholaſtic and Metaphyſical. The Generation of our Saviour and his Name the Logos ſignifie in the plain ordinary Senſe. The whole of the Chriſtian Faith is Popular. This ſurely is as plain, as that two and three make five. For the Chriſtian Faith is the Chriſtian-popular (the Holy-popular) Faith, and therefore is Popular, as the Pagans in Prudentius call it.

> Populare quiddam ſub colore gloriæ
> Illiterata credidit frequentia.

IX. The Holy Scriptures are Popular in reſpect of Unexactneſs; for the Holy Writers ſpeak and write with a Popular Unexactneſs, Populariter non κατ' ἀκρίβειαν φιλοσοφικὴν, Popularly not according to Philoſophical Exactneſs; which ſheweth, that the Bible is a Popular, not a Philoſophical or Scholaſtical kind of Book. A Divine of our own ſpeaking of the Tenth Commandment ſaith. (g) It is certain, the Holy Spirit doth affect Logical Diviſion or Rhetorical Partitions or Methods, but delivereth things groſly to a rude People, inculcating the ſame thing under divers forms of Speech. Again he ſaith. (h) The Scripture is not wont to ſpeak Logically, Preciſely or Scholaſtically, but Popularly and Familiarly. So it ſpeaketh, when it ſpeaketh of the Syſtem of the viſible World; when it maketh a Conſtruction, not to the Words, but to the Senſe, and ſo it ſpeaketh of ſingular Perſons and a ſingular Animal in the Plural Number. Matth. 21. 2. and 26. 8. and 27. 44. Luc. 23. 36. Joh. 19. 29. Heb. 11. 33, 37. So ſome Interpreters expound Gen. 1. 6. (i) In medio, non mathematico, ſed rudi minerva. The midſt is not mathematically, but groſly ſo called. So 2 Chron. 4. 2. He made a molten Sea of ten Cubits from brim to brim, round in compaſs, and five Cubits the height thereof, and a line of thirty Cubits did compaſs it round about. The Diameter of this round molten Sea is ſaid to be ten Cubits, yet the Circumference is ſaid to be but thirty Cubits, which is not according to Mathematical Exactneſs. So 1 Joh. 3. 8. the Apoſtle ſaith; the Devil ſinneth from the beginning. Which is not to be be underſtood nicely and exactly; (k) for a little time doth not hinder, but that a thing may be ſaid to have been from the beginning. Of our Saviour's Words which call Muſtard-ſeed the leaſt of all Seeds, an Expoſitor ſaith, (l) In ſuch Sayings we are wont to ſpeak non Philoſophicè & ſubtiliter, ſed populariter, not Philoſophically and Subtilly, but Popularly, παχυμερέστερον, groſly, not ἀκριβῶς, exactly. So in Moral and Proverbial Sayings (which are to be underſtood as moſt likely to be true and for the moſt part true) the Scripture ſpeaketh in a mollify'd and qualify'd Senſe, according to the Latitude and eaſie Air of Popular Speech, and not according to rigorous Exactneſs. Train up a Child in the way that he ſhall go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

(y) Beza Digreſſ. in Act. 10.

(z) Ep. 103.

(a) In Pſal. 86.

(b) In Joan. Hom. 2. p. 561.

(c) Mr. Humphrey's Paper of Redemption. p. 25.

(g) Scrivener Body of Divin. p. 531.

(h) Ibid. p. 322.

(i) Poli Syn. in loc.

(k) Viv. in S Aug. de C. D. l. 11. c. 15.

(l) Maldonat in Matth 13. 32.

(c) Scripturæ ſermo eſt vulgaris & conſtans ex vocibus communiter receptis & uſitatis: Cùm termini Scholaſtici populo ſint incogniti, & ab iis ſolùm intelligantur, qui philoſophiæ operam dederunt. Curcell. Diſſ. de voc. Trin. S. 13.

(f) Dr. Barrow on the Creed. Ser. 4 p. 55.

it. All Men ſhall ſee and fear, and ſhall do no more ſuch Wickedneſs. When thy Judgments are in the Earth, the Inhabitants of the World will learn Righteouſneſs. Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is Good? So the generality of Speech in Scripture is oftentimes to be limited to the matter ſpoken of; as when our Saviour ſaith to the Apoſtles, The Spirit of Truth he will guide you into all Truth (not all common or uſeleſs Truth, but ſuch as concerneth your Miniſtery:) All things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you; yet he had many things to ſay to them, which then they could not bear. So Gen. 31. 29. Laban is charg'd to ſpeak to Jacob neither good nor bad, that is, touching Jacob's return to him. The Stoick in Stobæus obſerveth this neceſſary and uſual limitation of the largeneſs of our Popular Speech. (m) We ſay of a Piper or an Harper, he doth all well, yet ſubunderſtanding as to the matter of his piping and harping. So when God ſaith in the Prophet Jer. 32. 40. I will put my fear in their Hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me; the Senſe is, their departure ſhall not be eaſie or uſual. And when the Scripture ſpeaketh of Ahab's ſending into all Nations; of giving to Cyrus all Kingdoms; both of Hezekiah and Joſiah, that there was none like him; that we ſhall be hated of all Men; that all are gone aſide and become filthy; that Chriſt ever taught in the Synagogue and Temple; that the Apoſtles were in the Temple continually, of giving Thanks in every thing, of praying continually, and rejoicing evermore; this Phraſeology is of a mild Popular Senſe, and is not rigorouſly to be underſtood. Which ſort of miſunderſtanding Popular Speech was the Errour of the Euchites, the Anthropomorphites and of Pelagius (who ſuppos'd, that none Rich could be ſaved,) and is the Errour of Tranſubſtantiation and of the high-flown Perfectioniſts; (n) and ſeveral of the Jews Objections againſt Chriſtianity are rigorous Interpretations of the Popular Prophetic Phraſes of the Old Teſtament. This Popularity of Holy Scripture in reſpect of Unexactneſs is further remarkable in ſeveral great Inſtances of it, which we ought not to overlook. For

(1.) In an Objection which the Jews make againſt the Holy Writers of the New Teſtament, there are many Inſtances of their Popular Unexactneſs. S. Hierom in many of his Commentaries obſerveth, (o) that in almoſt all the Teſtimonies which they cite from the Old Teſtament, the Evangeliſts or Apoſtles truſted to their Memory, and only explicating the Senſe they often chang'd the Words, ſometimes adding and ſometimes taking away words. (p) Upon this account the Jews accuſe them of corrupting the Scriptures; to which the Chriſtians Anſwer; that the Writers of the New Teſtament were not ſolicitous about the words, but the Senſe they recite. Which is an Anſwer, that (although they reject, yet) the Jews have great Reaſon, to be ſatisfied with, ſeeing their own Writers have done the ſame thing. For the Eighteenth Pſalm as it is recited 2 Sam. 22. is obſerved, to differ from that which is in the Book of Pſalms in no leſs than nine and forty places; ſo little regard have the Holy Writers to a Critical or Philoſophical Exactneſs. So vain and frivolous is that Saying of the Rabbins; that there is not one Letter of Scripture, on which great Mountains of Learning do not depend; and ſo needleſs is the pains of ſome Criticks in reconciling the Old and New Teſtament, ſometimes accuſing the Copyiſts, ſometimes the Interpreters, and ſometimes they tell us, that either by Divine Inſpiration or having a better Copy the Apoſtles ſo cite Teſtimonies from the Prophets, as to correct the Faults (as if the Apoſtles were as great Criticks as themſevles;) and concerning the Septuagint they have recourſe to their varia Lectiones, as if they had read otherwiſe than we do. (q) Whereas thoſe ancient Interpreters did not render word for word, or confine themſelves to the words, but having regard to the Senſe, that they might expreſs it in their own way (oftentimes Paraphraſtically) they took liberty, to recede from the words, having as little regard to a nice Exactneſs as the Holy Writers of the New Teſtament. Who in citing the Old Teſtament (r) ſometimes follow the Septuagint differing from the Hebrew; ſometimes they follow the Hebrew Text waving the Septuagint; ſometimes their Citation agreeth with neither (as Matth. 2. 6.) ſometimes they forſake the Septuagint when the difference is but in Words, not in Senſe; to the end ſay ſome, that their indulgence to the Grecizing Jews and Gentiles in uſing the Greek Verſion receiv'd by them, might not be ſo interpreted, as if they counted it Authentick and not to be receded from: But the true reaſon is, the Holy Writers had no regard to a nice and needleſs Exactneſs. Of which the Evangeliſt S. Matthew is a great Inſtance, in whoſe Genealogy of our Saviour three Kings are left out; yet he accounted that imperfect Genealogy which he made uſe of and follow'd, to be ſufficiently perfect for his purpoſe (as it was) and therefore he concern'd not himſelf about a needleſs rigorous Exactneſs.

(2.) A ſpeaking of things in groſs by way of counting without deſcending to unneceſſary Exactneſs (which may be called a groſs Popular ſpeaking) is in Gen. 46. 15. Theſe be the Sons of Leah, which ſhe bare unto Jacob in Padan-Aram (where only ſix Sons was born) with his Daughter Dinah: All the Souls of his Sons and Daughters were thirty and three. So Act. 7. 14. (although not ſo many as ſeventy Perſons can reaſonably be thought, to have gone down into Egypt, yet) the Text ſaith; Joſeph called his Father Jacob to him, and all his Kindred, threeſcore and fifteen Souls. And the Text of Moſes ſaith Gen. 46. 27. All the Souls of the Houſe of Jacob which came into Egypt, were threeſcore and ten. So Act. 7. 6. Gen. 15. 13. (although the Children of Iſrael could not be in their Egyptian Thraldom above the one half of the ſpace of four hundred Years, yet) the Text ſaith, that they ſhould be in Bondage and be evil intreated four hundred Years. And Exod. 12. 40. the Text ſaith, The ſojourning of the Children of Iſrael, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty Years. In this groſs Popular way of ſpeaking things diſtinct are huddled up together (for brevity ſake) without deſcending to the Exactneſs of diſtinguiſhing them. As any one may be ſatisfied, that Act. 7. 16. S. Stephen's meaning is, that their Fathers which were carried out of Egypt, were buried both in the Field, which Abraham bought for a Summ of Money of Ephron the Son of Zohar, and in the Field which Jacob bought of the Sons of Hamor the Father of Sichem: But in his conciſe Expreſſions theſe two diſtinct Paſſages of Old Teſtament-Hiſtory are ſo far from being diſtinctly mention'd, that they are intricated and in great degree confounded. The Rabbins have ſeveral axioms, which ſhew, that the Scriptures are not artificially written; for they ſay (s) אין

(m) Λέγομεν πάντ᾽ εὖ ποιεῖν, τὸν αὐλητὴν ἢ κιθαρῳδὸν συνακουομένου τοῦ ὅτι τὰ μὲν κατὰ τὴν αὔλησιν, τὰ δὲ κατὰ τὴν κιθαρῳδίαν.

(n) Pocock on Hoſ. p. 21. Hulſ. Theol. Jud. p. 157.

(o) In Galat. 3. 10. in Amos 5. 25. in Mich. 5. 2. &c. Epiſt. 101.

(p) Hotting. Theſaur. Phil. p. 132.

(q) Pocock Not. Miſc. p. 45.

(r) Lud. Capel. Crit. ſacr. l. 3. c. 3. & l. 2. c. 1. Hotting. ſupr. p. 333.

(s) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 62. Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 232 Menaſ. ben Iſ Qu. in Gen. p. 45.

מוקדם ומאוחר בתורה Non eſt prius & poſterius in lege, there is no before and after in the Law. Which is to ſay, ὕςερον πρότερον, there is no ſuch exact Obſervation of Order, but that is ſet before, which ſhould come after. The Prophecy of Jeremiah is full of theſe Tranſpoſitions: But touching the Law the Jews ſay, this Axiom muſt be underſtood of ſeveral Sections of it, not of the ſame Section. They obſerve alſo in ſome places (t) מקרא מסורס that the words of Scripture are inverted or tranſpos'd. And the ſame is obſerv'd by S. Chryſoſtom, S. Auſtin and S. Cyril. As Joh. 8. 44. our Saviour ſpeaketh of the Devil, as if this was the cauſe, why he abode not in the Truth, becauſe there is no Truth in him: Cùm potiùs ea ſit cauſa, ut in eo veritas non ſit, quòd in veritate non ſtetit. Whereas this is rather the cauſe, why there is no Truth in him, becauſe he abode not in the Truth, as S. Auſtin diſcourſeth. This tranſpoſing the parts of an Oration is a Popular way of ſpeaking, which occurreth alſo Joh. 7. 4. the meaning whereof is; οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ εἶναι θέλων, ἐν κρυπτῷ τι ποιεῖ, no Man that ſeeketh to be known openly, doth any thing in ſecret.

(t) Buxt. ſupr. col. 1553. Clav. Talm. p. 193.

(3.) The Bible is ſo far from being a Scholaſtical or Philoſophical kind of Book, that a great part of it is imploy'd about matters of Chorography and Chronology, and about Genealogies, eſpecially the Genealogies of the Holy People, which ſpeak it a Popular and Holy-popular kind of Book. In theſe minute Matters in great degree extrinſecal to Religion it is far from affecting a nice Exactneſs, as is viſible, not only in the many diſagreements of Chronologers, the difficulties and improbalities wherewith their Accounts of Time are incumbred, but alſo from the Scriptural way of Chronologizing (in the Patriarchs, the Judges, the Kings and other Periods of time) which is by even Years, that muſt not be underſtood exactly, but with a plùs minùs. The Hebrew Doctors ſay (u) major numerus devorat minorem, which is to ſay, the Scripture ſpeaketh in round Numbers. Oftentimes the words of the Holy Writers touching theſe minute Matters are not to be underſtood, as if they ſpeak preciſely and poſitively, but becauſe they ſpeak with a Popular latitude and indifference, they are to be underſtood with this additional Explication, ſpeaking only as to a paſſable account of things. So S. Paul's words muſt be underſtood Act. 13. 20, 21. He gave unto them Judges about the ſpace of four hundred and fifty Years until Samuel the Prophet. And afterward they deſir'd a King: And God gave unto them Saul the Son of Cis, a Man of the Tribe of Benjamin, by the ſpace of forty Years. So 1 Cor. 10. 8. There fell in one day three and twenty thouſand. So S. Matthew's rounds of fourteen Generations are to be underſtood, which are reckon'd well enough ſpeaking only as to a paſſable account of things; and ſo are S. Stephen's threeſcore and fifteen Souls. Act. 7. 14. As the Holy Scriptures were not deſign'd, to teach us natural Philoſophy, ſo neither did the Holy Writers of them (except in ſome very few Inſtances) intend a nice defining of the matters of Chronology (not having ſo much as once defin'd the length of their Year, nor told us, whether it was Solar or Lunar) and therefore theſe miſtakes that are crept into the Bible in thoſe minute things of numbers, are unreaſonably made an Objection againſt their divine Original and Authority. For this Objection importeth only, that there are miſtakes in ſome parts of the Bible touching theſe minute things, not in the whole of it (for the miſtakes in ſome parts are rectified in others;) that the Jews and Chriſtians have not been ſo careful, as to keep their Holy Books from being vitiated by the Tranſcribers in theſe minute things: But as for the Holy Writers it cannot be ſhew'd, that they have committed any miſtake about them, they not intending nicely to define matters of Chronology, but their exceptionable Paſſages are to be underſtood with this additional Explication, ſpeaking only as to a paſſable account of things; ſo that their miſtakes which are ſuch as to Exactneſs of ſpeaking, are as to the ſenſe of the Speaker no miſtakes.

(u) Men. ben Iſr. Qu. in Gen. p. 129.

(4.) This account which we have given of the ſeeming Scriptural miſtakes in Numbers, is alſo applicable to the ſeeming Scriptural miſtakes in Names; for of theſe there are ſome Inſtances, but not many (difference in a few Letters not making different Names) the only conſiderable ones are Act. 7. 16. (where S. Stephen glanceth at once at two Hiſtorical Paſſages before-mention'd) and that of Matth. 27. 9. where the Evangeliſt nameth the Prophet Jeremiah, yet citeth a place of the Prophet Zechariah, of whom the Jews were wont to ſay, that the Spirit of Jeremiah was in Zechariah. Which Saying of the Jews implieth, that the Prophet Zechariah was accounted amongſt them (and probably called) another or a ſecond Jeremiah. In a Writer therefore that intendeth only a paſſable account of theſe minute things Numbers and Names, it is very allowable, to cite the words of the Prophet Zechariah (he being reputatively a Prophet Jeremiah) as the words of the Prophet Jeremiah. It is not reaſonable, to be more rigorous in our Dealings with the Prophets and Holy Writers, than the Criticks are in their Dealings with the Poets, of whom they ſay (w) certè juvanda in plurimis potiùs vatum ſenſa, quàm exigenda omnia ad rigidam normam. As the Poets ought not to be held rigorouſly to Rule in every thing, but rather in many things to be candidly help'd out: So the Holy Popular Writers in many things ought to be interpreted, not rigorouſly, but in a mollify'd and qualify'd Senſe, and agreeably to the largeneſs and unexactneſs of Popular Speech. But not ſo as to deny the plain ſenſe of Words, to deſtroy the common ſenſe of Language, to ſhut our Eyes againſt the Evidence of expreſs Words, to make a Noſe of Wax of the Scriptures, and to make them ſpeak (contrarily to their Character) unpopularly, as a late Scholaſtic Divine doth; who will not allow, that our Saviour was generated the Son of God by his Generation of the Bl. Virgin, although theſe are the plain expreſs Words of the Angel. Luk. 1. 35. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: Therefore alſo that Holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God. (x) For the Angel (ſaith he) muſt not be made to ſpeak according to Polite and Dialectical ſubtilty, but he muſt be ſuppos'd, to ſpeak according to the common and popular cuſtom of Speech, wherein thoſe things are ſometimes alledg'd, as the cauſe of a thing, which are not the cauſe of it, but rather its effects and conſequents, or in ſome ſort connected with it. It is vvell, that a Popular Unexactneſs is acknovvledg'd in Holy Scripture,

(w) Pitan. ad Macrob. Saturn. l. 2. c. 7. inter omiſſa. p. 693.

(x) Neque enim ad limatam & dialecticam ſubtilitatem exigenda illius verba ſunt, ſed ad communem & popularem ſermonis conſuetudinem, in qua cauſſæ inſtar ea nonnunquam afferuntur, quæ non tam cauſſæ ſunt, quam effecta & conſequentia, aut quo modo cum re conjuncta. Petav. de Trin. l. 3. c. 6. S. 2.

ture, that the Angel is ſuppos'd to ſpeak according to common and Popular Cuſtom: But if the Angel's words are of this Conſtruction, if he ſpeaketh according to the common Cuſtom of all People in ſpeaking of the Generation of a Son, our Saviour muſt be generated the Son of God by his Human-divine (or Temporal) Generation. This muſt be ſuppos'd, to be the Angel's Senſe, if the plain and common Senſe of words muſt not be deny'd, and if common Sence may be Judge in the Caſe.

X. The Holy Scriptures are Popular in reſpect of their Figurations of Speech; for in theſe they abound, in theſe they muſt be expounded as ſpeaking popularly, and theſe ſpeak them a Popular-kind of Book. Theſe ſo abound in Scripture, that a late learned Interpreter of Prophecies hath obſerv'd in them ſeveral ſuch Schemes, as Grammar and Rhetorick are not acquainted with (y) Dioriſmus, Hylaſmus, Henopœia, Zoopœia, Iſraeliſmus, Antichroniſmus. In all which Prophetic Schemes (as in all the uſual Tropes and Figures of Rhetorick) the Scripture muſt be expounded as ſpeaking popularly. For ſo it ſpeaketh in this Dioriſm, Apoc. 18. 6. Double unto her double according to her works, fill to her double. Which Popular Phraſeology doth not ſignifie, that ſhe ſhould be repay'd preciſely with as much more, as ſhe had injur'd others: But it only importeth, that ſhe ſhould be pay'd home for all her Injuſtice, and ſhould be punitively recompens'd amply and abundantly. So the Scripture ſpeaketh in an Holy-popular Phraſeology, vvhich importeth, that the Church ſhould be Pagano-Chriſtian (filled with Gentiles and over-run with Gentiliſm) in this Hylaſmus, Apoc. 11. 2. The Court which is without the Temple leave out and meaſure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: And the Holy City ſhall they tread under foot forty and two Months. So in Daniel's Henopœia wherein four Horns denote four Succeſſions of Kings Dan. 8. 8. the Phraſe is Popular, the ſtrength of Beaſts offenſive and defenſive conſiſting in their Horns, and an Horn being a Popular Emblem of Povver. So this Zoopœia (which only importeth, that Blood requireth Vengeance) is a Popular Phraſeology. Gen. 4. 10. The voice of thy Brother's Blood crieth unto me from the Ground. Iſraeliſmus is a Scheme purely Holy-popular, and Anti-chroniſmus hath its Origine from an Oriental Popular way of reckoning time. Lev. 25. 8. In theſe Prophetick Schemes therefore the Popularity of the Scripture appeareth, and in ſome degree they illuſtrate it: But we vvill make a further Illuſtration of it by conſidering ſome other remarkable Popular Figurations of Speech in Scripture, and all of them ſuch, which ſeem not well reducible to our known Tropes and Schemes in Rhetorick; which will further ſhew, that not only the Art of Logick, but that of Rhetorick is capable of Improvement, and may be made more accommadate for expounding the Scriptures and treating of divine things.

FIGURATION I.

The Firſt remarkable mode of Popular-figurative Speech is ſpeaking in the Senſe of ἰσοδυναμία, Equipollence or Equivalence, which is of the ſame ſignification vvith the Name of an Eccleſiaſtical Diſpenſation called perinde valere. And ſo vve uſually expreſs an Equipollence; as this Saying of the Jews, כל דבר שאין אדם פהנה ממנו הרי הוא בחוקת אבוד אצלו we thus render. Quicquid ſit è quo non capiat quis utilitatem, perinde illi eſt, ac ſi periiſſet. Another Saying of theirs vve thus render. (z) Quicunque utilitatem percipit ex hoc mundo abſque benedictione, perinde facit, ac ſi deprædaretur Deum. In their impious Vovv called Corban they ſpake in the Senſe of Equipollence; for thereby any thing vvhereby a certain Perſon (a Parent or other) might be profited by them, (a) was ſuppos'd to be made as prohibited and unlawful, as for any one to convert a Gift conſecrated to God to his own uſe. It was made by their Vow (as they ſuppos'd) not properly and formally, but equipollently Corban, or a Gift conſecrated to God. Mark 7. 11. It is Corban, that is to ſay a Gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me: אשור קרבן not leſs probited than to touch a Corban. He that toucheth any thing trodden on by a Gonorrhaic, is polluted thereby, as the Jews ſuppoſe; and this Pollution and every Pollution Equipollent thereto they call a Calcation; in vvhich Senſe this their Miſnical Saying muſt be underſtood. (b) The Garments of the Plebeians are a Calcation to the Phariſees, the Garments of the Phariſees are a Calcation to them that eat the Heave-offering (Terumah) the Garments of them that eat the Heave-offering are a Calcation to them that eat the ſacred Things, the Garments of them that eat the ſacred things are a Calcation in reſpect of the Water of Separation. In this Miſnical Saying they ſpeak in the Senſe of Equipollence, and ſo they ſpeak (c) touching that anointing which is after meat inſtead of waſhing; for although this anointing is done vvith Ointment, yet they uſually call it the ſecond waſhing and the ſecond waters. So although they are nice and critical in obſerving their Traditions, (d) and require Water to vvaſh their Hands vvith before Meat, yet they account not only Snow, Hail, Rime-froſt, Ice, Salt vvhen melted to be fit for that uſe, but alſo the Liquors made of red Worms, the Fat of Fiſhes, the Juice of Fruits and Wine, eſpecially White-wine; for all theſe they account Water, and ſuppoſe, that in a caſe of neceſſity they may be uſed inſtead of it. They have debates amongſt themſelves (e) touching the meaning of this Law an Eye for an Eye, and a Tooth for a Tooth, whether it ought to be literally obſerv'd (as the Bathuſæi would have it) ſo that he vvho had his Eye or Tooth ſtruck out, might demand of the Judge, that he vvho did this Violence, ſhould alſo have his Eye or Tooth beaten out. And they alledge ſeveral Reaſons, which plainly ſhew, that this Law cannot always and in all caſes be literally obſerv'd. From vvhence they infer; that by an Eye and Tooth in the Puniſhment we are to underſtand a (Pecuniary) Recompence and Compenſation for an Eye or Tooth. But this Concluſion is more than their Premiſſes will infer; for they only infer, that in ſuch Caſes where the Lavv cannot be literally executed, there an Equipollent ought to be admitted, which (doubtleſs) is the Senſe of the Law. But although they are too forvvard, to admit of an Equipollent in the Interpretation of this Lavv, they are not forvvard enough, to admit of it in the Interpretation of another. (f) For if a Prieſt (ſay they) is drunk vvith Wine, he may not enter into the Sanctuary, his Service becometh profane, and himſelf becometh guilty of Death from the Hand of God. But vvhat if he be drunk vvith ſome other Liquor that is not Wine? Then (ſay they) he may not enter the Sanctuary, but if he doth enter it, and miniſtreth (y) Dr. H. More Myſt. of Iniquity p. 213.

(z) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 623.

(a) Pocock Not. Miſc. p. 411, 414.

(b) Ibid. p. 394, 369.

(c) Heinſ. Ariſtarch. ſac. p. 452.

(d) Pocock ſupr. p. 358.

(e) Coſri p. 221, 222.

(f) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex. 158.

miniſtreth Divine Service, his Service doth not become profane, nor doth he become guilty of Death; for theſe Evils do not accrue to him, unleſs he be drunk with Wine. But common Sence (if the Scripture did not) might inform theſe blind Guides (the drinking Rabbins) that it is equally criminal, to be drunk with Wine or other ſtrong Drink; and that (according to a Maxim of our Common Law) non refert quid ex æquipollentibus fiat.

Of Theories and Practices Equipollent it matters not which is choſen: So it is not material, that in citing the Old Teſtament the Writers of the New Teſtament ſhould keep to the Words of it; it is enough that their Citations are Equipollent to the cited places of the Old Teſtament. And if theſe Holy Writers content themſelves with Equipollents, this will go a great way in juſtifying the Opinion of (g) ſeveral reformed Divines (oppos'd in this point by thoſe of the Church of Rome) that the Holy Euchariſt in Caſes of unavoidable Neceſſity (as in Countries where our Bread and Wine is not to be had, and when ſome Perſons Swoon at the ſmell of Wine) may be duly celebrated by Supplemental Equipollents to Bread and Wine. So far are they from the rigour of the Greek Church, which holdeth, that there can be no valid Celebration of the Euchariſt with unleavened Bread, becauſe ſuch Bread is not true Bread, as the Patriarch Hieremias proveth; becauſe ἄρτος, (Bread) is deriv'd from αἴρω τῷ κουφίζω, the raiſing which the Meal hath from Leaven only. The ſame reform'd Divines are of Opinion, that Baptiſm in a Caſe of unavoidable Neceſſity may be adminiſtred by a Supplemental Equipollent to Water; that the Baptiſm was valid (as Pope Zachary determin'd) which an ignorant Prieſt adminiſtred, who Baptiz'd In nomine Patria, & Filia, & Spiritus Sancta; and that Baptiſm adminiſtred in the Name of Chriſt only is valid (as ſeveral of the Fathers and Schoolmen affirm) although no expreſs mention be made of the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, the Name of Chriſt including thoſe other divine Names, and being an Equipollent to the uſual Names of the Trinity. Our Baptiſm is indifferently called Baptiſm in the Name of Chriſt and in the Name of the Chriſtian Trinity, theſe being Equipollents: So the Miracle in the Book of Joſhua called the Sun's ſtanding ſtill, might be called the Earth's ſtanding ſtill theſe being Equipollents: But if the Scripture had called it the Earth's ſtanding ſtill, it had not been a Popular Book. In the ſame Book we have a Metaphor of Equivalence (which is a Senſe of Equipollence) complicated with a Proſopopœia; for becauſe the Stone which Joſhua had erected, was a Monument, Record and Teſtimony of the Covenant made between God and the People, was as much as a Witneſs, that had heard the making of it, and conſequently would as be ſuch a Witneſs againſt them (a Teſtimony againſt them) if they brake it; therefore he ſaith Ch. 24. 27. Behold this ſtone ſhall be a witneſs unto us; for it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he ſpake unto us; it ſhall be therefore a witneſs unto you, leſt ye deny your God. So becauſe the Wood and Stone which the King of Babylon uſed in building, got by a Rapine, required Vengeance; therefore the Prophet ſaith, Habak. 2. 11. The ſtone ſhall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber ſhall anſwer it. A Senſe of Equipollence complicated with a Proſopopœia we have again, 1 Cor. 15. 26, 54, 55. for the crowning us with Immortality is equipollently the killing Death, as the Apoſtle repreſenteth it. And there is the ſame Complication Pſal. 19. 3, 4. There is no ſpeech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone forth through all the Earth, and their words to the end of the World. The ſignificant Expreſſions of the Heavens are equivalent to a Voice and Words, as we are ſaid, to ſpeak by the Eyes, and the Rhetoricians ſay, there is Rhetorick in the Eye, the Motion and Poſture of the Body. The Son of Sirach ſpeaketh in a Senſe of Equivalence, Ch. 35. 1, 2, 3. He that keepeth the law, bringeth offerings enough: He that taketh heed to the commandment, offereth a peace-offering. He that requiteth a good turn, offereth fine flour: And he that giveth alms, ſacrificeth praiſe. To depart from wickedneſs, is a thing pleaſing to the Lord: And to forſake unrighteouſneſs, is a propitiation. So our Saviour ſpeaketh, Mark 3. 34, 35. Behold my Mother and my Brethren. For whoſoever ſhall do the Will of God, the ſame is my Brother, and my Siſter and Mother. Chriſt's Diſciples were no leſs to him than all thoſe Relations of Friendſhip: And when they publiſh'd the Goſpel, they did as much as Preach it upon the Houſe-tops. Matth. 10. 27.

(g) Voſſii Theſes, p. 447, &c. & p. 349, 375, 376. Scrivener Body of Divin. p. 205.

As to ſay to any Perſon, why hath Satan filled thine Heart? Is as much (Equipollent) as to ſay, he aboundeth with wicked Cogitations and Affections: So this Saying of Moſes to the People, great Temptations thine Eyes have ſeen, Signs and great Miracles, yet the Lord hath not given you an Heart to perceive, and Eyes to ſee, and Ears to hear unto this day; deſigneth to expreſs their great vicioſity, is equivalent to a downright charging them with graceleſneſs, ſtupidity, wicked blindneſs and obſtinacy, and is an Holy-popular way of expreſſing it. (h) The Proverb cited by Heraclitus ſaith of unintelligent Hearers, παρεόντας ἀπεῖναι, that being preſent they are abſent, they are no better than ſo (in a Senſe of Equipollence they are abſent;) and he ſaith of them, they are like unto the Deaf: But Cicero ſaith; in his linguis quas non intelligimus, ſurdi profectò ſumus. In a Senſe of Equipollence we are Deaf, as to the Tongues we do not underſtand. Such were the Jevvs in the time of Moſes and of our Saviour, deaf Hearers, like to ἅλας ἄναλον, the Saltleſs Salt, the Shepherds no Shepherds, Circumciſion-leſs Circumciſion. In which Oxymora there is the Senſe of Equipollence; for they are Shepherds no Shepherds, that have the name and place, but are no better (or worſe) than none. The Senſe of Equipollence is viſible alſo in 1 Sam. 15. 23. Rebellion is as the Sin of Witchcraft (it is Tantamount) and Stubborneſs is as Iniquity and Idolatry. In Iſa. 49. 16. I have graven thee upon the Palms of my Hands. In Pro. 3. 3. Bind them about thy Neck, write them upon the Table of thine Heart. In Deut. 6. 8, 9. Thou ſhalt bind them for a Sign upon thine Hand, and they ſhall be as Frontlets between thine Eyes. And thou ſhalt write them upon the Poſts of thy Houſe, and on thy Gates. In Pro. 8. 36. All they that hate me, love Death (for they do that which is equivalent to loving their own Deſtruction.) In Pro. 13. 24. He that ſpareth his Rod, hateth his Son (for he doth that which is in effect hating him, and which is equivalent thereto.) So in the Senſe of Equivalence our Saviour ſpeaketh Joh. 12. 45. He that ſeeth me, ſeeth him that ſent me. And when he teacheth Duties of perpetual Duration ſpeaking in Old Teſtament-language, Matth. 5. 23. and 23. 3. Mark 11. 17. Luc.

Deut. 29. 3, 4.

(h) Grot. Not. in Matth. 13. 13.

Mark 9. 50. Ezek. 34. 7, 8. Rom. 2. 25.

Luk. 16. 31. And when he forbiddeth ſaying Raca, meaning this or any equivalent term of Reproach (which ſort of words our Saviour meaneth by thoſe idle words, that we muſt give an account of, Matth. 12. 36.) And when he injoyneth us, to do what is equivalent to the cutting off the right Hand, and plucking out the right Eye, Matth. 5. 22, 29. Had Origen underſtood this Senſe of Equipollence, he would have ſeen an abſurdity, not in this literal Interpretation of our Saviour's Precept, (i) but in his own allegorical Interpretation of it. Had the Jews underſtood this Senſe of Equipollence, they would not have devis'd their Phylacteries, which are not more commanded by their Law than the writing it on the Poſts of their Houſes and on their Gates. If a late Critick had underſtood it, he would not have ſeverely chaſtis'd ancient Authors, (k) for applying theſe Attributes or Epithets unto God αὐτογένεθλος, αὐτολόχευτος, αὐτόγονος, αὐτοφυὴς, and others of like Nature (which denote his ſelf-exiſtence;) for all theſe are true and genuine Attributes of God, not in the ſtrict and rigorous way of ſpeaking, but underſtood in the Senſe of Equivalence; which is the Senſe of the Law, (l) In maleficiis rati habitio mandato comparatur, the ratifying evil deeds is equivalent to the commanding them.

In which Senſe many of our ordinary Sayings are to be underſtood. Conſcientia mille teſtes. Hauſtus aquæ mihi nectar erit. Qui non vetat peccare, jubet. Qui ſuccurrere perituro poteſt, ſi non ſuccurrat, occidit. Lactant. τῆλε φίλοι ναίοντες, ὐκ εἰσὶ φίλοι, Friends living far off are not Friends; once well done is twice done. (m) Cùm via multa patet, nulla eſt. Qui alienum negat, tollit. S. Aug. Quod in veniſti & non reddidiſti, rapuiſti. Mihi ſolitudo & receſſus provincia eſt, ſaith Cicero in an Epiſtle to Atticus. Non intelligunt homines, quàm magnum vectigal ſit parſimonia. Cic. (n) ὅρκος βέβαιός ἐστιν, ἂν νεύσω μόνον, If I do but nod, it is a valid Oath. The Muhammedans are told by their Prophet, (o) That whoſoever of the Heirs of Paradiſe dieth, whether over or under Age, Tricenarius evadet, he ſhall become thirty Years of Age, and ſhall never exceed that Age. (p) The Law appointeth the Books of Hereticks to be burned; a Canon appointeth them, to be brought in and laid up in the Conſtantinopolitan Patriarch's Palace: how ſhall this Law and Canon be reconciled? ταυτόν ἐστι (ſaith Balſamon) it is the ſame thing; for both ways they are kept from being ſeen and read. S. Chryſoſtom affirmeth, (q) that the Table and the Place which Chriſtians reſort to (as containing the ſame Spiritual Viands) is the ſame Table and the ſame upper Room, on and in which Chriſt with his own Diſciples did eat his laſt Supper, αὕτη ἐκείνη ἐστὶν ἡ τράπεζα, καὶ οὐδὲν ἔλαττον ἔχει, This is that Table, and that had nothing more than this. As there are Metaphors of Equivalence, ſo in the Holy Euchariſt the Bread and Wine are not meer Symbols, Repreſentations and Similitudes of Chriſt's Body and Blood, but they are Signs or Symbols of Equivalence, the due communicating in them being (as to the communicating in the benefits of Chriſt's Sacrifice) equivalent to the eating and drinking Chriſt's Body and Blood in the proper literal Acceptation. They are therefore (as to the communicating in Chriſt crucify'd, who is the Food of Life to us as ſuch) an equivalent to the Real Preſence of Chriſt's Body and Blood, which being repreſented by them in ſuch Senſe of Equivalence, we are by the viſible Elements partakers of them, as much as we can be partakers of them to the intent and purpoſe of the Sacrament. In the Senſe of Equivalence Martyrdom is called Baptiſm by the ancient Writers of the Church, according to the words of Gennadius de Martyrio, (r) ubi tota Baptiſmi ſacramenta complentur. In the ſame Senſe they held it Murder, for any Woman by evil Arts to procure Abortion, to ſtifle the Embryo, to kill a Child in a manner before it be alive, it being much what the ſame thing, to hinder Life, and to take it away, to kill a Man or deſtroy what would be one. So in a Senſe of Equivalence and Equality the Birds in Ariſtophanes call themſelves Oracles, becauſe the Heathen conſulted them for Divination and ordering their Affairs.

Ἐσμὲν δ' ὑμεῖς Ἄμμων· Δελφοί· Δωδώνη· Φοῖβος Ἀπόλλων·

We are Ammon, Delphi, Dodona, Phæbus Apollo.

Voſſius (a great Rhetorician) conſidereth not this Senſe of Equivalence as it is ſuch, but meerly as it is Metaphorical. (t) In diſcourſing of the Iſraelites forgetting God (in their worſhipping the Calf) he followeth the Schoolmen, and diſtinguiſheth a twofold Obliviouſneſs; the one when the Species of Memory are obliterated; the other when they are not recollected as they ought, ſo that a Man acteth contrary to what he would do, if they were duely recollected. So a Woman forgetteth her Husband and her Conjugal Covenant, when ſhe proſtituteth her ſelf to another Man: and a Man forgetteth God and his Divine Covenant, when following his fooliſh Cogitations he preſumeth to worſhip either another God, or God in a forbidden Symbol. This is not properly Oblivion, but quaſi Oblivion, becauſe a Man behaveth himſelf, as if he did forget: neverthele ſs in Scripture κατὰ μεταφορὰν (metaphorically) this is called forgetting God. but this learned Author ought to have remembred, that he was treating of matters of legal conſideration (matters of Duty and Sin) and therefore in the firſt place he ought to have conſider'd and notic'd the Sin of forgetting God (the not duely minding and remembring him is the Sin of forgetting him) and to have diſtinguſh'd the Sin of forgetting God into the proper and metaphorical forgetting. The metaphorical forgetting is properly the Sin of forgetting God, although it is not the Sin of proper forgetting God; but it is equivalent thereto, and ought not, to be conſider'd meerly as a Metaphor, but as an Equivalent. Every Metaphor is not a Metaphorical Equivalent (as homo homini Deus is not a Metaphorical Equivalent) and this popular mode of ſpeaking in the Sence of Equivalence is of far larger extent than Metaphors, which therefore is not reducible to (or cannot be counted wholly the ſame with) that Trope. Nor ought we to count the Spiritual Idolatry meerly a Metaphorical Idolatry; for they that deify Senſitive Vanities in Eſteem and Affection, by ſo doing do unto them what is equivalent to the deifying them in the groſs devotional way; and they attribute to them, not meerly a Similitude to God, but an Equivalence. As Euripides ſaith, (u) Riches are to Wiſe Men God. And the reaſon of his ſo ſaying may be underſtood from the Verſes of Menander, (w) if you have Riches, εὔξαι τι βούλει, πάντα σοι γενήσεται, pray for what you will, all ſhall be done to you. The World's lovers count Riches, to be for their purpoſe equivalent unto God, and more than a quaſi-God, if quaſi is a term of abatement.

(i) Philocal. p. 14.

(k) Heinſ. Ariſtarch. c. 3. vid. Dr. Cudw. Intell. Syſt. p. 405, 406.

(l) Bp. Taylor. Duct. Dub. B. 4. c. 1. r. 2. p. 764.

(m) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 121.

(n) Grot. Floril. Tit. 27. p. 121.

(o) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 302.

(p) Balſam. in can. 9. concil. 7.

(q) Hom. 82. in Matth. p. 514.

(r) De Eccleſ. Dogmat. c. 73.

(r) Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 290. Tertull. Apol. c. 9.

(t) De Idol. l. 1. c. 3.

(u) Voſſ. ibid. l. 6. c. 49.

(w) Ibid.

Figuration II.

A ſecond remarkable Mode of Popular Figurative Speech is ſpeaking in the Computative Senſe, which is imply'd in the Senſe of Equipollence. For Mankind make a juſt account and computation of things, and according thereto they ſpeak of them, and ſo do the Holy Scriptures, 1 Cor. 11. 5. Every Woman that prayeth or propheſieth with her Head uncovered, diſhonoureth her Head; for that is even all one, as if ſhe were ſhaven. Conſidering the uſe and end of Womens wearing their Hair at length, and alſo the uſe and end of their wearing the Veil, it appeareth, that in a due computation of things theſe are ἓν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, one and the ſame thing, to be ſhaven and not to wear the Veil, Deut. 24. 6. No Man ſhall take the neather or the upper Milſtone to pledge; for he taketh a Man's Life to pledge (as taking that to pledge, without which the Man cannot live, and therefore in juſt computation of things his Life.) Heb. 11. 12. There ſprang even of one and him as good as dead (no better than dead) ſo many as the Stars. Rom. 4. 19. He conſidered not his own Body now dead, when he was about an hundred Years old. Gen. 20. 3. God came to Abimelech in a Dream by Night, and ſaid to him, Behold (unleſs thou makeſt Reſtitution) thou art but a dead Man (in the juſt computation of things.) The Jews ſay, (x) Moſes our Maſter is not dead, but is aſcended, to ſerve in the high places: for though he died in reſpect of us, who were depriv'd of him, yet in reſpect of himſelf his departure was Life, becauſe of the degree to which he was advanced. They that ſpeak thus of Moſes in the Computative Senſe, ought agreeably thereto to interpret the Scriptures. But Maimonides holdeth, that the Celeſtial Orbs are animate and intelligent, (y) and he proveth it from the words of the Pſalmiſt, The Heavens declare the Glory of God. He affirmeth alſo, (z) that the Reſurrection doth not belong to the Unjuſt; for how can the Unjuſt live when they are dead, ſeeing they are dead while they live, as the wiſe Men ſay? In a Computative Senſe (but not juſt) the Jews ſay, A poor Man, a blind Man, and a childleſs Man pro mortuis habentur. A juſt Computative Senſe is expreſs'd in that of S. Auſtin; Omnia mandata facta deputantur, quando quicquid non fit, ignoſcitur. The Lawyers expreſs it when they ſay, that in ſome caſes voluntas reputatur pro facto, and that Man and Wife are one Perſon in Law. So in a juſt Account and Computation of things the Act of our Saviour's Diſciples was his Act, Joh. 4. 1, 2. Servus non eſt perſona, ſed res. Ulpian ſaith of a Minor, (a) ſi in Biſſexto natus eſt, ſive priore, ſive poſteriore die, Celſus ſcripſit nihil referre; nam id biduum pro uno die habetur. It matters not whether he is born the former or latter Day of the Biſſextile; for thoſe Days are accounted for one Day. Such a Computation of things muſt be in Humane Law; and ſo Philoſophy making a Computation of things ſtyleth a Friend ἄλλος ἐγὼ, another I (which is Zeno's definition of a Friend) the things of Mortal Nature τὰ μὴ ὄντα, the things that are not, agreeably to the Wiſe Man, Prov. 23. 5. Wilt thou ſet thine Eyes upon that which is not? Mundane Vanities are alſo in juſt computation Schemes, Dreams, Shews, Shadows, Graſs, Wind, Vapour, σκύβαλα, as the Scripture ſtyleth them. It computeth, that an Idol is nothing (for quà an Idol it is but an Idoliz'd Vanity,) and that one is more than an hundred and fourſcore thouſand, 2 Chron. 36. 7, 8. There be mo with us than with him (as Hezekiah reckoneth in his War with Sennacherib:) with him is an Arm of Fleſh, but with us is the Lord our God. The Poet Juvenal is blamed for ſaying, that ſome would promiſe an Hecatomb, which was a Grecian Sacrifice, not a Roman. But one of his Commentators anſwereth on his behalf, (b) that he intendeth not the Property of the Sacrifice, but the Value, what in a juſt account of things is an Hecatomb: which is the Senſe of our Engliſh Proverb; The beſt Way is the ſhorteſt Mile; the Sence of theſe following Sayings of Equivalence, (c) omnia habet, qui nihil concupiſcit, (d) repreſentat opes ſapientia, quas cuicunque ſupervacuas fecit, dedit; and is the Senſe of Scaliger's Oxymoron; Neſcire velle, quæ magiſter maximus te ſcire non vult, erudita eſt inſcitia, to be willing, to be ignorant of thoſe things, which the great Maſter will not have thee to know, is Learned Ignorance. So although perfect freedom in the ſtrict and rigorous way of ſpeaking ſignifieth, to be ſubject to no Power or Authority (ἐλεύθερον τὸ ἄρχον αὐτοῦ, he is free, that hath right to govern and diſpoſe of himſelf, as the Platoniſts define Liberty) yet the Service of God is juſtly ſaid, to be perfect freedom; for ſuch it is in juſt Account and Computation. So of this Earthly Life good Authors ſay, (e) it hath but the Name of Life, potiùs mors eſt, becauſe it is ſuch a diminutive kind of Life, and ſo incumbred with Evils, that in the juſt account of things it is Death rather than Life. But as it ought not to be ſo denominated, nor ought the Service of God to be denominated perfect freedom, if theſe things were not ſuch as they are denominated in juſt account and computation: ſo there ought to be no ſuch Names and Notices in Chriſtianity as being born again, born of God, being new Creatures, being alive unto God, paſſing from Death to Life, partaking of the Divine Nature, if there be no Realities that are ſuch in the juſt account and computation of things. As Hell muſt be thought no leſs than Hell, and Heaven no leſs than Heaven; ſo a Chriſtian's Regeneration or his becoming a new Man according to Chriſtianity muſt be thought, to import no leſs than a new and holy vital Nature, elſe it cannot be in juſt account and computation of things a New and Divine Birth and Generation. To ſuppoſe, that theſe Expreſſions are meerly metaphorical and alluſive, and import no more than ſuch an exteriour change of Converſation, which is on this ſide Vital Sanctity, is to unchriſtianize Chriſtianity, to make it no ſaving Religion and the Language of it very little Senſe, for a meer metaphorical Senſe is comparatively a very little Senſe.

(x) Porta Moſis. p. 10.

(y) Mor. Nev. par. 2. c. 5.

(z) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 157.

(a) In tit. de minor. l. 3. denique Sect. 3.

(b) Holiday, p. 236.

(c) Min. Fel. p. 335.

(d) Sen. Ep. 17.

(e) Plut. conſol. ad Apol. p. 120. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 20.

Figuration III.

In the third place we will remark a Popular (Figurative) Mode of ſpeaking in the Reputative Senſe; which is a ſpeaking of things, as they are reputed. Such is Acceptilatio in the Civil Law, (f) which is an imaginary payment of a Debt made by Interrogation and Anſwer. The Debtor ſaith, have you receiv'd what I owe you? The Creditor anſwereth, I have receiv'd it (or I count my ſelf to have receiv'd it) which Anſwer maketh the Debtor's Obligation null and void. Euripides calleth that Mind very wiſe, which reputeth it ſelf ſo;

—— οὐ γὰρ οὐδ' ἀζήμιον
Γνώμην μὲν εἶναι τοῖς σοφοῖς λίαν σοφόν.

It is a noxious thing, for wiſe Men, to be very wiſe.

(f) Calvin. Lex. in voce Acceptil.

The Poet Ovid ſaith, (g) reus ille ferè eſt, de quo victoria lucro eſſe poteſt. As a great perſon of our Nation ſaid, that his Eſtate made him a Traitor. Seneca ſaith of Cato's Drunkenneſs; facilius effeceris crimen honeſtum quàm turpem Catonem; you may ſooner cauſe the crime to be (reputed) honeſt, than Cato to be (reputed) a Criminal. The Evangeliſt implicitly calleth our Saviour a Malefactor as being reputed ſuch, Luk. 23. 32. There were two other Malefactors led with him to be put to death. The Apoſtle to the Galatians ſaith, ch. 5. 4. Chriſt is become of no effect to you, whoſoever of you are (in your own Reputation) juſtified by the Law. Again he ſaith, ch. 4. 12. (but his words are miſ-rendred in our Tranſlation) Brethren, I beſeech you, be as I; for I am as you (friendly making no diſtinction of Perſons, as 1 King. 22. 4.) Te have not injured me at all. (h) But had they not injur'd him? yes very much, in preferring the falſe Apoſtles before him, queſtioning his Doctrine, yea becoming his Enemies and that for telling them the truth; yet behold him profeſſing here, ye have not injured me at all, becauſe theſe wrongs were as no wrongs in his eſtimation, it was not his purpoſe to impute them. To the inflated Corinthians the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. 4. 10. We are (reputatively) fools for Chriſt's ſake, but ye are (reputatively) wiſe in Chriſt. 1 King. 1. 21. Bathſheba ſolliciteth David, to declare his Succeſſour, and her words run thus in the Hebrew, Otherwiſe it ſhall come to paſs, when my Lord the King ſhall ſleep with his Fathers, that I and my Son Solomon ſhall be Sinners. The Senſe is, that if Adonijah prevailed, ſhe and her Son Solomon ſhould be reputatively Criminals, or as our Tranſlation hath it, ſhould be counted Offenders. In this reputative Senſe the words of Tertullian ought to be underſtood, which otherwiſe are abſurd and irrational. (i) Natus eſt Dei Filius: non pudet, quia pudendum eſt. Mortuus eſt Dei Filius: prorſus credibile eſt, quia ineptum eſt. & ſepultus reſurrexit: certum eſt, quia impoſſibile eſt. The Son of God was born: we are not aſham'd to profeſs it, becauſe the World counteth it a thing to be aſham'd of (it is the more likely to be of God.) The Son of God died: it is altogether credible, becauſe in the Eyes of Infidels it is inept. Being buried he roſe again: it is certain, that it was done by Divine Power, becauſe Unbelievers repute it impoſſible.

FIGURATION IV.

A fourth Mode of Popular (Figurative) Speech which we will remark, is the ſpeaking in words expreſſive of the real-formal Senſe, but the meaning is, a Popular-formal Senſe, which is extrinſecal thereto. As to juſtifie, to ſanctifie, to beatifie, to vilifie, to magnifie, to glorifie, are words expreſſive of making Perſons Righteous, Holy, Bleſſed, Vile, Great, Glorious in the real-formal Senſe, yet are ordinarily uſed to ſignifie the making them ſuch only in a Popular-formal Senſe. So Evil Men make others Offenders, not only by tempting them to ſin (which is a making them Offenders in the Real-formal Senſe) but by cauſeleſly imputing Criminality to them, which ſeemeth to be the Prophet's Senſe, Iſa. 29. 21. All that watch for Iniquity are cut off, that make a Man an offender for a word. By judicial Sentence alſo they juſtifie the Wicked for Reward, and (in a Popular-formal Senſe) take away the Righteouſneſs of the Righteous from him, Iſa. 5. 23. So Naboth's Righteouſneſs was taken away, and in a Popular-formal Senſe he was made an Offender (a Blaſphemer) 1 King. 21. 9. In ſuch Senſe we ſpeak, when we ſay of a Thief (or other Malefactor) He is a Thief and I will make a Thief of him. The meaning whereof is, that in Treatment and Uſage, in Plight and Garb, in Penal External State and Condition, Form and Appearance, he ſhall be made a Thief. So Chriſt was made a Malefactor for us. For ſpeaking in the Abſtract, as the Apoſtle doth, 2 Cor. 5. 21. He was made Sin for us in ſuch Senſe as belongeth to our Sin-bearer (our Expiatory and Propitiatory Sacrifice) to be made Sin for us, upon whom our Criminality is to be tranſferr'd and brought, and who is to bear it (the weight of it and what it amounteth to) in order to the taking it away. Speaking therefore in the Concrete he was made a Sinner for us in reſpect of Treatment and Uſage, Penal External State and Condition. The ſame Apoſtle ſaith, Gal. 3. 13. He was made a Curſe for us, as being made a Perſon of ſuch a Penal External Condition, which is accurſed, odious and abominable, therefore ſpeaking in the Concrete, he was made an accurſed Varlet for us (a vile Devotum Caput) in a Popular-formal Senſe. To which Senſe as contradiſtinct to the Real-formal Senſe we may reduce that Hebraiſm commonly ſo called, which putteth Reals for Verbals; (k) as the Doctors are ſaid, to bind or looſe thoſe things, which they only declare, to be bound or looſed, forbidden or permitted by the Law of God. (l) The Prieſt in the Hebrew Text is ſaid, to cleanſe and pollute a Perſon, when he only pronounceth him clean or unclean. (m) The Prophets are ſaid, to root out, to pull down, to deſtroy, to kill, to caſt out, to build, to plant, to ſuſtain with Corn and Wine, and to do thoſe things, which they only do by way of Prophecy: Which doing them in their Prophecy may be likened to the doing them in a Poem; for Poets are ſaid to do thoſe things, which they ſing of (or do) in their Poems; as in that of Virgil concerning Silenus (n).

> Tum Phaetondiadas muſco circumdat amaræ
> Corticis; atque ſolo proceras erigit alnos.

Upon which Servius noteth, (o) It is a marvellous praiſe of ſinging Silenus, to repreſent him, not as ſinging of a thing made, but as making it by his ſinging. He obſerveth alſo, that there is another like Paſſage in Virgil.

> ——— Quis humum florentibus herbis
> Spargeret? aut viridi fontes induceret umbrâ?

This reputed Hebraiſm therefore, the putting Reals for Verbals, is really no Hebraiſm, but a Popular Phraſeology common to all People, as ſeveral other reputed Hebraiſms are. For to put the Act for the Object is a reputed Hebraiſm, whereas it is uſual in Authors that are no Hebrews; as Timorem tuum taxa, eſtimate the thing thou feareſt: lacrymæque ſequuntur vota; our Tears follow our Enjoyments. (p) Heinſius deſervedly reprehendeth a Lawyer Antonius Auguſtinus for finding Hebraiſms in Ulpian, becauſe he ſpeaketh Elliptically; whereas the like forms of Speech are uſual in Tacitus, Plautus, Homer, and are common to all Tongues and Writers of all Ages.

FIGURATION V.

In the fifth place we will remark a Popular (figurative) mode of ſpeaking in the raiſed (or contra-diminutive) Senſe, which in our Language is uſually expreſs'd by theſe (and the like)

(g) De Nuce.

(h) Arrowſmith chain of princ. p. 221, 222.

(i) De carne Chriſt. c. 5.

(k) Lightfoot Hor. in Matth. 16. 19.

(l) Lev. 13. 6, 11, 20, &c.

(m) Pool's Synopſ. in Jer. 1. 10.

(n) Eclog. 6.

(o) Mira eſt Canentis laus, ut quaſi non factam rem cantare, ſed ipſe eam cantando facere videatur.

(p) Ariſtarch. ſacr. p. 225.

like) Terms; indeed, to purpoſe, with a witneſs. ἢ δεῖ χελώνης κρέα φαγεῖν, ἢ μὴ φαγεῖν, you ought either to eat the Fleſh of a Snail to purpoſe, or not to eat it at all: νῦν ἔγνω τὸν ἔρωτα, ſaith the Shepherd in Theocritus, when he had felt the Tyranny of Love: comparatively before he knew it not, but now he knew it indeed. So the Rhetoricians obſerve certain Inſtances of πλοκὴ (and they obſerve them only as Inſtances of that Figure) which ſpeak in this Senſe. As when Apples are ſcarce and dear, we ſay, Apples are Apples indeed; ſo the Poet meaneth, that Corydon was Corydon indeed.

Ex illo Corydon, Corydon eſt tempore nobis.

Prov. 14. 16. A juſt Man falleth ſeven times, and riſeth up again; but the Wicked ſhall fall into Miſchief. The falling of the Righteous (into Affliction) ſeveral times and riſing again is but falling in a diminutive Senſe; but the Wicked's falling into Miſchief, ſo as never to emerge out of Ruine, is falling with a Witneſs. In this raiſed Senſe the word dead ſignifieth in our Saviour's Argument againſt the Sadducees, Matth. 22. 32. God is not the God of the Dead (of thoſe that are utterly dead, loſt and gone;) and in this raiſed Senſe the word true ſignifieth in ſeveral places of the New Teſtament. For the true Light is, (q) lux eximia, excellentiſſima, the eximious ſuper-eminent Light, Joh. 1. 9. 1 Joh. 2. 8. And in ſuch Senſe Spiritual Goods are called the true Riches, Heaven the true Tabernacle, Chriſt the true Vine, the true Bread from Heaven, and his Fleſh verè cibus, which our Tranſlation rightly rendreth My Fleſh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is Drink indeed, Joh. 6. 55. other Meat is Meat (the Food of Life) in a ſlender and diminutive Senſe; but the Meat that nouriſheth to Life Eternal, is Meat indeed: for that Life which knoweth no Death, is (as Plato ſpeaketh) ζωὴ ὄντως, Life indeed; but Life in calamitous circumſtances is βίος ἄβιος, Life not Life (Life in a diminutive Senſe) and ſuch is this Earthly Life, that tendeth to death and endeth in death. As Father and Mother muſt be dutifully loved, yet comparatively hated; (r) as the intermediate Days of the great Feſtivals amongſt the Jews (although ſimply ſacred, yet) are called חול profane in compariſon of the firſt and laſt days: as this Earthly Region although a κόσμος (ornamental thing) yet is a Land of Cabul in compariſon of the Heavenly Regions; and as (s) hæc mortalitas umbra mortis eſt, vera mors eſt damnatio cum diabolo, Bodily Death is but a Shadow in compariſon of the Second Death: So all Senſitive Goods and Evils muſt be accounted but diminutive Shews and Shadows (omnia imaginaria in ſeculo, nihil veri, Tertullian.) in compariſon of the Great, the Spiritual and Eternal Goods and Evils, which therefore are the only Goods and Evils indeed. So εὐγένεια, or to be well-born in worldly reſpects, is but a ſhew and ſhadow, but to be born of God, is to be well-born indeed.

XI. The Holy Scriptures are Popular (Holy-popular) in reſpect of their End and Effect, which is the Sanctity and Salvation of the People by the Religion and Government of Chriſt. For, (1.) of him the Scriptures affirm, that he is given for a Covenant of the People, for a Light of the Gentiles, for a Witneſs of the People, a Leader and Commander of the People, that he ſhould ſhew Light to the People, that to him ſhall the gathering of the People be, that his Birth was Joy to all People, himſelf God's Salvation prepar'd before the Face of all People, that he ſuffered to ſanctifie the People, that he ſhould be for Salvation to the Ends of the Earth, deſtroy the Face of the Covering caſt over all People, and the Veil that is ſpread over all Nations, that the Iſles ſhould wait for his Law, that all Kings ſhould bow down before him, all Nations ſhould ſerve him, that he ſhould ſprinkle many Nations, that the Nations ſhould bleſs themſelves in him and in him they ſhould glory; that in his times many Nations ſhould be joyned to the Lord and be his People; that he ſhould have Dominion, and Glory, and a Kingdom, and all People, Nations and Languages ſhould ſerve and obey him. Which Holy-popular deſign appeareth throughout his whole Undertaking, in all his Offices and the execution of them; for himſelf and his Apoſtles preach'd and wrought Miracles in the Commonwealth of the People, but not in the Schools of Philoſophers, nor in the Commonwealth of Learning, nor was it his deſign to erect Rempublicam literariam a Commonwealth of Learning, but Rempublicam Sanctorum that Commonwealth of Holy People the Church of God. Himſelf and his Religion was not only or chiefly deſign'd for the Ingenious and Subtil, for elevated Wits and refined Underſtandings, but more principally for the Vulgar, that are of mean Capacities and Endowments (yet the main Body of Mankind) to illuminate and ſanctifie them, to make them wiſe unto Salvation, and to conduct them in the way of Duty to their Eternal Happineſs. The ſanctifying and ſaving Efficacy of his Doctrine chiefly appear'd in effecting their Converſion, (t) in changing τοσοῦτον πλῆθος τῶν ἀλογωτάτων, ſo vaſt a multitude of thoſe that had little Reaſon and were ſunk into Paſſions and vile Affections. The Vulgar Speech (of the Scriptures) ὥσπερεὶ καὶ ἐπῳδαὶ, as certain Incantations full of Power converting Multitudes by Troops from an intemperate to a well-compos'd Life, from Injuriouſneſs to Goodneſs, from Timidity to ſuch firmitude of Mind, as to deſpiſe Death for the cauſe of Piety: How ſhall we not juſtly admire the Power that is in it? The miraculous Efficacy and Succeſs of it ſpeaketh both the Divinity and Deſign of its Author; his Deſign was upon the People (to make them the elect People of God) the End of his coming was to be King of a People, to erect an Univerſal Holy-popular Empire (the Holy Catholick Church) to put an end to Carnal Judaiſm, to aboliſh Idolatrous Gentiliſm, to introduce the new Religion of a Saviour-King to the World (an Inſtitution for ſanctifying and ſaving the People) whoſe Deſign, becauſe he is ſuch, muſt neceſſarily extend to Jews and Gentiles, to the Univerſality of Mankind, to all Nations, to all People, and to all the Popular Societies of Men. (u) His Apoſtles brought the Divine Doctrine to all Nations, Grecian and Barbarian, the Iſſue and Effect of it was, they perſwaded not only the Romans and thoſe that liv'd under their Government, but alſo the Scythians and Sauromatians, the Indians, Ethiopians, Perſians, Seres, Hyrcanians, Bactrians, Britains, Cimbri, Germans, and to ſpeak compendiouſly, all Nations and all kind of Men (innumerable of them) to receive the Laws of the crucify'd Jeſus. Thus the Kingdom of Chriſt was erected, the oppoſite to Satan's Kingdom; for Chriſt's Deſign is, that his Kingdom in this World may go down, and the Kingdom of God may be ſet up. As Satan's Deſign and Buſineſs is, to ſeduce Mankind from God and Holineſs, from Life and Salvation: ſo Chriſt's Deſign and Buſineſs is, to convert them from being Subjects of Satan's Kingdom, to be the Subjects and Citizens of God's Kingdom, to ſerve him in a Life of Holineſs and to be the Heirs of Salvation. Both theſe Kingdoms are alike Popular, but the one is Holy-popular, the other conſiſteth of the wicked World of Mankind; the deſign and buſineſs of Chriſtianity therefore is Holy-popular, as the buſineſs of Judaiſm was alſo but with the difference of Literal and Spiritual Judaiſm.

(q) Grot. Not. in Joh. 1. 9. & 6. 55.

(r) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 84, 85.

(s) S. Aug. in Pſal. 43.

Iſa 42, 6. 49, 8. 55, 4. Gen. 49. 10. Act. 26. 23. Luk. 2. 10, 31. Heb. 13. 12.

Iſa. 49, 6. 25, 7. Pſal. 72. 11, 17. Iſa. 52. 15. Jer. 4. 2. Zech. 2. 11. Dan. 7. 14.

(t) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 2. p. 110.

(u) Theod- ret. Serm. Ser. 5.

(2.) Nothing is more viſible in Chriſt's Religion than his deſign of an Holy-popular Empire; for this is the Tenour and Summary of it. (w) "The Chriſtian Creed, that Jeſus is the "Lord, that he is the Chriſt of God, that he died "for our Sins, that he roſe again from the "Dead. And there is no queſtion, but that he "that believeth this heartily, and confeſſeth it "conſtantly, and liveth accordingly, ſhall be "ſaved. We cannot be deceiv'd; it is ſo plainly, "ſo certainly affirmed in Scripture, that "there is no place left for Heſitation. For "this is his Precept, that we believe in the Name "of his (Imperial) Son Jeſus Chriſt, and that we "love one another. Whoſoever ſhall confeſs, that "Jeſus is the (Imperial) Son of God, God dwelleth "in him and he in God. Whoſoever believeth, "that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God. "Who is he, that overcometh the World, but he "that believeth, that Jeſus is the Son of God? "It is obſervable, that when the Eunuch had "deſired Baptiſm, S. Philip told him, he might, "if he did believe this, and was, when he made "this Confeſſion; intimating that this is the "Chriſtians Faith which is the Foundation of "all his Hope and the Condition of his Baptiſm, "and therefore ſufficient for his Salvation. "For indeed this was the Summ of all "that Philip had preach'd; for it is ſaid of him, "that he preached things concerning the Kingdom "of God and the Name of Jeſus Chriſt. And "this was the Summ of all that S. Paul had "preached in the Synagogues and Aſſemblies "of the People, this he diſputed for, this he "proved laboriouſly; that Jeſus is the Chriſt, "that he is the (Imperial) Son of God, that he "did, that he ought to ſuffer and riſe again "the third Day, and this was that new Doctrine, "for which the Athenians and other "Greeks wondred at him, and he became to "them a ſetter forth of ſtrange Gods, becauſe "he preached Jeſus and the Reſurrection. This "was it, into which the Jaylor and all his "Houſe were Baptiz'd; and this was it, which "was propounded to him as the only ſufficient "means of Salvation; Believe in the Lord Jeſus, "and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and all thine Houſe. "This thing was illuſtrated ſometimes with other "glorious things ſtill promoting the Faith "and Honour of Jeſus, as that he aſcended into "Heaven, and ſhall be Judge of the World. "But this was the whole Faith; τὰ περὶ τῆς "βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ περὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, "the things which concerned the Kingdom of God "and the Name of Jeſus Chriſt was the large circumference "of the Chriſtian Faith. (x) P. Leo ſaith, that the way is ſtrait and difficult, not only in reſpect of keeping the Commandments, but as the way of Belief, it being a matter of great labour and hazard, not to Err in Doctrine.

But S. Hilary ſaith (y) God doth not call us to the Life of Bleſſedneſs by hard Queſtions, nor trouble us with abundance of Eloquence: The gaining Eternity is compendious and eaſie; to believe that God raiſed Jeſus from the dead, and to confeſs that he is Lord. Gr. Naz. ſaith (z) Thou needeſt not to aſcend into Heaven, to bring down Chriſt from thence; nor to deſcend into the deep, to bring up Chriſt from the dead, either curiouſly to ſearch into his firſt Nature, or his laſt Oeconomy. The Word is nigh thee, the Mind hath this treaſure and the Tongue, the one believing it, the other confeſſing it. What is more compendious than this Treaſure? What is more eaſie than this Benefit? Confeſs Jeſus Chriſt, and Believe, that he is raiſed from the Dead, and thou ſhalt be ſaved. How well theſe Fathers diſcourſe conſiſtently with themſelves and their own Theology touching the Trinity, is not hard to diſcern: But aſſuredly they are right in affirming, that the Holy-virtuous believing this Holy-popular Article, that Jeſus is our Divine Sovereign Lord, is the Summary of the Chriſtians Faith, as being conſtitutive of his Kingdom, and as conſtituting them the Subjects and Citizens thereof, the Elect People of God and the Heirs of Salvation. This Holy-popular Article underſtood in an Holy-popular Senſe implieth and includeth the Belief of an Holy-popular Trinity, but not of a Scholaſtic Trinity, which may be counted (as Bp. Gardiner called Juſtification) an Article of Learning, but can be no Article of Holy-popular Religion. Articles that conſiſt of a vaſt abundance of Scholaſtic Terms and Notions immenſly Subtil, Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical, altogether Unholy and Unpopular, cannot be neceſſary (a) ad fundandam domum Dei, to found the Houſe of God (as Abarbinel ſpeaketh) which is an Holy-popular Commonwealth. And in this Senſe I would underſtand what P. Lombard ſaith (b) fidei ſacramentum à Philoſophicis argumentis eſt liberum, the Myſtery of Faith is free from Philoſophic Argumentations.

(3.) Not Scholaſtic Subtilty but Sanctity (the Holy-popular Buſineſs) is the End and Effect of the Holy Scriptures. For as they are not deſign'd, to teach Men Grammar, Rhetorick, Logick, Muſick, Arithmetick, Geometry, Aſtronomy, Medicine, Architecture, Navigation, or any of the Humane Sciences (for which we are ſufficiently furniſh'd in Nature:) So neither are they deſign'd to make us learned in the Scholaſtic Metaphyſicks. But what a Father ſaith of Dialectica, as it ſignifieth Logick, muſt be ſaid of it, as it ſignifieth Metaphyſicks. (c) Non in Dialectica complacuit Deo, ſalvum facere populum ſuum, God hath not plac'd the Salvation of his People in Metaphyſicks, but in being his People, his godly Believers, his faithful Subjects and Servants, his Regenerate Children and ſuch as have put on the new Man in Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. The only great concern of Mankind is to be ſuch Holy People, the Saints of God, and it is their kind of Learning, which the Scripture teacheth, the Wiſdom of being Wiſe according to God (d) For Faith is the Poſſeſſion οὐ σοφῶν τῶν κατὰ κόσμον, ἀλλὰ τῶν κατὰ Θεόν, not of the Wiſe according to the World, but according to God (e) Who by their Inquiry, their Learning and Exerciſe (in the Holy Scripture) reap this Fruit τὸ γενέσθαι βασιλέας, to be ſuch Kings as the Saints of God are. (f) As if one attendeth to Iſchnomachus, to be inſtituted by him, he will make him an Husbandman; if to Lampis, he will make him a Mariner; if to Charidemus, he will make him a Commander in War;

(w) Bp. Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 2. c. 3. p. 388.

(x) Ser. 5. de Nativ.

(y) Non per difficiles nos Deum ad beatam vitam quæſtiones vocat, nec multiplici eloquentiæ facundiæ genere ſolicitat. In abſoluto nobis ac facili eſt æternitas: Jeſum ſuſcitatum à mortuis per Deum credere, & ipſum eſſe Dominum confiteri. De Trinit. l. 10.

(z) Orat. 26. p. 458

(a) Abarb. de cap. Fid. ap. Vorſt. p. 76

(b) L. 3. ſentent. diſt. 22.

(c) S. Ambroſ. de Fide l. 1. c. 3.

(d) Clem. pædag. l. 3. c. 11. p. m. 189.

(e) Idem Strom. l. 6. p. m. 496.

(f) Idem Strom. l. 7. p. m. 545.

if to Simon, he will make him an Horſe-rider; if to Perdix, he will make him a Victualler; if to Crobylus, he will make him a Cook; if to Archelaus, he will make him a Dancer; if to Homer, he will make him a Poet; if to Pyrrho, he will make him a Contentioniſt; if to Demoſthenes, he will make him a Rhetorician; if to Chryſippus, he will make him a Logician; if to Ariſtotle, he will make him a Naturaliſt; if to Plato, he will make him a Philoſopher: So he that obeyeth the Lord and followeth his Word, ἐκτελεῖται κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ διδασκάλου ἐν σαρκὶ περιπολῶν θεὸς, is made according to the Image of his Maſter, a God converſing in Fleſh (a Saint of God) they do not therefore attain to this height, that do not follow the leading of God: ἡγεῖται δὲ κατὰ τὰς θεοπνεύστους γραφὰς, and he leadeth by the divinely inſpired Scriptures. They lead to true Religion and Godlineſs, which in the whole of it is a Popular Buſineſs, and we are to conduct our ſelves in it by the ſame Rules of Prudence, whereby Men conduct themſelves in the ordinary Affairs of Life. They lead to ſuch Religion and Godlineſs, which the Father calleth (g) noſtram ſimplicem pietatem, which is Sanctity devoid of Scholaſtic Subtilty; for ſuch is the Chriſtian Learning. They lead from all Sin and Vice to all Holineſs and Virtue, and are like Ptolomee's Library, which had this Inſcripttion ἰατρεῖον ψυχῆς, for they are the Church's Phyſick-ſhop for the Soul. But they are to lead the Church, the Church is not to lead them; and they lead from all Errour into all Truth, but it is only from ſuch Errour, which violateth Sanctity, and only into ſuch Truth, which the Church's (the Holy People's) Learning and Philoſophy compriſeth, which ſpeaketh them the Holy-popular Book.

Having thus repreſented their true Idea, it ought to be a Teſt, whereby to diſcern the true and genuin Interpretations of Scripture from the ſpurious and illegitimate; and the conſequences of it are, that the Holy Scriptures are not of Scholaſtical, but of a Popular-religious Interpretation (or to ſpeak as Friar Bacon doth, they ought to be interpreted (h) laicaliter, non philoſophice;) and that the great Articles of our Chriſtian Faith (which are undeniably Holy-popular Articles) are not of a Metaphyſical Unholy and Unpopular, but of an Holy-popular Senſe and Explication. The Popular-religious Senſe of Scripture is ſo mean a thing in the Eyes of Philo, that he frequently denieth the literal Senſe; as he will have Jacob's paſſing over Jordan with his Staff, to mean (i) that ὁ ἀσκητὴς νοῦς, the Mind in its Exerciſes paſſeth through the Paſſions and the Evils of our Mortal Nature by Wiſdom and Learning. Ταπεινὸν γὰρ τὸ ἐνδέχεσθαι, ὅτι βακτηρίαν ἔχων ποταμὸν διέβαινε, for it is a low thing, to ſuppoſe, that having a Staff he paſſed a River. So the ancient Scholaſtic Divines of the Church when in the New Teſtament they read of God's giving things to his Son, they neglect the plain and Popular-religious Senſe (as if it was a low thing) and preſently turn all to Scholaſtic Metaphyſicks. (k) Omne judicium dedit Filio, ſic intelligendum eſt, ut dare ſit idem, ac communicare generando. His giving all Judgment to the Son muſt be interpreted, to mean, that he communicated it to him by eternal Generation. But ſuch Scholaſtic Interpretations are manifeſtly wild Diſtortions of the ſacred Text, and muſt be cenſured as ſpurious and illegitimate, becauſe they are rancidly Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical and claſh with our Idea of the Holy Scriptures. Some of theſe Scholaſtic Interpretations of the New Teſtament pretend to be Apoſtolical Traditions: But they that conſider, how much the World is abuſed with this Pretence, will not think it ſafe, to rely upon pretended unwritten Traditions. (l) Traditive Interpretations of Scripture are pretended, but there are few or none to be found: No Tradition but only of Scripture can derive it ſelf from the Fountain. Nor can any pretended Traditive Interpretation be of ſuch certainty as our Idea of the Nature of the Holy Scriptures ſo clearly explained, ſo certainly demonſtrated. It is but reaſonable therefore (and the Intereſts of Religion require it) to relinquiſh the Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical, and to ſubſtitute in their ſtead an Holy-popular God, an Holy-popular Son of God, an Holy-popular Spirit of God, an Holy-popular Trinity, an Holy-popular Logos, an Holy-popular Deity of the Meſſiah, and his Holy-popular Incarnation and new Creation, whereby Religion was very much alter'd from what it was before in the more ancient times of the Scriptures. Whoſe account of Religion in thoſe ancient times ought to be premiſ'd to our Idea of the Meſſiah and his new Settlement of Religion.

(g) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 12. c. 17.

(h) Selden Titles of Hon. pref.

(i) Opuſc. p. 113.

(k) Petav. T. 4. l. 12. c. 16. S. 6.

(l) Mr. Chillingworth of the Rel. of Proteſt. c. 6. n. 56.

BOOK

BOOK V.

An Idea of the Saving Religions (true or pretended) in the ancient and later Times of the Scriptures. The Firſt of which is The Law of Nature.

CHAP. I.

The Introduction to an Idea of the Law of Nature. 1. A definitive Notion of the Law of Nature, and the various Conſiderations of it. 2. A definitive Notion of Good. 3. Of ſome faulty definitions of Good, with fourteen Arguments againſt one faulty definition of Good and that Scheme of the Law of Nature which it implieth. 4. The Good which the Diſcipline of Morality treateth of, is the good Life and Practice, which is the Beauteous-beneficial. 5. This Definition illuſtrated. 6. To the Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice the Names of Praiſe and Commendation belong. 7. The Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice is Righteouſneſs. 8. The arbitrary Will of God is not the adequate rule and meaſure of Good and Evil. 9. Good and Evil are ſuch antecedently to any determination of the Divine Will. 10. The good Life and Practice is the jural Practice towards all the Objects of Practice. 11. The good Life and Practice is the Societive. 12. The Honourary Attributes of the Law of Nature.

PELAGIUS diſtinguiſh'd three ſeveral Religions and ways to Salvation, that took place in three ſeveral ſucceſſive Intervals of time from the beginning of the World (m) the times before the (Moſaic) Law, the times of the Law, and the times of Grace. For he ſuppos'd, that Men were ſaved per Naturam, per Legem, per Chriſtum, in the times before the Lavv (from Adam to Moſes) he held, that Men were ſaved by Nature. In the times of the Moſaical Lavv (as he ſuppos'd) Men vvere ſaved by the Lavv. And now in the times of the Goſpel (as he ſuppos'd) they are ſaved by Chriſt and by Grace. But they that will rightly repreſent the Affairs of Religion, muſt conſider theſe three Religions, not meerly as ſucceeding one another in ſeveral diſtinct Intervals of time, but as in ſome degree Synchronizing and Co-exiſting in the ſame time from the firſt Adam to Moſes and ſo on to the ſecond Adam. For there was not only the Law of Nature in that Interval of time from Adam to Moſes, but there was ſomething of the Judaical Religion and of the Typical Inſtitutes of the Moſaic Law in thoſe times (and therefore ſomething of the Moſaic Law before the Law was given by Moſes, Rom. 5. 13.) there was alſo ſomething of the Religion of ſaving Grace in thoſe times and in the ſucceeding times of the Moſaic Law. Theſe three Religions therefore muſt be conſider'd as commencing and co-exiſting from the eldeſt times of the World, the Religion of Judaiſm and Chriſtianity being in ſome degree co-eval with the Law of Nature.

I. THE Law of Nature is of a competently clear definition, which is generally current amongſt them that have not put off Humane Nature; it is a Moral Law, a Law of the great Morals, that is notic'd to all Men by the light of Nature. The Jews divide the Precepts of their Law into (n) מושכלות ומקיבלות intellectual and thoſe that are receiv'd by Tradition. The former are ſuch Precepts, de quibus hominis intellectus teſtatur, eaque explorat, ſo that if they were not written, the Underſtanding of it ſelf would find them out, as the Precept of honouring Parents, againſt Homicide, Theft, falſe Witneſs, Rapine and ſuch more. Of theſe החקים השכליים intellectual Statutes, the Jews ſay (o) they are Principles Preparatory to the Divine Law, preceding it in Nature and Time, vvithout vvhich no Society of Men can ſubſiſt. So the Fathers of the Chriſtian Church ſay, (p) Before the Law of Moſes written in Tables of Stone there was an unwritten Law, which was notic'd by the light of Nature. Before the Jews receiv'd the Law, all Nations and the whole World receiv'd the Law of Nature, that Law which is written in the Heart, extendeth to all Nations, and no Man is unacquainted with it. We have in our ſelves a certain natural diſcernment of the Good from the Evil. What is the Law of Nature? Our Conſcience hath given us plain notice of it, and hath made the knowledge of the things that are honeſt, and that are otherwiſe to be Self-taught. The imperial Lawyers (that unwiſely extend the Law of Nature to irrational Animals, yet) when they will define it properly and accurately, they do it agreeably to the Senſe of the Fathers. (q) The Law of Nature is the rule of right Agency, which Nature noticeth, and flweth from Natural Affection and Reaſon. Divines and School-men define it to this Senſe. (r) The Law of Nature is that which proceedeth from the Inſtitution of Nature it ſelf, and this is common to all. The Learned Pagans define it (s) Reaſon from the Nature of (m) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. Par. 2. Theſ. 10.

n) Hot-ing. Theſ. Phil. p. 346. Po-ck Port. Moſ. p. 223. 24.

(o) Coſri p. 113.

(p) Ante legem Moyſi ſcriptam in tabulis lapideis legem fuiſſe non ſcriptam, quæ naturaliter intelligebatur. Tertull. adv. Jud. c. 2. Audiant Judæi, qui ſe ſolos legem accepiſſe Domini gloriantur; quòd univerſæ primùm gentes totuſque orbis Naturalem acceperit legem. S. Hieron. in Iſai. c. 24. l. 8. Iſta lex quæ in corde ſcribitur, omnes continet Nationes, & nullus eſt, qui hanc legem neſciat. Idem T. 3. Ep. ad Algaſ. Qu. 8. Τὶ ἔχομεν παρ' ἑαυτοῖς κριτήριον φυσικὸν, δι' οὗ τὰ καλὰ τῶν πονηρῶν διακρίνομεν. Τί ποτέ ἐστι νόμος φυσικός; τὸ συνειδὸς ἡμῖν διήρθρωσε, καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον ἐποίησε τὴν γνῶσιν τῶν καλῶν καὶ τῶν οὐ τοιούτων. V. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. Par. 3. Theſ. 10. S. Chryſoſt. Hom. 12. & 13. ad Pop. Antioch.

(q) Jus naturale eſt Norma rectè agendi quam Natura tradit, & à naturali affectione & ratione profluit. Zouch. Elem. Juriſ-prud. Par. 1. S. 3. Selden. de Jur. Nat. & G. l. 1. c. 8.

(r) Jus naturale eſt illud, quod ex ipſius naturæ inſtitutione provenit, & hoc eſt omnibus commune. Seld. Ibid. Sharrock. de Offic. c. 2. Suarez de Leg. l. 1. c. 3.

(s) Ratio profecta à rerum things, which injoineth the things that ought to be done, and forbiddeth the contrary. By Ariſtotle it is called (t) κοινὸς νόμος, the Law which is common to all, φύσει κοινὸν δίκαιον ἢ ἄδικον, that juſt and unjuſt which is by Nature and common to all. The Law of Nature therefore is a Law of the great Morals (and the true Moral Philoſophy) of Nature's Inſtitution; ſo far it is rightly notic'd by all theſe definitive Notions of it. But to make a due Illuſtration of it without the uſual fault of a mutilate and defective Contemplation (which overlooketh ſome of the main and principal Notices of it) this great Law muſt be ſeveral ways diſtinguiſh'd. For it muſt be conſider'd under a twofold Notion in a threefold Reſpect: In Reſpect of the Obligation, Promulgation and Obſervance of it. Firſt, in reſpect of its Obligation it is of a twofold Notion; for the Law of Nature ſignifieth what is in its own Nature Law (to all intelligent Agents) and it is Law alſo to all intelligent created Agents by an Authoritative Obligation. But antecedently to this Obligation from a ſuperiour Authority, it is of an Obligatory Nature and muſt be conſider'd as the comprehenſion of what is in it ſelf and in its own Nature matter of Law (of Obligation;) for that this great Law is of this Nature and Notion, will appear (as from other conſiderations, ſo) from a due Explication of the Good that it requireth, and the Evil that it forbiddeth, which is of principal Conſideration.

II. Theopompus the Rhetorician found fault with Plato for defining every thing; for did no Man before you (ſaid he) pronounce the words Good and Evil? Or did we only ſound the Words without underſtanding the Senſe and Signification of them? To which Crimination a great Philoſopher anſwereth (u) although Mankind are by Nature furniſh'd with the Proleptick Notions (the true Notionalities) of Good and Evil, of Honeſt and Foul, Decorous and Indecorous, and ſo far there is no repugnance in their Sentiments; yet they are not of one mind about the Application of thoſe Names to the things (the true Realities) to which they belong, and this is the matter of their Diſagreement. There is no appearance indeed of any conſiderable Diſagreement amongſt the ancient Philoſophers touching the definitive Notion of Good: But ſuch a Diſagreement there is in the Schools of Chriſtendom; for the Metaphyſicians and learned Writers of Morality are not agreed about the Notion of Bonum (of which Cicero ſaith (w) I know not whence the word Bonum cometh) the principal Source of which Diſagreements is an unavoidable ambiguity of the word. For ſometimes it is us'd ironically (as the word Chriſtian amongſt the Italians;) becauſe Men are denominated Good upon account of their Innocence and Harmleſneſs, hence among the Heathen it became a Term of Reproach, and ſo us'd it importeth ſillineſs. O bone, ne te fruſtrere. Horat. Sat. 2. O bone, num ignoras? Miſſa eſt à Cæſare laurus. Perſ. Sat. 6. O bone, id eſt, ô ineptum, ô funginum caput! But except when the Name Good is thus us'd ironically, it always denoteth what is to be lik'd and in ſome degree commended (either really for ſufficient Cauſe and Reaſon, or in the Opinion of the Speaker;) for ſo it ſignifieth even when it is connex'd with Vices and Crimes. As vvhen vve ſay (x) Bonus Latro, Bonus Sycophanta, to ſignifie one that is dextrous and expert at Thieving and Sycophancy. Uſually Good ſingnifieth Bonum utile (as every Tree that is good for Food, Gen. 2. 9.) and as uſually it ſignifieth bonum jucundum (a joyous Day is a good Day, Eſth. 9. 22.) vvhence Hetib in Hebrew from Tob (Good) ſignifieth to Exhilerate. (y) A Philoſopher compareth Good to Cæſar's Coin, agreeably whereto we ſpeak of good Security, and ſay a Bargain is good, a Tender is good (in reſpect of Law) and that a Grant vvhich is not good at firſt, cannot be made good ex poſt facto. What is valid or of avail in Law, is in ſuch reſpect and ſo far to be lik'd, it is currant (like Cæſar's Coin) unexceptionable and unrefuſable. (z) Some deny, that holding by Villenage maketh a Man a Villain, which many do at this day, and yet are good (current and unexceptionable) Freemen and no Villains. When God performeth his Sayings, he is ſaid to make them good (what is to be allow'd of) Numb. 23. 19. And if a Proprietor is detrimented or damag'd in any thing, the Reſtitution or full Reparation of it is a making it good (what is to be allow'd of as to the not being detrimented or damag'd in reſpect of the Owner) Exod. 21. 14. and 22. 11, 14, 15. Lev. 24. 18. (a) When Alexander vvas dying, his Friends ask'd him, to vvhom he would leave the Kingdom? His Anſwer was, Ei qui eſſet optimus (ἀρίστῳ vel κρατίστῳ) to the beſt Man in reſpect of Military Fortitude (doubtleſs;) for in the Greek Writers ἀγαθὸς, ſignifieth a Valiant Man, and κακὸς, a Coward, becauſe they had Military Fortitude in higheſt Eſteem. Uſually things are denominated Good as to the ſize and meaſure of them (vvhich are of a ſize and meaſure that is to be lik'd) and Perſons with reſpect to their Rank and Degree in the World; in vvhich ſenſe vve ſay a good while, a good way off, a good blow, good buſineſs (which is in medio between great and mean) a good Eſtate, a good Price, Men of good Note (and of leſs Note) of good Rank and Faſhion (b) fair Poſſeſſions, (c) good Towns, (d) a good Family. Good therefore uſually ſignifieth with reſpect to Rank and Degree and honourary Reſpect; for in ſuch ſenſe Equals are denominated as Good, the beſt Man in the ſenſe of Nobility-learning ſignifieth him that is higheſt in Rank and Degree, that in an honourary Reſpect and Eſtimation is to be preferr'd (and in ſuch ſenſe is moſt to be lik'd) and the Superiours are ſtiled the Betters: So the ſuperiour in Strength and Power is in that reſpect the better Man. (e) In Agonibus (ſaith Varro) herbam in modum Palmæ dat aliquis ei, cum quo contendere non cupit, & fatetur eſſe meliorem. Amongſt the Lavvyers an honeſt Man opponitur egeno (who is not of Rank to be lik'd;) boni & legales homines are thoſe, that are to be lik'd and are unexceptionable in Law; Wellborn are thoſe that are of a Rank to be lik'd in reſpect of their Birth; the attribute of good Man in our Nation belongeth to thoſe, that are of ſuch a Rank which is to be lik'd, and to be had in a conſiderable degree of Eſteem and Reſpect (as we commonly eſtimate Things and Perſons:) But thoſe of the baſer ſort becauſe they are ſuch, are in Euripides and other Greek Authors uſually called κακοὶ and φαῦλοι, the bad ſort. So Lucas Brugenſis interpreteth the good and bad mention'd Matth. 22. 10. to ſignifie honeſtos & ſordidos. So the Chalday Oracles according to Pletho's Interpetation call matter κακὴ ὕλη, bad matter, not becauſe it is the Fountain of natura, ad rectè faciendum impellens, & à delicto avocans. Cic. de Leg. l. 2.

(t) Rhet. l. 1. c. 13.

(u) Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 22. & l. 2. 11, 17.

(w) De Fin. l. 4.

(x) Petav. T. 4. l. 5. c. 8. S. 6.

(y) Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 3.

(z) Lord Hollis Remains, p. 71.

(a) L'Emper. Not. in Jacchi. ad. p. 211.

(b) Selden Titles p. 507.

(c) Ibid. p. 570.

(d) Ibid. p. 659, 667.

(e) Ibid. p. 28.

of Evil, but becauſe it is of the vile and infimous Rank and Condition. So Epicurus's declination of Atoms is called by Plutarch σμικρὸν οὕτω πρᾶγμα ϗ φαῦλον, ſo little, worthleſs, vile and bad a thing. Somewhat near this uſe of the Name Good as it is expreſſive of Rank and Degree, is a peculiar uſe of it in our Engliſh Phraſeology, wherein things are ſaid to be as good (without any intention to ſay, that they are good) only to ſignifie, that one thing is little leſs than the other, not valuably or conſiderably deficient. For when we have near finiſh'd any piece of Work, we ſay, it is as good as finiſh'd; when any thing is well nigh gone, we ſay it is as good as loſt; and our Tranſlators ſay of Abraham, Heb. 11. 12. Him as good as Dead, to ſignifie, that he was little leſs than Dead.

The Metaphyſicians Maxim is of great Truth and Certainty; omne Ens in quantum eſt Ens, eſt bonum. Every Being as it is a Being is good; for no Being is without Well-being. A Being properly ſo called is that which hath a Species of Eſſence, and therefore is not without Aptitude for Exiſtence, having (f) as its Nature is, a certain Perfection and form, whereby it is what it is. And as a Being is that which is of ſome kind, ſo it is that which is neceſſarily of a certain Rank and Degree amongſt Beings, above nothing, and better than ſuch a ſomething, that is worſe than nothing, which is a Good or Well-being. Exiſtence may be ſo complicated, as to be (in ſeveral reſpects) worſe than Non-exiſtence; (g) for we love Exiſtence as a Good, and therefore prefer not Being before an ill Being: But Exiſtence is of it ſelf better than nothing and non-exiſtence, and muſt be counted a Good. To which the Schools add, that (h) Bonum dicit rationem perfecti, Good as an Attribute of Ens denoteth that which is perfect; every Being is without defect of its Eſſential Perfection, which is Bonitas entitativa, and this entitative Goodneſs is Well-being and that which is to be lik'd, as this Name Good always ſignifieth. Agreeably whereto ſome Schoolmen ſay, that Bonum and Appetibile are the ſame. But others of them make this Objection; (i) that an Object is not Appetibile, unleſs it can be deſir'd: But before it can be deſired, it muſt be underſtood to be good (which foundeth and cauſeth its appetibility) an Object therefore is not good, becauſe it is Appetibile, but on the contrary, it is Appetibile, becauſe it is good: (k) As Plotinus ſaith; Good is neceſſarily expetendum, but it is not therefore good: But becauſe it is good, therefore it is expetendum, to be deſired. But this Objection hath no force in it, ſave only what ariſeth from the Ambiguity of the word Appetibile, which may ſignifie what can be deſir'd, and it may ſignifie what is worthy to be deſired, Ἀξιέραστον, (as Philo ſpeaketh) in which latter Senſe (not in the former) Appetibile is the ſame with Bonum, as ſeveral judicious Philoſophers have diſcourſed. (l) Good is that which is to be deſired, and that which is to be deſired is good. Evil is that which is to be eſchewed and hated.

III. The Exiſtence of Good and Evil ſo far dependeth upon a Preceptive Life, that if there was no Perception of them, they would be of no more regard or conſideration, than if they were not at all. Whence Lactantius ſaith (m) ut bonum ſit aliquid aut malum, ſenſus efficit. But notwithſtanding this Connexion which Good hath with a perceptive Life, it ought not to be thus defin'd (a) Good is that which is pleaſant to a perceptive Life conjunct with the Conſervation of the Percipient. For the Nature and Notion of Good doth not conſiſt in being pleaſant, but in being worthy to be pleas'd with. This faulty definition of Good is not competible to the Bonum Metaphyſicum, nor to the Bonum utile as ſuch (which is uſually painful and afflictive,) nor can it pretend to be the definition of the good of Duty and Virtue as ſuch; for nothing can be the good of Duty and Virtue (which is good Practice) meerly as pleaſant to a perceptive Life and conjunct with the Conſervation of the Percipient. The Mountain muſt not be brought to Muhammed, but Muhammed muſt go to the Mountain. Intelligent Agents muſt not be told, that nothing is good, but as it is pleaſant to a perceptive Life and conjunct with their Conſervation: But they ſhould be told, that they ought to make the things that are good the matter of their Pleaſure, that there is ſufficient Cauſe and Reaſon, why they ſhould be pleas'd with them, and that upon this account they are good. If nothing is good, but as it is pleaſant to a perceptive Life, there can be no other good in the Univerſe but the good of Happineſs: Nor can the evil of Sin and Wickedneſs as ſuch be in the World, but only the evil of Infelicity. But ſuch definitive Notions of Good and Evil (which imply, that nothing is ſuch, but as it is felicitative or infelicitative) are mutilate and partial, and much too narrow, to be the definitions of Good and Evil in general; and there is the like exception againſt a celebrated definition of good, which ſome Schoolmen and others have excogitated; (b) that convenience and inconvenience to ſome Body are the definitive Notions of Good and Evil. Good is that which is convenient to the Nature of a thing, or (as ſome ſay) quod Naturam reverà juvat, what is not hurtful, but really adjuvant to Nature. A late Learned Writer of the Laws of Nature hath entertain'd this definitive Notion of Good, which is not only in its ſelf faulty and a miſtake, but it involveth in it many other Miſtakes, is a Fountain of Miſtakes in the Contemplation of the Law of Nature, and many ſuch Conſequences iſſue from it, which are very injurious thereunto. For

(1.) The Nature of Beings is manifeſtly a good Antecedent to what is convenient and helpful

(f) Κατὰ φύσιν ἑαυτοῦ τελειότητα ϗ εἶδος καθ' ὅ ἐστι τοῦτο ὅπερ ἐστί. Simplic. in Epictet. c. 33. p. 154.

(g) Ibid. c. 38. p. 224.

(h) Aquin. 1. qu. 5. Art. 1. & 3. Vaſqu. T. 1 Qu 5. Art. 1. Diſp. 23. c. 5, 6.

(i) Vaſq. ibid. c. 3. Cajetan. in Aqu. 1. Par. Qu. 5. Art. 1.

(k) Ἐφετὸν μὲν δεῖ τὸ ἀγαθὸν εἶναι, οὐ μέν τι τῷ ἐφετὸν εἶναι ἀγαθὸν γίνεσθαι· ἀλλὰ τῷ ἀγαθὸν εἶναι ἐφετὸν γίνεσθαι. En. 5. l. 7. c. 25.

(l) Ὅπου δὲ ὄρεξις τέτακται ϗ ἔκκλισις, εἴτε κατὰ φύσιν, εἴτε παρὰ φύσιν, ἐκεῖ τὸ ἀγαθὸν δοκεῖ ϗ τὸ κακόν. Ἀγαθὸν γὰρ τὸ ὀρεκτὸν, κακὸν δὲ τὸ φευκτὸν νομίζεται Simplic. ſupr. c. 72. p. 283. Τὸ γὰρ ἐφετὸν ἀγαθόν· ϗ τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἐφετόν. Ibid. c. 35. Τὸ δὲ κακὸν φευκτὸν ϗ μισητὸν, ὥσπερ τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἐφετὸν ϗ ἀσπαστόν. Ibid. c. 38. Bonum profectò idem eſt atque expetendum. Ficin. in 2. Dial. Plat. de Rep. Illud verò per abſurdum Bonum eſſe aliquid quod non expetendum ſit: Aut expetendum quod non placens: Aut ſi id, non etiam diligendum: Ergo & probandum: Ita etiam laudabile. Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

(m) L. 3. c. 19.

(a) Bonum eſt quod vitæ alicui perceptivæ, vitæque hujus gradui, gratum, jucandum & congruum eſt, & cum conſervatione percipientis conjunctum. Dr. H. More Ench. Eth. l. 1. c. 4.

(b) Id bonum habeatur, quod eſt rei alicui conveniens & conſentaneum.—— quæ boni congruentia ad uſum quendam ac fructum ſive commodum refertur. Petav. T. 1. l. 6. c. 1. S. 5. Bonum nihil aliud eſt, quàm id quod eſt naturæ cujuſcunque rei conſentaneum, quod rem perficit. Lud. Carbo Tract. de Leg. l. 2. Diſp. 2. Bonum eſt, quod rei cujuſlibet, vel plurium facultates conſervat, vel inſuper ad auget & perficit. His enim effectibus ſe prodit peculiaris illa convenientia rei unius cum altera, quæ requiritur, ut huic Naturæ, præter alias, quicquam bonum eſſe dicatur. Bonum ideò fatemur dici, quod alteri convenit, adeòque relativè dici. Quodlibet ideo verè judicari bonum quia effectus ejus ſeu vis Naturam reverà juvat. Dr. Cumberland de Leg. Natur. Diſſ. Phil. c. 3. S. 1, 2.

ful thereto, conſervative or perfective thereof. But if nothing is good ſave only as convenient to the Nature of Beings, their Nature (the Nature of Rational Beings) muſt not be ſuppos'd, to be good; and conſequently there can be no ſufficient reaſon for, or obligation to an Univerſal Love (which is a Summary of the Law of Nature;) for it is not poſſible, much leſs is it laudable, to love that which is not ſuppos'd to be good. The Notion of Good therefore muſt be ſo large and general (c) as to be competible to the Nature of Beings, eſpecially to the Nature of created Rationals (which is bonum phyſicum) and more eſpecially to the Nature of God, who muſt not be thought, to be good only (d) as convenient to himſelf and to us, as ſome ſuppoſe, (who yet ſtyle him Ipſum bonum, ȣ̓σία τȣ̃ ἀγαθȣ̃, the Eſſence of Good, which Names are incompetible to him, if he be good only relative:) but as being alſo both to himſelf and unto us The Godhead, that Good to which for its own ſake both himſelf and we muſt be convenient, which is a principal Branch of the Law of Nature.

(c) Cauſæ conſtituentes, conſervantes & perficientes rerum hominúmve ea ſunt quæ nos dicimus bona. Ibid.

(d) Petav. ſupr. & ibid. c. 2.

(2.) In our Elogies both of God and Creatures Good uſually ſignifieth in ſuch a Senſe, as cannot be expounded by Convenient. For we pronounce an Angel (upon account of all that he is) to be ſuperlatively good and excellent; in which Elogy ſuperlatively good and ſuperlatively excellent are terms ſynonymous, but ſuperlatively good and ſuperlatively convenient are not ſo. So when God is intituled The ſupreme Good, The infinite and abſolutely perfect Good. The Attribute Good in theſe Elogies denoteth his tranſcendent Excellency, and this tranſcendent Goodneſs the Schoolmen uſually mean, when they ſpeak of his Goodneſs. Speaking of his Goodneſs in their Senſe, The Godhead muſt be conſider'd as the Tranſcendent (Creature-tranſcendent) Good and Excellence (both in a real and perſonal acceptation) and as the ultimate and final Good and Excellence, of whom we muſt ſay, that He is ſo good, that all things are for Him and to Him, to be convenient unto him (as the Rights and Dues of the Godhead and as Religion and Godlineſs require) and in this Senſe he may be rightly ſtyled by Plato μέτρον πάντων, the Meaſure of all things. As all things, ſo himſelf muſt be convenient to his Godhead, (e) ȣ̓δὲν μὴ πρέπον ἑαυτῷ ὁ Θεὸς βȣ́λεται, ἀναιρετικὸν τυγχάνον τȣ̃ εἶναι αὐτὸν Θεόν· ἀδικεῖν ἐναντίον ἐστὶν αὐτȣ̃ τῇ Θεότητι· God willeth nothing unbecoming himſelf; for it would deſtroy his being God: to do Unrighteouſneſs, is contrary to his Deity. If we ſhould ſuppoſe (per impoſſibile) God to do any thing contrary and deſtructive to the Godhead, ſuch an Evil would not be meerly an inconvenience to himſelf (as ſelf) and to the Creatures, but it would be an horrendous Wickedneſs beſides; Evil therefore is not meerly an Inconvenience to himſelf (as ſelf) and to Creatures; therefore Good is not meerly a Convenience to theſe. Holy Souls are the admirers and lovers of the Godhead and adhere to it by their devotional eſteem and affection, not meerly as ſuppoſing it a Convenience to any, but much more upon account of its own Worth and Excellence, Pulchritude and Pretioſity. That Good which is meerly reſpective (which is good only as good and convenient to ſomething) cannot be abſolutely the ultimate and final Good; but ſuch is that Good which the Godhead is.

(e) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 5. p. 247. l. 3. p. 154.

(3.) If nothing is good but reſpectively only (as convenient to Nature) there can be no other ultimate end of things but Self and a great Syſtem of Selves. (f) Aggregatum ex omnibus rationalibus, or (g) the whole Univerſe, all Beings exiſtent. Whatever is good meerly as convenient to ſomething, muſt be convenient to ſome or all of theſe; and it may be either bonum naturale or bonum morale. If it be bonum naturale that is convenient to all theſe, it is called Commune Bonum, Bonum publicum, Felicitas publica (in the largeſt Senſe) the Univerſal Good. If it be Bonum morale that is convenient to all theſe, it is called Moral Virtue, which Moral Good is procreant of the Natural Good, and is a means ſubſervient to the Common Good and Felicity. (h) Moral Good is a kind of bonum utile, or Profitable Good, which doth effect Delectable Good (or Felicity) the End of all our Actions the Univerſal Good. (i) Finis maximus eſt commune omnibus rationalibus agentibus bonum. Ideo virtus bonum eſt, quia actus humanos determinat ad effectus, qui boni publici naturalis partes ſunt. (k) The common good of rational Beings is the greateſt and nobleſt End we can imagine or propoſe to our ſelves, as comprehending the Good and Happineſs of the whole Syſtem of Rational Beings, the collective Happineſs of the Deity as the Head of them, and that of all the individual perſons of Mankind exiſting together with us, as the conſtituent parts or members; and in which each Man's particular Good and Happineſs is included. All the Moral Duties we owe, either to God, our ſelves or others, are contained in, or may be reduc'd to this one Propoſition of our endeavouring the common Good of Rationals. (l) The general preſervation of Man's Natural Good is the ſole Root and Fountain of the Moral: the Univerſal Profit and Pleaſure, the publick Happineſs of Humane Life giveth being and denomination to every Virtue and Vice; and the true Rules and Directions to preſerve and ſecure that Happineſs make up the whole Volume, the Code and Pandect of the Law of Nature. The Law of Nature (according to this Scheme of it) is an Inſtitution of meer publick ſelf-convenience as the End, and of meer publick ſelf-convenience as the Means. For the publick Happineſs (as ſuch) is nothing elſe but the common and publick Self-convenience, of which an Aggregate of Selves and every private ſelf in his publick Capacity is the ultimate End. Thoſe excellent Commonwealthsmen the Bees, that by innate Inſtinct are carry'd to endeavour the publick good (in which every one's particular good is included) cannot be ſuppos'd, to act for any better End than the common and publick Self-convenience. And as every one's private Happineſs (as ſuch) is nothing more than private Self-convenience; ſo the publick Happineſs (as ſuch) is nothing more than the common and publick Self-convenience: (m) for Happineſs is the End of Humane Goods, but Man is the End of Happineſs; for we love our Happineſs for our own ſake. What Cicero ſaith of Pleaſure, muſt be ſaid of Happineſs, (n) We love it for the ſake of our ſelves, but do not love our ſelves for the ſake of it. Wherefore according to this Scheme of the Law of Nature, which ſuppoſeth, that nothing is good but as convenient to Nature, there can be no other Ultimate End of things but natural ſelf, or an Aggregate of natural ſelves; nor can there be any other ultimate reaſon of things but private or publick Self-conveniency. And this would really be the ſtate of things in the Univerſe, if the whole Univerſe

(f) De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. c. 5. p.

(g) Eſſay in Moral. p. 18. 50.

(h) Ibid. p. 55, 57, and 14.

(i) De Leg. Nat. diſſ. c. 4. p. 176. & c. 5. p. 194.

(k) M. Tyrell of the Law of Nat. c. 3. p. 108, 110, 111.

(l) Dr. Bently Ser. on 1 Pet. 3. 15. p. 14, 15.

(m) Felicitas eſt finis omnium bonorum humanorum, homo tamen eſt finis felicitatis: felicitatem enim propter nos ipſos diligimus, ut ipſâ perfruamur. Buridan. Eth. p. 49.

(n) Propter nos enim illam, non propter eam noſmet ipſos diligimus. L. 5. de fin.

niverſe of Rationals were Self-exiſtents and Independents, that combin'd themſelves into Society meerly for their common Happineſs and for their own ſake: or if they were meer political Animals, that were ſo combin'd into Society by Nature. But in Sanctity Imperial (whereby a Judgment may be made of Civil Society) they are not thus combin'd into Society, but they are link'd together by an adamantine Law of right and due Agency, and by this legal Neceſſity, they muſt not be Wicked, but muſt be Holy-virtuous, and are under infinite Obligations ſo to be. They practiſe Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs for other ultimate Reaſons than Perſonal Self-reſpects or ſubſerviency to publick Self-convenience; and they eſchew Sin and Iniquity for other ultimate Reaſons, than meerly becauſe it is a publick Nuſance and Inconvenience. In the Kingdom of God Holineſs doth not exiſt meerly for the ſake of the Publick Happineſs, nor is the Holineſs of God a means to that end: but the Publick Happineſs exiſteth for his Holineſs and Godlineſs of Will.

(4.) This Scheme of the Law of Nature and its definitive Notion of Good becauſe it ſuppoſeth, that nothing is good but as convenient to Nature, that Virtue is of the rank of Bonum utile, (o) and is no otherwiſe Virtue, but as it contributeth to this great End the common good of Rationals, deſtroyeth the Self-amiableneſs and Self-eligibleneſs of Virtue and the Self-odiouſneſs of Sin and Wickedneſs. For it doth not, nor can acknowledge any other Pulchritude in Virtue than (p) the idoneouſneſs of it to this greateſt End the common Happineſs of Rationals; whereas abſtracting from all reſpect to Happineſs or Unhappineſs, publick or private, turpe quia turpe eſt, non eſt faciendum, (q) as Cicero uſually inſiſteth and inculcateth. Wickedneſs is not only to be eſchew'd as a publick Inconvenience, but for its own intrinſick Turpitude, as all the virtuous Philoſophers in conſort with Chriſtians agree, and that Sin as Sin is infinitæ fugibilitatis. (r) Injuriam facere per ſe vitanda eſt, cujus turpitudo contra omnia præmia in ſcelus hortantia valet. It hath been a Queſtion, whether Juſtice be for Society, or Society for Juſtice? do Men live in Society, meerly that they may live juſtly? or do they live juſtly, meerly that they may live in Society? Neither of theſe can be affirm'd with truth; but Men live in Society for Society-ſake (the innumerable Benefits of it) and they ought to live in Society (s) for Juſtice-ſake, which obligeth Children, to live in Society with their Parents, and Rationals to live in Society with God. Juſtice therefore is in part for its own * ſake, and in part for Society; and Society is partly for its own ſake, and partly for Juſtice-ſake. So Virtue is partly for Felicity, Holineſs for Happineſs: Felicity and Happineſs is partly for Virtue and Holineſs. For Virtue and Holineſs deſigneth and endeavoureth the Publick Happineſs, and conſiſteth in the faithful love of the whole and its Intereſt; but beſides this faithful Love there is in all Holy People a faithful eſteem and love of Righteouſneſs (and hatred of Sin and Iniquity) for its own ſake. They practiſe Righteouſneſs ultimately for Righteouſneſs-ſake (becauſe of its own Intrinſick Worth, Rectitude, Pulchritude and Pretioſity) Matth. 5. 10. (t) ob eam unam cauſam, quia decet, quia rectum, quia honeſtum eſt, for this ſole reaſon, becauſe it is right and juſt. So the Virtuous Philoſophers call that which is honeſt, (u) Self-amiable, Self-laudable, Self-deſirable. (w) Αὐτὸ δὲ αὐτὸ αἱρετὸν ὅτι τὸ δίκαιον, that which is right and juſt, is eligible, becauſe it is ſuch. There is more good in Juſtice than meerly a ſubſerviency to the publick Happineſs (and conſequently it is not good meerly as a Conveniency to Nature) elſe it is nothing better than a contrivance for living in Society and for publick convenience.

(5.) This Scheme of the Law of Nature and its definitive Notion of Good introduceth an Inſtitution of Morality of an illegitimate kind, which is not truly Moral, but meerly Politick and Prudential. For it ſuppoſeth, (x) that all the Acts of all the Virtues are commanded meerly for the common convenience of Rationals; that the dictates of Prudence directing the Actions of Men to the publick good are the very Laws of Nature; that the Maker of the World muſt be ſuppos'd, to be endow'd with Prudence, in which there is a Volition of the beſt and greateſt End (the common good of all Rationals) and a proſecution of it by the moſt efficacious means, in which ſort of Acts omnis religio & virtus continetur, all Religion and Virtue is contain'd. The Maker of the World is ſuppos'd from a Principle of Prudence, to will the greateſt End (the common Happineſs) and from the ſame Principle of Prudence alſo to contrive and injoyn the moſt effectual Means thereto, which are called the Acts of Religion and Virtue; and this his prudential Inſtitution of End and Means is this Scheme of the Law of Nature, which therefore is not a Virtuous (much leſs an Holy Virtuous) Inſtitution. For it is one thing, to inſtitute Men, to live well only as to a certain Intereſt, and another thing, to inſtitute them, to live well ſimply and abſolutely. A meer prudential Inſtitution of Morality careth neither for Virtue nor Vice, for living well nor living ill as ſuch and for their own ſake, nor any further than they ſubſerve or diſſerve the publick Convenience. As if one, that foundeth a Family, ſhould prudentially inſtitute the Members of it to demean themſelves humbly, that they may live in Peace, without caring either for Pride or Humility, but only for the common Peace. So this Inſtitution affirmeth, (y) that the Laws of Nature and all the Virtues nihil aliud ſunt, are nothing elſe but means of obtaining the common good. It ſuppoſeth, that Virtue is not good but only as effective of the common Felicity; and that Vice and Wickedneſs is not Evil but only as effective of the publick Infelicity, as will further appear preſently.

(6.) This Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its definition of Good) ſuppoſeth, (z) that the common Good or Felicity is the whole Rule and Meaſure of Virtue, as the adequate End is the rule and meaſure of the Means. It ſuppoſeth alſo, that there is no other rule and meaſure of endeavouring the common happineſs of Rationals but (a) voluntas ad ultimum virium ſuarum determinata, the Will determin'd (to this ſupreme End and Good) to the utmoſt of its Forces. (b) The Eternal Happineſs of the whole Univerſe ought to have the greateſt ſtrength of Vo-

(o) M. Tyr. red. ſupr. p. 191.

(p) De Leg. Nat. diſſ. in proleg. S. 16.

(q) De off. l. 3.

(r) Sen. de Beneſ. l. 4. c. 15.

(s) T. Sharrock de off. c. 2, n. 16.

* Vi ſua & dignitate expetendum. Cic. de fin. l. 3.

(t) Cic. de Fin. l. 2.

(u) Bonum honeſtum per ſe laudabile, per ſe amabile, per ſe expetendum. Bonum honeſtum pulchritudine ſuâ ſpecieque laudabile. Cic. de Fin. l. 2. Forma honeſti, ſi oculis cerneretur, mirabiles amores, ut ait Plato, excitaret. Idem de off. l. 1.

(w) Jambl. προτρεπ. c. 19.

(x) Omnes actus ſingularum virtutum unicè propter Bonum commune imperari. De Leg. Nat. diſſ. c. 8. p. 373. Dictata prudentiæ actiones humanas ubi vis gentium ad bonum publicum (commune rationalium omnium) dirigentia ſunt ipſiſſimæ leges Naturæ. Ibid. c. 5. p. 199. & vid. ibid. S. 19, 20. & c. 4. p. 176.

(y) Ibid c. 3. p. 166.

(z) Commune bonum integer eſt & adæquatus finis. Ibid. c. 5. p. 295. Unus finis proponitur, qui omnibus communis ſit menſura boni & mali. Ibid. p. 216.

(a) Ibid. c. 1. p. 7.

(b) Eſſay of Moral. p. 38, 64.

lition that can be, which is no leſs than Infinite. Both which Propoſitions claſh with this plain and certain Principle, That Virtue is the Rule and Meaſure of endeavouring the common Happineſs of Rationals. Which (including our own Happineſs) may be ſought meerly as an Intereſt and out of Intereſt from a Principle of natural and lawful Self-love and Self-concern (as the Political Animals ſeek the common Good) and common Reaſon dictateth this ſort of endeavouring the common Good. But the common Happineſs of Rationals muſt be ſought alſo from a Principle of Duty and Virtue, and conſequently it muſt not be ſought but in conſiſtence with Virtue, nor otherwiſe than Virtue requireth. No Man can be oblig'd, to ſeek his own or the publick Happineſs any otherwiſe or any further than as it is virtuous ſo to do, and as Holineſs and Godlineſs requireth. A Man may not violate Virtue and Holineſs, nor touch with Sin and Wickedneſs, no not for the Happineſs of the whole Univerſe. He may in ſome degree part with his own Happineſs (which is part of the publick Happineſs) and chuſe his own Unhappineſs (ſeveral Inconveniences of Life:) but no Man may chuſe his Sin and Wickedneſs in any degree, although himſelf only be the material Object of his Sin; ſo much greater and ſtricter are his Obligations in reſpect of Virtue and Holineſs than in reſpect of Happineſs. To chuſe Annihilation rather than Sin is certainly a laudable choice (as Durandus ſuppoſeth) and it is therefore laudable, becauſe it Exod. 32. 32. is virtuous. When Moſes wiſheth his own Name, to be blotted out of the Book of Life; when S. Paul
Rom. 9. 3. ſaith, I could wiſh that my ſelf were accurſed from Chriſt for my Brethren my Kinſmen according to the Fleſh; theſe Holy Men in ſome degree wiſh their own Unhappineſs for the ſake of a more publick Happineſs; but their wiſhing it is not to be underſtood abſolutely, but with this reſtriction and limitation, ſo far as it is lawful and virtuous ſo to do. Virtue therefore is the Rule and Meaſure of endeavouring both our own and the publick Happineſs. God himſelf endeavoureth the publick Happineſs, yet cannot be ſaid, to endeavour it ad ultimum virium, but as it is Holineſs and Godlineſs ſo to do. We are oblig'd to endeavour his Glory (which is one Branch of the Bonum publicum naturale:) but ſuch a kind of endeavouring it, which is not true Holineſs and Godlineſs, is not acceptable, but criminal in his Eyes. We are oblig'd to endeavour the Happineſs of created Rationals, but ſo as to endeavour the Unhappineſs of the Apoſtate Angels and the ruine of their Kingdom. And if any Men be in the ſame ſtate of Reprobation with the Apoſtate Angels (by notoriouſly ſinning the Sin unto Death) we are not oblig'd to ſeek their Happineſs, 1 Joh. 5. 16. Holineſs and Godlineſs conſiſteth in endeavouring the Publick Happineſs, but as Holineſs and Godlineſs requireth.

(7.) According to its definition of Good this Scheme of the Law of Nature condemneth the Philoſophy of the Stoicks, (c) becauſe they endeavouring to eſtabliſh the eximious goodneſs of Virtue and badneſs of Vice, quite take away the one only cauſe, why the one is good, the other bad: for therefore Virtue is good, becauſe it determineth the Actions of Men to Effects that are parts of the publick Felicity. Agreeably whereto the beſt compendium of Ethicks is ſaid to be (d) an Idea of true Felicity and the Cauſes of it. In this Scheme of the Law of Nature nothing is counted good but Happineſs, other things only as effective of Happineſs: nothing is counted Evil but Infelicity, other things only as effective of Infelicity. Virtue therefore is degraded, to be of the ſame rank with Food, Sleep and Houſes, that are good and neceſſary, as ſubſervient to the common Happineſs of Mankind: which Happineſs is by modern Philoſophers generally ſuppos'd, (e) to conſiſt meerly in Pleaſure; and conſequently Virtue is ſuppoſed, to be good only as ſubſervient to Pleaſure (private and publick) the only Competition between Vice and Virtue muſt be touching the Pleaſure which they afford: And this muſt be the only fault of the Pleaſures of Sin, they are deficient in matter of Pleaſure, or claſh with greater Pleaſure (as a leſſer Good with a greater) no Vice or Villainy is to be diſcommended but only as oppoſite to Pleaſure (in itſelf or its effects) and if it was not oppoſite to Pleaſure, it would not be a Vice, nor at all to be diſcommended, as Epicurus ſaid of Luxury. Vice and Vicious Perſons would be as good as Virtue and Virtuous Perſons, if the Nature of the Univerſe of Beings could be ſo contriv'd, that the former might be as ſubſervient to Pleaſure as the latter. Accordingly the goodneſs of Virtue and of the Law of Nature is ſaid to be no otherwiſe nor any further unalterable than (f) manente rerum naturâ tali, qualis nunc eſt, ſo long as the nature of the things of the Univerſe and their opperative force remaineth unchang'd. (g) As the ſame ſubſerviency to Happineſs, ſo the ſame unalterableneſs is aſcrib'd to Virtue and to natural things (Victuals, Cloaths, Phyſick) which are ſaid to be unalterably good, that is, tending to the preſervation and happineſs of Mankind. The Immutability therefore of Virtue is not abſolute, nor is it of an immutable nature in and of it ſelf (as a Square and Cube) but the immutability which it hath, accrueth to it from the unchang'd Nature of the Univerſe of Beings, to whoſe Happineſs it is a means ſubſervient.

(8.) This Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its definitive Notion of Good) deriveth the Neceſſity of Virtue in Men meerly from (h) Neceſſity of publick Good (which neceſſarily requireth it) and from their being injyon'd it meerly in order thereto. Man muſt practiſe Univerſal Benevolence, Juſtice, Temperance, Chaſtity, only for this great end. (i) All the particular moral Virtues are contained under this one Law of endeavouring the common good of Rational Beings, and are to be deduced from it as their only true ground and original. (k) All the parts of Univerſal Juſtice and Benevolence, viz. all the particular Virtues contained under them are only commanded in order to the common good. (l) Every Virtue hath ſome natural efficacy, to promote the common good of Rationals, and is no otherwiſe a Virtue but as it contributeth to this great End. According to theſe Maxims the Virtues have nothing to recommend them, at leaſt nothing to neceſſitate their practice, but only their neceſſary ſerviceableneſs to a common Self-convenience, for which ſole reaſon the ſeveral Clans of Thieves and Robbers (m) ſtrictly practiſe Juſtice amongſt themſelves. As they practiſe it becauſe it is neceſſary to their common Good, and Injuſtice would be a grand inconvenience to their Syſtem of Rationals; So if Mankind in general practiſe Juſtice, meerly becauſe it is neceſſary to their common Good, and Injuſtice would be a grand inconvenience to their Syſtem of Rationals (although their Syſtem and the Good thereof is of a different Nature from that of Thieves, yet) is not their reſpect to Juſtice and Injuſtice both alike? But theſe Maxims have worſe and greater flaws in them; for they not only deſtroy the Self-amiableneſs of Virtue, and the Self-odiouſneſs of Vice, but their being φύσει, by Nature, not θέσει, by Arbitrary Conſtitution. For let us ſuppoſe, that antecedently to the Conſtitution of the Univerſe of Rationals there is one ſolitary Rational Exiſtent; this one ſolitary Rational (according to theſe Maxims) cannot practiſe any Virtue, nor is he in his ſolitary State capable either of Virtue or of Vice, which therefore are not φύσει, in themſelves neceſſary. Such they are not (according to theſe Maxims) after the Univerſe of Rationals is conſtituted; they are neceſſary meerly and only for the common Good of this conſtituted Univerſe and by his Will who conſtituting this Univerſe appointed them meerly and only for the common Good thereof. They are therefore as Arbitrary as the conſtituted Univerſe and as his Will and Appointment in conſtituting the Univerſe. But whatever is in it ſelf (its own Nature) ἐυπραξία, the right and due Practice is upon that account and for it ſelf (not meerly for publick Good) indiſpenſably neceſſary, upon that account it is commanded by God, upon that account it is Virtue, becauſe it is Well-doing, and not meerly becauſe it is a promoting the common Good. To endeavour the common Good of Rational Beings, is ſo far from being the Comprehenſion of all Virtue, that unleſs our endeavouring this common Good is of the Legitimate kind and duely qualified, it is not Virtue, but Vice and Crime. Such is all Benevolence and Beneficence, which is againſt Righteouſneſs. Benefacere in one Senſe (to Benefit others) is ſometimes repugnant to Benefacere in another Senſe (Well-doing) according to that of Ennius (n) Benefacta malè locata malefacta arbitror. All are not oblig'd to perpetual and univerſal Benevolence and Beneficence vvithout limitation: But all are oblig'd to Righteouſneſs without limitation; this therefore is Virtue and the rule of Virtue, which muſt rule and limit our endeavouring the common Good of Rationals, and vvhich God requireth, not only as an endeavouring the common Good, but as Righteouſneſs (o) for he loveth Righteouſneſs as ſuch (p) ἀπὸ τῆς ταύτης αἱ λοιπαὶ ἀρεταὶ ὑφίσανται, from this (which a Pythagorean calleth ματέρα τῶν αλλων ἀρετῶν, the Mother of other Virtues) the reſt of the Virtues have their Origin. Therefore ſtudium communis Boni totius Syſtematis Rationalium is but a Branch of ſtudium benè vivendi. So the Philoſophers ſuppos'd, who ſo diſcours'd of Virtue, as to make Men the Admirers and Lovers of it for its own ſake; and ſo Chriſtians are the Admirers and Lovers of the divine Image, the Life of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs.

(c) Quippe in cauti dum virtutis egregiam bonitatem, vitiorumque inſignem malitiam ſtabilire ſatagunt, unicam illam cauſam quare virtus bona eſt, vitiumque malum penitus tollunt. ideo enim virtus bonum eſt, quia actus humanos determinat ad effectus, qui Boni publici naturalis partes ſunt. De Leg. Nat. diſſ. c. 5. p. 194.

(d) Optimum certè compendium Ethicæ eſt veræ felicitatis ejuſque cauſarum Idea. Ibid. p. 274.

(e) Ibid. c. 5. ſ. 12, 13. Eſſay of Moral. p. 55, 90. Sharrock de off. c. 1. n. 3. Dr. H. More Enchir. Eth. l. 1. c. 2. Stearn Med. An. l. 1. c. 13.

(f) De Leg. Nat. diſſ. c. 5. p. 231, 232.

(g) Mr. Tyrrell ſupr. p. 308. and p. 27. v. Cic. de off. l. 3. ſub fin.

(h) Unicè propter nobiliſſimum hunc finem, unicè propter commune omnium Bonum à ſingulis promovendum. quia ad bonum univerſi ſtatum facit, ad communis Boni procurationem. De Leg. Nat. diſſ. c. 5. p. 292. c. 8. p. 356, 357, 366.

(i) Mr. Tyrrell ſupr. p. c. 4. p. 154.

(k) Ibid p. 182, 183.

(l) Ibid. p. 191.

(9.) This Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its definition of Good) deriveth the Dominion and Sovereignty of God himſelf (q) meerly from the neceſſity of publick Good, God did aſſume it to himſelf, becauſe the common Good did neceſſarily require it. But if the Divine Dominion and Sovereignty over all Creatures is thus founded, it is not ſo well founded, as Humane Sovereignties; for theſe are founded upon neceſſity of publick Good, and alſo the Law of a Superiour Sovereign, from whom they derive their ruling Authority. But the Divine Dominion and Sovereignty is ſuppos'd to be founded meerly upon neceſſity of publick Good and the Dictate of the divine Mind concerning it. Which Dictate can give no Authority (unleſs one can give Authority to himſelf meerly by the Dictate of his ovvn Mind) nor can it pretend to be a Law (unleſs one can make a Law antecedently to his Sovereignty and Legiſlative Povver) nor are any oblig'd to be ſubject to this aſſumed Sovereignty (founded meerly upon neceſſity of publick Good) but by the great Law of endeavouring the publick Good, which therefore muſt be made antecedently to this Aſſumption of the Sovereignty, and conſequently it muſt be made by one that was no Sovereignty, no Legiſlative Power. To this aſſumed Dominion and Sovereignty (aſſumed meerly from neceſſity of common Good and in order thereto) he cannot claim our Subjection ſave only from neceſſity of common Good and in order thereto. But if this is the whole of his Dominion and Sovereignty, he is far from having the moſt ſupreme Dominion poſſible (which the Deity muſt have) nor hath he the ſupreme governing Power originally and eſſentially (as his eſſential Perfection, for he could not have it, if the common Good did not require it) it accrueth to him adventitiouſly, derivatively, mutuatitiouſly and accidentally; he is not ſole Owner of his own Dominion, nor is it Independent or Plenary: But all is the Publick's, the Publick is neceſſarily Supreme Lord of all; for whatever Dominion God hath, is from the Publick (from the neceſſity of publick Good) for the Publick, for the ſake of the Publick and the behoof thereof. But thus to derive his Dominion and Sovereignty from the neceſſity of publick Good, is to ſay, that he muſt be God meerly becauſe the publick Good requireth it; for his Dominion and Sovereignty is his Godhead.

(10) This Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its definition of Good) maketh God, his Dominion and Sovereignty a ſubordinate and ſubſervient Means to the publick Good. For it ſuppoſeth (r) all Rights and Dues to be deriv'd from the common Good (and to be Means ſubordinate and ſubſervient thereto) that the divine Dominion and Sovereignty is in order to the common Good, (s) and it is one of the Media ad ejus proſecutionem neceſſaria, Means neceſſary to the Proſecution of it. (t) The Means are ſubordinate and ſubſervient to the End; the End always excelleth the thing which is to the End; the End is deſired for it ſelf, the Means for the End, which are neceſſary, when the End cannot be had without them, not otherwiſe; they have their Goodneſs and Meaſure from it, and

---

(m) Juſtitia ad rem gerendam neceſſaria eſt. Cujus tanta vis eſt, ut nec illi quidem qui maleficio & ſcelere paſcuntur, poſſint ſine ulla particula Juſtitiæ vivere. Cic. de Off. l. 2.

(n) Cic. de Off. l. 2.

(o) Pſal. 11.

(p) M. Ant. l. 11. S. 10. Gat. in loc.

(q) Ego certè nihil invenire poſſum, quod impediat, quo minùs hoc Dictamen Intellectûs Divini, neceſſe eſt ad Bonum commune, ut pleniſſima & ſuprema omnes creaturas gubernandi poteſtas à Deo aſſumatur ipſique reſervetur, plenam vim habeat Legis, ſolidumque adeo ſit Dominii divini fundamentum.—— cognitâ neceſſitate Dominii divini in ordine ad commune, quod ſummum eſt, Bonum, cognoſcitur Lex naturalis illud ei tribuens. De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. c. 7. p. 343. & c. 9. p. 380, 381. vid. ibid. c. 7. p. 342, 344, 345. & c. 9. S. 1.

(r) Ibid. c. 7. S. 3, 6.

(s) Ibid. p. 344.

(t) Aquin. paſſim. Ritchel Metaph. Par. 2. c. 8. S. 2.

the

the Reaſon of them is taken from the End. (u) The End hath a greater Sovereignty in all Actions than the Actor himſelf. He hath a Sovereignty and Rule over others, but the End hath a Rule over himſelf. The common Good of Rationals therefore is highly dignified and ennobled, becauſe it is ſuppos'd, to be the End: But that is not all, it is ſuppos'd to be abſolutely the higheſt, beſt and greateſt amongſt Ends. (w) Finis optimus maximuſque, ſummus Finis, ſuprema Lex, Bonum maximum, unicus Finis in quo proſequendo omnes conſentire poſſunt, Finis nobiliſſimus, integer & adæquatus Finis, Finis præcipuus, ſummum Bonum, Finis ille unicus naturâ ſuâ optimus & maximus, Finis major eſſe non poteſt. (x) The great End and Rule of all our Actions, the nobleſt Object and higheſt End we can be ordain'd for. That theſe honourary Attributes of the common Good may be allowable, they muſt be applied to the common Good of the Kingdom of God (the Commonwealth of holy Rationals) to this common Good in the plenary Senſe, and this Name the End muſt be underſtood in a large Senſe. For God, his Divine Dominion and Sovereignty, is in reſpect of Will and Affection, Intention and Deſign for this common Good, and the common Good and Intereſt of his Kingdom is his Intereſt. In other reſpects alſo God is in Will and Intention for the common Good. But we muſt diſtinguiſh between a made and unmade Sovereignty, a divine and human Sovereignty. If the Sovereignty is an human Sovereignty made by the People, or made by God for the People, although it hath all the uſual Rights of Sovereignty, yet it is neceſſarily (in the ſtrict and proper Senſe) a ſubordinate and ſubſervient Means to an End the common Good. But things are quite otherwiſe, if the Sovereignty is unmade and maketh the People, and is infinitely better than they; for ſuch a Sovereignty is neceſſarily unſubordinate, and cannot be the ſubordinate and ſubſervient Means to any End, but is abſolutely, as without any Efficient, ſo without any final Cauſe. Whence a Judgment may be made, how far theſe honourary Attributes of the common Good intrench upon the Prerogatives of the God-head. For what pious Man vvill ſay, that the common Good is a Law and End above him, that his Goodneſs is but a means to it, that he is no further neceſſary than in order to it, not ſo good or great or excellent or honourable as the publick Good, nor ſo amiable, deſirable or delectable, nor are we to love him, or devote our ſelves to him, or to adhere to him ſo much as the common Good, in which we ought finally to acquieſce, and which muſt be deify'd and ſuper-deify'd?

(11.) In this Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its Notion of Good) but one half of the common Good is repreſented (as ſuch;) for by the common Good of Rationals it meaneth only their Happineſs, to which it ſubordinateth God and Virtue. Whereas the common Good of Rationals muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into the good which is for them, vvhich is their Happineſs (as ſuch;) and into the good which they are for, vvhich is their Holineſs, the good of Duty and Virtue. (y) That which is abſolutely Good, is every way ſuperiour to us, and we ought always to be commanded by it, becauſe we are made under it: But that which is relatively good to us, may ſometime be commanded by us. Eternal Truth and Righteouſneſs are in themſelves perfectly and abſolutely good, and the more we conform our ſelves to them, the better we are. If the God-head, if Virtue and Righteouſneſs vvere only relatively good as convenient and commodious to us, if they vvere meerly for us as their End, they muſt be look'd upon as things meerly ſubſervient to our Pleaſure, and muſt be eſteem'd and lov'd accordingly. But becauſe they are abſolutely and in themſelves Good, and a good (of kind) ſuperiour to us and our Pleaſure, therefore our Pleaſure ought to be accommodated unto them, all Rationals ſhould be pleas'd vvith them, and take the higheſt Complacence in them, eſteeming and loving them vvith the ſummity and top-flovver of their Minds and Affections both for their ovvn Sake (their ovvn Excellence) and for our ſake as being our true Excellency and Felicity. (z)Virtutes & ſui cauſa expetimus ut præſtantes per ſe & honeſtas; & alterius, id eſt beatitudinis, ſaith Apuleius: So the Pagans Philoſophize at a more virtuous rate than thoſe Chriſtian Divines that ſay (a) there is ſome prime and chief Good, which a Man deſireth for it ſelf, and for it all other things, which good is the good of pleaſure or the delectable good. For this good only a Man enjoyeth: Of the good of Honeſty, Profit, Decor, there is in it ſelf no Enjoyment. Only the pleaſure which reſulteth from it or is conjoin'd with it a Man can enjoy. The evil contrary to this good can be nothing elſe but miſery or pain and that perpetual. For there is no Man who doth not hate that at the higheſt rate and all other things upon the account of it. To this Diſcourſe of a Foreign Divine we will confront a better and more Religious Diſcourſe of a Divine of our own. (b) Thoſe are ignorant of the Nature of Sin, that imagine any Evil greater than it or ſo great. Cicero's Saying in the firſt Book of his Tuſculan Queſtions hath without doubt not a litttle of Truth in it. Ne malum quidem ullum cum turpitudinis malo comparandum. There is no Evil comparable to that of Sin. Hierocles a ſober Philoſopher and very free from the high flown Humour and ranting Genius of the Stoicks, though he would allow that other things beſides Sin may be χαλεπὰ ϗ δυσδιάθετα, very grievous and difficult to be born, yet he would admit nothing beſides this, to be ὄντως κακὸν, truly Evil; and he giveth this Reaſon for it; viz. Becauſe that certain Circumſtances may make other things Good, that have the repute of Evils; but none can make this ſo. He ſaith, the word καλῶς, (well) can never be join'd with any Vice, but ſo it may with every thing beſides. As it is proper to ſay concerning ſuch or ſuch a Perſon, νοσεῖ καλῶς, πένεται καλῶς, he is well diſeas'd, he is well poor, that is, he is both theſe to good purpoſe, behaving himſelf well in his Sickneſs and Poverty as he ought to do: But it can never be ſaid, ἀδικεῖ καλῶς, ἀκολασαίνει καλῶς, he doth injury well or he is rightly and as becometh him intemperate. The Averſation that Holy Souls have from Sin, is greater than their Averſation from Infelicity.

(12.) In this Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its Notion of Good) the due order of Reaſoning and the order of our Obligations is inverted. For antecedently to the Law of endeavouring the common Good there is an Obligation upon Mankind (and therefore a great Law) of conſcientious Subjection and Obedience to the Authority of the Law-giver. He would

(u) Leſſius de perfect. div. p. 77.

(w) De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. Proleg. S. 20, 23. & p. 4, 63, 236, 254, 291, 295, 373, 381.

(x) Mr. Tyrrell. ſupr. p. 128, 152, 153.

(y) Mr. Smith Select Diſcourſ. p. 159, 160.

(z) Apul. de Philoſoph.

(a) Eſſe aliquod bonum primum at ſummum quod homo propter ſe appetit, & propter quod alia omnia expetit, illudque bonum eſſe bonum jucundum ſive delectabile. Solo enim delectabili bono fruitur homo: Boni honeſti, utilis, decori, nulla per ſe eſt fruitio. Voluptas ſola quæ ex iis reſultat aut iis conjuncta eſt, eſt id quo frui poteſt homo ——— contrarium huic bono malum non poteſt aliud quid eſſe quàm miſeria ſive dolor iſque perpetuus. Nemo enim homo eſt, qui illam non ſumme odit, & propter eum alia omnia. Epiſcop. de lib. arbitr. c. 4.

(b) Dr. Fowler Deſign of Chriſtian. Sect. 2. c. 9. Debemus potius velle mundum univerſum annihilari, quàm aliquid fieri contra voluntatem Dei. Anſelm.

would not make this Law for them, if they were not antecedently under ſuch an Obligation, if he could not claim Subjection and Obedience from them; nor could he otherwiſe be called their Rector and Legiſlator, nor can they do the thing commanded becauſe it is commanded (which is Obedience) unleſs they acknowledge, that they owe Subjection and Obedience to the Law-giver. This therefore is the firſt Law of Nature. As all Governments in the firſt place take care, to eſtabliſh their Authority, and as a Man is bound to acknowledge Subjection to the King, before he is bound to obey the Law of endeavouring the common Good of the Kingdom: So Mankind are firſt oblig'd, to conſent, to be practically Subjects and Servants to God, and then as his Subjects and Servants, to endeavour the common Good. The Order of their Obligations is not to endeavour the common Good in the firſt place, and ſo to be pious and virtuous towards God, but to be pious and virtuous towards God, and ſo to endeavour the common Good; for if they endeavour the common Good, they are bound to do it from a Principle of Piety towards God, and the Law of Nature is not Religion, if it doth not oblige them to it. So in all our Actions inquiry muſt be made, whether they be right in reſpect of Matter, Manner, Object, Meaſure, Principle, End, Circumſtances, which ſort of inquiries would be frivolous and impertinent, if Virtue is not Virtue but meerly as it is an endeavour of the common Good; if all the Law was compriſed in this one Propoſition, to endeavour the common Good, if beſides this endeavour more of virtuous Agency was not required by the Law, and requir'd for its own ſake, as being (c) per ſe, ſua vi, ſua natura, ſua ſponte laudabile, in its own Nature laudable. Kings and great Governours are in the firſt place inſtituted, to endeavour the common Good: But the Law of Nature inſtituteth Men as Men. Who are not in the firſt place inſtituted, to endeavour the common Good, but in the ſecond place only, as it is Well-doing, as it is Virtue, as it is Righteouſneſs, as it is the good Life. For the Law of Nature inſtituteth Men, as all other Laws do, in the firſt place to be the Well-doers, not the Evil doers (as ſuch Men have Rewards promis'd and Puniſhments threatned in Laws) to be the Righteous, not the Wicked (as ſuch Men are juſtify'd or condemn'd in Law) ſo Ethica eſt benè vivendi diſciplina, the Diſcipline of living well as to Virtue and as to Felicity.

(13.) This Scheme of the Law of Nature (agreeably to its Notion of Good) ſeemeth to acknowledge no other Obligation of it (d) but meerly from the Sanction of it, which is Self-intereſt. The Law-giver is ſuppos'd to indicate to Men, that the endeavouring the common Good (or univerſal Benevolence) is a neceſſary Means to their neceſſary End, which is their own Happineſs contained in the common Good; and that if they do not ſo act, this will be pernicious to themſelves. (e) Natural Rewards and Penalties, thoſe Motives of Obedience, are the proper Sanction, to make the Law Obligatory. For Obligation properly ſignifieth nothing but laying a neceſſity upon us, to act according to the direction of the Law. But if this is the whole of the Law's Obligation (as ſeveral others ſeem (f) to ſuppoſe) the Tranſgreſſion of the Law is not Unrighteouſneſs, Sin and Criminality, but only Imprudence and Infelicity; for the Sanction of the Law importeth no other Evil. But the Lawyers have defin'd the Obligation of the Law Juris vinculum (the Bond of the Law) whereby they mean the Jural reſtraint, as in Greek Authors to bind one ſignifieth (g) to reſtrain him. Agreeably whereto Heſichyus muſt be underſtood, when he ſaith δεόμενος, νόμος, δεσμὸς, one bound in Law, the Law is a Band or Bond. The Jural Reſtraint or Band is Non licet (which is a reſtraint of unbounded Liberty of Agency) as the Hebrew word for binding אסר uſually ſignifieth in the Talmud, to forbid or prohibit, and the Participles or Nouns deduc'd from thence אסיר and איסור ſignifie very often a thing prohibited or unlawful. It is look'd upon as Bound and ſo called, becauſe there is upon it the Jural reſtraint Non licet. But becauſe a bare Non licet is not ſufficient, to inforce the Law, therefore the Sin and Puniſhment, the Precept and the Sanction both concur, to make the Jural reſtraint, which muſt be thus fully expreſſed Non licet impunè. Every thing from which either Sin or Puniſhment cometh unto him that doth it, נקרא אסר is called Bound, ſaith Elias Levita. As Sin and Iniquity in Scripture uſually ſignifieth the Puniſhment alſo, (h) ſo חיב ſignifieth one that is Bound (obligatus) as to the Non licet, and alſo one that is Bound as to the Non impunè, that is a Debtor of the Puniſhment. So in Greek ἐνοχὴ, ſignifieth Obligation and ἔνοχος, one Bound as to the Non licet (as by an Oath,) and they uſually relate alſo to the Non impunè and ſignifie Obligation or to be obnoxious to the Puniſhment. But although Sin and Puniſhment are cloſely connex'd, yet the Obligation of Non licet is diſtinct from the Obligation of Non impunè, as Sin and Puniſhment are of diſtinct conſideration: But a Man is Bound both when he cannot do a thing without Sin, and when he cannot do a thing without Puniſhment, and both theſe Obligations are in every Law, and both concur, to make the Obligation of it. But becauſe the Obligation of Non licet is antecedent to the Obligation of Non impunè (the Precept to the Sanction) and the Sin is made by the Law (the Law hath ſo much Obligation, as to make the Sin) before the Penalty is enacted; therefore the Law hath an Obligation antecedently to the Sanction of it. For every one is bound to eſchew what is Sin (not to do that which he cannot do without being a Sinner and Evil doer) becauſe none can have a Licence or Liberty to Sin, a Right to do what is Unrighteous, which is a Contradiction. To violate Righteouſneſs, is neceſſarily Sin and Unrighteouſneſs; therefore all are obliged to eſchew it antecedently to the Sanction of the Law. So the Law of Religion (which is ſuppos'd, to have its Name à Religando, which Lucretius calleth Religionis nodus (i) and Lactantius vinculum pietatis quo obſtricti ſumus Deo, the Bond of Piety whereby we are Bound unto God) cannot rationally be thought Obligatory meerly from the Sanction of it; for to violate the Holineſs of the Godhead, is neceſſarily Sin and Profaneneſs. No ingenuous Man looketh upon himſelf as oblig'd to be grateful to his Benefactors, to Love his Wife and Children, or to Love and Honour his God and Saviour meerly by the Sanction of Rewards and Puniſhments. Is there no Obligation upon Men from Right and Wrong, Due and Undue, Sanctity and Sin, Righteouſneſs and Wickedneſs, Honeſty and Diſhoneſty, Integrity and Guile, Worthineſs and Baſeneſs, Conſcience or Crime, Virtue or Villainy, but meerly from a prudent Regard to their own Happineſs? (k) Prudens noſtræ fælicitatis cura ab alienæ, communis nempe omnium ſocietatis, ſtudio divelli nequit. A prudent care of our own Felicity is inſeparable from the care of the common Good; and hence it is, that a prudent Man thinketh himſelf oblig'd to obey the great Law of endeavouring the common Good. But if this prudent Man ſhould be ſo imprudent, as to diſcard all care and regard of his own Felicity, would he be diſcharg'd by this imprudence from all his Bonds and Fetters of Obligation, and become looſe and unbound, to live as he liſteth? Cicero asketh the Men of Prudence (l) if they were ſecure from the Sanction of the Law (impunitate propoſita) whether they would be diſhoneſt or not? If they ſay, they would, facinoroſos ſe eſſe fateantur (let them confeſs themſelves flagitious :) if they ſay, they would not, omnia turpia per ſe ipſa fugienda eſſe concedant, let them acknowledge, that all things foul and filthy are to be eſchew'd becauſe they are ſuch. If a truly wiſe Man hath Gyges's Ring, (m) He thinketh not, that he hath more Licence to Sin, than if he had it not. We ought to be of this Perſwaſion, that if we could be hid from all the Gods and Men (and therefore were ſecure from the Sanction of the Law) yet nothing is to be done avariciouſly, unjuſtly, libidinouſly. Every vulgar Man ſaith, I am bound in Duty, in Juſtice, in Gratitude, in Conſcience (conſciouſneſs of Duty and Sin) and the Schools ſay, that (n) obligatio naturalis (the Obligation of the Law of Nature) is Nexus Conſcientiæ, a Bond of Conſcience. No Man can be oblig'd out of regard to his own Happineſs, to chuſe, to be annihilated for the Welfare of others; yet few will deny, that this is Virtue and Duty, if the common Good did require it. Every Man is bound to make the publick Happineſs his chief End (as this Scheme of the Law of Nature ſuppoſeth) therefore he is Bound, to ſeek it otherwiſe than meerly for the ſake of his own Happineſs: Nor is it poſſible to deduce our conſcientious kind of Obligations meerly from that which is Heterogeneous, A Politick and Prudential kind of regard to our own Happineſs. But becauſe the Legiſlator annexeth this bonum jucundum, to his Law, and for the ſake of this Men chuſe Virtue and Obedience, hence ſome infer (o) that bonum jucundum hath the precedence of bonum honeſtum, which is an Argument that may be thus retorted upon the Makers of it. The Legiſlator annexeth to his Law the Sanction of bonum jucundum for the ſake of bonum honeſtum, which the Law injoineth; this therefore is the principal in the Eſtimation and Intention of the Law-giver. Whoſe Will if it be made known, is (without a Sanction) a Bond or Obligation upon us; for we owe Obedience thereto, and every one is bound to pay what he oweth.

(c) Cic. de Fin. l. 2.

(d) Summa vis obligandi hæc eſt; legis Authorem legum ſuarum obſervationi bona, tranſgreſſioni mala, ſcilicet naturalia, adjunxiſſe, quorum proſpectu moventur homines actiones potiùs legibus conformes quàm abiis diſſentientes elicere. De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. c. 5. p. 206. Vinculis propriè non aſtringitur animus humanus.—— Ego itaque obligationem moralem ſic univerſaliter nec incommodè definiri poſſe arbitror; obligatio eſt actus Legiſlatoris quo actiones Legi ſuæ conformes eis quibus Lex fertur neceſſarias eſſe indicat. Actio autem Agenti rationali tum neceſſaria eſſe intelligitur, cùm certum eſt eam contineri in cauſis neceſſario requiſitis ad fælicitatem illam, quam naturaliter adeoque neceſſariò expetit. Ibid. p. 240, & vid. p. 174. 241, 257. Nec ſanè quicquam intelligere poſſum, quod animum humanum neceſſitate ullâ poſſit aſtringere (in quâ vim obligationis ponit definitio Juſtiniani) præter argumenta bonum aut malum ex actibus noſtris proventurum indicantia. Ibid. c 5. S. 35. & vid. ibid. S. 2, 19 22, 25 42, 44. 46.

(e) Dr. Parker Demonſtr. of the Law of Nat. p. 60.

(f) Vel Thuſ. Pufendorf. &c.

(g) Dr. Hamm. Power of the Keyes. c. 4 S 6, 7, 21, 24.

(h) Seld. de Jur. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 4.

(i) L. 4. c. 28.

(14.) The Law of Nature is certainly a matter of Conſcience not of meer human Policy and Prudence, and a matter of Sanctity not of meer Civil-religious Society, as it is made in this Scheme of it, which (agreeably to its Notion of Good) is a Syſtem of human Policy and Prudence modelling the Univerſe of Rationals into a Civil (Civil-religious) Society by Conſent and Agreement in their Politicks for the common Happineſs of Civil Life. The Univerſe of Rationals is in a very divided State, but they are modelled into one Society (p) in this Scheme, which is an Inſtitution to Civil-religious Society, into which the whole Univerſe of Rationals is ſuppos'd to be combin'd. Civil Society being Civil-religious is not without a ſacred Society; for all civil People have their Deity, their Religion, their Prieſts and their Sacra, which muſt be in this great Civil Society, that conſiſteth of the Under-rationals and of God the Head-rational (or the Head of Rational Beings) and which looketh like a God-Society, but is no God-kind of Society. Into this Society the Univerſe of Rationals is ſuppos'd to be combin'd, not by the Bands of Right and Due, but in the method of human Policy and Prudence by one common Intereſt (their common Happineſs) and by Conſent and Agreement in their Politicks. (q) All Rational Beings or Agents are, and muſt be conſider'd together, as naturally and neceſſarily conſtituting one intellectual Syſtem or Society; becauſe they agree together, to proſecute one chief End viz. The good of the Univerſe or World, eſpecially of that intellectual Syſtem, by the fitteſt means applicable to that end; ſince whilſt they are truly Rational, they cannot differ in judging what is that beſt End, nor avoid chuſing the ſame neceſſary Means leading thereto. (r) The Univerſe of Rationals is ſuppos'd, to be united (s) in ordine ad unum finem, in order to the common Good, which is the common End; for God in order to the common Good aſſumeth to himſelf the ſupreme governing Power, and the Under-rationals (t) for neceſſity of common Good do and muſt yield it unto him; by which agreement in Politicks they are related as Rector and Subjects in Society. Which Society being of no higher kind than Civil, the common Happineſs (that is the end of the Aſſociation) can be nothing more than the Happineſs of Civil Life; and conſequently the univerſal Benevolence, and the other Virtues which are in this Scheme of the Law of Nature, are no other than thoſe of Ariſtotle's and Cicero's Inſtitution. They muſt not be ſuppos'd (u) utriuſque Tabulæ Legis divinæ Moſaicæ & Evangelicæ ſumma, (w) the Summ both of the Moral Law of Moſes and of the Goſpel of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; which they are as far diſtant from, as the ſecular Happineſs is from the Spiritual, the Civil-ſocietive Virtue is from the Spiritual religious, and human prudential Policy is from the Inſtitution and Diſcipline of Sanctity, that is not pretended to by this Scheme of the Law of Nature. Which being not Satisfactory, we are neceſſitated, to recede from it, and to give a diſſonant Account of the Law of Nature and of the Good to which it inſtituteth.

IV. The

(k) De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. c. 2. S. 8.

(l) De Off. l. 3.

(m) Nihil plus ſibi licere putat peccare, quàm ſi non haberet. Satis nobis perſuaſum eſſe debet, ſi omnes Deos hominesque celare poſſemus, nihil tamen avarè, nihil injuſtè, nihil libidinosè eſſe faciendum. Ibid.

(n) Leſſius de Juſt. & Jur. l. 2. c. 19. Suarez de Leg. l. 2. c. 9. S. 6.

(o) Epiſcop. de lib. Arbitr. c. 4.

(p) Patet veram Ethicam homines inſtituere ad ſocietatem longè ampliſſimam cum Deo hominibuſque ineundam & conſervandam. De Leg. Nat. Diſ. c. 6. S. 2.

(q) Mr. Tyrell ſupr. pref.

(r) Patet omnes primum Rationales tum per rectæ ubicunque ſit rationis conſenſionem neceſſariam, tum per eaſdem communis fælicitatis cauſas inter ſe uniri. De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. c. 5. S. 30.

(s) Ibid. c. 1. S. 4.

(t) Ibid. c. 9. S. 1. & Proleg. S. 24.

(u) Ibid. c. 1. S. 10.

(w) Mr. Tyrell. ſupr. p. 24

IV. The good to which the Law of Nature and the Diſcipline of Morality inſtituteth, is the good Life and Practice (of which there are many Branches) the Notion whereof is compounded of two Notions Beauteous-Beneficial: as the Works of Nature are therefore ſaid to be good (well-done) becauſe the make of them is the Beauteous-Beneficial. (x) For all the parts of the World are ſo conſtituted, that they could not be better either for Beauty or Uſefulneſs. (y) It is hard to ſay, whether the Beauty or Utility be the greater; there is ſo marvellous an accord between Uſefulneſs and Comelineſs in the Fabrick of Animals. (z) All the parts of an Humane Body are for neceſſary uſe and for beauty. So in Building (a) regard muſt be had both to the Beauty and Uſefulneſs of the Work. The Lacedæmonians had regard for both theſe, when they pray'd for pulchra cum bonis, and the old Philoſophers had regard to both theſe in their definitive Notices of Goods and Evils. (b) All the good things are thoſe that are profitable, conducive, beauteous, comely, cognate; but the Evils are the contrary, thoſe things that are hurtful, noxious, incommodious, alien, uncomely and foul. So Perfections in general are ornamenta & adjumenta (ornamental and uſeful) agreeably whereto the good Morals muſt be defin'd the Beauteous-Beneficial. (c) The Grecians moſt divinely (ſaith Mr. Hooker) have given to the active perfection of Men a Name expreſſing both Beauty and Goodneſs (καλοκ'αγαθία) becauſe Goodneſs in ordinary Speech is for the moſt part applied only to that which is beneficial; but we in the name of Goodneſs do here imply both. Good therefore in Morality (the Good of Virtue) is of this definitive Notion, τὸ καλοκ'αγαθὸν, the Beauteous-Beneficial Life and Practice. (δ) Ariſtoteles docet omnes virtutes τῇ καλοκ'αγαθίᾳ, comprehendi.

What is beauteous is amiable, and is to be lik'd and lov'd, whence it is called τὸ καλὸν, which ſignifieth it both to be beauteous and to be good. In ether of theſe ſignifications the word may be underſtood in that known Verſe of Theognis (which ſpeaketh Philo's Senſe, (d) Ἀξιέραστον μόνον τὸ καλόν ἐστι, That only which is beauteous or good, is worthy of love) * That only which is beauteous or good, is to me amical. What is beauteous all Men call good (whence Maimonides ſaith, (e) de re pulchra vel deformi dicitur Bonum vel Malum) agreeably to the uſual Etymology of κάλλος (Pulchritude) ἀπὸ τοῦ καλεῖν vel ἀπὸ τοῦ κηλεῖν καὶ θέλγειν, from calling Men to it, or from winning or alluring their Affections. To the ſame Senſe S. Auſtin diſcourſeth, Quid eſt pulchrum? & quid eſt pulchritudo? Quid eſt quod nos allicit & conciliat rebus quas amamus? Niſi enim eſſet in eis decus & ſpecies, nullo modo nos ad ſe moverent: What meaneth Beauteous and what is Pulchritude? What is it that allureth us to the things we love? for unleſs there was in them decor and ſpecioſity, they would not move us at all. The ſame Father ſuppoſeth and the Schoolmen from him, that the nature of good conſiſteth in this Ternary, (f) in modo, in ſpecie, in ordine, in Meaſure, in Specioſity, in Order; all which are certain Modes of Beauty. So Plato in his Gorgias ſaith; κόσμος τις ἐγγινόμενος ἐν ἑκάστῳ ὁ ἑκάστου οἰκεῖος, ἀγαθὸν παρέχει ἕκαστον, A certain graceſulneſs in every Being which is proper thereto, maketh every Being good. Accordingly Virtue whereby intelligent Agents are made good is (g) a certain Pulchritude in the Mind and the Actions that iſſue from it: (h) for Virtue is a congruous and conſonant diſpoſition of the Soul from Reaſon about the whole Life. (i) The good of Honeſty (bonum honeſtum) is laudable by its Pulchritude, Form and Specioſity: (k) Wherein appeareth an Ornament and Graceſulneſs of Life, Temperance, Modeſty, a ſedation of Perturbations, and a due meaſure of things, which is that which is decorous. (l) How come we to underſtand what is Virtue? By ſeeing the order and decor that is in it. (m) Virtue is ſo graceful, that even bad Men approve of better things. (n) It is no ſmall matter, to obſerve Meaſure and Order in every thing, wherein that which is decorous appeareth. (o) This is a ſhort and true definition of Virtue, it is the due order of Love. That Love it ſelf whereby we rightly love what is to be lov'd, is to be ordinately lov'd, that there may be in us Virtue, whereby we live well. (p) What elſe is Juſtice when it is in us, or any Virtue whereby we live rightly and wiſely, but the Pulchritude of the Inward Man? according to this Pulchritude rather than according to the Body we are made after the Image of God. The true ſupreme Pulchritude is Righteouſneſs. (q) The things that are juſt we diſcern by an intelligible Species, (r) by a certain Form and Image in my Mind, and becauſe I ſee ſuch an Equity and Congruence of things, as muſt be in that Virtue; which if it be abſent (howſoever that be) I diſcern Injuſtice, becauſe I ſee that temperament of eximious Pulchritude and concinnity is wanting: nor do I underſtand Injuſtice ſo much from beating a Man, taking away his Money, or Reproaches or Rapine, or other the like Force and Injury (which ſurely are not Privations, and they may alſo be done juſtly, as if the Magiſtrate commandeth, or if they be done with a good Mind) as becauſe I diſcern that Decency and Concinnity of the faireſt Virtue to be wanting. Of the eximious pulchritude of Juſtice Ariſtotle ſaith, (s) Neither the Evening nor the Morning is ſo admirable. Virtue is a ſplendor and luminouſneſs of practice, which is a Beauty of it: (t) Virtus in omnium animos lumen ſuum

(x) Omnes mundi partes ita conſtitutæ ſunt, ut neque ad uſum meliores potuerint eſſe, nec ad ſpeciem pulchriores. Cic. de N. D. l. 2.

(y) Difficile eſt expedire, utrum ſpecies an utilitas major ſit, adeò miro modo conſentit utilitas cum decore. Lactant. de opif. c. 10. & 2.

(z) Nihil in homine membrorum eſt, quod non & neceſſitatis cauſa ſit & decoris. Min. Fel. p. 135.

(a) Adhibenda dignitatis commoditatiſque diligentia. Cic. de off. l. 1.

(b) Πάντα δὲ τ' ἀγαθὰ ὠφέλιμα εἶναι, καὶ χρηστὰ, καὶ συμφέροντα, καὶ λυσιτελῆ, καὶ σπουδαῖα, καὶ πρέποντα, καὶ καλὰ, καὶ οἰκεῖα· τὰ δὲ κακὰ ἐκ τῶν ἐναντίων, πάντα βλαβερὰ, καὶ δύσχρηστα, καὶ ἀσύμφορα, καὶ ἀλυσιτελῆ, καὶ φαῦλα, καὶ ἀνοικεῖα, καὶ ἀπρεπῆ, καὶ αἰσχρά. Stob. Ecl. Eth. l. 2. p. 166.

(c) Hooker Eccl. Polit. l. 1. p. m. 17.

(δ) Caſaub. Not. in Matth. 22. 49.

(d) Claud. Dauſq. Not. in Baſil. Seleuc. or. p. 325. Petav. T. 1 l. 6. c. 8.

* Ὅτι καλὸν φίλον ἐστί· τὸ δ' οὐ καλὸν, οὐ φίλον ἐστί·

(e) Mor. Nev. par. 1. c. 2.

(f) Petav. ſupr. c. 1. Aquin. 1. Qu. 5. Art. 5.

(g) Quædam in animo & actionibus inde prodeuntibus pulchritudo. J. Cirelli or. 1. de Honeſt. nat. p. 627.

(h) Καὶ γὰρ ἡ ἀρετὴ αὐτὴ διάθεσίς ἐστι ψυχῆς σύμφωνος ὑπὸ τοῦ λόγου περὶ ὅλον τὸν βίον. Clem. Pædag. l. 1. c 13.

(i) Bonum honeſtum eſt pulchritudine ſua ſpecieque laudabile. Cic. de Fin. l 2.

(k) In qua verecundia & quaſi quidam ornatus vitæ, temperantia & modeſtia, omniſque ſedatio perturbationum animi, & rerum modus cernitur; quod dici Latinè decorum poteſt, Græcè enim πρέπον dicitur. Idem de off. l. 1.

(l) Ex quo virtutem intelligimus? oſtendit illam nobis ordo ejus & decor. Sen. Ep. 120.

(m) Adeo gratioſa virtus eſt, ut inſitum ſit etiam malis probare meliora. Idem de Benef. l. 4 c. 17.

(n) Non mediocre eſt rebus ſingulis modum ſervare atque impartiri ordinem, in quo verè prælucet illud quod decorum dicitur. S. Ambroſ. de off. l. 1. c. 45.

(o) Definitio brevis & vera virtutis, ordo eſt amoris. Amor ipſe ordinatè amandus eſt, quo benè amatur quod amandum eſt, ut ſit in nobis virtus qua vivitur benè. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 15. c 22.

(p) Quid eſt aliud Juſtitia cùm in nobis eſt, vel quælibet virtus, quâ rectè ſapienterque vivitur, quàm interioris hominis pulchritudo? etiam ſecundum hanc pulchritudinem, magis quàm ſecundum corpus, facti ſumus ad imaginem Dei. ſumma & vera pulchritudo Juſtitia eſt. S. Aug. in Pſal 44. Ep. 222. Petav. ſupr. l. 6. c. 8.

(q) Juſta ſentimus per intelligibilem ſpeciem. S. Aug. de C D. l. 11. c. 27.

(r) Per formam quandam & imaginem in mente mea, quòd vidi æquitatem & congruentiam rerum, qualis debet in virtute illa, quæ ſi abſit, quocunque modo id fiat, Injuſtitiam intelligo, quoniam temperamentum illud magna pulchritudine concinnum abeſſe video: nec tam ex pulſatione hominis aut ereptione pecuniæ, aut conviciis, aut raptatione, vique alia ſimili & injuria Injuſtitiam intelligo, quæ certè privationes non ſunt, ſed juſtè etiam fieri poſſunt, ut ſi magiſtratus jubeat, vel bona mente fiant, quàm quòd cerno decentiam illam & concinnitatem abeſſe virtutis pulcherrimæ. Vives in loc.

(s) Οὔθ' ἕσπερος, οὔθ' ἑῷος, οὕτω θαυμαστός. Ariſt. Eth. l. 5. c. 3.

(t) Sen. de Benef. l. 4. c. 17.

præmittit, etiam qui non ſequuntur illam vident: Virtue ſendeth its Light into the Minds of all, even they that are no followers of it yet ſee it. Virtue is an illuſtriouſneſs and honourableneſs (as well as amiableneſs) of practice, which is the Beauteouſneſs of it, whence it hath the Name of Honeſtas. (u) Quid eſt Honeſtas, niſi quæ turpitudinem quaſi mortem fugiat? What is Honeſty or Virtue (Anti-baſeneſs) but the eſchewing Turpitude as Death? Vice and Wickedneſs is that which is (w) turpe, inhoneſtum, indecorum, pravum, flagitioſum, fœdum, foul, diſhoneſt, indecorous, bad, flagitious, filthy: of definitive Notion it is Turpitude and Deformity of Practice, which the Philoſophers ſometimes (agreeably to the Scriptures) call Crookedneſs and Obliquity. For the evil Morals they call (x) curvi mores, σκολιὰ ϗ στρεβλὰ, the crooked and perverſe Manners oppoſite to κατορθώματα, the right done Deeds: (y) Φιλοτιμώμεθα ὖν φυγεῖν πᾶν σκολιὸν ἔργον ϗ στραγγαλιῶδες, let us earneſtly endeavour to avoid every oblique, crooked and diſtorted practice. The various Names which the Philoſophers (in conſort with the generality of Mankind) have given to the virtuous practice, denote the Regularity and Beauteouſneſs of it. Τὸ εὖ, that which is well, τὸ δέον, that which ought to be, τὸ πρέπον, that which is decorous, τὸ ἴσον, that which is equal, τὸ καλὸν, that which is fair, τὸ ἁρμόζον, that which is fit, congruous, proportionate, τὸ ὀρθὸν, that which is right. (z) Eſt quiddam in omni virtute quod deceat; there is a decency in all Virtue. The Hebrew word Tob to which ἀγαθὸν, in the Helleniſtical uſe anſwereth is obſerv'd by the Criticks, (a) to ſignifie lætum, hilare (joyous) and alſo pulchrum formoſum, beauteous; the Beauty of Virtue therefore ſpeaketh the Goodneſs of it.

V. And it is the Good Life and Practice upon the account of its Beneficialneſs and Utility, to which ſome have (erroneouſly) confin'd the Notion of Good. (b) Good as good doth nothing elſe but profit, ſaith Clemens. But without confining thereto the Notion of Good the Philoſophers obſerve, that (c) Good in common acceptation is Profit. Themſelves ſay, (d) Good muſt be ſomething profitable. (e) Good is profitable. They ſpeak agreeably to the common Senſe of Mankind; (f) for all of us deſire profit, and (as Cicero ſpeaketh) are rapturouſly carry'd to it. In their private Capacity Mankind are intent upon their private Utility, and in their publick Capacity they are intent upon their common Utility; for Laws are made (g) pro utilitate hominum, for the common Utility, which is the end of the Society. What is profitable and beneficial, uſeful and needful (although it be only wholſome, not ſightly nor toothſome) for ſufficient cauſe and reaſon ought to be lik'd: but (h) that is not called Good, which is not profitable, which yieldeth no Fruit. (i) As there is no Light which doth not enlighten, ſo there is no Good which doth not profit. A principal reaſon therefore why Things and Perſons are denominated good is their Utility and Beneficialneſs. (k) Ἀγαθὸς ἐστιν ὁ Θεός· ἀγαθὸς δὲ ὢν ἐυεργητικός· God is good, and being good he cannot fail to be Beneficent. (l) Vir bonus eſt, qui prodeſt quibus poteſt, nocet nemini: He is a good Man, who profiteth whom he can, is hurtful to none. It is an Article of the Italians Creed, (m) Ogni adjuto è bon, any thing that helpeth is good. So ſaid he, that called on the Devil, to be eas'd of his Gout, when calling upon God did not eaſe him. His Senſe ſeemeth to be in the Maxim, which yet hath thus much of truth in it; the things helpful and ſalutary are the things that are good, and thoſe that are noxious, poyſonous, miſchievous and deadly are the bad things: (n) In the Head of a Polypus there is that which is bad (hurtful) and that which is (wholſome) good. So Egypt affordeth (o) many good (ſalutary) Medicines and many pernicious. The good life and practice therefore is that which is the helpful, the ſalutary and beneficial. (p) The nature of Virtue is to benefit and profit: the nature of Wickedneſs is to be miſchievous and to do hurt. The ſeveral Branches of Vice and Wickedneſs are ſuch as the Orator calleth (q) maleficia, pernicies, peſtes capitales; they are that Life and Practice, which is the noxious, poyſonous, miſchievous and maleficial ſimply and abſolutely. In enormous Selfiſhneſs, Malevolence, Pride, Ambition, Fraud, Guile, Perfidiouſneſs, Envy, Avarice, Circumvention, Wraths, Enmities, Calumnies, Thefts, Cruelty, Homicide, Profaneneſs and contempt of God, and in all unjuſt and uncharitable Actions there is a deadly maleficent deformity, and all the foul voluptuous Senſualities are alſo pernicious and maleficial; ὑπερφυεῖ τινι ὡς μεγάλῃ βλάβῃ καὶ κακῷ θαυμασίῳ ὑπερβάλλουσα τ' ἄλλα ἡ τῆς ψυχῆς πονηρία· By an incredibly great hurt and wonderful detriment (ſaith Plato in his Gorgias) the Evil of the Soul tranſcendeth other Evils. The vicious life and practice is of definitive Notion The foul and ill-favour'd maleficial, as on the contrary, the virtuous life and practice is The beauteous-beneficial. All the Branches of it are abſolutely (every way and in all reſpects) beneficial, and not only of Utility but of indiſpenſable neceſſity to the Happineſs of every one and of All (to the common good;) ſome ſort of them is indiſpenſably neceſſary to Humane Society. Of Juſtice, Cicero ſaith there are two Fundamentals: (r) Primum ut ne cui noceatur, firſt not to hurt any; deinde ut communi utilitati ſerviatur, next that we ſerve the common Utility. Purity and Charity are in Religion inſeparably connex'd, and the Connection of them is a conjoyning Beauty with Beneficialneſs, Charity being univerſally beneficial; for (s) ὁ φιλῶν τὶ ὠφελεῖν αὐτὸ βὔλεται, he that loveth any thing, willeth to profit or benefit it. The Virtues are the more beauteous, becauſe they are beneficial; for Beneficialneſs is ornamental and a Perfection; to which purpoſe there are many good Sayings in Plato; for in his Hippias major he ſaith, (t) That which is uſeful, as it is of uſe, and as to what it is of uſe, and when it is of uſe, we call Fair; but what is wholly unprofitable, we call Foul. In his fiſth de Rep. he ſaith, (u) It is excellently ſaid, That which is of Utility is fair, and that which is Noxious, is foul. In his firſt Alcibiades he ſaith, (w) The (u) S. Ambroſ. de off. l. 1. c. 45.

(w) Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

(x) Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 204.

(y) S. Baſil. Hom. in Pſal. 22. p. 198.

(z) Cic. de off. l. 1.

(a) Gat. c. Pſochen. p. 139, 140.

(b) Τὸ δὲ ἀγαθὸν ᾗ ἀγαθόν ἐστιν, ὐδὲν ἄλλο ποιεῖ, ἢ ὅτι ὠφελεῖ. Lipſ. Manud. l. 2. diſſ. 22.

(c) Ἀγαθὸν δὲ κοινῶς μὲν τὸ ὄφελος. Ibid.

(d) Τὸ δὲ ἀγαθὸν χρησιμόν τι δεῖ εἶναι. M. Ant. l. 8. S. 10.

(e) Τὸ ἀγαθὸν ὠφέλιμον. Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 8.

(f) Omnes enim expetimus utilitatem, ad eamque rapimur; nec facere aliter ullo modo poſſumus. nam quis eſt qui utilia fugiat? aut quis potiùs qui ea non ſtudioſiſſimè perſequatur? Cic. de off. l. 3.

(g) Digeſt. l. 1. Tit. 3. lex. 25.

(h) Nè Latinè quidem Bonum dicitur, niſi quod frugi ſit, à quo fructus aliquis percipitur. Bucer. in Matth. 5. 6.

(i) Καθάπερ ὐκ ἔστι φῶς ὃ μὴ φωτίζει, ὐδὲ ἀγαθὸν ἐστιν, ὃ μὴ ὠφελεῖ. Clem. pædag. l. 1. c. 3.

(k) Nemeſ. de Nat. Hom. c. 42.

(l) Cic. de off. l. 3.

(m) Anſw. to Philan. Anglic. Append. p. 13.

(n) Πυλύποδος κεφαλῇ ἔνι μὲν κακὸν ἐν δὲ ϗ ἐσθλόν.

(o) Φάρμακα πολλὰ μὲν ἐσθλὰ μεμιγμένα πολλὰ δὲ λυγρά. Plutarch. de aud. Poet. p. 15.

(p) Φύσει ἁ μὲν ἀρετὰ ἀγαθοποιὸς ϗ ὠφελητικά· ἁ δὲ κακία κακοποιὸς ϗ βλαπτικά. Theag. Pythag.

(q) De off. l. 3. & de Seneå.

(r) De off. l. 1.

(s) Clem. pæd. l. 1. c. 8.

(t) Τὸ μὲν χρήσιμον, καὶ ᾗ χρήσιμον, καὶ πρὸς ὃ χρήσιμον, καὶ ὁ πότε χρήσιμον, καλὸν φαμὲν εἶναι· τὸ δὲ πάντη ἄχρηστον αἰσχρόν.

(u) Κάλλιστα δὴ τῦτο καὶ λέγεται καὶ λελέξεται, ὅτι τὸ μὲν ὠφέλιμον καλόν· τὸ δὲ βλαβερὸν αἰσχρόν.

(w) Τὰ μὲν δίκαια καλὰ

juſt

δὲ καλὰ ἀγαθά· τὰ δὲ ἀγαθὰ συμφέρει· τὰ δίκαια ἄρα συμφέροντά ἐστιν.

juſt things are the fair; the fair are the good; the good are the conducive and profitable; the juſt things therefore are the profitable. According to this Philoſopher the Beneficialneſs of the good Life may in a large acceptation of Beauty be called the Beauteouſneſs thereof; but in the ſtrict acceptation theſe are diſtinguiſh'd, as the Beauty of the Conval Lilly is diſtinguiſh'd from its Medicinal Virtue. Of the Beauteouſneſs of the good Life in the ſtrict acceptation, a Saying of this Philoſopher in his Gorgias muſt be underſtood, τάξει ἄρα τεταγμένον ϗ κεκοσμημένον ἐστὶν ἀρετὴ ἑκάστου, to be ordinate and ſo adorn'd, is every one's Virtue.

VI. If the Beauteous-Beneficial Life and Practice is the good Life and Practice, it is neceſſarily that Life and Practice, to which the Names of Praiſe and Commendation belong (for Good is a term of Praiſe and Commendation, and compriſeth the other Names of Praiſe and Commendation;) and to the contrary Life and Practice the Names of Odiouſneſs and Diſgrace, of Infamy and Diſpraiſe belong: with reſpect whereunto many Philoſophers have well defin'd Virtue and Vice: (x) For what is diſpraiſable for it ſelf, is upon that account named Vice, ſaith Cicero. (y) The good of Honeſty is that which maketh them praiſe-worthy, that have this good worthy of praiſe. (z) Evil practice is every deſervedly infamous practice. But the Operations of Virtue they call (a) the laudable Operations. To underſtand what is Virtue and what is Vice, a great Philoſopher preſcribeth a young Man this method: (b) Conſider what ſort of Men it is, that you praiſe, when you are unbyaſs'd with any Affection: Is it the Juſt or the Unjuſt? The Juſt. Is it the Temperate or Intemperate? The Temperate. Is it the Continent or Incontinent? The Continent. So what the Hebrew Doctors call (c) מדה טובה good Quality or Property, Interpreters render laudable Virtue, and the Muhammedans inquire, (d) Whence is it, that Actions are accounted worthy of praiſe or diſpraiſe? Virtue in the definitive Notion of it is The laudable practice, and thence it is, that all Mankind would be in ſome ſort reputed virtuous; (e) for who is there that would not ſeem beneficent? that doth not deſire to be accounted Good in the midſt of all his atrocious Villainies and Injuries? that doth not put ſome colour of right upon thoſe things that he hath done moſt outrageouſly?

As the good Life and Practice is the laudable, ſo it is the excellent and felicitative, which is another definitive Notion of it. For unleſs it is ſomething excellent and eximious, it is not praiſe-worthy; upon which account ordinary ſelf-regard for our own Happineſs is not Virtue. (f) Quid enim magnifici eſt, ſe amare, ſibi parcere, ſibi acquirere? To love one's ſelf, to ſpare one's ſelf, to get to one's ſelf, what is there eximious in ſo doing? The good Life and Practice which (as being the Beneficial) is felicitative unto Men and unto God (ſo far as he is capable of being benefited) is alſo our true and only felicitative Life. (g) Εὐτυχίαν ἄλλην ἀρετῆς ἡγῇ βελτίω; think-eſt thou, that there is any Felicity better than Virtue? Plato diſputeth in his firſt Alcibiades, οὐκ οἷόν τε, ἐὰν μή τις σώφρων ϗ ἀγαθὸς ᾖ, εὐδαίμονα εἶναι· It is not poſſible, that any ſhould be happy, unleſs he be prudent and good.

The good Life and Practice is alſo The honourable and comfortable (which is another definitive Notion of it) agreeably to the two grand Neceſſaries for Man; for Man muſt have an honourable and comfortable Being. A Dignity there is in Virtue (h) which is one ſort of Pulchritude, and which maketh it honourable. It exempteth its poſſeſſors from being the vile Perſons and doing the vile things, (i) ſaveth from the bad and ſad things, affordeth other-kins Comforts than the fœda peccandi ſolatia, there is in it an immenſity of what is good and comfortable and nothing that is not good and comfortable. Such Virtue which is Vital Sanctity is the divine and unvile kind of good and goodneſs, the comprehenſion of thoſe ſubſtantial vital Goods, that are ineffably comfortable.

The good Life and Practice that is the well-doing is alſo the well-being of Rationals and their true Perfection, (k) ἀκρότας ϗ τελειότας τᾶς ἀνθρώπω φύσιος, the ſummity and perfection of Man's Nature, as the Pythagoreans have ſtiled it. (l) As all Beings have their Perfection by their proper Virtue, which is their Nature rais'd to its Summity (ſharpneſs of Sight is the Virtue of the Eye and the Nature of the Eye rais'd to its Summity; quickneſs of hearing is the Virtue of the Ear and the Nature of the Ear rais'd to its Summity; Velocity is the Virtue of the Feet and their Nature rais'd to its Summity:) So the proper Virtue of Man is the Nature of Man rais'd to its Summity and chief Perfection.

The good Life and Practice muſt not be thought meerly a publick Self-convenience (that is neceſſary for Men only becauſe of the Neceſſity of their Affairs) but it may be defin'd The doing what is ſimply and abſolutely convenient, as Cicero ſaith, (m) Sapientia eſt conveniens actio, Wiſdom is a doing what is conveinent; (n) recta & conſona, the things that are right and conſonant. Malum eſt ipſa inconvenientia, Evil is inconvenience it ſelf, (o) ſaith S. Auſtin. (p) As a Stage-player muſt have (not any, but) a certain Action, and a Dancer muſt have (not any, but) a certain Motion: So a Man muſt live (not any, but) a certain kind of Life, which we call Convenient and Conſentaneous.

VII. The Beauteous-Beneficial Life and Practice conſider'd as that which ought to be, is Righteouſneſs (Uncriminality and Anti-wickedneſs) which is a threefold comprehenſion of Duty, Duty as to God, to others and to our ſelves; which threefold comprehenſion of Duty the Apoſtle's words are commonly thought to ſignifie, Tit. 2. 12. We ſhould live Soberly, Righteouſly and Godly. Piety or Religion (ſtrictly ſo called) is a Syſtem of the Beauteous-Beneficial Life and Practice towards God; Juſtice and Charity towards Men is a Syſtem of the Beauteous-Beneficial Practice towards others; and Sobriety is a Syſtem of the Beauteous-Beneficial Practice as to our ſelves. This whole Duty of Man and Univerſal Righteouſneſs is nothing elſe but the ſeveral Branches of the Beau- teous-

(x) Quod enim vituperabile eſt per ſeipſum, ideo ipſo vitium nominatum puto. Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

(y) Λέγεσθαι δὲ τὸ καλὸν, τὸ ἐπαινετοὺς παρεχόμενον τοὺς ἔχοντας ἀγαθὸν ἐπαίνου ἄξιον. Laert. in Zenon.

(z) Κακοεργία ἐστὶ πᾶσα πρᾶξις ἄτιμος. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 12. c. 35.

(a) Τὰς ἐπαινετὰς ἐνεργείας. Stob. Ecl. Eth. p. 166.

(b) Ὅρα τίνας αὐτὸς ἐπαινεῖς ὅταν δίχα πάθους τινὰς ἐπαινῇς· πότερα τοὺς δικαίους, ἢ τοὺς ἀδίκους; τοὺς δικαίους. πότερον τοὺς σώφρονας, ἢ τοὺς ἀκολάστους; τοὺς σώφρονας. τοὺς ἐγκρατεῖς δ᾽ ἢ τοὺς ἀκρατεῖς; τοὺς ἐγκρατεῖς. Epict. diſſ. l. 3. c. 1.

(c) Coſri, p. 15.

(d) Pocock. Spec. p. 206.

(e) Quis eſt, qui non beneficus videri velit? qui non inter ſcelera & injurias opinionem bonitatis affectet? qui non ipſis quæ impotentiſſimè fecit, ſpeciem aliquam induat recti? Sen. de Benef. l. 4. c. 17.

(f) Sen. ibid. c. 14.

(g) Himer. ap. Phot. cod. 243. col. 1068.

(h) Cic. de off. l. 1. de Fin. l. 2.

(i) Ἐπιθυμίας ἀπαλλαγείσης εὔδιος ἡ ψυχὴ ϗ γαληνιῶσα γίνεται. J. Mart. paræn.

(k) Euryph. Pythag.

(l) Metop. Pythag.

(m) De Fin. l. 3.

(n) Coſri, p. 252.

(o) De Mor. Manich. c. 8.

(p) Ut hiſtrioni actio, ſaltatori motus, non quivis, ſed certus quidam eſt datus: ſic vita agenda eſt certo genere quodam, non quolibet: quod genus conveniens, conſentaneumque dicimus. Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

teous-Beneficial Life conſider'd as it is (q) τὰ δέοντα πράσσειν, a doing what ought to be, and muſt neceſſarily be in reſpect of well-being, well-doing, and well-done. It is Righteouſneſs therefore, and is conſider'd as ſuch by thoſe Chriſtian Writers, that ſay, (r) omne virtutis officium eſt non peccare (s) ſine ſcelere ac ſine macula vivere. The whole of Virtue is, that we ſin not, that we live without Wickedneſs and without Spot. So to live honeſtly in the Senſe of the Science of Sanctity (Heb. 13. 18.) is to live without vice or crime, which is the ſame with Righteouſneſs and with the Beauteous-Beneficial life and practice, which is the ſame with the Good life and practice. From which identity of notices it is not hard, to reſolve a celebrated Queſtion in Morality, touching What is the rule and meaſure of Good and Evil, Juſt and Unjuſt. For Righteouſneſs is the rule and meaſure of Practice, all intelligent Agents muſt be regulated by it (and what is repugnant to it, is neceſſarily Unrighteouſneſs, Sin and Iniquity:) but of Righteouſneſs there is not properly any rule or meaſure ſave only its own nature and notion, which is the Beauteous-Beneficial life and practice conſider'd as that which ought to be (t) ἁ γὰρ ἀρετὰ στάθμαν ἔχει τὸ δέον, καὶ ἐστὶ τῶ δέοντος ἕξις, for Virtue hath a rule That which ought to be, and it is the habit of what ought to be. This is the rule and meaſure, which Righteouſneſs is, and which may be called The rule and meaſure of Righteouſneſs conſtitutively ſuch: but beſides this there may be a rule and meaſure of Righteouſneſs evidentially and declaratively ſuch. The common opinion is (u) that right reaſon is the rule and meaſure of Good and Evil. Which may ſignifie, that the diſcernments and dictates of Reaſon are only evidentially and declaratively the rule and meaſure of good and evil, as ſenſe and reaſon are only evidentially and declaratively the rule and meaſure of what is true and falſe. But it may ſignify, that the diſcernments and dictates of Reaſon are conſtitutively the rule and meaſure of what is Good and Evil; as a poſitive Law is (in matters of poſitive Inſtitution) conſtitutively the rule and meaſure of Good and Evil. In this latter ſenſe the right diſcernments and dictates of Reaſon are not the rule and meaſure of Good and Evil, as they are not in ſuch ſenſe the rule and meaſure of good Air or good Medicines. As things are not true, ſo neither are they right and good, becauſe they are conformable to Reaſon: but Reaſon is therefore right and good, becauſe it is conformable to the things that are ſo. The Schools therefore have not form'd this their Definition aright (w) That which is agreeable to a rational intelligent Nature as it is ſuch, is good; That which is diſſentaneous and diſagreeable from it, is evil. For good is not to be accommodated to a rational Nature, but the rational Nature is to be accommodated unto Good, and its Reaſon is then right, when it rightly diſcerneth between Good and Evil. Some ſuppoſe, that the happineſs of the ſyſtem of Rationals is the ſole end and meaſure of Good: but this Opinion maketh Virtue, to be Policy rather than Virtue. A Facultas ἀγαθοειδὴς, ſuper-intellectual Boniform Faculty and the unintelligent Senſe reſiding therein, (x) is alſo made the rule and meaſure of Good and Evil: but this is a purely Platonic Crotchet (the Platonic Unity) not ſo good as Policy. The only rule and meaſure of the Good and the Evil is this definitive Notion The Beauteous-Beneficial Practice and the various means of diſcerning what is ſo, but the common Happineſs of the whole rightly underſtood may be counted the meaſure of it, as it is Beneficial.

(q) Theag. Pythag.

(r) Lactan. l. 6. c. 5.

(s) Ibid. l. 5. c. 9.

(t) Archyt. Pythag.

(u) Sen. Ep. 66. Ariſtot. Eth. Nicom. l. 6. c. 1. Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 1. c. 1. Annot. ad S. 10 Sharrock de off. c. 2. N. 2. Dr. H. More op. Phil. Vol. 1. p. 588, 589.

(w) Vaſqu. l. 2. Diſp. 58. c. 2. Coninck. de Moral. Diſp. 3. Dub. 1. p. 31.

(x) D. H. M. Ench. Eth. l. 2. c. 9.

VIII. A Miſtake of greater importance than any of theſe (touching the rule and meaſure of Good and Evil) is that of Szydlovius; that the arbitrarious Will of God is conſtitutively the adequate rule and meaſure of Good and Evil, Juſt and Unjuſt, and that nothing is Good or Evil, but becauſe it is commanded or forbidden. With this nefarious Dogma a learned Writer but a blundering Contemplator of the Law of Nature ſo far ſymbolizeth, that he ſticketh not to affirm, (y) Juſtum nihil eſt non conſtitutia lege, nothing is juſt or unjuſt of it ſelf, until ſome Law of God or Man doth ſupervene. God cannot do an unjuſt thing; becauſe whatſoever he willeth or doeth, is therefore juſt, becauſe he willeth and doeth it, his Will being the meaſure of Juſtice. It is but a weak diſtinction, to affirm, ſome things to be forbidden by God, becauſe they are unlawful, and ſome to be unlawful, becauſe they are forbidden. For this laſt part of the diſtinction taketh in all that is unlawful in the World, and therefore the other is a dead Member and may be lopp'd off. So Occham affirmeth againſt the common Sentence of the Schools (as his manner is) nullus eſt actus malus niſi quatenus à Deo prohibitus eſt, & qui non poteſt fieri bonus ſi à Deo præcipiatur, & è converſo: Every thing is good or bad according as it is commanded or forbidden by God and no otherwiſe. Theſe Sayings are attended with a Self-contradiction, (z) that it is eternally and indiſpenſably neceſſary, that we love God, and that he cannot command us to hate him: And 'tis but reaſonable, that they ſhould contradict themſelves, that contradict common Senſe, and contemplate Goodneſs at the ſame rate of extravagance, that ſome others contemplate Truth, who affirm, (a) that God indeed doth neceſſarily conceive thoſe Truths, which immediately relate to himſelf, his Nature, Eſſence and Attributes: He was never indifferent as to theſe; but as for all other Truths which are not God himſelf, theſe wholly depend upon the moſt free and arbitrary determination of his own Will, and are therefore only true, becauſe he appointed them to be ſo; and that there might, if God had ſo pleaſed, either have been none of theſe at all, or elſe quite different from what they now are. If Truth is of ſo indeterminate a nature Good muſt be as arbitrarious as ſome ſay, (b) that by the meer light of Nature without Divine Revelation it cannot be made appear, that there is any difference between Vice and Virtue, although we were aſſur'd, that there is a God. That nothing is juſt and good, but that only which he commandeth, and for no other reaſon but becauſe he doth ſo. They that diſcourſe at this rate are either extremely deficient in their Reaſon or their Religion: either they underſtand not Theiſm or believe it not; for their Maxims are the grand Arcana of Atheiſm. Protagoras and thoſe of his Notion, as Plato ſaith in his Theætetus, (c) will build upon this, and place the firmitude of their cauſe in it, that none of the things juſt and unjuſt, holy and unholy hath by Nature any Eſſence of its own. The reſtraints of Virtue and Honeſty in Plato's Gorgias are called by Callicles, τὰ καλλωπίσματα τὰ παρὰ φύσιν, ſpecious things that are beſides Nature, (d) which was the Senſe of the Epicureans, of the Scepticks and of Ariſtippus alſo (no better than an Atheiſt) who ſaid, that nothing is juſt by nature but only νόμῳ καὶ ἔθει, by Law and Cuſtom. Law is ſuppos'd, to make Juſtice, whereas without antecedent Juſtice, it is impoſſible, that there can be any made Law. For no Law can be made but by one that hath Right to be obey'd

(y) Bp. Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 2 c. 1. n. 4, 52, 53.

(z) Ibid. Rule 9. n. 12.

(a) Poiret. cogit. rationde Deo. l 3. c. 10. Des Cartes Ep. 37. par. 1.

(b) Cuper. Arcan. Atheism. l. 2. c. 10.

(c) Ἐν τοῖς δικαίοις καὶ ἀδίκοις καὶ ὁσίοις καὶ ἀνοσίοις ἐθέλουσιν ἰσχυρίζεσθαι, ὡς οὐκ φύσει αὐτῶν οὐδὲν οὐσίαν ἑαυτοῦ ἔχον.

(c) Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 7.

bey'd and to whom Obedience is due. Right and Due therefore (and conſequently juſt and unjuſt) is neceſſarily antecedent to any made Law. If nothing is unrighteous but by a made Law, Mankind muſt be conſider'd as perfectly at Liberty and unoblig'd antecedently to that Law; and if we ſuppoſe them, to be perfectly at Liberty and unoblig'd, then that Law could not oblige them; for no Command or Prohibition can oblige them to Obedience, that are Perſons perfectly at liberty and unoblig'd. Nor can they oblige themſelves by any Pacts or Covenants of their own making; for if there be nothing in its own Nature unjuſt, it cannot be in its own Nature an unjuſt thing, to break their own Pacts and Covenants, but they may unmake them, as faſt as they make them. And conſequently if we ſuppoſe them, to be once perfectly at liberty and unoblig'd, they muſt for ever continue ſo, if there be nothing unjuſt in its own Nature. If nothing is eſſentially and in its own Nature Unrighteous, there is nothing ſo bad which God may not do (lye and deny himſelf, condemn the Obedient and reward the Diſobedient) there is nothing ſo wicked which God may not Command (Atheiſm, Blaſphemy, Demonolatry, Fraud, Sodomy, Cruelty) a Syſtem of Moral Truths, Virtues and Duties might be made by Divine Appointment juſt contrary to thoſe that are now ſuch; and by arbitrary Will and Appointment all manner of Wickedneſs would be Righteouſneſs, Good would be Evil and Evil Good, and Irreligion would be Religion, (as Occham ſuppoſeth :) But if Religion and Virtue was thus deſtroy'd, God himſelf would be deſtroy'd; for ἄνευ ἀρετῆς θεὸς ὄνομα μόνον, without Virtue God is but a Name. If God is eſſentially Good and Holy, a good and holy Nature and Life is eſſential to God. If God is eſſentially of the good and holy kind (the God-kind) a good and holy kind of Nature is eſſential to God. Which good and holy kind of Nature and Life cannot be made ſuch by an arbitrary Determination of the Divine Will; therefore it is eſſentially ſuch (both as it is in God and as it is in the Children of God) and conſequently there is the good kind of Life and Practice, and the evil kind of Life and Practice, and theſe are not meer arbitrary Determinations of the Divine Will. The ſeveral Attributes of Benignity, Mercy, Juſtice, Veracity, Faithfulneſs (and ſuch more) as they are in God, are that which is eſſentially and in its own Nature Good; therefore they are ſo, as they are in Man.

If God by his free Appointment did not make this Propoſition to be a Truth, a Being abſolutely perfect is neceſſarily Exiſtent, it is a fond Imagination, to ſuppoſe, that by his free Appointment the like Self-evident Propoſitions are made Truths. Rationes rerum, the abſtract Natures, Eſſences, Species and Ideas of things which are in intelligent Mind, are not firſt appointed and determin'd by the Divine Will, and then known by the Divine Underſtanding (for how ſhould the Divine Mind determine thoſe things, which it knoweth nothing of?) Nor are they of free and arbitrary Determination: But intelligent Mind neceſſarily formeth them (elſe there could be no Underſtanding things) and upon this account they are alſo neceſſary; every thing poſſible is neceſſarily of a certain proper intelligible Eſſence, Nature and Notion. For ſeeing it is the (intelligible) Eſſence of ſuch a thing, the thing is neceſſarily and immutably of that intelligible Nature and Notion. In theſe intelligible Natures and Eſſences the Mind clearly and diſtinctly perceiveth ſeveral Eſſentialities, (which becauſe they are Eſſentialities) are not only Truths, but neceſſary and immutable Truths, and therefore may juſtly be called Æternæ Veritates, Eternal Truths. As for Inſtance; the Mind clearly diſcerneth, that this is an Eſſentiality of the whole, to be bigger than the part; that this is an Eſſentiality of the Cauſe, to be in order of Nature before the Effect; that this is an Eſſentiality of a plain Triangle, to have its three Angles equal to two right ones; theſe are therefore neceſſary, immutable and eternal Verities. But whatever the Mind clearly perceiveth, to be repugnant to the Eſſentialities of things, that ſhe calleth impoſſible and contradictious (contradictiouſneſs is repugnant both to Reality and Conception) which determineth the extent of omnipotent Power; for it can do nothing contradictious and impoſſible. Thus much common Sence dictateth concerning God: But it doth not ſuppoſe, that the Rationes Rerum, Rationes Veri & Boni, are independent upon God. They are not to be conſider'd as meerly the Eſſences of things, or as meerly the Reaſons of True and Good; for they are the meerly intelligible Eſſences of things, and the meerly intelligible Reaſons of True and Good, which as ſuch and ſo far as they are ſuch, manifeſtly depend upon intelligent Mind, and therefore depend upon God; for there is no other intelligent Mind, but either the Mind of God or created intelligent Mind, which is deriv'd from his All-comprehending intelligent Mind. And ſeeing this World of Intelligibles are (more or leſs) neceſſarily form'd by every intelligent Mind, there is neceſſarily a difference between Vice and Virtue by the meer light of Nature.

IX. Bonum Honeſtum (or Virtue) is not a meer Name, but hath its proper Nature, which is a Specific Nature. This Specific Nature or Idea is in Intelligent Mind and is the Beauteous-beneficial Practice, which this Name the Good denoteth, as we have largely prov'd from the Signification of it. So that it is as certain, that this Name the Good (Bonum Honeſtum) denoteth this Specific Nature τὸ καλοκ'ἀγαθὸν, the Beauteous-beneficial Practice, as that this Name Man denoteth this Specific Nature the Rational Animal, or that the Square ſignifieth the Quadrilateral-equilateral-rectangular Figure. The Good therefore in Morality, as being that which is eſſentially and in its own Nature the Beauteous-beneficial Practice, is that which is eſſentially and in its own Nature that which is the Right and Good; and conſequently it is that which is neceſſarily, immutably and eternally ſo. (e) Order, Meaſure, Comelineſs, Pulchritude, Elegance and convenience of Parts, which no Animal but Man diſcerneth, Reaſon transferreth to the Mind, and thinketh, that they ought to be obſerved there, and the obſervance of them is that which maketh Bonum Honeſtum, which is that which in its own Nature is laudable. If therefore Beauty, Pulchritude, Order, Meaſure, Congruity, Proportion, are not wholly of arbitrarious Determination and Inſtitution, nor variable at Pleaſure, but of a fix'd determinate Nature; if in Pulchritude of Body there muſt be a certain Figure, Order and Symmetry of Parts; if in a good and virtuous Soul there muſt be ſuch an orderly Subordination of Parts, as there is in a well-order'd City; hence it appeareth, that the Good in Morality is that which is eſſentially and in its own Nature ſuch, and is not a matter of arbitrary Determination. In ſeveral inſtances indeed Mankind are of different Sentiments touching what is graceful and handſom, regular and beauteous, (f) yet none can deny, that the natural Poſition and Situation of the parts of the Face is beauteous, and that a diſtortion of them is hideouſly ill-favour'd and of an horrid Aſpect. Such Viciofities and Deformities of the Body are an umbratile reſemblance of the Viciofities and Deformities of the Mind and Life. And as the gentiler ſort of People are extremely abhorrent from any Turpitude, Defilement and Deformity of their Body: So in the truly virtuous there is ſomething that is pure (g) ϗ ὐδ᾽ ὁπωσῦν ἀξιῶν ῥυπαίνεσθαι, that will not endure at all to be defiled. (h) Nè capias, inquit continentia, unde non decet, nè comedas, ne bibas; ſuſtine, tolera, denique moriare potius quàm quicquam indecori committas. Vice and Wickedneſs is an horrid Deformity, that the Virtuous will not touch with.

(e) Unum hoc Animal (Homo) ſentit quid ſit ordo, quid ſit quod deceat in factis dictiſque, qui modus. Itaque eorum ipſorum quæ aſpectu ſentiuntur, nullum alıud animal pulchritudinem, venuſtatem, convenientiam partium ſentit, quam ſimilitudinem, natura, ratioque ab oculis ad animum transferens, multò etiam magis pulchritudinem, conſtantiam, ordinem in conſiliis factiſque conſervandum putat caveque nè quid indecorè, effeminative faciat; tùm in omnibus & opinionibus & factis nè quid libidinosè aut faciat aut cogitet. Quibus ex rebus conflatur & efficitur id, quod quærimus honeſtum; quod etiamſi nobilitatum non ſit, tamen honeſtum ſit, quodque verè dicimus, etiamſi à nullo laude-

The Good in Morality as it is the Beneficial kind of Practice, is that which is eſſentially and in its own Nature Good, and is not of arbitrary Determination and Inſtitution. (i) Charity, Peace, Brotherly Love, are good, not only becauſe God hath commanded them, or willed us to follow them: But God by his Law doth Will and Command us to follow after theſe things, becauſe they were always good, even before he willed or commanded us to follow them. The time will never be, wherein Innocency, Brotherly Love, Charity, Peace and Loving-kindneſs ſhall be as diſpleaſing to God as Murther, Hatred, Malice, Cruelty and Uncharitableneſs hitherto always have been. He cannot Enact a Law either to authorize theſe or the like Practices, or to prohibit the contrary Virtues. If Men ſhould make ſuch a Law, it would be a framing Miſchief by a Law. Pſal. 94. 20. If a City maketh Laws and Statutes, which ſeem to them profitable and beneficial, yet really they may be miſchievous and pernicious (as Plato argueth againſt Protagoras;) for things are not profitable and hurtful meerly in our Conceit and Opinion, but they are really and in their own Nature ſuch, (k) and a Law cannot make things noxious and poiſonous, to be wholſome and ſalutary. Theft, Adultery, falſifying Wills and Teſtaments (Crimes forbidden by the Moral Law) can never be made innocent or ſalutary by any Votes or Statutes; for in their own Nature they are pernicious; as the contrary Virtue and the Good in Morality is in its own Nature Beauteous-beneficial, whence it is that which is in its own Nature laudable. (l) For in its own Nature it is the Good, which no more conſiſteth in Opinion than Beatitude conſiſteth in it. (m) Nor doth the virtue of a Tree or of an Horſe conſiſt in Opinion, but in the Nature of the thing. The virtue of the Eye or of a Watch is their Beauteous-beneficial Nature and Properties, which is their Goodneſs and Perfection, and their Aptitude for their End and Uſe, and no other Nature or Properties but the Beauteous-beneficial can conſtitute a good Eye or a good Watch (which therefore are indiſpenſably requiſite in the Eye and in a Watch:) So the Virtue of intelligent Agents is the Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice, which is their Goodneſs and Perfection, and their Aptitude for their End and Uſe, and no other Life and Practice can poſſibly conſtitute them good or good Agents, that is, the Well-doers, not the Evil-doers. Whence in the Nature and Reaſon of the thing it is indiſpenſably requiſite in all intelligent Agents, and is to them matter of Law or Obligation. For Law or Obligation (in a large but very proper Senſe) is nothing elſe but a Non licet, or a Boundary to Licence. As we have ſeen from Ariſtotle ὁ νόμος τὸ μέσον, Meaſure is Law. Ἡ τάξις νόμος, Concinnity of Order is Law. So Plato ſaith in his Gorgias. (n) As the ordinate Diſpoſitions of the Body are called Health: So this Name Law and Legitimate belongeth to the ordinate Diſpoſitions and Ornaments of the Soul (whence Men become Legitimate and Decorous) which are Juſtice and Temperance. The Rules of Muſick by which the meaſures of Singing and Playing are determin'd (o) were called by the Greeks Νόμοι, Laws, from thoſe Bounds which the Muſicians of old preſcrib'd for the tuning of Voices and Inſtruments, they obſerving in every Nomus τὴν οἰκείαν τάσιν, its proper Intention. Νόμοι προσηγορεύθησαν, ἐπειδὴ ὐκ ἐξῆν παραβῆναι καθ᾽ ἕκαστον νενομισμένον εἶδος τῆς τάσεως, they were called Nomi (Laws) becauſe in every one of them it was not lawful to tranſgreſs the preſcrib'd ſort of Intention. If the Old Muſicians had preſcrib'd no Rules of Muſick, yet there would be unavoidably Laws of Muſick in their own Nature ſuch, without the obſervation whereof there could be no Singing or Playing well: So in the Diſcipline of Morality, if no Law was made by a Superiour Authority, yet ſome Practices would be notic'd to the Mind as Well-doing that cannot be left undone without heinous Criminality; and others would be notic'd as Evil-doing that cannot be done without heinous Criminality. The things that ought to be done, muſt be done, for the not doing them is to be villainous, diſhoneſt, wicked and unrighteous; and for the ſame reaſon the things that ought not to be done, muſt not be done; and being thus notic'd to the Mind theſe Notices are neceſſarily Laws as being Boundaries to Licenſe. (p) Would I write the Name of Dio, as I will? No: But I am taught, to Will, that it be written, as it ought. So in Muſical Matters and in all things, wherein there is Art and Science. Elſe it would not be material, to know a thing (how to do it well) if it be accommodated to every one's Will. It would be to no purpoſe, to have or learn the Science of living well, if as ſome ſay, (q) Jus eſt nihil aliud tur, laudabile eſſe natura. Cic. de Off. l. 1.

---

(f) An corporis pravitates ſi erunt perinſignes, habebunt aliquid offenſionis, animi deformitas non habebit? Idem de Leg. l. 1. An eſt ullum majus malum turpitudine? Quæ ſi in formitate corporis habeat aliquid offenſionis, quanta illa depravatio & fœditas turpificati animi debet videri? Idem de Off. l. 3.

(g) Plutarch. de prof. p. 85.

(h) V. Sharrock de Off. c. 2. N. 9.

(i) Dr. Jackson B 10. ch. 39. p. m. 3180.

(k) Quod ſi populorum juſſis, ſi principium decretis, ſi ſententiis judicum jura conſtituerentur, jus eſſet latrocinari, jus adulterare, jus Teſtamenta falſa ſupponere, ſi hæc ſuffragiis aut ſcitis multitudinis probarentur. Quæ ſi tanta potentia ſtultorum ſententiis atque juſſis ut eorum ſuffragiis rerum natura vertatur, cur non ſanciunt, ut quæ mala pernicioſaque ſunt, habeantur pro bonis ac ſalutaribus? Cic. de Leg. l. 1.

(l) Quod laudabile bonum eſt, in ſe habeat quod laudetur, neceſſe eſt: Ipſum enim bonum non eſt in opinionibus, ſed in naturâ. Nam ni ita eſſet, beati quoque opinione eſſent, quo quid dici poteſt ſtultius? Ibid.

(m) Nec arboris nec equi virtus quæ dicitur (in quo abutimur nomine) in opinione ſita eſt, ſed in Naturâ. Ibid.

(n) Ταῖς δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς τάξεσι ϗ κοσμήσεσι νόμιμόν τε ϗ νόμος (ὄνομα εἶναι,) ὅθεν καὶ νόμιμοι γίγνονται καὶ κόσμιοι. Ταῦτα δ᾽ ἐστι δικαιοσύνη τε καὶ σωφροσύνη.

(o) Plutarch. de muſic. p. 1132, 1133.

(p) Βούλομαι γράφειν ὡς θέλω τὸ Δίωνος ὄνομα; ὐ, ἀλλὰ διδάσκομαι θέλειν ὡς δεῖ γράφεσθαι. Τί ἐπὶ μυσικῶν; ὡσαύτως. Τί ἐν τῷ καθόλου, ὅπου τέχνη τις ἢ ἐπιστήμη ἐστί; ὡσαύτως. Εἰ δὲ μὴ, οὐδὲν ἦν ἄξιον τὸ ἐπίστασθαί τι, εἰ τοῖς ἑκάστου βουλήσεσι προσηρμόζετο. Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 12.

(p) Reuchl. de verb. mirif. p. 17.

lud niſi quod homines volunt, Right is nothing elſe but what Men will. But Men do not aſſume to themſelves a Liberty, to write the Name of Dio, as they will; or to Sing and Play, as they pleaſe; in theſe things they learn to obſerve a certain Order and Meaſure, which is neceſſary, that what they do, may be well done (tolerably well done) which therefore is the Law of their Agency. So in Life and Practice a certain Order and Meaſure is indiſpenſably requiſite, that they may be Well-doers, which therefore is the Law of their Agency. Their Practice muſt be the Good in one Senſe, it muſt be the Beauteous-beneficial, or it cannot be the Good in the other Senſe, that which is to be lik'd. Nec cuncta licere credimus. Nothing is done, as it ought to be, unleſs it be well done, and a Mechanic Work is not well done, unleſs it is Beauteous-beneficial; the Works and Doings of Men therefore ought to be of that Character.

Juſtitia in ſuo cuique tribuendo. Cic. de Fin. l. 5. This Juſtice is ad alterum, and is called by Ariſtotle ἀλλότριον ἀγαθόν.

X. The Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice is Righteouſneſs not only in reſpect of the Agent (as being what he ought to do) but in reſpect of the Objects as being that which ought to be done to them, and a giving them what is their Right and Due, according to the uſual Notion of Juſtice, which is Jus ſuum cuique tribuere. This Life and Practice therefore may not unfitly be called the Jural Life and Practice (the Oppoſite to the injurious) which being a Debt unto all is therefore the good of Duty unto all, and ſuch Duty which is not of arbitrary Appointment, but is natural and neceſſary Juſtice (that which in its own Nature is Right and Due, Juſt and Good) the Rights and Dues of the Univerſe of Rationals being Neceſſary, Immutable and Eternal. For ſuch are the Rights and Dues of God, of the natural Relations of Parents and Children, and that the Rights and Dues of Mankind in general are ſuch, will appear by conſidering a Summary of the Philoſophers Diſcipline of Virtue. (r) Moral Philoſophy in the firſt place adjuſteth the Rates of things, allotting to all things that meaſure of Eſteem and Valuation which belongeth to them: And in the next place it taketh care, that the bent of the Soul about them (wherewith the Actions muſt Accord) be ordinate, proportionate and agreeable to the Dignity of the things. Whence the virtuous Life neceſſarily becometh Beauteous (for Order, Meaſure, Congruity, Proportion and Symmetry are Beauteous things, and the rectitude of the Soul in duely valuing and affecting the things Divine and Excellent and duely depreciating and diſaffecting the things that are vile, and of ſmall concern and conſideration, is alſo a nobleneſs of Nature, an excellency and pulchritude of the Soul) and thence the virtuous Man reapeth this ineſtimable Utility and Benefit, he eſcapeth thoſe inveiglements, whereby Men are drawn to the vile and villainous maleficial Practices. (s) Ex vitioſis enim de rebus opinicnibus velut è corruptis fontibus maxima pars facinorum ſcatet. For the vicious Opinions that Men have (of ſecular Honour, Riches and Pleaſure) are the Fountain of the greateſt part of flagitious Practices. With great Reaſon therefore Philoſophy inſiſteth and inculcateth (t) to give every thing its Dignity, to act according to the Dignity of every thing, to uſe and treat and carry our ſelves towards every thing according to its dignity; for every thing (u) hath its proper Dignity and congruous Meaſure. Which Precepts of Philoſophy touching things are chiefly and primarily applicable to Perſons, that are capable of right and wrong (otherwiſe than things are) of having Juſtice and Injuſtice done them, that are deeply affected with Wrongs and Injuries, and that reckon contumely and vilipendency in their Injuries the Quinteſſence and Soul of them. Towards Man therefore πράσσειν τὰ κατ' ἀξίαν, do thoſe things that are according to his Dignity, which is neceſſarily his right and due Valuation, and therefore ſuch a Valuation of him is neceſſarily his Right and Due. Accordingly he is ſo valued in the Beauteous-beneficial Life, which conſiſteth in obſerving an Equality between Man and Man, another Man and one's ſelf, without any inordinate partiality and crooked warping to our own ſide. If another Man muſt be rated according to his Dignity, he muſt be ſo rated compar'd with Self, and therefore muſt be of Impartially-equal conſideration and regard, and muſt have an Impartially-equal ſhare in the diſtribution of our Eſteem and Affection, and his equal Worthineſs thereof muſt be judg'd of without partiality (elſe he is not rated according to his Dignity compar'd with Self) and conſequently another Man muſt be ἄλλος αὐτὸς, another Self. He is ſuch in Conſtitution and Condition (for in the main one Man is the Live-image and Picture of another) and it is neceſſarily his Right and Due, to be ſuch in our internal and external Practice (our Regard, Eſteem, Will and Affection and external Actions;) theſe great Laws therefore, whatſoever ye would that Men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them, thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thy ſelf (which are the Summary of Juſtice and Charity to our Neighbour) are in the Nature and Reaſon of the thing matter of Duty and Juſtice, of Law and Obligation. Such is the Gratitude of a Beneficiary towards his Benefactor (who hath merited it, and whoſe Right and Due it is) and in the Nature and Reaſon of the thing it is the Right and Due of a Righteous Perſon (and therefore matter of Law) to be juſtified, not condemn'd. To be free from any intended hurt, is neceſſarily the Right and Due of an innocent Perſon, and is in the Nature and Reaſon of the thing matter of Law. To hate him therefore and bear him Ill-will, to have any evil Paſſions againſt him, evil Thoughts of him, malignly to Cenſure him, proudly to deſpiſe him, to ſpeak againſt his Credit, to do him prejudice in Soul, Body, or his Poſſeſſions, is againſt his Right and Due, and is eſſentially and in its own Nature Injury and Injuſtice. And in general we muſt pronounce touching every Man, that whatever cannot be deny'd him without repugnance to the Beauteous-beneficial Practice (w) is neceſſarily his Right and Due. Whence Rights and Dues accrue unto Men by Contract, and the ſeveral ſorts of Contracts amongſt Men are ſo many Settlements of Rights and Dues, becauſe no Man may break Faith (or be faithleſs in his Dealings) which is a groſs Repugnance to the Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice. So an Alms is a ſort of Due to an honeſt poor Man (Prov. 3. 27.) for it cannot be deny'd him without plain Repugnance to the Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice. So if a Man denieth Neceſſaries to his own Soul and Body, if he doth not order them well, and keep them in Chaſtity and Temperance, if he proſtituteth, defileth, hurteth, diſeaſeth and deſtroyeth them, if he taketh not an ordinate care of his Welfare, of his Reputation and Maintenance in this Life and of his future Felicity, his Practice is a Repugnance to the Beauteous-beneficial, he denieth to himſelf what he may not deny to himſelf, and what cannot be deny'd to any one of Mankind without being injurious and unjuſt towards him.

(r) Philoſophia moralis pars prima eſt, inſpectio ſuum cuique tribuens, & æſtimans quanto quidque dignum ſit, maximè utilis. Quid enim eſt tam neceſſarium, quàm pretia rebus imponere? Secunda de impetu: Tertia de actionibus. Primum enim eſt, ut quanti quidque ſit judices: Secundum, ut impetum ad illa capias ordinatum temperatumque: Tertium, ut inter impetum tuum actionemque conveniat, ut in omnibus iſtis tibi ipſi conſentias. Tunc enim vita ſibi concors eſt, ubi actio non deſtituit impetum, impetus ex dignitate rei concipitur, perinde remiſſus acriorve prout illa digna eſt peti. Sen. Ep. 89. Gat. in Ant. p. 158.

(s) Eraſm. Inſtit. Principis. p. 152.

(t) Τὴν ἀξίαν ἑκάστῳ ἀποδιδόναι, πράσσειν τὰ κατ' ἀξίαν, χρῆσθαι ἑκάστῳ κατ' ἀξίαν. Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 23. M. Ant. l. 8. S. 29. l. 12. S. 1.

(u) Ἰδίαν ἀξίαν ἔχει καὶ συμμετρίαν. M. Ant. l. 4. S. 32. Gat. Not. p. 115.

(w) Grotius ſaith otherwiſe. De J. B. ac P. l. 2. c. 11. S. 3.

(x) M. Ant. l 12. S. 24.

We ſhould do all things no otherwiſe (x) ἢ ὡς ἂν ἡ δίκη αὐτὴ ἐνήργησεν, than as if Juſtice it ſelf did them, Juſtice regardeth things as they are in themſelves without partial regard to this or that Perſon. If upon a true Judgment of things another appeareth, to deſerve my Love of Complacence, Praiſe and Honour, as much as my ſelf, Juſtice ſaith, he ought to have an equal ſhare and portion of it. If the Temporal and Eternal Concerns of another be equally valuable with mine own, I am not equally (or well) affected if they be not of impartially-equal Regard with me. So the good of two being twice as much as the good of one, and the good of ten being ten times as much as the good of one, is to be (ordinarily) ſo far preferr'd before the good of one. Juſtice ſaith, if an Owner leaveth his Ground uncultivated for many Years, it is fit, he ſhould loſe it; if any will not Work, neither ſhall he Eat: But what a Man getteth by his honeſt Labour and Induſtry, of Right and Due belongeth to him and is his Property. Such Dictates of Juſtice introduc'd Dominion and Property amongſt Men. For although there is much of irregularity and confuſion in Human Affairs, and Vis ordinarily prevaileth againſt Jus, yet it is not to be ſuppos'd, that Property was introduc'd amongſt Men (y) meerly by Diviſion of the Earth and by Occupancy (arbitrarious and fortuitous) or meerly (z) by poſitive Law: But upon Grounds and Reaſons of Juſtice. When a Diſh of Meat is brought to the Table, before it is cut up, it is common to all that ſit at the Table; but after it is cut up, and every Man hath taken his ſhare, then quam quiſque occupavit partem, what part one hath taken to himſelf, that is not common to the reſt, but is proper to him. But this Property is not meerly from Occupancy or Poſſeſſion, or Diviſion by conſent; it ariſeth from this Ground and Reaſon of Juſtice; to every Man that hath not forfeited it, of Right and Due belongeth (although not this or that particular ſhare, yet in general) a ſhare of the Food which the Earth affordeth; and his occupancy or ſeizure of this or that particular piece of Food at the common Table is a particular determination and limitation of his general Right and an incloſure made thereby, which none may invade without leave. This Similitude is eaſily applicable to the Original Partition of the Earth and the Accommodations thereof, and to the Introduction of Property; for antecedently thereto the Founder of the Earth had made a Donation of it to Mankind the leſſer and greater Syſtems of Mankind and particular Men alſo had their Rights and Dues; and when they divided the Earth by Occupancy (for ſo they divided it) this their Occupancy was an Incloſure made by a particular determination and limitation of their Right in general to ſome part of the Earth, and ſome of its Accommodations for their Place, Food and Raiment; nor can there be any ſuch Community of things, wherein every one muſt not have his peculiar Place and ſhare of Food and Raiment diſtinct and apart from all others. Natural and neceſſary Juſtice therefore in great degree introduced Meum and Tuum (Property of Goods) amongſt Men, and made them Owners, who (doubtleſs) have Right, to transfer their Rights and to alienate their Property by Donation or by Contract; upon which account (as well as by the Obligation of keeping Faith) Contracts become Settlements of the Rights and Dues of Men. Uſually they loſe and forfeit their Rights and Dues by a change of their Qualifications; for ſo Men forfeit their Eſtates and Lives into the Hands of Juſtice, the due objects of Favour become worthy objects of punitive Diſpleaſure; as on the contrary, he that is an apt and worthy object of punitive Severity to Day, may be a fit and due object of Clemency to Morrow. And who doth not applaud, love and honour ſuch Beauteous-beneficial Practice? (a) Nature conſtraineth us to love thoſe, in whom Liberality, Beneficence, Juſtice, Fidelity, and ſuch more Virtues appear; becauſe Bonum honeſtum, of it ſelf and for its own ſake is pleaſing, and by its Beauteouſneſs is moving and taking to the Minds of Men.

(y) Grot. ſupr. l. 2. c. 2.

(z) Seld. Mar. Clauſ. l. 1. c. 5.

(a) Vehementer amor multi dinis commovetur ipſa fama & opinione liberalitatis, benefic tiæ, juſtitiæ, fidei, omniumque e rum virtutum, quæ pertinent manſuetudinem morum ac facil tatem. Etenim illud ipſum q decorum honeſtumque dicim quia per ſe nobis placet, anim que omnium natura & ſpecie commovet, maximéque quaſi p lucet ex iis quaſi commemor virtutibus, idcirco illos, in q bus eas virtutis eſſe remur, à natura ipſa diligere cogimur. Cic. Off. l. 2.

XI. The Good in Morality that is the Beauteous-beneficial Life and Practice, and the Jural Practice is in Conjunction therewith the living Societively. (b) Τὸ δὲ εὖ ζῆν, ἐστὶ κοινωνικῶς ζῆν, To live well (the good Life) is to live ſocietively. The Obligation that is upon Rationals to this ſocietive Life and Practice as ſuch (to live in Society, and to live the good Life in Society, and to be of the ſocietive Diſpoſition and Practice) may ſeem to be of meer arbitrary Appointment, becauſe it muſt be deduc'd from the Creation of the Univerſe, which was Arbitrary. But notwithſtanding this Deduction of it, It muſt be denominated a natural and neceſſary Obligation; for although the Creation of the Univerſe was Arbitrary, yet ſuppoſing this Creation, the Creation of Rationals for Society and of the parts for the whole was not Arbitrary, but Neceſſary. In the Original Creation the Rationals that were made, were neceſſarily of Right and by Obligation God's Subjects and Servants, they were made to be his Societiſts, the Citizens of his Kingdom, the parts of this whole, and conſequently they were made for the whole, to conſtitute and conſerve it, and for the common Good thereof. Of this whole the Pagan Theologers miſtaken account of the Univerſe is an Image and Reſemblance. (c) They look'd upon the World as the common City of Gods and Men and every one as a part thereof, which naturally and neceſſarily inferreth, that we ought to prefer the common Utility before our own, as the Laws

(b) Plutarc. ad Colot. p. 1108.

(c) Mundum cenſent regi mine Deorum, eumque eſſe qu communem urbem & civita hominum & deorum, & u quemque noſtrûm ejus mundi partem. Ex quo illud na conſequitur, ut communem uti tatem noſtræ ante ponamus. enim leges omnium ſalutem prefer

gulorum ſaluti anteponunt: Sic vir bonus & ſapiens & legibus parens, & civilis Officii non ignarus, utilitati omnium plus quàm unius alicujus aut ſuæ conſulit. Nec magis vituperandus eſt proditor patriæ, quàm communis utilitatis aut ſalutis deſertor propter ſuam utilitatem aut ſalutem. Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

prefer the Welfare of all before the Welfare of any one. So Holy Men live and lay down their Lives for the intereſt of the Kingdom of God, which is the truly noble and illuſtrious Whole, and the intereſt thereof is the truly noble common Good, to which all the Parts are to co-operate and be ſubſervient and for which they have their All, as Virtue obligeth them. If they were made, to be Parts of this Whole, and to promote the Commonweal thereof, they were neceſſarily made for the Holy-ſocietive (or the God-ſocietive) Life and Practice, which is neceſſarily the Holy-ſocietive Love-practice; for without the Love-practice they are neceſſarily Unſocietive and Anti-ſocietive, and their Love-practice in the Holy Society muſt be the Holy Societive-kind of Love, which is the Divine Love, that is the true Beauteous-beneficial Practice; for the Divine Love is Divine Beauty and perfect Lovelineſs. The Holy Societive Life and Practice is alſo neceſſarily the Jural Practice towards all in their Social Capacity, the Holy-ſocietive Duty to God (univerſal Piety without which there is no living in Society with him) the Holy-ſocietive Duty to our Fellow-citizens, Fellow-ſubjects and Fellow-members (that are our Societiſts in different Relations) and the Holy-ſocietive Duty as to our ſelves, who are Parts of the Whole, whence by prejudicing our own true Perfection and Felicity we are injurious to the Whole. To all which Holy-ſocietive Practice created Rationals are oblig'd not meerly by one ſolitary Obligation, but by innumerable neceſſary Obligations from the Nature and Reaſon of things conjoin'd with the neceſſary Conſtitution of the Univerſe. For how innumerable are their Obligations from thence, to be and live in the State of Society with God and his Liege-people as his Servants and Subjects? To Piety and all the Branches of univerſal Piety? How great and many Obligations have the Regenerate and Divine Family to Unity and Concord, to a ſpecial Love and Kindneſs towards their Fellow-citizens of the Holy Empire, that are Members of the ſame Myſtical Body, animated by the ſame Holy Spirit, born of the ſame heavenly Parentage, Children of the ſame heavenly Father, ſo nearly related to him, ſo highly belov'd by him, and that are Co-heirs of the ſame Inheritance? How many and how great Obligations are there upon every one of them, not to live only or chiefly for Self, but that their care and concern be for the Intereſt of the whole and for themſelves as parts of the whole? The Law of the Kingdom of God therefore muſt be conſider'd as the Law of Nature, that is not of meer arbitrary Appointment, but the whole of it is what is in its own Nature (ſuppoſing the Conſtitution of the Univerſe) neceſſarily and immutably matter of Law, Duty and Juſtice. We cannot doubt, but that it may be denominated ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe the Law of Nature.

There is great Analogy and Reſemblance between the Human-ſocietive and the Holy-ſocietive Practice; for although the World of Mankind is not properly a Polity, as the City of God is, yet they are the Aggregate of ſeveral Polities, Families, Cities and Kingdoms, every one of which is a little Image and Reſemblance of the City of God. (d) The Civil-ſocietive Goodneſs and Virtue requireth, that the parts of them be ſubſervient to the whole and Co-operate to the good thereof, elſe their Practice is not the Societive; nor is their Practice the Human-ſocietive (but deſtructive to Society) if it is not in ſome ſort the Jural Practice towards the Deity. (e) For it is more poſſible for a City to ſubſiſt without a foundation, than that a Polity ſhould conſiſt, if the Opinion of the Gods be taken away. If you go about the Earth, you may find Cities without Walls, Letters, Kings, ſumptuous Houſes, without Riches, Money, Theaters and places of Exerciſes: But an atheous City, a City without a Temple, Prayers, Oaths, Vaticinations, Sacrifices for procuring Good and averting Evil none ever ſaw (in the Civil World) or will ſee. The Human-ſocietive Practice is the Jural Practice towards * various ſpecial Relations, Sovereign and Subject, Parents and Children, Brethren, Husband and Wife, Maſter and Servant (the Nature of which Relations is neceſſarily a Law to thoſe that are Societiſts in ſuch Relations) and in general towards all that are Fellow-citizens. (f) For it fareth with the Body Politick as with the Body Natural. If one Member of the Body Natural hath this Conceit, that it ſhould be well by deſpoiling another Member and traducing the Welfare thereof to it ſelf, this would infer a diſſolution and deſtruction of the Body Natural: So if one Member of the Body Politick for his own intereſt and conveniency will deprive others of thoſe Accommodations, which of Right and Due belong to them, there can be no ſuch thing as Society and Fellow-Citizenſhip amongſt Men. In every Polity therefore the Jural Practice towards Fellow-citizens in general is indiſpenſably neceſſary, as being the only Societive Practice. Which Societive Practice is not to be confin'd to the particular Polities of Men (g) for there is no living the good Life without exerciſing towards Mankind in general the Beauteous-beneficial Practice (Innocence, Inoffenſiveneſs, univerſal Benevolence, Beneficence, Juſtice and Equity, Manſuetude and Peaceableneſs, Veracity, Fidelity, Candor and Humanity) nor without exerciſing towards them the Jural Practice; for every Man is a Citizen of this World, hath his Rights and Dues in reſpect of the Univerſe of Mankind, and till he hath made a Forfeiture, it is neceſſarily his Right and Due, to have a place upon Earth and a Portion of its Accommodations, and not to be prejudic'd by any in his Life, Liberty, or other ſecular Concerns. As every one that is a Citizen in a particular Polity, is neceſſarily a Citizen of this World, ſo every one that is a Societiſt in any particular Polity, is neceſſarily an human Societiſt; Mankind therefore are related to one another as Fellow-citizens (though not in the ſtrict Political Notion) and as Human Societiſts; whence they are oblig'd to make the Human-ſocietive Life and Practice towards (e) Plutarch adv. Colot. p. 1125.

---

* The Stoicks ſay, τὸ καθῆκον ταῖς σχέσεσι παραμετρεῖται. Duty is meaſured by Relations.

(f) Detrahere aliquid alteri, & hominem hominis incommodo ſuum augere commodum, magis eſt contra naturam quàm mors, quàm paupertas, quàm dolor, quàm cætera, quæ poſſunt aut corpori accidere, aut rebus externis. Nam principio tollit convictum humanum & ſocietatem. Si enim ſic erimus affecti, ut propter ſuum quiſque emolumentum ſpoliet aut violet alterum, diſrumpi neceſſe eſt eam, quæ maximè eſt ſecundum naturam, humani generis ſocietatem. Ut, ſi unumquodque membrum ſenſum hunc haberet, ut poſſe putaret ſe valere, ſi proximi membri valetudinem ad ſe traduxiſſet, debilitare & interire totum corpus neceſſe eſſet: Sic ſi unuſquiſque noſtrum rapiat ad ſe commoda aliorum, detrahatque quod cuique poſſit, emolumenti ſui gratia, ſocietas hominum & communitas evertatur neceſſe eſt. Cic. de Off. l. 3.

(g) Qui autem civium rationem dicunt eſſe habendam externorum negant; hi dirimunt communem humani generis ſocietatem: Qua ſublata beneficentia, liberalitas, bonitas, juſtitia funditus tollitur. Quæ qui tollunt, etiam adverſus Deos immortales impii judicandi ſunt; ab iis enim conſtitutam inter homines ſocietatem evertunt. Ibid.

one another their Life and Practice. They are alſo one Kindred, one Family, one Tribe, one Nation of Mankind, a Collective of many of the ſame nature and the ſame kind, (h) Natura nos cognatos edidit. By which near alliance they are neceſſarily oblig'd to a ſuitable diſpoſition and practice; and not only ſo, but thereby they become one Whole or Univerſe, of which every particular Man and every particular Polity is a part. As every particular Country is a part of the World, which is every Man's Country: ſo every particular Man and every particular Nation is a part of this great Nation, a part of this Whole, and is for the Whole, to affect and promote the common weal and good of this Whole, but no further than it is conſiſtent with, and ſo as to ſubordinate it to the Intereſt of a far greater and better Whole.

XII. The Law of Nature (beſides that it is impos'd by a Superiour Authority) appeareth to be a comprehenſion of what is in its own Nature matter of Law (or Obligation;) whence theſe three honourary Attributes neceſſarily belong to it, Immutability, Eternity, Univerſality, which Cicero hath conjoyn'd: (i) All Nations are at all times within the extent of one Law ſempiternal and immutable. J. Mart. calleth the Matters of it, (k) The Eternal and in their own nature Righteous Doings and Pieties. And (l) the things that are univerſally and in their own nature and eternally good; which excellent words denote theſe three eminent Properties of the Law of Nature, The Univerſality, The Eternity, and The Immutability of it.

(1.) The Law of Nature being what is in its own nature matter of Law, the Attribute of Immutability belongeth to it, (m) whence Philoſophers, Lawyers and Divines ſo often pronounce, that the Laws of Nature are immutable. In oppoſition to which commonly receiv'd Maxim (n) ſome diſpute (or rather looſely declaim) that the Law of Nature can be diſpens'd with by Divine Power. But theſe will have (what none will allow them) an altering the Caſe and a changing the Matter to be a diſpenſing with the Law. They have alledg'd nothing, that looketh like an Argument ſave only theſe few Matrimonial Caſes, The diſpenſing with Polygamy and permiſſion of Divorces in the Old Teſtament, and the diſpenſing with the Law againſt the inceſtuous marriage of Brother and Siſter in the beginning of the World. But theſe Matrimonial Caſes are weak Allegations; for it is not certain, how far they are determined by the Law of Nature and how far they properly belong to poſitive Law. The Objector himſelf affirmeth, (o) that the marriage of Brother and Siſter is unlawful only, becauſe forbidden by poſitive Law. But the Lawyers ſay, (p) Thoſe are inceſtuous Marriages which are prohibited by Nature. And it is moſt reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that all the Laws in Scripture againſt Inceſt are, not abſolutely, but in a degree and meaſure, greater or leſſer, Laws of Nature, or Branches of the Law of Nature, at leaſt the ſlenderer and remoter Branches thereof: Of which ſort is the Law againſt ſetting the younger before the firſt-born, Gen. 29. 26. and 48. 18. Deut. 21. 16, 17. which muſt be reputed in ſome ſort a Branch of the Law of Nature, and is called by ſome (q) Jus naturale, becauſe the doing otherwiſe ordinarily is in the nature of the thing an Incongruity; yet is not ſuch an Incongruity, but that it may be outweigh'd by a greater Good or Congruity, and in ſuch a caſe the Law is (not obligatory or) not Law. So the Law againſt the marriage of Brother and Siſter muſt be reputed in ſome ſort a Branch of the Law of Nature, becauſe the doing otherwiſe is ordinarily in the nature of the thing an Incongruity, yet is not ſuch an Incongruity, but that in the beginning of the World it was outweigh'd by a greater Good or Congruity (that all Mankind might iſſue from a common Parent) and among the Jews alſo it was outweigh'd by a greater Good or Congruity (as in caſe a Brother died without Child) and in ſuch a caſe the Law was (not obligatory or) not Law. (r) Learned Men are extremely at a loſs, to aſſign the cauſes and reaſons, why certain degrees of kindred were forbidden to marry; but I ſuppoſe, that a conſiderable number of reaſons may be aſſign'd. For probably in theſe Laws ſome regard was had to the inlarging Friendſhip in the World by Kindreds ariſing from Marriage, as S. Auſtin and Plutarch ſuppoſe. Probably ſome regard was had to the bettering the Breed of Mankind; for it is commonly obſerv'd, that without croſſing the ſtrein (as the Phraſe is) the breed of ſome Animals is not good. Parents and Children (the right aſcending and deſcending Line) Mothers in Law and the Husband's Children, Uncles and Nieces, Aunts and Nephews, cannot marry without ſome (greater or leſſer) violation of a certain Sanctity (greater or leſſer) which ſuperiour natural Relations have, and of a religious diſtance which it requireth, to be obſerv'd; for as the ancient Greeks call'd our Parents θεὺς (Gods) ſo they call'd our Parents Brethren θείυς (Divine) as Simplicius upon Epictetus obſerveth. And touching all the prohibited degrees of Kindred we may affirm, that for this reaſon they may not marry, becauſe in the nature of the thing there is an Incongruity (more or leſs) which is (more or leſs) diſcern'd by common reaſon (as may be proved by ſeveral Inſtances) and ſo far as there is ſuch an Incongruity, there is a turpitude and foulneſs (a filthy Incongruity) in the fact of uncovering Nakedneſs upon the account of nearneſs of Fleſh or Relation. But this Incongruity ceaſeth in the caſe of a greater Good and Congruity, whence there is no difficulty in the caſe of Cain's marrying his Siſter. And as for the Polygamy and Divorces that were permitted in the times of the Old Teſtament, they were repugnant indeed to the primitive Inſtitution of Marriage in Paradiſe (to which our Saviour hath reduc'd us) but ſeem not to have been contrary to the Light of Nature or any Law which it revealeth: for it doth not reveal any thing of the creation of one Man and one Woman only in the beginning of the World, nor their Paradiſaical State, nor the eſtabliſhing the conjunction of Male and Female in ſingulari conjugio at the firſt. But from the permiſſion of Polygamy and Divorces there is great reaſon, to infer the imperfection of the Inſtitution of Piety in the Old Teſtament-times, and that the famous Anceſtors of old Iſrael who practis'd Polygamy (although in the main real and ſpiritual Religioniſts, yet) were in great degree ſymbolical and ſecular kind of Pietiſts; and that God for increaſing their Seed (Abraham's Seed) diſpens'd with his own Inſtitution of Marriage: but no legitimate Inference can be made from thence, (s) that the Law of Nature can be diſpens'd with by Divine Power.

(h) Sen. Ep. 95.

(i) Omnes gentes & omni tempore una Lex & ſempiterna & immutabilis continet. Lactant. l. 6. c. 8.

(k) Τὰς αἰωνίυς ϗ φύσει δικαιοπϱαξίας ϗ ἐυσεϐείας. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 266.

(l) Τὰ καθόλυ καὶ φύσει καὶ αἰώνια καλά. Ibid. p. 263.

(m) Selden. Mar. clauſ. l. 1. c. 3.

(n) Bp. Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 2. c. 1. r. 9. p. 200.

(o) Ibid. c. 2. r. 3. n. 24.

(p) V. Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 6.

(q) Malvend. in Deut. 21. 16.

(r) Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 2. c. 5. S. 12.

(s) V. Suarez. de Leg. l. 2. c. 13, 14, 15.

(2.) The Eternal Law is of various acceptation. The Pagan Theologers call Themis (t) the Eternal Law, whereby they mean the Univerſal Law preſcrib'd to the World and (unintelligent) Nature, which obſerveth a ſettled Law and Order. In the School of the Stoicks there is a twofold Eternal Law, (u) the one meerly providential (as when they ſay, omnia æternæ legis imperio fieri, all things are by Law, Fate or Providential Decree) the other morally-preceptive, (w) call'd by Cicero ſempiterna Lex, which is the eternal mind or right reaſon of Jove conſider'd as commanding ſome things to be done and prohibiting others. This twofold Eternal Law of the Stoicks conjoyn'd into one is the Eternal Law of the Schools (the Notices whereof they derive from S. Auſtin) for their Eternal Law is, (x) ratio gubernativa totius Univerſi in mente divina exiſtens, Reaſon exiſting in the Divine Mind conſider'd as gubernative of the whole Univerſe. The Stoicks look'd upon their morally perceptive Eternal Law as the Law of Nature, and therefore look'd upon the mind and right reaſon of Jove (commanding and forbidding) as the primary and original Law of Nature, the mind and right reaſon of Man commanding and forbidding (a derivative from the Eternal Mind of Jove) they look'd upon as the ſecondary and derivative Law of Nature. So Cicero agreeably to their Senſe ſaith, (y) Lex nihil aliud eſt niſi recta & à numine Deorum tracta ratio, imperans honeſta, prohibenſque contraria. Law is nothing elſe but right reaſon deriv'd from the Gods, commanding things honeſt and forbidding the contrary. So the Schools ſay, (z) Lex naturalis eſt quædam participatio legis æternæ in rationali creatura. The Law of Nature is a certain participation of the Law Eternal in a rational Creature. Right Reaſon is repreſented as the Law of Nature conſtitutively, and this Law is ſuppos'd to exiſt from Eternity: But as we do not acknowledge, that Right Reaſon is in ſuch ſenſe Law, ſo neither do we ſuppoſe, that the Law of Nature is in ſuch ſenſe denominated the Eternal Law: But it is ſo denominated in the ſame ſenſe, that neceſſary Propoſitions are denominated Eternal Truths. And they are ſo denominated, not to ſignifie, that ſuch Propoſitions exiſted from Eternity, and had a Truth from Eternity as ſo exiſting, or that the veritas rei (truth of the thing) which they expreſs, mentally or really exiſted from Eternity: But the Senſe is, that ſuppoſing thoſe Propoſitions to exiſt, which cannot but be Truths (neceſſary Truths) they are Truths of Eternal Neceſſity. They are Eternal Truths, not as being Truths which cannot but exiſt (as ſome ſay, that they neceſſarily exiſt in an Eternal Mind) but as being Truths which cannot but be Truths, there is an eternal neceſſity of their being Truths: and ſo the Intelligible Eſſences of things are Eternal; not becauſe they cannot but exiſt, but becauſe ſuppoſing them to be in Mind, they cannot but be the Intelligible Eſſences of things, ſo that the Eſſences of things are Eternal, as to the being the Eſſences of things. As theſe Verities, Eternal Truths, are of eternal immutable neceſſity, and there is an impoſſibility of their being otherwiſe: So the Laws of Nature are Eternal Laws, as being of eternal immutable neceſſity, and the matters of them are denominated τὰ αἰώνια καλά, to ſignifie, that it cannot be, but they muſt be the things that are the right, the juſt and the good. In ſuch Senſe they are Laws that had no beginning, but always were according to the Saying of Antigone in Sophocles, who having bury'd her Brother Polynice againſt the King's Edict, and being accus'd for doing it againſt the Laws, ſhe made anſwer, that although ſhe had offended againſt the Law of Creon, yet ſhe had committed no offence againſt the unwritten Law, which is not of late or yeſterday's ſtanding, but always was. (a) Theſe are not matters of to day or yeſterday, but they ever live, and none knoweth their Date or from whence they came.

(3.) A third honourary Attribute of the Law of Nature is the Univerſality of it; for in ſeveral reſpects and upon ſeveral accounts it muſt be denominated The Univerſal Law. In reſpect of the Univerſe of Mankind it is the Law Univerſal, (b) the common Law written in the publick of all the World and in the natural Tables. The Matters of it are called by the Greek writers, (c) κοινὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων δίκαια, the common Juſts of all Men, and ſo the Lawyers ſay, (d) All People that are govern'd by Laws, have a proper civil Law of their own and the common Law of all Men beſides. So Ariſtotle ſaith, (e) I diſtribute Law into that which is proper and that which is common; for there is that which all Men ſuppoſe a common Juſt and Unjuſt, which is by nature ſuch and is immutable.

But the Law of Nature is not only univerſal in reſpect of the Univerſe of Mankind, but in reſpect of the vaſt Univerſe of created Rationals. Agreeably whereto Empedocles ſang of natural Juſtice: (f) It is extended throughout the vaſt Ether and the infinite Regions of Light. Celſus having ſaid from Pindar, that Law is the King of all; Origen anſwereth, that if he meaneth the Law of Cities, this is falſe; for all are not under the Rule of that Law: but Chriſtians acknowledge (g) a Law τῇ φύσει πάντων βασιλέα, that is by nature King of all. Accordingly one of Ariſtotle's Interpreters ſaith, (h) With the Gods of neceſſity there is that which is immutably juſt, ſo that there is that which is in its own nature juſt. (i) The true Law (ſaith Cicero) is right reaſon, congruous to nature, diffus'd into all, conſtant, ſempiternal, which calleth to duty by commanding, and by forbidding deterreth from villainy. If right reaſon is the Law of Nature (as in ſome ſort it is) or if the Law of Nature (k) is the force of the Intellect, whereby we diſcern thoſe things that are in themſelves good, from thoſe that are in themſelves evil, (as Schoolmen ſay,) or if it is Lex vera impreſſa mentibus, a Law impreſs'd upon intelligent Minds (as the ancient Writers commonly ſay) It cannot be a Law wholly appropriate and peculiar to the Univerſe of Mankind, but is neceſſarily the Law of the vaſt Univerſe of Men and Angels. So in the School of the Stoicks the Law of Nature is, (l) The Law of the Univerſe, one Law the common reaſon of all intelligent Beings, the Reaſon and Law

(t) Pighius de Dea Themide, p. 39.

(u) Lipſ. Phyſ. l. 1. diſſ. 12.

(w) De Leg. l. 2. Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 8.

(x) Aquin. 12æ. Qu. 91. Art. 1.

(y) In Philipp. 2.

(z) Selden. ſupr.

(a) Οὐ γάρ τι νῦν γε κἀχθὲς, ἀλλ' ἀεί ποτε Ζῇ ταῦτα. κ'οὐδεὶς οἶδεν ἐξ ὅτου φάνη. Ariſtot. Rhet. l. 1. c. 13, 15.

(b) Lex communis in publico mundi & naturalibus Tabulis ſcripta. Tertull. de coron. mil.

(c) Selden. Mar. Clauſ. l. 1. c. 3.

(d) Idem de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 3.

(e) Λέγω δὲ νόμον, τὸν μὲν ἴδιον τὸν δὲ κοινόν· κοινὸν δὲ τὸν κατὰ φύσιν· ἔστι γάρ ὃ μαντεύονταί τι πάντες φύσει, κοινὸν δίκαιον καὶ ἄδικον· καὶ οὐδέποτε μεταβάλλει· κατὰ φύσιν γάρ ἐστιν. Rhet. l. 1. c. 13, 15.

(f) ——διὰ τ' εὐρυμέδοντος Αἰθέρος ἠνεκέως τέταται, διά τ' ἀπλέτου αὐγῆς. Ariſtot. ſupr.

(g) L. 5. p. 258.

(h) Παρά γε τοῖς θεοῖς ἀνάγκη δίκαιον εἶναι ἀμετάβλητον, ὥστε εἶναί τι φυσικὸν δίκαιον. Andronic. Rhod.

(i) Eſt quidem vera Lex, recta ratio, naturæ congruens, diffuſa in omnes, conſtans, ſempiterna, quæ vocet ad officium jubendo, vetando à fraude deterreat. Cic. ap. Lactant. l. 6. c. 8.

(k) Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 8.

(l) Lex univerſi Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 371. νόμος εἷς λόγος κοινὸς πάντων τῶν νοερῶν ζώων M. Ant. l. 7. S. 9. & l. 2. S. 16.

of the moſt ancient City and Polity. For they argue, (m) That Reaſon which preſcribeth what is to be done, and not to be done, is common to us all; if that, then Law; if ſo, then are we Fellow-citizens, and the World is as a City. So Cicero argueth, (n) They that have Reaſon in common, have Right Reaſon in common, which is Law; therefore Men are thus conſociated with the Gods, they are of one common Law, and conſequently they are of the ſame City or Polity. But ſuppoſing Right Reaſon to be Law, that all Rationals have ſomething of it, and conſequently they have ſomething of one Law, yet they have not one Law as Citizens and Societiſts that are of the ſame City; for Rationals are not Fellow-Citizens and of the ſame Society as Rationals, but as a ſpecial kind of Rationals (as the Salts that aſſociate are thoſe that are of a ſpecial kind) Divine, Diabolical or Humane.

The Law of Nature may be denominated Univerſal as being the Law of Univerſal Righteouſneſs (which requireth it;) for the obligation to obey poſitive Laws is of the Law of Nature, which is the ſame with Univerſal Righteouſneſs, that which is in its own nature ſuch, conſider'd as that which ought to be done. (o) There is no difference between Right Reaſon and Reaſon of Juſtice. The Stoicks ſay, (p) Juſtice is the Science of thoſe things that are to be choſen and eſchew'd, and of the things indifferent. (q) When the three parts of the Soul (the Iraſcible, the Concupiſcible and the Rational) harmonize and agree, and are as they ought to be, ſo that Reaſon ruleth, and the other obey and are regulated by it, this rectitude of the Soul the Platoniſts call Juſtice. If the ſeveral parts of the Soul do their proper work and office, this οἰκειοπραγία they call Juſtice. (r) Juſtice is the ſummary comprehenſion of all Virtue. The Law of Nature therefore conſider'd as the comprehenſion of what is in its own nature matter of obligation and ought to be, is neither more nor leſs than the comprehenſion of what is in its own nature Righteouſneſs, and is the ſame with the Divine Moral Law (the preceptive part of the Original Law) the Tranſgreſſion whereof is the definitive Notion of Sin and Unrighteouſneſs, 1 Joh. 3.4. But this muſt not be called the Law of Nature without a diſtinction and limitation of Senſe.

(m) Ibid. l. 4. S. 4.

(n) Inter quos ratio, inter eoſdem etiam recta ratio communis eſt. Quæ cùm ſit Lex, Lege quoque conſociati homines cum Diis putandi ſumus. unde univerſus hic mundus una civitas communis Deorum atque hominum exiſtimanda. De Leg. l. 1.

(o) Οὐδὲν διήνεγκε λόγος ὀρθὸς καὶ λόγος δικαιοσύνης. Ant. l. 11. S. 1

(p) Τὴν δὲ δικαιοσύνην ἐπιστήμην ὧν αἱρετέον καὶ εὐλαβητέον καὶ οὐδετέρων. Laert. Zenon.

(q) Alcin. de Doctr. Pl. c. 28. Plotin. En. l. 2. c. Jambl. de Myſt. S. 4. c. 5. Porphyr. ſent. c. 34.

(r) Ἐν δὲ δικαιοσύνῃ συλλήβδην πᾶσ' ἀρετή 'στι.

CHAP. II.

1. The Law of Nature defin'd with reſpect to the promulgation of it is The comprehenſion of our natural Notices of what is Law. Thoſe Notices diſtinguiſh'd. Sect. 1. Our Natural Notices of what is Law are from the notic'd Exiſtence of God. Sect. 2. From the nature of well and evil doing conjoyn'd with the natural Frame of the Mind. Several Objections againſt the ancient Account of the Law of Nature anſwer'd. Sect. 3. Our natural Notices of what is Law are from the Nature of things, from natural Inſtincts, and from the Senſe of Conſcience. Sect. 4. Of a twofold Notion of the Law of Nature in reſpect of the obſervation of it.

I. THE divine Moral Law is thus far the Law of Nature, It is the comprehenſion of what is in its own nature matter of Law, and This is the Law that is notic'd by the Light of Nature; yet it may not be called The Law of Nature without diſtinction and limitation of Senſe. For the Law of Nature (according to its true and uſual definition) is this Moral Law only as it is notic'd by natural Light; ſo that the Law of Nature conſider'd with reſpect to the promulgation of it muſt be defin'd The comprehenſion of our natural Notices of what is Law. Theſe natural Notices are of two ſorts (ſo that the Law of Nature is of a twofold Notion as in reſpect of the Obligation of it, ſo in reſpect of the promulgation of it;) for ſome of them have only The Verity of natural Notices, others have not only the Verity, but the Notoreity of natural Notices, which therefore have a greater promulgation: but both are Notitiæ Communis, common natural Notices of Religion and Virtue and of what is Law, the Syſtem whereof is the Law of Nature. Nature is a term of multifarious ſignification, but the ambiguity of it (ſo far as is requiſite in this Argument of the Law of Nature) is taken away by Tertullian, who underſtandeth by it Mundane Nature (of which our Humane Nature is a part) the conſtitution of Mundane Nature, or the natural Mundane Conſtitution of things (with whatever falleth within that Comprehenſion) and he oppoſeth it to Prophecy, which is Supernatural Revelation. (s) This whole revolving Orb of things atteſteth the Reſurrection of the Dead. Nature is thy firſt Miſtreſs of Diſcipline, which God premis'd, deſigning that Prophecy ſhould ſucceed, that ſo thou mighteſt more eaſily give credit to Prophecy being a Diſciple of Nature. The Notices of what is Law, which are from the Inſtitution of this Mundane Nature, eſpecially of our own, are the Laws of Nature, which (in the firſt place) noticeth the Being of God, whoſe Exiſtence is Law.

(s) Totus hic ordo revolubilis rerum teſtatio eſt reſurrectionis mortuorum. —— Præmiſit tibi (Deus) Naturam magiſtram ſubmiſſurus & prophetiam, quo facilius credas prophetiæ diſcipulus Naturæ. De Reſurr. carn. c. 12.

Section I.

Our natural Notices of what is Law, are from the Exiſtence of God notic'd by Nature.

I. MUndane Nature (that comprehenſion of the Works of the Creation) clearly noticeth to Mankind the Exiſtence of God, which is written in this great Book or Volume of the World in Capital Letters, to be ſeen and read of all Men. For the inviſible things of Him from the Creation of the World are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his Eternal Power and Godhead, Rom. 1. 20. There is no Speech nor Language, where their Voice (the Voice of the Heavens and the Heavenly Bodies) is not heard: Their Line (or loud Voice rather) is gone out through all the Earth, and their words to the end of the World. Pſal. 19. 3, 4. If we ask whence it is, and whoſe doing is it, that there is ſuch an admirable Syſtem, as our Eyes behold, with all the Excellencies and Conveniences, the Parts, Furniture, and Inhabitants thereof? In anſwer thereto univerſal Nature proclaimeth, the great God formed all things. Such is the Origination of things in Theiſm, wherewith Atheiſm thus far agreeth, they both ſuppoſe, that a thing cannot be made by it ſelf (for then it muſt be Exiſtent before it is Exiſtent) that it is impoſſible, that all things ſhould be made; that if at any time there was nothing, there never could have been any thing (for ſomething cannot come from nothing;) that ſomething was from Eternity unmade, increate, ſelf-exiſtent, and abſolutely independent. Thus far there is no diſagreement between the Atheiſts and the Theiſts (or Religioniſts;) the only matter in debate is, whether this acknowledg'd Eternal ſomething (which is neceſſarily Increate, neceſſarily Exiſtent, and abſolutely Independent) is ſuch an Eternal ſomething as the Religioniſts God, or whether it be only the univerſal Matter or the Material World, as the Atheiſts ſuppoſe? But becauſe this acknowledg'd Eternal Something is neceſſarily Increate, it muſt be ſuch a thing, to which it neceſſarily belongeth, to be of Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection: Nor could it neceſſarily belong to this Eternal ſomething, to be Self-exiſtent, but becauſe it neceſſarily belongeth to it, to be of Creature-tranſcendent Nobilitation and Perfection, which plainly ſpeaketh it to be the Religioniſts God. And the abſolute Independence which neceſſarily belongeth to it, is neceſſarily an Honour, Dignity and Nobilitation of Eſtate, the ſupreme Honour and Dignity, that is, the Sovereignty of Eſtate; which again ſpeaketh this Eternal ſomething, to be the Religioniſts God. To be abſolutely Independent, is to be of the Subject-tranſcendent Condition, which therefore is proper to the Imperial Eſtate of the Religioniſts God. Self-exiſtence and Exiſtence from Eternity is ſuch a Sublimity of Condition, which cannot in Congruity be attributed to any mean thing, but is peculiar to ſuch a ſomething, that is of higheſt Excellency. Neceſſary Exiſtence from Eternity is the greateſt Exiſtence, the greateſt perfection of Exiſtence, and peculiarly (the Religioniſts) God-exiſtence, in whoſe Idea alone neceſſary Exiſtence is compris'd; which therefore cannot belong to the vile imperfect Matter, which ſcarce exiſteth. That which neceſſarily exiſteth and from Eternity, is τὸ ἀεὶ ὂν, that which always is, not ſubject to Mutation, Generation and Corruption, as the Matter is, in which we have nothing of the Idea of an Eternal ſomething; but in the Religioniſts God there is the whole of that Idea. Reaſon can aſſign a Cauſe and Reaſon of his Self-exiſtence from Eternity, but not of the Matters or the material Worlds (t) that have not in themſelves the Cauſe of their exiſting.

In Theiſm the Univerſe of Rationals is well conſtituted and as it ought to be. The Conſtitution of it is the Beauteous-beneficial (as that of a Family, a City, a Kingdom or Empire;) for it conſiſteth of a Creature-tranſcendent Sovereignty and of the Subject-eſtates. But the Atheiſts Head-leſs and Body-leſs Univerſe is horribly amiſs, and it could not be ſo conſtituted by eternal immutable neceſſity; for what is by eternal immutable neceſſity, could never be otherwiſe, and therefore cannot be amiſs. Such a bad Conſtitution of the Univerſe (which is without Regularity, Order and Government) cannot be by Natural Neceſſity, and it is againſt Legal Neceſſity (it may not be) nor is it probable, to be, ſeeing all the known parts of the Univerſe of Rationals conſiſt of Polities, wherein there is a Regent and Subject-party. Without a Regent Party the material World alſo would be a Chaos, not a κόσμ☉, beauteous mundane Syſtem continu'd in great order and regularity. (u) Ἔϛιν ἓν ὁ διοικῶν, therefore there is one that adminiſtreth it.

II. The Origination of Things in Theiſm is in ſuch order, which is natural and poſſible: But Atheiſm inverteth it (beginning at the wrong end) and originateth things in ſuch an Order, which is unnatural and impoſſible. (w) For in the things that are generated the Proceſs is not upwards, but downwards. That an Univerſe of imperfect Beings ſhould iſſue from a Being abſolutely perfect, is no more unnatural or impoſſible, than that a Poet ſhould make a Verſe, or the Morning Son ſhould produce Vapours: But that an Univerſe of Beings of great Perfections (Vital and Intellectual, Natural and Moral) ſhould be produc'd meerly by the mundane Matter (which is of all things the moſt imperfect) is as unnatural and impoſſible, as that the Verſe ſhould make the Poet, or the Vapours ſhould produce the Morning-Sun. That Nonſence ſhould generate Sence, and the imperceptive ſtupidity of Matter ſhould produce perceptive Life, Cogitation, Reaſon and Underſtanding; that the aſcent of things ſhould be upwards from the Matter producing all the higher Orders of Beings of manifold Species and Ranks, of various kinds and degrees of Perfection (inanimate, animate, vegetative, Senſitive, Rational) that the greater plenty of Perfection ſhould be the Product of the greater Penury (as if the greater Summ ſhould be the Product of the leſſer) is in the Judgment of common Sence, plainly impoſſible. Alike impoſſible it is, that the matter of an Houſe ſhould without an Architect build it ſelf into an Houſe and repleniſh it with Inhabitants. And it is impoſſible, that any Beings, or that the material World ſhould be Self-exiſtent, that have not neceſſary Exiſtence included in their Nature.

The Atheiſts ſuppoſe, that the World was made, but ſome diſſenting Brethren amongſt them rather ſuppoſe, that the Frame of the World was Self-exiſtent from Eternity, and conſequently it was Self-moving from Eternity. But as it cannot be Self-exiſtent not having neceſſary Exiſtence included in its Nature, ſo for the ſame Reaſon Matter cannot be Self-moving, and to ſuppoſe, that Bodies can move themſelves, that reſt is incompetible to them, Motion Eſſential, that they mov'd one another infinitely from Eternity, are impoſſible ſuppoſitions and Contradictions to the Evidence of common Sence. So the Self-exiſtence of Mankind from Eternity is an impoſſible Suppoſition; for as no Rational Man or Men now in being can poſſibly be of this Opinion, that he or they are Self-exiſtent from Eternity: ſo it was in all the Generations, that are paſt. Nor could they be Exiſtent from Eternity, for let us ſuppoſe, the (t) Μὴ ἔχοντα ἐν αὐτοῖς τὴν αἰτίαν τȣ̃ εἶναι. Simplic. in Epict. c. 38. p. 202.

---

(u) Epict. diſſ. l. 2. c. 14.

(w) Ἐπειδὴ ἐν τοῖς γεννωμένοις, ὐκ ἔϛι πρὸς τὸ ἄνω ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ κάτω χωρεῖν. Plotin. En. 5. l. 3. c. 16.

Generations of Men that are paſt, to have been as infinite as we can imagine, yet we clearly and evidently diſcern, that all of them muſt neceſſarily begin to live (whence they muſt have a firſt moment of their Exiſtence) and therefore none of them could poſſibly Exiſt from Eternity. That our Earth, is of late Formation, appeareth from the late Invention of Letters and Arts, the known Plantation of moſt Countries, the gradual decreaſe of Mountains and gradual increaſe of Mankind.

III. If we ſuppoſe Matter and Motion, to have exiſted from Eternity (without a firſt Cauſe or Mover) yet as they could produce nothing higher than certain modes or accidents of Matter (not Mind or Reaſon) ſo neither could the Matter by the motion of its Particles fortuitouſly or mechanically form the viſible World. (x) For if any one ſhould carry to Scythia ſuch a Sphere as Poſidonius made, that doth but repreſent the motion of the Planets, who amongſt thoſe Barbarians can doubt, but that ſuch a Sphere was made by Reaſon? No Man is ſo mad as to think, that an artificial Sphere, an excellent Book or a magnificent Building were made by themſelves meerly by the Mechanical motion of their own Materials; yet what mean and contemptible pieces of Artifice are all artificial Spheres, Books and Buildings compar'd with the bright and vaſt Celeſtial Spheres, the immenſe and goodly Volume and ſtupendious Structure of the viſible World? The generality of Mankind therefore in all Ages have been convinc'd of the Exiſtence of a Deity (y) by beholding and contemplating the heavenly Bodies and the Structure of the viſible World, the parts whereof relate to certain Operations and Uſes, to which they are admirably fitted; and they relate to one another and are aptly combin'd into one harmonious habitable World, wherein Artificialneſs and wiſe Deſign is every where viſible, ſuch Artificialneſs and wiſe Diſpoſal, ſuch Order and Regularity, as the contemplative mind of Man can neither ſufficiently underſtand nor admire, and which plainly demonſtrateth, that things were not left to the blind agitation of the matter (which cannot model, diſtinguiſh, proportionate, nor do things in number weight and meaſure, nor do them ſo well as the greateſt Reaſon can do no better) but that there is a Maker of all things, who well underſtood what he had to do, is of immenſe Wiſdom, Goodneſs and Power, and that the World is in all the Parts of it the Work of a wonderful Providence. Such is the ordinary Phænomenon of Gravity and the diſtant Poles of the Æquator and Ecliptick (repugnant to the Mechanick Laws) ſuch is the marvellous Light of the Sun and ſuch is our Earth (furniſh'd with two great Lights) that revolveth diurnally about its own Axis with ſuch equability and conſtancy of motion, that it never varieth one minute; that revolveth annually about the Sun with its Axis of a duely inclining Poſture, of a perpetual Paralleliſm to it ſelf, and is exactly confin'd within the Tropicks, hath its Surface cloath'd with Green, is a Terraqueous Globe, involv'd in a convenient Atmoſphere (z) furniſh'd with copious Stores of Water, with multifarious ſorts of Minerals, Animals (in all reſpects ſuited to their Element) Vegetables (of admirable Contexture and many of them of exquiſite Beauty) with all ſorts of Seeds or Seminal Principles (which are alſo propagated for continuance of the Species) as thoſe of Plants, which are made moſt elaborately, and are ſo fitted, that they are manifeſtly deſign'd for Vegetation. It is not probable, that any of theſe things had been, if there had been no higher cauſe of things than the rude Agitations of the Matter (which knoweth no Beauty or final Cauſe) no Reaſon can be aſſign'd, why any of them are but only from the final Cauſe (it is for the Beſt, that they ſhould be ſo) and from the Wiſdom of the Creator of all things, who deſigned for them End and Uſe. For who can doubt, but that Parental Nature which hath furniſh'd Animals with organical parts for the Reception, Maſtication, digeſtion and diſtribution of Food, hath alſo provided the Herbs and Graſs and Plants and their Fruit, to be their Food and Phyſick, and that they were made for this end and uſe? That the Feet were made for walking, the Hands for working, the Eyes for ſeeing, and that Light and Eyes were deſign'd for one another? (a) Who is it then, that hath ſuited and adapted this to that, and that to this? (b) That hath made the Fruits of the Earth for Animals, Animals for Man, as the Horſe for carrying him, the Ox for ploughing, the Dog for hunting and keeping Houſe?

IV. It muſt be an intelligent Cauſe (not the ſenſleſs Matter) that diverſify'd the Matter into ſuch innumerable Species of Beings as this World conſiſteth of (all which are of a regular Idea and have their Specific Natures and Properties) that inſtituted a beauteous Order and gradual Subordination of them (of Plants to Animals and Animals to Men) that adjuſted the growth of Animals, determin'd their Stature, gave them their Beauty and their uſefulneſs, their diſtinction into Male and Female (which are manifeſtly deſign'd the one for the other) endow'd them with their admirable Inſtincts, made ſome of them Oviparous, others Viviparous, ſome with Wings and others with Fins, of which differences amongſt Animals no mechanical Cauſe can be aſſign'd, but a Reaſon may be aſſign'd from the final Cauſe, which ſheweth, that they were not ſo made without Reaſon. Which alſo appeareth from the Fabrick of the Bodies of Animals, of the Formation and Organization whereof it is madneſs, to pretend to give a mechanical Account (why the Brains and Lungs, and Nerves and Membranes, the Veins and Arteries, the Bones, Joints and Ligaments, the Valvulæ and Fibres were ſo fram'd and ſituated) yet the wiſe contrivance that is in them filleth the Books of Phyſicians and Anatomiſts, who find in them nothing inept, nothing in vain, and the Artifice that is in them ſo amazingly exquiſite and elaborate, that all the Works of Human Art are but a bungle if compar'd with the Body of an Animal. That the rudely agitated Matter can form it ſelf into Clocks, Engines of War and Muſical Inſtruments, is much more credible, than that it can form it ſelf into the Bodies of Animals. And if one ſhould ſuppoſe, that the agitated Particles of ſenſeleſs Matter did of old of their own accord ſpin themſelves into Threads, that theſe Threads of themſelves did Weave themſelves into pieces of Cloth (of numerous kinds) that theſe pieces of Cloth did make themſelves into

---

(x) Cic de N. D. l. 2.

(y) Plutarch. de placit. Phil. l. 1. c. 6. Sext. Empir. adv. Mathem. p. 312.

(z) Vid. S. Chryſoſt. T. 7. p. 7, 9. &c.

(a) Τίς οὖν ὁ ἁρμόσας τοῦτο πρὸς ἐκεῖνο, κἀκεῖνο πρὸς τοῦτο; Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 6.

(b) Fructus quos terra gignit animantium cauſa, animantes autem hominum, ut equum vehendi cauſa, arandi bovem, venandi & cuſtodiendi canem. Cic. de N. D. l. 2.

Garments of Thouſands of regular ſhapes hugely different, and alſo into ſome Hundreds of the very ſame ſhape, and that when thoſe Garments were worn out, the Matter of its own accord made it ſelf into new ones exactly like the former (although it is much more than ten Thouſand to one, that it doth not twice hit upon the ſame Form) this would be a much more credible Hypotheſis than this Atheiſtick Hypotheſis touching the Origine of Animals; that the agitated Particles of Matter did of their own accord form themſelves at firſt into certain Stamina of the Parts of Animals, next into Organical Parts, and next into perfect Animals of numerous and hugely different kinds, and into a great number of individuals of the ſeveral kinds, which are propagated from one Generation to another, with as great regularity as the Body of an Animal is form'd. It conſiſteth of a vaſt variety of Parts and Organs, of exquiſite Size, Situation, Temper, Texture, Connexion, Diſtinction; every Animal is form'd with ſuch Organs as are ſuitable to it, its Organical Parts are admirably fitted for their ſeveral Functions, and thoſe Functions are ſuch as the Oeconomy of the whole requireth (Maſtication, Deglutition, Concoction, Fermentation, Chylification, Sanguification, Separation, Percolation, Reſpiration, Nutrition, Generation, local Motion, various Senſation (and other Functions of Life) the Parts of an Animal and their Functions conſtitute one orderly Oeconomy of the whole; therefore they were made by an intelligent Artiſt, who had the whole in his Mind and deſign'd the good thereof. The ſeveral parts of it are the wonders of his Divine Art; for ſuch is that eximious Organ the Eye, which is ſo commodiouſly ſeated and guarded, conſiſteth of ſuch a variety of Parts ſo admirably compoſ'd and put together, is of ſuch curioſity of Structure and ſo many Excellencies, and ſo admirably fitted for its Function and Office, that every one who will not ſhut the Eyes of his Mind, cannot fail to diſcern, that it was made by a Divine Artiſt for the uſe of Seeing. Such is the rete mirabile in the Brain, and the plexus pampiniformis, elſewhere; the Fabrick of the aſpera Arteria, which is cover'd with the Epiglottis and is ſmooth in that part, which toucheth the Æſophagus; the bending of the Arteria Aorta a little above the Heart, and the Fabrication of the Valvulæ of the Heart and of the Veins; the concurrent Organs for the Ampliation and Coarctation of the Breaſt in Reſpiration (c) about which Motions the Mechanic Artifice of the Creator (which is plainly adapted to Mathematic Rules) we cannot ſufficiently admire. And who can chuſe but admire that ſtrange Proviſion of Temporary Parts and of Nutriment, which provident Nature maketh for the Fœtus during the time of Geſtation? What we have ſaid of the Bodies of Animals is in great degree applicable to Plants (d) in which the Root, the Stalk, the Flower, the Seed, with their numerous conſtitutent Parts Lignous and Parenchymous (the Skin, cortical Body, Veſſels, Fibres, Covers, Pith, Radicle, Lobes and ſuch more) and even the Claſpers, Thorns, Hairs, Globulets, are admirably fitted for an uſe and purpoſe (ſome ſervice of the Plant) and are manifeſtly deſign'd thereto.

V. Atheiſm can give no Account of the Origination of Mankind; for thoſe Accounts which the old Atheiſtick Philoſophers gave of it, were as groſs Foolery as the Fictions of the Poets. Such is the Conceit of Anaximander (e) that the firſt Men were generated in the Bellies of Fiſhes, and were there nouriſh'd, till they were able to help themſelves, and then they were caſt upon the dry Land. Which portentous Conceit is as wiſe as that of Epicurus (f) that the Slime of the Earth being heated there grew out of it certain Wombs (or Bags) wherein the firſt Men (and other Animals) were form'd, for whoſe nouriſhment thoſe Wombs drew out of the Earth a milky Liquor, and theſe being excluded from their Wombs (the Earth ſtill affording them Milk) and Adult propagated their Kind. So Democritus ſuppoſ'd, that Men at firſt were generated out of Water and Slime (or Mud) or roſe out of the Earth by the motion of the Matter. But if Mother Earth thus produc'd Mankind at firſt, it is much, that of ſo long a time, there were never ſince any the like Productions (ſeeing Nature obſerveth fix'd and determinate Laws and is conſtant in obſerving them) and that now Mankind cannot be generated but by Propagation from their kind. As the King of Siam ask'd the French Miſſionaries (g) if the Sun in Europe was the ſame with theirs in the Indies (becauſe at the ſame time he appear'd different in thoſe two places:) So we muſt ask the Epicureans, if their Child-bearing Earth was the ſame with ours? For our Earth is as inept for Child-bearing, as Fiſhes are for ingendring Human Fleſh. She hath no Seminal Principles for Human Productions, nor any Faculty of conceiving with Child, and if any Nurſlings were committed to her care, ſhe muſt neceſſarily expoſe them, and could not educate them. If of old ſhe afforded Milk, yet ſhe could not thereby originate Mankind, unleſs ſhe could alſo contrive and form Human Bodies (wherein there are as many Miracles as Parts) nor would her Nutriment ſignifie any thing, unleſs ſhe could alſo furniſh them with all the marvellous Organs of Nutrition (of Deglutition and Concoction) their Tunicles, Muſcles, Glandules, ſeveral ſorts of Fibres, their ſhape and ſituation, their Dilatation and Contraction, opening and ſhutting, Faculties of Digeſtion, Retention, Expulſion, the Commixtures and Secretions that are made in them with the Cauſes of them, the Periſtaltick motion of the Inteſtines, their Valvulæ to hinder Regurgitation, their Convolution, Corrugation and Cells, their marvellous Intertexture (the Meſentery) and the Nett-work that covereth them, the Milky Veſſels with their Inſertion into the Inteſtines and their Valvulæ, wherein a ſuperlative Wiſdom of Parental Providence appeareth. Which hath alſo eſtabliſhed ſuch a courſe of Nature, that when a Woman hath brought forth a Child, her Breaſts ſhould be full of Milk.

> ——— ——— — (h) quòd omnis
> Impetus in Mammas convertitur ille Alimenti.

But from theſe Legends of the old Atheiſtick Philoſophers it appeareth, that the Philoſophy of Atheiſm is an Atheiſtick Credulity and Phantaſtry devoid of any colour of probability. (i) But this is the Principal Wiſdom of our times: It is an eaſie matter to deny any

(c) Circa hos motus divini conditoris mechanicen ad regulas mathematicas planè adaptatam, ſatis admirari non poſſumus. Dr. Willis Pharmac. Ration. Par. 2. S. 1. c. 1.

(d) Dr. Grew Phil. Hiſt. of Plants, B. 1. c. 1.

(e) Plutarch. ſympoſ. l. 8. c. 8.

(f) Lucret. l. 5. Cenſorin. de die nat. c. 4. Lactant. l. 7. c. 7.

(g) Le Compte's Memoirs of China, p. 487.

(h) Lucret. l. 5.

(i) Sed hæc ſumma ſapientia noſtrorum temporum: Facile eſt thing, that thou mayeſt be counted wiſer than others, as Cardan complaineth.

VI. The Soul of Man is of ſuch a Nature and Nobilitation, that it cannot be deriv'd from the Matter, whence it appeareth, that God is the Maker of it and of the World. For ſuch are the Faculties and Operations of the Mind and Soul of Man, Vital Perception, Senſation, Cogitation, Imagination, Memory, ſpontaneous Motion, Self-conſciouſneſs and Self-reflexion, Intellection and the noble Operations of Reaſon, Liberty of Will and Agency, (whereby in many reſpects and in great degree ſhe is ἄγαλμα θεοῦ, a Statue or Image of the Deity) that are plainly incompetible to that kind of Subſtance Matter or Body in general, to an organiz'd Human Body and to every Member thereof. No Effect can tranſcend the Perfection of its Cauſe: But theſe Faculties and Operations are certainly great Perfections, that far tranſcend the Matter with its Modifications. Self-conſciouſneſs and Self-reflection (which imply Self-penetration) is directly repugnant to the very Nature and Eſſence of the Matter, which is eſſentially Self-impenetrable. Spontaneous Motion (our immitting and directing the Animal Spirits into the Muſcles in order to local Motion, by an Act of Volition upon conſulting and deliberating within our ſelves touching Good and Evil) is an Act of free Self-determining Agency, whereas all the Motions of Matter (in reſpect of it ſelf) are purely neceſſary, and according to certain Laws of Motion. A Body cannot act but neceſſarily, as it is cauſed to act by ſome other; Atheiſm therefore that maketh Man nothing more than a corporeal Machine, bereaveth Mankind of that Liberty of Agency, whereby they are capable of deſerving Praiſe and Diſpraiſe, Rewards and Puniſhments, and thereby deſtroyeth Laws and Government. But Men may be certain, that they have within themſelves an intelligent Self-determining Mind and Soul, which cannot be deriv'd from the Dirt the Brute-corporeal Matter, which aſcertaineth the Being of God, and whereby themſelves are Men, that tranſcend the Brutes, to whoſe low Line and Level the Atheiſts degrade themſelves, and why ſhould they not be us'd like Dogs that will be no better than Dogs? Man is not like the Brutes, that have no higher cognitive Faculty than Sence and Imagination, and that look no further than the Phantaſms of Sence without at all Philoſophizing about them; his reaſoning Mind inquireth into the Nature and Cauſes of them, maketh a Judgment of them, and rectifieth the Errours of Sence; his Cogitations are not confin'd to the Objects of Sence, he ſearcheth into all recondite and myſterious Things, contemplateth things purely intelligible, reckoneth and numbreth (which the Brutes cannot) and the Natures and Eſſences of things that are univerſal and beyond Sence, are his Objects of Science. The Soul her ſelf exerteth the Second Notions, and becauſe a corporeal Subſtance can have no Perceptions, but only corporeal Impreſſes, therefore theſe Noemata of the Mind are a certain Demonſtration, that there is an incorporeal Subſtance in Man. Not only the Logical and Mathematical Terms, but our ordinary Terms of Language (as Relation, Difference, Good, Evil) have a certain Meaning and intelligible Notion, but no Phantaſm belonging to them. And as the Mind hath the Notion of many things, of which there can be no Phantaſm in Imagination: So there are many things corporeal, which ſhe clearly and diſtinctly underſtandeth, yet cannot clearly and diſtinctly imagine (as a Chiliagonum and the infinite diviſibility of quantity) and her Mathematical Ideas (as a plain Superficies, a round Globe) according to the exactneſs and accuracy of them are not to be found in external Matter. The Intelligent Mind withſtandeth the hurry of Paſſion, the inveiglements of Sence, the impoſture and tricks of Phancy; ſhe compareth the Phantaſms of Sence and Imagination, and judgeth of them, formeth Propoſitions, maketh Deductions, and cannot but form thoſe Propoſitions called common Notions, which ſhe knoweth to be Eternal Verities without any Information from Sence. Human Nature therefore is of an higher Species than the Senſitive; as bad as it is, yet there are many Inſtances in it of great Abilities for Theory and Practice, of admirable Endowments of Wiſdom and Virtue, of Invention and Judgment, of Underſtanding and Elocution, of Wit and Memory, of Policy and Prowess, of Arts and Sciences, whoſe Original is certainly from the Religioniſts Parental Nature. (k) Artes innumerabiles repertæ ſunt docente Natura.

VII. In Human Nature (degenerate) there are ſuch Moral and Religious Endowments, ſuch laudable Qualities and Properties, ſuch a kindly ſort of Inſtincts and Inclinations, that plainly ſpeak its divine Original and give Atteſtation to the Exiſtence of God. For who doth not approve and applaud Beneficence, Faithfulneſs and Juſtice? And who doth not vilifie and deteſt Maliciousneſs, Fraud and Injuſtice? A common Goodneſs of Nature, Humanity, Ingenuity, Generoſity, a natural Gratitude, Sociableneſs, Friendlineſs, a ſingular Affection towards near Relations, and civil Virtue, is common to Mankind in general, and was found in great plenty in the Heathen World. Atheiſm therefore is monſtrouſly unnatural, which together with the Exiſtence of God (Parental Nature) diſcardeth all good Nature, all Obligation to it, any Inſtitution of it by the Author of Nature, and any ſuch Inſtincts in Man's Nature. (l) A Father is nothing, a Son is nothing (Atheiſts make no account of natural Relation or Affection) with them Affection to our Offſpring is not Natural. (m) You Epicureans ſuppoſe, that Men would not be benign and beneficent, if they were not weak (if it was not meerly out of Self-intereſt, as fearing or needing others) not acknowledging any natural Love or Affection. Atheiſm therefore is deſtructive of common Goodneſs of Nature, which is manifeſtly implanted in Man by Parental Nature, whence the Ants have their Prudence, the Bees their Polity and Sexangular Cells, the Birds their curioſity in building their Neſts and care of their Young. There could have been no ſuch Goodneſs in Man's Nature, as now there is, if God was not the Author of Nature; nor would there be ſuch civil Virtues, as there are amongſt Men, if God was not the Maker and Providential Governour of Mankind, and if Man was not made by God Civil-ſocietive. In ſuch ſenſe Cicero may be underſtood, to ſay and to ſay well (n) Mind, Faith, Virtue, Concord, negare quid vis, ut ſapiens habearis. Cardan. de rer. Var. l. 16. c. 92.

---

(k) Cic. de Leg. l. 1.

(l) Ὁ πατὴρ οὐδέν ἐστι, ὁ υἱὸς οὐδέν ἐστιν. Οἷς μὴ φυσική ἐστι πρὸς τὰ ἔκγονα φιλοστοργία. Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 23. & l. 2. c. 20.

(m) Ne homines quidem cenſetis, niſi imbecilli eſſent, futuros beneficos & benignos. Nulla eſt Caritas naturalis. Cic. de N. D. l. 2.

(n) Si ineſt in homin

Concord, whence could they come upon Earth but from above? The Wiſdom and Goodneſs of Parental Providence is ſeen in the uſefulneſs of thoſe Inſtincts of Nature call'd The Paſſions (which are implanted in Man and other Animals) for the Subſtantiality of Life conſiſteth in them, thereby Man hath a little Kingdom within himſelf (conſiſting of Subjects and Sovereign) the Paſſion of Veneration is requiſite in Government, Anger for the exerciſe of Fortitude, Commiſeration is for ſuccouring the Afflicted, Fear for avoiding Danger, and all the other Paſſions are of good uſe (which ſheweth, that Nature had a very wiſe and deſigning Author) and ſome of them (as the Paſſion of Devotion) are plain Indications, that Man was made for Religion. Mankind are by natural inſtinct (in ſome ſort) the devotional Suppliants of an inviſible ſuperiour Power, and have ſo ſtrong a propenſion to Religion, that they will rather worſhip Rivers, Trees and a Red Cloth, than live without a Religious Worſhip, of which the Deity alone is the due object. And as there would not have been ſuch a natural Appetite as Hunger, if there had been no Meat (for Nature doth nothing in vain:) So if there had not been a God, there would not have been in Man a natural propenſion to Religion. Mankind hath alſo Natural Conſcience, which is a conſciouſneſs of Duty and of Sin, of well and evil-doing with reſpect to an inviſible ſuperiour Power. Metus Conſcientiæ is one of their natural Paſſions, upon violating the Dictates of their Conſcience they have naturally a remorſe of Conſcience, and a preſage that ſome penal evil will befall them (from an inviſible ſuperiour Power) becauſe of the Evil which they have done; and upon well-doing according to their Conſcience they have naturally an hope and confidence of their ſafety and proſperity, and that doing well they ſhall fare well. (o) Conſcience is the beſt Witneſs of a Deity. (p) God hath primordially endow'd the Soul with a Conſcience, which is the ſame in all Nations and People. If any ſeem to themſelves, to have extinguiſh'd the Senſe of Conſcience, uſually they find the contrary, that they have only laid it to ſleep, and that when Troubles and Dangers come, it awaketh like a ſleeping Lion. Or if there be any that have totally extinguiſh'd it, theſe have manifeſtly extinguiſh'd the Light of Nature, and have done ſuch violence to their Minds, as is done to the Senſories of the Body by a violent Diſeaſe, whereby Senſation is deſtroy'd. Natural Conſcience implieth, that there is in Man the Faculty called liberum arbitrium (elſe it would be folly, for Men to be troubled for their evil-doings) and that there is a Law of Nature, a natural Ethicks and diſcipline of Morality, a well-doing and evil-doing, duty and ſin, antecedently to any Humane Inſtitution, which is a plain truth and plainly deſtructive to Atheiſm.

VIII. As the Mundus Naturalis is a well-made Syſtem, ſo is the Mundus Humanus as it conſiſteth of Societies (leſſer and greater Polities) that are beauteous and uſeful Structures. Theſe give an atteſtation to the Exiſtence of God; for none elſe can reaſonably be ſuppos'd, to be the Founder of them; and they ſhew, that Man is made and deſign'd for Society, whence the Exiſtence of God appeareth. The Atheiſts that diſcard the Exiſtence of God, diſcard therewith the natural Societiveneſs of Man, and not without great reaſon; for that God exiſteth and is the Maker of Man, is as evident, as that Man is made and deſign'd for Society. And it is evident, that Man is ſo made; for he is not only ſociable towards thoſe of his own kind by kindly natural Inſtinct and Inclination, as the Brutes are, but he is capable of proper Laws and Government, of minding the common good and of Arts needful for Humane Society. He hath the power of Speech, which would be in vain, if Man was not deſign'd to live in Society. His natural Paſſions of Veneration, Glory, Shame, manifeſtly relate to Society. So doth the thin Skin of his Face (through which his Cogitations and Paſſions make a diſcovery of themſelves) the ſmoothneſs of his Face (not cover'd with Hair as the Brutes) the pulchritude of his Countenance, the difference of Mens Countenances in vaſt variety (wereby they are known one from another) and the different Qualifications of Men, ſome being magnanimous, others of a ſofter temper, ſome being fitted for the Pen, others for the Plough, ſome to command, others to obey, that the welfare of the whole might be provided for, by that which every Joynt ſupplieth. Mankind are born in Families, conſtitute and live in Families, in which there is a conſtant cohabitation of both Sexes for their mutual help and comfort, for the propagation of their Species, and to take care of their Off-ſpring (which continueth weak and feeble much longer than that of Brutes, and therefore requireth a conſtant cohabitation and continued care of the Parents) theſe Family-Societies are plainly by the order and deſign of Nature, Mankind are manifeſtly deſign'd to live in Family-Societies (the firſt elementary Societies) which therefore derive their origin from Parental Providence, which alſo continueth the different Sexes of Animals (Male and Female) in due proportion throughout all Ages of the world. (ſ) And becauſe Solitude is intolerable to every Man, even with an infinite abundance of Pleaſures, hence it is plain, that we are naturally deſign'd for a Conjunction and a Community. Mankind are neceſſitated, to live in Society, in which there is no living without a God and Providence, a Life to come and a Religion. (q) For there can be no good of Virtue in Humane Life, if there be no Religion; nor any thing to reſtrain Men from any Heart-villainy, or any ſecret Villainy, or any Villainy that they can commit with ſafety and impunity in this World, nor from any Villainy ſave only ſo far as they want an opportunity to commit it. The Religion of an Oath muſt be out of doors. None can have the right of Authority and Sovereignty, nor can others be under a conſcientious obligation to Subjection and Obedience. Princes cannot be conſcientiouſly oblig'd, to keep Faith with their Neighbour-princes, or to govern their Subjects with Wiſdom and Juſtice, or to ſtand to the Pacts and Covenants which they make with them: nor can themſelves have any ſecurity from Aſſaſſination and Violence; for Strength muſt be the Law of Juſtice.

nere Mens, Fides, Virtus, Concordia, unde hæc in terras niſi à ſuperis defluere potuerunt? Cic. de N. D. l. 2.

(o) Conſcientia optima teſtis Divinitatis. Tertull. de Teſtim. Anim.

(p) Animæ à primordio Conſcientia Dei dos eſt, eadem nec alia & in Ægyptiis, & in Syris, & in Ponticis. Idem c. Marcion. l. 1. c. 10.

(ſ) Quodque nemo in ſolitudine vitam agere velit, ne cum infinita quidem voluptatum abundantia facilè intelligitur, nos ad conjunctionem congregationemque hominum & ad naturalem communitatem eſſe natos. Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

(q) Sine qua vita hominum ſtultitia, ſcelere, immanitate completur. Lactant. de Ira, c. 8.

IX. The ancient Writers report (r) an univerſal conſent of Nations touching the Exiſtence of a Deity. Some modern Travellers ſay otherwiſe, and make an Exception of ſome barbarous unciviliz'd Nations at the Bay of Soldania, in Braſil, and the Caribee Iſlands, in Newfoundland and New France, the Natives whereof are ſaid to live without any acknowledgment of a God and Senſe of Religion. But although theſe Savages are ſo extremely degenerate into Bruitiſhneſs, that they ſcarce deſerve to be reckon'd amongſt Mankind, and if they live without Civil Government, they muſt be acknowledg'd hugely anomalous and diſſonant from the Nations, yet it is great raſhneſs and unadviſedneſs, to believe theſe Reports (s) of their total Irreligion. For ſome of theſe Reporters contradict themſelves (as J. Lerius manifeſtly doth) others of them are contradicted by other Travellers, that were better acquainted with theſe Savages and better underſtood their Sentiments. It is poſſible, that ſome perſons amongſt them may live in the total neglect of a God and a Religion; that thoſe who have little of Political Government (which they cannot be wholly without) have little Religion; and that the Univerſality of them make no great ſhew of any Religion: And this ſeemeth to be all the truth, that is in the Story. The Exiſtence of a Deity hath certainly the general conſent of Nations to recommend it, and is ſo evident, that the World of Mankind have always ſtood convicted of the truth of it; it may juſtly be reckon'd one of their common Notions, and becauſe it is the common Senſe of Mankind, it muſt be accounted true in the Judgment of common Senſe and according to the light of Nature. Had it been wholly an arbitrarious Fiction or Impoſture, it is not poſſible, that there could have been ſo univerſal an agreement both touching the Exiſtence of a Deity, and alſo the Properties and Attributes of a Deity, and that theſe Notices and Opinions ſhould not wear away and vaniſh (as Impoſtures do, that in proceſs of time are diſcover'd) but continue firm and immoveable throughout all Times and Ages. No Cauſe can reaſonably be aſſign'd of this ſo univerſal a Conſent but Nature, Univerſal Mundane Nature and the Nature of Man. (t) Seeing this Opinon is not eſtabliſh'd by any Inſtitution, Cuſtom or Law, and among all without exception a firm conſent doth continue, it muſt neceſſarily be underſtood, that there are Gods, we having implanted or rather innate Notices of them; but that about which there is a conſent of all by nature, that muſt neceſſarily be true. The belief of the Soul's Immortality and of a Life to come, which is the general Senſe of Mankind, and which inferreth the Exiſtence of a Deity, both iſſue from the ſame cauſe, and are the eminent Branches of Natural Religion, which is a Property of Man's Nature.

To theſe evident Notices of the Exiſtence of God from Nature we may annex extraordinary and ſpecial Providences. For although Providence is a ſomewhat lubricous Argument (the ways of governing Providence being various and myſterious) and although this ſort of Providences are no ſenſible Miracles, nor can ſo eaſily be diſtinguiſh'd as they from what is done by the meer agency of ſecond Cauſes; yet there are ſeveral Occurrences in Humane Affairs, that in fair and reaſonable conſtruction muſt be accounted ſpecial Providences, and carry the marks of a divine Hand. Such is the diſperſion of the Jews and their continuing a diſtinct People in their diſperſion (a thing that hath no parallel in Hiſtory) the portentous preſignifications (u) that have uſher'd in calamitous Wars, ſtrange deliverances of good Men and of Societies of good People, ſtrange diſcoveries of Plots and of Murders, remarkable Judgments that have befallen Perſecutors and Tyrants, and other wicked Grandees of the World; ſignal Anſwers of Prayer, and the decay and ruine of many great Families for their Injuſtice. (w) The ſudden riſe of the Macedonian and ruine of the Perſian Monarchy was plainly an Act of Divine Providence; the Heathen Poets and Hiſtorians with great reaſon aſcribe it to Fate, for Darius was manifeſtly blinded in his Conduct, when he fought with Alexander. (x) The greatneſs of the Roman Empire was decreed by Fate (ſaith Machiavel) and the ruine of it was by a Divine Fate, for the barbarous Northern Nations that devaſtated it, acknowledg'd, that their Invaſion of it was not of themſelves, but they were divinely impell'd thereto. The Juſtice of Providence is very viſible in thoſe Temporal Judgments, that have a conformity and reſemblance to the Sin, that is the cauſe of them. The iſſue of many Wars and Battels hath been determin'd by ſome ſpecial Providence. The Impunity of ſome Men outragiouſly wicked is not ſo great an Objection againſt Providence, but that ſome remarkable Inſtances of its Juſtice may reaſonably move an ingenuous Pagan, to make ſuch an acknowledgment, as Manlius Torquatus made, when finding Annius lying dead at the Foot of the Steps of the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus (after an inſolent Speech which he had made againſt the Romans) he cried out, (y) Eſt cæleſte Numen, es magne Jupiter: There is a God in Heaven, Thou art O mighty Jove! The Lord is known by the Judgment that he executeth, as he is by Mundane Nature.

X. If the Exiſtence of God is naturally notic'd to Mankind, a Law of Religion and Virtue (which is the Law of Nature) is naturally notic'd unto them; for to be the Imperial Eſtate of God to us, is neceſſarily the Law of our Subjection and Service unto him, and of this Univerſal Righteouſneſs, that we ſin not againſt him. But this natural Notice of the Exiſtence of God and of a Law of Religion and Virtue is of a twofold Notion. For the Exiſtence of a Deity (Supreme Deity) in general, and a Law of Religion and Virtue in general hath the Notoreity of a natural Notice to the World of Mankind: And the Exiſtence of the true God with his Law of true Religion and Virtue that hath not the Notoreity, hath the Verity of a natural Notice to the World of Mankind; whence they are neceſſarily oblig'd to all that Religious Subjection and Service, Honour and Worſhip (Internal and External) which Sanctity and Piety is the comprehenſion of, and which is manifeſtly in its own nature Piety and God-ſervice, a virtuous and honourary congruity unto God. If he is notic'd to them as of right and due the Imperial-eſtate of God to them, they muſt neceſſarily have this Notice, that they are of right and by obligation his Subjects and Religioniſts, that are bound, to give unto him the rights and dues of his Godhead; which is a terrible Prohibition to them, not to live in Atheiſm (ſpeculative or practical)

(r) Ariſtot. Met. l. 12. c. 8. Cic. de Leg. l. 1. de N. D. l. 1. Tuſc. l. 1. Sen. Ep. 117. Plutarch. adv. Colot. p. 1125. M. Tyr. diſſ. 1.

(o) Hoffman. umbr. in luce, p. 49.

(t) Cum enim non inſtituto aliquo aut more, aut lege, ſit opinio conſtituta, maneatque ad unum omnium firma conſenſio, intelligi neceſſe eſt eſſe Deos, quoniam inſitas eorum, vel potius innatas cognitiones habemus; de quo autem omnium natura conſentit, id verum eſſe neceſſe eſt. Cic. de N. D. l. 1.

(u) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 5. c. 23.

(w) Dr. Jackson of the Div. Eſſ. and Attrib. par. 2. s. 2. c. 25.

(x) Ibid. c. 27.

(y) Liv. l. 8. c. 6.

practical) Profaneneſs, neglect, oblivion or contempt of God and his Service, not to alienate themſelves from Him, or be evil-doers towards Him, injurious, unthankful and unworthy, not to diſparage Him and make Him vile, not to put Diſgraces and Contumelies upon him, not to deny his Sovereignty and Attributes (by not making a virtuous and honourary acknowledgment of them) not to Paganize or Atheize the Deity or undeify Him (any way) nor to give his proper Honour to another, deifying Vilities and thereby blaſphemouſly reproaching God, which was a principal Crime of the Heathen World, which ſwarm'd with Idols and fictitious Deities, yet knew God (had the true God notic'd to them) Rom. 1 21. 19, 20, 18. τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, that which may be naturally known of God was notic'd to them, was manifeſt in them (in their Minds) for God had ſhew'd it unto them. His Truth therefore (his practical Truth, namely, thoſe Notices and Inſtructions, Rules and Precepts which concern the Service of God) was not unknown to them, as the Apoſtle affirmeth. His Truth and their Duty could not but be notic'd, if the Exiſtence of the Imperial Eſtate of God was notic'd to them; knowing this they could not but know (in great degree) that juſt and agreeable worſhip and ſervice, which they ow'd unto Him, and that Man muſt be religious towards God. Not only ſingly but in ſociety Man muſt be religious towards God (the publick religious Worſhip in Aſſemblies and Societies of Men being highly honourary to God and beneficial to Man;) and ſeeing God is naturally notic'd unto all Men as a Sovereign Power over them, that ſuperintendeth their Affairs and Ways, is juſt in his Government, and will reward or puniſh them, as they are well-doers or evil-doers (ſo that they cannot be ignorant, that they muſt drink as they brew, and fare as they obſerve or violate the Truth which is notic'd unto them) it is manifeſt, that they are under the obligation of Non licet impunè not to be evil-doers but well-doers, and that a neceſſity of living the good life and of Univerſal Righteouſneſs is notic'd to all Men by the light of Nature, which noticeth the Exiſtence of God. The Heathen World that wallow'd in Impieties and Impurities, yet knew the Rom. 1. 32. Judgment of God, that Men ought not to be evil-doers, and that they which do ſuch things are evil-doers and worthy of Death. (z) Verily there is a God, that heareth and ſeeth what we do, who will deal with every Man, as he is well or ill deſerving, ſaith an Heathen Comedian.

(a) Men and Angels are created with Reaſon, to know by whom they are made, καὶ μετὰ νόμου τοῦ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ κρίνεσθαι, ἐὰν παρὰ τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον πράττωσι, and with a Law that they muſt be judged by him, if they do what is contrary to right reaſon. (b) All Men that behold the World and the ordinate motion in Heaven and the fix'd Stars, and the order of the Planets that are carry'd by a contrary motion, that diſcern the Temperature of the Air for the benefit of Animals and of Men chiefly, and the abundance of things that are made for Men, εὐλαβείσθωσαν δυσαρεστόν τι ποιῆσαι τῷ δημιουργῷ τοῦ παντὸς καὶ τῶν ψυχῶν αὐτῶν, let them piouſly fear, to do any thing diſpleaſing to the Creator of all and of their Souls. (c) The Heavens teach all Men and Nations διὰ τῆς ὄψεως, by our ſeeing their Pulchritude, their Magnitude, their Height, their Situation, their Figure, their Permanency, &c. διδασκόμενος διὰ τῆς ὄψεως προσκυνεῖς τὸν ποιήσαντα, being taught by thine Eye-ſight thou worſhippeſt the maker of them. That is the Natural Conſequence and the Law of Nature.

SECTION II.

The Law of Nature is notic'd to Mankind by the nature of well and evil-doing as underſtood by the Mind and diſcern'd by our natural Reaſon and Underſtanding.

I. AS every Man hath the Exiſtence of God externally notic'd unto him (the meaneſt Ruſtick who cannot but diſcern, that his Cow is made to give him Milk, her Paps to give ſuck, his Sheep to afford him Cloathing, hath God notic'd to him) and as the Mind of Man of it ſelf diſcerneth τὸ εὖ καὶ καλῶς, the Well and Fit that is in External Nature: in like manner what is good and evil, right and wrong, is (in good degree) notic'd to every Man, and the Mind of her ſelf diſcerneth what is the Beauteous-Beneficial and the Foul-Maleficial practice. (d) Communis Intelligentia res nobis notas efficit: common underſtanding noticeth theſe things to us. (e) Men are ſelf-taught the knowledge of Virtue: we need not external teaching; for we have in our Nature the knowledge of it, without labour and toil, without going about and inquiring whether Temperance be good and profitable, with one Mind we all acknowledge it, and none maketh doubt of the Virtue: So we account Adultery evil, without labour or teaching we know the naughtineſs of the Sin. In theſe and the like computations of things all of us are ſelf-taught. An Hebrew Doctor, R. Aſar ſaith, (f) the Chriſtians look upon this as the Summary of the Law of Nature, Quod odioſum tibi eſt, proximo tuo nè feceris. He ſpeaketh the Senſe of the ancient Chriſtian Writers, who often repreſent this Maxim as a Summary of the Law of Nature (although they are far from confining it thereto) and celebrate it for the ſelf-evident Juſtice thereof. J. Mart. looketh upon this as the Summary of Juſtice, (g) He that loveth his Neighbour as himſelf, his volition of Goods to him will be the ſame as to himſelf. (h) Thou knoweſt the good which thou oughteſt to do to thy Neighbour (ſaith S. Baſil) that which thou would'ſt have another to do to thee. Thou knoweſt what is evil; that which thou would'ſt not have done to thee by another. This knowledge of Good and Evil we have (ſaith he) from the ἀδίδακτος τῆς φύσεως νόμος, untaught Law of Nature. (i) According to what is ſaid, they are a Law to themſelves (ſaith S. Auſtin) all the Sinners of the Earth are deſervedly counted Sinners; for there is none that doth an Injury to another, but he that would not have it done to himſelf; and in this he tranſgreſſeth the Law of Nature, which he cannot be ignorant of, becauſe he doth that which he will not ſuffer. (k) Art thou only a Man? doſt thou

(z) Eſt profectò Deus, qui quæ nos gerimus auditque & videt Bene merenti benè pro fuerit, malè merenti par erit. Plaut. in Captiv. Act. 2. Scen. 2.

(a) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 370.

(b) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 411, 412.

(c) S. Chryſoſt. Ἀνδριαντ. 9.

(d) Cic ap. Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 7.

(e) Αὐτοδίδακτοι ἄνθρωποι πρὸς τὴν τῆς ἀρετῆς γνῶσιν· οὐ δεόμεθα λόγων, οὐδὲ διδασκαλίας, ἔχομεν γὰρ ἐν τῇ φύσει τὴν γνῶσιν αὐτῆς, καὶ οὐ χρεία πόνων, οὐδὲ καμάτων, ὥστε περιελθεῖν καὶ ζητῆσαι, εἰ καλὸν ἡ σωφροσύνη, καὶ χρήσιμον· ἀλλὰ κοινῇ γνώμῃ πάντες ὁμολογοῦμεν τοῦτο, καὶ οὐδεὶς ἀμφιβάλλει περὶ τῆς ἀρετῆς. οὕτω καὶ τὴν μοιχείαν κακὸν εἶναι νομίζομεν, καὶ οὐδὲ ἐνταῦθα πόνων ἡμῖν δεῖ καὶ μαθήσεως, ὥστε γνῶναι τὴν τῆς ἁμαρτίας ταύτης κακίαν, ἀλλὰ πάντες ἐν ταῖς τοιαύταις ψήφοις ἐσμὲν αὐτοδίδακτοι. S. Chryſoſt. Hom. 12. & 13. ad Pop. Antioch.

(f) Hotting. Theſ. Phil. p. 543.

(g) Ὁ τὸν πλησίον ὡς ἑαυτὸν ἀγαπῶν, ὥσπερ αὐτῷ βούλεται ἀγαθὰ, κἀκείνῳ βουλήσεται. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 321.

(h) Οἶδας τί ποιήσεις τῷ πλησίον καλόν· ὃ σεαυτῷ βούλει παρ' ἑτέρου γίνεσθαι. οἶδας ὅτι ποτέ ἐστι τὸ κακόν· ὃ οὐκ ἂν αὐτὸς παθεῖν ἕλοιο παρ' ἑτέρου. S. Baſil. Hexaem. Hom. 9.

(i) Secundum id quod ait, ipſi ſibi ſunt lex, non immeritò prævaricatores æſtimantur omnes peccatores terræ. Nullus enim eſt, qui faciat alteri injuriam, niſi qui ſibi fieri nolit. & in hoc tranſgreditur naturæ legem, quam non ſinitur ignorare, dum id quod facit non vult pati. S. Aug. in Pſal. 118. Con. 25.

(k) Apud ſe habet unde no

thou not live in the ſociety of Mankind? every Man knoweth from himſelf what he ought to do to another. (l) Inſtead of a written Law he hath Conſcience and Reaſon, which ſufficeth inſtead thereof, as S. Chryſoſtom ſaith. (m) The natural Law ſpeaketh in our Hearts, all the Goods are to be done and the Evils to be eſchew'd. The Mind is of ſuch a frame, that ſhe naturally and rightly noticeth to all Men touching ſome things, that they are of ſuch a nature, that they cannot be done, and touching other things that they cannot be left undone, without the guilt and criminality of being Evil-doers, and that their being ſuch is contrary to the Mind of God, and ſubjecteth them to his punitive Diſpleaſure: as on the contrary, their being well-doers is according to the Mind of God, and intitleth them to his Favour and Rewards; And the Syſtem of theſe natural Notices is the Law of Nature. This definitive Notion of it is agreeable to the Senſe of the ancient Writers, whoſe Account of it I look upon as true and genuine in the main; and to make it appear ſuch, I will diſtinctly conſider the ſeveral Objections, which modern Writers have made againſt it.

II. One Objection againſt the ancient Writers account of the Law of Nature is, that it ſuppoſeth the Legiſlative Power of Reaſon, which is not to be ſuppos'd. (n) Reaſon is not the Law or its Meaſure; neither can any Man be ſure, that any thing is a Law of Nature, becauſe it ſeems to him hugely reaſonable, neither if it be ſo indeed, is it therefore a Law. For Reaſon can demonſtrate, and it can perſwade, and invite, but not compel any thing but Aſſent, not Obedience, and therefore it is no Law. Meer Reaſon is not Law, but Reaſon complicated with what is Law is neceſſarily Law, and ſuch is the Reaſon which the ancient Writers mean and ſpeak of, although they are not always careful, to repreſent it as ſuch, but often ſpeak of it, as if it was meer Reaſon. The Heathen generally look'd upon the Mind as a Demon or a God, and their rule was, (o) to do all things, which the Demon willeth or injoyneth, which Jupiter hath appointed to preſide in every one, to be his Leader and Pædagogue, and to do nothing againſt my proper God and Demon, which is the Mind, and the Mind ſo conſider'd is Jupiter's Vicegerent and is Legiſlative by his Authority: whence it might be called by ſome of them, (p) ὁ νομοθέτης νοῦς, the Lawgiver-mind. But moſt uſually the ancient Writers look upon the Law of Nature as a Law, that God hath put into our Nature and hath written in the Minds of Men. So S. Chryſoſtom ſaith, that when God formed Man (q) νόμον αὐτῷ φυσικὸν ἐγκατέθηκε, he put into him a natural Law: When Man was formed, the knowledge of the facienda & fugienda (ἡ γνῶσις τῶν πρακτέων) was implanted in him. So S. Auſtin ſaith, (r) There is no Soul of Man that hath the uſe of Reaſon, in whoſe Conſcience God doth not ſpeak; for who but God writeth the natural Law in the Hearts of Men? (s) The true Law, not ingraven in Tables, nor cut in Braſs, but impreſs'd upon Minds. In the ſame manner (t) Philo and the Pagan Theologers repreſent the Law of Nature (Right Reaſon) ſtiling it, a Law immortal by an immortal Nature imprinted in an immortal Mind, in contradiſtinction to mortal Laws that by this or that mortal are written on inanimate Papers or Pillars: (u) Sometime ſtiling it Characters in the Mind: (w) Sometimes the unwritten Law. But when Right Reaſon is thus intituled Law by the ancient Writers, they do not conſider it as meer Reaſon (which yet is fit to guide and govern) but they conſider it as complicated with what is Law. For as Right Reaſon noticeth what is the well-doing and the evil-doing, it is complicated with what is in its own nature matter of Law. And as it noticeth, that the well-doing and the being well-doers is according to the mind of God, and the evil-doing and the being evil-doers is againſt the mind of God, it is complicated with what is Law by a Superiour Authority. And that the Ancient Writers conſider Right Reaſon as thus complicated, appeareth from their ſtiling it, (x) κανόνα τὸν θεῖον, the Divine Rule, and from their ſaying, that (y) θεὸς ὁ νομοθέτης, God is the Lawgiver here. (z) Unus eſt communis quaſi Magiſter & Imperator omnium Deus. Ille leges hujus Inventor, Diſceptator, Lator. There is one common Maſter as it were and Commander of all, that is God. He is the Inventor, Examiner and Giver of this Law. The Laws of Nature muſt be conſider'd not as the Dictates of meer Right Reaſon but as the Dictates of Conſcientious Right Reaſon.

III. A ſecond Objection is made againſt the ancient Writers, that in their Account of the Law of Nature the proof of its Legiſlation from God is wanting. (a) All Writers upon this Subject thought it ſufficient, to define the Law of Nature, to be only a dictate of Right Reaſon, without deducing its Authority from God as a Legiſlator: Or if they have ſuppos'd God the Author of it, as Suarez in his Book de Legibus and Grotius in his de Jure Belli & Pacis have done; yet they contented themſelves with ſuppoſing, that God had impreſs'd theſe Ideas upon Mens Souls, as ſo many innate Notions, which they call the Light of Nature. (b) This Mr. Selden hath ſuggeſted to the Moral Philoſophers, who are wont to conſider the Dictates of their Reaſon as Laws without ſufficient proof, either that they have the neceſſary form of Laws, or are eſtabliſh'd by God. But this great Author himſelf hath ſhew'd, (c) that a governing Providence juſt towards all (remunerative or punitive) as they are the Well-doers or the Evil-doers is notic'd and acknowledg'd in Chriſtianiſm, Judaiſm, Muhammediſm and Paganiſm. Paganiſm aboundeth with Notices of it; and if this Principle is univerſally notic'd, and is generally entertain'd by the ancient Writers, it is impoſſible, that their Diſcipline of Morality ſhould be ſo defective, as not to ſhew, that the Dictates of Right Reaſon have at leaſt an equipollent Legiſlation from God and the form of Laws. Three things they are careful to obſerve and copiouſly diſcourſe. (1.) That the Mind is by God naturally furniſh'd rit, quia quod ſibi non vult fieri, non debet facere alteri.—— Si non vis pati iſta, nunquid ſolus es homo? nonne in ſocietate vivis generis humani? Qui tecum factus eſt, ſocius tuus eſt. Ibid. in Pſal. 51. Enarr.

---

(l) Ἀρκεῖ γὰρ ἀντὶ τοῦ νόμου τὸ συνειδὸς καὶ λογισμός. S. Chryſoſt. in Ep. ad Rom. λογ. ε.

(m) Naturalis lex loquitur in cordibus noſtris, bona quæque facienda & vitanda mala. S. Hieron. com. in Gal. 3. 2.

(n) Ratio quatenus talis ſolùm & ſimplex ſuadet & demonſtrat, non jubet, aut ad officium, niſi ſuperioris eo qui jubetur, accedat ſimul auctoritas, obligat, neque enim imperare ſibi, neque ſe prohibere quiſquam poteſt. Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 7. Bp. Taylor. Duct. Dub. B. 2. c. 1. n. 30.

(o) Ποιεῖν ὅσα βούλεται ὁ δαίμων, ὃν ἑκάστῳ προστάτην καὶ ἡγεμόνα Ζεὺς ἔδωκεν· μηδὲν πράσσειν παρὰ τὸν ἐμὸν θεὸν καὶ δαίμονα. M. Ant. l. 5. S. 10, 27. Gat. Not. p. 232. Hierocl. in aur. Carm. p. 118, 214. Grot. Not. in Rom. 2. 15.

(p) Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 209, 210.

(q) Hom. 12. & 13. ad pop. Antioch.

(r) Nullam animam eſſe, quæ ratiocinari poſſit, in cujus conſcientia non loquatur Deus. Quis enim legem naturalem in cordibus hominum ſcribit, niſi Deus? Suarez de Leg. l. 2. c. 5

(s) Lex vera, non inſculpta tabulis, nec ære inciſa, ſed impreſſa mentibus. S. Ambroſ. in Pſal. 104.

(t) De boni Hom. Libert.

(u) Χαρακτῆρας ἐν τῇ διανοίᾳ. Epict. Diſſ. l. 4. c. 5.

(w) Ὁ δὲ νοῦς καθάπερ ἐν πόλει νόμος, ἀλλὰ θεὸς μὲν ὁ νομοθέτης, ἄγραφος δὲ ὁ νόμος. M. Tyr. Diſſ. 40.

(x) Hierocl. ſupr. p. 234.

(y) M. Tyr. ſupr.

(z) Cic. apud Lactant. l. 6. c. 9. & Selden. ſupr. l. 1. c. 8.

(a) Mr. Tyrrell of the Law of Nat. p. 372.

(b) De Leg. Nat. Diſſ. proleg. S. 5.

(c) De J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 4.

niſh'd with Notices of what is the Well-doing and the Evil-doing, the Summary whereof they call the Natural Law and uſually right Reaſon and the Dictates thereof. (d) Who ſhall Rule the Prince that ruleth all? That which is the King of all, Mortals and Immortals (as Pindar ſaith) the Law, not an external Law written in Books or in Wood, but his own animative Reaſon. Agreeably whereto the Vices of the Mind are ſaid to be (e) ἀποστροφαὶ καὶ ἀποτεύγματα τοῦ ὀρθοῦ λόγου, Averſions and Errata from right Reaſon, and in the Platonic Definitions Ἁμαρτία πρᾶξις παρὰ τὸν ὀρθὸν λογισμόν, Sin is a practice againſt right Reaſon. The Philoſophers Ethicks, their account of what is Virtue and Vice, and of the Duty of Man (f) τί πρὸς θεοὺς ἐστὶ καθῆκον, τί πρὸς γονεῖς, τί πρὸς ἀδελφούς, τί πρὸς πατρίδα, τί πρὸς ξένους, what his Duty is to the Gods, what to his Parents, what to his Brethren, what to his Country, what to Strangers, was the Dictate of their Reaſon, and their Sayings ſhew what ſeem'd to them in its own Nature Good or Evil. But ſeveral of their Sayings are ſuch miſtakes, which ſhew that their Reaſon wanted a Rectification, that the particular Laws of Nature have not ſo full and perfect a Revelation and Legiſlation from God as the Laws of ſupernatural Revelation, and that (although Mankind by conſidering the Nature of any Practice may, and ordinarily do know whether it be a Branch of the Law of Nature, yet) Men need the aids of ſupernatural Revelation, to better their knowledge of the Law of Nature. But doubtleſs it is not the way to edifie them much in this Knowledge, to ſend them (g) to the Corn-fields (h) or to the wide World (which is ſaid to be as God's Statute-Book) to learn the Laws of Nature. Yet for the ſake of this method of Underſtanding the Law of Nature the ancient Accounts of it are diſcarded, and the Definition of it by (i) many ſagacious accurate Schoolmen, Philoſophers, Lawyers and Divines, is charg'd with falſhood. (2.) The ancient Writers and thoſe that Symbolize with them obſerve that the Laws of Nature are of Self-obligation. (k) The Law of Nature is in its ſelf good and agreeable to the Idea of the divine Sanctity, ſo that if it had never had a Legiſlation, yet in true judgment it would ſeem to oblige. Whence Idolatry (for inſtance) is a Sin, not becauſe God would prohibit it, but becauſe it is Self-odious: So we Worſhip God, not only becauſe it is his Will, but becauſe he is our God: So we owe Obedience to God, not only becauſe he hath commanded it, ſo that if an Angel ſhould command, we ſhould owe the like Obedience, but becauſe we are his, by natural right oblig'd. So the Schools ſay of Sins againſt the Law of Nature (l) Prohibita ſunt quia mala, they are prohibited becauſe they are Evil. There are ſome Affections and Practices (ſuch as Envy, Homicide, rejoicing in the Calamities of others) that are neceſſarily συνειλημμένα μετὰ τῆς φαυλότητος, complicated with pravity, (m) ſaith Ariſtotle, who ſuppoſeth, that Virtue (the Morals of it) ought to be practis'd διὰ τὸ καλὸν becauſe it is bonum honeſtum. So Plato (in ſeveral of his Dialogues) diſputeth, that Virtue and Vice are eſſentially and in their own Nature ſuch. The Pagan Moraliſts very well underſtood, that Vice is in it ſelf a criminal Evil and full of Penal Evils, that Virtue is the true Excellency and Felicity of Man, and that they were oblig'd to practiſe the Law of Nature as Men, (n) and that by diſobeying it they loſt the Dignity of Men. (3.) The ancient Writers obſerve and diſcourſe, that the Laws of Nature are of Authoritative Obligation, and therefore the Heathen practiſe them from a Principle of Religion.

(o) For God Wills lawful Riches, but to get
By violence and rapine God doth hate.
(p) For evil Deeds the Gods do not affect,
But know Mens Works and Puniſhment inflict.

The Exiſtence of a juſt Providence notic'd to Mankind is an Injunction of the Bonum Honeſtum as pleaſing to God, and a Prohibition of the malum turpe as diſpleaſing to his Authoritative Will. From this Notice therefore the Dictates of right Reaſon have neceſſarily the Form of Laws and a Legiſlation from God agreeable to Mic. 6. 8. He hath ſhewed thee, O Man, what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee? For by the Dictates of right Reaſon he ſheweth unto Man what is good, and by the Notice of his juſt governing Providence he noticeth unto Man, that he requireth of him the doing of it. Whence the ancient Moraliſts ſay, that (q) λόγῳ ὀρθῷ πείθεσθαι καὶ θεῷ ταυτόν ἐστι, to obey right Reaſon and to obey God is the ſame thing. They do not content themſelves with ſuppoſing, that God hath impreſs'd the Law of Nature upon Men's Souls, but they deduce its Authority from his Authority; for they ſuppoſe, that this is a common Notion (r) that the Will of God is juſt at the higheſt rate, that therefore what is foul and diſhoneſt and contrary to right Reaſon, cannot but be offenſive to him, and the contrary cannot but be pleaſing. They obſerve alſo (s) nos ad juſtitiam eſſe natos, that we are deſign'd by the great Author of Nature to do what is Juſt; he therefore that doth what is unjuſt, is impious againſt God (as the Philoſophic Emperour ſaith) and to practice Juſtice, is of his Appointment. From the Notice whereof and of his juſt governing Providence the Laws of Nature have the Form of Laws, and they have alſo the Sanction of Laws. For as Men are the Well-doers or the Evil-doers his juſt governing Providence rewardeth and puniſheth both in this and the other Life, and this is common Notion. His Providence is called (t) Nemeſis ἀπὸ τῆς ἑκάστῳ διανεμήσεως, from diſtributing to every one his due Portion. In this Life (u) Wars, Diſeaſes and Deaths are Puniſhments inflicted for the Sins of Men; and in the Life to come quod quiſque fecit patitur. The Senſe of the Heathen Religioniſts is thus expreſs'd in Plato's Gorgias.

(d) Τίς οὖν ἄρξει τοῦ ἄρχοντος; ὁ νόμος, ὁ πάντων βασιλεὺς θνητῶν τε καὶ ἀθανάτων (ὥς φησι Πίνδαρος) οὐκ ἐν βιβλίοις ἔξω γεγραμμένος, οὐδέ τισι ξύλοις, ἀλλ' ἔμψυχος ὢν ἑαυτῷ λόγος. Plutarch. ad princip. indoct. p. 780.

(e) Hier. in aur. Car. p. 105.

(f) Epict. diss. l. 2. c. 17.

(g) Bp. Parker of the Law of Nat. p. 19.

(h) Mr. Baxter Reaſ. of the Chriſt. Rel. Par. 1. c. 10.

(i) Ibid.

(k) Lex naturalis eſt per ſe bona ac ideæ ſanctitatis divinæ conſentanea, adeò ut ſi vel maximè nunquam lata fuiſſet, tamen vero judicio videretur obligare, unde, non quia Deus voluit, exempli gratia, prohibere idololatriam, ſed quia per ſe digna odio, peccatum eſt: Sic adoramus Deum, non tantum quia ipſe voluit, ſed & quia Deus eſt noſter: Ita obedientiam debemus Deo, non ſolum quia Deus id juſſit, adeòque etiam angelo jubenti parem obedientiam deberemus, ſed quia res Dei ſumus conſequenter ex naturali jure obligati. D. Dannh. ap. Bebel. de princip. Offic. Chriſt. p. 144.

(l) Aquin. 2da 2dæ Qu. 57 Art. 1.

(m) Eth. l. 2. c. 5. & l. 9. c. 8.

(n) Cui qui non parebit, ipſe ſe fugiet, ac naturam hominis aſpernatus, hoc ipſo luet maximas pœnas. Cic. ap. Lactant. l. 6. c. 8.

(o) Nam Deus odit violentiam, legitimè parta
Poſſidere vult omnes, non rapinam exercere. Eurip. Helena.

(p) Οὐ γὰρ σχέτλια ἔργα θεοὶ μάκαρες φιλέουσι
Ἀλλὰ δίκην τίνουσι καὶ ἴσασιν ἔργ' ἀνθρώπων.
Homer. vid. Grot. Dict. Poet. p. 122.

(q) Hier. in aur. Car. p. 170.

(r) Quicquid contra rationem rectam fit, diſplicet Deo, & contrarium illi placet, quia cùm voluntas Dei ſit ſummè juſta, non poteſt illi non diſplicere quod turpe eſt, nec non placere honeſtum. Suarez de Leg. l. 2. c. 6.

(s) Cic. de Leg. l. 1.

(t) Lib. de Mund. c. 7.

(u) ——— acuitque metum mortalibus ægris. Si quando Lethum horrificum, morboſque Deûm Rex Molitur, meritas aut bello territat urbes. Virgil. Æn. 12.

IV. A Third Objection againſt the Ancients account of the Law of Nature is an uncertain Notice of (Religion and Virtue) the Morals of it; for they ſuppoſe, that right Reaſon is that which noticeth to Mankind the virtuous Morals, and is the noticing Rule thereof. (x) But according to the Pyrrhonians and Scepticks there is no Truth in the reaſonings of Men. “ The Profeſſors of right Reaſon (the Philoſophers) were hugely diſſonant touching Good and Evil, and the great Principle of conducting Life (ſummum bonum.) what ſome account a Principle or Concluſion evidently true, others no leſs intelligent account extremely falſe. Some of them believ'd the worſt Crimes to be innocent, as Theodorus the Philoſopher allowed of Adultery, Theft, Sacriledge; Plato allow'd Adultery and Community of Wives, ſo did Socrates and Cato; Zeno and Chryſippus approv'd of Inceſt, and ſo did the Perſians. So that we may well ſay as Socrates in Plato's Phædrus; when we hear the Name of Silver or Iron, all Men that ſpeak the ſame Language underſtand the ſame thing: But when we ſpeak of Juſt or Good, we are diſtracted into various apprehenſions, and differ from each other and from our ſelves. Every Man maketh his Opinions to be Laws of Nature, if his Perſwaſion be ſtrong and violent. And ſome are Atheiſts that believe no God nor any thing that is diſhoneſt, which they can do in private or with impunity. Some have believ'd, that there is nothing in it ſelf Juſt, and only regarded what is profitable, ſo did Carneades and ſo did Ariſtippus. And it is not ſufficient to ſay, ſome Perſons are unreaſonable, becauſe we ſuppoſe them to ſpeak unnatural things; for we are not to reject an Opinion upon pretence it is unreaſonable, unleſs we firſt know ſome certain rule and meaſure of Reaſon. Now we cannot take our meaſures of Reaſon from Nature; or if we do, we cannot take the meaſures of Nature from Reaſon. If we Judge of what is natural by its Conformity to right Reaſon, we cannot Judge of right Reaſon by its Conformity to what is natural. Thus Reaſon is made uſe of againſt it ſelf, various Reaſons are alledg'd, to ſhew the uncertainty of the Notices of Reaſon in Moral matters. But as Demodocus ſaid of the Mileſians (y) the Mileſians are no Fools, but they do the ſame things that Fools do: So they that are not irrational, yet ſometimes argue at an unreaſonable rate. For the diſſent of Pyrrhonians and Scepticks doth it ſignifie any thing, to deſtroy the certainty of Reaſon? Or the diſſent of Atheiſts to deſtroy the certainty of the Exiſtence of God? The Name of Theodorus was not the Philoſopher (z) but Ἄθεος, the Atheiſt, and Ariſtippus was of no better Character. The Philoſophers were not the genuin Profeſſors of right Reaſon, but generally they were extravagant unpopular Humoriſts, that affected to maintain Paradoxes. Heraclitus held that contradictory Propoſitions are conſiſtent. Zeno Eleates held that motion is impoſſible, and Anaxagoras that Snow and Coal are of the ſame colour. If any one ſhould alledge theſe abſurd Paradoxes of the Philoſophers, to deſtroy or impair the certitude of Logick and external Sence, ſuch Allegations would not ſignifie any thing (ſuch uncertainties do not make an uncertainty;) and the Allegation of their abſurd Conceits touching Moral matters ſignifieth as little, to deſtroy or impair the evident certitude of the Notices of right Reaſon and the Morals of the Law of Nature. Of which we muſt affirm (1.) So great a certainty there is in the Law of Nature, that there is no invincible difficulty in the whole of it or the Science of it as there is in other Sciences, Metaphyſicks, Phyſiology, Mathematicks, in which there are invincible difficulties. But the Science of univerſal Righteouſneſs in its own Nature ſuch hath no ſuch invincible difficulty in it, as rendreth it impoſſible for Mankind, to arrive at an evident certainty touching the whole of it. For it muſt be ſuppos'd, that they that are oblig'd, to fulfil all this Righteouſneſs, may have an evident certainty touching what it is (as ſeveral Righteous men have had) that this whole Duty of Man is not ἀκατάληπτόν τι, a thing incomprehenſible by Man; for then it could not be this whole Duty of Man nor could it be fully taught or learned. But (a) ὅτι τῆς φύσεως, ὅτι τῆς μαθήσεως νόμος εἷς, the Law of Nature and the (Moral) Law of Diſcipline is one Law. (2.) So great a certainty there is in the Law of Nature, that none can innocently be groſly ignorant of or miſtake any of the Morals of it, but it is their Sin and their Crime; ſo the Polytheiſm, Idolatry, Unchaſtity, and bloody Spectacles, which were the Practice of the Heathen in their night of Ignorance, were their Sin and their Crime. By their Reaſon God had notic'd to the World of Mankind in general the knowledge of himſelf his Truth and their Duty (which is the Law of Nature) ſo far the Truth was not unknown to them: But they were not Upright and Faithful towards it (held the Truth in Unrighteouſneſs) whence they were invelop'd in atheous Ignorance, which was their deadly Sin and their Crime, and (no excuſable invincible Ignorance, but) an effect of their Unfaithfulneſs. Their Polytheiſm doth not prove, that Mankind have but uncertain Notices touching the Unity of the Godhead: Nor doth the Philoſophers allowing Adultery and Inceſt, prove that Mankind have but uncertain Notices of the Law of Nature. It is certain, they had better Notices, and if thoſe better Notices were not to them evidently certain, yet they would have been evidently certain, if they had been Faithful; ſo great a certainty there is in the Notices of the Law of Nature. Would it not have been evidently certain to Carneades, that there are things in themſelves juſt, if he had not been a Villain? To be a ſound Moraliſt (towards God and Man) is not a buſineſs of abſtruſe and ſubtil Speculation, but of Faithfulneſs and Integrity: Nor is it ſo requiſite, to be a Philoſopher, as to be honeſt and duly Conſcentious. (3.) So great a certainty there is in the Law of Nature, that there is a certain Rule of Right Reaſon (in Morality) which is the Beauteous-beneficial Practice. If the (w) Ἦν νόμος ὅδε περὶ ἀνθρώπων ἐπὶ Κρόνου, καὶ ἀεὶ καὶ νῦν ἔτι ἐστὶν ἐν θεοῖς, τῶν ἀνθρώπων τὸν μὲν δικαίως τὸν βίον διελθόντα καὶ ὁσίως, ἐπειδὰν τελευτήσῃ, εἰς μακάρων νήσους ἀπιόντα, οἰκεῖν ἐν πάσῃ εὐδαιμονίᾳ ἐκτὸς κακῶν. Τὸν δὲ ἀδίκως καὶ ἀθέως, εἰς τὸ τῆς τίσεώς τε καὶ δίκης δεσμωτήριον, ὃ δὴ τάρταρον καλοῦσιν, ἰέναι. V. Jambl. Protrept. p. 82. Plotin. En. 3. l. 2. c. 9 Sharrock de Off. l. 1. N. 7.

---

(w) Concerning Men there was this Law under Saturn, which always was and yet is a Law among the Gods, that when any Man dieth, who hath led his Life juſtly and holily, he goeth to the Iſlands of the Bleſſed and liveth in all Happineſs free from Evils. But he that hath led his Life unjuſtly and atheouſly, he goeth to the Priſon of Puniſhment and Juſtice, which is called Tartarus.

(x) Seld. de J.Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 7. Bp. Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 2. c. 1. n. 31. &c.

(y) Ariſt. Eth. l. 7. c. 9.

(z) Vid. S. Parker de Deo Diſp. 1. S. 8.

(a) Clem. Str. l. 1. in fine.

the Mind noticeth or dictateth what is the right Practice, this is neceſſarily right Reaſon; if therefore ſhe noticeth or dictateth touching the Beauteous-beneficial Practice, that this is to be done, and touching the Foul-maleficial kind of Practice, that this is not to be done, this is right Reaſon. And there is no more difficulty in diſcerning what is right Reaſon (in Morality) than there is diſcerning what is the Beauteous-beneficial and what is the Foul-maleficial Practice. Now, it is as evident and certain, that the Virtues commonly ſo called are the Beauteous-beneficial Practice, and the Vices commonly ſo called are the Foul-maleficial Practice, as it is evident and certain, that hating and hurting is not helping, that to be a Liar is not honourable, that the Soldanian Diet (of Guts and Garbage) is not cleanly, and that Therſites is not handſome. (4.) So great a certainty there is in the Law of Nature, that a great part of it is of unqueſtionable Evidence and Certainty with Mankind in general, and is aſcertain'd by the conſent of Nations; with reſpect whereunto the Lawyers define the Law of Nature. (b) That which natural Reaſon hath ſettled among all Men. That which is alike obſerv'd amongſt all People or Nations. The natural Laws are thoſe, which are alike obſerv'd in all Nations. (c) The conſent of all Nations in every thing is to be reputed a Law of Nature, ſaith Cicero. So Ariſtotle defineth the Law of Nature. (d) That which hath every where the ſame force, as fire alike burneth both here and amongſt the Perſians. The Law of Nature therefore is of a larger and narrower Acceptation; the one the more comprehenſive, the other the more famous. In the more comprehenſive Senſe it is that whole Syſtem of Law, which a juſt Providence requireth the obſervance of from all Mankind antecedently to ſupernatural Revelation, and which hath the Verity of natural Notice. But in the narrower and more famous Senſe it is only that part of the Law of Nature, which hath the Notoreity of natural Notice, the common acknowledgment of the World. But as Miracles are not a ſufficient Proof of the Divinity of a Doctrine, unleſs upon impartial Examination the Nature of it appeareth to be Divine: So the conſent of Mankind alone is not a ſufficient Proof touching any Morals, that they are Laws of Nature, unleſs upon impartial Examination they appear to be in their own Nature Good or Evil and therefore of themſelves Matter of Law. But if any Morals are receiv'd and acknowledg'd by the common conſent of Nations as Branches of the Law of Nature, and upon impartial Examination they appear to be in their own Nature Good or Evil (agreably to the general acknowledgment of Mankind) of ſuch Morals we have the greateſt aſſurance imaginable, that they are Branches of the Law of Nature. For they are ſo in the Judgment of common Sence, to Notoreity, and ſo as to be common (or general) Notions, and they muſt be groſly plain and evident Branches of the Law of Nature, that have the general acknowledgment of Mankind in this their atheous and degenerate Condition. This general agreement concerning them, their firm continuance throughout all Ages, the impoſſibility of eradicating them out of the Minds of Men, plainly demonſtrate, that they are not from any arbitrary Inſtitution of Men, but are natural Notions, that the Mind is of ſuch a Nature as to Notice them, and the Soul of Man is naturally diſpos'd to the belief of them. The conſent of Nations therefore both demonſtrateth the Exiſtence of the Law of Nature, and is in part a certain Notice of the Morals of it. It demonſtrateth the Exiſtence of the Law of Nature; for it appeareth from the conſent of Nations, that there is a juſt Providence, which requireth of all Men, that they be the Well-doers not the Evil-doers, and that a Syſtem of Morals which are in their own Nature Well-doing, are naturally and convictively even to the Notoreity of a general acknowledgment notic'd to Mankind. The certainty of noticing the Morals of the Law of Nature from this general conſent of Nations hath many Objections made againſt it: But they are made without a due clearneſs and conſiſtency of Diſcourſe, and without any conſiderable ſtrength of Reaſoning. For ſometimes it is ſaid (e) that Juris naturalis corpus, a Body of the Law of Nature is not to be look'd for from the conſent of Nations, which no Man will contradict. Sometimes it is ſaid, that the Hebrew Doctors do not unwiſely (f) to make no reckoning of the conſent of Nations in Juris Naturalis deſignatione, in the Deſignation of the Law of Nature, (g) that the Law of Nations is no indication of the Law of Nature. Which are Poſitions hugely extravagant maintain'd by Reaſons extremely inſignificant. For what if all Nations are not known? If ſome known Nations are Savages and in great degree live without Law? If in ſome other known Nations ſome of the groſſeſt Immoralities have been commonly practic'd and authoriz'd? What ſignifie theſe Exceptions to the invalidating this great certainty; that the Exiſtence of a Law of Nature hath the conſent of Nations and the general acknowledgment of Mankind, as alſo ſeveral great Moralities, which is an Indication, that they are of the Law of Nature? If a judicious Heathen Lawyer Paulus ſaith (h) that Theft is prohibited by the Law of Nature, if another of the ſame Character (Ulpianus) calleth it naturâ turpe, there are few but will look on theſe Sayings as conſiderable Indications, that the Prohibition of Theft is of the Law of Nature; how much more ought they to think ſo, if the generality of Mankind ſay ſo? The Perſians practis'd and authoriz'd an inceſtuous mixture with their own Mothers (μητρομιξια) and Antiochus Soter marry'd his Father's Wife: But theſe inceſtuous mixtures were againſt the general Senſe of Mankind, as we learn (i) not only from the Poets and from Cicero, but from a better Author 1 Cor. 5. 1. which ought to be look'd upon as an Indication, that they were againſt the Law of Nature. (k) The Nations differ about their Superſtition, but what Nation is there, that doth not like and love manſuetude, benignity and a grateful Mind? And that doth not vilifie and hate the Proud, the Maleficial, the Cruel and Ungrateful? (5.) In written Laws both Divine and Human there is ſuch uncertainty, that Men are of various Opinions touching their right Interpretation and touching what in the Senſe of thoſe Laws is Juſt and Good (according Multum dare ſolemus præſumptioni omnium hominum. Sen. Ep. 117.

(b) Id quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines conſtituit. Quod apud omnes populos ſeu gentes peraquè cuſtoditur. Naturalia jura quæ apud gentes peraquè obſervantur. Selden. de J. Nat. & Gent. l. 1. c. 6, 7, 8.

(c) Omni autem in re conſenſio omnium gentium Lex naturæ putanda eſt. Cic. Tuſc. 1. Publica Lex hominum naturaque continet hoc fas Perſ. Sat. 5.

(d) Τὸ πανταχοῦ τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχον δύναμιν, ὥσπερ τὸ πῦρ καὶ ἐνθάδε καὶ ἐν Πέρσαις καίει. Selden. ſupr.

(e) Seld. ſupr. l. 1. c. 6.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Bp. Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 2. c. 1. n. 28.

(h) Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 1. c. 1. S. 10.

(i) Seld ſupr. l. 5. c. 11. Bp. Taylor ſupr. n. 23.

(k) Quæ autem Natio non Comitatem, non benignitatem, non gratum animum & beneficii memorem diligit? Quæ ſuperbos, quæ maleficos, quæ crudeles, quæ ingratos non aſpernatur non odit? Cic. de Leg. l. 1.

cording to the Saying of Socrates to Phædrus) and every one thinketh, that his own Opinion is Law; yet this uncertainty doth not hinder, but that there is an evidently certain Interpretation of theſe written Laws: So there is a diverſity of Opinions touching what is right Reaſon, Juſt and Good according to the Law of Nature, ſuch uncertainty there is in it; yet this doth not hinder, but that there is an evidently certain right Reaſon (in Moral Matters) well and evil Doing according to the Law of Nature. Touching which the differences of Mankind would not be very great, if they were duely conſcientious. (l) Let no Man pretend, that through Ignorance he neglecteth Virtue, or becauſe he hath none to ſhew him the way, ἀρκοῦντα γὰρ ἔχομεν διδάσκαλον τὸ συνειδός, for we have Conſcience a ſufficient Teacher.

(l) S. Chryſoſt. ap. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. Par 3. Theſ. 10.

V. A Fourth Objection againſt the ancient Account of the Law of Nature is the Suppoſition of innate Ideas, Notions and Principles (ſuch natural impreſſions) which it involveth. (m) The Divine Law which is naturally conjoin'd with the Soul, as a Torch or Luminary, crieth to her and admoniſheth her, to walk in the Kingly way without declining to the Right or Left, teaching that the Kingly way is, that which is according to right Reaſon. The ancient Writers look upon the natural Law (n) as an innate Law (Nata Lex as Cicero calleth it) as a natural Inſcription and Impreſſion upon the Minds of all Men; and the Apoſtle manifeſtly favoureth this notion of it, Rom. 2. 14, 15. For although he doth not ſay, that the Moral Law is written in the Heart of the Gentiles, yet he ſaith, that the Law as to the work of it is written in their Hearts (their inward Man) and that they are a Law unto themſelves as to the work of the Law, which is to indicate, direct, dictate, command and forbid, to judge, Joh. 7. 51. to criminate or accuſe, Joh. 5. 45. to convince and condemn, Jam. 2. 9. The Apoſtle affirmeth, that the Law in ſome ſort (as to the work of it) is written in the Heart of the Gentiles, and conſequently in ſome reſpect it is the Law written in the Minds of Men, as the ancient Moraliſts ſtile it. They ſuppoſe it to be written in the Soul as having τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν, the leading part, τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον, right Reaſon, τὸ συνειδὸς, the Conſcience, τὸ κριτήριον φυσικὸν, that natural diſcernment whereby we diſtinguiſh the Goods from the Evils. This is their Senſe (as appeareth from all their accounts of it) and this is all that they mean, when they ſpeak of a Law naturally written and impreſs'd upon the Soul (o) τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον φύσει ἐνόντα καὶ ἐγγεγραμμένον αὐτῇ, that right Reaſon (which is the Law of Nature) is innate to the Soul and written or implanted in her. They ſuppoſe, that it is Innate or Natural to the intelligent reaſoning Mind (which is νοῦς πρακτικὸς, Practical) to Underſtand and Reaſon rightly (in ſome degree at leaſt) touching the Matters of Morality, and conſequently to form thoſe Notices or Dictates which are the Law of Nature. In this Senſe they ſuppoſe it Innate, a natural Inſcription or Impreſſion, and in this Senſe we ought to aſſert innate Ideas, Notions and Principles, that are not adventitious. (p) For all Arts and Sciences had their Origin from Nature, all Mankind are by Nature (in ſome degree) Logicians and Mathematicians, in ſome degree they are born ſuch, and in the like degree they are born Moraliſts and Religioniſts. The deſign and buſineſs of Arts and Sciences is only (q) to make up what is begun in Nature; it is innate therefore to the Mind of Man, to form Logical, Mathematical, Religious and Moral Ideas, Notions and Principles, which are not adventitious Notices or Evidences. It is innate to a Child, to grow up to be a Man in Mind and Underſtanding as well as Stature of Body; and conſequently it is innate to him, to grow up to the underſtanding the common Notions, which is Eſſential to one that underſtandeth at the rate of a Man. As if it was innate to a Child, to grow up to be a Coſmographer, ſo that Coſmography would be to him no adventitious Notice or Evidence, but an innate Notion and Idea: In like manner it is innate to a Child, to be an Intellectualiſt, to become intelligent of the common Notions, to grow up to the underſtanding them at the rate of a Man, and they are to him no adventitious Notices or Evidences, but innate Notions and Principles. Reaſoning is certainly innate to the reaſoning Mind; and if the Mind is by Natural Conſtitution Religious as well as Rational, Religious Reaſoning muſt neceſſarily be innate to her. Her innate reaſoning implieth, that the method of reaſoning is innate to her, which is to form Ideas, to compare them, to make a Judgment of them, to make Deductions of Cauſes from Effects, of Effects from Cauſes, of Conſequents from Antecedents, and of Concluſions from evident Principles. In this method of Reaſoning the Mind findeth, that it is natural and innate to her (as Reaſoning) to form thoſe Propoſitions called the common Notions, to think of them and to think them true, that they are not in her as adventitious Notices and Evidences, but they are as much innate to her, as it is innate to Man, to be actually a Rationaliſt and Religioniſt, and therefore ſhe calleth them innate Notions and Principles. As ſhe hath an innate Power, ſo (being made both Rational and Religious) ſhe hath an innate Propenſion, to Notice and Dictate the common Notions, which are hereby diſtinguiſh'd from adventitious Notices and Evidences; becauſe of this innate Propenſion they are αὐτοδίδακτα, Self-taught, and ἀδίδακτον τῆς φύσεως δῶρον, an untaught Gift of Nature, nor can the Mind disbelieve them without doing violence to her ſelf. This innate Propenſion appeareth from the general conſent, that hath been amongſt Mankind (in good degree) touching the Laws of Nature. (r) For in all Times and Ages without any Philoſophical Diſquiſitions about them or any abſtruſe inquiries into the Cauſes and Reaſons of them Mankind had the knowledge of them. Which plainly ſheweth, that they deriv'd this their knowledge of them from one great univerſal Teacher (that teacheth the Huſbandman) and that they were notic'd and dictated to them from an innate Propenſion of their own Minds. The ſenſe and truth of innate Ideas and Principles may be inferr'd from the Saying of a late Philoſopher. (s) A power of judging uncorruptly and of diſtinguiſhing true from falſe by Nature equal is innate in us all. Of the common Notions that are Speculative we muſt affirm, that the Mind meerly by her innate Power of diſtinguiſhing between true and falſe hath (virtually at leaſt) the Notice of them and a diſcernment of the truth of them without needing any adventitious Notice or

(m) Νόμος δὲ θεῖος αὐτῇ ψυχῇ συνεζευγμένος κατὰ φύσιν, λαμπτὴρ καὶ φωστῆρος δίκην ἐπιφωνεῖ ἔνδοθεν ὑπηχῶν αὐτῇ καὶ λέγων, ὁδῷ βασιλικῇ πορεύσῃ, οὐκ ἐκκλινεῖς δεξιὰ, οὐδὲ ἀριστερά. Βασιλικὴν τὴν κατὰ τὸν ὀρθὸν λόγον πορείαν εἶναι διδάσκων. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 6. c. 6.

(n) Origen. in c. 2. Ep. ad Roman. & Philocal. c. 9.

(o) Hier. in aur. Car. p. 106.

(p) Downam. Com. in Rami Dialect. Proleg.

(p) Τὸ προσλεῖπον τῆς φύσεως ἀναπληροῦν.

(r) Mr. Lowde of the Nat. of Man. p. 71.

(s) Vim in corruptè judicandi & verum à falſo diſtinguendi naturâ æqualem omnibus nobis innatum eſſe. Des Cart. de Methód. p. 1.

or Evidence. Of the common Notions that are Practical we muſt affirm, that the Mind meerly by her innate Power of diſtinguiſhing between well and evil Doing hath (virtually at leaſt) the Notice of them and a diſcernment of their Obligation without needing any adventitious Notice or Evidence. Theſe are therefore juſtly counted Idea's, Notions and Principles that are innate to us, not in every ſenſe, but ſo as is explain'd, and in ſuch ſenſe innate Ideas, Notions and Principles may and ought to be aſſerted againſt all Objections that are made againſt them.

(1.) Againſt innate Principles in general it is argu'd (t) Infants and Ideots do not know them, therefore they are not imprinted on their Minds. But how vaſtly remote and diſtant is this Argument from concerning innate Ideas and Principles in the genuin Senſe of aſſerting them? A like remote and diſtant from good Senſe is this other Argumentation. If theſe ſuppos'd innate Principles were native Characters and Impreſſions, they would appear faireſt and cleareſt in Naturals, in Children, Ideots, Salvages and illiterate People being of all other the leaſt corrupted by cuſtom or borrowed Opinions. For it is not imaginable, that the Principles of Science and of Law, and the Dictates of right Reaſon ſhould appear faireſt and cleareſt in them, that are almoſt totally devoid of Reaſon, nor do Infants know them, till they come to the uſe of Reaſon. But the Objector with an untoward confidence affirmeth; it is utterly falſe, that the uſe of Reaſon aſſiſteth us in the knowledge of theſe Maxims, or that Children know or aſſent to theſe Maxims, as ſoon as they come to the uſe of Reaſon; ſome time after during a Man's Life they may be aſſented to, and ſo may all other knowable Truths. All Mankind call theſe Noemata (the common Notions) the Dictates of right Reaſon, the uſe of Reaſon therefore aſſiſteth us in the knowledge of theſe Self-evident Maxims. Which are not of the condition of other knowable Truths (that may be known or not known by Mankind) but the Notice of the common Notions is Eſſential to ſuch Rationaliſts and Religioniſts as all Men are by Nature. And proportionably as common Reaſon diſplayeth it ſelf in Mankind in their growth from their Non-age, theſe common Notions are diſcover'd. To ſuch Children as begin to have the uſe of Reaſon they begin to be diſcover'd; and as they have the uſe of Reaſon in a greater degree, they are diſcover'd in a greater degree.

(2.) Againſt innate practical Principles it is argu'd; that Thieves and High-way Men do not own Faith and Juſtice as Principles; the Principles of Morality therefore are not own'd by all Men (have not univerſal conſent) therefore they are not innate. But they know not God, nor Man, nor the World, that do not know, that Thieves and High-way Men (many of which are educated in the Chriſtian Religion) do ordinarily own Faith and Juſtice as to the Notice, Conviction and Dictate of their own Minds, which they Sin againſt. It is argu'd alſo; that there are no practical Principles wherein all Men agree (not any practical Truth that is univerſally receiv'd without doubt or queſtion) therefore none innate. But if Mankind univerſally deſire their own Felicity, if they are univerſally Societiſts (Civil ſocietiſts) there is an univerſal agreement of Mankind in great practical Principles, and ſuch an agreement implieth and inferreth their agreement in a great number of practical Principles. But the Hypotheſis of innate Ideas and Principles doth not require, that there ſhould be any practical Truth univerſally receiv'd without doubt or queſtion by Mankind. It is enough to juſtifie that Aſſertion, if all Men have Notices and Dictates of practical Truth that are innate. And of theſe we muſt affirm, that as to be actually a Sinner, is innate to every Child of Man in a degree of Inchoation and prevalent Tendency that way, to be actually a Rationaliſt (a Logician, an Arithmetician) a Societiſt, is innate to every Child of Man in a degree of Inchoation and prevalent Tendency that way: So to be actually a Juriſt, a Moraliſt, a Religioniſt at leaſt as to the Notices and Dictates of his Mind, is innate to every Child of Man in a degree of Inchoation and prevalent Tendency that way.

(3.) It is argu'd; that not one Moral Rule can be propos'd, whereof a Man may not juſtly demand a Reaſon, and therefore it is not Self-evident, as every innate Principle muſt needs be. But may a Reaſon juſtly be demanded of the great Rules and Principles of Morality, which cannot be deny'd without a Contradiction? The Good is not to be hated, but is that which is to be lik'd and choſen: The Evil is not to be lov'd, but is that which is to be diſlik'd and eſchew'd. The Beauteous-beneficial kind of Practice is the Good, the Foul-maleficial kind of Practice is the Evil. The Good is the Well-doing (εὐπραξία,) the Evil is the Evil-doing. The Well-doing is Righteouſneſs (the right doing) the Evil-doing is (the wrong doing) Unrighteouſneſs. To be an Evil-doer is Vice and Crime. That which cannot be done without Vice and Crime is not allowable, may not be done. None can have right to do the wrong (that which is Unrighteouſneſs) nor may do that which may not be done. It is neceſſarily Wickedneſs and foul Criminality, to be a Doer of Unrighteouſneſs. To be a foul Criminal and Malefactor, is not lawful, or tolerable, but puniſhable. Innocence, Purity, Order, Aptitude, Congruity and Proportion in our Practice, is Beauteous. The ſincere Benevolence is goodneſs of Will and Affection. To reverence the Elders, to keep Faith, to do to others as we would be done to, is the Beauteous-beneficial Practice. The deadly malign Nature and Practice is the Evil. The Brutiſh kind of Morals are the vile. Guile and Hypocriſie is Villainy. To do inimical kind of things to a Friend, to deſign evil to the Innocent, to condemn the Righteous, to be a Citizen no Citizen worſe than none, a diſſerving kind of Servant, are foul Maleficial things. Virtus eſt vitium fugere. The great Rules of Morality are as Self-evident, as the Principles of the ſpeculative Sciences. Luk. 12. 57. Why even of your ſelves judge ye not what is right. (u) Οἱ γὰρ ἄνθρωποι οἴκοθεν γινώσκομεν τὸ δέον for we Men of our ſelves know what ought to be done. It is argu'd further; that a great variety of Opinions concerning Moral Rules is to be found amongſt Men, according to the different ſorts of Happineſs, which they propoſe to themſelves, which could not be, if the practical Principles were innate. But the Premiſſes do not infer this Concluſion. For according to the different Happineſs which the Popular and the Philoſophic Pagans propos'd to themſelves, they had great diverſity of Opinion concerning ſeveral Moral Rules, yet the ſame innate Moral Rules were notic'd to both Parties and obſerv'd by both.

(4.) The Objector ſaith; I cannot ſee, how any Men ſhould ever tranſgreſs the Moral Rules with confidence and ſerenity, were they innate and ſtamped upon their Minds. If any can be thought, to be

(t) Mr. Locke of human Underſtand. B 1.

(v) Theophylact. in Matth. 7. 12.

naturally imprinted, none, I think, can have a fairer pretence to be innate than this, Parents preſerve and cheriſh your Children. But have there not been whole Nations, and thoſe of the moſt civiliz'd People, amongſt whom the expoſing their Children and leaving them in the Fields to periſh by want or wild Beaſts, hath been the Practice, as little condemned or ſcrupled as the begetting them? It was familiar and uncondemned Practice amongſt the Greeks and Romans, to expoſe without Pity or Remorſe their innocent Infants. But whether Moral Rules be extrinſecally imprinted upon the Mind (from a Book, a Teacher, or the Conſtitution of the World) or whether they be imprinted in the way of innate Principles, the Caſe is the ſame as to the poſſibility of tranſgreſſing them with Confidence and Serenity. If Men can with Confidence and Serenity tranſgreſs any Moral Rules that are imprinted upon their Minds, they may ſo tranſgreſs thoſe that are impreſs'd in the way of innate Principles. And nothing is more uſual than for Men, with Confidence and Serenity to tranſgreſs the Moral Rules imprinted upon their Minds; for ſo the Jews and Papiſts tranſgreſs this Commandment (imprinted on their Minds) Thou ſhalt not kill; and ſo the Proteſtants tranſgreſs theſe Moral Rules imprinted on their Minds be not drunk with Wine, let there be no Diviſions among you. There is no Sect of Religioniſts, that doth not violate ſome Moral Rules imprinted on their Minds with greater Confidence and Serenity than the Greeks and Romans expos'd their Children; for although the Objector hath ſome (w) to bear him company in his Exaggerations of their inhuman Practice, yet it is certain, there are ſeveral miſtakes in his account of it. For as the expoſing Children was condemned (x) amongſt the Egyptians (y) and the Germans, ſo amongſt the Greeks it was ſeverely prohibited and condemned by the Theban Law (z) ἐκθεῖναι παιδίον, to expoſe a Child. Ælian who was a Roman (although he wrote in Greek) ſaith of this Theban Law (which made the expoſing an Infant Capital) it was a Law of the greateſt Rectitude and Philanthropy. Iſocrates condemneth theſe Crimes in other Cities and vindicateth his own City from them (a) ἐκβολὰς ὧν ἐγέννησαν ϗ καταποντισμοὺς, the ejecting and drowning their Children. The Greeks and Romans were far from being totally devoid of natural Love and Tenderneſs to their Children (commonly called στοργή) uſually there was a mixture of Kindneſs and Tenderneſs in their expoſing their Infants (b) as there was alſo in their pawning and ſelling them. This very plainly appeareth in the Chriſtian Apologiſts ſevere reprehenſions of the Pagans for expoſing their Children, (c) which was not with deſign, to have them deſtroy'd but preſerv'd. They had this Law of Nature Parents preſerve and cheriſh your Children, not only imprinted upon their Minds but upon their Bowels, yet becauſe of Poverty and Want and to avoid the burden of them, they often kill'd ſome of their Children, (d) in ſo much that the Emperour Conſtantine to prevent the killing their ſupernumerary Children made a Law for their Relief. But thoſe Parents that were more Parental than to kill their Children, choſe rather to expoſe them (as the leſſer of two Evils) not with a deſign to have them deſtroy'd, but that ſome might ſhew pity on them, take them up and Educate them. There was therefore a mixture of Humanity and Piety (as Lactantius ſpeaketh) in the Pagans expoſing their Children; and doubtleſs it was from a Principle of Heathen Piety and great reſpect to their aged Parents (e) that ſome barbarous Nations kill'd them, when they grew very old (accounting it ignominious to be decrepit) and others ſacrific'd and ate them, accounting this the moſt honourable Entombment, to bury them in their own Bowels. (f) So the Muhammedans from a Principle of Heathen Piety and blind Devotion have a great Veneration for diſtracted Men and leud Miſcreants that have the garb of Aſceticks, and give them an univerſal Licenſe to do any thing, even to lie with their Wives, accounting the Children that they beget Holy. But conſidering theſe and the like inſtances of the Paradoxical Nature of the Worlds Piety our Objector ſhould not have ask'd (g) where are thoſe innate Principles of Juſtice, Piety, Gratitude, Equity, Chaſtity? But in all reaſon he ought to have ask'd, where are they not? For the Principles of Piety and Virtue in general we find all the World over, the World of Mankind are agreed in them, but it is with this difference, what one Party of Men call Virtue and Piety, another Party calleth Vice and Impiety. And with great Reaſon; for with unregenerate Mankind many Enormities have the repute of Virtues or at leaſt of ſinleſs Practices. Which is not for want of the innate practical Principles, (h) but this is the cauſe of all Evils unto Men, they have not skill to accommodate and apply the common Notions (τὰς προλήψεις τὰς κοινὰς ἐννοίας,) to particular matters of Practice. They know the true Notionalities of Good, Juſtice, Virtue and Piety, and that they ought to chuſe and practice them: But are ſadly unacquainted with what is really and materially ſo. Whence it is too poſſible, for a whole Nation to allow the tranſgreſſion of a practical Rule, which is imprinted on their Minds; for they may do it from a falſe Opinion of Well-doing or Lawful doing, as the Church of Rome alloweth (and more than alloweth) the tranſgreſſion of the ſecond Commandment. And they may do it from an Opinion of the neceſſity of Affairs and of greater Good, as the Church of Rome hath allow'd Stews, and the Perſians allowed the groſſeſt Inceſt from an extravagant Affectation of Magick.

Nam Magus ex matre & gnato naſcatur oportet.

Whence it is eaſie to make a Judgment of this remaining part of our Objector's Argument; that no practical Rule which is any where univerſally or with publick Approbation or Allowance tranſgreſs'd, can be ſuppos'd innate. It is impoſſible to conceive that a whole Nation of Men ſhould all publickly reject and renounce what every one of them certainly and infallibly know to be a Law; for ſo they muſt, who have it naturally imprinted on their Minds. From the neceſſity of Affairs and an Opinion of greater good the Greeks and Romans in ſome degree, and but in ſome degree tolerated the tranſgreſſion of this Law Parents preſerve your Children: But they were far from publickly rejecting and renouncing it, the tranſgreſſion of it was not uncondemned amongſt themſelves, and from themſelves it appeareth, that they had it deeply imprinted

(w) Paraphr. Apologet. Tertull. p. 27. ed. Pamel.

(x) Witſ. Ægyptiac. l. 1. c. 5.

(y) Lipſ. Not. in Tacit. Hiſt. l. 5.

(z) Ælian. var. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 7. Annot. in Min. Fel. p. 306.

(a) Panathen. p. m. 444.

(b) Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 2. c. 5.

(c) Natos ex ſe pueros aut ſtrangulant, aut ſi nimium pii fuerint, exponunt. Lactant. l. 5. c. 9. Falſa pietas cogit exponere. Etiamſi contingat ei quod voluit, ut alatur, addixit certè ſanguinem ſuum vel ad ſervitutem vel ad lupanar. Idem l. 6. c. 20. Filios exponitis ſuſcipiendos ab aliqua prætereunte miſericordiæ extraneæ. Tertull. Apol. c. 9. Domi natos alienæ miſericordiæ frequenter exponitis. Min. Fel. p. 306.

(d) Baron. ad ann. 315. n. 5.

(e) Sharrock. de Offic. c. 3. N. 3.

(f) Mr. Locke ſupr. c. 3.

(g) Ibid.

(h) Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 26.

printed in their Nature. (i) Nature (ſaith Cicero) impelleth Men, to love thoſe that they have begotten, and ingendreth in them a ſpecial love to their Off-ſpring, and taketh care, to make proviſion for Wife and Children, which are counted dear, and ought to be taken care of. There is nothing more that is worth conſidering in our Objector's Diſcourſes againſt innate practical Principles ſave only his demand of a Catalogue of them, which is like our Pontifician Adverſaries demand of a Catalogue of Fundamentals.

(5.) Our Objector diſputeth againſt the innate Idea of God, and therein ſome others of the Learned agree with him: but by this innate Idea they mean, (k) An original Notion and Propoſition that God is, actually imprinted on us antecedently to all uſe of our Faculties. An anticipating Principle engraven upon our Souls before all exerciſe of Reaſon. Such an original Notion and Propoſition needeth not to be confuted by any operoſe reaſonings; for it is a Notice of God by reaſon antecedent to all uſe of reaſon, which is Nonſenſe and a Contradiction. But a Prolepſis or Anticipation concerning God (as the Ancients ſpeak) rightly underſtood is only antecedent to the argumentative deductions of Reaſon, as other common Notions are; it is a natural and ſpontaneous exertion of Reaſon, (l) ἔμφυτος ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις ἐπίνοια, an innate Notion to all Men, whereby we mean, that it is innate to the Mind of Man, to ſuggeſt and notice to him the Exiſtence of a Deity in general (an inviſible ſovereign power over us, an Object of Religious Worſhip) not without noticing to him the true God and his Service: as it is alſo innate to the mind of man, to ſuggeſt and notice to him a future ſtate of the Soul and Rewards and Puniſhments there; both which are prime dictates and ſuggeſtions of the mind made rational and religious and prime Branches of Natural Religion. So far the Soul of Man is naturally Chriſtian. But againſt the innate Idea of God ſome incredible Stories of ſome Savage Nations that live in total Atheiſm, are objected; and it is objected alſo, that an innate Idea of God is not requiſite. (m) A man by the right uſe of his natural Abilities may without any innate Principles attain the knowledge of a God and other things that concern him: (n) Without any ſuch primitive impreſſion we can eaſily attain to the knowledge of the Deity by the ſole uſe of our natural Reaſon. It is poſſible, that without any original impreſſion Men by the ſole uſe of their Reaſon might diſcover, that there is a God, as Propoſitions in Euclid have been found out and diſcover'd: and it muſt be acknowledg'd, (o) that they who made the diſcovery, had made a right uſe of their Reaſon: but it muſt be acknowledg'd alſo, that an εὕρηκα had well become them upon ſo wonderful a diſcovery, and it is great pity, that amongſt the Inventors of uſeful things their Names are not recorded, who firſt made this important diſcovery, that there is a God. Men by the ſole uſe of their Reaſon may diſcover, that there is a God: but there is much of peradventure and hap-hazard, whether Mankind diſcover the Being of God or not. For we are told, that (p) if Men do not make enquiry into the admirable Contrivances that are in the World, they may live long without any Notion of ſuch a Being. It is more than probable therefore, that the generality of Mankind (who do not philoſophize) will be univerſally Atheiſts, as devoid of any Notion of God, as the Soul is ſuppos'd to be originally, by them that ſtyle her Abraſa Tabula. Without innate Principles or primitive Impreſſion it is poſſible, that Men may attain the knowledge of a God: but is it not alſo poſſible, that they may not? that they may live long without any Notion of ſuch a Being? In which tract of time they muſt neceſſarily have no Conſcience, nor any Law or Work of the Law, nor any Thoughts accuſing or excuſing; they muſt neceſſarily be Atheiſts without being Rebels, without the guilt of the Heathen, who when they knew God, did not glorifie him as God, nor lik'd to retain God in their knowledge, and they muſt neceſſarily be ungodly and unrighteous without holding the truth in unrighteouſneſs. It muſt be ſuppos'd, that God made them without making them Religioniſts; for as men cannot be ſaid, to be made Philoſophers, meerly becauſe by their natural Abilities they may become Philoſophers; ſo neither can they be ſaid, to be made Religioniſts, meerly becauſe by their natural Faculties they may become ſuch. Are they not born by nature Atheiſts, if they have no innate Idea of God, no primitive Impreſſion, if they may live long without any Notion of ſuch a Being? That Mankind may be by nature Religioniſts, innate Idea is requiſite, (q) ἐπίνοια ἀναγκαία καὶ ἔμφυτος ἐν παντὶ τῷ λογικῷ, γιγνομένη κατὰ φύσιν ἄνευ θνητοῦ διδασκάλου καὶ λόγου, a neceſſary and innate Notion which is naturally in every Rational without an Humane Teacher or operoſe deductions of Reaſon. This legitimate innate Idea of God is incumbred with no valuable Objections, but it is poſſible that thoſe Objections may be made againſt it, that are urg'd againſt an erroneous innate Idea of God and primitive Impreſſion, therefore we will briefly conſider them.

Firſt, It is argu'd, (r) That ſuch an Impreſſion taketh away the commendableneſs and rewardableneſs of Faith by rendring the Belief of a God irreſiſtible and neceſſary. But our legitimate innate Idea of God is not liable to this Objection; for although it is innate to the minds of all men, to notice to them the Exiſtence of God as a Principle of Natural Religion, yet they may be Atheiſts: but it will be very hard, if not impoſſible, to be thorough-pac'd Atheiſts; and ſo ſome wiſe men have thought, that the Fool who ſaith in his Heart there is no God, (s) rather ſaith it by rote to himſelf, as that he would have, than that he can throughly believe it or be perſwaded of it. The commendableneſs of Faith is not taken away in any ſuch caſe, where there is place for a virtuous diſpoſition: whence although the Apoſtle Thomas had the Evidence of Sence (which may ſeem to neceſſitate aſſent) for our Saviour's Reſurrection, yet his Faith was commendable and rewardable. In his caſe there was place for virtuous Diſpoſition; whence the Watch and from them the Chief Prieſts although they had the Evidence of Sence as well as he, yet being devoid of his virtuous diſpoſition continu'd in Unbelief, Matth. 28. 11. Evidence of Sence, Evidence plainly mathematical will not neceſſitate Aſſent in ſuch caſes, where a requiſite virtuous Diſpoſition is wanting, and a potent Intereſt and Inclination is againſt it.

Another Argument againſt an erroneous innate Idea of God is drawn from the Apoſtle's preaching to the Athenians, Act. 17. 27. Of ſeeking the Lord, if happily they might feel after him and find him: whence this Inference is made, (t) That it requireth ſome Induſtry and Conſiderati- on,

(i) Apparet à Naturâ ipſâ impelli, ut eos quos genuerimus, amemus. Cic. de Fin. l. 1. Ingeneratque in primis præcipuum quendam amorem in eos qui procreati ſunt. ſtudet parare ea quæ ſuppeditant ad cultum & ad victum, nec ſibi ſoli, ſed conjugi, liberis, cæteriſque quos caros habeat & tueri debeat. Idem de off. l. 1.

(k) Dr. Bentley 3. Ser. againſt Atheiſm, p. 5, 6.

(l) Dion. Chryſoſt. orat. 12.

(m) Mr. Lock ſupr. c. 4.

(n) Dr. Bentley ſupr. p. 5.

(o) Mr. Lock ſupr.

(p) Ibid.

(q) Dion. Chryſoſt.

(r) Dr. Bentley ſupr. p. 5.

(s) Ld. Bacon Eſſay of Atheiſm.

(t) Dr. Bentley ſupr. p. 1, 6.

on, to find out the Being of God by the Light of Nature. This Inference concerneth our Hypotheſis; for (being part of a Diſpute againſt an innate Idea) this muſt be the Senſe of it; that the finding out the Being of God by the Light of Nature is meerly by Induſtry and Conſideration excluſively of an Innate Idea. But the Inference is no legitimate Inference from the Apoſtle's Text, whoſe ſcope is not to exhort the Athenians, to ſeek and find out the Being of God, nor did he preach to them as to Atheiſts or ſuch Heteroclits, that had not made the diſcovery, that there is a God, but as to Pagan Theiſts (who had Gods too many;) nor doth ſeeking after the Lord and finding him ſignifie the finding out this Propoſition, that there is a God, nor are all thoſe that have found out this Propoſition, ſuch as have found God in the Apoſtle's Senſe. But he conſidereth the Athenians as Aliens from the true God and from knowing him, he exhorteth them therefore, to ſeek the Lord, to feel after him and find him, which is, to unpaganize themſelves, to know him ſo, as to be his Religioniſts. To find the Being of God (the Exiſtence of a Deity) this needed not, (u) a ſeeking the Lord with Meditation and Study; their innate Notion of the Being of God and the obvious Phænomena of Nature made them a ſort of Theiſts: but to be in Theiſm of Religion and Condition, This was the thing which required a ſeeking the Lord with meditation and ſtudy, and becauſe they were without it, therefore they were Heathen Atheo-Theiſts. and the true God was to them a Stranger-Deity.

SECTION III.

The Law of Nature is notic'd to Mankind by the Nature of things, the Inſtincts of Nature, and the Senſe of Conſcience.

I. THE Stoicks define officium (duty) actionem naturalibus conſtitutionibus convenientem, a Practice agreeable to the Natural Conſtitutions. And when Arnobius asketh, (w) Quænam eſt ratio naturalis aut in mundi conſtitutionibus lex ſcripta? his words imply, that the Law of Nature is that which is written in the Conſtitutions of the World. So the Apoſtle ſuppoſeth, that Sodomy, Beſtiality and other Heathen Pollutions were Crimes againſt the Law of Nature, becauſe they were repugnant to the Order of Nature, to the manifeſt Inſtitution of the great Author of Nature and to the natural uſe of things, Rom. 1. 26, 27. Men and Women chang'd the natural uſe into that which is againſt Nature. The Heathen Idolatry was againſt the Nature of Creatures (that were deify'd by it) and upon this account alſo it was a Crime againſt the Law of Nature, it was repugnant and injurious to the Dignity of Man (made after God's Image) an hideous and vile debaſement of him, to fall down before Stocks and Stones with all manner of ſubmiſſion and lowly Adoration. A Friar in China as he was ſaying Maſs, chanc'd to throw down ſome of that Peoples Idols, whereupon they began to ruſh upon him with great vehemency. He begg'd their pardon for what he had done unwarily, but withall told them, that it was much more fit and reaſonable, for the Work to worſhip the Workman, than for the Workman to worſhip the Work that he had made. The People upon this Admonition left their Idols, telling him, that they never heard ſo much before. As Idolaters ſin againſt their own Dignity, ſo he that committeth Fornication, ſinneth againſt his own Body (and therefore againſt his own Dignity) proſtituting it and making it ſo abominably vile, as to make it the Member of an Harlot, 1 Cor. 6. 15, 16, 18. (x) Apparet cauſam vetandi fuiſſe ipſam facti turpitudinem. Scortation was manifeſtly forbidden becauſe of the turpitude which ſuch things have, when they are out of a certain Orbit, within which they ought to be confin'd, and without which they have a craſs and execrable foulneſs, and are criminal, ſhameful, diſgraceful Contaminations, repugnant to that graceful and ornamental Purity and Chaſtity, which is the Honour of the Body and of the Perſon, (1 Theſſ. 4. 4.) whence a great Lady in Italy was wont to ſay, A Woman ſhould conceal the reſt of her Virtues, but in her Chaſtity ſhe ſhould glory. (y) Wiſe Men have judg'd, that the ſenſual pleaſure of the Taſt and Touch (cibi & veneris) is of all things the moſt foul and filthy. The ſenſual exceſs of Drunkenneſs (like the Villainies of Uncleanneſs) is manifeſtly repugnant to the natural uſe of things, the Honour and Dignity of Man (indeed to common Civility, Gravity, Modeſty, Diſcretion) and to the dignifying Properties of the Humane Nature. For whereas Man is naturally a beauteous, noble and cleanly Animal, there is no Beaſt of the Field ſo beaſtly as a Drunkard, a moſt foul, naſty, noxious and miſhapen Animal, with ſtaring diſtorted Eyes, a fetid Breath, a ſtuttering bawling Tongue, leud Demeanour, and as Chaucer telleth him, (z) thy Face is turned into a new array. His trade is gorging, ſurcharging, diſgorging, and ſhameful ſpewing is upon his glory. (a) For Men to meet together, to drink themſelves drunk, is more foul and diſhoneſt (ſaith Maimonides) than if Men ſhould meet together in an Houſe naked and in the Day-time, to do the Works of Nature. The life of Senſualiſts is oppoſite to the regular frame and conſtitution of Man, which conſiſteth in the Sovereignty and Rule of his Intellectual Rational Nature and the Subjection of the Senſitive; for in them Animal Senſitive Nature is predominant and beareth the ſway, and the Head is, where the Heels ſhould be, (b) Beaſts, Plants, the Sun, the Stars, are deſign'd for ſomething, σὺ οὖν πρὸς τι, what then art thou deſign'd for? for Senſual Pleaſure? Bethink thy ſelf, whether this be ſuitable to our Natural Sentiment. A vicious Life is repugnant to the end and uſe of Man, to his true Excellency and proper Felicity, and to the agreeable Morals of Man. Whence (c) evil men are reproach'd ταῖς ἀλόγων προσηγορίαις, with the Names of Brute-Animals, they are λυκάνθρωποι, Men-wolves, Dogs and Foxes, like the Minotaur, that was in part a Man and in part a Beaſt. In reſpect of their Morals they are Brute-Animals and ſo far θηρία ἀνθρωπόμορφα, Brutes in the ſhape of Men, which are monſtroſities in nature. From the nature of things this great comprehenſive rule of practice is deduc'd by Seneca, (d) omnia vitia contra Naturam pugnant: omnia debitum ordinem deſerunt. All Vices are repugnant to Nature (the Nature of things) all of them are inordinate. Inordinate Self-love, Self-magnifying, Fear and Care, inordinate Anger and all inordinate Affection (Col. 3. 5.) the Luſt of the Fleſh, the Luſt of the Eyes and the Pride of Life (the Summary of all Wickedneſs) are vicious and criminal becauſe of their Inordinacy; for they are Nature grown Unnatural, Enormous, Diſproportionate, and like a Muſical Inſtrument out of Tune, agreeably to Ariſtotle's excellent Compariſon.

(u) Ibid. p. 7.

(w) Adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 36.

(x) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 27.

(y) Voluptas quæ nimia ex guſtu atque tactu eſt, ſicut ſapientes viri cenſuerunt, omnium rerum fœdiſſima eſt. Macrob. Saturn. l. 2. c. 8.

(z) The Man of Laws Tale.

(a) Maimon. Mor. Nev. par. 3. c. 8.

(b) M. Ant. l. 8. c. 19.

(c) S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. p. 545. &c. & T. 3. p. 582.

(d) Ep. 122.

pariſon. (e) An honeſt Man as ſuch is delighted with virtuous Practices, but is troubled at thoſe which proceed from Wickedneſs: As a Muſician is delighted with good Tunes, but is offended at what is diſ-harmonious. All Men are offended at the violation of relative Duties, the reaſon of them is ſo plain and obvious.

Qui didicit Patriæ quid debeat & quid amicis
Quo ſit amore Parens, quo Frater amandus & hoſpes,
Quid ſit Conſcripti, quid Judicis officium, quæ
Partes in bellum miſſi ducis, ille profectò
Reddere perſonæ ſcit convenientia cuique.
Horat. de Art. Poet.

Groſs irreverence to a Prince, ingratitude to a Benefactor, injuring a Friend, are repugnances and incongruities to the Object (the Perſians proverbially ſay, drink Wine, ſet the Pulpit and Church on fire, burn an Abdalla's Coat, be ſeen in an Idol's Temple, but wrong not your Friend) and ſuch is the juſtifying the wicked, the befriending Sin, the profaning that which is Holy, all impiety towards God, the minding Private Intereſt and ſlighting the Publick, the taking care of the Body and neglecting the Soul, to which (in weight and worth) this World is not proportionate. (f) Rerum naturæ aſſentior, I aſſent to the Nature of Things, ſuch is the Law of Nature.

II. The Law of Nature is in ſome degree notic'd by the kindly Inſtincts that are in Nature, which is below Reaſon, Will and Choice. So Nature (in the narrow Senſe) uſually ſignifieth the natural (unintelligent) Agents Nature. (g) For Nature is a thing neceſſitative and without free Will. (h) Man is in part carry'd according to Nature, in part he acteth according to Will and Choice. (i) The Ancients called the Paſſions natural and devoid of Reaſon. In this notion of Nature cuſtom is ſaid to be a ſecond Nature or ἐπίκτητος φύσις, an acquir'd Nature, as Galen calleth it. (k) What is Learned, is not of Nature, but of Will and Choice, which yet by cuſtom and the love of Sin is in ſome ſort turn'd into a Nature. Of Nature in this Notion (Nature in the Univerſe) Ariſtotle ſaith, that although ſhe acteth not electively or intendingly, but fatally, and knoweth not what ſhe doth, yet ſhe doth nothing in vain, but all for Ends and Uſes. As Nature blindly operateth in the great World, ſo in Animals and in Man, in whoſe Animal-nature (as in Brute-animals) there are blind Inſtincts, which are not the Law of Nature, but are to be govern'd according to the Law of Nature, and ought to be in ſubjection to Reaſon (as Reaſon to God) which they uſually rebel againſt and dethrone. (l) My Mind being right Nature violently carrieth me away. The Animal Nature in Man is full of inordinate Concupiſcence, which is not ſo Nature, as not to be vitium Naturæ; for the Nature of Man is ſadly out of frame by it. Nor is it Nature as being natural to the Soul of Man; for it is extraneous and adventitious, and requireth a Purgation, which is ἀφαίρεσις ἀλλοτρίου παντός, a taking away what is extraneous and unnatural. Nor is it kindly and agreeable, and in ſuch ſenſe natural or con-natural to the Soul, (m) ἀλλὰ θεάσαι εἰ προσηνέστερον ἡ ὁσιότης, but conſider, if Virtue and Sanctity be not more kindly and pleaſant. Yet a Nature it is, as being the Animal-nature, and ſo far the Nature of Man, it is now (in a certain degree) his innate Conſtitution, and it is the Specific Nature of the carnal and mundane Family, whence the Apoſtle ſaith of inordinate Concupiſcence (the Luſt of the Fleſh, the Luſt of the Eyes, and the Pride of Life) it is not of the Father, but is of the World. 1 Joh. 2. 16. It is of the World, as it is lapſed and become this wicked World.

But if this Animal Nature be conſider'd as it is Nature, not vitium Naturæ, the kindly Inſtincts of it are Notices of the Law of Nature, and contradict the Atheiſts Politicks, that are founded upon Lyes and Slanders of Mankind (whereby it appeareth, how highly well they deſerve of Mankind) that natural Relations are nothing, that there is nothing of Honeſty, Juſtice or Philanthropy in human Nature, no natural Charity or Friendlineſs, that Man is not ſociable by Nature (as Brute-animals are, that have a ſort of Benevolence for thoſe of their own kind) but omnis benevolentia oritur ex metu & imbecillitate, all Benevolence is only from fear or feebleneſs. If theſe unnatural Abuſers of Nature and worſt of Impoſtors teach, that nothing is juſt or unjuſt in the ſtate of Nature, every Man by Nature hath a right to every thing (whatever his Appetite inclineth him to) and whatſoever one doth to another, it is no injury; ſo that a Son may lawfully kill his own Parents, and the Innocent may be tortur'd to all extremity; the innate Humanity and στοργή, that is in Mankind, the natural Paſſions of Gratitude and Commiſeration that are in human Nature, contradict theſe leud and nefarious Dogmata; and this other ill natur'd Maxim alſo, that Man ſeeketh that which is good for himſelf as the only object of his Deſires, is contradicted by Nature, (n) Formicæ, Apes, Ciconiæ, aliorum cauſa quædam faciunt, Ants, Bees, Storks, do ſome things for the ſake of others. (o) The inclination to Goodneſs is imprinted deeply in the Nature of Man: Inſomuch that if it iſſue not towards Men, it will take unto other living Creatures; as is ſeen in the Turks, a cruel People, who nevertheleſs are kind to Beaſts, and give Alms to Dogs and Birds: Inſomuch as Busbechius reporteth, a Chriſtian Boy in Conſtantinople had like to have been ſtoned for gagging in waggiſhneſs a long billed Fowl. Many Inſtincts of Nature inſtigate to what is manifeſtly a ſort of Goodneſs or Well-doing, and theſe are Indications, that the being devoid of them and the Practice which is contrary to them is criminally unnatural. Such is the Inſtinct to common Modeſty (p) called by the Atheiſts μωρία, fooliſhneſs, and the Inſtinct to natural Affection, Rom. 1. 31. Such is the Inſtinct of Nature to an ordinate regular Self-love, Deſire of our own Good, Self-conſervation, Well-being and Felicity, and an Averſion from the contrary. Naturâ enim ſibi quiſque amicus eſt (for every one by Nature is a Friend to himſelf) which was a common Saying in ancient times. No Man ever hated his own Fleſh (without being criminally unnatural) but loveth and cheriſheth it. Eph. 5. 29. Nature inſtigateth Mankind, to take care of themſelves and their Off-ſpring, ſo making a natural Society, Kindred and Friendſhip, and taking care

---

(c) Ὁ σπουδαῖος, ᾗ σπουδαῖος, ταῖς κατ᾽ ἀρετὴν πράξεσι χαίρει, ταῖς δ᾽ ἀπὸ κακίας δυσχεραίνει· καθάπερ ὁ μουσικὸς τοῖς καλοῖς μέλεσιν ἥδεται, ἐπὶ δὲ τοῖς φαύλοις λυπεῖται. Eth. l. 9. c. 9.

(f) Sen. de vit. beat. c. 3.

(g) Ἡ γὰρ φύσις ἀναγκαστικόν τι ἐστὶ καὶ ἀβούλητον χρῆμα. Petav T. 4 l. 3. c. 4.

(h) Πῇ μὲν φέρεται κατὰ φύσιν, πῇ δὲ κατὰ προαίρεσιν. Euſeb. pr. ev. l. 6 c. 10.

(i) Perturbationes Animi antiqui naturales eſſe dicebant, & rationis expertes. Cic. Academ. Qu. l. 1.

(k) Quicquid diſcitur, non naturæ eſt, ſed ſtudii & propriæ voluntatis, quæ nimiâ conſuetudine & amore peccandi quodammodo in naturam convertitur. S. Hieron. Com. in Jer. 13. 23.

(l) Γνώμην δ᾽ ἔχοντά μ᾽ ἡ φύσις βιάζεται. Plutarch. de virtut. mor. p. 446.

(m) M. Ant. l. 5. S. 9.

(n) Cic. de Fin. l. 3.

(o) Lord Bacon Eſſay of Goodneſs.

(p) Epict. Diſſ. l. 2. c. 20.

Ἀγαθὴ γὰρ ἡ φύσις διδάσκαλος. Diodor ap. Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 2. c. 7. S. 4.

of the conſervation of the Species, and to extinguiſh or control theſe Inſtincts, is κακούργημα, maleficium. In diſpoſing of their Eſtates Men rightly ſuppoſe themſelves oblig'd, to proportion their kindneſs to others to their degrees of nearneſs to themſelves, as the kindly Inſtincts of Nature incline them. (q) There are various degrees of Society and Conjunction amongſt Mankind; and as every one is nearer, ſo ordinarily he is to have a greater ſhare of our Kindneſs with its Effects. The Inſtincts of Nature to Religion and Society by ſhewing the deſign of the great Author of Nature are manifeſtly Notices of the Law of Nature.

III. The Law of Nature is notic'd by the Sence of Conſcience, the peaceful and joyous Sence of Innocence and Well-doing, and the dolorous torturous Sence of Guilt. Conſcience is certainly of this definitive Notion; It is the Mind as conſcious of Duty and of Sin, and ſo far it is the ſame with νοῦς πρακτικός, the practical Mind. For Conſcience denoteth that which is conſcient or conſcious in a Man as ſuch; it denoteth therefore the Mind as conſcious, and it muſt neceſſarily denote the Mind as conſcious of Duty and of Sin, becauſe nothing elſe in Law and Religion is matter of Conſcience. Thoſe Paſſions of the Mind as conſcious of Duty and Sin Morſus Conſcientiæ, ſatisfactio ſive acquieſcentia in ſeipſo (quæ vocatur Tranquillitas & Quies Conſcientiæ) & pœnitentia, are the Conſcience in Man; therefore the Conſcience is the Mind of Man as conſcious of Duty and of Sin. Of Conſcience ſo defin'd there are two Branches; the one directive, which reſpecteth Duty and Sin not yet done (which is intelligentia practica and the Schools Syntereſis or Syſtem of common practical Notions) the other is reflexive, which reſpecteth Duty and Sin already done; and from both theſe Branches of Conſciouſneſs (but chiefly from the latter) Conſcience hath its Name. For it is a vulgar miſtake, to confound Conſcientiâ with Scientia (or Knowledge) in order to Action, or to interpret it cum alio Scientia. In ancient Authors Conſcientia ſignifieth Conſciouſneſs of our Doings, ſometimes the Conſciouſneſs of others, but moſt uſually our own Conſciouſneſs. So Tacitus ſaith of Nero, that he fell in Love with Acte (r) having taken two young Men into Conſciouſneſs of his doing. So Cicero ſaith, that Epicurus Philoſophizeth in ſuch a manner, (s) that there is nothing ſo foul, which he ſeemeth not willing to do for pleaſure-ſake, if Men be not conſcious thereof. But moſt uſually Conſcientia in the ancient Writers ſignifieth our own Conſciouſneſs of our doings. As when Cicero ſaith, (t) Every one's flagitious doing exagitateth him and affecteth him with madneſs: His evil Cogitations and Conſciouſneſs of Mind terrifie him. (u) The Conſciouſneſs of a well ſpent Life and the remembrance of many Well-doings is moſt pleaſant. (w) The Conſciouſneſs of a right Will is the greateſt Conſolation of incommodious Affairs. (x) In the very Conſciouſneſs of Well-doings there is fruit enough of our Labours. The ſame Author ſomewhere ſaith (y) I uſe not ſo much, to rejoice in any thing as the Conſciouſneſs of my Duties. In theſe Sayings (and ſuch more) Conſcientia is rightly rendred Conſciouſneſs, as appeareth (z) from many parallel Sayings of the ancient Writers. From whoſe uſual Phraſeology it is manifeſt, that Conſcience hath its Name from Conſciouſneſs (the Mind's Conſciouſneſs of well and evil Doing) whence it muſt be defin'd the Mind as conſcious of Duty and of Sin. Agreeably to which Definition of Conſcience the uſual diſtributions of Conſcience may eaſily be underſtood and explain'd. For if the Mind as conſcious of Duty and Sin (directly and reflexively) is uncriminal, this is the good Conſcience: If it be criminal, this is the evil Conſcience. As conſcious of Duty and of Sin the Mind may be quiet or troubled: The one is a quiet the other a troubled Conſcience. If the Mind is tenderly conſcious of Duty and of Sin, this is a tender Conſcience: If ſenſleſs and not apt to check or to check but feebly, this is a ſtupid Conſcience. And what is an erroneous, doubtful, ſcrupulous Conſcience, but the Mind conſcious in general of Duty and of Sin, and erroneous, doubtful and ſcrupulous touching ſome particular matters of Practice? The Notion of Conſcience in the New Teſtament (where the Name occurreth no leſs than Thirty two times) is the Mind as conſcious of Duty and of Sin. When the holy Writers ſpeak of being convicted by our own Conſcience, of being condemned by it, of the teſtimony of our Conſcience, and our Conſcience bearing Witneſs, of commending themſelves to every Man's Conſcience and being made manifeſt in their Conſciences, and of having no more Conſcience of Sins, Conſcience ſignifieth as in profane Authors the Conſciouſneſs of our Mind, the Mind as conſcious of Good and Evil. To do any thing for Conſcience-ſake, for Conſcience towards God, is to do it as conſcious of Duty to God and of Sin againſt him. Rom. 13. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 19. Some ate things offer'd to an Idol with Conſcience of the Idol, as conſcious of Duty and Religious Worſhip to the Idol, 1 Cor. 8. 7. their being ſo conſcious of Duty and of Sin was their ſinful weakneſs, and therefore their Conſcience was weak, 1 Cor. 8. 7. and it was alſo defiled with ſad Criminality, the Practice of Idolatry. So the Mind of ungodly Infidels as ſuch is defiled, and their Conſcience is defiled by their deadly Criminality of Practice. Tit. 1. 15. Chriſtians were at liberty, to eat what was offer'd unto Idols, asking no Queſtion for Conſcience-ſake (asking no Queſtion upon account of their own Minds Conſciouſneſs of Good and Evil:) But they might not eat it under this Notion as Idols Meat in the apprehenſion of thoſe that made Conſcience of the Worſhip of Idols, but were bound to abſtain, becauſe of their Conſcience (their Conſciouſneſs of Good and Evil) for if they did in ſuch manner externally Symbolize with them, their Liberty would be judged (conſtrued and interpreted) by their Conſcience (their Conſciouſneſs of Duty and Sin) who made Conſcience of the Worſhip of Idols. How then could a Chriſtian think it a reaſonable thing, to Symbolize with them? Chriſtians have not only a Conſcience but the good Conſcience, which is ſometimes called a Conſcience void of Offence, ſometimes a pure Conſcience. And becauſe by Virtue of Chriſt's Sacrifice they are uncondemnably ſinleſs, guiltleſs and uncriminal as to the Mind, Soul and Conſcience, therefore they are ſaid to have their Hearts ſprinkled from an evil Conſcience, Heb. 10. 22. to have their Conſcience purg'd from dead Works (thoſe deadly Works that were deadly Criminalities and deadly Pollutions, Heb. 9. 14.) and Chriſt's Sacrifice is ſaid to make them perfect as pertaining to the Conſcience, Heb. 9. 9. For they are perfect as to the expiation of Sin, or are perfectly expiated by Chriſt's Sacrifice, being made by it uncondemnably ſinleſs, guiltleſs and uncriminal as to the Mind, Soul and Conſcience. In one place more of the New Teſtament mention is made of Conſcience, but it is of a ſuperlatively evil Conſcience; for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of a Conſcience ſeared with an hot Iron. 1 Tim. 4. 2. ſuch is the Conſcience of an habituated atrocious Criminal. The Phraſe may ſignifie (a) that his Conſcience is deeply maculated with the Marks of his Crimes (Pectus inuſtæ deformant maculæ;) it may ſignifie (b) that he is of a branded ſtigmatiz'd Conſcience, an infamous Villain; and the Phraſe may allude to ſear'd cauteriz'd Fleſh, and therefore may ſignifie (c) that he is become inſenſate as to his Conſcience, and is ſo far harden'd in his Villainy.

(q) Optimè ſocietas hominum conjunctioque ſervabitur, ſi ut quiſque erit conjunctiſſimus, ita in eum benignitatis plurimum conferetur. Cic. de Off. l. 1.

(r) Aſſumptis in conſcientiam Othone & Claudio Senecione adoleſcentulis. Annal. l. 13.

(s) Ut hominum conſcientia remota, nihil tam turpe ſit, quod voluptatis cauſa non videatur eſſe facturus. De Fin. l. 2.

(t) Suam quenque ſcelus agitat, amantiâque afficit: Suæ malæ cogitationes conſcientiæque animi terrent. Pro. Sext. Roſc.

(u) Conſcientia benè actæ vitæ multorumque benefactorum recordatio jucundiſſima eſt. Idem de Senect.

(w) Conſcientia rectæ voluntatis maxima conſolatio eſt rerum incommodarum. Idem l. 6. Ep. 4.

(x) In ipſa conſcientia rectè factorum ſatis laborum fructus eſt. Idem 5. Philip.

(y) Nulla re tam lætari ſoleo, quàm officiorum meorum conſcientia.

(z) Magna profectò res eſt, ſi quis de Innocentiâ ſuâ ſibi conſcius eſt. Sophocl. ap. Sharrock de Offic. c. 1. N. 11. Conſcium eſſe ſibi in vitâ ſuâ Nullius Criminis, multum profectò voluptatis parit. Antiphon. ibid. Nihil eſt miſerius quàm animus hominis conſcius. Plautus ap. Bp. Taylor Duct. Dub. B. 1. c. 1. r. 2. n. 9. Oreſtes being ask'd what troubled him? Maketh anſwer (in the Tragedy) ἡ σύνεσις, ὅτι σύνοιδα δεῖν' εἰργασμένος, Conſcience, becauſe I am conſcious, that I have done atrocious things. Qui ſibimet alicujus rei eſt conſcius, ſit licet audaciſſimus, conſcientia illum maximè meticuloſum reddit. Menander ap Sharrock ſupr. N. 10. Conſcia mens ut cuique ſua eſt, ita concipit intra Pectora pro facto ſpemque metumque ſuo. Ovid. ibid.

——Tormentaque ſera Gehennæ
Anticipat, patiturque ſuos mens conſcia Manes. Auſon.

—————— ſi quid
Uſquam Juſtitiæ eſt, & mens ſibi conſcia recti.
Virgil 1. Æn.

Joh 8. 38. Wiſd. 15. 13. Tit. 3. 11. 1 Joh. 3. 20. Rom. 2. 15. and 9. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 12. and 4. 2. and 5. 11. Heb. 10. 2.

1 Cor. 10. 25, 27, 28, 29.

IV. At this gigantick pitch of Wickedneſs they are arriv'd, that have overcome their checking and controlling Mind, that can commit groſs and flagrant Sins without reluctance or regret, remorſe or ſhame, and perpetrate notorious Wickedneſs with an Opinion of its generoſity, gallantry and bravery. (d) So the Philoſophers diſtinguiſh between ἀκρασία, Incontinence, and ἀκολασία, Intemperance: Ἡ μὲν ἀκρασία σώζει τὴν κρίσιν ὀρθὴν, in Incontinence the Man keepeth his Judgment right, but is carried away by the appetite, that is too ſtrong for Reaſon. But of ἀκολασία, (Intemperance) they ſay, αὕτη μὲν ἔχουσα καὶ πάθος φαῦλον καὶ λόγον, it addeth a vicious judgment to a vicious appetite, καὶ τὴν αἴσθησιν ἀποβάλλει τῶν ἁμαρτομένων, and it deſtroyeth the Sence of the Sins. The Man ἐξ ὅλης τῆς ψυχῆς συνεπινεύει ταῖς ἡδοναῖς, from his whole Soul inclineth and conſenteth to his ſenſual Pleaſures, and ſuch commit Uncleanneſs with greedineſs. Eph. 4. 19. How far Men may thus degenerate εἰς θηριωδίαν, into Brutiſhneſs (to be paſt feeling having the Mind obnubilated and the Conſcience deaded) is beſt known to them, that make the deſperate Experiment: But in ſome of the greateſt Monſters for Wickedneſs amongſt the Heathen, Tiberius, Caligula, Nero) the Sence of Conſcience was ſo far from being extinguiſh'd, that in the height of their greatneſs and in an affluence of Proſperity and ſenſual Pleaſures they found the Rebukes and Laſhes, the Anguiſh and Terrours of their own guilty Minds unavoidable. Whence the Hiſtorian obſerveth, that (e) if the Minds of Tyrants be laid open, the Verberations and Laniations may be ſeen. By the Vultur gnawing Ixion's Liver the ancient Theologers meant (f) the torments of an evil Conſcience. By their Erynnies, Eumenides, Furies alſo the Heathen Theologers meant the horrours and terrours of a guilty Mind (g) hæ ſunt impiis aſſiduæ domeſticæque Furiæ, theſe are the conſtant and domeſtic Furies to the impious. Heathen Mankind felt in themſeves and found in others, that horrours of Conſcience attend horrid Practices, and that there is ſomething in Man, ὃ τὸ ἄδικον μὲν λωβᾶται, τὸ δὲ δίκαιον ὀνίνησιν, which injuſtice ſenſibly hurteth, and which juſtice helpeth and delighteth, as Socrates ſaith in Plato's Crito. They found that certain groſs Sins did ſenſibly wound their Conſciences, which alſo wounded them, accuſing and reproaching them, convicting and condemning them (h) and ſcourging them with ſilent ſtrokes, diſquieting them with anguiſh and penſiveneſs, with doleful fears and ſad preſages; and this ſenſe of Guilt in their own Minds was a manifeſt Notice and Indication to them, to count thoſe Practices Wickedneſs, and to eſchew them as ſuch, which did claſh with the frame of their Minds, and brought ſo many and ſo great Evils of an evil Conſcience upon them. By internal Sence and Experience they found, they had a Conſcience bearing them Witneſs, acquitting and comforting, or accuſing and condemning them; they found a difference between Well-doing and Evil-doing in general, that ſome Practices were peaceful and pleaſant to their Minds (as harmonious and agreeable thereto) and that others they could not diſpence with; whereby the Duties of Honeſty and Juſtice were notic'd to them, to be Laws, inviolable, and they were warn'd of a future Judgment. They found, that Sin hath another face after the commiſſion of it, than it had before (perfecto demum ſcelere magnitudo ejus intellecta eſt, ſaith Tacitus) and that the only way to Peace, was not to Sin againſt their Conſcience. Erroneous Conſciences they had, yet not ſo erroneous, but that we may pronounce with Origen (i) all Men have according to the common Notions a ſound anticipation touching the Moral Diſcipline.

SECTION IV.

Of the twofold Obſervation of the Law of Nature.

I. AS in reſpect of its Obligation and Promulgation, ſo in reſpect of its Obſervation the Law of Nature is of a twofold Notion. For abating an additional Reſtriction which is in its definition (that limiteth it to the Notices of the light of Nature) the Law of Nature is intirely the ſame with the Divine Moral Law. And becauſe that additional Reſtriction reſpecteth only the Promulgation of it, therefore the Law of Nature conſider'd without reſpect to the Promulgation of it is abſolutely the ſame with the Divine Moral Law. Whence Divines ſay (k) the Law of Nature is in reality the Moral Law, of which the Summary is compris'd in the Decalogue.

Act. 23. 1. 24. 16. 1 Tim. 1. 5, 19, and 3. 9. Heb. 13. 18. 2 Tim. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 3. 16. 21.

(a) Grot.

(b) Dr. Hamm.

(c) Mr. Mede.

(d) Plutarch. de virt. mor. p 445, 446. Caſaubon. in Perſ. p. 249, 250.

(e) Si recludantur Tyrannorum mentes, poſſe aſpici laniatus & ictus. Vid. Grot. de V. R. C. l. 1. in fine. Iſ. Pontani Not. in Macrob. p. 675. Owen. Θεολ. παντοδ. l. 1. c. 5.

(f) Tormenta malæ conſcientiæ obnoxia flagitio viſcera interiora rimantis & ipſa vitalia indefeſſa admiſſi ſceleris admonitione laniantis. Macrob. in Som. Scip. l. 1. c. 10.

(g) Cic. or. pro Sext. Roſc.

(h) Mala facinora conſcientia flagellari, & plurimum illi tormentorum eſſe, eò quòd perpetua illam ſolicitudo urget ac verberat. Sen. Ep. 97.

(i) Πάντων ἐχόντων κατὰ τὰς κοινὰς ἐννοίας πρόληψιν ὑγιῆ περὶ τοῦ ἠθικοῦ τόπου. C. Celſ. l. 1. p. 6.

(k) Eſt autem Lex naturæ reipſa Lex moralis cujus ſumma comprehenſa eſt in Decalogo. Melancthon. Exam Theol. p. 360.

(l) The Decalogue it ſelf is wont to be called the Law of Nature. (m) All the Precepts of the Decalogue belong to the Law of Nature except the Fourth touching the Sabbath. The Schools ſay (n) all the Moral Precepts of the old Law are of the Law of Nature. They might have ſaid, that the Law of Nature is of the Divine Moral Law, but they choſe to ſpeak otherwiſe, and others of the learned ſpeak as they. (o) Not only the Principles and Grounds of Spiritual and inward Obedience to God for God's ſake, but alſo the Precepts wherein it conſiſteth, are rather preſuppos'd by the Law than introduc'd by it; and therefore may well be ſaid, to be tranſlated out of the Law of Nature into Moſes's Law. Some therefore call theſe Precepts of the Moſaic Law (p) Tralatitia, becauſe they ſuppoſe them to be tranſlated out of the Law of Nature. So the ancient Writers of the Church look upon the Moſaic Moral Law as the Law of Nature of a ſecond Edition. (q) Was not the Law of Nature in the People of Iſrael? Plainly it was, for they were Men, and could not be without the Law of Nature, unleſs they could be without the Nature of Men. They were made therefore much more Sinners by the Divine Law, whereby the Law of Nature was reſtor'd, or augmented or confirmed. (r) This is the natural Law, which was partly reform'd by Moſes, and partly its Authority in reſtrainiug Vices was confirm'd, ſaith the Author of the Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans under S. Ambroſe's Name. He ſuppoſeth, that the Law of Nature was by Moſes cleans'd from heterogeneous Mixtures, and that in ſuch Senſe reform'd it is the ſame with the Moſaic Moral Law, and conſequently it muſt be conſider'd (as the Moſaic Moral Law hath been conſider'd) both as it is of Civil-religious and as it is of Spiritual-Religious Obſervation. The one conſtituteth the Civil-religious, the other the Spiritual-religious People. The one is neceſſary in Civil-religious Society, the other is Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, which alone is available, to conſtitute Men Righteous as to their Soul-intereſts.

II. The Law of Nature (becauſe of this different Obſervance of it) is an Inſtitution of Spiritual-Religious Virtue and Duty in order to Mens Soul-intereſts, and alſo an Inſtitution of Civil-religious Virtue and Duty in order to their Secular and Civil Intereſts, as the Apoſtle conſidereth the Moſaic-moral Law. 1 Tim. 1. 9, 10. The Law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly and for ſinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of Fathers and murderers of Mothers, for man-ſlayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themſelves with mankind, for men-ſtealers, for liars, for perjured perſons. As a Philoſopher is far from ſuppoſing, that a virtuous Man's proper Inſtitution of Virtue is not made for a virtuous Man: So if the Apoſtle had conſider'd the Moral Law as the Law of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, he would not have ſaid, that it is not made for a righteous Man; for it is his proper Inſtitution of Righteouſneſs. Rom. 2. 13. and 8. 7. and 13. 8, 10. Jam. 2. 8, 9, 10, 11. But as the Philoſophers ſay of the Civil Law of the Commonwealth (s) it is not made for the good (it is not needful to make ſuch Laws for them:) So the Apoſtle ſaith of the Civil-religious Law of the Jews, it is not made for a righteous Man, as needful to be made for him, but for the leud and flagitious, (t) that by Authority of Law they may be documented with the Civil-religious Morals, reſtrain'd from violating them, or puniſh'd if they do violate them. The Moſaic Moral Law as it was the Law of the Judaical Commonwealth (that Political Law) was an Inſtitution of Civil-religious Virtue and Duty and of Civil-religious Obſervation. Whence a young Man telleth our Saviour Matth. 19. 20. that he had always obſerv'd the Moral Precepts of the Law; and the favour which our Saviour had for him, ſheweth, that he ſpake nothing but truth; for as to the Civil-religious Obſervation of the Precepts of the Moral Law he was train'd up ſo virtuouſly, that he had kept them from his Youth. So the Apoſtle in his Judaical Religion touching the Righteouſneſs which is in the Law (the Law-religion of the Law-religioniſts) was blameleſs. Phil. 3. 6. (u) The Righteouſneſs which is of or in the Law (ſaith a Pontifician Theologer) is thoſe Works which Men do without the Grace of Faith, being help'd only by the knowledge of the Law, and theſe Works do not juſtifie before God, but only before Men, who only conſider externals. Which account of the Righteouſneſs that is in the Law, is in part true and in part falſe. For it is rightly ſaid, to be thoſe Works, which Men do without Grace and Faith meerly by the knowledge of the Law: But this Righteouſneſs may juſtifie before God as to ſecular and civil Intereſts. Ezek. 18. 5, 9, 20, 22, 26, 27. And it cannot be ſuppos'd, that the good Conſcience which S. Paul had in his Judaiſm, was nothing of his legal Righteouſneſs, which therefore was not meerly external as to the Mind and Soul, yet no better than a Civil-religious Obſervance of a Civil-religious Law. Such is the Law of Nature, as it is the Law of Civil Societiſts, (Lex Attica vel Jus Civile Romanorum) as it is Jus Gentium (the Law of Nations) and as it is the Law of mundane Citizens in general meerly in order to their Secular Intereſts. For the Civil Law of every Nation in great part conſiſteth of the Law of Nature, which Civil Law is a Civil-religious Inſtitution (an Inſtitution of Civil-religious Virtue and Duty and of Civil-religious Obſervation) and conſequently the Law of Nature whereof it conſiſteth, is of the ſame Character. Such a Civil-Religious Inſtitution as the Civil Lawyers Diſcipline, which is defined by themſelves (w) the Notice both of Divine and Human things, the Science of Juſt and Unjuſt. This the Fathers call a Wiſdom (x) that extendeth only to the Utility of Temporal Life, the Honeſty of this Life, the civil way of

(l) Ipſe Decalogus Lex Naturæ vocari ſolet. Zanch. op. T. 4. l. 1. p. 194.

(m) Decalogi præcepta omnia ad Legem naturalem pertinent, excepto quarto de quiete Sabbathi. Curcell. Synopſ. Eth. c. 6.

(n) Omnia præcepta moralia veteris legis ſunt de lege naturæ. Aquin. 12dæ Qu. 100. Art. 1.

(o) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 1. c. 12.

(p) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 17.

(q) Nunquid lex iſta naturalis non erat in populo Iſrael? Erat planè, quoniam & ipſi homines erant. Sine lege autem naturali eſſent, ſi præter naturam humani generis eſſe potuiſſent. Multo magis ergo prævaricatores facti ſunt lege divina, qua naturalis illa, ſive inſtaurata, ſive aucta, ſive firmata eſt. S. Aug. Enar. in Pſal. 178. Conc. 25.

(r) Hac eſt lex naturalis quæ per Moyſen partim reformata, partim authoritas ejus firmata in vitiis cohibendis. In Ep. ad Rom. c. 3.

(s) Grot. Not. in loc. & in Matth. 5. 17. & in Gal. 5. 2

(t) De hoc uſu dicitur, Lex e poſita injuſtis. Melanchth. Exam. Theol. p. 393. Hæc coacta expreſsáque juſtitia neceſſaria e publicæ hominum communitati. Hoc officium (legis moralis) videtur Apoſtolus propriè attigiſſe quum tradit Legem non eſſe juſto poſitam. Calvin. Inſtit. l. 2. c. 7. S. 10.

(u) Juſtitia ex lege ſive in lege, ſunt illa opera quæ homines faciunt ſine gratiâ fidei, ſolâ cognitione legis adjuti, & hæc opera non juſtificant coram Deo, ſed ſolum coram hominibus, qui tantum externa conſiderant. Bellarm. T. 4. l. 1. c. 19.

(w) Juriſprudentia eſt divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, juſti atque injuſti ſcientia. Inſtit. l. 1. Tit. 1.

(x) Ad temporalis vitæ utilitatem, ad hanc vitam moremque civilem, ad præſentis vitæ honeſtatem, ad Societatis humanæ æquitatem, ad mores civi-

Living, the equity of Humane Society, the good manners of Cities and concord of the People. (y) Humane Life, ſaith the Orator, is deſtroy'd by Wickedneſs, but conſerv'd by Virtue. This ſort of Religion and Virtue neceſſary for Humane Society and for Humane Civil Life the Humane Laws inſtitute and in conſort with them the Law of Nature, the Morals whereof Joſephus calleth, (z) That which is common to all Men unto honeſty of Manners, and which alone is ſufficient to conſerve the life of Men. As a Civil-religious Inſtitution and for the conſervation of Humane Life the Law of Nature had an agreeable obſervation amongſt the virtuous Popular Pagans; for their obſervation of it was (in their way of Religion) Civil-religious; which was (a) Virtus civilis, non vera, ſed veriſimilis, ad veras virtutes, æternamque beatitudinem non profecit, Civil Virtue, not the true, but a ſemblance thereof, wholly ineffectual to make the Soul truly holy and happy.

III. But the Law Natural and Moſaical is the Law (or Religion) of Soul-intereſts, for ſo the doers of the Law ſhall be juſtified, Rom. 2. 13. The Commandment was ordained to Life, Rom. 7. 10. (b) It promiſeth and affordeth Life to the Doers of it. (c) When a young Man ask'd, Good Maſter, what ſhall I do, that I may inherit Eternal Life? Chriſt anſwer'd, If thou wilt enter into Life, keep the Commandments, which he reckoneth in their order. The Commandments of the Law therefore were ſuch, and that by the purpoſe and deſign of the Lawgiver, and this was it, which the Law profeſſedly looked at, to lead Men to Life Eternal and Salvation. (d) In like manner, Luk. 10. to a Lawyer that asked, What ſhall I do, to inherit Eternal Life? Chriſt anſwered, What is written in the Law, how readeſt thou? ſignifying plainly, that the Law was given as the way of obtaining Eternal Life. The Moral Law therefore natural and moſaical is not meerly a Civil-religious Inſtitution, but an Inſtitution of Religion and Virtue in order to Life Eternal, which muſt be called, The Law-religion touching Soul-intereſts. Our Saviour in his Diſcourſe with the Lawyer expreſſeth the very terms (the condition and premiant part of the Sanction) of this Law-religion; for he having repeated to our Saviour the grand Precepts of the Moral Law touching the Love of God and of Man, our Saviour replyeth to him, Hoc fac & vives, This do and thou ſhalt live. (e) This is ſuch a fulfilling the legal Covenant, that a Man by benefit thereof may obtain the inheritance of Eternal Life. (f) Lex dicit, redde quod debes. Hoc fac & vives. The Law ſaith, pay what you owe (do what you ought) This do and thou ſhalt live. If the Moral Law (natural and moſaical) is a Settlement or Covenant of Life Eternal, it is neceſſarily alſo a Settlement of Condemnation and of Death Spiritual and Eternal. (g) It is called the Law of Sin, not as if the Law it ſelf is Sin, but becauſe of the Sinners that it is impos'd upon; therefore it is alſo the Law of Death, becauſe the Wages of Sin is Death, the Sting of Death is Sin, and the ſtrength of Sin is the Law. (h) The Law of Death is the (moral) Law of Moſes, which the Apoſtle in another Epiſtle calleth the miniſtration of Death. (i) The Law is not Wrath, but it worketh Wrath, that is, puniſhment, to the Sinner, not pardoning, but vindicating. (k) For the Law doth not pardon Sins, but condemneth. (l) Chriſt hath redeemed us from the Curſe of the Law, which is ſettled upon Sinners. If the Moral Law hath all theſe tragical effects, (and others of like nature) in the Senſe of the New Teſtament, if the deſign of a Saviour was to redeem Mankind from the multifarious Evils brought upon them by the Moral Law, it muſt be thought a Premiant and Penal Settlement of the Soul-intereſts of men. Nor is it poſſible, that it can be an Holy Spiritual Law (as the Apoſtle ſtileth it) unleſs the Sanction of it be the Settlement of the Spiritual and Soul-intereſts of men. From whence it followeth, that Life and Death as they are the Sanction of the Law, muſt be underſtood in a twofold Notion, the one Civil-religious, the other Spiritual-religious, the one of which is figurative of the other. As when the Apoſtle ſaith, The Law is not of Faith, but the Man that doeth them ſhall live in them: Life muſt ſignifie Secular Proſperity as premiant to Civil-religious Obedience; and Life Eternal as premiant to the Spiritual-religious fulfilling the Law. Gal 3. 12.

IV. If the Moral Law natural and moſaical is the Law (or Religion) of Soul-intereſts, it is neceſſarily in the preceptive part of it an Inſtitution of the Spiritual-religious Morals and of Spiritual-religious Obſervation, (m) quod legi convenit utique Spiritali, which belongeth to it, as it is the holy Spiritual Law, Rom. 7. 12, 14. Such a kind of Law requireth, that men be the holy Spiritual kind of Livers (not of the wicked, carnal and ſinning kind) and that they live the holy ſpiritual kind of Life, which is the Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs of the inward man and the ſpiritual-religious obſervance of the Law. (n) We know, ſaith the Apoſtle, that the Law is ſpiritual, but I am carnal; whereby he ſheweth, that the Law cannot be fulfilled but by the Spiritual, who are not made ſuch but by Grace. To a Spiritual Law as every one is of greater affinity (growing in ſpiritual affection) ſo much the more he fulfilleth it. (o) If the Law is Spiritual, the Precepts of it are Spiritual, and the Works of it are Spiritual. The Law is Spiritual both in reſpect of the Life and Practice, and in reſpect of the Virtue and Duty which it requireth; for it requireth the holy Spiritual Life and Practice, and the Spiritual-religious Virtue and Duty, which are the ſame thing, but with this difference; The holy ſpiritual Life and Practice is contradiſtinguiſh'd to carnality and wickedneſs of Life and Practice, but the Spiritual-religious Virtue and Duty is contradiſtinguiſh'd to the Civil-religious, which (if alone) is but a carnality of Religion and Virtue. Such was the Religion and Virtue of tatum concordiamque populorum. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. par. 3. Theſ. 10, 11, 12. Lactant. l. 6. c. 6.

---

(y) Iſocrat. Archid. p. m. 212.

(z) Τὸ πρὸς καλοκαγαθίαν κοινὸν ἅπασι, ϗ μόνον ἱκανὸν διασώζειν τὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων βίον. V. Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 17.

(a) Voſſ. ſupr. Theſ. 8, & 11.

(b) Vitam æternam facientibus repromittit. S. Hieron. com. in loc. Obedientibus proficit ad vitam. S. Ambroſ. com. in loc.

(c) Petav. Dogm. Th. T. 1. l. 10. c. 24.

(d) Suarez. de Leg. l. 9. c. 3.

(e) Davenant. de Juſtit. actual. c. 47. Le Blanc. Theſ. p. 560.

(f) Urſin. Catech. par. 2. Qu. 19. p. 101.

(g) Lex peccati dicitur, non quia lex ipſa peccatum eſt, ſed quia peccatoribus imponitur. ideò etiam lex mortis, quia ſtupendiam peccati mors, aculeus mortis peccatum, virtus autem peccati lex. S. Aug. T. 4. l. 83. Qu. 66.

(h) Lex mortis Moyſi lex eſt, quia mortificat peccatores. Nam & in alia Epiſtola inter cætera dicit de authoritate Legis: Si miniſtratio mortis formata in lapidibus fuit in gloria. S. Ambroſ. Com. in. Rom. 8.

(i) Non lex ira eſt, ſed iram operatur peccanti, id eſt pænam, dum non ignoſcit, ſed vindicat. Idem Com. in c. 4.

(k) Lex enim non donat peccata, ſed damnat. S. Hieron. Com. in Rom. 4.

(l) Redemit nos Chriſtus de maledicto legis, quod peccantibus conſtitutum eſt. Idem l. 2. Com. in Ep. ad Gal. c. 3. 13.

(m) S. Ambroſ. in Pſal. 118. Ser. 19.

(n) Scimus inquit Apoſtolus, quia lex ſpiritalis eſt, ego autem carnalis ſum. In quo ſatis oſtendit, non poſſe impleri legem niſi à ſpiritalibus, qui non ſiunt niſi per gratiam. Spiritali enim legi quanto fit quiſque ſimilior, id eſt, quanto magis & ipſe in ſpiritalem ſurgit affectum, tanto eam magis implet. S. Aug. ad Simplic. l. 1. Qu. 1.

(o) Si Lex ſpiritalis eſt, utique præcepta Legis ſunt ſpiritalia, & opera ejus ſpiritalia ſunt. S. Ambroſ. in Pſal. 43. p. m. 564.

the Jews after the Letter, that ſerv'd in the oldneſs of the Letter, being totally devoid of the Holy Spiritual Life, and therefore they were under the Curſe of the Holy Spiritual Law, (p) quia ſub maledicto ſunt omnes, qui ſub litera ſunt, for all that are under the Letter, are under the Curſe. They are in their Carnality of Life and Practice, and in their Carnality of Religion and Virtue, and are a Family of virtuous People and of Religioniſts oppoſite to the Spiritual and Divine Family of Regenerate Religioniſts, in whom the Righteouſneſs which the Holy Spiritual Law requireth, is fulfilled (in the main although not in the rigor of it) Rom. 8. 4. and 13. 10. (q) Regenerate Chriſtians that walk not after the Fleſh but after the Spirit (live the Holy Spiritual Life) fulfill the Righteouſneſs of the Law; the Law is therefore the Inſtitution of the Spiritual-religious Duty and Virtue. (r) None are the doers of it and of the Righteouſneſs which it requireth, but they that belong to the New Teſtament, that have the Law not written in Tables, but in their Hearts by an intimate and faithful love of God and of Righteouſneſs, which is the Spiritual-religious obſervance of the Law. (s) To do the Commandments of the Moral Law from ſervile fear of puniſhment (which is to do them againſt one's Will) is not to be a well-doer. The Law is not obſerv'd but by the love of God and of Righteouſneſs and delight in things ſpiritually good, and (t) by that equitable Charity which doeth to all, as we our ſelves would be done to. And if the Life of Divine Charity is the only genuine obſervance of the Law, it is neceſſarily of Spiritual-religious obſervation. The Chriſtian Moral Law is of Spiritual-religious obſervation, and the Moſaic Moral Law is of the ſame nature; for our Saviour in his Sermon on the Mount (which is the Chriſtian Moral Law) is ſaid, to have perfected and filled up the Moſaic-moral Law upon this account, (u) becauſe what was obſcurely imply'd therein, our Saviour hath clearly and diſtinctly explicated. That part of his Moral Law wherein he ſeemeth to dilate, extend and fill up the Moſaic (uſing the Phraſe But I ſay unto you) is in the main nothing elſe but the Contents of the Moſaic Moral Law clearly unfolded and ſo as to be changed into Chriſtianity. And becauſe the Moſaic Moral Law is the ſame with the Law of Nature, hence ſome Divines ſay of our Saviour's Sermon on the Mount, (w) Hæc Legis Epitome non eſt conſilium arbitrarium, ſed eſt Lex naturæ obſervatu neceſſaria, This Epitome of the Law is not arbitrary Counſel, but is the Law of Nature of neceſſary obſervation. The Law of Nature therefore is of various acceptation; for the whole Divine Moral Law without reſtriction to natural Light (the whole Syſtem of that Moral Law of which there are Notices by the light of Nature) is ſometimes called The Law of Nature. And by confining it to the Notices of natural Light this large acceptation of it is made narrower; for it is not to be ſuppos'd, that the Light of Nature ſo fully and perfectly noticeth the Moral Law as the Moſaic Scripture. (x) The Ten Commandments teach nothing new; but what was obliterated they admoniſh: that Juſtice laid aſleep in the Jews by the Law, as Fire by blowing, may rekindle.

V. As the Summary of what the Law of Nature (or the Moral Law) requireth, is The good Life (well-doing or Univerſal Righteouſneſs:) ſo it appeareth, that the good Life muſt be diſtinguiſh'd into two kinds, The Civil-religious and the Spiritual-religious. The Civil-religious good life maketh ſuch a City, as is defined by Ariſtotle, (y) ἡ τοῦ εὖ ζῆν κοινωνία, A Society of living well. It maketh ſuch good People, as Demoſthenes ſpeaketh of. (z) If all indeed fearing the Puniſhments that are in the Laws, abſtain from evil-doing; and if all deſirous of the Rewards allotted to well-doing, will do what they ought, what hindreth, but that the City may be moſt ample, καὶ πάντας χρηστοὺς, καὶ μηδένα εἶναι πονηρὸν, and that all be good and not one bad or improbous. The good life of the virtuous Popular Pagans, (a) who boaſted of their living well, and did by nature the things contained in the Law, cannot be thought of a better Character than the Civil-religious. For of the Spiritual-religious kind of good life it muſt be ſaid, (b) If we live well, we have been dead, and are riſen to life. He that is not yet dead, nor riſen to life, as yet liveth an evil life. And if he liveth an evil life, he doth not live, let him die, that he may not die. Let him die to the purpoſe being ſpiritually alive, and not take up with the bad kind of good life (which continueth men in the ſtate of death;) for the Law of it is not only (c) Lex factorum & νόμος ἐντολῆς σαρκικῆς, a Law of external good Deeds and of a carnal Commandment, but alſo νόμος πνευματικὸς, a Spiritual Law: Which diſtinct conſiderations of the Law are taken notice of by the Learned Grotius, who yet in moſt of his Annotations hath marvellouſly miſtaken and perverted the Theology of the Law.

(p) S. Ambroſ. ibid.

(q) Lex data eſt, ut gratia quæreretur: Gratia data eſt. ut Lex impleretur. Neque enim ſuo vitio non implebatur Lex, ſed vitio prudentiæ carnis. quod vitium per legem demonſtrandum, per gratiam ſanandum fuit. ut juſtitia legis impleretur in nobis qui non ſecundum carnem ambulamus, ſed ſecundum ſpiritum. S. Aug. de Spirit. & Lit. c. 19.

(r) Ut hoc ſit pertinere ad Teſtamentum Novum, legem Dei habere, non in tabulis, ſed in cordibus ſcriptam; hoc eſt in intimo affectu juſtitiam legis amplecti, ubi fides per dilectionem operatur. Idem ibid. c. 26.

(s) Mandatum ſi fit timore pœnæ, non amore juſtitiæ, ſerviliter fit, non liberaliter, & ideo nec fit. non enim fructus eſt bonus, qui de charitatis radice non ſurgit. Ibid. c. 14.

(t) Præcepta legis per charitatem impleta ſunt, quæ per timorem non poterant. Idem Qu. ſuper Exod. l. 2. Qu. 166. S. Ambroſ. Com. in Ep. ad Hebr. c. 10.

(u) Petav. T. 1. l. 10. c. 24. S. 12. de Lege & Grat. l. 1. c. 7.

(w) Scultet. Exercit. Ev. c. 20.

(x) Decem ſermones in tabulis nihil novum docent; ſed quod obliteratum fuerat, admonent: ut juſtitia in illis ignium more, quaſi adflatu quodam legis, ſpiritu recaleſcat. Novatian. de Cib. Jud. c. 2.

(y) Polit. l. 3. c. 9.

(z) In Lept.

(a) S. Aug. in Pſal. 31. præfat.

(b) Si benè vivimus, mortui fuimus & reſurreximus. Qui autem nondum mortuus eſt, nec reſurrexit, malè adhuc vivit. Et ſi malè vivit, non vivit, moriatur nè moriatur. S. Aug. de Tempore Ser. 142.

(c) Grot. de J. B. & P. l. 1. c. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

The Introduction. Sect. 1. The proper condition of the Men of Nature that belong to the Law, is the Life and State of lapſed ungodly Sinners, which is The natural and legal condition. Sect. 2. The Article of Original Sin ſignifieth, that Mankind are natively and originally Sinners, as being natively and originally in old Adam ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, as being ſuch to whom a Branch of the ſtate of Condemnation belongeth at preſent (and therefore the Name and Reputation of Sinners) as being of a vitiated Nature and in all the natural and legal condition in a degree of Inchoation and prevalent tendency that way. Sect. 3. Mankind that belong to Nature and to the Law, do not nor can attain Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs by Nature and by the Law. Sect. 4. Mankind that belong to Nature and to the Law, cannot attain to the ſtate of Righteouſneſs by the Law and the Works thereof, but all of them are in all the Evils of the Criminal and Penal State, the State of Condemnation. Sect. 5. The Law muſt be look'd upon as the Religion of Man's Unregeneracy, and as the Religion of the Religioniſts of Unregeneracy, and conſequently as the Religion of our Spiritual Servitude.

FRom the Law as it is a ſettlement and diſpenſation of things, the Apoſtle and the ancient Writers of the Church (following the Apoſtle) deduce the many great Spiritual Evils, that are incumbent upon unchriſtianiz'd mankind; which cannot be ſuppos'd to iſſue from a Moſaic Law, that was peculiar to the Jews: but ſeeing an univerſal Effect muſt have an univerſal Cauſe, they muſt be deriv'd from the Law, Original, Natural and Moſaical, which are one univerſal Law. (d) The Moral Law obligeth all Rational Creatures (Angels and Men) and appertaineth to Men of all times. This therefore (the Law of the Univerſe of Rationals) is the great Univerſal Law; and the Pagan Theologers (who had ſome acquaintance with the Theology of the Law) conſider it as the Law of God's original Sovereignty and Government, when they ſtile the Precepts of it, (e) νόμοι νόμων πρεσβύτεροι, Laws more ancient than any (Humane) Laws. This moſt ancient of Laws conſider'd as a Settlement and Diſpenſation of things we have defin'd The Religion of Law-juſtice, agreeably to that difference which the Fathers make between Law and Goſpel. (f) In the Law of Works there is the Juſtice of God commanding: but in the Law of Faith the Mercy of God helping. The one is medicinal for the Maladies which come by the other. If the Law-juſtice had not been, the Law of helping Mercy had not been needful. As if there had been no Sin, there had been no Saviour: So there had been no Goſpel, if there had been no Law. Whence in great part thoſe Spiritual Evils (together with a mixture of Temporal Evils) muſt be deriv'd, which conſtitute the natural and legal condition of Mankind, of which we will repreſent ſeveral definitive Notices, to make it clearly intelligible, that the neceſſity of introducing the Goſpel-ſettlement and Diſpenſation may thence plainly appear.

(d) Obligat Lex moralis omnes creaturas rationales & ad omnium temporum homines pertinet. Melancton. exam. Theol. p. m. 371, 379.

(e) M. Tyr. diſſ. 40.

(f) In lege factorum eſt Dei jubentis juſtitia: in lege autem fidei, ſubvenientis miſericordia. S. Aug. in Pſal. 118. conc. 10.

SECTION I.

The proper Condition of the Men of Nature that belong to the Law, is The Life and State of lapſed ungodly Sinners, which is the natural and legal Condition.

I. NAture is a word of ſuch various Significations both in Sacred and Profane Authors, that one hath compos'd a little Book (a Manuſcript in the Library at Vienna) to ſhew (g) ἡ φύσις ὁσαχῶς παρείληπται τῇ θείᾳ γραφῇ, how many ways Nature is taken in Scripture. But in Scripture the word is of no conſiderable difficulty ſave only in that celebrated place (which hath occaſion'd ſeveral Diſputes,) 1 Cor. 11. 14. Doth not even Nature it ſelf teach you, that if a Man have long Hair, it is a ſhame unto him? Nature in this place cannot ſignifie Cuſtom, the Allegation whereof is impertinent (as Salmaſius obſerveth) and the Apoſtle throughout his Diſcourſe manifeſtly argueth from the Nature of Men and Women. Maſculine and Feminine Nature together with the Diſcretion that is in Humane Nature, to diſcern them, teacheth different uſages touching Mens and Womens Hair and touching covering their Heads. Not as if theſe uſages amounted to Laws of Nature: but ſo far Nature teacheth them, as to be a ſufficient ground and reaſon of that civil cuſtom, which took place at Corinth, which was for Men to be ſhaven and not to let their Hair grow at length as Womens (κομᾶν is oppos'd to κείρεσθαι, Grot. Not. in v. 15.) nor to have their Heads cover'd in the publick Aſſemblies; And for Women (as not to be ſhaven, but to let their Hair grow at length, ſo) to wear a Veil on their Head. Which Veil the Apoſtle conſidereth, not meerly as a covering of their Face; but as a covering it for this purpoſe, for Self-humiliation, Demiſſion and Subjection, and therefore he calleth it, v. 10. Power on their Head, that is, a Badge of their Subjection. To this uſe of the Veil the Apoſtle hath reſpect, v. 15. If a Woman have long Hair it is a glory to her; for her Hair is given her ἀντὶ περιβολαίου, inſtead of a Veil, as the words ought to be rendred. For the Apoſtle cannot mean, that her Hair is given her for a covering of her Face; ſuch an ordinary uſe of the Hair is not imaginable, nor can it be the deſign of Nature, nor is the Hair ever us'd for ſuch a purpoſe unleſs (h) in ſome caſes of extraordinary Sorrow. But her Hair is given her to be as a Veil upon this account (which Expoſitors have overlook'd) becauſe it is given her, to be worn at length and unſhaven, and the wearing it ſo is for the ſame purpoſe as the Veil, viz. for ſelf-humiliation, demiſſion and ſubjection, whence a Woman's long Hair is called by Tertullian, (i) Humilitatis ſuæ ſarcina. So the Nazarites wore their Hair at length and unſhaven, (k) for Self-humiliation and Demiſſion; therefore Women are ſo to wear their Hair for the ſame purpoſe, as the Council of Gangra ſaith.

(l) If

(b) Biſhop Pearſon vind. Ep. S. Ignat. par. 2. c. 14. p. 196.

(h) Dr. Lightfoot Hor. in v. 15.

(i) De Coron. Mil. c. 14.

(k) Dr. Lightfoot in v. 14.

(l) If any Woman for ſome exerciſe of ſuppoſed Piety ſhall poll her Hair, which God gave her to put her in mind of her Subjection, as being one that diſſolveth the Commandment of Subjection let her be Anathema. Womens wearing their Hair at length and unſhaven being for the ſame purpoſe as their wearing the Veil, thoſe of them in the Church of Corinth that refus'd to wear the Veil, might as well chuſe to be ſhaven, as the Apoſtle argueth, v. 5, 6. Every Woman that prayeth or propheſieth with her Head uncovered, diſhonoureth her Head (that is, her ſelf, it is a ſhame to her, v. 6.) for that is even all one as if ſhe were ſhaven. For if the Woman be not covered, let her alſo be ſhorn: but if it be a ſhame, for a Woman to be ſhorn or ſhaven, let her be covered. From this Illuſtration of all the conſiderable Obſcurities in the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe it appeareth, (n) that although ſeveral Nations have affected to wear very long Hair, yet this is no reaſon, why (in expounding the Apoſtle) we ſhould recede from the uſual Senſe of φύσις, Nature, whence Phyſiology hath its Name, and which uſually ſignifieth Mundane Nature (as is before obſerv'd) and alſo Innate Inſtinct, which is below underſtanding and choice. Some ſuppoſe, (o) that Nature is an irrational force exciting Motions in Bodies. The Brutes are ſaid, to practiſe the reſemblance of ſeveral Virtues ſolà Naturà duce meerly by the guidance of Nature, which is innate Inſtinct. (p) Sometimes Nature ſignifieth Nativity (agreeably to the Etymology of the word φύσις) and ſometimes Generation, (q) as in S. James's Epiſtle γένεσις and φύσις are the ſame, and Ocellus Lucanus ſaith, (r) that below the Moon is the Region νείκους καὶ φύσεως, of Contention and of Nature or Generation. This is that which the old Philoſophers commonly mean by Nature, ſublunary mundane Nature, or geneſiurgick Nature. (s) Empedocles us'd the word Nature for Generation. (t) Is there any genuine and perfect and eternal good among thoſe things which are inbred in us by Nature, which is in Generation? Uſually Nature ſignifieth, (u) the conſtitutive nature of Beings (ſingulis ſua eſt natura) and in a large acceptation Nature ſignifieth vitiated and corrupted Nature. (w) We uſe Nature in one ſenſe, when we properly call that the Nature of Man, in which he was firſt made inculpable; and in another ſenſe when we call that his Nature, in which we are now born degenerate. Nature is uſually contradiſtinguiſh'd to Law, (x) and more uſually to Grace. But in any or all of theſe Acceptations Nature may be underſtood in the Name that we have given to the Law-religioniſts in ſtiling them The Men of Nature: whereby we mean thoſe that in reſpect of ſaving Religion tranſcend not the line and level of common mundane humane Nature, that are totally graceleſs and unchriſtianiz'd.

II. The Phraſe of belonging to the Law is of ambiguity, as thoſe other Phraſes are, which the Apoſtle uſeth, in the Law, of the Law, under the Law. For according to the Apoſtle's Senſe, Rom. 2. 12. Thoſe that have ſinned in the Law, are the Jews, the Intrinſicks of the Moſaic Inſtitution (as the Gentiles are thoſe that have ſinned without any written Law:) but the Phraſe may ſignifie more largely and generally; for all that are Intrinſicks to ſuch an Inſtitution of Religion, which is a written divine Law, may be ſaid, to be ἔννομοι or ἐν νόμῳ, in the Law, as a Father ſaith, (y) in lege Spiritales & Judæi & Chriſtiani. When the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of thoſe that are of the Law, in one place he meaneth thoſe, that are Jewiſh Religioniſts meerly ſuch, ſo as to be Unbelievers; as Rom. 4. 14. If they which are of the Law be Heirs, Faith is made void. But in another place when he ſpeaketh of thoſe that are of the Law, he meaneth, thoſe that are Jews ſo as to be Believers; as Rom. 4. 16. Therefore it is of Faith, that it might be by Grace; to the end the Promiſe might be ſure to all the Seed, not to that only which is of the Law, but to that alſo which is of the Faith of Abraham, who is the Father of us all. When he ſpeaketh of thoſe that are under the Law, ſometimes he meaneth thoſe that are under the rule and authoritative Diſcipline of the Moſaic Law, that look upon themſelves as under an obligation to the whole of it; as 1 Cor. 9. 20. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the Law as under the Law, that I might gain them that are under the Law. Rom. 3. 19. What things ſoever the Law ſaith, it ſaith to them that are under it. But in other places he conſidereth the Law as a ſettlement and diſpenſation of things (which he confronteth and oppoſeth to the ſettlement and diſpenſation of Saving Grace, Gal. 5. 4.) and they that are under this Law-ſettlement and diſpenſation of things, to whom the matters of it do belong (and to whom the matters of the ſettlement and diſpenſation of Saving Grace do not belong) theſe he looketh upon as thoſe that are under the Law, and theſe are they whom I call them that belong to the Law. Gal. 5. 18. If ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the Law (but under another Settlement and diſpenſation of things:) Regenerate Chriſtians are thoſe that are under that ſettlement and œconomy of things, which is Saving Grace, not under the Law-ſettlement and œconomy of things. Rom. 6. 14. Ye are not under the Law, but under Grace. (z) He ſpeaketh of the diſpenſation of Grace. The carnal Jews were under the Law. Man was left under the Law, if left to himſelf, without the aid of the internal gift of Divine Grace. He is under the Law, as being an improbous Sinner, that is not chang'd from the old Man, but is in vetuſtate corruptionis, in the oldneſs of his Corruption. So the Apoſtle accounteth thoſe that belong to the Law the carnal and ſuch as are in the Fleſh, Rom. 8. 5, 6, 14. So Iſhmael born of the Bondwoman and according to the courſe of Nature only, ſignifieth thoſe that belong to the Law. Thoſe that are of the World (the Men of Nature) are thoſe that are of the Law, and thoſe that are of the Law, are thoſe that are of the World, τοῦ νόμου τῷ κόσμῳ συνᾴδοντος, the Law thus harmonizing with the World, and the World with the Law, as Philo ſpeaketh.

III. It may ſeem a Paradox, that the Gentiles ſhould be ſuch as belong to the Law, who are ſtiled ἄνομοι, thoſe that are without Law,

Rom. 2. 12.

(l) Ἔι τις γυναικῶν διὰ νομιζομένην ἄσκησιν ἀποκείροιτο τὰς κόμας, ἃς ἔδωκεν ὁ θεὸς εἰς ὑπόμνησιν τῆς ὑποταγῆς, ὡς ἀναλύουσα παράγγελμα τῆς ὑποταγῆς, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω. Can. 17.

(n) Sharrock de off. c. 11.

(o) Naturam eſſe vim quandam ſine ratione cientem motus in corporibus. Cic. de N. D. l. 2. Lactant. l. 7. c. 3.

(p) Petav. T. 2. l. 4. c. 3. & T. 4. l. 3. c 8. s. 6.

(q) Windet. de vit. funct. p. 33. Ed. 3.

(r) Cap. 2.

(s) Empedocles ἀντὶ τῆς γενέσεως εἴρηκε τὴν φύσιν. Plutarch. adv. Colot. p. 1112.

(t) Τί γὰρ ἂν εἴη γνήσιον καὶ τέλειον, καὶ ἀΐδιον ἀγαθὸν τῶν ὑπὸ τῆς φύσεως τῆς ἐν γενέσει εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐμφυομένων; Jambl. de Myſt. S. 10. c. 3.

(u) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 6. c. 8. Coſri p. 254.

(w) Naturam aliter dicimus, cùm propriè loquimur naturam hominis, in qua primum in ſuo genere inculpabilis factus eſt: aliter iſtam in qua ex illius damnati pœna & mortales, & ignari, & carni ſubditi naſcimur. S. Aug. de lib. Arbitr. l. 3. c. 19.

(x) Petav. T. 1. l. 10. c. 18. s. 6.

(y) S. Aug. de oper. Monachor. c. 11.

(z) De diſpenſatione Gratia loquitur. S. Aug. Ep. 19. Sub lege carnales Judæi. Idem de oper. Monach. ſupr. Homo ſub lege relinquebatur, ſi ſibiipſi, ut- pote non adjutus interno dono di- vinæ gratiæ. Cajetan. in loc. Sub lege vivit in quantum quiſ- que peccator eſt: id eſt, in quan- tum à vetere homine non eſt mu- tatus. S. Aug. Expoſ. Ep. ad Galat. c. 2. 19.

Rom. 2. 12. 1 Cor. 9. 21. They did not belong to the Judaical Law (with reſpect whereunto they are ſaid to be without Law) nor were they like the Jews, Chriſtians and Muhammedans, that have a Law, which is their Religion, a Judaical, Chriſtian and Muhammedan Law: But there is no ſuch thing as the Pagan Law, the Law of every particular Commonwealth was the the Pagans Law of Religion. But as part of the Univerſe of Rationals and as being (a) a World of Sinners they could not be without the Law of Nature; and being the graceleſs and unholy kind of Rationals they could not belong to any better Settlement or Diſpenſation of things than the Law (not to the Religion of Saving Grace;) therefore they were neceſſarily of Character the Men of Nature that belong to the Law. If they had been God's true and genuin kind of Religioniſts, they had been in the ſame Condition with thoſe Holy People of the Ante-Moſaic times, who obſerv'd the Law of Nature, ſo as to be in the State of Grace, to live the Life of Grace, and to belong to the Settlement and Diſpenſation of Grace (the initial Religion of Saving Grace:) But they were (in the main) of the ſame Family and Foot-mark with the carnal Jews, alike graceleſs, wicked and carnal kind of Rationals, alike graceleſs, wicked and carnal kind of Religioniſts. The civiler ſort of Pagans ſymboliz'd with the carnal Jews in this their Naturaliſm and Legaliſm, they pretended to good Life, recommended it and perſwaded others to it, but diſſwaded them from being Chriſtians. (b) For there are many ſuch that in cuſtomary Speech are called good Men, and good Women, innocent, and as obſerving the Precepts in the Law, honouring their Parents, not committing Adultery, nor Homicide, nor Theft, nor falſe Witneſs againſt any, and as obſerving the other Precepts in the Law, which are no Chriſtians; and uſually theſe boaſt as the Jews, are we blind alſo? Such Men uſually perſwade others, to live well and not to be Chriſtians. Such Religioniſts (whether Jews or Gentiles) muſt be denominated the Law-religioniſts, and ſuch as belong to that Settlement and Diſpenſation of things. The matters of it belong in common to graceleſs and unholy Jews and Gentiles. (c) The Law condemned the World; for as S. Paul ſaith, God hath ſhut up all under Sin by it, and hath ſhew'd us to be Guilty of Puniſhments. (d) For all have ſinn'd and are under the Curſe. (e) But how is the Law the ſtrength of Sin? Becauſe without the Law Sin is weak, committed indeed, but not able to condemn. Sin hath its damnatory Power (to bring Mankind into the State of Condemnation) by the Law. (f) If the Law worketh wrath, and maketh Men Guilty of Tranſgreſſion, it is manifeſt, that they are ſubjected to the Curſe alſo. And they that are ſubjected to the Curſe and the Puniſhment, and guilty of the Tranſgreſſion, are not thoſe that are worthy to inherit, but worthy of the Portion of a Criminal and to be caſt out. (g) What the Apoſtle ſaith of the Jewiſh Law, may much more juſtly be ſaid of the Law of Nature, the Law of all Mankind: If Righteouſneſs is by the Law, Chriſt is dead in vain. The Gentiles as well as the Jews pretended to Righteouſneſs by the Law, and were alike oppoſite to Chriſtianity; if the carnal Jews therefore were thoſe that belong'd to the Settlement and Diſpenſation of the Law, the ſame muſt be ſaid of the Gentiles. Accordingly the Apoſtle telleth the Chriſtianiz'd Galatians and Romans (who were Gentiles) that if they were Chriſtianiz'd, and becauſe they were Chriſtianiz'd, they were not under the Law. Which implieth, that antecedently to their Chriſtianity they belong'd to the Law-Settlement and Diſpenſation of things.

IV. Mankind therefore muſt be contemplated as the Men of Nature that belong to the Law, and it muſt be conſider'd what their Condition is by Nature and by the Law; and ſo conſidered (according to Chriſtianity) their Condition is no other (in reſpect of Life and of State) than that of lapſed ungodly Sinners, ſuch is their natural and legal Condition. (h) Faith found thee a Sinner, if thou waſt juſtify'd by it. Chriſt deſcended for no other cauſe but the liberation of Sinners. Liberation is not competible but to one that is a Servant of Sin, nor can he be redeem'd, that is not by Sin a Captive. Every one is neceſſarily from Adam evil and carnal; if regenerate in Chriſt he will afterwards be Good and Spiritual: But none is Good, who was not at firſt bad. If thou art not impious, yet thou waſt ſometime ſuch; for none is made Juſt but of a Sinner. Sinners the World of Mankind are by Nature and by the Law, ſo as not to be the Righteous, but all are the Ungodly, Rom. 5. 6. The Unjuſt, 1 Pet. 3. 18. the Tranſgreſſors that are gone aſtray, Iſa. 53. 6, 12. (i) Τοῦ σκοτεινοῦ γένους, of the atheouſly dark Kind aud Family, 1 Joh. 2. 8. of the evil ſinning Kind, and of this evil World. Joh. 8. 23. and 7. 7. Gal. 1. 4. So far from being without Sin, that they are without any true Saving Goodneſs. Joh. 5. 42. 1 Joh. 4. 7. At Chriſt's coming ſuch was the Condition of Mankind univerſally (a few only excepted who belong'd to the initial Religion of Saving Grace) both Jews and Gentiles. (k) Omne hominum genus per naturæ diſſimulationem & deliquerat & rebellaverat adverſus Creatorem. All (Heathen) Mankind by holding the naturally notic'd Truth in unRighteouſneſs had ſinn'd and rebell'd againſt the Creator. The Gentiles were (l) Peccatores Terræ, (the Sinners of the Earth) and the Jews (except before excepted) were alike nefarious Sinners as they. Rom. 3. 9. Of the jetzer harang evil Figment or Concupiſcence which is in Man an Hebrew Doctor ſaith (m) הוא שטן הוא יצר הרע הוא מלאך המות It is the Devil, it is the evil Concupiſcence, it is the Angel of Death. Agreeable whereto is a late pious Writer's tragical Character of Mankind, which yet underſtood with a due additional Qualification hath nothing of extravagance in it. (n) Such is Man by his Nature, exceſſively arrogant, elated, intemperate, covetous, inſatiable, covetous of what is not his own, a ſupplanter, a liar, contentious, envious, revengeful, a man-ſlayer, blind, raſh, refractary, impious and prone to all wickedneſs; and to ſpeak compendiouſly, the Nature of Man as now corrupt is not very much different from the Nature of impure Devils. Such Exaggerations of the evil Nature of Man ought to be underſtood with this additional Qualification, that there is in it a mixture of a ſort of Virtue and Religion. Nemo malus omnino malus. The Children of Wickedneſs in ſome degree depart from Iniquity, and will not perpetrate all manner of villainy. Many of them are memorable for laudable Practices of an extraordinary Character. (o) Herod the Great caus'd all his Golden and Silver Veſſels to be melted, to make Proviſion for the People in a time of Famine. That Herod who was eaten of Worms, Act. 12. 23. is ſaid to have been of a moſt mild Diſpoſition, Humane and Liberal, and ready to ſuccour ſuch as were in Adverſity, a moſt Religious obſerver of the Rites of his Country, and no day paſſed wherein he did not offer Sacrifice. Alexander the great (whoſe Vices equaliz'd his ſecular Grandeur) having conquer'd Darius (p) treated his Mother, Wife and Daughters with great humanity, and ſent them back untouch'd. Sitting on high by the Fire in a time of a great Snow he took notice of a very old Macedonian Soldier ſtupify'd by the Cold; and not computing the difference of Fortune but of Age, he came down from his Seat, and with his own Hands ſet that Body which was contracted by the cold in his own Seat, ſaying, that would be ſalutary to him, which amongſt the Perſians would have been Capital, to poſſeſs the King's Throne. Such generous doings make a fine ſhew, but it is not hard, to make a judgment of their Kind and Quality from the Character of the Perſons that did them; for Thorns do not bring forth Grapes, nor do Men gather Figs of Thiſtles. The carnal and mundane kind of Men (remaining ſuch) can be no better than the carnal and mundane kind of Virtuous Men and Religioniſts: Not God's kind of Virtuous People nor his kind of Religioniſts, but the World's kind of Virtuous People and Religioniſts, the Aliens from God and the true and ſaving Piety (their Hearts are alienated from it) the Rebel-kind of Sinners, living in mortal Sin, and therefore the Servants of Sin. To abandon Iniquity in ſome degree and to practice ſome ſort of Virtue and Piety, but not ſo far or to ſuch effect, as to be of the number of the truly Righteous and Holy, can be of no avail to Life eternal, but continueth Men (q) ſub veteri damnatione, under the old Condemnation, which the Moſaic Law brought upon the Jews and the Law of Nature upon the flagitious Heathen World. (r) For if thoſe under this Law (the Moſaic) appear to be under the Curſe, becauſe of their not obſerving all things in it, is it not much more apparent, that all the Gentiles are under the Curſe, that Worſhip Idols and commit Uncleanneſs with Boyes, and perpetrate many other evil things?

(a) Quomodo poteſt ſine lege peccari cùm omnes ſimul ſubditi ſimus legi naturali? S. Ambroſ. com. in Ep. ad Rom. c. 2.

(b) Multi enim ſunt, qui ſecundum quandam vitæ hujus conſuetudinem dicuntur boni homines, boni viri, bonæ fœminæ, innocentes, & quaſi obſervantes ea quæ in Lege præcepta ſunt, deferentes honorem parentibus ſuis, non mœchantes, non homicidium perpetrantes, non furtum facientes, non falſum teſtimonium adverſus quenquam perhibentes, & cætera quæ lege mandata ſunt velut obſervantes, Chriſtiani non ſunt; & plerunque ſe jactant quomodo iſti, nunquid & nos Cæci ſumus? Quærunt plerunque tales homines etiam perſuadere hominibus, ut bene vivant, & Chriſtiani non ſint. S. Aug. in Johan. Tr. 45.

(c) Ὁ μὲν νόμος κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον· συνέκλεισε γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς δι' αὐτοῦ τὰ πάντα ὑπὸ ἁμαρτίαν, ὡς ὁ Παῦλος φησί· καὶ κολάσεως ἡμᾶς ἐνόχους ὄντας ἐδείκνυεν. S. Cyr. in Johan. p. 102.

(d) Πάντες γὰρ ἥμαρτον καὶ ὑπὸ κατάραν εἰσίν. S. Chryſoſt. in Galat. 3. 11.

(e) Πῶς δὲ ἁμαρτίας δύναμις ὁ νόμος; ὅτι χωρὶς αὐτοῦ ἀσθενὴς ἦν, πραττομένη μὲν, οὐ δυναμένη δὲ οὕτω καταδικάσαι. Idem in 1 Cor. 15. 56.

(f) Εἰ δὲ ὀργὴν κατεργάζεται καὶ παραβάσει ὑπευθύνους ποιεῖ, εὔδηλον ὅτι καὶ κατάρᾳ· οἱ δὲ κατάρᾳ καὶ τιμωρίᾳ καὶ παραβάσει ὄντες ὑπεύθυνοι, οὐ τοῦ κληρονομεῖν ἄξιοι, ἀλλὰ τοῦ δίκην διδόναι καὶ ἐκβάλλεσθαι. Idem in Rom. 4. 15.

(g) Si hoc Apoſtolus dixit de Lege, quam accepit gens una Judæorum, quanto juſtiùs dicitur de Lege Naturæ, quam accepit univerſum genus humanum? S. Aug. de Nat. & Grat. c. 2.

(h) Peccatorem te Fides invenit, & ſi te fides data fecit juſtum peccatorem invenit, quem faceret juſtum. S. Aug. Enar. Pſal. 31. præfat. Chriſtus non alia ex cauſa deſcendit, quàm peccatorum liberandorum. Tertull. de Idol. c. 5. Nullus niſi qui peccati ſervus eſt, liber efficitur, nec redemptus dici poteſt, niſi qui verè per peccatum fuerit ante captivus, ſicut ſcriptum eſt, ſi vos filius liberaverit, verè liberi eritis. Zoſim. ap. S. Aug. Ep. 157. Unuſquiſque primò ſit neceſſe eſt ex Adam malus atque carnalis: Quòd ſi in Chriſto renaſcendo profecerit, poſtea erit bonus & ſpiritalis. Non quidem omnis homo malus erit bonus, nemo tamen erit bonus, qui non erat malus. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 15. 1. Tu etiamſi non es impius, fuiſti tamen aliquando: Quia nemo fit juſtus niſi ex peccatore Idem T. 10. Hom. 6.

(i) Macar. Hom. 30.

(k) Tertull. c. Marcion. l. 5. c. 5.

(l) S. Hilar. in. Pſal. 118.

Section II.

The Article of Original Sin ſignifieth, that Mankind are natively and originally Sinners, as being natively and originally in Old Adam ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, as being ſuch to whom a Branch of the State of Condemnation belongeth at preſent (and therefore the Name and Reputation of Sinners) as being of a vitiated Nature and in all the natural and legal Condition in a degree of Inchoation and prevalent Tendency that way.

I. THE Anti-pelagian Fathers have deſervedly called the Article of original Sin, (s) one of the Fundamenta Fidei (Fundamentals of Faith;) for if it is not one of the Proximate and Primary, yet at leaſt it is one of the remote and ſecondary Fundamentals of the Chriſtian Inſtitution. The natural and legal Condition of Mankind is manifeſtly one of the primary Fundamentals of the Chriſtian Inſtitution, and the Article of Original Sin is Fundamental to this primary Fundamental. For if it was not becauſe of Original Sin Mankind might have Righteouſneſs, Life and Salvation by Nature and by the Law; and if ſo, Chriſt would be of no neceſſity, they might do as well with his room as his company. (t) If the Law could give Life, no doubt Righteouſneſs would be by the Law, nor would a Saviour be ſought, nor would Chriſt come, nor would he ſeek the loſt Sheep by his Blood. They that heartily acknowledge Chriſtianity therefore, muſt befriend the Article of Original Sin; they are Adverſaries to their own Inſtitution, that diſpute againſt it and put ſlurs upon the Article, although ſome of them do not ſo properly diſpute againſt the Article, as againſt ſome of the Exceſſes and Extravagances that are affix'd to the Article, that blemiſh it and ſpoil the reaſonableneſs of it, of which there is a competent number. For (1.) the Article doth not imply, that Adam's Sin is imputed to all his Poſterity, as if they themſelves had committed it. That Adam was deputed by God, to repreſent all Mankind, to keep or loſe Original Righteouſneſs for them, that he receiv'd it in his own Name and the Name of his Poſterity, and the Covenant was with all Mankind in him: Whereupon his Diſobedience is formally imputed to them as their Diſobedience, and his Tranſgreſſion ſo imputed to them is their Original Sin. (2.) The Article doth not imply, that all Mankind are (in reſpect of their Soul-intereſts) in the ſtate of Damnation, becauſe Adam's Sin is imputed to them, as if they themſelves had committed it. This is one of the Exceſſes and Extravagances of S. Auſtin and the Anti-pelagian Fathers, neminem naſci ex Adam niſi

(m) Menaſſ. ben Iſr. ap. Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2.

(n) Ita eſt homo ſuâ naturâ, ſupra modum arrogans, elato animo, intemperans, avarus, inſatiabilis, alieni cupidus, ſupplantator, mendax, contentioſus, invidus, vindictæ cupidus, homicida, cæcus, præceps, præfractus, impius atque ad omne facinus natus; ut in ſummam contraham, hominis natura (corrupta videlicet ea quâ utimur) ab impurorum naturâ dæmonum parùm eſt abſimilis. Jac. Acont. Stratagem. p. 17. O quàm deteſtabilis res eſt hominis ingenium, ſi Deus ſuum ſubtrahat ſpiritum! Ibid. p. 225.

(o) Joſeph. Antiqu. l. 15. c. 12. & l. 19. c. 7.

(p) Plutarch. in Alex.

(q) Iren. adv. Hær. l. 3. c. 20.

(r) Εἰ δὲ οἱ ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον τῶν ὑπὸ κατάραν φαίνονται εἶναι διὰ τὸ μὴ πάντα φυλάξαι, οὐχὶ πολὺ μᾶλλον πάντα τὰ ἔθνη φανήσονται ὑπὸ κατάραν ὄντα ϗ εἰδωλολατροῦντα, ϗ παιδοφθοροῦντα ϗ τὰ ἄλλα κακὰ ἐργαζόμενα. J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 322.

(s) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 2. Par. 1. p. 181.

(t) Si lex poſſet vivificare, omninò ex lege eſſet juſtitia, nec quæreretur Salvator, nec veniret Chriſtus, nec ſanguine ſuo ovem perditam quæreret. S. Aug. de verb. Apoſt. Ser. 13.

niſi vinculo delicti & damnationis obſtrictum. Whence Mankind is called by them maſſa damnata, maſſa damnationis, maſſa perditionis. (3.) It doth not imply, that the far greateſt part of Mankind are by the Offence of Adam ſubjected to the irrevocable Decree of Reprobation. That God look'd upon Mankind as lapſed into Sin by Adam's Tranſgreſſion and thereupon did predeſtinate the greateſt part of them to eternal Damnation, which is the Sublapſarian Doctrine. (4.) It doth not imply any thing touching the good or bad Eſtate of ſuch as die in their Infancy, about which there are many Speculations and Debates. Some ſuppoſing that all ſuch Infants (notwithſtanding Original Sin) are admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven; others, only the Children of the Faithful; others, only ſuch Infants as are elected; others, only ſuch as are baptiz'd; others, only ſuch as are baptized and communicated. Some have thought, that Original Sin meriteth nothing worſe than a middle place between Heaven and Hell, where Infants enjoy neither Happineſs nor Miſery. Others ſuppoſe, that in this middle place they enjoy Happineſs. Others exclude a middle place, and ſuppoſe, that all ſuch as die in Infancy, that are not admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven, go to Hell, and there ſuffer pœna damni, as ſome ſay; others ſuppoſe, that they ſuffer Hell-torments. Thus upon occaſion of Original Sin ſuch an Infant-Theology is brought into the Church, of which neither the Scripture nor ſound Reaſon knoweth any thing. (5) The Article doth not imply, that in our firſt Conception there is in us ſuch a vicious Nature, wherein there are formally all Diabolical Vices, and which conſtituteth Infants in their firſt Conception Infidels, Fornicators, Calumniators, Proud, Envious, Murderers, Haters of God. (6.) It doth not imply, that meer Infants are chargeable with any Sin, Fault or Crime otherwiſe than with due diſtinction and limitation of Senſe. For not being intelligent voluntary Agents they are not chargeable with any actual Sin, and conſequently they have not thereby contracted any habitual Sin. That which in others is Sin in habit and diſpoſition, is not in the ſame ſenſe Sin in them, if it is their Fate not their Choice. Let us ſuppoſe two Infants, the one born with an Holy Nature, the other without it; the former of theſe is a due Object of complacence and praiſe, the other of diſplicence and diſpraiſe. But the former of theſe is not an Object of rectoral premiant complacence and commendation, nor is the other an Object of rectoral punitive diſplicence and blame, if the one had no hand in acquiring, nor the other in loſing the holy Nature; for there is nothing of Duty in the one's having his diſpoſitive Goodneſs, nor any thing of undutifulneſs (fault or faileur of Duty) in the others diſpoſitive Badneſs.

Pelagius ſaid, Quo non eant ſcio, Quo eant neſcio.

II. The Article of Original Sin ſignifieth our being natively and originally Sinners, in a ſober ſenſe, which in general conſiſteth in our being natively and originally in old Adam and in him ſubjected to the courſe of Nature. (u) *Every Soul of Man till he be of a new Cenſus in Chriſt, is reckon'd to be in A*dam, and is ſo long unclean. (w) *As all Men by the firſt or carnal Generation belong to A*dam: So all that come to Chriſt, come to Spiritual Regeneration. Mankind muſt be conſider'd as natively belonging to the firſt Adam and of his Alliance (x) omnes enim fuimus in illo uno, for we all were in that one, and in him were ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, which was under a Suſpenſion during the Innocence and Paradiſaical Eſtate of our firſt Parents. But upon and for their Offence that Suſpenſion was taken off, whereby themſelves and their Poſterity were ſubjected to the courſe of Nature. The Sin of Adam ſo far introduc'd it, as to be meritoriouſly the removens prohibens thereof. In ſome degree therefore and in ſome ſenſe his Offence was imputed to his Poſterity; for not in a formal but a meritorious ſenſe of Imputation it was thus far imputed to his Poſterity; upon account of his Offence the Suſpenſion of the courſe of Nature was removed, whereupon his Poſterity were ſubjected thereto. Yet there is great Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that they were not ſubjected to the courſe of Nature meerly for his Offence: But thus far they were ſubjected to the courſe of Nature meerly for his Offence, the ſuſpenſion of the courſe of Nature was taken off meerly upon account of it. Upon the removal whereof the Life of Man became ſubject to Calamities, his Body to Diſeaſes and Death in the courſe of Nature, the internal Nature of Man became vitiated by inordinate Concupiſcence in the courſe of Nature, and Mankind became by and upon account of the Sin of Adam (ſo far as to remove the Obſtacle) natively and originally Sinners. In this ſummary and general account of Original Sin three Branches of it are compris'd.

III. The firſt Branch of Orignal Sin is, Mankind are ſubjected to the Domination of bodily Death (according to the courſe of Nature) and are ſo far in the State of Condemnation by Adam's Tranſgreſſion. So the Jews ſay, that Men die (y) by an univerſal and common Law, which the Counſel of the Serpent introduc'd into the World. So the Chaldee Paraphraſt ſaith (z) by that Counſel of the Serpent all the Inhabitants of the Earth are made obnoxious to Death. S. Jarchi rightly affirmeth, in omnibus maledictionibus primi hominis omnes ejus generationes conveniunt. In all the Maledictions of the firſt Man all his Generations agree. The Condemnation of Adam to die the bodily Death (according to the courſe of Nature) was the Condemnation of his Poſterity, as the Apoſtle ſaith. The Judgment was by one to Condemnation. By one Man's Offence Death reign'd by one. By the Offence of one Judgment came upon all Men to Condemnation. Rom. 5. 15, 16, 18. (a) The Apoſtle often repeateth this Phraſe by one, that when a Jew ſhall ask, how the World is ſaved by the Well-doing of one, that is, Chriſt; thou mighteſt be able to anſwer, how was the World condemned by one Adam ſinning? (b) A*dam ſinning the World was condemn'd.* So S. Chryſoſtom diſcourſeth agreeably to the Apoſtle, and he often explaineth himſelf what he meaneth by this Condemnation. Γεγόνασιν ἐξ ἐκείνου πάντες θνητοί, all Men were from him generated Mortal or under a neceſſity of dying. So the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe touching the Penal Effect of the Sin of Adam is manifeſtly confin'd to bodily Death (Death reign'd from Adam to Moſes, v. 14.) But if he had ſuppos'd, that all Men are now originally, not only ſubjected to bodily Death, but dead as to Spirituals and Eternals meerly by Adam's Tranſgreſſion, he would not have confin'd his Diſcourſe touching the Penal Effect of the Sin of Adam to bodily Death; nor could he extend it to any other Death, if his Diſcourſe muſt be of one piece with the Moſaic Hiſtory, which manifeſtly confineth the Puniſhment of Adam's Tranſgreſſion to bodily Death. If he had not ſinn'd, he had not dy'd: But having ſinn'd he muſt die as a condemn'd Malefactor, and he muſt die as introducing the Settlement of Death according to the courſe of Nature. The making this Settlement depended upon his Diſobedience, and was procur'd by it, and all that belong to him, belong to this Settlement and are ſubjected to the Domination of (bodily) Death upon the account of Sin, which is a Condemnation. There is therefore a Correſpondence between the two Adam's; for as Chriſt is the Founder of a State of Juſtification (Uncondemnation) and of Life to them that are of him, and the head of this Settlement: So the firſt Adam was the Founder of a State of Condemnation and of Death to them that are of him, and the head of the Settlement, 1 Cor. 15. 22.

(u) Omnis Anima eo uſque in Adam cenſetur, donec in Chriſto recenſeatur: Tamdiu immunda donec recenſeatur. Tertull. de An. c. 40.

(w) Sicut omnes homines per primam, hoc eſt, per carnalem generationem, pertinent ad Adam: Sic omnes homines ad ſecundam, hoc eſt ſpiritualem veniunt, quicunque ad Chriſtum perveniunt. S. Aug. Ep. 28.

(x) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 13. c. 14.

(y) Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2.

(z) L'Emper. in Iſa. 53. p. 13, 17.

(a) Οὐκ ἀφίσταται τοῦ ἑνὸς, ἵν' ὅταν λέγῃ σοι Ἰουδαῖος, πῶς ἑνὸς κατορθώσαντος τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἡ οἰκουμένη ἐσώθη; δυνηθῇς αὐτῷ λέγειν, πῶς ἑνὸς παρακούσαντος τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ἡ οἰκουμένη κατεκρίθη; S. Chryſoſt. ap. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 1. par. 2. p. 164. 166.

(b) Παρακούσαντος τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ἡ οἰκουμένη κατεκρίθη. Idem in Rom. 5. Hom. 10.

IV. A Second Branch of Original Sin is, Mankind by Adam's Tranſgreſſion have the Name and Reputation of Sinners. For by one Man's Diſobedience many were made Sinners. Rom. 5. 19. (c) What is the meaning of Sinners here? Τὸ ὑπεύθυνοι κολάσει, καὶ καταδεδικασμένοι θανάτῳ· ὅτι τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ἀποθανόντος πάντες ἐγενόμεθα θνητοί. The meaning of it is, obnoxious to Puniſhment and condemn'd to Death; that Adam dying we all became Mortal or ſubjected to a neceſſity of dying. (d) The Jews ſay אין מיתה בלא חטא without Sin there is no Death, nor Puniſhment without Crime. If mankind are ſubjected to Death, they are ſubjected to the Puniſhment of Sin, and they that are rightly ſubjected to the Puniſhment of Sin, are ſo far Sinners, of Name and Reputation the Sinners, which is a blot in our Eſchucheon, that accrueth to all Mankind by Adam's Tranſgreſſions. Cato hath well expreſs'd the Apoſtle's ſenſe (ẟ) omne humanum genus quodque eſt, quodque erit, morte damnatum eſt, all Mankind, both that which now is, and that which ſhall be, is condemn'd by Death. They are Sinners therefore; for Sinners are they, to whom Condemnation and Death belongeth. As they to whom Impunity belongeth, are the Innocent and the Righteous: So they to whom the evil Penal belongeth, are upon that account the Sinners. If therefore Condemnation, the State of Condemnation (one Branch of it ſubjection to bodily Death) belongeth to Mankind natively and originally by and upon account of the Sin of Adam, this Inference is unavoidable, that by and upon account of the Sin of Adam Mankind are natively and originally the Sinners, ſuch as are of Name and Reputation the Sinners. They that are made Sinners (ſubjected to Condemnation and Puniſhment) have the Name and Reputation of Sinners put upon them: Therefore if they are rightly made Sinners, the Name and Reputation of Sinners of right belongeth unto them. Some have obſerv'd, that (e) in the Hebrew Tongue, whoſe Phraſes the Apoſtles (writing in Greek) imitate, they are called by the Name of Sinners, who are treated and dealt with as Sinners. But they that made this Obſervation, ought to have made another. For they ought to have made a difference between thoſe that are wrongfully made Sinners (as thoſe that are made Offenders for a word, Iſa. 29. 21.) and thoſe that are rightfully made ſuch; for theſe are not only Quaſi-ſinners, but to them the Name and Reputation of Sinners juſtly appertaineth. It juſtly appertaineth to the Deſcendents of old Adam, that are his blemiſh'd Relatives, and for his Sin juſtly under Condemnation to bodily Death. They might be in a State of Affliction without being Sinners: But to ſuppoſe them juſtly under Condemnation, in the State of Puniſhment and of Death, and yet not to ſuppoſe them Sinners, is, as if we ſhould ſuppoſe them, to be juſtly in the State of Slaves, yet not of the Name and Reputation of Slaves.

(c) S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. 5. Hom. 10.

(c) Hoornbeek ſupr.

(ẟ) Sen. Ep. 71.

By one Man's Diſobedience therefore many were made Sinners: As by the Obedience of one many are made Righteous. Rom. 5. 19. As they that are of Chriſt are by him in the State of the Righteous (he founded for us the State of the Righteous) and therefore the Name and Reputation of the Righteous belongeth unto them: So they that are of Adam are by him in the State of Sinners (he founded for them a State of Sinners) and therefore the Name and Reputation of Sinners belongeth unto them. The Caſe of Adam's Poſterity may be illuſtrated from the corruption of Blood (a Branch of our Engliſh Law;) for a Man may be ſo foul a Criminal, that the Judgment or Attainder againſt him may ſpoil and corrupt, not only his Perſon, but his Blood (his Family) his Children are debarr'd from inheriting his Eſtate (which is forfeited) himſelf and his Children loſe their Dignity, and if they were Noble, they are degraded and made ignoble, and they are ſo deeply blemiſh'd and ſtain'd, that they cannot be reſtor'd by any ordinary method, nor by any thing leſs than an Act of Parliament. So when the Ground was curſed for the Sin of Man, when Adam was ejected out of Paradiſe, doom'd to a toilſome Life and a certain Death, theſe Penal Evils were Hereditary to his Poſterity and were entail'd upon his Children (ſo far the Sin of Adam was imputed to his Poſterity) they were debarr'd from the Tree of Life and from inheriting his Immortality (which was forfeited) the loſs of Innocence and the Paradiſaical State was a great Degradation, and they were ſo deeply ſtain'd and blemiſh'd, that they could not be reſtor'd but by a new Settlement of Things. In great degree therefore there is an Analogy between the corruption of Blood in Human Law and the Caſe of Adam's Poſterity. But to make the former throughout Parallel with the latter, let us ſuppoſe, that a Man's Crime is ſo foul, as not only to ſubject him to Death, but deeply to vitiate alſo the Frame of his Nature, and that the corruption of his Blood is ſo great, that the Children which he begetteth derive his vitiated Nature from him, and are by his Attainder not only diſinherited, degraded and ſtain'd: but are alſo natively and originally by and upon account of his Crime juſtly under Condemnation to ſuffer Death. No Rational Man will ſtick to affirm, that the Children of ſuch a Criminal are natively and originally a Brood and Generation of Criminals; therefore Mankind that are natively and originally in old Adam, that derive his vitiated nature from him, and are natively and originally by and upon account of his crime juſtly under condemnation, to ſuffer Calamity, Diſeaſes and Death, are natively and originally Sinners.

(e) In linguâ Hebraicâ, cujus phraſes Apoſtoli Grecè ſcribendo ſæpè imitantur, peccatorum nomen iis tribuitur, qui tanquam peccatores tractantur. Curcel Inſtit. l. 3. c. 16.

V. The vitiated Nature of Adam and his Poſterity (which is the third Branch of Original Sin) ought in congruity to be concomitant with their penal ſtate of Death. For if they loſe the rectitude of their Nature, it would be incongruous, that they ſhould not be ſubjected to the penal ſtate of Death; and it would be incongruous, that they ſhould be ſubjected to a ſettlement of their penal ſtate of Death, if they did retain the perfect rectitude of their Nature, and were ſo far wholly innocuous. Therefore (f) μετὰ τοῦ θανάτου καὶ ὁ τῶν παθῶν ἐπεισῆλθεν ὄχλος, together with Death there entred a throng and multitude of Affections and Paſſions, ſaith S. Chryſoſtom, (g) πολὺς παθῶν ἑσμὸς, a large ſwarm of tumultuous Paſſions, and thence it is (h) ὅτι ῥέπει ἡ φύσις ἐπὶ τὸ πταίειν, that Nature inclineth to falling; ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe he ſuppoſeth, that Mankind are natively and originally Sinners in nature and practice. The ſuſpenſion being taken off inordinate Concupiſcence took place in Humane Nature (in the courſe of nature) in conjunction and complication with bodily death. So the Hebrew Doctors ſay, (i) that the evil Figment was not in Man from his creation, but is from the old Serpent, that ſeduc'd our firſt Parents; and the Introduction of it into Humane Nature they conjoyn and complicate with the Introduction of Death. But if we ſhould ſuppoſe, that Adam's Poſterity are lapſed under puniſhment ſo far as to be ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, without being lapſed into Sin ſo far as to be ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, we ſuppoſe them lapſed-not lapſed, ſubjected to the courſe of Nature-not ſubjected to the courſe of Nature, and every one will be ready to argue with the Anti-pelagian Fathers, (k) Why are little Children afflicted, if they are altogether ſinleſs? It would be incongruous, to conſider them as a part of lapſed Mankind, that are lapſed under the puniſhment of Sin according to the courſe of Nature, yet are not lapſed into Sin (of Nature and Practice) according to the courſe of Nature. (l) The Jews fancy, that four Men dy'd without any ſin of their own, Benjamin the Son of Jacob, Amram the Father of Moſes, Jeſſe the Father of David, and Chiliab David's Son. If all Mankind were ſuch, as the Jews fancy theſe four men to have been, if they had no Sin of their own, if there was no lapſe of Mankind into Sin in Nature and Practice, it would be extremely harſh and incongruous, that they ſhould conflict with innumerable Calamities during their life-time and at length with the pains of Death. (m) In truth the heavy Yoke that is upon the Sons of Adam, from the day that they go out of their Mother's Womb, would be by no means juſt. The Apoſtle therefore repreſenteth Mankind as by and upon account of the offence of one man lapſed under the domination of Death, and in conjunction therewith lapſed alſo into ſin of nature and practice. By one man ſin entred into the World and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον, through whom or for that all ſinned (from the beginning of the World) Rom. 5. 12. Death and Sin entred, not ſingly and ſolitarily, but Death by the means of Sin and conjunct and complicate with it; and ſo Death paſſed upon all Men regularly, juſtly and in great congruity, ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον, for that all ſinned. In reſpect of the Hypotheſis of Original Sin it is not material, how ἐφ' ᾧ is rendred; whether with the Ancients generally in quo (in whom) or as ſome would have it per quem (by whom) or as others would have it quatenus, eò quod (in as much as for that;) which latter rendring I prefer before the other, becauſe it is moſt expreſſive of this Branch of the Hypotheſis of Original Sin, Death paſſed upon all men, for that all ſinned. Not as if their perſonal Sin was the ſole meritorious procuring cauſe of their Death (which is expreſly contrary to the Scripture:) but this is the cauſe or reaſon, why Death paſſed upon all Men regularly, juſtly and agreeably. Sin and Death were complicated in their entrance, and ſo they continu'd; for Sin continu'd in the World till the Law, and ſo did Death; for it reigned from Adam to Moſes, before and until the Law, over them that did not ſin againſt the Law (notwithſtanding that ſin is not imputed, when there is no Law) nor after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, v. 14, 15. The continuance of Sin in the World appeareth from the continuance of the reign of Death, the lapſe of Mankind into Sin appeareth from their lapſe under the reign of Death; for Death could not reign over them, if they were ſinleſs and had not loſt their Innocency.

(f) S. Chryſoſt. ap. Voſſ. ſupr.

(g) Idem in Ep. ad Rom. Hom. 11.

(h) Idem T. 1. p. 710.

(i) Helvic. proteu angel. S. 13, 15, 16 vid. P. Fag. in Gen. 2. ult.

(k) Propter quid ergo affliguntur parvuli, ſi nullum habeant omninò peccatum? Quâ juſtitiâ parvulus ſubjicitur peccati ſtipendio, ſi nulla eſt in eo peccati pollutio? Voſſ. Hiſt. pel. l. 2. par. 1. Theſ. 3.

(l) Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2.

(m) Profectò grave jugum ſuper filios Adam, à die exitus de ventre matris eorum, nullo modo juſtum eſſet. S. Aug. ap. Voſſ. ſupr.

1 Cor. 15. 21, 22. Ecclaſ. 25. 24.

VI. Theſe three Branches of Original Sin are the ſumm total of it, as it is derivable from the ſin and fall of Adam. For no place of Scripture deriveth from it the loſs of Original Righteouſneſs. S. Chryſoſtom deriveth from it Original Sin (of which he giveth a better account than any other of the ancient Writers) but taketh not any notice of our loſs or privation of this endowment Original Righteouſneſs. On the contrary, (n) Eraſmus, Stapulenſis and others are of Opinion, that this is S. Chryſoſtom's Senſe, that by the Sin of Adam our Bodies are become mortal, but our Souls have ſuffer'd no damage by it. Voſſius indeed thinketh, that they are miſtaken; becauſe S. Chryſoſtom ſaith, that a ſwarm of Paſſions entred together with Mortality: but this reaſon is it ſelf a miſtake. For the diſorderly Affections, Paſſions and Appetites that are in Man, according to the Scripture-notion of them belong to the Body (are called the Fleſh, the Affections and Luſts thereof, the Deeds of the Body, the Earthly Members) and according to ſevere Philoſophy they are the Life of the Body and belong to our terreſtrial animal nature. According to S. Chryſoſtom therefore and the Scriptures none of the Evils of Original Sin are derivable from the Sin of Adam but only the criminal and penal Evils of our Animal Nature; therefore our Terreſtrial-animal Idea of our firſt Parents is a genuine and legitimate Idea. For if all the Branches of Original Sin deriveable from them are only ſuch as belong to our Terreſtrial-animal Nature, either in their Innocency they were not partakers of the Divine Nature, or their Poſterity had no concern in it. Some think, (o) It is all one, whether we ſay, that Original Sin is Concupiſcence, or that it is the want of Original Righteouſneſs with Concupiſcence. But this alſo is a great miſtake; for Original Righteouſneſs (in the Senſe of the Schools) is the Life of God in the Soul of Man and the proper Life of the upper Soul; whereas the Animal-vital Nature is the ſeat and ſubject of Concupiſcence. This may reaſonably be deriv'd from our firſt Parents: but we muſt have a Faith big enough to remove Mountains, if we can believe it poſſible for our firſt Parents, by carnal generation to beſtow upon the Souls of their Poſterity the Life Divine (which is not born of the Fleſh) or by their lapſe to bereave the Souls of all Men of their proper Life, and (without any fault or fact of theirs) to ſink them into Spiritual Death, which is an Ocean of deadly Evils. To give a full account of Original Sin therefore, the lapſe of Souls muſt be conjoyn'd with the Terreſtrial-animal lapſe of our firſt Parents, from whom we derive our Animal-vital Nature.

(n) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 2. par 1. Theſ. 6. p. 165.

(o) Mr. Thorndike Ep. B. 2. c. 20.

VII. The Animal-vital Nature (ſolitary and ſeparate from the Holy-vital) beginneth its reign and domination with the life of man, whence he is natively and originally of a ſinning nature, (p) of the ſinning kind (τὸ ἁμαρτωλὸν γένος) and in a degree of inchoation and prevalent tendency that way (as is before diſcours'd) of a Nature full of Sins. For the Animal-vital Nature is in the courſe of Nature productive of all ſorts of Sins, the luſt of the Fleſh, the luſt of the Eyes, and the pride of Life, (and as ſuch it is the Body of Sin and of Death, the Body of the Sins of the Fleſh, indwelling Sin, the Law of Sin, the Law in the Members, the Earthly Members, the old Leaven.) The Fleſh is parturient of Sin and Wickedneſs naturally, ſpontaneouſly (as the Fountain powreth out Water) unceſſantly, deceitfully, violently and impetuouſly: (q) ad vitia nos naturæ noſtræ propellit inſtinctus, the Inſtinct of our Nature impelleth us to Vices. Which Original Pravity the Scripture ſignifieth in its Character of Man (ſinful Fleſh) Rom. 8. 3. of the World of Mankind, 1 Joh. 5. 19. of the univerſal depravation of Men, Pſal. 14. and 53. Of the Men of the Ante-diluvian times, Gen. 8. 21. Of the Heart of Man, Numb. 15. 39. Eccleſ. 11. 9. Of the Jews and Gentiles (of which neither Barrel was better Herring) Rom. 3. 9. Of the Humane Birth, Joh. 3. 6. Of Unregenerate Mankind, Rom. 8. 8, 9. Eph. 2. 1. Of their Deſcent and Pedigree, which is from beneath, Joh. 8. 23. So according to Philo (r) the Scripture calleth the Sons of Adam τοὺς γῆς υἱοὺς, the Sons of the Earth. Their original Sinnerſhip is ſo apparent, that even Celſus (the foul Philoſopher) ſaith, (s) πέφυκε τὸ ἀνθρώπινον φῦλον ἁμαρτάνειν, Mankind are by nature inclin'd to ſin. Agreeable whereto is (t) the Arabians Proverb (which in their Language is elegant and rhythmical) Man is called the Son of defect or diminution. That which the Apoſtle calleth the Fleſh is called by Ariſtotle τι πεφυκὸς ἀντιβαῖνον τῷ λόγῳ, ſomewhat innate to us which oppoſeth Reaſon. The Hebrew Doctors uſually diſcourſe of the original pravity of man's nature, and their Senſe is, (u) that there is Concupiſcence in Man deriv'd from the Crime and Contagion of our firſt Parents, which he followeth from his Birth and which hath deprav'd the Faculties of his Soul; that Concupiſcence is innate to the Heart of Man, and Sin is in ſome ſort natural to Man. An old and fooliſh King ſpoken of Eccl. 4. 13. is by one of their Commentaries interpreted of the jetzer harang, Evil Figment. But why do they call it a King? becauſe all the Members obey it, ſaith this Commentary. In the Talmud the Emperour Antoninus inquireth of R. Jehuda Hakkadoſh touching the Evil Figment, From what time doth Concupiſcence bear rule over a Man? from the moment of his intire Formation or from his Nativity? the Anſwer is, from his Formation. In our Saviour's time the Jews had a notion of being born in Sin, as appeareth from the Phariſees reproach of the blind Man, Joh. 9. 34. Thou waſt altogether born in Sins; which reproach may juſtly be thought an hyperbolical expreſſion, but the Hyperbole doth not lie in ſaying, that he was born in Sins, but in ſaying, that he was altogether born in Sins; whereby the Phariſees meant, that as to his whole nature he was nothing but Sins, that nothing but Sins were in him, not a ſpark of Sanctity or Goodneſs. This reproach is ſo atrocious, and ſo quite out of the Road, that it is not imaginable, whence the Phariſees had it, or how they came by it, if this was not a well-known Notion among the Jews at that time, that Mankind are born in Sins. (w) The only remedy for Mankind is, to be born again; and doth it not thence appear, into what depth of evil the nature of all Mankind is plung'd?

Section III.

Mankind that belong to Nature and to the Law do not nor can attain Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs by Nature and the Law.

I. THE great want of Mankind is the want of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, which appeareth in the contrariety between them and the Law. For the holy ſpiritual Law requireth the holy ſpiritual Life (in ſinleſs perfection) the ſpirituality of it ſpeaketh the eximious ſanctity of it, which is its great excellency. (x) For the Apoſtle ſtiling the Law ſpiritual, ſignifieth it to be the teacher of Virtue and the adverſary of Wickedneſs; for this is to be ſpiritual, to withdraw from all Sins. (y) The Law is ſpiritual, becauſe it commandeth the things that are ſpiritual, the hard Works of the Spirit forbidding Sins. The Law of Univerſal Righteouſneſs muſt be ſpiritual; but Mankind that belong to Nature and to the Law, that are ſubjected to the courſe of nature under the reign of the Fleſh and Sin, are of an oppoſite Character; for they are of kind and quality the Carnal, Rom. 7. 14. (z) The Apoſtle calleth him Carnal, that hath not yet attain'd Spiritual Grace. Spiritual Grace is not attainable by Nature or by the Law (as the Name ſheweth;) but Spiritual Grace only ſaveth from carnality of mind and life, and nothing elſe is Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs (for whatever Righteouſneſs is on this ſide it, is but (a) mundana juſtitia, a mundane kind of Righteouſneſs) Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs therefore is not attainable by Nature or by the Law. Righteouſneſs to a world of lapſed Sinners is a Foreign Commodity and not of their own growth. The Sons of Adam are the Sons of Carnality and Wickedneſs, graceleſs rebel Sinners, unſubjected to the holy ſpiritual Law, Rom. 8. 7. in Mind and Affection, Diſpoſition and Practice of an alien inimical, atheous carnal and mundane kind, moulded and tempered according to the Fleſh, lapſed under (b) τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ κόσμου (the Spirit of the World) having a Mind replete with Errors

(the

(p) Macar. Hom. 5.

(q) S. Hilar. in Pſal. 1.

(r) Περὶ φυτουργίας.

(s) Grot. Not. in Luk. 2. 22.

(t) Hotting. Hiſt. or. p. 334. Ed. 1.

(u) Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 2. vid. Buxtorf. Lex breve Rabbin. p 869. Hulſ. Theol. Jud. l. 1. par. 2. p. 461, 462. Helvic. proteuangel. S. 15, 16. L'Emper. in Abar. in Iſa. 30. p. 13.

(w) Cùm ſine ſacramento regenerationis æternam mortem nemo poſſit evadere, nonne ex ipſius remedii ſingularitate apertiſſime patet, in quàm profundum malum totius humani generis natura demerſa ſit? Proſper. adv. Caſſian. c. 19.

(x) Πνευματικὸν γὰρ εἰπὼν, διδάσκαλον αὐτὸν ἀρετῆς δείκνυσιν ὄντα, καὶ κακίας πολέμιον· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστιν τὸ πνευματικὸν, τὸ πάντων ἁμαρτημάτων ἀπάγειν. S. Chryſoſt. in Ep. ad Rom. Hom. 13.

(y) Lex ſpiritualis eſt, quia ſpiritualia mandat, ardua præcipit opera ſpiritus, prohibens peccata. Sedulius in cap. 7. ad Rom.

(z) Theodoret. & Theophylact. in loc.

(a) S. Ambroſ. com. in Rom. 6.

(b) Macar. Hom. 2.

(the Errors of an ungodly Mind) a Nature full of reigning Concupiſcences (which are not umbratile things, but vital and ſubſtantial, inbred and radicated Carnality and Wickedneſs) it's a great thing therefore to them, (that are ſo far from Righteouſneſs) to attain Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. Their entrance into the holy Life compriſeth matters of ſublime excellency, of great difficulty and oppoſition and incumbred with many Impediments; it importeth the illumination of a benighted Soul, the ingendring a new life in the Soul, the over-maſtering thoſe maſterly Luſts and vile Affections which reign over Mankind, a change of Nature, (c) which is παγχάλεπον, extremely difficult, a change of kind (the turning a wicked carnal kind of Man into an holy ſpiritual kind of Man) ſuch a change as is ~~in the Phraſe~~ of the Ancients à Tartaro ad Tarteſſum migrare, a migration from an infernal Region to the Region of Holineſs and Happineſs. The attainment of Righteouſneſs therefore is not meerly from the Will of Man, Joh. 1. 13. Nor can Mankind by Nature (their natural Abilities, Diſcipline or Religion) make themſelves free from their deadly reigning carnality of Mind and Life, Joh. 8. 34, 36.

Nor can they be ſav'd from it by the Law, which is not a Religion accommodate for the ſanctifying and ſaving Sinners. It affordeth them no further aſſiſtance towards the attaining Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs than a bare rule of Righteouſneſs; (d) for the Law being Spiritual did only ſhew Sin (as a rule of Righteouſneſs) but did not kill Sin. (e) The Law condemneth the wicked deed, but doth not take away the Wickedneſs. The Law could ſtop the Mouth of all, but could not change the Mind. (f) What did the Law deſign? to make Man righteous, but it could not. (g) Not to the Servants of Righteouſneſs but to the Servants of Sin, to unjuſt Men God gave a juſt Law, which was of efficacy to ſhew their Sins, but not to take them away. The Law could not give Life, therefore not Spiritual Life, Gal. 3. 21. As to the Souls of lapſed Mankind the beſt of the Law is dead, the worſt of it is deadly. It maketh no living impreſſion or inſcription of it ſelf upon them, but they that belong to this Settlement and Diſpenſation of things, continue in their oldneſs and carnality of Mind and inward Life and Nature, and under the dominion of Sin.

II. Neither Jew nor Gentile could attain Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs by the Law, but Sin liv'd and reign'd under the Law, and in ſome ſort by the Law; for it was to them in ſome ſort the Law of Sin and of Death, Rom. 8. 2. For when we were in the Fleſh, the motions of Sin were by the Law.—— What ſhall we ſay then? is the Law Sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known Sin but by the Law; for I had not known Luſt, except the Law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet. But Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment, wrought in me all manner of Concupiſcence. For without the Law Sin was dead. For I was alive without the Law once; but when the Commandment came, Sin revived and I died. And the Commandment which was ordained to Life, I found to be unto Death. For Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment, deceived me, and by it ſlew me. Wherefore the Law is holy, and the Commandment holy, and juſt and good: Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But Sin that it might appear Sin, working Death in me by that which is good; that Sin by the Commandment might become exceeding ſinful, Rom. 7. 5.— 13. This Perioche of Scripture I have tranſcrib'd, with deſign to make a due explication of it; for Learned Men and converſant in the Scriptures have not fully reach'd the Apoſtle's Senſe in it. If we ask, how Sin took occaſion by the Commandment, to work in Men all manner of Concupiſcence, to deceive them and to work death in them? The worſt account is that which is given by Grotius and thoſe that follow him, (h) who impute it to the impunity that is in this Precept, Thou ſhalt not covet; for becauſe it was not fortify'd with a Penalty, thence (ſay they) Men were ſeduced to give way to Concupiſcence, and to turn the Precept that was given for Life to their Death. But this Expoſition contradicteth the minacious nature of the Moſaic Law, Heb. 12. 18. and the uſeful deſign of it, which was (as the Fathers rightly ſuppoſe) by its ſtrictneſs, minaciouſneſs and terrour, to convict Men of their ſin and miſery, to humble them, to prepare them for and put them upon ſeeking Divine Grace. (i) Litera eſt minax quæ convincat prævaricatores. Several other Precepts of the Decalogue as well as this, Thou ſhalt not covet, are not fortify'd with a Penalty, yet the Law is minacious, and therefore ingendreth the Spirit of Bondage, which according to S. Auſtin is the fear of Damnation; Sub quo timore anima laborat, quando concupiſcentiam malam non vicerit, under which fear the Soul laboureth, when ſhe doth not overcome her evil Concupiſcence. Whence is it elſe that we read in the Apoſtle, O wretched Man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the Body of this Death? If this Precept of internal Purity Non concupiſces, was thought a matter of Impunity, what reaſon could there be for ſuch ταλανισμοὶ, tragical Exclamations? It is not imaginable, that a Man convicted of the ſinfulneſs of his Concupiſcence by this precept Non concupiſces, ſhould give indulgence to it, becauſe the Precept was not fortify'd by a Penalty annexed (for the conviction of a Sin implieth a conviction of incurring Divine Wrath upon the wilful committing it:) but if there might be ſuch a Man, this is not the Man whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, who was not ſeduc'd into a favourable opinion of Concupiſcence (becauſe no Penalty was annex'd to the Precept) but what he diſſallow'd and hated that he did, and was miſerably captivated thereto. This bad Expoſition pretendeth not to give any account of the main point in the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe, namely, how the motions of Sins are by the Law: but the Author of it addeth a Participle to the Apoſtle's words, and maketh this the Senſe of them, the motions of Sins were by the Law φαινόμενα aut γνωριζόμενα, apparent or made known: which ſenſe is incongruous to the Apoſtle's buſineſs (which was to ſhew the Judaical Believers their happy freedom from the Law) and if this rate of expounding may be admitted (the adding Participles which are not manifeſtly imply'd) the Scriptures may be made a Noſe of Wax. But if the Apoſtle had not ſaid ſomething of the Law, which might ſeem opprobrious and injurious to it, why doth he betake himſelf preſently to the vindicating the Law, the making an Apology, and the anſwering an Objection,

---

(c) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 151.

(d) Spiritualis enim cùm lex eſſet, manifeſtavit tantummodo peccatum, non autem interemit. Iren. adv. Hær. l. 3. c. 20.

(e) Lex factum damnat non aufert malitiam. S. Ambroſ. de fug. Sec. c. 7. Lex os omnium potuit obſtruere, non potuit mentem convertere. Ibid. c. 3.

(f) Τί γὰρ ἐβούλετο ὁ νόμος; δίκαιον ποιῆσαι τὸν ἄνθρωπον· ἀλλ' οὐκ ἴσχυσεν. S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. Hom. 17.

(g) Non juſtitiæ ſervientibus ſed peccato, juſtam ſcilicet legem injuſtis hominibus dedit Deus, ad demonſtranda peccata eorum, non auferenda. non enim aufert peccatum. S. Aug. præfat. Expoſ. Ep. ad Gal.

(h) Grot. Not. in Rom. 7. 8. Mr. Thorndike Ep. B 2. c. 31, 32. Dr. Hamm. Paraphr. v. 8, 11.

(i) S. Aug. in Pſal. 7

jection, as if he had made the Law the cauſe of Sin? v. 7.

Some ſuppoſe, (k) that Sin is excited by the Law through that Inclination, which is in Mankind to the Evil forbidden by the Law (nitimur in vetitum) from their natural love of liberty and impatience of reſtraint; whence the Damm which the Law ſetteth for repreſſing the courſe of Sin, doth but provoke the Stream or Current, to ſwell higher and greater, and to overburſt all obſtacles. So the Sin of Parriſide did not become rife amongſt the Romans, and the like unnatural Sin towards Children or Infants did not become rife at Paris, till a Law was made againſt it. (l) So Seneca ſaith, Homicidæ cum lege cæperunt, & illis facinus pœna monſtravit. The like account Tacitus and Lampridius give of the ſpreading of Uſury and Sodomy. And this mode of irritating or exciting Sin muſt be acknowledg'd ſo conſiderable, that it may reaſonably be admitted as part of the Apoſtle's Senſe; but it is not ſo uſual or general, as that it may reaſonably be thought the principal thing, that the Apoſtle meaneth, when he ſaith, the motions of Sins were by the Law. They that inſiſt upon this mode of exciting Sin, have taken notice of another, which is more conſiderable, namely, that in a negative Precept there is a propoſal of ſuch things that are evil. By the Law's inefficacious Documents of Non-concupiſcence there was excited in the Minds of the carnal Jews a Phantaſm or Imagination of tempting Objects (as of Money, Goods, a fine Houſe, a Neighbour's Wife) by which Phantaſm of tempting Objects an Appetite after them is excited in the Sons of Carnality, the motions and ſuggeſtions of Sin are raiſed, and ſo the motions of Sin are (occaſionally) by the Law, and ſo far it raiſeth up an evil Spirit, which it cannot conjure down. This ſeemeth to be an unexceptionable explication of the Apoſtle's Senſe, that the Law is like ineffectual Phyſick, that ſtirreth the bad Humours, but doth not purge them out. The Law did (ſeveral ways) excite indwelling Sin and put it into motion, but could not ſubdue and mortifie it; for the Law could not prevail, the Fleſh could not be ſubject, Rom. 8. 3, 7. Sin was enlivened and ſuſcitated by the Law, and the motions of it being occaſionally by the Law, the Apoſtle ſaith, Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment wrought in me all manner of Concupiſcence; when the Commandment came, Sin revived; Sin taking occaſion by the Commandment (did operate in me, and being excited) deceived me (Sin prevaileth and reigneth by deceiving Men) without the Law ſin was dead (dormant and comparatively dead) I was alive without the Law once (when without the Law Sin was dead, then was I alive, free from that deadly dying which was afterwards my condition:) but when the Law came and Sin was enlivened, I died by deadly ſinning againſt it, which is a deadly kind of dying. And the Commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death; for by it Sin ſlew me (or killed me) making me a deadly Sinner againſt it. The Law therefore is ex accidenti; the Law of Sin and of Death to ſuch as are in the natural and legal Condition; yet the Law is wholly inculpable, juſt and good, and all theſe Evils have their origin from indwelling Sin, which worketh death to me by that which is good (ſaith the Apoſtle) to this effect and event, Sin thereby appeareth Sin in its own colours (Ἀντινομία, a perfect repugnance to the Holy Law) and becometh ſuperlatively ſinful by the Law or Commandment that was given againſt it, v. 13. In the following part of the Chapter the Apoſtle perſonateth a Man, that is by the Law under great conviction of mind touching his evil practice, yet by the power and prevalency of indwelling Sin is impell'd and hurry'd thereto (as all men are in the natural and legal condition) whence he would have us, to make this Inference, that Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs is not to be attain'd by the Law; for it is not the cure of Sin. By the prevalency of Sin ipſa remedia (the Documents of the Law touching Non-concupiſcences) convertuntur invulnera.

(k) Dr. Jackſon Comment. B. 10. S. 1. ch. 9. S. Aug. de Sp. & lit. c. 4.

(l) Grot. Not in Rom. 7. 8.

III. The preſent Jews (the great admirers of and adherents to the Law) are an inſtance of the ineffectualneſs of the Law for the cure of Sin. For notwithſtanding their (m) Ιουδαϊκὸν φυσημα, Judaical elation, they are manifeſtly under the dominion of Sin and Urighteouſneſs, in deadly Carnality and Wickedneſs, utter aliens from and deadly Enemies to Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. They ſuppoſe, that by means of the Law the Divinity inhabiteth amongſt the Iſraelites, that they are the Holy Nation, the only Elect People of God and his dear Iſrael; they glory in their Sanctity, and ſometimes have ſuch high thoughts of it, (n) that in reſpect of ſinleſneſs they compare themſelves with the Genii in Heaven; not a few of them (o) have been called Saints in a Senſe of Eminence, and every one of their Synagogues is called Synagoga Sancta, yet S. Chryſoſtom hath made this heavy Judgment of their Caſe, (p) that the unclean Spirits inhabit both their Synagogues and their Souls. They are the great wonder of the World for their blindneſs and unintelligentneſs in Divine Matters, their monſtrous Imaginations, Portentous Fictions, Legends and Romances, for their bruitiſh Stolidity, groundleſs and ſenſeleſs Fancies and Fables in expounding the Scripture (turning the Word of God into Fables) for their reaſoning (q) without reaſon, and for their immenſity of ſuperſtitious Obſervations and Traditions (in which they repoſe great Confidence) prodigiouſly wild and abſurd.

(m) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 3. p. 107.

(n) Buxt. Syn. Jud. c. 21. p. 420. ed. An. 1614.

(o) Hotting. Diſſ. 2. p. 54, 78.

(p) T. 6. p. 373.

(q) L'Emper. not. in Jacchiad. p. 200.

Of old it was obſerv'd, (r) That all the things of the preſent Jews are Fables and Trifles, for they have not the light of the knowledge of the Scriptures. Their moſt holy Talmud (as they call it, and which their Doctors call the joy of their Heart and the health of their Bones) is the outer Darkneſs into which they are caſt. Quicquid abſurdum quidquid fabuloſum animo fingi poſſit, illic invenias. But this their Oral Law they equalize to their written Law; prefer the ſtudy of it before the ſtudy of their written Law, they ſuppoſe their wiſe men to excell the Prophets, and it is an ordinary rule with them, Attend to the words of the Scribes more than to the words of the Law. The eſteem that they have for their Oral Law, ſuppoſing it Divine and Infallible, is hugely ſubſervient to the Pride of their Rabbins that deliver the Oracles of it, and who will be counted nothing leſs than infallible Doctors, all muſt believe what they ſay, and ſay Amen to it (although they teach, that the Right-hand is the Left) for reverentia magiſtri ſicut reverentia Cœli, to rebell aginſt them is as Rebellion againſt God.

(r) Orig. ap. Herald. in Arnob. p. 134. Simon. Hiſt. Crit. l. 3. c. 6. Paget Arrow ag. the Brown. p. 369, 449. Buxt. Syn. c. 1. de Abbrev. p. 193, & Vorſt. in Maim. & Abrab. p. 4, 77. Hotting. de Jur. Hebr. Leg. 222. & 67. & p. 136.

The arrogance of theſe turgid inflated Rabbins is prodigious (s) for they are not only called of Men Rabbi, Rabbi, but their uſual attribute is כ״ם Gloria Doctoris noſtri Domini, Domini N. Some of them have ſeated themſelves Cheek by Jole with Princes, and they ſuppoſe, that at eating their Paſchal Lamb all the Iſraelites are inoyn'd, to behave themſelves like Kings and Princes of the Earth, and that this is the deſign of the Laws touching the manner of eating it. The beſt ſort of Sanctity which the beſt of theſe Doctors is acquainted with, is intelligibilium apprehenſio, ſpeculative Science, and he that hath reach'd this attainment, is ſaid to be for himſelf and his own end. But the end and uſe which the reſt of Mankind are for, is, to be ſervient to the Man of Science, his Food or Phyſick, or to bear him company. Whence Ben Zoma (the Phænix of his Age) ſtanding upon the Mount of the Holy Houſe, when he ſaw the Iſraelites aſcend, ſaid, bleſſed be he that hath created all theſe to be ſervient to me. (t) Themſelves theſe grand Magnifico's look upon as above Men, but the Gentiles with them are not of the Rank of Men. Themſelves they account the Lords and the Chriſtians the Slaves, and the great thing they dream of, is to be the Lords of the World and to have the Chriſtians their Footſtool, and this they pray for with the moſt bitter Execrations. From an unhumbled pride they deſpiſe the Chriſtians Saviour, ſuppoſe themſelves the only People, that can and do obſerve all the Commandments and fulfil the whole Law: But the Chriſtians and other People (yet allowing a future Reward to their Proſelytes of the Gate) they look upon as miſerable, accurſed, rejectaneous Miſcreants, an abomination to God and deſtined only to Damnation. The Modern Jews are all Phariſees (except the Karraim whom they infinitely deteſt as Hereticks) and they are of the ſame Foot-mark with their Predeceſſors.

As they have not the light of the Knowledge of the Scriptures (which they horribly profane (u) in their familiar Letters to one another) ſo from the many blaſphemous Stories that they tell of God, it appeareth, that they are without the light of the knowledge of God and devoid of a Sence of Religion. They have not an ordinary ſeriouſneſs in treating of Divine Matters, in their Devotion there is nothing of Devotion, their Praying is trifling. They that know them well, have given this account of their Piety. In their Religious Worſhip there is nothing but Hypocriſie and Falſity. In the univerſality of the People of the Jews there is nothing obſervable in their Converſation or any thing they do, but an horrendous induration and obſtinacy. They talk of Faith and good Works, but neither will nor can underſtand them.

Many of their illegitimate Notices and Conceits ſpeak their utter unacquaintedneſs with Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, and that they are aliens from it and from knowing it. Their Notices of Sin are Profane and Philoſophic-pagan; (w) for they derive it from the terrene Matter, which they count impure. Man cannot be perfect (ſaith one of theſe Doctors) becauſe of the Matter which maketh him Sin. Another of them ſaith of the Body, Sin is by the corporeal Matter of it, and becauſe it is compounded of Earth. Agreeably whereto Men. ben Iſ. expoundeth this Saying touching the Prophet, Jer. 1. 5. Before thou cameſt forth out of the Womb I ſanctified thee. That is (ſaith this Rabbi) I made the temperament of thy Body prone to Virtue and Sanctity, as Philoſophers ſay, the temper of the Mind followeth the temperament of the Body. No better a Sanctification than this do the Jews acknowledge; (x) for to do away their Pollution, is not a work of the Holy Ghoſt, whom by way of deriſion they call the Chriſtians Sanctifier, but it is a work of Purgatory, wherein all the Relicks of Uncleanneſs, which Repentance had left uncleans'd, are to be done away. The beſt of theſe Doctors thus interpreteth Truth and Peace in the Prophet. (y) Truth ſignifieth the Intellectual and Peace the Moral Virtues (whereby Peace is made in the World) which are acquired by repeated Actions. The Jews acknowledge no other Moral Virtue than the Human-moral, which is that of Ariſtotle, that is acquired by (z) cuſtomary Practice and conſiſteth in Mediocrity.

By multitudes of their Maxims and leud Conceits (which ſpeak their Religion a groſs and vile Superſtition) they make Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs altogether needleſs. So extravagant is their φιλαυτία, Love to themſelves and their own Nation, that it is with them a generally receiv'd Maxim. (a) Every Iſraelite hath a Portion in the World to come. If a Jew hath but done one good Work, he ſhall not fail at the long run to have the reward of eternal Life. He that dwelleth within the Land of Iſrael, is abſolv'd from all Iniquity. He that walketh but four Cubits in it, is certainly a Son of the World to come. Whoſoever diligently obſerveth the Commandment touching the Zizith or Pendants, doth as much as if he obſerv'd the whole Law. Whoſoever hath the Phylacteries affix'd to his Head or Arm, the Zizith to his Veſtment, and the Schedule called Mezuzah to his door, he is ſafe from Sin; for theſe are great Memorials and the Angels deliver him from Sin. Some of the Rabbins are of Opinion, that the obſervance of all the Precepts of the Law is needful for healing the Soul and acquiring Perfection: But others ſuppoſe, that it is ſufficient for Salvation, if one be perform'd. As if they carry'd the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven at their Girdle, they ſay, whoſoever learneth the Talmudic Traditions ought to be perſwaded, that he ſhall be a Son of Life eternal. About the Pollution of Garments, Meats, Drinks, Veſſels, which are with them נופי תורה the ſubſtantials of the Law, their Traditions and Subtilties are innumerable.

There is no appearance, that any of them are any thing better than Worldings, mundane Religioniſts and ſuch as belong to the Jeruſalem which is from beneath. The worſer ſort of them (b) are very much addicted to Thievery (which their Rabbins allow not) they are notorious for their unrighteous oppreſſive Uſury, and their diſhoneſty in Traffick, and they allow their Women to deceive and circumvent whom they can. In their Feaſt of

(s) Buxt. de Abrev. p. 98, &c. Lightfoot Hor. in Luc. 14. 8. Hotting. de jur p. 23, 25, 28, 29. Maimon. 8. cap. Com. in Pirke aboth præmiſſ. c. 5. Mor. Nev. Par. 3. c. 8.

(t) Buxt. Syn. p. 309, 360, 371. & in fine præfat. Hulſ. Theol. Jud. l. 1. p. 125.

(u) Heinſ. Proleg. ad Ariſtarch. Buxt. ſupr. p. 36, 181, 417, 475. In opinioſo ipſorum cultu præter hypocriſin & falſitatem nihil eſt. In populo Judæorum toto præter horrendam indurationem & obſtinationem in converſatione & actione ejus quacunque nihil obſervare queas. Quid fides operáve bona ſint, intelligere neque volunt neque poſſunt. Ibid. p. 1, 2, 38. Nullibi minus intentionis eſt, quàm in ipſorum precibus. Buxt. de Abbrev. p. 180, 181.

(w) Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 4. c. 1, 2.

(x) L'Addiſon of the Jews, p. 33.

(y) Maim. 8. cap. com. ſuo in Pirke Ab. præmiſſ. c. 4.

(z) Ariſt. Eth. l. 2. c.

(a) Hulſ ſupr. p. 19, 31, 172. Hoornbeek ſupr. p. 432. & l. 7. c 3. Paget ſupr. p. 290, 298. Lightfoot Hor. in Mar. p. 61. & in Luc. 13. 23. Abrah. ap. Vorſt. de cap. Fid. p. 51, 52, 104, 109. Coſri p. 97. Mr. Smith Select. Diſc. p. 302, 303. Buxt. Syn. c. 4. p. 137. de Abbrev. p. 203. Pocock Not. Miſc. p. 352. Clav. Talm. p. 9.

(b) Buxt. Syn. c. 1. p 23. c. 3. in fine. c. 21. p. 416. Hoornbeek ſupr. l. 7. c. 4, 7. Hotting. de jur. Lex. 121. p. 155. Selden de J. N. & G. l. 2. c. 10. Lightfoot Hor. in Marc. 16. 15. & Luc. 3. 5. P. Fag. in Exod. 23. 1. Cartwright Melliſic. Hebr. c. 8.

Reconciliation all the Vows, Oaths, Promiſes and Covenants which they have violated, are fully pardon'd, and the Sin of them is quite annihilated, as they ſuppoſe, becauſe then Covenant-breakers as well as Covenant-keepers have right in one Holy Communion to pray to, and to praiſe God together; whence as of Old, ſo at this day their Oaths are not to be truſted. Profane Swearing by the Creatures is one of their reigning Sins, which ſome of their Rabbins ſeverely Condemn and others Extenuate. They require a ſincerity in their Proſelytes of Juſtice, but their own ſincerity amounteth to ſo little, that they allow themſelves in ſeveral Caſes and Circumſtances, to violate moſt of the Laws of their Religion, to ſave their bodily Life. They reſolve Caſes of Conſcience like mundane Lawyers. Their mundane Genius appeareth in their uſual Elogies of their Rabbins, that they are Wiſe and Rich, and Riches are with them a requiſite Qualification for the Spirit of Prophecy, the Reward of Virtue and a Mark of God's Favour. Chiefly their mundane Genius appeareth in their Cauſe of their rejecting the true Meſſiah, they deſire no other than a mundane Meſſiah, that may deliver them from their worldly Captivity and Calamity. They have no Sence at all of their Spiritual Thraldom and Captivity, nor any better Sentiments than thoſe of the Spirit of the World.

One eminent Branch of their Character is groſs ſenſuality. (c) For their quarrel againſt Chriſtianity is not ſo much upon account of the ſenſual Lives of pretending Chriſtians; becauſe themſelves ſuppoſe, that under the Law and eſpecially under the Meſſiah a voluptuous Kingdom and Religion is promis'd them abounding with Riches and ſenſitive Delights. They have ſeveral commendable Inſtitutes on behalf of Chaſtity, but they have ſuch an Ethice Cubicularia, as no chaſt Ears can endure. Before the Sabbath they eat Leeks, to impower them for Commerce with their Wives in honour of the Sabbath. For in this manner they make the Sabbath a delight (Sabbatum deliciarum) by indulging themſelves all manner of ſenſitive Delight and Pleaſure, and believe, that by ſo doing they ſhall have Liberty, Riches, Lands and Inheritances. On the Sabbath they have three Feaſts, and much what at the ſame rate they obſerve the New Moon and they keep the Feaſt of the Dedication of the Temple vorando, belluando, ludendo (by gluttonizing and playing) the Feaſt of the Paſſover they celebrate by drinking till Midnight, and at the Feaſt of Purim they think it neceſſary to be drunken, till they cannot diſtinguiſh betwixt Arur Haman (curſed be Haman) and Baruch Mordecai, bleſſed be Mordecai. They revel in this Feſtival at a greater rate than the Gentiles in their Bacchanalia. When a Male Child is born, the Men meet together and drink till they cannot ſee, they drink and forget their Captivity. (d) Living to the Belly, gaping after the things that are preſent, of the ſame diſpoſition with Swine and Goats, one thing only they know, to fill the Belly and to be drunk. Their Practice is agreeable to their Theory; (e) for all the good things (ſaith Maimonides) that the Prophets propheſied of for Iſrael, they were nothing elſe but things for the Body, which Iſrael ſhall enjoy in the days of the King Meſſias, in the time that he ſhall turn the Kingdom to Iſrael. But a groſs Senſualiſt is called by this Rabbi mera materia in mari τῆς ὕλης, natans.

Another principal part of their Character is their murderous and bloody Temper. (f) A Gentile (although a Proſelyte of the Gate) they do not account their Neighbour. They account it unlawful, to ſhew Mercy to any of the Gentiles. If a Jew ſeeth a Gentile periſhing or drown'd in Water, he may not help him; if he ſeeth him next door to Death, he may not deliver him. If any of the Gentiles tranſgreſs a Precept which belongeth to them, their Puniſhment is no leſs than Death, admonitio eorum eſt mors eorum, ſay the Rabbins. They ſuppoſe themſelves bound to hate, abominate and deſtroy ſuch as they account Hereticks in the Faith (by deſtroying the impious I deſtroy the Thorns out of the Vineyard, ſaith a Rabbi) accordingly this Prayer is uſually in their Mouths, Let all Hereticks ſuddenly periſh. Apoſtates (ſuch as are converted from Judaiſm) they cauſe to fall into a Pit, but do not help them out (as themſelves ſay;) in one of their Prayers they pray for their eternal Perdition, this Prayer they recite daily, and call it Precationem Hæreticorum; for it is a Prayer againſt Apoſtates, Hereticks, and the Jews Enemies, and againſt all theſe they pray in this direful curſing Form, eradicate them, beat them down, deſtroy them, ſubdue them. It is no Sin with them, to kill a Chriſtian; Chriſtians they account Gentiles, Hereticks, the Enemies of God and their Enemies, and againſt them they pray, that God will pour out his Wrath on them, perſecute them, deſtroy them from under Heaven, excite his burning Vengeance againſt them; and their Hope is, that all theſe Edomites ſhall periſh and be rooted out of the World. And becauſe the Chriſtians have the Domination, they have this Prayer againſt them in their Liturgy; Let all the elated ſpeedily periſh, and let them all be cut off, and quickly bring them down in our days. Upon certain pieces of Fleſh (the hinder parts of Animals) which they ſell to Chriſtians, uſually they pour a Malediction, that the Goi (Gentile) which buyeth and eateth them, may eat his Death. An immenſe maliciousneſs they have againſt the Chriſtian Religion, and touching the Chriſtian Meſſiah they have ſuch lying Stories, ſuch villainous Reproaches, and uſe ſuch blaſphemous Execrations, as are too horrible to be related. Their voice is the ſame that it was of old (g) Σταύρωσον, σταύρωσον, Crucifie him, Crucifie him.

IV. The Jews are manifeſtly aliens from Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, and there is no appearance, that the reſt of Mankind which belong to the Law, are much better than they. (h) The Samaritans are properly called Judæo-Samaritani, and may paſs for a Mongrel-ſort of Jews, whom they ſeem to exceed in Phariſaical blindneſs and arrogance. The Muhammedans are not leſs blind and ſuperſtitious and zealous in their Superſtition than the Jews, not leſs abſurd in their Conceits, fabulous in their Tales, wild in their

---

(c) Epiſcop. Inſtit. p. 438. Buxt. Syn. c. 2. p. 80. c. 5. p. 160. c. 8. p. 227. c. 10. p. 258, 267. c. 13. p. 333. c. 17. p 374. c. 23. & 24. de Abbrev. p. 208. Hoornbeek ſupr. l. 7. c. 5.

(d) S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 370.

(e) Paget ſupr. p. 410 Maimon. 8. cap. com. in Pirke aboth præmiſſ. c. 5.

(f) Lightfoot Hor. in Luc. 10. 29. Maimon de Idol. c. 10. Hotting. de jur. Lex. 28, 34, 54. Abarb. ap. Vorſt. de cap. Fid. p. 8. Maimon. ibid. de Fund. Leg. p. 85. Heinſ. Ariſtarch. p. 475. Pool's Synopſ. in Matth. 5. 43. L'Emper. Not. in Abarb. Com. in Iſa. 30. p. 148, 150. & p. 158. Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 1201, 2442. Syn Jud. c. 3. p. 115. c. 5. p. 165, 170, 171, 176. c. 9. p. 235. c. 13. p 333, &c. c. 16. p. 360. c. 19. p. 395. c. 22. p. 472. Coſri p. 241.

Ἐν σφαγαῖς καὶ φόνοις ἀναστρέφοντες. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 373.

(g) S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 371.

(h) Hotting. Exercit. Ant. Mor. S. 16, &c. L'Emper. Not. in Benjamin. p. 170. Druſ. de 3. Sect. l. 3. c. 10, 11, 14, 17.

their impoſſible Stories than the Jews; like them they curſe in their Prayers, and will have all of their Belief ſav'd at the long run though never ſo wicked. But they are much leſs abhorrent from groſs Idolatry than the Jews are. (i) For they have a number of Saints, that are for ſeveral Uſes (ſome to help in War, others in Peregrination, others in Child-birth and the like) whom they invoke and venerate. The Jews tranſcend them in their Notices of God and of the World to come, in their care againſt incentives to the Luſt of Uncleanneſs, and their Religion was of Divine Inſtitution: They on the other hand in ſome reſpects tranſcend the Jews (being not ſo malicious againſt Chriſt, not ſo addicted to drunkenneſs, nor diſhoneſt in Traffick as the Jews) but both are alienated from the Life of God (as the Gentiles were) and under the Dominion of Sin and Unrighteouſneſs. For Muhammediſm is not an Inſtitution of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, but of ſottiſh rituality and vile Externalneſs, of brutiſh fury and leud Uncleanneſs, of Hatred, Revenge, War and Murder, not fairly inſtructing and inſtituting Men to the Wiſdom of the Juſt (k) but killing them that receive it not, according to that grand Precept of its Founder, occidite homines, quouſque omnes Mauri fiant, kill Men, till all become Muhammedans. The beſt of it is like Jus Hebræorum, a Civil-religious Inſtitution (l) according to which in the Muhammedan Empire Juſtice is adminiſtred to the People. The great Men of the Muhammedans Hierarchy and the great Doctors of their Law are Lawyers, Judges and Juſtices to the People; they have no Church but their Commonwealth; and the beſt Precepts of their Religion as ſuch are but Inſtitutes of Civil-religious Virtue. In their Religion therefore (the beſt Precepts of it) there is nothing at all of the Life of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs: Nor is it poſſible, that there ſhould be any, ſeeing it was inſtituted by an heatheniſhly ignorant and impure Varlet, that knew not the Life of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. But as the Jews promiſe themſelves Salvation upon account of their Civil-religious Virtue, ſo do the Muhammedans. In that Juſtice and Charity which by their Law they are bound to practice (amongſt themſelves) they very much reſemble the carnal Jews (as alſo in the high Conceit of themſelves and their own Religion) and their hatred and contempt of the Chriſtians is like the Jews hatred and contempt of the Gentiles. They have their Alms, Pilgrimages and Prayers, their Martyrs, Miracles and Reliques in common with other Religions: But their Saints are ſuch, as all other Religions are aſham'd of, Beaſtialiſts, Fools and Madmen. Maimonides therefore hath given their true Character (m) thoſe ſtolid fooliſh Arabians השטופים בזמה immers'd in Wickedneſs. Such is the State of Mankind in their Naturaliſm and Legaliſm of Condition.

V. This Poſition may ſeem liable to the Pelagians Objection touching the perfect fulfilling the Law of God in this Life (in the rigour of it;) for they argu'd (n) that if this be impoſſible, then God commandeth that which is impoſſible, which is contrary to the Nature of a Law according to that known Saying, ad impoſſibile neminem obligari. If Mankind therefore which belong to the Law, cannot attain Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs by it, how can they be oblig'd by the Law, to be truly Righteous and Holy, which is to them impoſſible? But it muſt be conſider'd, whether a Law is impoſſible by or without the Subjects fault, and whether we ſuppoſe it abſolutely, or only in a certain limited Senſe impoſſible. (1.) If the attaining Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs was now abſolutely or phyſically impoſſible to Mankind, their Caſe would be like thoſe in Italy (o) whom they called Murcos, who cut off their Thumbs, to diſable themſelves from being Soldiers; for whatever impoſſibility there now is of attaining Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, Mankind have contracted it by their own fault. (2.) It is not to be ſuppos'd, that their attaining Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs by the Law is abſolutely or phyſically impoſſible. But as we ſuppoſe it only morally impoſſible, that any meer Man ſhould in this Life perfectly keep the Law in the rigour of it (this is to be reckon'd amongſt things that are ſo impoſſible, that they are τὰ μὴ συμβαίνοντα. ſo difficult that they do not come to paſs:) So we ſuppoſe it only morally impoſſibe, that any who belong to Nature and to the Law, ſhould ſo far keep the Law, as to be truly Righteous and Holy; and that this Moral Impoſſibility is a Moral Impotency, being the pravity of their Will, Affection and Diſpoſition, which doth not excuſe them from fault and blame, but conſtituteth them culpable, criminal and condemnable. They are of the Evil kind, the Evil affected and addicted, and that which maketh them ſuch is their Evil Mind, Will and Choice, they ought to be otherwiſe, and might be otherwiſe, if they were willing as they ought; but this their badneſs of willing diſpoſitive and actual (of which there is great ſtore in Mankind's Naturaliſm and Legaliſm of Condition) is their Criminality, although their willing otherwiſe as they ought, is morally impoſſible and therefore their moral impotency. Men may be oblig'd by a juſt Law, to what is morally impoſſible (elſe Chriſtians could not be oblig'd to pray without diſtraction and wandring thoughts) therefore Men may be oblig'd by a juſt Law to what is morally impoſſible as being their moral impotency; for this is nothing more than what is morally impoſſible. If Men might not be oblig'd by a juſt Law to what is morally impoſſible becauſe of their moral impotency (or non-potency) the more prevalent and predominant, radicated and confirm'd their enmity and diſaffection to Righteouſneſs is, and their propenſion to Wickedneſs, the more they would be diſobliged from the Law of Righteouſneſs, and ſo they would fare the better for being worſe; whereas the greater and the more confirm'd their Will is to Wickedneſs, the more odious they are, the more wicked, criminal and puniſhable. (3.) Suppoſe it abſolutely impoſſible for Men to attain Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs in their Naturaliſm and Legaliſm of Condition, yet as it was not impoſſible for the Gentiles, to emerge out of their Gentiliſm, ſo it is not impoſſible for Mankind to emerge out of their Naturaliſm and Legaliſm of Condition. If they cannot have Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs by Nature and by the Law, yet they may be faithful to Righteouſneſs according to their Light and Strength, and may ſeek to God and his Divine Saving Grace, the Religion and Diſpenſation whereof is coeval with the Fall of Man. They have no cauſe therefore to complain of hard unrighteous uſage, becauſe Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs is not attainable by the Law, ſeeing

(i) Hotting. Hiſt. or. l. 2. c. 5. p. 392. &c Ed. 1. Selden Titles p. 658. ed. 3.

(k) Coſri p. 13.

(l) Sutliv. Turcopapiſm. c. 6.

(m) Pocock. Spec. p. 293.

(n) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 5. Par. 1. Theſ. 6, 7. Plutarch. de Stoic. repugn. p. 1037.

(o) Voſſ. ibid. l. 2. Par. 3. Theſ. 2.

ing another diſpenſation of things is provided for them, whereby it may be attained. (p) Malè utitur lege, qui non ſe ſubdit Deo pia humilitate, ut per gratiam poſſit Lex impleri.

(p) S. Aug. ad Simplic. l. 1. Qu. 1.

Section IV.

Mankind that belong to Nature and to the Law, cannot attain the State of Righteouſneſs by the Law and the Works thereof: But all of them are in all the Evils of the Criminal and Penal State, the State of Condemnation.

I. To be a Free-man, ſignifieth in a twofold Sence, the one the Sence of Moral Learning, the other the Sence of Nobility Learning. For it ſignifieth, to be a Free-man in Life and Practice (liberal and bountiful) and to be in State a Free-man (to have the Rights and Priviledges and good Eſtate of a Free-man) not a Bond-ſlave. So Men are ſaid to be Noble as to matter of Life and Practice (in oppoſition to a baſe Diſpoſition and Practice) and uſually to be Noble, ſignifieth to be in State Noble, to have ſuch Honours, Rights and Priviledges, whereby ſecular Grandees are ennobled. So in Theology, to be Righteous, is to be ſuch in Life and Practice, as uſually the Phraſe ſignifieth; and uſually it ſignifieth alſo, to be in State the Righteous, ſuch to whom the Reputation, Rights and Priviledges of the Righteous belong. Theſe are two ſorts of Righteouſneſs, the one of Life and Practice, the other of State and Condition: The one Inherent, the other Adherent: The one may be called the Righteouſneſs of Sanctification, the other of Juſtification. Which conſiſteth in being in State and Condition the Righteous as to God: that is, in being in reſpect of honourary Reputation, Rights and Priviledges the Righteous. Or it conſiſteth in being in juſt Reputation the uncriminal, uncondemnable, rewardable Perſons. For as the Sinners are thoſe, that are of Reputation the Criminals, to whom the Evil Penal (or Condemnation) belongeth: So the Righteous are thoſe, that are of Reputation the Non-criminals, to whom there is no Condemnation. Rom. 8. 1. This Righteouſneſs of Perſons is the ſame with their Juſtifiedneſs, and is uſually expreſs'd in Scripture by their being juſtified or made the Righteous. Rom. 8. 30, 33. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Sometimes it is expreſſed by not imputing Sin to a Perſon, which is the making him in Reputation no (deadly) Sinner. Rom. 4. 8. Not numbring him with the Tranſgreſſors. Iſa. 53. 12. The ungodly Sinners are under the ſtain of Sin (an adherent Pollution and blot in their Eſcucheon) and are in Reputation turpes perſonæ, Perſons infamous and foully blemiſh'd: But when Sin is not imputed, they are no more the blemiſh'd, the maculated, or of any foul criminal Name (whatever foul Facts they have done) not the Unrighteous, nor Fornicators, nor Idolaters, nor Adulterers, nor Effeminate, nor Abuſers of themſelves with Mankind, nor Thieves, nor Covetous, nor Drunkards, nor Revilers, nor Extortioners, not nefarious and flagitious Varlets, nor muſt they be treated and us'd as ſuch. In the Non-imputation of Sin the Remiſſion of Sin conſiſteth, which is the great concern of Mankind; for the State of Remiſſion of Sins (according to Chriſtianity) is the State of all their Honours and of all their Comforts. They that are in it, are of Reputation not the ungodly Sinners (the Criminals) but the Righteous, which is an honourary Reputation, and implieth the being unſtain'd, dignified and ennobled. He that is reputed one of the Righteous, is (q) ὁ καλλωπιζόμενος, one that is honour'd and unſordified in eſtimation. (r) Gloria uniuſcujuſque juſtitia eſt. Righteouſneſs is Honour, Glory and Illuſtriouſneſs: As Criminality and Condemnation is Infamy and Diſgrace. A foul ſtain it is and a blackning the Criminal Perſons: But if any of theſe foul Criminals attain to Righteouſneſs, (ſanctorum juſtitia) he is waſh'd, cleans'd, whitened, brightned, his filthy Garments are taken away, and he is (as it were) array'd in fine Linnen, a Symbol of the Righteouſneſs of the Saints, becauſe of its cleanneſs, brightneſs and reſplendency. Zech. 3. 4. Apoc. 19. 8. To have Righteouſneſs therefore, is to have Religious Nobleneſs and Excellency, the ſeveral Branches of Righteouſneſs are ſo many Branches of Religious Nobleneſs and Excellency; for the inherent Righteouſneſs of the Saints of God is a Brightneſs and Reſplendence, the Reputation of the Righteous is a Brightneſs and Reſplendence, the State of the Righteous is an high and excellent, a noble, bleſſed and divine Condition, enrich'd with vaſt and vaſtly numerous Rights and Priviledges, which are a Brightneſs and Reſplendence of Eſtate. According to Chriſtianity the Righteous are in the State of Amity and Peace with God, the reconciled, the accepted, the elect of God, that are adopted into his divine and heavenly Family, the Citizens of his Kingdom and of the heavenly Jeruſalem, the Collegues and Intercommoners with the Holy Angels. God is their Father, of a fatherly diſpoſition and behaviour, and will do all Paternal Offices towards them; they have right to his Preſence and Society, to his Holy Spirit and its Guidance, his Holy Angels and their Guardianſhip, to his Proviſion and Protection, to the audience of their Prayers, the reſpectful treatment of their Perſons, and to all Bleſſings conſequent upon the divine Friendſhip. Therefore their Eſtate is an impregnable and glorious Eſtate, becauſe they have an Almighty Friend, the fruit of whoſe Friendſhip is all manner of Bleſſedneſs, all that is conducive unto Bleſſedneſs, all needful Bleſſings (thoſe of time as well as thoſe of Eternity) they are ſo happy, that every Wind bloweth them Happineſs, nothing ſhall ruin them, nothing ſhall really hurt them (not the moſt dangerous things of the World, Rom. 8. 38, 39.) they may dwell quiet from fear of Evil, Death to them is not deadly, the Law cannot condemn them, the Grave cannot hold them, their Enemies may kill them, but cannot hurt them (as Socrates ſaid of his Enemies) they overcome them, when they ſeem to be overcome, finally they ſhall be victorious over all the Enemies of their Salvation, and ſhall never periſh, never be forſaken, never be left Fatherleſs and Friendleſs. They are priviledg'd Perſons exempt from Spiritual Beggary and Slavery, from the Dominion of Sin and Satan (and all their ghoſtly Enemies) from the divine Wrath, and from Condemnation and all the deadly Penal Evils. They are the Heirs of God, the Heirs of his Promiſes, the Heirs of his Inheritance, and have right to a full deliverance from all Evils and the enjoyment of all Good, ſo immenſe and boundleſs are the Felicities of the Righteous.

(q) S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. λογ. κ.

(r) Greg. M. in Job l. 14. c. 19.

Rom. 5. 10. Eph. 1. 6. Col. 3. 12.

Apoc 2. 11.

II. From theſe definitive Notices of the State of Righteouſneſs (or Juſtifiedneſs) it appeareth to be no other than the State of Grace, Life and Salvation (which is oppoſite to the Criminal and Penal State) and this will further appear by conſidering, that in Scripture Righteouſneſs (the State of Righteouſneſs) is confronted and oppos'd to Condemnation (the State of Condemnation) 2 Cor. 3. 9. And not only ſo, but in the Phraſeology of Holy Scripture Righteouſneſs and Salvation are frequently terms Synonymous, as to be juſtified (made the Righteous) and to be ſaved, are uſually in the New Teſtament identical Expreſſions. Eph. 2. 5. By Grace ye are ſaved. Rom. 11. 11. If thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and believe in thine heart, that God raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved. As the juſtified and the ſaved (οἱ σωζόμενοι,) are in the ſtile of the New Teſtament ſynomous Expreſſions, ſo are Righteouſneſs and Salvation in many places of the Old Teſtament, as one Learned Man hath obſerv'd, (s) that Righteouſneſs in the Old Teſtament often ſignifieth Felicity and Proſperity. But it is not Felicity and Proſperity in general, that is called Righteouſneſs in the Old Teſtament: But the ſecular Felicity and Proſperity of the literal Iſrael, whoſe ſecular Infelicity and Miſery was their Criminal and Penal State, and whoſe ſecular Felicity and Proſperity was their Juſtifiedneſs or Righteouſneſs; for their being reputed and treated as Criminals, and their being reputed and treated as the Righteous (the Righteous Nation) was in reſpect of ſecular Felicity and Infelicity. Secular Felicity and Proſperity, their Salvation is called their Righteouſneſs, as it was, and becauſe it was their Juſtifiedneſs, as appeareth from the Prophet. Iſa. 45. 24. Surely ſhall one ſay, in the Lord have I Righteouſneſs and Strength. Righteouſneſs here certainly ſignifieth Salvation, Felicity and Proſperity, which is called Righteouſneſs, as it was, and becauſe it was Iſrael's Juſtifiedneſs, as is plain from the following words; In the Lord ſhall all the houſe of Iſrael be juſtified and ſhall glory. Jer. 23. 6. In his days Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely: And this is his Name, whereby he ſhall be called, the Lord our Righteouſneſs. The Prophet foretelleth a time when Judah and Iſrael ſhall have Salvation, and that Jehovah will then be their Righteouſneſs (they ſhall have Righteouſneſs from him) this Righteouſneſs is Juſtifiedneſs, which is the ſame with Salvation; therefore Iſrael's Salvation is called Righteouſneſs, as it was, and becauſe it was their Juſtifiedneſs. Sometimes Righteouſneſs ought to be expounded by Salvation. As Iſa. 54. 17. This is the heritage of the Servants of the Lord, and their Righteouſneſs is of me, ſaith the Lord. Pſal. 24. 5. He ſhall receive the bleſſing from the Lord, and Righteouſneſs from the God of his Salvation. In theſe following Texts Righteouſneſs and Salvation (or Felicity and Proſperity) are palpably Terms ſynonymous. Iſa. 61. 10. I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my Soul ſhall be joyful in my God, for he hath clothed me with the Garments of Salvation, he hath cover'd me with the Robe of Righteouſneſs. Iſa. 62. 1, 2. For Zion's ſake I will not hold my Peace, and for Jeruſalem's ſake I will not reſt, until the Righteouſneſs thereof go forth as brightneſs, and the Salvation thereof as a Lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles ſhall ſee thy Righteouſneſs, and all Kings thy Glory. Iſa. 61. 11. The Lord will cauſe Righteouſneſs and Praiſe, to ſpring forth before all Nations. Iſa. 48. 18. O that thou hadſt hearkened to my Commandments: Then had thy Peace been as a River, and thy Righteouſneſs as the Waves of the Sea. The Juſtify'dneſs and Savedneſs of his People, their liberation from Penal Evils, Miſcreancy and Miſery, their brightneſs and reſplendency of external Condition conſider'd as it was their Juſtifiedneſs, this God calleth their Righteouſneſs; and who can doubt, but that our Saviour is called the Sun of Righteouſneſs, to ſignifie, that he is the Sun of Salvation? Mal. 4. 2.

III. In theſe definitive Notices of Righteouſneſs the being in State and Condition the Righteous is underſtood, not with reſpect to Men, but to God, with whom Abraham (upon his believing divinely) obtain'd the State and Condition of the Righteous Abraham, and therefore the Scripture ſaith Rom. 4. 3. Abraham believed God, and (t) it was counted to him for Righteouſneſs. So Chriſt's Believers by their Faith gain this ineſtimable Benefit, they have with God the Reputation of the Righteous, and this the Apoſtle meaneth, when he ſaith, that God imputeth Righteouſneſs to them, Faith is counted to them, is imputed to them for Righteouſneſs, as it was reckon'd to Abraham for Righteouſneſs. Rom. 4. 5, 6, 9, 22, 23, 24. For to ſay, that Sin is imputed to any one, is the ſame, as to ſay, that he is counted a Sinner; to ſay, that Adultery is imputed to any one, and to ſay, that he is counted an Adulterer, are identical Expreſſions: So this Expreſſion Righteouſneſs is imputed to Believers, muſt ſignifie, that they are counted the Righteous; as is plain alſo from the meaning of the word imputed (u) ſignificat enim aſcribi, attribui, for it ſignifieth to be aſcrib'd, attributed. The meaning of this Phraſe interpreteth thoſe other, which the Apoſtle uſeth, which are certainly of the ſame ſenſe. For as if we ſay of Hannah's tacit moving her Lips, it was imputed to her for Drunkenneſs, we mean theſe two things: That ſhe was reputed drunken, and this was upon account of her tacit moving her Lips. So when the Apoſtle ſaith of Abraham and of Chriſt's Believers, that their Faith is counted, reckon'd, imputed to them for Righteouſneſs, his meaning is, that they are reputed the Righteous upon account of their Faith. But the Phraſe of imputing Righteouſneſs may be underſtood in a twofold Senſe: Either in the Senſe of the Religion of Soul-intereſts, and with reſpect to Soul-concerns; or in the Senſe of literal Judaiſm (which was a Civil-religious and typical Inſtitution of Sanctity) and in reſpect of ſecular Intereſts. For the Pſalmiſt ſaith of Phinehas and his Fact of Zeal, that was counted unto him for Righteouſneſs unto all Generations for evermore. Pſal. 106. 31. It was imputed to him for Righteouſneſs, for he gain'd thereby the Reputation of the Righteous Phinehas (as Abraham by his Faith gain'd the reputation of the Righteous Abraham:) But this Phinehas did not gain in the ſenſe of the Religion of Soul-intereſts, or with reſpect to Soul-concerns, but only in the ſenſe of literal Judaiſm and to the purpoſe of gaining an everlaſting Jewiſh Prieſthood.

IV. The learned Grotius miſtaketh the Senſe of theſe Phraſes of Scripture, and thence it is, that he doth not acknowledge this great Article of Chriſtianity the State of Righteouſneſs. If any Action is ſaid to be counted, reckon'd or imputed for Righteouſneſs, (w) the Phraſe ſignifieth only (according to this Interpreter) that it is counted an eminently Righteous or laudable Action. When the Apoſtle argueth, to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his Faith is counted for Righteouſneſs; the Senſe is according to this Interpreter; (x) illa fides ei plurimum prodeſt, quippe à Deo magni æſtimata, that Faith very much profiteth him, as being highly eſteem'd by God. This looſe and careleſs Interpretation of Scripture is extremely culpable; for it is extremely mutilate and partial, and doth not reach the fulneſs of Senſe, that is in this Phraſe imputing Righteouſneſs. When God imputeth Righteouſneſs to Divine Believers as ſuch, it muſt be ſuppos'd, that he accounteth their Faith laudable and eximious (and ſuch it is:) But if the Apoſtle had ſaid, that God imputeth ingenuity to Bondſlaves, when they become Divine Believers, would any one ſuppoſe, that this is all the meaning of it; he accounteth their Faith laudable and eximious? The imputing Righteouſneſs to Divine Believers upon their Faith can ſignifie nothing leſs than a reputing them the Righteous, who were before reputed ungodly Sinners and the Servants of Sin. It can ſignifie nothing leſs than a change of their State from Servitude to Freedom, from Death to Life, from Condemnation to Righteouſneſs; and that by Faith they paſs out of one of theſe oppoſite Eſtates into the other (y) anſwerably to the Old Iſraelites paſſing out of Egypt into Canaan. Meerly to account their Faith eminently righteous or laudable, is an imputing Righteouſneſs to their Action only, not to their Perſons: But the Apoſtle diſcourſeth of imputing Righteouſneſs to the Perſons of Divine Believers. And ſeeing it is the ſubſtance of Chriſtianity, which he diſputeth for, and his words manifeſtly contain in them the ſummary and ſubſtance of Chriſtianity, when he ſaith, that an ungodly Sinner becoming a Divine Believer his Faith is counted for Righteouſneſs (plainly expreſſing both the Benefit-part and the Duty-part of the New Covenant) how diſingenuous is it, to ſlight and ſhuffle off the richneſs and fulneſs of his Words with theſe general Terms, that Faith very much profiteth him as being highly eſteem'd by God? Some of the Learned follow Grotius in his careleſs Miſtakes; for they ſay (z) that λογίζεσθαι εἰς δικαιοσύνην, is nothing elſe, but to be approved as a good Man, or a doer of what is Righteous and Good, and that becauſe he doeth what is Good and Righteous. But this is ſo far from being the whole Senſe of the Apoſtle's Phraſe, that it muſt not be thought any part of it. For there is a great want of propriety of Expreſſion in this Propoſition, and if the Expreſſion be made proper, the Senſe will not be at all the Apoſtle's Senſe. There is a great want of Propriety in the Expreſſion; for a Perſon is not ſaid λογίζεσθαι εἰς δικαιοσύνην, but a Thing to a Perſon. And what is the Thing that (according to Chriſtianity) muſt be ſuppos'd, λογίζεσθαι εἰς δικαιοσύνην, to be imputed unto Righteouſneſs? Is it the being a good Man, a doer of what is Good and Righteous antecedently to Chriſtianity? If not, then all Men muſt be initiated into Saving Chriſtianity, that they may be truly good Men, or doers of what is Good and Righteous. And they cannot enter into Saving Chriſtianity, but unavoidably Righteouſneſs muſt be imputed to them; therefore that which initiateth them into Saving Chriſtianity (which is their being Divine Believers or their Faith) muſt be the thing that is imputed to them for Righteouſneſs, as the Apoſtle argueth. Righteouſneſs therefore in the Religion of Soul-intereſts is not to be obtain'd, as Phinehas obtain'd it in literal Judaiſm meerly by his doing a Work of Righteouſneſs, and meerly by Judicial Sentence approving him as a good Man, or a doer of what is Good and Righteous. But this is the Senſe of the Grotian Interpretation, which explodeth any ſuch Imputation, of Righteouſneſs, which is a Creative-making men Righteous, and alloweth no other but that which is by Judicial Sentence. For to impute Righteouſneſs according to this Interpreter, is nothing elſe, but for God (exerciſing his Judgment) highly to approve of, praiſe and commend Men as in their Faith and Practice doing (a) that which is egregiouſly laudable, hugely Good and Righteous. It muſt be acknowledg'd, that if God praiſeth or commendeth any as Doers of that which is Good and Righteous, this is a ſort of imputing Righteouſneſs unto them (for Well-doing is Righteouſneſs:) But this may be done without the Goſpel. This is not the Goſwel-way of making ungodly Sinners the Righteous. This looketh like a buſineſs of human Merit, meerly to exerciſe a Judicial Sentence, and to deal with Men according to that Judicial Sentence, this is Law-religion, not the Religion of Sovereign and Saving Grace. There is nothing extraordinary in this, nothing out of the road of human Affairs, to praiſe them that do well, or to praiſe the Virtue of Faith (b) as Philo hath done. But as Faith in the Apoſtle's Diſcourſes doth not ſignifie any ſort of Faith, as Righteouſneſs in his Diſcourſes doth not ſignifie any ſort of Righteouſneſs (nor doth it ſignifie Praiſe either in Human Authors or the Holy Writers:) So the imputing Righteouſneſs in his Diſcourſes doth not ſignifie any ſort of imputing Righteouſneſs, but ſuch an imputing Righteouſneſs which is the Gift of Righteouſneſs and a creative Act. Rom. 5. 17. If there be no ſuch Imputation of Righteouſneſs, which is a Creative-making Sinners the Righteous, there can be no new Creation, or Conſtitution of Rights and Dues, no new Creation of Men (for they muſt be new created as to their State as well as their Nature) nor is it poſſible, that Chriſtian Believers as ſuch ſhould have Right, Title and Priviledge to be the Righteous, and have all the Rights and Priviledges of the Righteous, or that condemn'd ungodly Sinners ſhould be the Righteous by becoming Chriſtian Believers, but by a new Creation and Settlement of things, whereby the Reputation and Rights and Priviledges of the Righteous are to them given, granted, reckoned and imputed. God by Chriſt hath (notwithſtanding the Law) made, founded and provided for Believing Sinners the State of the Righteous (or the State of Righteouſneſs) they have it, as Abraham had it, by the free Gift of his Sovereign Grace. Rom. 5. 15,--21. Iſa. 53. 11. Rom. 3. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 30. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Gal. 2. 21. Apoc. 1. 5, 6. The making the new Covenant or Settlement of Rights and Dues (by the

(s) Ea ſignificatio ſubinde in V. T. occurrit, ut צדקה pro felicitate & proſperitate accipiatur. L'Emper. Not. in Moſis Kimchi ὁδοιπορ. p. 229.

(t) Habitus fuit pro juſto à Deo. Vatabl. Fides ejus à Deo acceptata eſt, ut Scil. propter eam juſtitiam ei largiretur, ipſumque juſtum atque amicum ſuum reputaret. Menoch. Fides dicitur imputari pro juſtitia, quod credenti juſtitia fuerit gratis imputata, ſeu quod credens ex gratia fuerit juſtus reputatus. Pareus.

(u) Cajetan. ad Rom. 4. 3.

---

(w) Not. in Rom. 4. 3, 22.

(x) Not. in v. 5.

(y) V. Grot. Not. in Joh. 5. 24. & in 1 Cor. 5. 7.

(z) Dr. H. More Myſt. of Godlineſs. B. 8. c. 5.

(a) Fidem cenſeri à Deo rem egregiè bonam. Proleg. in Ep. ad Rom. Fidem Abrahami à Deo pro re magna acceptam eſſe. Not. in Rom. 4. 22. Per animi probitatem, quæ partim in Fide conſiſtit, partim ex Fide naſcitur, aliturque, hæredem eſſe mundi. Not. in v. 13. Idem eſt juſtitiam imputari per Fidem quod Fidem imputari in juſtitiam. Significat enim aſcribi alicui laudem fidei nomine, nam & laus dicitur juſtitia per μετωνυμίαν. Not. in v. 11.

(b) Vid. Not. in Rom. 4. 3.

Obedience and Sufferings of Chriſt) was a creative-making Believing Sinners the Righteous, and this Righteouſneſs they have by Gift and by Grace, Matth. 26. 28. Joh. 1. 12. Rom. 5. 18, 19. 2 Cor. 3. 9. Gal. 3. 21, 26. Eph. 2. 6, 8. and 3. 9. Heb. 11. 7. 1 Joh. 5. 11. When an Ungodly Sinner becometh a Chriſtian Believer, he paſſeth out of the ſtate of Sin, of Wrath, and of Death, into the ſtate of Righteouſneſs and of Life, which is a creative-making Believing Sinners the Righteous, Joh. 5. 24. Rom. 1. 17. and 8. 1. and 10. 10. Gal. 5. 5. 2 Cor. 5. 17, 18. Tit. 3. 5, 7. 1 Joh. 3. 14. A creating Believing Sinners into the ſtate of Saints can be nothing elſe but a creating them into the ſtate of the Righteous; and the Apoſtle is expreſs, that this creative-making them the Righteous is the imputing to them Righteouſneſs. And if in Chriſtianity there is ſuch an imputing Righteouſneſs, which is a creative-making Believing Sinners the Righteous, then there is (in Chriſtianity) another-kins imputing Righteouſneſs than the meer judicial-ſentential, which is only an approving and praiſing the goodneſs of Mens Faith and Practice. The vanity of Grotius's Interpretation is further diſcernible from hence; (c) Himſelf and thoſe that follow him, make the imputing Righteouſneſs a quite different thing from Juſtification. To confute which Conceit nothing more is needful, than to read the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe, and to appeal to common Senſe. (d) To him that conſidereth the drift and force of S. Paul*'s Diſcourſe, it will clearly appear, that Juſtification, imputing Righteouſneſs, not imputing Sin and remiſſion of Sin, are the ſame thing; otherwiſe the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe would not ſignifie or conclude any thing; imputing Faith for Righteouſneſs is the ſame with Juſtifying by Faith.*

V. The way of attaining Righteouſneſs (the being in ſtate and condition the Righteous as to God) is a principal thing, that Chriſtianity debateth with its Adverſaries the Law-religioniſts of all ſorts, Judaical, Pagan, Muhammedan, which are a ſort of Pagano-Judaical Religioniſts. Theſe all agree (although in many reſpects they diſagree) that the way of attaining Righteouſneſs and Salvation is by the Law (the Law-religion of the Law-religioniſts) and that in the Senſe of the Religion of Soul-intereſts they are juſt before God by being the Law-religioniſts and ſo doing the Works thereof. The Sentiments of the Jews are, (1.) They muſt not only be Talkers but Doers, (e) אנשי מעשה Men of Deeds or good Works, of which ſome of their Elogies are Hyperbolical and Extravagant (ſuch were the Philoſophic Pagans Elogies of Virtue) ſuch is this Saying of R. Jacob, (f) Better is one Hour ſpent in Repentance and Good Works in this World than the whole Life of the World to come. Another of their Doctors ſaith laudably, (g) He whoſe Wiſdom exceedeth his Works, is like a Tree, whoſe Branches are more than the Roots, which a Wind coming overturneth by the Roots. But he whoſe Works exceed his Wiſdom, is like a Tree, whoſe Branches are fewer than the Roots, and if all the Winds in the World come and blow upon it, they move it not. Which is a Saying like our Saviour's touching the effect of Chriſtian Practice, that it maketh a Solidity and Firmitude in the Chriſtian Profeſſion, Matth. 7. 24, 25. The Rabbins talk like great practitioners, (h) נאים דברים מפי עשיהם words are beauteous out of the mouth of them that do them. (i) He that keepeth one Commandment, getteth one Advocate to plead for him; and he that committeth one Tranſgreſſion, getteth one Accuſer. Repentance and Good Works are Bucklers againſt the Divine Wrath. Anciently (and a like cuſtom they have at this day) when an Iſraelite or Proſelyte was circumcis'd, the by-ſtanders amongſt the Jews made this Acclamation, (k) As thou haſt introduc'd him into the Covenant, ſo introduce us into the Law, and into Protection and into Good Works. (2.) By Good Works the Jews underſtand, (l) all obſervances of their Law (and conſequently their obſervances of the Moral Law are part of their Good Works) מעשים תוריים רבים manifold legal Works. By the practice of theſe Good Works (as they ſuppoſe) they make themſelves good (as to inherent Virtue, Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs,) for they ſay, (m) Hominem effingi ſecundum opera ſua, a Man is formed (made good or bad) according to his Works. (n) God hath not created Man perfect, but it is in his power, to perfect the form of his Soul by rightly ordering his Works. (o) Actionibus perfici animam ut bona reddatur, The Soul is perfected and made good by practice. They ſuppoſe therefore, that the Precepts of their Law were multiply'd to ſo vaſt a number, becauſe God would have his choſen People adorn'd with all manner of Virtue, and that the immenſe multitude of the Moſaic Inſtitutes was deſign'd for this end, (p) to purifie Iſrael, and to make them of great Righteouſneſs; for by obſerving their legal and ritual Inſtitutes of Purity they pretend, (q) to obtain Internal Purity. The Pagans ſo far ſymbolize with the Jews, their Ethical Virtue, (r) ἐξ ἔθους περιγίνεται, is acquired by cuſtomary practice. (3.) The Jews ſuppoſe, that by their legal good Works they are in the ſtate and condition of the Righteous as to God, and have with him the Reputation, Impunity and Reward of the Righteous in reſpect of Soul-intereſts. For their Law ſaith, Deut. 6. 24. It ſhall be our Righteouſneſs, if we obſerve to do all theſe Commandments before the Lord our God. And thus they underſtand it; (s) It ſhall be our Righteouſneſs, whereby we ſhall be juſt, to inherit the World to come. (t) The Crowns which the Juſt wear in the life to come, are ſuch as they have got על ידי תורה ומעשים טובים by the ſtudy of the Law and their good Works. The Summary of the Jews Religion is (u) to learn and to labour in the Law ſo they become juſt and gain a Reward both in this and the other World. But they ſuppoſe, (w) that a Man may be eſteem'd by God tzaddik or juſt as to another, and yet may be called by him raſha or unjuſt as to this World (as determining to puniſh him in this World:) and he may be reputed raſha or impious as to the other World (obnoxious to Condemnation) and yet may be reputed tzaddik or juſt as to this World. In great conformity to the Jews Hypotheſis, that they were juſt by obſerving the Law, the Pagans Principle was, what Socrates diſcourſeth with Hippias, (x) The Law of the City teacheth what to do and what to eſchew, and that which is according to Law is juſt. He that doeth thoſe things that are juſt, is not he juſt? and he that doeth thoſe things that are unjuſt, is not he unjuſt? The Man conformable to the Law therefore he is juſt, and he that tranſgreſſeth the Law, he is unjuſt. To every one that hath liv'd juſtly the Pagans promiſe, (y) that after Death he ſhall live with the Gods. So Plato ſaith in his Phædrus, ὃς μὲν ἂν δικαίως διάγῃ, He that leadeth his

(c) Aliud eſt cum dicitur homo juſtificari per fidem. Proleg in Ep. ad Rom.

(d) Dr. Barrow on the Creed, Ser. 5. p. 78, 79.

(e) Lightfoot Hor. in Luk. 15. 7.

(f) Pirke Aboth c. 23.

(g) Ibid. p. 4, 5, 18.

(h) Ibid. Tayler. in Præfat.

(i) Ibid. p. 21.

(k) Selden. de J. Nat. & G. l. 2. c. 2.

(l) Coſri p. 70, 121.

(m) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex 21. p. 30.

(n) Ibid. Lex 2. p. 11.

(o) Ibid. Lex 213. p. 315.

(p) Pirke Aboth.

(q) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 352.

(r) Ariſt. Eth. l. 2. c. 1.

(s) Hornbeek c. Jud. l. 6. c. 2.

(t) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 215.

(u) Pirke Ab. p. 11.

(w) Buxt. Syn. c. 18.

(x) Τὸ νόμιμον δίκαιον εἶναι. οὐκοῦν ὁ μὲν τὰ δίκαια πράττων, δίκαιος, ὁ δὲ τὰ ἄδικα ἄδικος; ὁ μὲν ἄρα νόμιμος δίκαιός ἐστιν· ὁ δὲ ἄνομος ἄδικος. Απομνημ. 4.

(y) Eugub. de Per. Phil. l. 8. c. 3.

life juſtly, is partaker of the better lot and portion; but he that liveth unjuſtly, of the worſer. In his Apologue of Er (in his tenth de Rep.) Er reporteth, that the Soul when ſhe goeth from hence, goeth to a certain divine kind of place, where there are two wide gapings of the Earth beneath and of the Heaven above over againſt them, that between theſe the Judges ſit, and that in paſſing Judgment τοὺς μὲν δικαίους κελεύειν πορεύεσθαι τὴν εἰς δεξιάν τε ϗ ἄνω, they bid the juſt go on the Right-hand and upwards, but the unjuſt to go on the Left-hand and downwards. In his Gorgias he thus diſcourſeth; (z) This ſeemeth to me the ſcope, looking at which we ought to guide our life, referring all things private and publick thereto, that he who deſireth to be happy, practiſe Juſtice and Temperance, not ſuffering his Appetites to be unreſtrained, and ſeeking to fulfill them (which is an infinite evil) and live like a lawleſs Robber; for ſuch an one cannot be amical to another Man, nor unto God; for he cannot be ſocietive. The Muhammedan Prophet is ſaid, (a) to promiſe a future reward to all that believe in God and a Day of Judgment, and do that which is juſt. (4.) The Jews ſuppoſe, that all things in this and a future life are diſtributed and befall Men according to their merits, their good or evil works. This is one of their principal Articles of Faith; for they ſay, (b) Fundamentum legis, Fideique omnino caput eſt, omnia quæ hominibus eveniunt, pro ſuis cujuſque factis ac meritis divinâ providentiâ evenire. (c) R. Joſeph Albo buildeth the Jewiſh Faith upon this Foundation (it is one of his three Foundations in his Sepher Ikkarim) the eternal reward of good works and the eternal puniſhment of evil works. And upon this ground the Jews reject Chriſtianity; for if a Man by integrity of life, keeping the Commandments of God and his good works can merit Eternal Life, as by his impiety and evil works he is obnoxious to Eternal Puniſhment, to what purpoſe is the Paſſion of the Meſſiah? They doubt not to merit Eternal Life by keeping the Commandments and by their good works (d) they make a Garment of the Precepts (a Garment of Righteouſneſs) their good works they call Juſtitiæ, their Righteouſneſs (as their Gemara Babylonica ſaith, (e) Every Man hath his Righteouſneſſes and his Tranſgreſſions) we are commanded (f) to lend to a poor Man (ſay they) לזכותינו that it may be Righteouſneſs to us. Their Righteouſneſſes are their Merits; for Righteouſneſs and Merit (g) are amongſt the Jews terms ſynonymous, the ſame word זכות ſignifieth both, and oftentimes both in conjunction, whence it is often rendred, (h) juſtitiæ meritum, the merit of Righteouſneſs. In this Maxim the Pagan Religioniſts agree with the Judaical, that the diſtribution of things is according to the merits of Men, and this was the generally receiv'd Opinion amongſt all Nations, as one ſaith of the Chineſe, (i) Pro meritis actæ vitæ ſuæ cuique præmia & ſupplicia, ex communi omnium gentium opinione conſtituunt, Accordin to the common Opinion of all Nations they allot Rewards and Puniſhments to every one according to the merits of his paſt life. (k) For the Gods diſtribute to all what is according to their merit. (l) Τὰς πρὸς ἀξίαν ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδέχεσθαι, the Soul receiveth a Retribution of thoſe things that were done in the time of life according to her merit. (5.) The Jews Religion is not only their Good Works but their Faith; for a Faith they have, but ſuch a Faith which is at beſt a Work of the Law; and by this their Faith in conjunction with their Good Works they ſuppoſe themſelves to be made juſt. (m) Filii Iſraelis ſunt juſti per fidem ac legem ſuam. The Sons of Iſrael are juſt by their Faith (the Faith of the Law-religioniſts) and by their Law. They call their Religion, (n) fœdus Legis & Fidei, the Covenant of the Law and Faith, and they ſuppoſe, that thoſe words of the Prophet The Juſt ſhall live by Faith, are a Summary of their Religion. So the Pagan Religioniſts have (not only the Platonick Faith, nor only the Virtue of Fidelity, which was deify'd in Paganiſm, but) the Faith of Pagan Religioniſts; for although they never agreed upon a Creed or Form of Doctrine, yet they called their Religion their Faith, as the Jews do. Together with Divination we ought not to take away Providence and the Deity, but to ſeek ſolutions of thoſe things, that ſeem contrary thereto, ſaith Plutarch, (o) τὴν δὲ εὐσεβῆ ϗ πάτριον μὴ προΐεσθαι πίστιν, but not to caſt away the pious Faith, which we have from our Anceſtors; (p) τὴν πίστιν ἣν οἱ πλεῖστοι περὶ θεῶν ἔχουσι, the Faith which the moſt have touching the Gods. Plato in his Gorgias having diſcourſed of the different ſtate of Men in a future life ſubjoyneth, (q) ταῦτ' ἐστὶν, ὦ Καλλίκλεις, ἃ ἐγὼ ἀκηκοὼς πιστεύω ἀληθῆ εἶναι, Theſe are the things, O Callicles, which being reported to me, I believe to be true; for theſe were Articles of his Faith as a Pagan Religioniſt. (6.) The Jews have in their Religion a ſort of Grace and Mercy, whence they expect a ſort of remiſſion of Sins. For they ſay, (r) there are thirteen Properties in God, and but one is vindictive. The followers of R. Hillel have this maxim, (s) The Lord of Mercy inclineth to Mercy. (t) R. Albo (of great eſteem among the Jews) maketh a diſtinction between rewarding and puniſhing, לפי שורת הדין according to the rule of Judgment, and על צד החסד by the way of Mercy. If God dealeth with Men rigorouſly according to the rule of Judgment, then the Puniſhment due to evil Works is Eternal, and the Reward due to good Works is only Temporal. But if God dealeth with Men according to the way of his Mercy this order is inverted; for the puniſhment of an evil Work which before the Throne of Judgment was Eternal, before the Throne of Grace becometh Temporal; and the Reward which before the Throne of Judgment was only Temporal, before the Throne of Grace becometh Eternal. The Muhammedans magnifie the Mercy of God at an higher rate than the Jews (much of their Devotion conſiſteth in praiſing the Mercy of God) and their Prophet ſaith, (u) There is no Man, whom his Works will ſave. To him that replieth, what not you? his Anſwer is, Not I my ſelf muſt be ſaved otherwiſe than by the Mercy of God. The Heathen had a Notion of a πρόνοια ἱλάσιμος, placable Providence, one of Jupiter's Titles was ἀφέσιος, Remiſſor, and their Prayers and Sacrifices ſhew, what opinion they had of the Mercy of their Deities and of their need of it.

VI. In this Scheme of the Law-religioniſts way of attaining Righteouſneſs the great things in Religion are culpably made arbitrary and unſettled. For whereas Societies are held together by the Bonds of right and due, the Law of every Polity is a publick Settlement of the Rights and Dues of the Members of it, every Polity is neceſſarily founded upon a Settlement of Rights and Dues, and conſequently the Kingdom of God is neceſſarily founded upon a Settlement, wereby the Rights and Dues of Men and Angels are determin'd; theſe Law-religioniſts ſuppoſe, that the Rights and Dues of Men are (in great degree) unſettled and undetermin'd, are left to God's arbitrary Will and Pleaſure, and to arbitrary Grace and Mercy. The Muhammedans ſay, (w) Thoſe that believe well, and do well ſhall have Eternal Beatitude; thoſe that believe amiſs and live ill, ſhall have Eternal Puniſhments; but thoſe that believe well, yet live ill, of theſe they ſay, ipſi ſunt in arbitrio Dei, who either puniſheth them or ſheweth them Mercy, as he will. (x) The Jews ſuppoſe, that as a Man meriteth Eternal Condemnation by his Evil Works, ſo he meriteth Eternal Life by his Good Works, and that he hath ſufficient Free-will and Ability to both: But after all their fierce Diſputations for this their Dogma touching the merit and demerit of the Works of Men (which in the conſequence of it would ſpoil their Maxim that every Iſraelite hath a Portion in the World to come) they do not ſuppoſe a ſettlement of their Rights and Dues as to their Spiritual and Eternal Intereſts; but the main of a Man's Intereſt (his Reward for his good Works and his Puniſhment for his evil Works in the main of it) is unſettled and undetermined, and dependeth upon an arbitrary aſcending the Throne of Judgment or of Grace. No wonder therefore, if the Jews are hugely uncertain of Salvation, (y) if they reckon the certitude of it amongſt the ſeven things that are hidden from Men, and recite with applauſe the Story of their R. Johanan the Son of Zacay, who being ſick and viſited by his Diſciples began to weep, and being ask'd the cauſe of it, anſwer'd; If I was to go before a King whom I had offended, I ſhould hope, that he might be appeas'd by words or corrupted by money: but now I am to go before him who is a King above all Kings, whom I can neither appeaſe by words, nor corrupt by gifts, nor do I know, whether I ſhall be carry'd to Paradiſe, or thrown down to Hell, and this is the cauſe of my weeping. If a Man of ſuch Piety and Wiſdom could not certainly promiſe to himſelf Paradiſe, who (as the Jews argue) can be certain, that it ſhall be his Portion?

(z) Οὗτος ἔμοιγε δοκεῖ ὁ σκοπὸς εἶναι πρὸς ὃν βλέποντα δεῖ ζῆν· ϗ πάντα εἰς τοῦτο τὰ αὑτοῦ συντείνοντα ϗ τὰ τῆς πόλεως, ὅπως δικαιοσύνη παρέσται ϗ σωφροσύνη τῷ μακαρίῳ μέλλοντι ἔσεσθαι, οὕτω πράττειν· οὐκ ἐπιθυμίας ἐῶντα ἀκολάστους εἶναι, ϗ ταύτας ἐπιχειροῦντα πληροῦν, ἀνήνυτον κακόν, λῃστοῦ βίον ζῶντα. οὔτε γὰρ ἂν ἄλλῳ ἀνθρώπῳ προσφιλὴς ἂν εἴη ὁ τοιοῦτος, οὔτε θεῷ. κοινωνεῖν γὰρ ἀδύνατος.

(a) Selden. de J. Nat. & G. l. 6. c. 12.

(b) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 178. Outram. de Sacrif. l. 1. c. 12. S. 6.

(c) Buxt. Syn. p. 18, 19, 23.

(d) L'Emper. Not. in Abarb. com. in Iſa. 30. p. 16.

(e) Hoornbeek ſupr. l. 6. c. 2.

(f) Hotting. de Jur. Lex 66.

(g) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 668.

(h) Hottin. de Jur. Lex 25. p. 36. L'Emper. Not. in Jacchiad. p. 177.

(i) Maffeius Indic. l. 6. p. 257.

(k) Πᾶσι γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι (Θεοὶ) τὸ κατ' ἀξίαν διανέμουσι. Procl. in Tim. p. 328.

(l) Hierocl. in aur. car. p. 125, 138.

(m) Abar. ben. ap. Vorſt. de cap. Fid. p. 114.

(n) Hotting. de Jur. Lex 17. p. 27. & Lex 25. p. 36.

(o) De Pyth. orac. p. 402.

(p) Non poſſe viv. Suav. p. 1101.

(q) V. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 12. c. 6. Jambl. de vit. Pythag. p. 130, 131, 136.

(r) Grot. Not. in Exod. 34. 7.

(s) Pocock. ſupr. p. 173.

(t) Ibid. p. 171. Huls. Theol. Jud. par. 1. l. 1. p. 17, &c.

(u) Pocock. ſupr. p. [illegible]

The Law-religioniſts cannot tolerably define, who are the Righteous and the Wicked, the Juſt and the Unjuſt; this with them is arbitrary and unſettled. In Plato's Phædo there are three ſorts of Men, that are to be judged: (z) Thoſe that have liv'd well and holily, thoſe that have liv'd otherwiſe, and thoſe that have liv'd a middle ſort of life. Agreeably whereto the Jews diſtinguiſh three ſorts of Men, that are to be judg'd, (a) Tzaddikim the juſt, Reſhaim the wicked, Benoniim the intermediate. He whoſe Righteouſneſs (Good Works) preponderate his Sins, is tzaddik, juſt. He whoſe Sins preponderate his Righteouſneſs, is raſha, bad or wicked. The middle ſort are thoſe, whoſe good and evil deeds equally ballance one another. Of the reſhaim (wicked) ſome are much worſe than others, for ſome have no merits at all, and theſe they call reſhaim gemurim, the perfectly wicked. Of the tzaddikim ſome are of an higher Claſſis than others; for ſome are ſaid to have no Sins, that are worthy, to be put in the Balance againſt their Merits, and theſe they call tzaddikim gemurim, the perfectly Righteous. But in this mode of diſtinguiſhing the Righteous and the Wicked, (b) a Man by one good work may bring himſelf Lecaph zacuth, into the ſtate of Righteouſneſs, and by one Tranſgreſſion he may bring himſelf Lecaph chobah into the ſtate of Guiltineſs and be curſed for ever. The weight of a Grain of a good or evil work will turn the Scale, and make one of the Wicked to be one of the Righteous, or one of the Righteous to be one of the Wicked. And if they are of the ſame Kind and Family, if both are the Doers of Righteouſneſs and both are the Doers of Wickedneſs, if they are only diſtinguſhed by the ſlender degree of a good or evil work, and there is very little difference between them in this life, it is abſurd, to make a vaſtly great difference between them in the life to come. Yet thus Lactantius diſcourſeth like a Law-religioniſt; (c) That the good works of Men will be weighed with their evil, and as the one outweigheth the other, they will be juſtified or condemned. This will infer a middle order (as the Jews ſuppoſe) between the Righteous and the Wicked; which is as abſurd, as if a King ſhould introduce a middle order between his loyal and diſloyal Subjects: or as if a Father ſhould ſuppoſe in his Family a middle order between his dutiful and undutiful Children.

In the Law-religioniſts Scheme the cure of Sin is in great degree uncertain and arbitrarious. Some of their Friends conſtitute a Religion of theſe five Articles, (d) called Catholick Verities. 1. That there is a Supreme Deity. 2. That the Deity ought to be worſhipped. 3. That the beſt worſhip of the Deity is Virtue conjoyn'd with Piety. 4. That Men ſhould repent. 5. That there is a Reward and Puniſhment after this life. In this Scheme meer Repentance is repreſented as a ſufficient cure for Sin; but this is far from being a Catholick Verity; for the Religion both of the Jews and of the World of the Gentiles was a Religion of Sacrifices for the expiation of Sin. The Jews who are of opinion, that they cannot enter into Heaven, unleſs their Sins be expiated, are concern'd, to bethink themſelves, how to get clear of them, and they have thought of various methods fond, arbitrarious, inſufficient, and at beſt of very uncertain avail. For they ſuppoſe, (e) that Death, Afflictions, Repentance and Good Works are Expiations of Sin. Every Year they obſerve the Day of Expiation and ſeven penitential Days before it, whereon they do penance (as alſo in the Month preceding it) and are intent upon expiating their Sins by Abſtinences, Lotions, Flagellations, Alms, Penitential Prayers, and Pſalms, throwing their Sins into a River, and (in ſome places) by putting their Sins upon a Cock, which they kill and give up in exchange for themſelves. If notwithſtanding theſe methods (which yet are thought ſo available, that on the day of Epiation the Jews fancy themſelves whiter than Snow) they are not ſufficiently purg'd from their Sins in this life, they have taken care for the plenary expiation of them, and that ſatisfaction be made for them by ſuffering puniſhments in the life to come. (f) Deus prius ob delicta caſtigat, God firſt chaſtiſeth them for their Sins, and having ſo purg'd them, giveth to every one of them an intire reward for his Works. Thoſe of the intermediate order will be puniſh'd for ſome time, but afterwards being made pure and immaculate;

(w) Windet de vit. funct. p. 203. ed. 3.

(x) Hulſ. ſupr.

(y) Hoornbeek. Jud. l. 5. c. 2. p. 442, 444.

(z) Οἱ καλῶς ϗ ὁσίως βιώσαντες, ϗ οἱ μή. ϗ οἱ μὲν ἂν δόξωσι μέσως βεβιωκέναι. Marſham can. chr. p. 283.

(a) Hoornbeek ſupr. p. 427.

(b) Paget ſupr. p. 436.

(c) Judicabuntur qui Deum ſcierunt, & facinora eorum, id eſt mala opera cum bonis collata ponderabuntur, ut ſi plura & gravia fuerint bona juſtificentur ad vitam beatam: ſi autem mala ſuperaverint, condemnentur ad pœnam. Lact. l. 7. c. 20.

(d) De Veritat. p. 76. de Rel. Gent. p. 49.

(e) Hoornbeek ſupr. l. 6. c. 2. Buxt. Syn. c. 18. Lev. Moden. Hiſt. par. 3. c. 5, 6.

(f) Menaſſ. ben Iſr. de Reſurr. l. 2. c. 18, 8.

late, will be receiv'd into the order of the Good. So Plato in his Phædo ſaith of thoſe, that have not liv'd well, yet are ſanable; though they have committed great Crimes and muſt fall into Tartarus, yet having ſtay'd there a Year ἐκβάλλει, τὸ κῦμα, the ſurge caſteth them out. Of the intermediate order he ſaith (g) they ſuffer Puniſhment in the other World for the Injuſtices they have done, and being thereby purg'd they are freed and abſolv'd, and then they receive the Reward of their Beneficences, every one according to his Merit. (h) There is great Conformity between the Jews and Pagans in the methods of obtaining Forgiveneſs of Sins and getting clear of them by Faſting, Alms, Lotions, Flagellations and other Rites of Pennance.

(g) Καθαιρόμενοι τῶν τε ἀδικημάτων διδόντες δίκας ἀπολύονται, εἴ τίς τι ἠδίκησε, τῶν τε εὐεργεσιῶν τιμὰς φέρονται, κατὰ τὴν ἀξίαν ἕκαστος.

(h) Purchas Pilgr. Par. 1. B. 9. c. 11. S. 2.

VII. In the Law-religioniſts Scheme there is great Self-inconſiſtency. For the Mercy and Grace which they have introduc'd into their Religion, is in great degree deſtructive to their Merit of good Works, which are ſuppos'd in ſtrictneſs to Merit nothing more than a temporal Reward, the Eternal is ſaid to be of meer Grace. Which is deſtructive of their great Principle, (i) that Man by his good Works can merit Salvation as by his evil Works eternal Condemnation. And it is deſtructive to meer Grace; for all antecedent Merit is deſtructive to meer Grace. And it contradicteth alſo their Satisfactions for Sin (for they ſuppoſe (k) that Men muſt make Satisfaction for their Sins by Pennance or Puniſhments in this or another Life, before they can enjoy the Reward of their good Works) which Satiſfactions that they make for their Sins, are neceſſarily commenſurate with the Merits of their good Works and of equal avail. For to take away a temporal or eternal Puniſhment by a Satisfaction, is as great a thing, as by a good Work to Merit a temporal or eternal Reward. If their good Works therefore in ſtrictneſs merit nothing more than a temporal Reward, their Satisfactions in ſtrictneſs can take away nothing more than a temporal Puniſhment (like the Satisfactions in the Church of Rome) whereas they pretend, to ſatisfie for the eternal Puniſhment of their Sins. But ſuch Satisfactions which in ſtrictneſs are only condign Compenſations for temporal Puniſhments of Sin, is it not groſly abſurd, that they ſhould be counted Satisfactions for the eternal Puniſhments? The making Satisfaction for a Sin is (l) a redeeming and buying off the Puniſhment of it. The Forgiveneſs of Sin therefore cannot be of meer Grace to him that maketh Satisfaction for it. And if the Law-religioniſts have not the Forgiveneſs of their Sins (in reſpect of the eternal Puniſhment of them) of meer Grace, they cannot have the eternal Reward of meer Grace; for to be deliver'd from the eternal Puniſhment, is one half of the eternal Reward. For this reaſon they have introduced Grace into their Religion in contradiction to the Nature of Grace; as alſo becauſe the Grace which they have introduc'd muſt be according to their Hypotheſis ſaving Grace (for they have the eternal Reward from it) which yet cannot be ſaving Grace. For it is nothing elſe but that abundance of Grace and Mercy, which is in their Law, as it is their Political Law and Civil-religious Inſtitution, which is nothing more than that Grace and Mercy, which is in that common Providence, that governeth Mankind. All ſorts of Religioniſts have in their Religion a Faith and Repentance, a Grace and Mercy of the Deity and a (ſuppos'd) Remiſſion of Sins. And ſuch as their Faith and Repentance is, ſuch is their Grace and Mercy, and ſuch is their Remiſſion of Sins. By a Civil-religious Faith and Repentance Mankind may obtain from the Grace and Mercy of common Providence a Remiſſion of Sins as to ſecular Intereſts, as of Old the Ninevites did, and as God promiſeth by the Prophet, Jer. 18. 7, 8. and as a Perſian Heathen King (Firutz or Perozes) did, of whom Schickard relateth (m) that in his time, which was about the time of the Council of Chalcedon, there happen'd a mighty Drought in Perſia, ſo that it rain'd not for ſeven Years; and when the Kings Granaries were utterly exhauſted, and there was no hope of further Supplies, he called his People out into the open Fields, and there in a moſt humble manner he beſought the great God Lord of Heaven and Earth, to ſend them Rain, and gave not over praying, till a plentiful ſhower fell upon them.

(i) Hulſ. ſupr. p. 16.

(k) Hoornbeck ſupr.

(l) Bellarm. de pœnitent. l. 4. c. 8.

(m) Tarich p. 130.

VIII. The Law-religioniſts Righteouſneſs as to State and Condition can be of no better Character than their Righteouſneſs of Life and Practice; therefore they cannot attain the State of Righteouſneſs (as to Soul-intereſts) by the Law. The Rabbinical Righteouſneſs of Life and Practice may be underſtood from Maimonides's method of curing Vice and acquiring Virtue, (n) which is the ſame that we uſe in reducing the Body to an equal temperament by contraries. So (ſaith he) to a parſimonious Man we muſt not immediately preſcribe Liberality, but the practice of Prodigality, till he hath got rid of the Vice of Parſimony, and then preſcribe to him the practice of Liberality. The Rabbinical Virtue is nothing better than Ariſtotle's Mediocrity (not Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs) which is to be obtain'd, not by eſchewing, but by chuſing and practiſing both the extremes (ſometimes the one ſometimes the other) both which extremes are Sin and Vice, and conſequently the practice of Sin and Vice is (according to our Hebrew Doctor) lawful and laudable, and the only method of acquiring Virtue. They that are ſo groſly unintelligent in matters of Vice and Virtue, Sin and Sanctity, Wickedneſs and Righteouſneſs, is it any wonder, that they ſhould conceit (o) that the Law may be eaſily kept, (p) that the ultimate perfection of the Soul is attainable by it, that themſelves are the Righteous (the perfectly Righteous) or that they ſhould magnifie their own Futilities at the ſame rate with the ſtolid Arabians (q) qui unicam tantum de libro Dei legit literam, meretur bonum retributionis, he that readeth but one Letter in the Alcoran meriteth the Good of Retribution? The Law-religioniſts Righteouſneſs of Life and Practice (their Repentance and good Works) is no better than the Civil-religious, to which the Jews (r) agreeably to the Pagans promiſe the Happineſs of the World to come. As the Japoneſe (s) promiſe certain happy places to them that obſerve their Laws, ſo ſoon as they depart this Life. They that have this Civil-religious Righteouſneſs of Life and Practice, have neceſſarily therewith a Righteouſneſs as to State and Condition; for they are Righteous in ſecular-legal

(n) 8 Cap. com. ſuo in Pirke Aboth præmiſſ.

(o) Mor. Nev. Par. 2. c. 39

(p) Abarbin. ap. Vorſt. de cap. Fid. p. 49.

(q) Hotting. H. O. l. 2. c. 5. p. 314. ed. 1.

(r) Omnibus qui patriam conſervarint, adjuverint, auxerint, certum eſſe in cœlo definitum locum. Macrob. in Somn. Scip. l. 1. c. 8. Et ſi vitam reſtrictius egerint, aulam ſibi ejus patere. Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 2. p. 86.

(s) Poſſevin. Biblioth. l. 10. c. 2.

lar-legal account and reputation and as to ſecular intereſts, according to Ezek. 18. 9. He that hath walked in my ſtatutes, and hath kept my judgments to deal truly; he is juſt, he ſhall ſurely live, ſaith the Lord God. This Righteouſneſs of State and Condition (or of Juſtification) which muſt be called a Secular-legal Righteouſneſs (becauſe it conſiſteth in being Juſt in Secular-legal account and reputation and as to Secular-intereſts) is that which the Apoſtle calleth his own Righteouſneſs which is of the Law. Phil. 3. 9. For his Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, ſignifieth contradiviſively, that which is ſo of the Law, as not to be of the Goſpel, as thoſe that are of the Law, are thoſe that are ſo of the Law, as not to be of the Goſpel. Rom. 4. 14. His own Righteouſneſs ſignifieth contradiviſively that which is ſo his own Righteouſneſs, as not to be God's in his ſupernatural and ſuperlegal diſpenſation of Things. His own Righteouſneſs is manifeſtly the ſame with the Jews own Righteouſneſs, which they ſought to eſtabliſh in oppoſition to the Righteouſneſs of God. Rom. 10. 3. The Righteouſneſs of God is that Goſpel-ſtate of Righteouſneſs, which God in Chriſt hath provided for us Sinners. This is his Righteouſneſs declared in the Goſpel, Rom. 3. 25. the Righteouſneſs of God whereby we are made the Righteous. 2 Cor. 5. 21. The Righteouſneſs which is of Faith. Rom. 10. 6. the Righteouſneſs of God which is revealed from Faith to Faith. Rom. 1. 17. The Righteouſneſs of God witneſſed by the Law and the Prophets and now manifeſted. Rom. 3. 21. His Righteouſneſs which is ſuch a diſpenſation wherein he is Juſt and the Juſtifier of him that believeth in Jeſus. Rom. 3. 26. The Righteouſneſs of God which is by Faith of Jeſus Chriſt unto all. Rom. 3. 22. That which is through the Faith of Chriſt, the Righteouſneſs which is of God by Faith. Phil. 3. 9. To this Righteouſneſs of God the Apoſtle oppoſeth his own Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, which manifeſtly ſignifieth the Law-religioniſts Righteouſneſs (that which the Rabbins ſpeak of, when they ſay, Filii Iſraelis ſunt juſti per Legem ſuam) whoſe Converſion the Apoſtle endeavoureth, from whoſe ſort of Righteouſneſs he was converted, which was a ſort of Righteouſneſs that he had antecedently to Chriſtianity, was the great obſtacle to the entertaining it, which ought to be counted Dung, and the vilifying whereof is pertinent to his buſineſs. Upon all which accounts his own Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, neceſſarily ſignifieth the Righteouſneſs of his State of Judaiſm (the Judaical-legal Righteouſneſs of State and Condition, a Secular-legal Righteouſneſs oppoſite to that of the Kingdom of God) and cannot ſignifie the Chriſtian inherent Righteouſneſs which the Law requireth, (t) as ſome unchriſtianly and inexcuſably miſtake.

IX. The Law-religioniſts content themſelves with ſuch a Pardon of the Acts of Sin, that is on this ſide the State of Remiſſion of Sins (the State of Righteouſneſs;) therefore they attain not the State of Righteouſneſs (as to Soul-intereſts) by the Law and the Works thereof. In the Old Teſtament there are numerous Inſtances of pardoning Sin in reſpect only of (ſecular Intereſts) temporal Puniſhment. Amos 7. 2, 3. Jer. 5. 1. Pſal. 85. 1, 2, 3. Sometimes the People of Iſrael had their Sins pardon'd in the main (not wholly) in ſome degree they were not pardon'd, yet they are ſaid to be pardon'd. Pſal. 78. 38. Numb. 14. 20, 23, 29. God pardon'd and puniſh'd both at once, when he did not deſtroy the People of Iſrael by a πανωλεθρία, (threatned Numb. 14. 12.) yet debarr'd the provokers from ſeeing the Land of Canaan. At the ſame rate he pardon'd David, who yet in ſome degree was not pardon'd; for divers ways he ſuffer'd Puniſhment for his Sin in the matter of Uriah (to his dying day) which yet was pardon'd. 2 Sam. 12. 13. So the Sins of Menaſſah were in ſome reſpect and degree pardon'd and not pardon'd. 2 Chron. 33. 13. 2 King. 24. 34. That pardon of Sin which the Jews obtain'd by their Sacrifices was a Pardon not a Pardon. For their Sacrifies did not cleanſe from all ſort of Sin nor could they cleanſe and expiate the guilt of Sin as to Mens Soul-eſtate, but as to their Soul-condition they remain'd ſtill in the State of Sinners; yet their Sacrifices made atonement for them and thereby their Sins were forgiven them. Lev. 5. 17. Deut. 21. 8. When Hezekiah recover'd from Sickneſs (the Puniſhment of his Sin) God is ſaid, to have caſt his Sins behind his back. Iſa. 38. 17. So in the New Teſtament this is the ordinary Preface to our Saviour's Cures, Son thy Sins are forgiven thee. Of which the Senſe is, thy Sins are ſo far forgiven, thou art releas'd from a temporal Puniſhment of them. When our Saviour took pains and wearied himſelf in healing bodily Sickneſſes, thoſe Sickneſſes are conſider'd as the Puniſhment of our Sins, and the taking them away as a ſort of taking away our Sins, and therefore the Evangeliſt ſaith, Matth. 8. 17. He healed all that were ſick, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by Eſaias the Prophet, himſelf took our infirmities and bare our ſickneſſes.

In reſpect of Soul-intereſts there is in the New Teſtament a certain limited ſort of Remiſſion of Sins; for our Saviour's Prayer and that of S. Stephen and S. Paul for their Perſecutors, that they might be forgiven and their Sin might not be laid to their Charge, are to be underſtood with this Limitation and Qualification ſo far as may be. God was in Chriſt reconciling the World unto himſelf, providing for us and tendring to us the Remiſſion of our Sins, which was a certain limited not imputing our Treſpaſſes, and ſo far as it was a non-imputing our Treſpaſſes, it was a forgiving our Sins antecedently to any Faith or Repentance of ours. 2 Cor. 5. 19. But all theſe limited ſorts of Remiſſion of Sins are on this ſide the State of Remiſſion of Sins as actually poſſeſs'd and enjoy'd, whereby they that were no People, become the People of God, and have God for their God, ungodly Sinners have the State, Relation, Rights and Priviledges of the Saints of God, Aliens and Enemies are naturaliz'd, endeniz'd, infranchis'd, reconciled Enemies are receiv'd into Favour with God and become the Objects of his ſpecial Saving Love, Bondſlaves are manumis'd and are in the State of Freedom, ungodly Sinners are clear'd of the ſtain of Sin, diſcharg'd of the Puniſhment (poſitive and privative) and are in the State of Righteouſneſs and of Bleſſedneſs. Such is the State of Remiſſion of Sins, which is provided for the World of ungodly Sinners in the Saving Religion of Chriſtianity: But the Law-religioniſts content themſelves with ſuch a Pardon of the acts of Sin, which is on this ſide the State of Remiſſion of Sins, and which if they could obtain, would be extremely inſufficient. For let us ſuppoſe, that a Man for ſome great Crime is rightly condemned by his Prince, to live in perpetual ſlavery to him as his Lord, and that this Slave during his Servitude committeth ſeveral Faults, which his Lord pardoneth, yet

Luk 23. 34. Act. 7. 60. 2 Tim. 4. 16.

1 Pet. 2. 10. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Eph 2. 16, 17, 19. Rom. 5. 5, 10, 11. and ch. 8. 38. Joh. 8. 36. Tit. 3. 5, 7. Act. 2 38.

(t) Dr. Owen of Juſtif. c. 18. Confer. πνευματ. l. 4. c. 7. p. 322, 467.

doth not ſo far pardon him, but that he ſtill detaineth him in Servitude; this Pardon is like that leſſer and narrower Remiſſion of Sins, which the Law-religioniſts promiſe themſelves, which is on this ſide the State of Remiſſion of Sins. But if in Proceſs of time this great Lord out of generous Kindneſs manumiſeth this his Slave (rightly condemned to perpetual ſlavery for his Criminality,) if he ſo far pardoneth him, as to make him a perfectly Free-man, this Pardon is like that great and ample Remiſſion of Sins, which Chriſtianity affordeth. If the Law-religioniſts therefore could obtain that Pardon of Sins which they promiſe themſelves, yet they would ſtill remain in the Criminal and Penal State, unleſs they made a Tranſition out of it into the oppoſite State of Remiſſion of Sins according to Chriſtianity. And as an Alien in our Nation that committeth certain Crimes againſt the Government and is pardon'd for them, yet unleſs he be naturaliz'd and endeniz'd, is incapable of any inheritance in England: So the Law-religioniſts notwithſtanding their Pardon (if they could obtain it) yet are incapable of any Inheritance in the Kingdom of God. Great things they ſay of Repentance, and great things (u) a learned Muhammedan ſaith of a Death-bed Repentance, which uſually is of little avail: Nor is the Law-religioniſts Repentance leſs inſufficient than their Pardon. For a Sovereign granteth not a Pardon to rebellious Subjects, but upon Condition of returning to their Subjection and Allegiance in his Kingdom, their Repentance muſt amount to this return, elſe it is no available Repentance: Nor can it reaſonably be ſuppos'd, that God granteth any Pardon to Rebel-ſinners (in reſpect of their Soul-intereſts) but upon Condition of returning to their Subjection and Allegiance in the Kingdom of God, which is a Kingdom, that the Law-religioniſts acknowledge not, and therefore pretend not to be Subjects therein. That can be no available Repentance, which is not a turning to God, who is neceſſarily the imperial Eſtate of his Kingdom; and what ſignifieth the Repentance of an ungodly Man, who ſtill continueth an unholy and ungodly kind of Man? No Repentance therefore can be of avail (in reſpect of Soul-intereſts) but that wherein there is a change of the Man (a change of kind from a wicked to an holy kind of Man) who is not chang'd by thoſe bodily auſterities of Penance, which the Law-religioniſts have invented. They are deſign'd (as in the Church of Rome) to be a proper ſatisfaction to Divine Juſtice, a compenſation by way of equivalence for the Puniſhment, which their Sins deſerve (which is not a little injurious to God) thereby juſtitiæ reſtauratur æqualitas (as 'tis ſuppos'd) they quit ſcores with God and owe him nothing.

X. This is the common Condition of Mankind (antecedently to any thing of Chriſtianity) they are in the Criminal and Penal State of the Law, and ſuch they continue, ſo long as they belong to the Law; therefore the Law-religioniſts cannot attain the State of Righteouſneſs by the Law and the Works thereof. Not having gain'd the Pearl of Price (the Life of Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs) all their Goodneſs in their Unregeneracy is but a bad and vile kind of Goodneſs, their Religious Practice but a dead, ſuperficial, and exteriour-formal kind of Buſineſs, notwithſtanding their Pennances, Aſceticiſms, Civilities, Human Moralities, Phantaſtry, Rituality, although they are virtuous Men and Religioniſts of the carnal and mundane kind (as the Apoſtle was in his Judaiſm Phil. 3.) yet they remain deadly Criminals (in their deadly criminal Life) and therefore in their deadly Penal State. The Law not being Vital or Vivificative to its Religioniſts is to degenerate Mankind at the beſt but Law-form (an external Rule) and as ſuch it is dead: But it is alſo to degenerate Mankind Form of Law, and as ſuch at the worſt it is deadly; for (in ſome ſort) they are made deadly Sinners by it and are under its deadly Sentence, and are therefore in the State of Sin and of Death by it. (w) For the Letter of the Law which teacheth not to Sin, if the vivificative Spirit be wanting, killeth. Mankind in their Unregeneracy (devoid of the Spiritual Life) are deadly Tranſgreſſors of the Holy Spiritual Law, which hath the form of Law, and is the Settlement of premiant and penal Life and Death as due in Law-juſtice. (x) Quid meruit peccator? interroget juſtitiam, inveniet pœnam. What hath a deadly Sinner deſerved? Let him ask Law-juſtice, and he will find Puniſhment. The Law-Religion is ſo far from being the Religion or Settlement of the State of Remiſſion of Sins and of Righteouſneſs to degenerate Mankind (in reſpect of Soul-intereſts) that on the contrary it is to them the proper Law or Religion of the Criminal and Penal State, as the Apoſtle diſcourſeth, Rom. 3. 19, 20. Now we know, that what things ſoever the Law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the Law: That every mouth might be ſtopped, and all the World may become guilty before God. Therefore by the Deeds of the Law there ſhall no Fleſh be juſtified in his ſight: For by the Law is the knowledge of Sin. Rom. 4. 15. Becauſe the Law worketh Wrath: For where no Law is, there is no Tranſgreſſion. What the Old Teſtament ſaith in its Tragical exaggerations of the Wickedneſs of Mankind, is meant of the Law-religioniſts (them who are under the Law) which ſpeaketh them a Generation of ungodly Sinners (who ought to ſtop their Mouths as to Self-juſtifying, and to acknowledge themſelves what they really are, Criminals and ſubject to Condemnation;) therefore by being the Law-religioniſts and doing the Deeds of the Law no Fleſh ſhall be juſtified. This is one of the Apoſtle's Arguments againſt being juſtified (being in the State of Righteouſneſs as to God) by the Law. To this Argument he ſubjoineth another. By the Deeds of the Law there ſhall no Fleſh be juſtified in his ſight; for by the Law is the knowledge of Sin. In which Argument there is an Ellipſis; for the Senſe of it is, By the Law is the Knowledge of Sin, ſo as to be deadly Sinners by tranſgreſſing it. Mankind are criminaliz'd and unjuſtified by the Law (they have their Guilt and Criminality by it;) for where no Law is, there is no Tranſgreſſion. (y) The Law of it ſelf, ſeparate from Grace, only maketh Men guilty, which is the Condition of all that are under it. The World by the Law is a World of deadly Sinners, and conſequently is ſubjected to Divine Wrath by it, as the (u) Dico, quiſquis moritur pœnitendo eum facti, talem fruiturum dei favore & ejus gloria, quamvis commiſerit tot peccata, quot ſunt arenæ in mari & ſtellæ in cælo. Ap. Selden. de Synedr. l. 1. c. 12. p. 487.

---

(w) Quoniam litera Legis quæ docet non eſſe peccandum, ſi ſpiritus vivificans deſit, occidit. S. Aug. de Sp. & lit. c. 5.

(x) S. Aug. in Joan. Tr. 3. de cap. 1.

(y) Ubi enim Lex non eſt, nec prævaricatio: Et ideo per ſeipſam cùm ſola litera eſt, ſine ſpiritu, id eſt, lex ſine gratia, tantummodo reos facit. S. Aug. c. Fauſt. l. 15. c. 8. Omnes homines ſub lege conſtitutos reos facit Lex. Idem in Joan. Tr. 3. de cap. 1.

Apoſtle argueth. (z) For when a Man knoweth Sin, if Grace helpeth not, that he may avoid it, no doubt the Law worketh Wrath. The Law therefore is the proper Law or Religion, not of ſaving, but of making deadly Sinners. There is no expiation of Sin for them (as to Soul-intereſts) no Settlement of the State of Remiſſion of Sins, no diſpenſation of ſanctifying Grace for them in the Law-religion; they can have no liberation from their deadly Evils, no right to the Favour of God, nor the Immunities and Priviledges of his elect People by it: But they are depriv'd of all thoſe felicitative Immunities and Priviledges, of the Favour of God, of the State of Righteouſneſs, Reconciliation and Salvation by it, and are ſubjected to the contrary Penalties and to Divine Wrath. For being deadly Sinners they are neceſſarily condemned to die for Sin. Rom. 7. 24. and 8. 6. Heb. 6. 1. Joh. 5. 24. 1 Joh. 3. 14. The Jews ſay (a) great is the Law, which giveth Life to them that do it both in this World and the World to come. In this World this Sect of mundane Religioniſts taketh care, to have enough of Life: But in the World to come they will find no Life by their Law; for ex accidenti, and through the Wickedneſs of Mankind they are excluded from Life by it. (b) Non eſt data lex, quæ poſſet vivificare, ſed condemnare.

(z) Quando cognoſcit homo peccatum, ſi non adjuvat gratia, ut cognitum caveatur, ſine dubio lex iram operatur. Idem de Gr. & lib. Arbitr. c. 10.

(a) Pirke Aboth. p. 11.

(b) S. Ambroſ. com. Gal. 3.

XI. It is the Counſel and purpoſe of God, that Men ſhould not attain the State of Righteouſneſs as Law-religioniſts by their Righteouſneſs and their Merits; He hath choſen and appointed another method of attaining it oppoſite to the Law-religion, the Law of Works, the Works of the Law, the Law-religioniſts way of attaining it. Theſe two ways the Apoſtle uſually confronteth and oppoſeth in the Diſputes which he manageth on behalf of Chriſtianity, wherein his Senſe touching the Works of the Law (which hath been very much miſtaken) will be clearly intelligible, if we conſider, (1.) The Apoſtle's Diſpute is againſt the Law-religion and the Law-religioniſts and their way of attaining the State of Righteouſneſs and Salvation, which was by their doing the Works of the Law as Law-religioniſts. The Faith of Chriſtian Believers may be called a Work (the Work of God, Joh. 6. 29.) but cannot be called a Work of the Law: Nor can thoſe Divine Graces and Duties which are included in it, be called Works or Works of the Law in the Apoſtle's Notion, although the Divine Moral Law requireth them; for they are not Works or Works of the Law in the Apoſtle's Notion, but as they are the Law-religioniſts Works their Righteouſneſſes and their Merits. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they appertain to the Law or Religion of Works. Rom. 3. 27. Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what Law? Of Works? Nay: But by the Law of Faith. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they are the legal working way oppoſite to Faith. Gal. 3. 12. The Law is not of Faith, but the Man that doeth them, ſhall live in them. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they are the legal working way in order to attaining the State of Righteouſneſs. Rom. 9. 31, 32. Iſrael which follow'd after the Law of Righteouſneſs (the Benefit-part of it) hath not attain'd to the Law of Righteouſneſs (the Benefit-part of ſuch a Law.) Wherefore? Becauſe they ſought it not by Faith, ἀλλ᾽ ὡς ἐξ ἔργων νόμȣ, but as (to be attain'd) by the Works of the Law. Rom. 4. 5. To him that worketh not (as a Law-religioniſt) but believeth on him that juſtifieth the Ungodly, his Faith is counted for Righteouſneſs. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they are the legal way of working in order to the being juſtified by the Law. Gal. 3. 11. That no Man is juſtified by the Law in the ſight of God is evident. Gal. 5. 4. Chriſt is become of no Effect unto you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the Law. Gal. 3. 18. If the inheritance be of the Law, it is no more of promiſe. Gal. 2. 21. If Righteouſneſs come by the Law, then Chriſt is dead in Vain. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law expreſly, as they are the Works of the Law-religioniſts. Gal. 3. 10. As many as are of the Works of the Law (the Law-religioniſts) are under the Curſe. Rom. 4. 14. If they which are of the Law, be Heirs, Faith is made void. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they are the Works of the Law-religioniſts, that are in their Unregeneracy. Rom. 4. 1, 2. What ſhall we ſay then, that Abraham our Father as pertaining to the Fleſh hath found? For if Abraham was juſtified by Works, &c. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they are a Religion oppoſite to the Goſpel. Gal. 3. 2. Received ye the Spirit by the Works of the Law, or by the hearing of Faith? Rom. 3. 20, 21. By the Deeds of the Law there ſhall no Fleſh be juſtified. But now the Righteouſneſs of God without the Law is manifeſted. He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they are a Religion deſtructive to the Goſpel, that maketh Faith and the Promiſe void, Chriſt of no Effect and Dead in vain. Gal. 5. 4 He diſputeth againſt the Works of the Law, as they were the Religion of the unbelieving Jews, Rom. 10. 5, 6. and he meaneth by Works and the Works of the Law, that which the Jews meant, which are the Adverſaries, that he diſputeth againſt. Whence it is manifeſt, that this is the Apoſtle's Notion of them, they are the Law-religious Practices of the Law-religioniſts, or they are the Works which the Law requireth, as they are the Law-religion of the Law-religioniſts their Righteouſneſſes and Merits. They muſt be blinded with Prejudice, that ſee not ſo clear an Evidence, (c) that will have the Works of Chriſtianity and Regeneracy, to be the Works of the Law in the Apoſtle's Notion, who had no occaſion to diſpute againſt ſuch Works, which ought to be recommended and inforc'd with all imaginable vigor, and which there can be no good Reaſon or Deſign to diſpute againſt; for it is no good deſign, to imbroil the Church with frivolous Subtilties and miſchievous Diſputes about Juſtification.

(c) Dr. Owen of Juſtific. c. 14.

(2.) Works and the Works of the Law in the Apoſtle's Notion involve in them an incongruous Phariſaical Merit; therefore his Senſe is, that God would not have Men to attain the State of Righteouſneſs as Law-religioniſts by their Righteouſneſſes and their Merits in the boaſtful Self-exalting way. Rom. 3. 27. Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what Law? Of Works? Nay. Chap. 4. 2. If Abraham were juſtified by Works, he hath whereof to Glory, but not before God. Chap. 4. 4. Now to him that worketh, is the Reward not reckon'd of Grace, but of Debt. Chap. 4. 16. Therefore it is of Faith, that it might be by Grace. Rom. 11. 6. If by Grace, then it is no more of Works: Otherwiſe Grace is no more Grace. But if it be of Works, then it is no more of Grace: Otherwiſe Work is no more Work. 1 Cor. 1. 30, 31. Of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us Wiſdom, and Righteouſneſs, and Sanctification, and Redemption. That according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. Eph. 2. 8, 9. By Grace are ye ſaved through Faith. Not of Works, leſt any Man ſhould boaſt. 2 Tim. 1. 9. Who hath ſaved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our Works, but according to his own Purpoſe and Grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus before the World began. Tit. 3. 5, 7. Not by Works of Righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his Mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of Regeneration: that being juſtified by his Grace, we might be made Heirs. Rom. 3. 24. Chriſtian Believers through the Redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus are juſtified freely by his Grace without the Humane Merits. Merit is a term of great ambiguity (that muſt be variouſly diſtinguiſh'd) it ſignifieth both the debitorious and indebitorious kind of worthineſs (called by the Schools merit of Condignity and of Congruity) both the legitimate kind of worthineſs and the illegitimate Bravo's kind of worthineſs. Perſonæ miſerabiles & favorabiles (ſo called in Law) deſerve compaſſion and favour, grateful perſons deſerve to have kindneſſes done them, and an honeſt poor Man is worthy of the Charity of Almſgiving, as being a fit object thereof. So worthy Communicants are thoſe that are duely qualify'd and meet to be partakers of the Holy Communion. Every due object of our eſteem and affections deſerveth them (there are thoſe of whom our Saviour ſaith, they are not worthy of him, Matth. 10. 37.) and ſo doth the due object of Reward and Puniſhment. But this Merit which only importeth a congruity of the Object, is not Merit in the ſtrict acceptation, the ſenſe of Condignity, nor ſo as to deſerve a benefit debitoriouſly as due debt of Law-juſtice in the juſt poiſe and value of Things and Perſons. In ſuch Senſe of Merit a Benefactor meriteth Gratitude, and ſuch merit there is in commutative Juſtice; for the Labourer that hath earned his Wages, is in this Senſe of Merit worthy of them; And he that buyeth Lands or Goods meriteth them (in this ſtrict acceptation of Merit) if he payeth a price for them, that in the juſt poiſe and eſtimation of things is equivalent thereto. In diſtributive Juſtice amongſt Men obedient Subjects merit (in this Senſe of Merit) that they be advantageouſly differenc'd from the diſobedient; and amongſt pious People of ancient time the Houſe of God at Jeruſalem was a meritorious impulſive cauſe of their ſpecial kindneſs for that City. So Virtue is not only a congruous object of our eſteem and love, but meriteth it in the ſtrict acceptation, and Vice meriteth Deteſtation. Of the illegitimate Bravo's kind of merit the Cynical Philoſopher Diogenes is an inſtance; who ſuppos'd himſelf an eximious worthy, a perſon highly meritorious, and that what was given him, was no more than he deſerv'd not leſs than debitoriouſly, which was arrogance and ſelf-aſſuming. When one beſtow'd ſomething upon him, and one prais'd the Giver, Ἐμὲ δ᾽ οὐκ ἐπαινεῖτε τὸν ἄξιον λαβεῖν, don't you praiſe me, ſaid he, that am worthy to receive it? (d) A certain generous Champion of the Ancients having for a long time well exercis'd his Body to Fortitude, went to the Olympicks, and looking upon the Statue of the Piſæan Jove thus ſaid; If all things be rightly and as they ought prepared by me for the Combat, O Jupiter (φέρων δικαίως) paſſing Sentence juſtly give the Victory to me. This Bravo ſeemeth to have thought, that the value of his Perſon and his Merits ſhould in all reaſon and juſtice ſo far avail with Jupiter, as for the ſake of them to give him the Victory. But this the Bravo's merit or pretenſion to merit, as alſo the debitorious merit are repugnant to Chriſtianity, wherein God exerciſeth Sovereign Grace, ſo as to exerciſe Juſtice in beſtowing the Reward of Eternal Life, Rom. 6. 23. 2 Tim. 1. 18. 1 Pet. 1. 13. Jude 21. Luk. 14. 14. 2 Theſſ. 1. 6. 2 Tim. 4. 7, 8. Heb. 10. 35. ch. 11. 26. 2 Joh. 8. If the Faithful have Eternal Life from God exerciſing Sovereign Grace, Mercy and Bounty, ſo as to exerciſe Juſtice, (e) it cannot be due debt in juſtice to their Merits; for if it was, they might and would have it from God as exerciſing meer Juſtice. But ſeeing they have the Reward from Sovereign Grace, Mercy and Bounty, which they ſtand in need of, therefore they are the unworthy. And ſeeing they have it from Sovereign Grace, Mercy and Bounty exerciſing Juſtice, therefore they are the worthy, Matth. 10. 37. Luk. 20. 35. ch. 21. 36. 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. Apoc. 3. 4. ch. 17. 14. Col. 1. 12. (f) Chriſt will raiſe the Bodies of all Men, ϗ τῶν μὲν ἀξίων ἐνδύσει ἀφθαρσίαν, and will cloath the worthy with Immortality: Retributions will be made κατ᾽ ἀξίαν τῶν πράξεων ἑκάστου, as every one's deeds are worthy. They that ſhall be rewarded with Eternal Life therefore, are the Unworthy Worthies (ſuch are the Goſpel-worthies) In God's account they are worthy, but ſo that in their own account they are and ought to be the unworthy. They have merits and do merit and are rewardable Objects, and therefore are worthy; (g) Nullane ſunt merita juſtorum? ſunt plane quia juſti ſunt. But theſe their well-deſervings are not meriting debitoriouſly, they are a legitimate kind of worthineſs, not the illegitimate Bravo's merit, and in the whole computation of things they have reaſon and are greatly oblig'd, to count themſelves the unworthy. And if this is the caſe of the Righteous, it would be infinitely incongruous, that deadly Sinners ſhould as Law-religioniſts by their Righteouſneſs and their Merits have the ſtate of the Righteous; whence they are manifeſtly incapable of attaining it. (h) They will make ſatisfaction for their own Sins and (like unhumbled Bravo's) will merit for themſelves, and without being beholden to a Saviour will purchaſe Eternal Life at their own coſt and charges; and they pretend, (i) that by their good works they are made good and worthy of Life Eternal.

Pſal. 122. 9.

(d) Clem. Str. l. 7. p. m. 523.

(e) V. S. Aug. de Civ. & lib. arbit. c. 8.

(f) J. Mart. Apol. 2. p. 87. & p. 80, 82.

(g) S. Aug. Ep. 105.

(h) Bax. Syn. c. 1. p. 18.

(i) Hetting. de jur. Lex 20. p. 32.

(3.) In the Apoſtle's Diſputes Works have the ſame connection with the Law, that Faith hath with Grace; and as the Believers are the Religioniſts of Grace, ſo the Workers are the Religioniſts of the Law. Works therefore and the Works of the Law which are the Works of theſe Religioniſts the Workers, manifeſtly ſignifie the Law-religioniſts Works, whoſe way of attaining Righteouſneſs was contrary to God's way, which is the humble way, the free and noble way, the way of Sovereign Grace, the endearing and obliging way: But in the Law-religioniſts way of attaining Righteouſneſs ſovereign Grace is vilify'd; for they have their Righteouſneſſes and their Merits without any diſpenſation of ſupernatural and ſuperlegal Grace; and if they attain Righteouſneſs by the Law, they muſt have it as a matter of Law-juſtice by having done the Works of the Law. If it be of Works, it is not of Grace. (k) For Redemption by the Blood of Chriſt would be vilify'd, and the prerogative of humane works would not yield

(k) Vileſceret enim redemptio ſanguinis Chriſti, nec miſericordiæ Dei humanorum operum prærogativa ſuccumberet, ſi juſtitia to Divine Mercy, if the juſtification which is by Grace, was due to antecedent merits, ſo as not to be the gift of a Benefactor, but the reward of a Worker. In the Law-religioniſts way of attaining Righteouſneſs there is nothing but what is graceleſs, flat and inſipid, harſh and legal, nothing endearing and obliging. (l) But who is ſo outragiouſly mad, as not to give unſpeakable thanks to the Mercy of his Saviour? They that are ſav'd by Grace, are not called the Veſſels of their Merits, but the Veſſels of Mercy. (m) To the merits of an Impietiſt not Grace but Puniſhment is due. (n) We had no antecedent merits to recommend us, but demerits whence Damnation was due to us. (o) The Sons of the Promiſe are Sons of Beneficence. This is Grace which is gratuitous, and is not gain'd by the merits of a Worker but the mercy of a Donour. (p) Thou art made immortal, thou art made free, thou art made a Son, thou art made juſt, thou art made a Brother, thou art made a Coheir, thou reigneſt together and art glorify'd together, all things are given thee by Grace. This is the free and noble way of juſtifying Sinners; but is there any thing truly great, noble and eximious in the Law-religioniſts way, who pretend, to make themſelves juſt by their own (graceleſs) Righteouſneſſes and Merits and labouring in their Law? for it is no great thing, to repute them Juſt and reward them as Righteous, who have made themſelves ſuch. Their way of attaining Righteouſneſs (as it is haughty, ſo) it naturally ingendreth and cheriſheth an unholy elation of Mind. They will be meritoriouſly rewardable perſons by their works in their unregeneracy, and are prone to think, that their legal doings make them ſuch Magnifico's in God's Eyes, as they are in their own. For one of them ſaith, (q) If a Man with alacrity practiſeth the Precepts and Good Works and addicteth himſelf to the Law, thence he ſhall become clean and free from all Sin, all Uncleanneſs, purg'd from all Improbity and Crime; and if he ſo doeth, by degrees he will be clean before God, innocent and of pure Hands; and if he be ſo clean, he will at length come to ſuch a pitch, as to be accounted holy and great before his Creator. (r) It is uſual with ſome of them amongſt the Talmudiſts, to boaſt of their perfection, and that never in their whole life they perpetrated any Enormities. Which is a great thing with them, whoſe Religion is the Religion of Works, and who will be in themſelves the Righteous, not in another: Whereas Chriſtian Believers have the ſtate of Righteouſneſs as being in Chriſt: (s) Ecce Agnus Dei, qui tollit peccata mundi. Et ideo nemo glorietur in operibus, quia nemo factis ſuis juſtificatur, ſed qui juſtus eſt, donatum habet. Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the Sins of the World. And therefore let no Man glory in Works, for no Man is juſtify'd by them, but he that is one of the Righteous hath it by gift.

XII. It appeareth, that Mankind which belong to Nature and to the Law, cannot attain the ſtate of Righteouſneſs by the Law and the Works thereof, but are in the criminal and penal ſtate. Which Propoſition ought to be conſider'd not only with reſpect to every Man's eternal welfare, but that a good account may be given of the Chriſtian Religion, and that it may be well defended againſt the Jews in thoſe main parts of it, The Sacrifice of the Meſſiah and the Juſtification of Sinners. Of theſe great things this rational account may be given. (1.) God is peculiarly and definitively, The Soul-Sovereignty and Government (in contradiſtinction to Civil Sovereignties and Governments) what God is to the Souls of Men, He is in his Soul-Sovereignty and Government, which Soul-Sovereignty and Government is the ſame thing with his Religion conſider'd as his Soul-Sovereignty and Government and as to Soul-Intereſts, and this Religion is the ſame thing with the Settlement of his Kingdom, Sovereignty and Government. (t) The Law-religioniſts (the Jews and Muhammedans) will have ſuch a God and Religion, as they like and fancy, which is agreeable to their Genius and is for their turn, and acteth as fondly and arbitrariouſly as they pleaſe. For ſo the Jews agreeably to the fondneſs which they have for their own Nation, fancy (u) that they ſhall be cited before the Throne of Grace (whence they ſhall have the Eternal Reward) but other Nations before the Throne of Judment, (w) and Religion is no leſs an arbitrary unſettled buſineſs amongſt the Muhammedans. Not conſidering, that Religion (as to Soul-intereſts) is a Settlement of Rights and Dues, and of God's Soul-Sovereignty and Government, and that his exerciſe of Saving Grace and Mercy muſt be in and by a Saving Religion. If God therefore is ſaving to the Souls of Men, his Religion muſt be ſaving, his Soul-Sovereignty and Government muſt be ſaving, and the Settlement of his Kingdom muſt be Soul-ſaving. (2.) To a world of ungodly Sinners his original Soul-Sovereignty and Government, his original Religion (the original Law) the ſettlement of his original Kingdom, Sovereignty and Government is not ſaving but the contrary. To ſuppoſe, that the Law-religion (or natural Religion) is ſaving to a world of Sinners, is a contradiction. What they are by Nature and by the Law ſpeaketh them in a loſt condition, and their caſe is ſo far irremediable, that if God ſhould iſſue out an Act of Pardon for all the Acts of their Sins (ſuppoſing that he may do it) yet this Medicine would be far from being proportionate to their Maladies. Their whole ſtate muſt be chang'd, the ſtate of remiſſion of Sins or of Righteouſneſs according to Chriſtianity muſt be founded and made for them (ſo that they who were Aliens and Enemies may become Citizens of the Kingdom of God, and have the State, Relation, Rights and Priviledges of the Saints of God) a new and ſaving Religion, a new ſettlement of the Kingdom of God, and and conſequently a new Kingdom of God muſt be made, and the Sovereignty and Government thereof (which was the Law-Sovereignty and Government) muſt become new. (x) Τοῦτο μέγα ὄντως ϗ θαυμαστὸν, This is great indeed and wonderful. (3.) We may conceive it poſſible, that theſe great things may be effected by this method. God may raiſe up a Divine Perſon, to be a Divine Mediatory Saviour King to the World of Sincatio quæ fit per gratiam, meritis præcedentibus deberetur, ut non manus largientis, ſed merces eſſet operantis. Script. de vocat. Gent. l. 1. c. 5.

---

(l) Quis verò uſque adeò dementiſſimè inſaniat, ut non agat ineffabiles gratias miſericordiæ liberantis? Qui per gratiam liberantur, non vaſa meritorum ſuorum, ſed vaſa miſericordiæ nominantur. S. Aug. de Nat. & Gr. 5.

(m) Meritis impii non gratia, ſed pœna debetur. S. Aug. Ep. 105.

(n) Nihil præceſſerat in meritis noſtris, niſi unde damnari deberemus. Idem in Pſal. 18.

(o) Filii promiſſionis filii ſunt beneficii. Hæc eſt gratia quæ gratis datur, non meritis operantis, ſed miſeratione donantis. Idem Ep. 120. c. 19.

(p) Γέγονας ἀθάνατος, γέγονας ἐλεύθερος, γέγονας υἱὸς, γέγονας δίκαιος, γέγονας ἀδελφὸς, γέγονας συγκληρονόμος, συμβασιλεύεις, συνδοξάζῃ, πάντα σοι κεχάρισται. S. Chryſoſt. in Epheſ. λογ. α.

(q) Ap. Hulſ. Theol. Jud. par. 1. p. 4.

(r) Lightfoot Hor. in Luk. 15. 7.

(s) S. Ambroſ.

(t) Ita ſcribunt, credunt, ſentiunt de Deo, deque regimine ejuſdem Judæi excæcati, conſtituentes eum judicem ſuper peccatis ipſorum talem, qualem eum ipſi habere optarent. Buxt. Syn. c. 18. p.m. 384.

(u) Hulſ. ſupr. p. 19.

(w) Pocock. ſpec. p. 252. Hotting. Hiſt. or. l. 2. c. 6. p. 365. ed. 1.

(x) S. Chryſoſt. in Epheſ. λογ. γ.

Sinners, God may (with his own conſent) appoint him, to be the King of believing Sinners in order to his being King of believing Saints, and proceeding and dealing with this King of believing Sinners according to Law-juſtice (as the Government of Law-juſtice muſt deal with him) may put upon him whatever is requiſite for him, to do and ſuffer, that he may be the King of believing Saints. Which being accompliſh'd God may conſtitute this Divine Perſon in Sovereignty and actual Government the King of believing Saints, and Law-juſtice hath nothing to ſay againſt it. By this method a ſaving Religion may be made for the World of Sinners, a new ſettlement of Rights and Dues may be made for the Kingdom of God, and the Sovereignty and Government thereof may become new. But that theſe great things could be done without Chriſt (or as ſome Learned Men ſuppoſe, that God might have contriv'd a way, to ſave the World of Sinners without the undertaking of Chriſt) is beyond any rational conception. Nor ought we to think, that God had ſo little value for his own Son (of infinite precioſity) as without the greateſt neceſſity to give him up to Agonies ineffable, to Dolours inſupportable, to the extremity of Torments.

SECTION V.

The Law muſt be conſider'd as the Religion of Man's Unregeneracy, and of the Religioniſts of Unregeneracy, and conſequently as the Religion of our Spiritual Servitude.

I. THE Law (both as it is the Political Law of the Jews literally underſtood and as it is the original Religion of Soul-intereſts, the ſettlement of the Divine Moral Law) is thus oppos'd to the Goſpel; the one is the Religion of Regeneracy to all that belong to it, and the other of Unregeneracy. The Law affordeth not the Goods of Regeneracy, nor ſaveth from the Evils of Unregeneracy: but on the contrary, the Evils of Unregeneracy and a privation of the Goods of Regeneracy accrue to Mankind by the Law. As the Law ſignifieth the Political Law of the Carnal Jews, it is thus oppos'd to the Goſpel. (y) The Old Teſtament appertaineth to the Old Man, whence Man muſt neceſſarily begin; but the New to the New Man, to which Man ought to paſs from his Oldneſs. The whole Old Law is in this diſtinguiſhed from the New, that juſtifieth not, this juſtifieth. That is called the Old Teſtament, becauſe it knoweth not the renewing Men: but ours is called the New, becauſe it reneweth. There is in it the newneſs of the Spirit, which cureth the new Man of the Vicioſity of his Oldneſs (the badneſs of the Old Man) which was far from being cur'd by the commanding and threatning Letter. The Old Teſtament (a Civil-religious Inſtitution) had a Righteouſneſs, but terrene, carnal Promiſes the Figures of things Spiritual, and (in its Ceremonial Inſtitutes) was the oldneſs of the Carnal Law and a Servile Yoke. As the Law is the Divine Moral Law and the Settlement thereof, it is thus differenced from the Goſpel. (z) The Law doth not abſolve from Sins, but ſheweth Sins. The Law is not Sin, the Commandment is to life, the Law is holy, and the Commandment holy, and juſt and good: yet becauſe Good it ſelf is killing to the diſobedient Soul, when the Grace of God helpeth not, the Law became the miniſtration of Death in the Old Teſtament, becauſe of the killing Letter, and Grace in the New Teſtament is the miniſtration of Life, becauſe of the quickning Spirit. The Law and Grace muſt be diſtinguiſh'd. The one requireth performance, the other helpeth to perform. The one maketh the hearers of Righteouſneſs, the other the doers of Righteouſneſs. The Law ſhew'd the Diſeaſe, but did not take it away. That was the Holy-ſpiritual Law, this (the Goſpel) is the Law of the Spirit. The Law as it is the Holy Spiritual Law is not a ſettlement either of the ſtate of remiſſion of Sins upon us, or of renewing Grace to us: Sin is not taken away by it, either the condemning or the commanding power of Sin. Sin reigneth, ſo long as the Law reigneth, and both theſe in conjunction naturally ingender that ſervile fear, which is the Spirit of the Law-religioniſts, and which ſpeaketh them the unregenerate kind of Religioniſts. (a) Hæc eſt breviſſima & apertiſſima differentia duorum Teſtamentorum, timor & amor: illud ad veterem, hoc ad novum hominem pertinet. This is the ſhorteſt and plaineſt difference of the two Teſtaments, Fear and Love: that appertaineth to the Old, this to the New Man. The whole of this difference between the Law and the Goſpel ſheweth what Mankind are in their natural and legal condition. (b) Una quædam maſſa peccati, ſupplicium debens divinæ ſummæque juſtitiæ: One maſs of Sin, Debtors of Puniſhment to the Divine and Supreme Juſtice. If they apply themſelves to the Law-religion for the cure of their great Evils, inſtead of Bread it will give them a Stone, inſtead of a Fiſh it will give them a Serpent; for as a Law it maketh them guilty Criminals, and ſhutteth them up under Condemnation, which are the grand Evils of their Unregeneracy connex'd with their Spiritual Servitude under the Law.

II. Tell me, ye that deſire to be under the Law, do ye not hear the Law? for it is written, that Abraham had two Sons; the one by a Bondmaid, the other by a Free Woman. But he who was of the Bond-woman, was born after the Fleſh: but he who was of the Free Woman, was by promiſe. Which things are an Allegory; for theſe are the two Covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendreth to Bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and anſwereth to Jeruſalem which now is, and is in bondage with her Children. But Jeruſalem which is above is free, which is the Mother of us all, Gal. 4. 21, — 26. The Apoſtle here confronteth two Covenants (ſettlements and diſpenſations of things) the (y) Teſtamentum vetus pertinet ad veterem hominem, à quo neceſſe eſt hominem incipere: Novum autem ad hominem novum, quo debet homo ex vetuſtate tranſire. S. Aug. contr. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 3. c. 4. Lex ipſa vetus tota in hoc diſtinguitur à nova, quod illa non juſtificat, hæc juſtificat. illud dicitur vetus Teſtamentum, quia ad veterem hominem pertinet, nec renovare novit: noſtrum dicitur novum, quia renovat. Bellarm. de effect. ſacram. l. 2. c. 16. Propter veteris hominis noxam quæ per literam jubentem & minantem minimè ſanabatur, dicitur illud teſtamentum vetus: hoc autem novum, propter novitatem ſpiritus, quæ hominem novum ſanat à vitio vetuſtatis. S. Aug. de Sp. & lit. c. 20. Juſtitiam habebat quidem, ſed terrenam. Quæſt. ex utroque mixtim pars 2 inter opera S. Aug. T. 4. In figuris rerum ſpiritalium habens promiſſa carnalia, propter quod vetus dicitur Teſtamentum. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 25. Vetuſtas carnalis legis, jugumq ſervile. Idem de Sp. & Li c. 21.

---

(z) Non ſolvit Lex à peccatis, ſed oſtendit peccata. S. Aug. in Pſal. 129. Ecce quemadmodum lex non eſt peccatum, & mandatum in vitam, & lex ſancta & mandatum ſanctum, & juſtum & bonum: Et tamen quia de ipſo bono interficitur inobediens anima, ubi Dei non adjuvat gratia, miniſtratio mortis facta eſt lex in veteri teſtamento propter occidentem literam, & miniſtratio vitæ facta eſt gratia in novo teſtamento propter vivificantem ſpiritum. Idem T. 6. contr. adverſ. Leg. & Prophet. l. 2. c. 7. Diſtinguenda eſt lex & gratia. Lex jubere novit, gratia juvare. Idem Ep. 95. Lex auditores juſtitiæ facit, gratia factores. Idem contr. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 3. c. 2. Jubebat non ſanabat: languorem oſtendebat, non auferebat. Idem in Joan. Tr. 3. de cap. 1. Ἐκεῖνος μὲν πνευματικὸς, ὅυτος δὲ νόμος πνεύματος. S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. λογ. ιγ.

(a) S. Aug. T. 6. c. Adimant. c. 17.

(b) S. Aug. ad Simplic. l. 1. Qu. 2.

Old and the New, the one adumbrated and typify'd by Agar the Bondwoman, the other by Sarab the Free-woman. Agar was by Nation an Egyptian, by ſtate and condition a Bondmaid, that was only given to Abraham as a Concubine, and had neither Dower nor Power as a true Wife, but liv'd in his Family as a Bondwoman, and when ſhe had done her work, was turn'd out of Doors. By this Agar the Law-religion was adumbrated and typify'd, but the New Covenant (the Goſpel-religion) was typify'd by Sarab the Free-woman; for ſhe was free-born, liv'd free a Matron or a Lady, and had the right of Dower and of Power. Theſe two Mothers ſhadow'd forth the two Covenants, the one from Mount Sinai which gendreth to Bondage (as Agar was originally of Egypt the Houſe of Bondage and was of condition a Bondwoman) the other from Mount Sion. But theſe two Mothers did not only adumbrate and typifie two Covenants, but two Churches alſo; for Agar anſwereth to Jeruſalem which now is (the literal Jeruſalem) the Church of the Carnal Jews that is in Bondage with her Children. Sarab anſwereth to the Church of Spiritual Jews the Jeruſalem which is above that is the Mother of all true Chriſtians, and is in the ſtate of Freedom, and ſo are all her Children. As theſe two Mothers (Agar and Sarab) were of contrary condition, ſo were their two Sons (according to that ſaying in Law, partus ſequitur ventrem;) for the Son of the one was Iſhmael, a Bondman, as his Mother was a Bondwoman: the Son of the other was Iſaac a Free-man, as his Mother was a Free-woman. Thus the Law and the Goſpel are contrary, the Carnal and the Spiritual Church; the one is a Bondwoman the other is a Freewoman. And the Sons of the Law and of the Goſpel, the Sons of the Carnal and Spiritual Church they ſymbolize with their Mothers; for the Sons of the Law (the Law-religioniſts) the Sons of the Jewiſh Church are as Iſhmael, who, though in ſome ſort a Son, yet was not a genuine Son, had not the right of a Son (and therefore no right to the Inheritance) but was a Baſtard-bond-child, becauſe he came from a Woman, who had not the ſtate of a Woman and the right of a Wife, but was a Bondmaid and a Concubine only. On the other hand, the Sons of the Goſpel and the Spiritual Heavenly Church are as Iſaac, who was a true Son and had the right of a Son, becauſe he came from a Mother, who had the ſtate of a Woman, and the right of a Wife, and being a legitimate Son he had right to the Inheritance. This was the difference between theſe two Mothers and their Sons on the Mother's ſide; and there was a difference between them alſo on the Father's ſide; for though they had one Father, yet they iſſu'd from different generative Powers. Iſhmael was begotten by Abraham's natural power and ſtrength of generation, as alſo from Agar's natural force of conception, and therefore he is ſaid, to be born after the Fleſh, there was nothing ſupernatural in his Birth. But Abraham begat Iſaac by a ſupernatural power and ſtrength of generation from God, as alſo from Sarab's ſupernatural virtue of conception. In like manner, they that are of the Law (the Carnal Jews) they are of the natural Birth only, but Abraham's Carnal Seed and the Carnal Religioniſts: On the other hand, the true Chriſtians are of the Spiritual and Supernatural Birth, born of God; theſe therefore are the genuine Sons and Heirs of God, the other are but Baſtards and Bondmen, that have no right to inherit. (c) In Hiſmael ſunt omnes qui carnaliter colunt Deum, ad ipſos enim & vetus Teſtamentum pertinet. The carnal kind of Religioniſts are of Iſhmael, thoſe that belong to the Law, and (upon ſeveral accounts) are in Spiritual Servitude. For the Jews ſubjection to the load and luggage of the Moſaic Rites was a Servitude. And they were the Serviliſts, not the Filialiſts in Religion, becauſe the temper of thoſe baſe-born Legaliſts was the baſe and ſervile.

V. 29.

(c) S. Aug. in Pſal. 119.

(d) They that under the Law externally comply with the Precepts of it from a cupidity of obtaining or fear of loſing a worldly Felicity, theſe belong to the Old Teſtament, which gendereth to Servitude; for carnal fear and cupidity maketh them Slaves. The Sons of Carnality becauſe of their mundane genius and graceleſs diſpoſition could be no better than vile Serviliſts in Religion. But this is not the worſt Branch of their Servitude.

(d) Verùm hæc planè magna diſtantia eſt, quòd faciunt iſta ſub lege poſiti, quos litera occidit, terrenam felicitatem vel cupiditate adipiſcendi vel timore amittendi. Hi ad vetus pertinent Teſtamentum, quod in ſervitutem generat, quia facit eos carnalis timor & cupiditas ſervos. S. Aug. contr. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 3. c. 4.

(e) For they were under the Law, not under Grace; and therefore were under the domination of Sin, from which a Man hath not Liberation by the Law, but by Grace. The common condition of all Mankind therefore in their Unregeneracy, is to be under the domination of Sin.

(e) Sub lege enim erant non ſub gratia; & ideo eis dominabatur peccatum, à quo non fit homo liber lege, ſed gratia. Idem de grat. & lib. arbitr. c. 12.

III. Agreeably to which Fundamental of Chriſtianity S. Paul's Diſcourſe in his ſeventh Chapter to the Romans ought to be underſtood; for it is not to be ſuppos'd, that he deſigneth to contradict, but to eſtabliſh and illuſtrate the Principles of his own Religion. Accordingly he affirmeth of himſelf as a Law-religioniſt, and of all other Law-religioniſts, that they belong to the Letter, that they are in the Fleſh, that they are under the domination of Sin, that the Law was weak through the Fleſh, that a liberation from the Servitude of Sin is peculiarly the benefit that cometh by Chriſt, and is the happy eſtate of every regenerate Chriſtian, Rom. 8. 1.---4. For God in Chriſt hath condemned Sin in the Fleſh (ſentenc'd it to death) and every Regenerate Chriſtian belongeth to the Law of the Spirit of Life that hath made him free, the Righteouſneſs of the Law is fulfilled in him, and he walketh not after the Fleſh, but after the Spirit. If with this Character of a Goſpel-religioniſt we compare the Character of that kind of Religioniſt, whom the Apoſtle perſonateth and deſcribeth in the controverted part of this ſeventh Chapter, they will appear, to be as contrary, as Law and Goſpel, as Fleſh and Spirit, as Sin and Righteouſneſs, as Miſery and Happineſs, as Thraldom and Freedom. For that Religioniſt whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, is a Law-religioniſt (or he ſpeaketh of himſelf conſider'd as a Law-religioniſt) in whom Sin is enlivened by the Law, worketh in him all manner of Concupiſcence, maketh him a deadly Sinner taking occaſion by the Commandment, a miſerable Man, that approveth of the Law of Righteouſneſs, yet is captivated to Sin and Wickedneſs, and therefore crieth out for a liberation, which is a Law-religioniſt's right uſe of the Law. (f) Utilitas legis eſt, ut hominem de ſua infirmitate convictum, gratiæ medicinam quæ in Chriſto eſt implorare compellat. That Religioniſt whom the Apoſtle perſonateth is carnal,

Rom. 7. 6.
Rom. 7. 5.
Rom. 6. 14.
Rom. 7. 8, 9, 11, 01, 22, 23, 24. 14.
(f) S. Aug. Ep. 200.

ſold under Sin, ſpeaketh the Language of the unregenerate Law-religioniſts (g) both Jews and Gentiles. Sciebam ut eſſe me deceret, facere non quibam miſer, ſaith a young Man in Plautus. So Phædrias in the Comedy, & prudens, ſciens, vivuſque pereo. There are many the like Sayings in the Writings of the Popular Pagans which are obſerv'd and diſcours'd of (h) by the Philoſophers and others.

The Philoſophers diſtinguiſh two parts in the Soul of Man, the inferiour and ſuperiour. The one is common to the Brutes and falleth within the comprehenſion of ſenſitive Nature, which they call (i) τὸ παθητικὸν, the Paſſive, (the ſeat of the bodily Appetites, Affections and Paſſions) the other is τὸ λογικὸν, the rational Nature; and between theſe two as contrary operative Principles there is uſually a conflict and combat. Διπλῆ γάρ ἐστι μαχομένη φύσις εἰς ἓν κεκραμένη, for two Natures conflicting one with the other are conjoin'd, the ſenſitive Appetite (the Appetite to ſenſitive Good) reſiſting and withſtanding the Rational Nature, as it diſcerneth and dictateth the good of Honeſty. In this conflict the ſenſitive Nature uſually prevaileth (by its deceit and impetuous violence) not only againſt mens Reſolutions to the contrary in their ſober mood, but againſt the preſent light and dictates of their Mind (k) ἐκ βίας ἐπιθυμιῶν, αἳ προσελθοῦσαι ἄγουσι ϗ ἕλκουσι, by the force of their Cupidities, which carry and drag them (l) ταῖς παθητικαῖς ὁλκαῖς ὥσπερ τισὶ μολυβδίσιν, by the pathetick Tractions as by Weights of Lead, (m) καθάπερ ὑπό τινος ἀπειθοῦς ἵππου, as by a certain unruly Horſe (fertur Equis auriga) they are carry'd to perpetrate Sin. (n) The Mind is τυραννουμένη, tyrannically lorded over by the brutal affections (which are uſually in motion and commotion) τῶν ἀλόγων παθῶν κατεχόντων αὐτὴν, ϗ περισπώντων ϗ τὰ ἑαυτοῖς ὀρεκτὰ πράττειν ἀναγκαζόντων, the irrational Paſſions poſſeſſing it and diſtracting it and (in ſome ſort) compelling it, to do the things that are to them deſirable. (o) Πᾶν γὰρ πάθος βιαστικόν ἐστιν, for every Paſſion hath a certain compulſory force in it (p) ἐκκρούει τοὺς λογισμοὺς, it dethroneth or expelleth Reaſonings. Whence Mankind are ſaid by their brutal Affections (both iraſcible and concupiſcible) βιάζεσθαι, ἀναγκάζεσθαι, to be (in great degree) forc'd and neceſſitated to do Evil. But this neceſſity of doing Evil groweth upon them, if their evil Practices become cuſtomary; for thereby the bent and byaſs of their Nature more ſtrongly and habitually ſtandeth that way, and it becometh an extreme difficulty, to leave their evil Practices, and to withſtand their Concupiſcences that hurry and impel them thereto. (q) Imbecillis eſt primò omnis affectus deinde ipſe ſe concitat, & vires dum procedit, parat. All the vicious Affections which abound in Man's Nature, if they have not at firſt, by cuſtomary Practice will grow to have a compulſory force, and they that are under ſuch a compulſory force, cannot be Freemen, but are neceſſarily Slaves. For in the uſual Notion Liber eſt, qui vivit ut vult, and according to the definition in Plato's Works ἐλεύθερον τὸ ἄρχον αὑτοῦ, that is Free, which governeth, ordereth and diſpoſeth of it ſelf: But he that is conſtrained againſt his own mind and liking, to act ad nutum alterius, is a Slave.

IV. Whence the Religioniſt whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, proveth himſelf, to be a Slave of Sin. V. 15. For that which I do, I allow not: For what I would, that do I not, but what I hate, that do I. This Argument implieth, that in a Law-religioniſt there is a διπλόη, duplicity of Nature; a Mind Rational and Religious, which approveth the Law of Righteouſneſs (if I then do that which I would not, I conſent unto the Law, that it is Good) V. 15. and an inferiour ſenſitive Nature full of evil Concupiſcences, which hath the Rule and Maſtery of the Man, and is Lord of his Practice. v. 17. Now then it is no more I that do it, but Sin that dwelleth in me. Becauſe the Man is not at his own diſpoſe, therefore he argueth, it is no more I that do it (as being αὐτεξούσιος, at mine own diſpoſe, and as doing it αὐτομάτως, of mine own accord without being impell'd and compell'd thereto:) But indwelling Sin doeth it, as being Lord and Maſter of me and my Practice; therefore I am a Slave. And this further appeareth from what I find in my ſelf a Nature contrariant and contra-nitent to Good. v. 18. For I know, that in me (that is in my Fleſh) dwelleth no good thing (the Fleſh is full of evil Concupiſcence) the ſenſe of which words is exactly expreſs'd by Ariſtotle. Φαίνεται δὲ ἐν αὐτοῖς ϗ ἄλλο τι παρὰ τὸν λόγον πεφυκὸς, ὃ μάχεται τε ϗ ἀντιτείνει τῷ λόγῳ, it appeareth, that in Men beſides Reaſon there is ſomewhat elſe innate, which reſiſteth and is contra-nitent to Reaſon. Which contrariant Nature is of prevalent Power; for to Will is preſent with me (to have a Mind (r) and Velleity to good) but how to perform that which is good I find not. (I am forcibly carry'd off by it from the good which I like, and by the ὁρμὴ of it impell'd to the evil which I diſlike and condemn) for the good that I would I do not: But the evil which I would not, that I do (v. 19.) from whence it appeareth, that I am in Servitude. If Sin reigneth, it is in the State of a King, which is a State of prowefs and victorious Power, and for this reaſon it is called a Law and the Law in the Members, becauſe in unregenerate Mankind it ruleth and commandeth, as a Law doth. From which Notion of a Law this Law-religioniſt whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, argueth, that he is in Servitude, v. 21. I find then a Law (that which ruleth and commandeth me) that when I would do good, evil is preſent with me. His Servitude alſo appeareth from the Notion of Captivity. For Captivity is Servitude, into which Men are forcibly carry'd by their Conquerours in War. If this Religioniſt therefore whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, findeth in himſelf two Natures at War one with another, if he findeth, that the Divine Law is the Law of the Mind, which therefore harmonizeth, liketh and is pleas'd with the Divine Law (I delight in the Law of God after the inward Man, v. 22.) and if he findeth alſo another Law in his Members (in the Fleſh) warring againſt the Law of his Mind, prevailing, conquering and bringing him into captivity to the Law of Sin which is in his Members, (v. 23.) he is neceſſarily in Servitude under the Reign and Domination of Sin. Which in unregenerate Mankind (that are in the Chains and Fetters of their Corruptions) prevaileth againſt Prudence, Diſcretion and common Reaſon (which is born down and ſilenc'd by it) againſt the Sence of common Honeſty and Juſtice, againſt their Knowledge, Convictions, Velleities, Reſolutions, againſt the Light of the Law and the Sence of Conſcience, and hurrieth them to the moſt outragious Enormities.

(g) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 2303.

(h) Alcin. de Doct. Plat. c. 24. Hierocl. in aur. Car. p. 7. Plutarch. de virt. mor. p. 446. Salmaſ. in Epictet. p 55, 56. Grot. Not. in Rom. 7. 15. Oſor. de Nobil. Chriſt. l. 1. p. 413. Simplic. in Epict. c. 10, 11.

(i) Alcin. ſupr. Galen. l. 5. de Dogm. Hippocr. & Plat. Julian. Orat. in Sol.

(k) Plotin. En. 3. l. 1. c. 9. & En. 4. l. 4. c. 17.

(l) Hierocl. ſupr. p. 77.

(m) Salmaſ. ſupr.

(n) Simplic. ſupr. c. 10, 11, 60.

(o) Salmaſ. ſupr.

(p) Gat. Not. in Ant. p. 224, 299, 375.

(q) Sen. Ep. 116.

(r) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3 Par. 3. Theſ. 7.

ties. (s) If any conſidereth the innate Motion of the Fleſh to the moſt abſurd Paſſions (he will acknowledge that) good dwelleth not in us; for it compelleth the Mind of Man, to will and chuſe inconſiderately, to do what is not lawful, and that which is free it dareth to ſubject to the yoke of Servitude, equally to the Captives. Its intolerable reſiſtence and contranitence the moſt wiſe Paul ſheweth, when he ſaith; for I delight in the Law of God after the inward Man: But I ſee another Law warring againſt the Law of my Mind and bringing me into Captivity to the Law of Sin. The Law-religioniſt whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, having thus demonſtrated his own Servitude of Condition, maketh a tragical Exclamation of it, and crieth out for a Liberator, v. 24. O wretched Man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? To which the Apoſtle ſpeaking as a Chriſtian Theologer maketh Anſwer, I thank God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Which is to ſay, a Liberator we have, thanks be to God, even Chriſt Jeſus. Having thus pointed at Man's Liberation, he ſubjoineth an Epilogue to his Diſcourſe of Man's Servitude, and maketh this ſummary Recapitulation of it, v. 25. So then with the Mind I my ſelf ſerve the Law of God; but with the fleſh the Law of Sin. That is, with the Mind which is I my ſelf (αὐτὸς ὁ ἄνθρωπος) I am a Religioniſt of the Law, conſenting to it and being pleas'd with it: But with the Fleſh as carrying me Captive I ſerve the Law of Sin. This is my Servitude of Condition, who am ſold under Sin, (t) as the Children of the firſt Adam are ſaid to be venundati ſub peccato. That Religioniſt therefore whom the Apoſtle perſonateth, and deſcribeth, is an unregenerate Law-religioniſt (u) as the moſt and beſt of the ancient Writers of the Church have expounded the Apoſtle, and ſo the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe is expounded (w) in the late Theſes Salmurienſes. The Scope of the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe inferreth the truth of this Expoſition; for he is ſhewing the Judaical Believers their happy Freedom from the Law, Rom. 7. 1--4. It is pertinent therefore to his deſign, to ſhew the miſerable State of Servitude, which a Law-religioniſt is in: But to ſhew, that a regenerate Chriſtian is ſadly incumbred with Sin and in a miſerable plight, is contrary to his Deſign and Scope.

V. Servitude to indwelling Sin is always addictitious (the Servants of Sin addict themſelves, to fulfill τὰ θελήματα τῆς σαρκός, the Wills of the Fleſh, and yield themſelves to obey and gratifie its promptings, ſuggeſtions and inclinations) but this addictitious Servitude is ſometimes the affectively addictitious, ſometimes the affectively captivating, and ſometimes the compulſorily captivating. (x) They that hate Piety and love the atheous kind of Life, their Vices and the Pleaſures of them, that are Proud and Worldly, Drunkards and Whoremongers, and they love to be ſo, and would be ſo (that are like the Slave in Exodus, who loveth his Maſter and will not go out free) their ſervitude to Sin, becauſe it is lik'd and affected, is affectively addictitious. And if their vicious Appetites, Affections and Inclinations are ſtrong and vehement, it is affectively captivating. (y) Which is one conſequent of Mens immerſing themſelves in ſenſual Delights and Pleaſures, the Inclinations in their Nature towards them by cuſtom become rampant, ſtrong and vehement, radicated, confirm'd and ſettled; and as the practice of their Vices becometh eaſie and pleaſant to them, ſo to be reſtrain'd from them, is a mighty pain; and they are ſo rapturouſly carry'd away with them, that they cannot live without them, nor wean themſelves from them, although they know, that they will ſhortly be their ruin. If habituated Drunkards have not their fill of Drink, they find themſelves intolerably off the Hooks, and they are ſo marvellouſly captivated and carry'd away with the love of their Vice, that à ſe impetrare non poſſunt, they cannot find in their Heart to bid adieu to their brave Delight, their royal Repaſt, nor to forbear their Vice, reſiſt it, or uſe means againſt it, but their Voice is that in Jotham's Parable, non poſſum relinquere vinum meum, it is their All, their Paradiſe and their Heaven. How madly are they tranſported with the love of Drink, that will drink out their Eyes with a valeat lumen amicum, Eyes if you will not drink, you are no Eyes for me? But there is a ſervitude to Sin, which is compulſorily captivating. Not as if any Man could be compell'd to Sin wholly againſt his Will; for (as one ſaith) what is Evil? It is that which no Man committeth againſt his Will. But actual Sin is from a twofold Original: The Luſt of Man ſuggeſting, tempting, inclining, irritating, impelling, and the Will of Man conſenting. If the Will conſenteth not, the Sin cannot be done: But uſually the Luſts of Men are of ſuch Power and Prevalency, that they find themſelves under a ſort of force and urgent neceſſity to gratifie them notwithſtanding their Velleities to the contrary (the Fleſh will have no nay) and this compulſory ſort of Servitude was the State of that Religioniſt, whom S. Paul perſonateth and deſcribeth. The voice of the Incontinent (ſo called by the Philoſophers) is, fugienda petimus, ſed mei non ſum potens. I underſtand the Evils that I am about to commit, but my Paſſion or Appetite overcometh my Reaſon, which obſcurely diſcerneth what ought to be done, and feebly conflicteth for it.

VI. Servitude to Sin is good Senſe, but ſuch is not an ignoble Freedom, an unſervile Servitude. Yet ſuch there are amongſt the affectively addictitious to the ſervitude of Sin, that (like the Turks) ſtrive who ſhall be the greateſt Slaves, that affect to be Gallants in Wickedneſs, and count a doleful ſlavery their bravery. For a doleful ſlavery it is, to ſerve thoſe vicious Appetites and Affections, that are mad Maſters, and fill the Souls and Lives of Men with Madneſs; that are the baſeſt of Maſters and put their Servants upon doing the vileſt things (as Slaves were put to the vileſt and moſt painful Drudgeries) that over-work their Slaves to the conſuming the health and ſtrength of their Bodies and the vigour of their Minds in their Service, and take as little care of them (z) as the Law-courts amongſt the Jews took of their Slaves (their Maſters exacted of them all their Work with all ſeverity, but what became of them, whether they periſh'd by Cold or Famine, their Law-courts regarded not;) Men cannot gratifie them when they would, their Luſts and Paſſions frequently meet with croſſes and diſappointments (and then they fill them with torture and diſquiet) but if they ſhould have all manner of accommodations and opportunities, to gratifie them, yet they could never ſatisfie them, the more they gratifie them, they rage the more, and become more violent and tempeſtuous. They enlarge their deſire as Hell, and are as Death and cannot be ſatisfied. Hab. 2. 5. They raiſe troubleſome and painful Agitations in the Soul; where they govern (deſtructive to good Order and Government) they are morbi animi, and make a vitiated Nature, every vicious Affection is a loathſome, defiling and diſturbing Diſeaſe, a troubleſom and painful Diſtemper (Pride is as a Tympany, Luſt is like a Fever, Avarice is as a Dropſie, Envy is like a Conſumption, and in all the hating hurting Paſſions there is Anguiſh and Inquietude) to ſerve them therefore, is to ſerve very troubleſome uneaſie Maſters. And they are a multitude of Maſters, like many Tyrants in one City, which cauſe broils and tumults, στασιάζουσι, they raiſe Sedition, a Civil War, and make a jarring tumultuous Kingdom in all Men, in whom they bear ſway, by their thwarting one another (the ſpending Vices of Pride and Voluptuouſneſs, commanding one thing and Covetouſneſs the contrary) they that ſerve them, ſerve many Maſters, that cannot be all pleas'd at once; and they muſt ſerve them againſt their Judgment and Conſcience, which is an abominable Servitude. (a) For a Free-man is one, with whom nothing hath ſo much ſway as his own Judgment. If the Slaves of Sin do not gratifie their Luſts and Paſſions, they will torment them; and if they do gratifie them, their Conſcience will torment them, they wound it and it woundeth them again, and whippeth and laſheth them (as the Roman Lords did in terga & cervices ſævire, imprint Marks and Characters upon the Backs of their Slaves by their ſevere beating them) uſually they are haunted with ſerviles trepidationes (as Arnobius ſpeaketh) ſlaviſh Fears, Horrours and Preſages, and filled with Shame and Anguiſh, which is a doleful Servitutude. (b) Non eſt omnis metus ſervitus? A doleful Servitude it is, to live under an evil Conſcience that occultum flagellum, ſecret Whip wherewith the Slaves of Sin are chaſtis'd (and which maketh them of all Slaves the moſt miſerable) to be troubled with intemperate Longings and unruly Deſires after unwholeſome and loathſome things (like Women troubled with the Pica) to be led away with divers Luſts and perpetually tantaliz'd by them; to be ridden by the Witch (as Plato ſpeaketh of the Soul (c) γοητευομένη ὑπὸ τοῦ σώματος, bewitch'd by the Body) to be inchanted and captivated by fleſhly Vanities, wherein they promiſe themſelves a Paradiſe, but find a Purgatory. Their ſenſual Exceſſes are every way Abaddons and Apollyons, their Pleaſures are not the valuable and deſirable Pleaſures (but the phantaſtic fooleries and gulleries of a Moment and a γλυκύπικρος ἡδονὴ, bitter-ſweet Pleaſure) they ſlight that great Intereſt which they ſhould ſerve, and ſerve that which they ſhould ſubdue, and the reward which they muſt have for their Service at the long run, is to be put to Death. Rom. 6. 16.

(s) Ἐι γὰρ δή τις ἕλοιτο λεπτῶς καταθρεῖν τὸ τῆς σαρκὸς ἔμφυτον κίνημα, τὸ πρός γε ῥώμη τῶν παθῶν ἐκπτώτατα, ἐκ εἰκῆ ἐν ἡμῖν τὸ ἀγαθόν. Καταβιβάζεται γὰρ τὸν νοῦν ἀνθρώπινον ἐπί γε τὸ δεῖν καὶ τοῦτο ἀκατασκέπτως ἐλέσθαι δρᾶν ἃ μὴ θέμις. καὶ τοῖς δορυκτήτοις ἐν ἴσῳ δουλείας ὑπάγειν ζυγῷ, κατατολμᾷ τὸν ἐλεύθερον. Ἀφόρητον δὲ τὴν ἀντίστασιν καὶ Παῦλος ὁ πάνσοφος ἀποφαίνει λέγων, συνήδομαι, &c. S Cyr. c. Jul. l. 3. p. 91.

——ſi poſſem, ſanior eſſem.
Sed trahit invitam nova vis: aliudque Cupido
Mens aliud ſuadet.
Ovid 7. Met.

(t) Fulgent. de incarn. & Gr. Chriſt. c. 13. S. Ambroſ. com. in Rom. 7.

(u) Voſſ. hiſt. l. 2. Par. 1. p. 142.

(w) Par. 2. Theſ. de ſpirit. ſervitut.

(x) Vitia noſtra quia amamus defendimus. Sen. Ep 117.

(y) Pars hominum vitiis gaudet conſtanter & urget propoſitum. Horat. Ser. l. 2. Sat. 7. Voluptatibus ſe mergunt, quibus in conſuetudinem adductis carere non poſſunt: Et ob hoc miſerrimi ſunt, quod eo proveniunt, ut illis quæ ſupervacua fuerant, facta ſint neceſſaria; ſerviunt itaque voluptatibus, non fruuntur: Et mala ſua, quod malorum ultimum eſt, amant. Sen. Ep. 39.

(z) Selden. de J. Nat. & G. l. 6. c. 8.

VII. As bad a Service as Servitude to Sin is, yet (d) every Soul of Man hath fallen under the common Enemies malign yoke of Servitude, and having loſt the liberty, which ſhe received from her Creator, ſhe was carry'd into captivity by Sin. Such is the State of Mankind antecedently to their Liberation: And beſides this their Servitude to inherent Sin they are in a State of adherent Servitude to Sin, which is analogous to civil Servitude. For Mankind under the Domination of Sin are as Slaves in a Commonwealth, that are look'd upon as Aliens, no Citizens, as vile infamous Miſcreants, filthy and ſordid Varlets, that have no Rights, are Owners of no Eſtate, and are reputed in Law as dead Men. Till they have obtain'd their Freedom, they are not Fellow-citizens with the Saints, or of the Houſhold of God, but are Strangers and Foreigners. And as the Talmudiſts ſay (e) Servi & ancillæ non inclamant, neque Abba Pater, neneque Imma Mater: So Mankind in their Servitude under Sin are not of the divine Kindred and Alliance, they have no right to the Favour of God, to claim Kindred with him, to have Acceſs to him, to have him for their Father; no right in the Family, nor right to the Inheritance, nor can they be Freeholders or Owners of a bleſſed Eſtate in the Kingdom of God. The Immunities, Rights and Priviledges of his Saints and Servants (which are the happy Eſtate of Spiritual Freedom) belong not to the Servants of Sin. A Civil-religious Citizenſhip, Sonſhip and Inheritance is competible to this mundane Family: But they are ſo far from enjoying the Spiritual-religious Priviledges, Liberties and Immunities of the Regenerate and Divine Family, that they are ſubjected to all the contrary Penalties (which is their Servitude;) for they are not exempted and priviledg'd from the Reputation of Criminals, from the Divine Wrath, the Domination of Satan and of Death, but theſe Penal Evils are ſettled upon them, and they are ſubjected to Condemnation, to Impriſonment, to Puniſhment eternal, which is a far worſe Thraldom and Servitude of Condition, than to be ſubjected to the Whip and the Croſs, and ſuch like baſe and hard Puniſhments of common Slaves.

(a) Cic. Paradox.

(b) Cic. ibid.

(c) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 11. c. 27.

(d) Πᾶσα ἀνθρωπίνη ψυχὴ ὑπέκυψεν τῷ πονηρῷ τῆς δουλείας ζυγῷ τοῦ κοινοῦ πάντων ἐχθροῦ, καὶ τὴν παρὰ τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἀφαιρεθεῖσα, αἰχμάλωτος ἤχθη διὰ τῆς ἁμαρτίας. S. Baſil. Hom. in Pſal. 48. p. 279.

Eph. 2. 19.

(e) Lud. de Dieu in Rom. 8. 15.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

Sect. 1. Of the Nature and Origin of the Religion of Saving Grace, which is here conſidered as Initial. Of the Notion of Grace. Of the Divine Predeſtination. How much of certainty there is in the Perſonal Predeſtination. Why this Religion is called the Religion of Saving Grace. An Idea of it and of Juſtification. Sect. 2. Of God's Believers, the Nature and Nobleneſs of their juſtifying Faith, and the eminent Ingredients thereof. Sect. 3. Of the Religion of Holy Men of the Old Teſtament-times and how far they were Chriſtians. Sect. 4. Of the Ante-moſaical Inſtitutions of Religion, Adamical, Noachical, Abrahamical. Sect. 5. Of the Moſaical Inſtitution as Civil-religious, as the Divine Moral Law, as the Doctrine of true Religion and Righteouſneſs, and as a Prophetic-typical Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. Of the Types of it, the Political-hiſtorical, the Promiſſory, the Perſonal-hiſtorical, the Characteriſtical and the Ceremonial.

SECTION I.

Of the Nature and Origin of the Religion of Saving Grace, which is here conſidered as initially introduc'd.

I. THE Law of Nature had from the beginning of the World and antecedently to the times of Chriſtianity theſe two Concomitants, the initial Religion of Saving Grace and the Religion of initial or conſummate Judaiſm, which we will conjoin in conſideration, beginning with the initial Religion of Saving Grace. Grace that is the Name of the Chriſtian Religion, is a term of common Language and of ambiguous Sence. Primarily it ſignifieth Amiableneſs, Gracefulneſs, Ornamentalneſs. As Jam. 1. 11. The grace of the faſhion of it periſheth. So Prov. 1. 9. and 3. 22. and 4. 9. and 22. 11. Pſal. 45. 3. Hence the graceful quality of Gratitude is called Grace. (f) Gratiam habemus animo & voluntate. And hence the Divine Virtues that are of Kind beyond common Nature and the oppoſites to Sin and Vice, are uſually amongſt Chriſtians called Grace and Graces. Theſe are Divine Grace but far from being the whole of that Divine Grace, which the diſtinctive Name of the Chriſtian Religion denoteth. The ſenſe whereof may be thus illuſtrated.

(1.) In a large and lax acceptation Grace is the ſame with Favour and Kindneſs; for this (with the effect of it) is uſually called Grace, (g) as when one is ſaid habere gratiam regis, to have the King's Favour. God gave Joſeph Grace in the ſight of the keeper of the Priſon, ſo it is in the Hebrew, Gen. 39. 21. But in our Tranſlation it is, God gave him Favour in the ſight of the keeper of the Priſon. The wiſe Man's ſaying, God giveth Grace to the lowly, Interpreters thus expound. (h) He giveth him favour amongſt Men and maketh them gracious to him. Grace is the ſame with Favour, Kindneſs (Benevolence) in thoſe uſual Scripture-phraſes of finding Grace, obtaining Grace, giving Grace in the Eyes of others; in Holy Mens Prayers that God would be Gracious, and in their thankful Acknowledgments, that God hath dealt Graciouſly with them. In profane Writers Grace is of the ſame Notion. (i) Law and Juſtice we are born to uſe towards Men only (ſaith Plutarch) εὐεργεσίας δὲ ϗ χάριτας, but Beneficences and Graces we muſt exerciſe even towards Brute Animals. Epicurus by denying Providence is ſaid (k) to bereave the Deity of all Grace. Of a rigorous Law-courſe that excludeth Favour and Kindneſs. Cicero ſaith (l) it excludeth Grace. (m) The Kindneſs which a Benefactor beginneth, and a Beneficiary returneth, is called Grace. To them that ask, what is the Principle of the Creation (the Cauſe of making the World?) The anſwer is in (n) Philo's Language, ὅτι ἀγαθότης ϗ χάρις τȣ͂ θεȣ͂, the Goodneſs and Grace of God. That Exclamation in the Prophet Zechariah, Grace, Grace unto it, is thus expounded by Vatablus, multus favor Dei & hominum.

(2.) In a narrower Acceptation gratuitous Favour and Kindneſs only (that which is Free and not due Debt) is Grace. (o) Χάρις, Grace, is by Ariſtotle reckon'd amongſt the Paſſions of the Mind (as Mercy is alſo, to which Grace is near of Kin) and according to this Philoſopher it denoteth ſuch Favour towards an indigent Perſon, as to do him a kindneſs, to gratifie him. He ſeemeth by Grace to underſtand gratuitous and free Favour (that is not due Debt) agreeably to the Apoſtle, who counteth a Benefit that is Debt repugnant to Grace. Rom. 4. 4. So far therefore as the Human Merits imply Debt, ſo far they imply a repugnance to Grace; and ſo far Grace is Favour and Kindneſs unmerited and to the undeſerving. As it is Favour and Kindneſs, it is oppoſite to Wrath; and as it is Free and Gratuitous, it is oppoſite to what is Law-juſtice; for what is matter of Law and Juſtice is Debt, not Grace. In a Kingdom ſuch Benefits as a Man hath by the Grace of the Sovereign, he hath not originally by Law-juſtice, and ſuch Grace of the Sovereign reſembleth Divine Grace. (p) Hoc eſt enim proprium numinum, liberales venias & conceſſiones habere gratuitas. An Act of Pardon is ſo eximious an Act of Grace, that a Father appropriateth the Name to it, (q) Grace is not done, but where offence is. The Fathers ſo far follow the Apoſtle, they look upon Grace as eſſentially Gratuitous, and therefore ſay (r) that which is Debt is not Grace; for Grace is given, Debt is pay'd, Grace therefore is given to the unworthy. But although thus far they follow the Apoſtle, yet ſome-

(f) Martin. Lex. in voce Gratia.

(g) J. Driedo de Grat. & lib. arb. l. 1. c. 2.

(h) Dabit gratiam, i. e. illis apud homines gratiam conciliet. Efficiet ut homines eis faveant atque benefaciant: Seu reddet eos gratioſos. Sic accipitur iſta phraſis. Exod. 3. 21. & 11. 3. & 12. 36. Hinc מצא חן invenit gratiam, Exod. 33. 12. Et נשא חן gratiam tulit. Eſth. 2. 15, 17. Et נתן חן dedit gratiam, Exod. 3. 21. & 12. 36. Et חן gratia pro exiſtimatione, Eccl. 9. 11. Sic & χάρις, Luc. 2. 52. Et κεχαριτωμένη gratioſiſſimè habita. Luc. 1. 28. Mercer. & Piſcat. in loc. Gatak. Cinn. c. 8.

(i) Plutarch. in Caton. Major.

(k) Diis immortalibus opem & gratiam ſuſtulit. Si maximè talis eſt Deus, ut nullâ gratiâ nullâ hominum caritate teneatur, valeat. Cic. de N. D. l. 1.

(l) Via juris eſt quibuſdam in rebus, ut nihil ſit loci gratiæ. Cic. Ep. l. 1. ad Qu. fratr. Ep. 2.

(m) Beneficus eſt qui gratiam cœperit, debitor qui retulerit. S. Ambroſ. in Luc. 6.

(n) Philo de Alleg. l. 2.

(o) Voſſ. Inſtit. or. l. 2. c. 9.

(p) Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 7. p. 216.

(q) Nec gratia enim fit niſi offenſæ. Tertull. c. Marcion. l. 5. c. 5.

(r) Si debitum eſt, gratia non eſt: Gratia quippe donatur, debitum redditur. Gratia ergo donatur indignis. S. Aug. ap. Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. Par. 2. Antitheſ. 12.

times they ſpeak diſſonantly from his ſenſe of Grace, and ſymbolize with Philo in aſſigning the cauſe of the Creation. For S. Hierom ſaith, (s) It was of the Grace of God, that Man was created. S. Auſtin ſaith, (t) Let us mind the Grace of God, not only that whereby he made us, but that whereby he re-made us. S. Auſtin and the African Fathers alledge a reaſon, to juſtifie this account of the cauſe of the Creation, (u) it may well be called Grace, becauſe it was gratuitous goodneſs, without the merits of any antecedent works. But thus to argue, is to alledge a Scriptural reaſon for ſpeaking diſſonantly from the Holy Scriptures (for theſe Fathers rightly affirm againſt Pelagius, that the benefit of Creation is never called Grace either in the Old or New Teſtament) and it is to alledge an Apoſtolical reaſon for receding from the Apoſtle's Senſe. For common parental Nature and Providence (whence Man hath his Creation) is not Grace in the Apoſtle's Senſe.

(3.) In the ſtricteſt acceptation no other gratuitous Favour but ſuch as tranſcendeth the road and courſe of Nature (as well as Law) is Grace. (c) Surmounting the line and level of Nature it belongeth to the Supernaturals, and theſe are the things that Grace denoteth. So it ſignifieth in the Greek Fathers; as Severianus ſaith of the Euchariſt, that it doth χάριτι σώζειν ϗ ὐ φύσει, ſave by Grace and not by Nature: as our Liturgy ſaith of Baptiſm; being by nature born in Sin and the Children of Wrath, we are hereby made the Children of Grace. Grant to this Child that thing which by nature he cannot have. (s) The Pelagians were put to their ſhifts, when the Fathers clearly prov'd, that the Scripture doth not ſpeak touching any natural Grace, but that which ſurmounteth the powers of nature: ſuch as S. Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh of, when he ſaith of Manna, ἤργει ἡ φύσις ϗ εἰργάζετο ἡ χάρις, Nature was inactive, Grace operated. The Grace of the New Teſtament (the Grace of Chriſt, the Grace of the Holy Spirit, the Grace of Regeneration or of the Chriſtian Sacraments involveth in it the Notion of Supernatural, as being (t) that Grace whereby we are Chriſtians, of which the Evangeliſt ſaith, Grace and Truth came by Jeſus Chriſt. For that Grace which S. Paul commendeth, is not any Grace, whereby we are made Men or Rationals, but that whereby we are regenerate in Chriſt. (u) The Schoolmen therefore, although they take Grace in ſo large an acceptation, that with them the benefits of Creation and Conſervation are ſaid to be of Grace, yet they ſay, That Grace in the moſt proper acceptation ſignifieth thoſe Gifts and Benefits exhibited to us by Chriſt, that are beyond all that is owing to Nature. They underſtand by Grace donum gratuitum ſupernaturale, a gratuitous ſupernatural Benefit, which they count Grace in the more ſpecial acceptation properly Theological. Grace in this acceptation they diſtribute into Gratia gratum faciens, whereby they mean the Grace of Sanctification; and Gratia gratis data, whereby they mean the Gifts for Edification, which are uſually contradiſtinguiſh'd to Saving Grace. But Saving Grace muſt not be confin'd to the Grace of Sanctification. The Goſpel-religion is the Religion of Grace (the Grace of God, the Word of his Grace, the Covenant of Grace, are the uſual Names of it) which Grace of it muſt be conſider'd, not only as contradiſtinct to Rigour, Severity and Wrath, to due Debt, and to Law-juſtice, and as involving in it the Notion of Supernatural, but as involving in it alſo the Notion of Saving; for the Grace of it is (w) Salvans gratia, Saving Grace, Eph. 2. 5. 1 Tim. 1. 9. This therefore is the true Name of the Goſpel or the Chriſtian Religion, The Religion of Saving Grace. It is the Saving Grace of the Sovereign with the Effects of it. A Religion τεθηλυῖα χάριτι, rich and flowring with Grace (as J. Mart. ſpeaketh) which ſpeaketh it of ineffable Pulchritude and Precioſity. Quid enim gratiæ nomine gratius? quid pulchrius? quid ſuavius? The Name of the Chriſtian Religion is as an Ointment poured forth.

II. Grace is not only oppos'd to Nature, as Supernatural is oppos'd to Natural, but as θέσις, poſitive Inſtitution, is oppos'd to φύσις, Nature. For the ineſtimable benefits of the Chriſtian Religion that iſſue from Grace, iſſue alſo from poſitive Inſtitution. They iſſue from Grace, Rom. 4. 16. and 5. 17, 20, 21. Eph. 1. 7. and 2. 5. 2 Theſſ. 2. 16. 2 Tim. 1. 9. Tit. 3. 7. They iſſue alſo from poſitive Inſtitution, from the ſole Will of God, his Purpoſe, Good Pleaſure and the Counſel of his Will, Luk. 12. 32. Eph. 1. 5, 9, 11. Jam. 1. 18. The Notion of Grace therefore in the Senſe of the New Teſtament implieth in it poſitive Inſtitution; which ſheweth, that the Origin of this Religion of Saving Grace is from the Divine Predeſtination (the fore-deſignation of God) the Object or Matter whereof muſt be conſider'd both as real and as perſonal. The real Object of the Divine Predeſtination is the Chriſtian Religion, as it is the Religion of Saving Grace. For God foreſeeing the lapſe of Men and Angels was pleaſed from everlaſting (before the World or before Time) to predeſtinate and foredeſign this Religion of Saving Grace, with deſign to chriſtianize and ſave Mankind. This account we have from the Holy Scriptures of the Divine Predeſtination, which made no noiſe in the Church till the times of Pelagius, and in thoſe times (when it was hotly agitated) and ever ſince thoſe times it is a perſonal Predeſtination, that the Thoughts and Diſcourſes of Men have been buſied about, and little regard hath been had to the real Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion. But this Predeſtination is of high regard with the Holy Writers, their devout Minds contemplate the Predeſtination of the Saviour of the World, and derive the origin of his Saving Religion and of the mighty Priviledges and Felicities which his People enjoy, from the Divine Predeſtination. For of the Saviour of the World they affirm, 1 Pet. 1. 20. Who verily was fore-ordain'd before the Foundation of the World. Apoc. 13. 8. Saints and Chriſtians were before the Foundation of the World written in the Book of Life of the Lamb ſlain; which ſpeaketh them his Subjects and him the Imperial Head of them that are predeſtinated to Life Eternal. God in his Preſcience and Predeſtination eximiouſly loved him before the Foundation of the World, Joh. 17. 24.

(s) Homo à principio conditionis ſuæ Deo utitur adjutore, cùm illius ſit gratia, quod creatus eſt. T. 3. Ep. 139.

(t) Attendamus gratiam Dei, non ſolum qua fecit nos, verum etiam qua refecit. In Pſal. 144.

(u) Meritò iſta gratia dici poteſt, quia non præcedentium aliquorum operum meritis, ſed gratuita Dei bonitate donata eſt. S. Aug. Ep. 95.

(r) Naturæ captum ac modum ſuperans, ad ea pertinet quæ ſupra naturam ſunt, & ſupernaturalia vocantur. Atque hæc propriè gratiæ vocabulo continentur. Petav. T. 1. l. 10. c. 18. S. 5, 6.

(s) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. par. 2. Theſ. 1. 5, 6.

(t) Ea gratia qua Chriſtiani ſumus. Hæc nempe eſt gratia, de qua per omnem locum loquuti ſunt Apoſtolici viri, commendantes gratiam Chriſti, de qua Joannis primo, Gratia & veritas per Jeſum Chriſtum facta eſt. Neque enim Paulus talem gratiam commendat, qua creati ſumus, ut homines eſſemus, aut rationales, induſtrioſi in rebus hujus ſeculi, ſed illam qua renati ſumus in Chriſto exuentes veterem hominem. J. Driedo de Gr. & lib. arb. l. 1. c. 2.

(u) Vaſqu. in 12æ. T. 2. Diſp. 185. c. 1. Aquin. 12æ. Qu. 111. Art. 1. Gonet. Clyp. T. 9. Tr. 7. p. 366. Gr. de Valent. T. 2. Diſp. 8. Qu. 1. punct. 1.

(w) S. Bernard. l. de Gr. & lib. arbitr.

17. 24. predeſtinated him to the Heavenly Kingdom-eſtate, the Glory which he had with God before the World was, Joh. 17. 5. and his Paſſion was by the Divine Predeſtination, the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, Act. 2. 23. and ch. 4. 28. The Jews ſay, (x) The Name of the Meſſiah was prepar'd before the Sun, and that the World was created for the Meſſiah. They ſuppoſe therefore, that the Meſſiah was predeſtinated before the World was. So the preaching of the Goſpel is call'd, the Commandment of the everlaſting God, Rom. 16. 26. to ſignifie, that it is no novel invention, but had its origin from the Counſel of his Will, and his Sovereign good pleaſure from everlaſting, and is a Myſtery that from the beginning of the World was hid in God, Eph. 3. 9. Hid from Ages and Generations, Col. 1. 26. Χρόνοις αἰωνίοις σεσιγημένον, kept ſecret in the times of the Ages of the World, Rom. 16. 25. and is nothing leſs than πρόθεσις τῶν αἰώνων, the purpoſe before all Ages, which he purpoſed in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, Eph. 3. 11. who hath ſaved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our Works, but according to his own Purpoſe and Grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus, πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before the times of the Ages of the World, 2 Tim. 1. 9. The truly Divine Predeſtination therefore was not a dark plot for the ruine of the ſinful World, but a contrivance and deſign of Sovereign Grace for their recovery; which conſider'd them under no better a Character than as altogether undeſerving and ill deſerving, yet purpos'd and deſign'd for them from everlaſting the Religion of Saving Grace, and in ſuch ſenſe (y) prædeſtinatio eſt gratiæ præparatio, as a Father defineth it. If the Divine Predeſtination is rightly ſaid, to be the preparation of Grace, it muſt be thought the preparation of Glory, and the everlaſting Kingdom may be ſaid, to have been prepar'd for Chriſt's People before the Foundation of the World: but this is not our Saviour's Senſe, nor the Phraſe that he uſeth, when he ſpeaketh of the preparation of it, Matth. 25. 34. For he doth not ſay, that it was prepar'd for them before, but from, the Foundation of the World. Which words manifeſtly relate to the Creation, and ſignifie, that in the Creation and Fabrication of the Univerſe a Kingdom was prepar'd, to be inherited and inhabited by the Children and Heirs of of God. But this predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion was (incluſively and comprehenſively) a Predeſtination of the everlaſting Kingdom and conſequently of Life Eternal to Chriſt's People. Accordingly, we become Chriſtians in hope of Eternal Life, which God that cannot lie promiſed (ἐπηγγείλατο, hath made a promiſe of) πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before the times of the Ages of the World, or before the World began. But hath in due time manifeſted his Word through preaching, Tit. 1. 2, 3. In which words of the Apoſtle the word ἐπηγγείλατο, hath made a promiſe of, is of a twofold meaning and acceptation. In one ſenſe (the uſual ſenſe of Speech) God did not make a promiſe of Eternal Life before the World began; for then no word was ſpoken, nor was there any exiſtent, to whom a promiſe could be made. Yet then in his predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion God made Eternal Life his Promiſe, the great and eminent promiſe of his Goſpel, and in ſuch ſenſe made a promiſe of it. He then promis'd it, ſo as to make it the great promittendum, and now in due time he hath manifeſted his word of promiſe. By the predeſtination of his Goſpel he hath predeſtinated Chriſt's Believers to be the People of God holy and beloved, the Children of God and the Heirs of his Inheritance. Whence the Apoſtle ſaith; He hath choſen us in him before the Foundation of the World: having predeſtinated us unto the adoption of Children by Jeſus Chriſt, in whom we have obtained an Inheritance, being predeſtinated according to the purpoſe of him, who worketh all things after the counſel of his own Will. They are therefore elect according to the foreknowledge of God (his Predeſtination or Predetermination) a choſen Generation.

(x) Grot. Not. in Joh. 17. 5. & in Heb. 1. 2.

(y) S. Aug. de Prædeſtin. Sanct. c. 10.

Eph. 1. 4, 5, 11.

1 Pet. 1. 2.

III. Much of a perſonal Predeſtination therefore is compris'd in the real Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion. For by virtue thereof the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus are predeſtinated to their Immunities and Priviledges (their Juſtification, Adoption and right to the Inheritance) and are in the ſtate of Salvation and Election (they are the elect or choſen People of God) Hypocrites and Unbelievers are predeſtinated to be depriv'd of thoſe Immunities and Priviledges, and to be ſubjected to the contrary Penalties, and are in the ſtate of Condemnation and Reprobation, that ſtate of Reprobation which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Know ye not your own ſelves, how that Chriſt Jeſus is in you, except ye be Reprobates? The conditionate predeſtination of ſome Perſons in particular to Eternal Happineſs, and of others to Eternal Miſery, is nothing elſe but the predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion complicated with the Divine Preſcience. Such is the Predeſtination which our Saviour ſpeaketh of according to S. Chryſoſtom's Fxpoſition of his words: Come ye bleſſed Children of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the World. (z) For before you were born, becauſe I knew, that you would be ſuch, theſe things were prepared for you by me. (a) Thoſe whom he foreknew, that they would be devout to him, thoſe he elected to receive the promis'd rewards. If the predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion is a Decree, to beſtow Eternal Happineſs upon all true Chriſtians (as ſuch) and if the Divine Preſcience diſcerneth, that certain particular Perſons in ſucceſſive Generations will become true Chriſtians, the Divine Underſtanding muſt neceſſarily diſcern, that by the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion Eternal Happineſs is ſufficiently decreed to thoſe particular Perſons: therefore it cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd, that any ſpecial or particular Decree is made, to beſtow Eternal Happineſs upon thoſe particular perſons as foreſeen true Chriſtians; but it muſt be ſuppos'd, that their conditionate predeſtination or election to Eternal Happineſs is only the predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion complicated with the Divine Preſcience. Of the ſame nature is the conditionate predeſtination of ſome particular perſons to the ſtate of Righteouſneſs, Adoption, Election (the ſaving Priviledges of the Chriſtian Religion) and the conditionate predeſtination of others to the contrary condition and to Eternal Miſery. From whence it followeth, that this conditionate predeſtination of particular perſons (which is ſaid to be the only predeſtination of particular perſons (b) acknowledg'd by the ancient Writers of the Church before S. Auſtin's time) ought not to be deny'd and exploded; and that it is not liable to thoſe Objections, which ſome have rais'd againſt it, (c) that it taketh away Humane Liberty and introduceth Fatal Neceſſity (that none can paſs out of the number of thoſe that are to be damned, into (z) S. Chryſoſt. in Gen. Hom. 51.

(a) S. Ambroſ. Com. in Rom. 8.

(b) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 6. Theſ. 16.

(c) Curcell. Inſtit. l. 6. c. 7.

the number of thoſe that are to be ſaved, or the contrary;) for the conditionate predeſtination of particular perſons is nothing elſe but the predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion complicated with the Divine Preſcience.

But beſides this Real Predeſtination and the Perſonal Predeſtination which it compriſeth, we muſt contemplate the Perſonal Predeſtination ſtrictly ſo called, which is a Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion, and which differeth as much from the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion, as the giving Men unto Chriſt differeth from the giving Chriſt unto Men. For as the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion implyeth a deſign of chriſtianizing and ſaving Mankind: ſo it is reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that in proſecution of this deſign many are abſolutely predeſtinated to the Chriſtian Religion, or (which is the ſame thing) that ſuch aids of Grace are abſolutely predeſtinated unto many, to chriſtianize them truly and ſavingly, as God foreſaw would be effectual. The Divine Predeſtination thus ſtated hath nothing in it of contrariety to thoſe grand Maxims of Chriſtianity, which were counted indiſputable in the eldertimes of the Church, (d) that God will have all Men to be ſaved (ſo far as is fit for him to will it) and that Chriſt gave himſelf a ranſom for all. But to theſe grand Maxims there is a grand Repugnance in S. Auſtin's Hypotheſis of Predeſtination, as it is repreſented in his own Writings. For he ſuppoſeth, (e) that by the fall of Adam Mankind are become a Maſs of Perdition, which God foreſeeing from everlaſting out of meer Mercy ſegregated ſome out of that Maſs, whom he determin'd to ſave, and to afford them ſuch aids of Grace, as ſhould effectually ſave them, leaving all the reſt in the Maſs of Perdition. Theſe he calleth the Reprobates and the former the Elect. His Hypotheſis as to the main of it did prevail in the Church becauſe of his great Authority: but his great followers in the Pelagian Controverſie mitigated the harſhneſs of it (acknowledging without tergiverſation or any perverſe mincing the matter the general good-will of God to Mankind, and that Chriſt's Blood was the redemption of the whole World) thus they repreſent his Hypotheſis otherwiſe than it ſeemeth to be repreſented in his own Writings, that God deſigning to ſave fallen Mankind, (f) abſolutely predeſtinated ſome to Eternal Life, contenting himſelf to bear a general good will to the reſt of Mankind, and to make ſuch neceſſary proviſion of Grace for them, that they might be ſaved, if they would, yet theſe univerſally periſh through their own fault. All that have a due reſpect for the many venerable and holy Perſons, that have entertain'd this Hypotheſis, will be eaſily perſuaded, that it is an Hypotheſis, which hath ſomething of conſiderable truth in it. And it will appear to be ſuch, if we conſider, that there are four Branches of the Divine Predeſtination, that are of great certainty and firmitude.

(d) Voſſ. ſupr. l. 7. par. 1. Theſ. 2. Petav. T. 1. l. 10. c. 4, 5. & *T.*4. l. 13. c. 1, &c.

(e) Ibid. c. 5.

(f) Ibid. c. 13.

IV. This firſt Branch of Divine Predeſtination is of great certainty; it is abſolutely predetermin'd (or predeſtinated) that Chriſt ſhould have a Church, as Marcellus ſaith, (g) τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν πάλαι προωρίσατο ὁ παντοκράτωρ θεός, Almighty God predeſtinated the Church of Old. The Predictions in Scripture touching the Seed of Abraham according to the Fleſh do not only declare the Divine Preſcience, but they are an abſolute Decree and Determination, that he ſhould have a numerous Progeny according to the Fleſh. There was therefore an abſolute Decree and Determination, that he ſhould be the Father of many Nations, and have a numerous Progeny according to the Spirit, and that in his Seed all the Nations of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed, that Chriſt's coming ſhould not be fruſtaneous, but that he ſhould ſee of the travel of his Soul and be ſatisfied; that a Seed ſhould ſerve him; that the utmoſt ends of the Earth ſhould be given him for his Poſſeſſion; that he ſhould have dominion from Sea to Sea, and from the River unto the Ends of the Earth; that the Rod of his Strength ſhould be ſent out of Sion, and he ſhould rule in the midſt of his Enemies, that Dominion and Glory and a Kingdom ſhould be given him, and that all People, Nations and Languages ſhould ſerve him. If theſe Divine Predictions are a declaring the Decree, Pſal. 2. 7. the Exiſtence of the Chriſtian Church is abſolutely decreed and determined and in ſuch ſenſe predeſtinated. (h) And if a Divine Fate muſt be acknowledg'd in the erection of Mundane Empires and Monarchies, ſhall not a Divine Fate (or Decree) be ſuppos'd in the erection of the Chriſtian Empire, which is ſaid to be ſet up by the God of Heaven? Dan. 2. 44. (i) certainly thoſe Chriſtians eſpecially of the firſt times becauſe of the ſudden and eximious Energy of the Spirit may be ſaid, to have been (as it were) drawn by force, which Origen alſo affirmeth of ſome of his own time. Beſides that eminent Inſtance of S. Paul ſome other Inſtances may be given from the Martyrology; as of two Mimicks, the one under Dioclesian, the other under Julian, who imitating the Chriſtian Myſteries by way of mockery, were on a ſudden chang'd and profeſs'd themſelves Chriſtians. The miraculous Converſions that were in the primitive times, the miraculous Gifts that the Church was then filled with, the irreſiſtible Wiſdom and Power of Speech and invincible Fortitude which the Planters of Chriſtianity were then furniſh'd with, the mighty difficulties which Chriſtianity grappled with and vanquiſh'd at its firſt riſing, the marvellous ſucceſs of the Goſpel and the means of effecting it, are a manifeſt demonſtration, that it was the Decree of Heaven, that the Chriſtian Empire ſhould be erected notwithſtanding all Oppoſition. Nor can it reaſonably be doubted, but that the conſervation, propagation and continuance of the Chriſtian Church is abſolutely decreed; for the Gates of Hades ſhall not prevail againſt it. And what rational Man can believe, that God did predeſtinate his Son, to be the great Shepherd, the heavenly Bridegroom, the holy imperial Head, yet did not predeſtinate him any Sheep, not any Flock, not any Spouſe, not any Body, not a Church which is his fulneſs (as conſtituting him whole and intire in his relative and political Capacity)? Eph. 1. 23. This abſolute Predeſtination of the Church (which neceſſarily conſiſteth of true Chriſtians) plainly inferreth the abſolute Predeſtination of ſome perſons in ſome parts of the World to true and ſaving Chriſtianity, which is commonly called Predeſtination to Grace.

(g) Ibid. l. 11. c. 13.

(h) Dr. Jackſon of the Divine Eſſ. and Attr. par. 2. c. 25.

(i) Certè illi, præcipuè primorum temporum Chriſtiani, ob vim ſubitam atque eximiam Spiritus dici poſſunt quaſi vi pertracti: quod & de quibuſdam ſui ævi affirmat Origenes. Exempla, præter illud Pauli nobile, dari poſſunt ex Martyrologio nonnulla, ut de Mimis duobus qui, cum Chriſtiana myſteria per ludibrium imitarentur, ſub Diocletiano alter, alter verò ſub Juliano, ſubitò mutati ac Chriſtianos ſe profeſſi ſunt. Grot. Not. in Luk. 14. 23.

V. This ſecond Branch of Divine Predeſtination is of great certainty, The abſolute Predeſtination of the Gentiles to the Chriſtian Religion and to be the genuine People or Church of God. For the Predeſtination which the Apoſtle hath reſpect to in his Ninth to the Romans, is not meerly the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion (as many learned Men ſuppoſe) but is alſo the Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion. As appeareth,

(1.) From the Types which he alledgeth, to ſhew, that God had not caſt off Abraham's Seed (having promis'd to be a God to him and his Seed) for they are not all Iſrael that are of Iſrael*: Neither becauſe they are the Seed of* Abraham, are they all Children: But in Iſaac ſhall thy Seed be called. That is, they which are the Children of the Fleſh, theſe are not the Children of God, but the Children of the Promiſe are counted for the Seed. For this is the word of Promiſe, at this time will I come, and Sara ſhall have a Son. The Queſtion which the Apoſtle debateth with the Jews is, who are the Holy Seed, the Iſrael of God? Is it thoſe that are of Natural, or thoſe that are of Supernatural Generation? This Queſtion is eaſily reſolv'd from the Type; for Iſhmael who was of Natural Generation was rejected, and God would have Iſaac, who was of Supernatural Generation, to be the only Seed. Therefore thoſe in the Antitype that are of Supernatural Generation, are the Seed and the only Seed according to the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion, which confineth the Seed of God to regenerate Chriſtians, and rejecteth the carnal Jews that are the Seed of Abraham by natural Generation. But the word of Promiſe which the Apoſtle citeth, expreſſeth alſo a Divine Predeſtination and purpoſe of raiſing up that Seed of Abraham of Supernatural Generation, which was the Type; therefore it implieth a Divine Predeſtination and purpoſe of raiſing up that Seed of Abraham of Supernatural Generation, which is the Anti-type; which is the Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion.

Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, 9.

(2.) From a Second Type which the Apoſtle alledgeth. And not only this, but when Rebecca alſo had conceiv'd by one, even by our Father Iſaac (for the Children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpoſe of God according to Election might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth) it was ſaid unto her, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated. A great Myſtery there is (as Philo obſerveth) in the diſcrimination of theſe Twins (Jacob and Eſau) that were not differenc'd in their Geniture (Rebecca conceiv'd by one) nor could they be differenced by any Works that they did in the Womb; yet at that time while they were in the Womb, the Divine Oracle pronounc'd, that the Elder ſhould be of vile, the Younger of eximious condition, the Younger was the favourite, the Elder was comparatively and typically hated. Which diſcrimination of them muſt be wholly attributed to the purpoſe of God according to Election (free choice and diſpoſal) and it was made with deſign, that the purpoſe of God according to Election might ſtand (declaratively) as it is a purpoſe touching the Priviledges of the State of Salvation, that they ſhall be, not of works, but of him that calleth, that is, (k) who doth Men the free Favour to bring them by way of calling to the Priviledges of the State of Salvation, which he hath freely provided for them. He that calleth, is he, who doth Men the free Favour, to provide for them the Priviledges of the State of Salvation in the Chriſtian Religion, and doth them the free Favour alſo, to bring them by way of calling unto the Chriſtian Religion. If the diſcrimination of Jacob and Eſau was made with deſign, that the purpoſe of God according to Election might ſtand (declaratively) not of works, but of him that calleth, then it was made with deſign, to typifie that Rejection of the Elder Family of Religioniſts, and that choice of the Younger Family of Religioniſts, which is involv'd both in the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion, and in the Predeſtination of perſons to the Chriſtian Religion. For in the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion there is a Rejection of the unbelieving Jews (notwithſtanding their Works) and a choice of the believing Gentiles. And the Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion is a Predeſtination or purpoſe, effectually to call and convert the Gentiles (together with a remnant of the Jews) to be truly Chriſtian Believers, the main body of the Jews being hardned in their Infidelity. To this Predeſtination (and not only to the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion) the Apoſtle hath reſpect, when he aſſerteth, that the Priviledges of the State of Salvation are of him that calleth, and when he ſtileth the Chriſtians the called (v. 24.) he meaneth to aſſert, that God was at liberty (l) to receive Gentiles as well as Jews, nay to call Gentiles and reject the Jews.

V. 10, 11, 12, 13.

(3.) From the Apoſtle's Argumentation, v. 14, 15. If God doth ſo (call the Gentiles and reject the Jews) ſhall we ſay, that there is Unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid. For he ſaith to Moſes, I will have Mercy, on whom I will have Mercy; and I will have Compaſſion, on whom I will have Compaſſion. Unaccountably to Man God is at liberty to make a diſcrimination of Perſons, to ſhew Mercy to ſome, and to deny it to others; which ſhewing Mercy (in the Apoſtle's ſenſe) relateth not only to the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion, but to the Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion, as ſome (that are no Friends to an extravagant Predeſtination) do acknowlege, who diſtinguiſh between the ordinary and extraordinary Mercy of God; and of this they ſay (m) hereby God calleth and impelleth to Repentance Men that are immers'd in their Sins by ſome ſingular way; which ſort of Mercy was ſhew'd unto Paul. To this ſort of Mercy thoſe words of God have reſpect, I will have Mercy, on whom I will have Mercy. Such (in part) is the Apoſtle's ſenſe of this Moſaic Maxim, as appeareth from the Sequel of his Diſcourſe, wherein ſhewing Mercy to ſome is confronted and oppos'd to the hardning others. And in the Verſe next following the Apoſtle inferreth from his Moſaic Maxim, that the Buſineſs in hand (which is the obtaining the Priviledges of Salvation) is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, ſo that he muſt have it (for then the Jew muſt neceſſarily have it:) But it is of God that ſheweth Mercy, on whom he will ſhew Mercy, whence the Gentiles have it, on whom God ſheweth Mercy (both in making the Chriſtian Religion and in bringing them to the Chriſtian Religion) and the Jews have it not, with whom God dealeth otherwiſe than in the way of ſhewing Mercy. V. 16, 17, 18. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth Mercy. For the Scripture ſaith unto Pharaoh, even for this ſame purpoſe have I raiſed thee up, that I might ſhew my Power in thee, and that my Name might be declared throughout all the Earth. Therefore hath he Mercy, on whom he will have Mercy, and whom he will, he hardneth. To what purpoſe is this diſcourſe of hardning, if the Apoſtle hath not reſpect to converting Grace?

(k) See Dr. Hammond Not. on Matth. 20. 16.

(l) Dr. Ham. Paraphr. on v. 13.

(m) Crell. de Deo & ejus Attr. c. 20. col. 308.

If this is not (in part) that ſhewing Mercy which he meaneth? (n) Emollit quos vult ob cauſas ſibi cognitas. (o) So the obtaining Mercy, 1 Tim. 1. 13. ſignifieth an obtaining both the prevenient and ſubſequent Mercy, both the Mercy of being pardon'd upon Converſion, and the Mercy of being converted, whereas God blindeth and hardneth many others in their Sins. God hardned Pharaoh, as the Apoſtle proveth from Scripture, yet not from any Text that expreſly ſaith ſo, but from this general account of him; that God rais'd him for this purpoſe, to ſhew his Power in him, according to the Hiſtory of Pharaoh, to which the Apoſtle referreth, and to whom the Jews were a Parallel. The ſenſe of the Apoſtle touching the hardning of Pharaoh (and conſequently of the Jews) muſt be expounded from the Hiſtory, in which there is not the leaſt Indication, that Pharaoh was created, to be a Veſſel of Wrath. But in the Text which the Apoſtle citeth, Exod. 9. 16. the Hebrew word is העמדתיך, which ſignifieth (p) I have made thee to ſtand, conſtituted or ſet thee. Agreeably whereto the word ἐξήγειρα, which the Apoſtle uſeth, hath been rendred by ſeveral Learned Men (q) κατέστησα, poſui te; and ἐγείρειν τρόπαιον, is rendred by the Lexicographers, ſtatuere trophæum. So that the ſenſe of the Text is, I have conſtituted, ſet thee, or ſet thee up (as a Mark or Butt of the Arrows of the Almighty) for this purpoſe that I might ſhew my Power in thee. Pharaoh becauſe of his enormous Wickedneſs was conſtituted (that is, appointed) to be an Example of Divine Severity.

(4.) From the ſaucy rejoinder which the Apoſtle mentioneth, v. 19. Thou wilt ſay unto me, why doth he yet find fault? For who hath reſiſted his Will? The ſenſe of which reply is thus well expounded. (r) Si Deus non vult ſanare niſi per fidem, & fidem nobis non dat, cur nos accuſamur? If God will not ſave but by Faith, and doth not give us Faith, why is the Fault charg'd upon us? The Apoſtle's ſenſe alſo clearly appeareth in his Anſwer hereto, V. 20, 21. Shall the thing form'd ſay to him that form'd it, why haſt thou made me thus? Hath not the Potter power over the Clay, of the ſame lump to make one Veſſel unto Honour and another unto Diſhonour? (s) God may make a Veſſel to both theſe uſes partly in a general way, and partly in a ſpecial way. In a general way, by preſcribing ſuch a mode of Religion as pleaſeth him, which whoſo followeth, ſhall obtain the Reward, and who ſo followeth it not, ſhall incur the Puniſhment. In a ſpecial way God may do it; for of ſeveral that have equally deſerved Puniſhment, God may have Mercy upon one as he pleaſeth, and may harden and puniſh another. God in his new Creation of the ſame Maſs (degenerate Humane Nature) may make one Veſſel unto honour and another unto diſhonour by his predeſtinating and preſcribing the Chriſtian Religion, whereby they that embrace Chriſtianity are made Veſſels unto Honour, and they that reject Chriſtianity are made Veſſels unto Diſhonour. And God may convert one Sinner to the Chriſtian Religion, and harden another (no greater a Sinner than the other) in his Infidelity; and ſo of the ſame Maſs may make one Veſſel unto Honour and another unto Diſhonour. Hence a Synod forbiddeth (t) force and violence to be done to any, to conſtrain them to embrace the Chriſtian Faith; becauſe God hath Mercy on whom he will, and whom he will he hardneth.

(5.) When the Apoſtle writ his Ninth to the Romans, the Jews (as to the main of them) were none of God's People, the Gentiles had the Priviledges of God's People. The Jews were hardned in their Infidelity, the Gentiles were effectually called and converted to Chriſtianity. The Jews were in this wretched Condition notwithſtanding their carnal Deſcent and Works of the Law; the Gentiles were in this happy Condition notwithſtanding their former Idolatries and alienation from God, according to thoſe Prophecies which the Apoſtle citeth, and applieth to his own purpoſe, V. 25, 26. I will call them my People, which were not my People, and her beloved, which was not beloved. And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, ye are not my People, there ſhall they be called the Children of the living God. Theſe Prophecies and ſuch more (the Children of the deſolate ſhall be more than of the married Wife) do not plainly expreſs the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion, but they plainly predict the effectual calling of the Gentiles to the Religion and happy Condition of Chriſtians, and conſequently they expreſs very plainly a Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion. The Apoſtle's Diſcourſe ſo clearly relateth to the calling and converſion of the Gentiles, that ſome of no ſmall inſight into matters of Theology ſay of it (u) the Apoſtle purpoſely writeth of only Vocation to the Goſpel and the Faith and Grace of Chriſt: Election to Glory hath no place in the diſputation, ſave only conſequentially and by accident. They that thus underſtand the Apoſtle, are far from ſuppoſing, that his Diſcourſe relateth to no other Predeſtination but that of the Chriſtian Religion.

VI. The abſolute Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion inferreth the certainty of a Third Branch of the Divine Predeſtinaon; that ſome are abſolutely predeſtinated to be Chriſt's Sheep, and are ſuch as are given him by the Father. Our Saviour uſually calleth his People thoſe whom the Father hath given him; which Phraſe is in his Mouth an Expreſſion of Duty, Gratitude and Dependence, and is a due honouring God; for it is an acknowledgment, that he hath all his People by his Father's Gift. As the Apoſtle introduceth him thus Saying, Heb. 2. 13. I and the Children which God hath given me. As God actually giveth Children to Men to the World's end in the courſe of Nature and of Providence, and hath Decreed ſo to give them: So God actually giveth a People to Chriſt to the World's end in the Oeconomy of Grace, and hath Decreed ſo to give them. But becauſe thoſe whom God hath thus Decreed, to give unto Chriſt, are uſually imbu'd with a Preparatory Diſpoſition, before they are actually given to him; it is neceſſary to diſtinguiſh three Degrees, in which Men may be ſaid to be given to Chriſt. For they are given to him in the degree of actual Donation, in the degree of Preparatory Diſpoſition only, and in Decreto only. For as the Grace which is only predeſtinated to us, is ſaid to be given us, 2 Tim. 1. 9. So they that are only predeſtinated to the Chriſtian Religion, muſt be ſaid, to be given to Chriſt. So the Heathen were ſometime given for his Inheritance in Decreto only. Thoſe that are given to him in Preparatory Diſpoſition, are (antecedently to their

(n) Grot. Not. in v. 18.

(o) Idem Not. in Luc. 23. 34.

(p) See Ainſworth in loc.

(q) See Pool's Synopſ. in loc.

(r) Grot. Not. in loc.

(s) Crell. ſupr. c. 23. col. 175, 176.

(t) Præcipit ſancta ſynodus, nemini deinceps ad credendum vim inferre; cui enim vult Deus miſeretur, & quem vult indurat. Concil. Tolet. 4.

(u) De ſolâ vocatione ad Evangelium, Chriſtique fidem & gratiam propoſitum eſt Apoſtolo ſcribere. Electio verò ad gloriam nonniſi conſequenter & ex accidenti locum habet in illa diſputatione. Petav. T. 1. l. 10. c. 1.

their Converſion) called his People, Act. 18. 10. And our Saviour acquainteth us, that there are in the World, thoſe that are his Sheep, that know his Voice, when they hear it and will follow him, and that the Jews did not Believe, becauſe they were not his Sheep. Joh. 10. 4, 26. Theſe Sheep muſt be ſuppos'd, to be thoſe (w) that are ἔυθετοι εἰς βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, fit, prepared or diſpoſed for the Kingdom of God. Of whom the Evangeliſt ſpeaketh, Act. 13. 48. Καὶ ἐπίστευσαν ὅσοι ἦσαν τεταγμένοι εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, and as many as were rectè poſiti, rightly diſpoſed or in a good poſture to eternal Life believ'd. The word τεταγμένοι, properly ſignifieth ordinated, and ſometimes it cannot be otherwiſe rendred, as when Plotinus ſaith, (x) τοὺς δὲ κατ' ἄλλους δαίμονας τεταγμένους thoſe that are ordinated (rank'd, diſpos'd of, put into a good Poſture) according to other Demons. Moſt uſually the word ſignifieth in a Military Notion, as the Soldiers in their Ranks are called by Ælian τεταγμένοι, ordinated, rightly ſet in a good Poſture. The Evangeliſt therefore by thoſe that were ordinated to the Chriſtian Religion's Life eternal, may be underſtood, to mean thoſe that were in a good Poſture thereto (rectè poſiti) their Minds and Diſpoſitions ſtanding right that way. They that are thus well diſpos'd to Life eternal (as it is tendred in the Chriſtian Religion) are People ſo well minded and ſo well given, that they will come to Chriſt; and they are thoſe, to whom it is given of God, that they will come to Chriſt. For no Man can come unto me (ſaith our Saviour) except it be given unto him of my Father. Joh. 6. 65. They are ſuch as are given unto Chriſt therefore in Preparatory Diſpoſition, and of theſe our Saviour's words are neceſſarily meant, Joh. 6. 37. All that the Father giveth me, ſhall (or will) come to me. Of thoſe that are given to Chriſt in the degree of actual Donation our Saviour ſpeaketh. Joh. 17. 2, 6, 9. I have manifeſted thy Name unto the Men which thou gaveſt me out of the World: Thine they were and thou gaveſt them me, and they have kept thy word. I pray not for the World, but for them which thou haſt given me. As thou haſt given him Power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal Life to as many as thou haſt given him. God imparted to our Saviour univerſal Dominion and Sovereignty, for this end, that he might be a Saviour finally and plenarily to as many as came unto him and were his Believers, while he was here on Earth, and by parity of Reaſon to as many as become his Believers in ſucceeding Ages. For this is the Father's will which hath ſent me, that of all which he hath given me, I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it up again at the laſt day. Joh. 6. 39.

(w) Grot. & Hammond. Not. in Joh. 5. 37.

(x) En. 3. l. 5. c. 7.

VII. This Fourth Branch of Divine Predeſtination is of great certainty, that Chriſt's People are in ſeveral reſpects the predeſtinated People. For the Apoſtle to comfort the Chriſtians in his time under the heavy Preſſures and Afflictions which they endur'd upon account of their Religion, calleth them by ſeveral Names, which denote them, to be the People predeſtinated by God, and conſequently ſuch as God would own and take care of. (1.) They are the called according to purpoſe, Rom. 8. 28. whereby he doth not mean thoſe that are called according to their good and ſincere purpoſe of Mind; for this is to ſtile them ſuch as are called, not according to God's purpoſe but their own. This Expoſition is not tolerable Senſe, and is extremely alien from the Apoſtle's Senſe and Phraſe, who uſually in his Epiſtles deriveth the Chriſtians calling, and the Priviledges of the State of Salvation to which they are called, from the Divine Predeſtination, the Will and Counſel, the Grace and Purpoſe of God from everlaſting. His deſign in this place is to repreſent God as the Patron of the Chriſtians and of their Religion; therefore the Chriſtians ought to be repreſented as the called according to (his) purpoſe, and with theſe words the words following have an argumentative Connexion (which ſheweth the Senſe of them) having mention'd the called according to purpoſe, he addeth immediately for whom he did foreknow, (y) ubi προορισμὸν, indicat idem eſſe ac πρόθεσιν, which is an Indication, that Predeſtination and Purpoſe is the ſame. The purpoſe of God from everlaſting was, to raiſe up a Generation of true Chriſtians, which are the ſame with the effectually called, and theſe are the called according to purpoſe. (2.) They are thoſe whom God did foreknow, Rom. 8. 29. (z) πρόγνωσις & προορισμὸς, Fore-knowledge and Predeſtination are us'd in Scripture as Terms ſynonymous. When the Apoſtle therefore calleth Chriſt's People thoſe whom God did foreknow, his intention is to ſtile them the predeſtinated People, that are not meerly predeſtinated to exiſt, but to be the elect People of God; for ſo an Apoſtle ſtileth them Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father (his Predetermination or Predeſtination) 1 Pet. 1. 2. So our Apoſtle ſaith of a remnant of the Jews, who were Chriſtian Believers, Rom. 11. 2. God hath not caſt away his people which he foreknew. (a) Hoc quod ait, præſcivit, non rectè intelligitur, niſi prædeſtinavit. Their being foreknown denoteth they that were predeſtinated, and that God foreknew Chriſt's People, ſo as to love them (with his ſpecial ſaving Love and Favour) and to acknowledge them for his People. (3.) They are the predeſtinated to be of Chriſt-like condition, and conſequently to bear the Croſs. Rom. 8. 29. For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate, to be conformed to the Image of his Son. This is one Branch of their Predeſtination (they are predeſtinated to Sufferings:) But it is marvellous, that any ſhould ſuppoſe, that they are look'd upon by the Apoſtle as the predeſtinated, only becauſe they are predeſtinated to Sufferings, and that God is ſaid, to call thoſe whom he predeſtinated, only becauſe he called them to Sufferings. This is not the Notion of calling them in the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe, and of their being called according to his Purpoſe or Predeſtination: Nor is this the Notion of calling them that is uſual in the New Teſtament, or that calling them which is an eminent Branch of the Chriſtian Theology. What meaneth this turning out of the great Road of the New Teſtament into a little By-path, but that Men deſign to ſerve an Hypotheſis at any rate, Right or Wrong? Chriſt's People are called by God, to be Chriſt's People in purſuance of his Purpoſe or Predeſtination of ſaving them. 2 Tim. 1. 9. They are called to the Fellowſhip of his Son, and thereby they become the Elect of God. 1 Cor. 1. 9. 2 Pet. 1. 10. Rom. 8. 31. Of theſe things the Apoſtle manifeſtly diſcourſeth, and not of their being called to Sufferings only. (4.) By the Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion they are predeſtinated to the State of Grace and of Glory. Rom. 8. 30. Moreover, whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called: And whom he called, them he alſo juſtify'd: And whom he juſtify'd, them he alſo glorify'd. So the Apoſtle deſcribeth

(y) Petav. T. 1. l. 9. c. 1. S. 4.

(z) Grot. Not. in Act. 2. 23. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

(a) S. Aug. de dono perſeverant. c. 18.

ſcribeth the Oeconomy of their Salvation like a Golden Chain conſiſting of ſeveral Links, the firſt Link being their Predeſtination like Homer's Chain faſtned to Jupiter's Seat. He diſcourſeth of the immenſe Kindneſs of God to the People of Chriſt, and of their immenſe Safety and Felicity upon account of it. He orderly enumerateth their immenſe Felicities, and having ſtiled them no leſs than three times the predeſtinated People, he ſubjoineth, that in purſuance of their Predeſtination they are the called, juſtified, glorified. Their Predeſtination which he ſpeaketh of, is not meerly their Predeſtination to Sufferings, but their Predeſtination ſimply and without addition ſo called, whereby they become Chriſt's People, and the ſuperlative Felicities and Priviledges of the State of Salvation accrue to them as Chriſt's People. Thus much of certainty therefore there is in S. Auſtin's Hypotheſis of Predeſtination (as it is meliorated by his Followers) there is a Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion and a Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion. But we may not imitate them in calling theſe the Elect antecedently to their Faith; for we have no good Authority ſo to do. Nor is it certain, that there is an abſolutum ſalvandi decretum, that theſe are abſolutely and infallibly predeſtinated to Salvation, ſo that none of them ſhall totally and finally fall away, as S. Auſtin and his followers maintain. For without ſuppoſing any ſuch abſolute Decree of ſaving any men's Perſons or individual Natures as ſuch, it may be juſtly affirm'd of Chriſt's People in general, that they are a People predeſtinated, called, juſtified, and ſuch as ſhall be glorified. It ought not to be ſuppos'd, that the individual Natures of Men as ſuch without their Qualifications are conſtitutive either of the Elect of God or of Reprobates. S. Auſtin and his Followers ſpeak without Book, when they make an ill-natur'd diſtribution of Mankind into Elect and Reprobate meerly from God's abſolute Decree, becauſe they ſuppoſe, that God abſolutely predeſtinateth ſome to Salvation, and doth not vouchſafe the ſame Favour unto others. His great Followers make a great ſhew of great kindneſs to the Reprobates (as they call them) they ſuppoſe, that a proviſion of ſufficient Grace is made for them, that they may be ſaved, if they will: But if they are Reprobates, and all of them infallibly periſh, it muſt be ſuppos'd, that this Grace ſufficient to ſave Mankind, hath conſtantly and univerſally no better effect, than to aggravate their Condemnation, and that no Grace is ſaving to any Man without an abſolute Decree of ſaving him. They have ſo ſtated matters therefore in the Divine Decree, that as to the far greater part of Mankind not the leaſt good Effect and Benefit can be expected from the univerſal love of God towards them, their univerſal Redemption by Chriſt, and the ſufficient Grace that is afforded them, to what purpoſe then is all this waſt? Their Hypotheſis of the Divine Predeſtination is not without its Extravagances: But their Theorems were Sober and Modeſt, if compar'd with thoſe that were introduc'd into the Church in after-times, and which have prevail'd both in the Church of Rome and the reform'd Churches to a prodigious pitch of Extravagance, extremely injurious to Piety and the Souls of Men, and moſt reproachful to God and to the Chriſtian Religion. Which knoweth nothing certain touching this whole buſineſs of Divine Predeſtination, but that there is a Predeſtination of the Chriſtian Religion and a Predeſtination of Perſons to the Chriſtian Religion, which muſt not be thought inconſiſtent with a general love of God to Mankind, nor any fond unrighteous partiality (b) the Schools ſay, pertinet ad perfectionem Univerſi.

VIII. The Religion of Saving Grace (predeſtinated from everlaſting) is denominated Saving, to ſignifie, that it is the Religion of making Sinners the Righteous in State and Condition, in Life and Practice. The Names of it are (c) Salvation, the Salvation of God, the Power of God unto Salvation, the Goſpel of our Salvation, the Grace of God that bringeth Salvation, ſo great Salvation, the common Salvation, the Doctrine of it is the word of Salvation, neither is there Salvation in any other. (d) All that have duly entertain'd it, are ſtiled οἱ σωζόμενοι, thoſe that are ſaved, which implieth, that by their Religion they are in the State of Salvation. It is the Religion therefore of the State of Salvation (thereby Sinners paſs out of the State of Condemnation into the State of Salvation) which is the ſame thing with the State of the Righteous (for the State of Condemnation is the State of Sinners, and the State of Salvation is the State of the Righteous) upon this account therefore this Religion is the Saving Religion, becauſe it is to Sinners the State and Life of the Righteous. The Apoſtle argueth, that the Goſpel is the Power of God unto Salvation, becauſe therein is the Righteouſneſs of God (the State of Righteouſneſs of God's providing) is reveal'd from Faith to Faith (to Believers ſucceſſively) and he uſeth Righteouſneſs and Salvation as terms exegetical one of another. Rom. 10. 10. With the heart Man believeth unto righteouſneſs, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto Salvation. As our Saviour ſaith, he that believeth ſhall be ſaved: So the Apoſtle ſaith (to the ſame Sence) he that believeth ſhall be juſtified. As the State of Salvation is the oppoſite to the State of Condemnation: So is the State of Righteouſneſs. 2 Cor. 3. 9. If the miniſtration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the miniſtration of righteouſneſs exceed in glory. The State of Righteouſneſs and of Salvation are one and the ſame State, the terms of Righteouſneſs and Salvation are ſynonymous, not only in ſeveral places of the Old, but of the New Teſtament. Baptiſm therefore ſaveth the Chriſtian Belivers, becauſe therein they are made the Righteous in State and Condition, in Nature and Practice. They are waſhed, they are ſanctified, they are juſtified in the Name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God. 1 Cor. 6. 11. He ſaved us by the waſhing of Regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. That being juſtified by his Grace, we ſhould be made Heirs. Tit. 3. 5, 7. (e) We coming as to the beginnings of another Life, and being entred into the Paths of true Piety are juſtified not without the Favour of Chriſt. For by him the Father is Propitious to us. Now the Law-giver juſtifying us and freeing us from all Crime, and remitting to us the Puniſhment due to our Sins, and alſo inviſibly ſanctifying us by the Holy Spirit, and himſelf reforming us in a way known to himſelf into the newneſs of a temperate and duely

1 Pet. 3. 21.

(b) Durand. l. 1. diſt. 4. Qu. 2.

(c) Act. 4. 12. and 13. 26. and 16. 17. and 28. 28. Rom. 1. 16. and 11. 11. Eph. 1. 13. Tit. 2. 11. Jude 3.

(d) Act. 2. 47. 1 Cor. 1. 18. 2 Cor. 2. 15. 2 Tim. 1. 9. Tit. 3. 5. Eph. 2. 5.

(c) Ὡς δὲ εἰς ἀρχὰς ἑτέρας ἥκοντες ζωῆς καὶ ταῖς τῆς ἀληθοῦς εὐσεβείας τρίβοις ἐμβεβηκότες, Χριστοῦ κατανεύοντος δικαιούμεθα. Δι' αὐτοῦ γὰρ ἡμῖν ἵλεως ὁ πατήρ. Δικαιοῦντος δὲ τοῦ νομοθέτου καὶ ἁπάσης ἡμᾶς ἀπαλλάττοντος γραφῆς, καὶ τῆς ἐπὶ ταῖς παραβάσεσιν ἀνιέντος δίκης, καὶ προσέτι νοητῶς ἁγιάζοντος διὰ τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, καὶ ἀναμορφοῦντος ἡμᾶς καθ' ὃν οἶδε τρόπον αὐτὸς εἰς καινότητα ζωῆς σωφρονός τε καὶ ἐπιεικοῦς τίς ὁ κατακρίνων ἔτι, ἢ καὶ ποῖος ἐν ἡμῖν ἔσται ῥύπος, οὐκ ἂν ἔχοιμι φράσαι. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 7. p. 248, 249.

moderate life, I cannot ſay, who there is yet to condemn us, or what filth will be in us. Such is the holy and happy condition of Regenerate Chriſtians, they are in ſtate and condition, in life and practice the Righteous, which is the ſtate of Salvation, the ſtate of Grace and of Life, the uncriminal, unpenal and uncondemnable State; they are ſav'd from the Domination of their deadly ghoſtly Enemies, from their deadly criminal and penal Evils, are in the ſtate of Favour and Alliance with God and of Citizenſhip in his Kingdom, and have a preſent right to the future poſſeſſion of perfect Bleſſedneſs, which is all our Salvation and ſhould be all our deſire, 2 Sam. 23. 5.

IX. The Religion of Saving Grace therefore is the Religion of being juſtified by Grace and by Faith (the Faith of God's Believers and Religioniſts that are not the Men of Nature who belong to the Law) by Grace on God's part and by Faith on our part: the one is the duty-part, the other is the benefit-part of this Saving Religion, and both have the Name of Saving Grace. Such is the Idea of this Saving Religion in S. Paul's Epiſtles, from whom the true Idea of it ought to be learned; for he alone of all the Holy Writers hath debated the neceſſity of Chriſtianity, and deduc'd it from its true grounds, whence the true nature and ſpecifick difference of it may beſt be underſtood. And although the term of Juſtification which he ordinarily uſeth, may ſeem obſcure and ambiguous (which accordingly hath occaſion'd many unhappy diſputes in the Church) yet when a Man is arriv'd at a certain notion of the matter, to which the Apoſtle applieth it, it plainly appeareth, that no other term could be ſo expreſſive of his Senſe, none ſo proper and accommodate for his purpoſe. For ſeeing the Chriſtian Religion is therefore the ſaving Religion, becauſe it is the Religion of making Sinners the Righteous, therefore to ſignifie, that it is the ſaving Religion, no Name can be ſo proper, as to call it the Religion of juſtifying Sinners, that is, of making them the Righteous. So the word ſignifieth in our Engliſh Tongue, and if we will allow ſuch a Latin word as Juſtificare, it muſt properly ſignifie Juſtum facere (as Sanctificare is Sanctum facere) the Greek word δικαιόω is of this ſignification, and the Hebrew word Hitzdik is commonly uſed in this Senſe throughout the Old Teſtament. No reaſonable doubt can be made therefore touching the meaning of the word Juſtifying in S. Paul's Epiſtles, it plainly ſignifieth, to make Sinners the Righteous.

But things and perſons may be ſaid to be juſtify'd (made Righteous or uncriminaliz'd) in various ſenſes, reſpects and degrees. The Hebrew Doctors ſay of one that perſuadeth many to Righteouſneſs, (f) Juſtificat multos. They ſay alſo, (g) Juſtifica ſtateras exacte, Exquiſite juſtifica pondera, make the Ballances and the Weights exactly juſt and faultleſs. Celſus thus ſcoffeth at Chriſtianity, (h) after a long Age God hath bethought himſelf, δικαιῶσαι τὸν ἀνθρώπων βίον, to juſtifie (make Righteous) the life of Men. Thus to juſtifie Things or Perſons, is to make them Righteous intrinſecally: but in the moſt uſual ſenſe the juſtifying Things or Perſons denoteth only the making them Righteous extrinſecally, mentally, verbally, ſententially, or in treatment and uſage, demonſtratively (by ſhewing their Righteouſneſs) or creatively by granting them the ſtate and condition of the Righteous. He that is Righteous in his own conceit, mentally juſtifieth himſelf. He that defendeth and vindicateth a Criminal, and the Judge that pronounceth Sentence in his favour, juſtifieth him verbally and ſententially. In treatment and uſage our Saviour was made a Sinner, and ſo a Criminal may be made Righteous, but God will not ſo juſtifie the Wicked, Exod. 23. 7. Mentally, ſententially and in treatment and uſage Judges ought, to juſtifie the Righteous, not the Wicked, Deut. 25. 1. Prov. 17. 15. So Wiſdom is juſtified of her Children, Matth. 11. 19. So the Publicans juſtify'd God, Luk. 7. 29. So a Man full of talk ſhall not be juſtified, Job 11. 2. So the Publican was juſtified rather than the Phariſee, Luk. 7. 29. So the doers of the Law ſhall be juſtified, Rom. 2. 13. and in ſuch Senſe By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, Matth. 12. 37. The Apoſtle knew nothing by himſelf, but was not thereby authentickly juſtified without being ſententially juſtified by God, 1 Cor. 4. 4. Our Saviour's Righteouſneſs was manifeſted and demonſtrated by the Spirit, whereby he was raiſed from the dead, 1 Pet. 3. 18. whence he is ſaid to be (demonſtratively) juſtified by the Spirit, as the words ſhould be rendred, 1 Tim. 3. 16. In ſuch ſenſe the Pſalmiſt ſaith of God, Pſal. 51. 4. that thou mighteſt be juſtified (manifeſted to be really Righteous) when thou ſpeakeſt. So he that undertaketh, to juſtifie what any Man ſaith or doth, undertaketh to demonſtrate (to make it appear) to be lawful and juſt. This Phraſe Juſtifica teipſum is called by Buxtorf, (i) a proverbial ſpeech, whereby a Man is taught, firſt to free himſelf from blame, before he blameth others. He that reproveth another, ought to manifeſt, that he is free from ſuch Criminality as rendreth him an unfit reprover, and in this ſenſe ought to juſtifie himſelf. Near of kin to this ſenſe is the Phariſees juſtifying themſelves (making themſelves Righteous) in ſhew and appearance before Men, Luk. 10. 29. and 16. 15. and Jeruſalem is ſaid to juſtifie Samaria, becauſe by her greater Wickedneſs ſhe made Samaria in compariſon appear juſt, Ezek. 16. 51. So Sinners may juſtifie themſelves before Men, but how is it poſſible, that God ſhould juſtifie them?

X. It is poſſible, that God may juſtifie them intrinſecally, by effectually perſuading them to Righteouſneſs, and by infuſing into their Natures Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. And it is poſſible, that God may juſtifie them extrinſecally in various Senſes; for he may account and judge and pronounce them the Righteous, and ſo juſtifie them mentally and ſententially. He may juſtifie them alſo in treatment and uſage and demonſtratively by manifeſting them, to be the Righteous. But it is impoſſible, that God ſhould do any of theſe extrinſecally juſtifying Acts towards them, or that he ſhould intrinſecally juſtifie them availably to their Juſtification without granting unto them the ſtate of Righteouſneſs, ſo making them the Righteous in ſtate and condition. For the making Ungodly Sinners the Righteous is a making them the Saints of God; and the being Saints is like the being Jews; for as all Jews, that are not Jews native, muſt be Jews factive: ſo all Saints that are not Saints native, muſt be Saints factive. As none can be Jews factive, unleſs the ſtate and condition of Jews be granted unto them: ſo none can be Saints factive, unleſs God granteth unto them the ſtate and condition of Saints. And as if the ſtate and condition of Jews is granted unto any, this Act is a creative-making

(f) Buxt. Lex. Talm. col. 667.

(g) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex. 223.

(h) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 4. p. 165.

(i) Inſtit. Ep. Hebr. p. 203.

them Jews (in ſuch ſenſe as Conſuls, Magiſtrates, Commanders in Armies (k) are ſaid to be created in Cicero, Cæſar, and Livy:) So if God actually granteth unto any the ſtate and condition of Saints (or of his Children) this Act is a creative-making them Saints (or his Children ;) therefore if God actually granteth unto any the ſtate of the Righteous, this Act is a creative-making them the Righteous. Without this creative-making them the Righteous they cannot be juſtify'd by God, and by this creative-making them the Righteous they are juſtify'd by God ; therefore this creative-making them the Righteous muſt be conſider'd as their Juſtification. The juſtification of Ungodly Sinners muſt be conſider'd, not meerly as a judicial-ſentential Act, but as a Creative-Act, as an Act of Grace giving and granting to them the ſtate of the Righteous, which is S. Paul's Notion of Juſtification.

(k) Voſſ. Theſ. p. 2. S. Aug. c. adverſar. leg. & prophet. l. 1. ſub fin.

It hath been thought, that juſtifying is a judicial or forenſical word, and muſt be underſtood in a Forenſic or Law-ſenſe (to ſignifie aſſoiling from guilt, accounting and declaring juſt) whence the juſtification of Sinners hath been conſider'd meerly as a judicial-ſentential Act, God is ſaid, to juſtifie as a Judge, and a Sentence of God as a Judge is made the Genus of Juſtification (He is ſuppos'd in Judgment to acquit Sinners from Guilt and Puniſhment, and to account them the Righteous) whereas in the firſt Inſtant the Juſtification of Sinners ought to be conſider'd as a Creative Act making them the Righteous in ſtate and condition. Upon their becoming Chriſtian Believers the ſtate of Saints (or of the Righteous) accrueth to them by the grant and donation of God in his new Settlement. The New Teſtament (or Covenant) is the Grant and Donation of the ſtate of remiſſion of Sins (the ſtate of Righteouſneſs) to Chriſtian Believers, Matth. 26. 28. Mark 16. 16. Heb. 8. 12. 1 Joh. 5. 11. They have their Juſtification (their being juſtify'd or in the ſtate of the Righteous) from the Blood of Chriſt (mors enim ejus juſtificatio peccatoris, Rom. 5. 9.) therefore they have it from the New Teſtament in his Blood, Matth. 26. 28. By raiſing Chriſt from the dead God did abſolve him from the Sentence of Death and ſolemnly diſcharge him from his Peoples Sins (that accru'd to him and were laid upon him) and by ſo doing did ſolemnly and formally acquit and diſcharge his People from their Sins. By this Act of God therefore (of which the Blood of Chriſt was the procuring cauſe) they have the ſtate of remiſſion of Sins (or of Righteouſneſs) and conſequently they have their Juſtification by his Reſurrection, Rom. 4. 25. and 8. 33, 34. His Reſurrection was not only the pattern, but the cauſe of our Spiritual riſing ; for God by raiſing him from the dead did grant unto his People the ſtate of remiſſion of Sins, which was a granting to them the ſtate of Life and Salvation, a raiſed condition, a ſtate of Heavenly Citizenſhip. Whence they are ſaid, to be quickened (made alive) together with Chriſt, Eph. 2. 5. Col. 2. 13. To be raiſed up together and made to ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. 2. 6. All his People are riſen with him, and in a raiſed condition with him, Col. 2. 12. and ch. 3. 1. of all which ſublime Phraſes no Senſe can be made but by ſuppoſing, that Chriſtian Believers have the ſtate of the Righteous given and granted unto them by the Act of God in raiſing Chriſt from the dead. How elſe is the Reſurrection of Chriſt the new Creation, but becauſe it was a making the Goſpel the new Settlement and Conſtitution of things, whereby Sinners becoming Believers are in the ſtate of the Righteous, which is their Juſtification? Which the Apoſtle calleth the Gift of Righteouſneſs, the Gift by Grace, the Free Gift, to ſhew, how we come by it. Which plainly demonſtrateth, that the Goſpel (the Benefit-part of it) is the Gift of the ſtate of Righteouſneſs, which is the Juſtification of Sinners, Rom. 5. 19. As by one Man's diſobedience many were made Sinners ; ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made Righteous, δίκαιοι κατασταθήσονται, ſhall be conſtituted Righteous. The Phraſe denoteth, that Chriſt's People are in the ſtate of Righteouſneſs, and this ſtate they are in by the ſettlement of Grace, which Chriſt introduc'd by his Obedience, as Mankind originally are in the ſtate of Sinners by that ſettlement of Nature, which Adam introduc'd by his Diſobedience.

S. Ambroſ. Com. in Gal. 2.

Rom. 5. 15, 16, 17.

XI. But the Juſtification of Sinners is not meerly a Creative-act, a judicial-ſentential Act is complicated with the Creative-act. For Sinners becoming ſincere Believers are the Righteous in Life and Practice (according to the Goſpel) and are judged by God ſo to be, and this Judicial-ſentential Act is a Branch of their Juſtification, which is not meerly a granting to them the ſtate of the Righteous, but an approving them and accounting them the Righteous. For as unregenerate Mankind could not be in the ſtate and condition of Sinners, if they were not ſuch in reſpect of Diſpoſition and Practice: So Chriſtian Believers, if they were not in reſpect of Diſpoſition and Practice the Righteous, they could not be in ſtate and condition the Righteous. Nor can God make a falſe Judgment of Things or Perſons, He cannot repute them the Righteous, that are really the Unrighteous ; if therefore by Grace he maketh any Sinners the Righteous in ſtate and condition, they muſt neceſſarily be the Righteous in diſpoſition and practice (in the degree of ſincere beginners) elſe with God they could not be juſtify'd. None but they that are ſo qualify'd, perform the condition of the Covenant of Grace, which is the Duty-part of the Goſpel ; and none but they can have any claim to the Benefit-part of it, which is the ſtate of Righteouſneſs. For none are truly Chriſtian Believers, but they that are Godly Believers (that are the Righteous indeed in diſpoſition and practice according to the Nature of things and the inſtitution of the New Covenant) whoſe Faith is the Divine Grace of Faith (and their believing the Saint of God-kind of believing) which is virtually and radically all Godlineſs ; for to be a truly Chriſtian Believer, is to be chriſtianiz'd in Sentiment and Perſuaſion, in Diſpoſition and Practice. His Juſtification therefore may be illuſtrated by this Similitude. Let us ſuppoſe, that an Alien and an Enemy is by the King admitted to be a Citizen upon condition and ſuppoſition, that he becometh a faithful Citizen, and that this tranſaction is his Juſtification. If it be asked, how this Man becometh ſo juſtify'd, as to have the ſtate and condition of a Citizen? It muſt be anſwered, by the meer Grace of the King and by his creative Act. But if it be ask'd, how he cometh to be ſo juſtify'd, as to be counted by the King an upright and faithful Citizen? It muſt be anſwered by being indeed ſuch an one. Let us ſuppoſe, that a Noble Man marrieth a Poor Woman upon condition and ſuppoſition, that ſhe becometh a faithful loyal Wife to him, that this Marriage is her Juſtification, and that this Noble-man cannot be deceiv'd in his Judgment of things and perſons. If now this Queſtion be ask'd, how this poor Woman cometh to be ſo ennobled in her ſtate and condition? It muſt be anſwered, by the meer Grace and Favour of the Noble-man, who hath juſtify'd her freely by his Grace and by his creative Act. But if the Queſtion be ask'd, how this poor Woman cometh to be ſo juſtify'd, as to be counted faithful and loyal? this muſt be the Anſwer, by being ſo indeed. As ſhe is ennobled in her ſtate and condition, ſhe is juſtify'd by a creative Act: as ſhe is counted faithful and loyal, ſhe is juſtify'd by a mental-ſentential Act. And becauſe theſe Acts are inſeparably connex'd in her Marriage, which is ſuppos'd her Juſtification, thence it is manifeſt, that they are not two Juſtifications, but one Juſtification. The poor Woman cannot be juſtify'd by the creative Act, unleſs ſhe be juſtify'd by the judicial-ſentential Act; and ſhe cannot be juſtify'd by the judicial-ſentential Act otherwiſe than by being a faithful loyal Wife; therefore ſhe cannot be juſtified but by being a Wife indeed in diſpoſition and practice. This Similitude is eaſily apply'd to the Juſtification of truly Chriſtian Believers, who are all of them the truly Righteous in diſpoſition and practice. And by this unexceptionable method of ſtating things the Doctrine of S. Paul and S. James touching Juſtification is clearly reconcileable (for every genuine Chriſtian Believer is at leaſt an initial Doer of Righteouſneſs) and there is no need of diſtinguiſhing a firſt and ſecond Juſtification, as will be diſcours'd preſently.

SECTION II.

Of God's Believers the Nature and Nobleneſs of their Juſtifying Faith.

I. THE Faith which juſtifieth, is that which conſtituteth God's Believers (the Godly Believers) in contradiſtinction to the Men of Nature that belong to the Law. The Law-religioniſts have their Faith as well as their Works: but as their Good-works do not ſave them from being the Evil-doers, their Righteouſneſs doth not ſave them from being the Unrighteous, ſo their Faith doth not ſave them from being the Unbelievers. Such they are in the Eye of the Holy Writers; and becauſe they are in the criminal and penal ſtate, ſo long as they are the Men of Nature that belong to the Law, there can be no other way of attaining Righteouſneſs, but to become God's Believers, ſo as to belong to his œconomy of things, which is above Nature and above the Law. The Chriſtian Religion is ſuch a Divine Oeconomy, and accordingly it directeth Men in this way to attain Righteouſneſs by being God's Believers ſo counted and called in Chriſtianity. By the Faith of God, Rom. 3. 3. Faith towards God, Heb. 6. 1. Faith to God-ward, 1 Theſſ. 1. 8. The Faith of God's Elect, Tit. 1. 1. and by believing in God, Act. 16. 34. Chriſt's Religioniſts are ſuch as by him do believe in God, 1 Pet. 1. 21. He that heareth my word and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, Joh. 5. 24. I through the Law am dead to the Law, that I might live unto God as his Religioniſt, Gal. 2. 20. As God is the prime Author of the Chriſtian Religion (which is called the Goſpel of God, the Grace of God, the Power and Wiſdom of God, the Word of God, the Commandment of God, the Record of God, the Salvation of God, and the Righteouſneſs which it tendreth to a World of Sinners is the Righteouſneſs of God) ſo the Chriſtian Believers and Religioniſts are thoſe that God owneth for his Believers and Religioniſts, and all thoſe that God owneth for his Believers and Religioniſts, are in Chriſtianity look'd upon and conſider'd as initially at leaſt the Chriſtian Believers and Religioniſts. The Chriſtian Believers in this large Senſe are the ſame with God's Believers, to whom the juſtifying and ſaving Faith is peculiar, and with reſpect to whom it may be beſt notic'd as to ſome general definitive Notices of it. For it is of definitive Notion, That believing, that whole buſineſs of believing, all ſuch believing, which conſtituteth God's Believers (the whole buſineſs of believing as God's Believers) ſo that the Eſſence and Summary of Faith conſiſteth in being God's Believers, not in all reſpects, but in reſpect of believing. If we know who are God's Believers, we cannot but know, what Faith is; for by Faith the Scripture meaneth God's Believers believing (ſuch believing which is their practice of believing as ſuch) and which ſignifieth the due (the Dutiful and Virtuous) believing God and the Matters of God; as the contempt of the World ſignifieth the due contempt of it, and the loving God and our Brother ſignifieth the virtuous and dutiful loving Him. Quod non recte fit, fieri non dicitur. As he that doth not duely receive Chriſt, in the main rejecteth him and his Goſpel: ſo they that do not duely believe the Matters of God (in the main) muſt not be thought God's Believers. Who are not the meer Hiſtorical kind of Believers (ſuch the Devils themſelves are) nor the ſlight ſuperficial Believers of Divine Matters (that believe them only as currant Notions in their Countrey) nor the cuſtomary and traditional kind of Believers (whoſe Faith is but an Infidel kind of Faith and as to ſaving Faith they are Infidels:) but they are God's kind of Believers and the Men of Faith, whoſe ſtate and condition is ennobled by Faith, ſo are their Minds and Lives, and in their kind of believing there is a Divine Nobleneſs and Spiritual Excellency, as will appear by conſidering the eminent Ingredients and Properties of it.

II. The Faith of God's Believers is of ſo noble a nature, that it is a due ſymbolizing and conſorting with God in our Sentiments and Perſwaſion. For as the Name of Chriſt's Believers denoteth, that they believe according to Chriſt Jeſus and his Inſtitution of Religion, both in reſpect of the matter of their belief and the kind and quality of their believing, and that in theſe reſpects they Chriſtianize in their Sentiments and Perſwaſion: ſo the Name of God's Believers denoteth, that they believe according to God and his Inſtitution of Religion and Sanctity (either more perfect or imperfect) both in reſpect of the matter of their belief and the kind and quality of their believing, and that in theſe reſpects they duely Theize (Symbolize with God) in their Sentiments and Perſwaſion. They could not be the Divine Family of Believers, of whom the World is not worthy, Heb. 11. 38. nor could their believing be of excellency and precioſity the Faith of God's Elect, Tit. 1. 1. the precious Faith, 2 Pet. 1. 1. if it was not of kind and quality a Divine Sentiment and Perſwaſion, homogeneous and of kin to God. From his Diſcipline and Inſtitution the genuine Believers of the Verity and Excellency of Chriſt and Chriſtianity derive this their Sentiment and Perſwaſion; it is his Gift, of his revealing, they are taught it by him, have heard and learn'd it from him, and are drawn to it (effectually inclin'd and diſpos'd to it) by God. In reſpect of this their Sentiment and Perſwaſion they are initially regenerate and born of God; for whoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, is born of God, 1 Joh. 5. 1. As many as received him, were born, not of Blood, nor of the Will of the Fleſh, nor of the Will of Man, but of God, Joh. 1. 12, 13. The diſcernment and acknowledgment of the Divine Excellency (l) that is in Chriſt and Chriſtianity, are not the Graceleſs Godleſs kind of things, which are to be had from Nature and Humane Inſtitution, they are the God-kind of things, that are beyond the meer natural Man's ken (he knoweth not what kind of things they are) and they are repugnant to his blind and carnal Conceits and to his carnal Genius and Humour. They that are after the Fleſh judge after the Fleſh, Joh. 8. 15. the Sentiments of the Mundane Crew are according to the Spirit of the World, 1 Cor. 2. 12. But the Sentiments of true Believers are according to God and his Word and the Holy Spirit; which ſpeaketh them the genuine Theiſts, as thoſe are Platoniſts, that ſymbolize with Plato in their Sentiments. They are ὁμόνοοι, and ſymbolize with God in their Sentiments touching what is truly excellent, choice and precious, and what is vile, what is truth and what is falſhood, what is ſubſtance and what is ſhadow, what is happineſs and what is miſery, what are the true goods and the true evils, what is ſanctity and what is ſin, (and touching the immenſe good of the one and evil of the other) they are of the ſame Mind with God touching Nature and Grace, their Way and their End, the concerns of this and another Life, Earth and Heaven, Riches and Poverty, the Divine Excellency that is in bearing the Croſs (which they account their triumphal Chariot) the invaluableneſs of all external things (that are extra gratiam & gloriam) the vaſt diſparity between the momentaneous and momentous things, the things of the World and the matters of the Kingdom of God and of the Soul. They are not ſway'd by Mundane Excellencies and Proſperities, (m) which are on the Pagans ſide, they duely diſcern and acknowledge the tranſcendent Excellency and Precioſity of a deeply humbled and crucify'd Saviour ſtript of all Mundane Excellencies and to Worldly Minds not valuable or deſirable; the form of God and the Glory of the only begotten Son of God they diſcern and acknowledge under the form of a Servant, the Ignominy of a reputed Malefactor, and what the World calleth Villainy and naileth to a Croſs they diſcern and believe, to be the Life of God in Fleſh. (n) Of Riches, Splendor, Health, Eloquence, I reap'd this only fruit (ſaith Gr. Naz.) τὸ παριδεῖν καὶ ἐσχηκέναι ὧν Χριστὸν προετίμησα, that I contemn'd them, and had ſome things, before which I preferr'd Chriſt. So Paulinus forſook his great Eſtate, his great Dignity and his Poetry alſo, when he became one of Chriſt's Believers.

Divine Believers not only ſymbolize with God in the goodneſs but in the greatneſs of their Sentiment, which is an high and raiſed ſenſe of God and of divine things: Which ſort of ſymbolizing with God is ſo eminent a Branch of their Faith (or believing) that ſome will have it the definitive Notion thereof (they ſhould have called it an eminent Ingredient thereof) for thus they define Faith: (o) Eſt exiſtimatio magnifice ſentiens de Dei potentia, juſtitia & bonitate, & ſi quid promiſerit, in eo præſtando conſtantia. It is an high Senſe (affective Opinion) and confidence concerning the Power, Juſtice and Goodneſs of God, and that whatſoever he hath promis'd, he will certainly perform. This was the Faith of Abraham, who againſt hope, believed in hope, was ſtrong in Faith giving Glory to God, and being fully perſwaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform, Rom. 4. 18,---22. Abraham's Faith manifeſtly conſiſted in correſponding and conſorting in his Sentiment and Perſwaſion with the Attributes of God and his tranſcendent agency (which is beyond Man and Second Cauſes, beyond the Road and Courſe of Nature and of Law) by this Faith Sarah conceiv'd and bare a Son, and by this Faith other Believers in the Old Teſtament-times perform'd their Heroic and Miraculous Atchievements (paſſed through the Red Sea, threw down the Walls of Jericho, ſubdued Kingdoms, wrought Righteouſneſs, ſtopp'd the Mouths of Lions, quenched the violence of Fire, eſcap'd the Edge of the Sword, out of weakneſs were made ſtrong, waxed valiant in Fight, turned to flight the Armies of the Aliens) ſo the doing miraculous Works our Saviour promiſeth to Faith (to Faith that is the great wonder-worker) and before he wrought his miraculous cures on morbid People, he requir'd, that they ſhould believe his Divine Power and Authority, and having wrought them he attributed them to their Faith. So Heraclitus was wont to ſay, (p) τῶν θείων τὰ πολλὰ δι' ἀπιστίαν μὴ γινώσκεσθαι, that is, according to Plutarch's Interpretation, The greateſt of the Gods miraculous Works are not known unto Men becauſe of their Unbelief, which Plutarch calleth ἀσθένειαν ἀπιστίας, the Evil or Weakneſs of Unbelief. Humane Weakneſs and Wickedneſs are complicated together in Unbelief, and (in oppoſition thereto) there is a ſuperlative goodneſs and greatneſs in the Faith of God's Believers. Whence S. Chryſoſtom had reaſon to ſay, that believing is ὑψηλῆς καὶ μεγαλοφυοῦς ψυχῆς, of a ſublime and great Soul, and that Unbelievers are ταλαίπωροι καὶ μικρόψυχοι καὶ ἀσθενεῖς, miſerable, little-ſoul'd and weak. Virtuouſly and dutifully to truſt in God and in nothing leſs than God (not in our ſelves, in Man or in the World) to be his Confidents and Dependents (the Men of God as to our Truſts and Confidences) to have this generous truſt concerning God, that it ſhall be always well with his faithful Clients, that Adverſaries ſhall be to them as no Adverſaries, that they ſhall never be left forlorn, hopeleſs and helpleſs, that there is but one thing requiſite to compleat our ſafety (from the ruinous Evils at leaſt) to have ſuch an Almighty Patron; all ſuch religious truſting in God, which is an eminent Branch of Faith, is manifeſtly in the Nature and Nobleneſs of it Theizing, a conſorting with God and nothing leſs than God in our Sentiments, Perſwaſions and Confidences. Whence Believers are fitly intituled, (q) Homines Dei, the Men of God. They are ſuch in renouncing their own Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, in thankfully accepting the Righteouſneſs which is of God in Chriſt, and in the value which they put on his ineſtimable Sacrifice and great Propitiation.

III. The Nature and Nobleneſs of the Faith of God's Believers appeareth from a ſecond eminent Ingredient of it; for it ſurmounteth all Difficulties and Impediments, which is a great ennoblement of it. As in Humane Sciences and Theories,

Eph. 2. 8.
Phil. 1. 29.
Matth. 16. 17.
Joh. 6. 44, 45.

(l) Vid. Grot. Not. in Joh. 6. 44.

(m) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 205.

(n) Gr. Naz. or. 1. p. 32.

(o) Grot. Proleg. in Ep. ad Rom.

Heb. 11. 29, 30, &c.

Mark 16. 17, 18. and ch. 11. 23, 24.
Matth. 9. 22.
Mark 10. 52.
Luk. 7. 50.

(p) Caſaubon of Enthuſ. p. 221.

(q) S. Cyp. ad Demetr. & de mortal.

Theories, ſo in the Chriſtian Faith and the main Articles of it there are difficulties (that incumber them.) The difficulty of underſtanding the Origin of things (as the Origin of the Soul of Man) the difficulty of underſtanding the Nature of things (as of incorporeal Subſtance) the modus of things (as how there can be a proper Creation and Reſurrection of the Body) the Cauſe and Reaſon of things (as of Chriſt's Sacrifice and of his coming ſo late) the difficulty of reconciling things (as S. Matthew's and S. Luke's account of Chriſt's Genealogy) the difficulty of our narrow Minds conceiving great things (as how one Being can animadvert and order all things at once) the ſeeming abſurdity and contradictiouſneſs of ſome Narratives in Scripture (as the beginning of Geneſis) the ſeeming contradictiouſneſs and commonly ſuppos'd unintelligibleneſs of ſome great Myſteries (as the Chriſtian Trinity, the Union of God and Man in one Perſon) the ſeeming and ſurpriſing improbability of ſome things (as the Fall of Angels from Heaven, the mean appearance of the Meſſiah, the numeroſity of the damned) the utter remoteneſs of other things from human acquaintance (as the Chriſtian Regeneration) the liableneſs of the Scriptures, of Chriſtianity, and of Providence alſo to various Objections (which Infidelity muſtereth up) together with the Sects and Scandals of the Chriſtian Church; all theſe difficulties incumber the believing the Chriſtian Faith. But the grand Impediment to Faith is together with the Temptations of the World (which are great Adverſaries to Faith and all Piety) the Ungodly-mindedneſs of Men, according to that of our Saviour to the Jews, Joh. 8. 47. He that is of God (Godly-minded) heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not, becauſe ye are not of God. If Chriſt had been born and liv'd in ſecular Grandeur, Riches and Glory, the whole Nation of the Jews would have believed on him, becauſe they were the World's admirers and lovers. The true cauſe of their Unbelief therefore was their Ungodly-mindedneſs, Joh. 10. 26. They were not ſo qualified, as the Sheep of Chriſt are, with Humility, poverty of Spirit, innocence of Mind, the temper of little Children, a diſregard to the World's Glories and Senſualities. They deteſted ſuch a Meſſiah, and counted it a diſgrace to be his Followers, who was oppoſite to all the World's Wickedneſs, and alien from all that the World magnifieth, whoſe Life and Spirit ſeemeth not at all ſublime and generous (and is repugnant to the high Spirit of the World) who not only bare the Croſs himſelf, but bringeth it upon all his Followers (whereas they were for their worldly Intereſts and Advantages and their mundane Religion) his unlikeneſs and manifold contrariety to them and to what they lik'd and affected, begat their vehement diſlike and diſaffection, as himſelf ſaith, Joh. 7. 7. The world cannot hate you, but me it hateth, becauſe I teſtifie of it, that the works thereof are evil. Agreebly whereto Plato ſaith in his Gorgias, τῷ αὐτῶν γὰρ ἤθει λεγομένων τῶν λόγων, ἕκαστοι χαίρουσι· τῷ δὲ ἀλλοτρίῳ ἄχθονται, all are pleas'd with thoſe Diſcourſes that are agreeable to their own manners, but diſturb'd with thoſe that are different from them. Ungodly mindedneſs diſpoſeth Men to diſguſt Divine Truth (as being many ways troubleſome and offenſive to them, diſgracing them, condemning them, making them to condemn themſelves, as being contrary to their vicious Affections, againſt what they are for, and what they like and affect;) it ſtrongly diſpoſeth them alſo to perſecute the Holy Life (againſt which there is in the evil Life and in evil Men a deadly Antipathy, as being every way contrariant to them, to their Inclinations and Intereſts, their party and mundane Felicity;) ſo many corruptions of the Mind as are in Men, ſo many Branches as there are of Ungodly mindedneſs (blindneſs, prejudice, inapprehenſiveneſs of Divine Things, careleſneſs and unconcernedneſs about them, perverſeneſs of Mind, hardneſs of Heart, averſation from Piety, Puſillanimity, carnal Zeal, various Branches of Pride, Covetouſneſs, Voluptuouſneſs, innumerable vicious Affections) ſo many Springs and Fountains there are of Unbelief, and ſo many latent Cauſes there are in Men diſpoſing them thereunto. The Faith of a Chriſtian Believer therefore is a truly noble Faith, who by the ſtrength of Rational and Divine Motives, a virtuous Diſpoſition and the aſſiſtance of Divine Grace, vanquiſheth ſo great a Proneneſs, as in Man's Nature to Infidelity, overcometh ſo great Difficulties, ſo many and great Impediments and Temptations, as incumber the Chriſtian Faith.

So the Faith of God's Believers in the times of the Old Teſtament was a godly noble Faith; for upon God's bare word they believ'd the things unſeen beyond and againſt the preſent appearances in Nature and to human Senſe, human Probabilities and Poſſibilities, human Reaſonings and Conceits, human Affections and Intereſts, human Confidences and Reliances. Men are too prone to judge of things according to the preſent appearances, and hardly believe, that they will be otherwiſe than at preſent they feel and find. In health and proſperity they are prone to think, that they ſhall never be moved, they ſhall never ſit as a Widow, who ſhall bring them down to the Ground? They are fearleſs Contemners of Temporal, much more of the Eternal Dangers, and make a puff at the ſtupendious Changes that are coming upon the World, becauſe there is no appearance of any ſuch things, but all things continue as they were, 2 Pet. 3. 3. The World joggeth on in a ſettled courſe, the Sun Riſing and Setting, the Moon increaſing and decreaſing, the Sea ebbing and flowing, the Earth producing its Fruits in their Seaſon, and who is not prone to this Infidel-conceit, that this orderly ſettled courſe of things will continue for ever? Men are not prone to believe Futurities, that like the plenty in Samaria tranſcend the Road of Nature, and are beyond all human probability and poſſibility. How few are there, that ſeriouſly believe, that the time is coming, when this Sun ſhall be turned into Darkneſs and this Moon into Blood (and ſhall for ever withdraw their ſhining) when this broad and wide Sea ſhall become a fiery Lake, and this now flouriſhing World with all its mighty Structures ſhall be ſack'd and ruin'd, and become a Sodom of deſolation? So the jolly World in Noah's days diſbeliev'd his Preachment of a Deluge, no ſuch thing being humanly probable or poſſible, and perhaps they thought him in jeſt, not in earneſt, as Lot ſeemed to his Sons-in-Law, and therefore they undauntedly follow'd their ſenſualizing trade. Matth. 24. 38. It was not humanly probable or poſſible, that Chriſt crucified ſhould be raiſed to be the King of Glory; nor is it more probable, that Chriſtians in Beaſts Skins ſhould be Pſal. 30. 6. Iſa. 47 8. Obad. 3.

2 King. 7. 2.

Gen. 19. 14.

clothed with Robes of Immortality: But God's Believers in their Faith tranſcend human Probabilities and Poſſibilities, as Abraham did, that conſider'd not his own Body now dead, neither yet the deadneſs of Sara's Womb. He ſtagger'd not at the promiſe of God through Unbelief. Rom. 4. 19, 20. (r) Not to ſteal, not to kill, τῶν τυχόντων ἐστὶ, theſe may be done by vulgar Souls: But to believe, that God can do things impoſſible, μεγαλοφυοῦς τινὸς δεῖται ψυχῆς καὶ σφόδρα περὶ αὐτὸν διακειμένης, this requireth an extraordinary Soul and an hugely pious Diſpoſition towards him. God's Believers ſurmount human Sence alſo (not looking at the things that are ſeen) they account not the matters of Sence the great Realities, nor the Goods and Evils of Sence the only, or the great Goods and Evils; nor do they count things glorious or vile, that appear ſo to human Sence; the great things of their Faith are ſuch, as the natural Man never ſaw or felt the like (they fall not within the Horizon of Sence or of his Experience) and therefore he is prone, to think them Fictions and meer Imaginations. As a poor Man of our Nation would not believe that there is any ſuch Summ as a Thouſand Pound, but that rich Men only talk'd of ſuch a thing, to excite poor Men to induſtry; and why was this, but becauſe he was a poor Man, and no ſuch Summ fell within the compaſs of his Sence and Experience? In the Faith there is nothing that contradicteth rightly circumſtantiated Sence or ſound Reaſon: But (s) τοὺς ἀνθρωπίνους ὑπερβῆναι ἐχρῆν λογισμοὺς, Faith muſt tranſcend human Conceits and Reaſonings, ſuch as that of the Scribes and Phariſees, Luk. 5. 21. the reaſoning of the Politicians, that the wiſeſt courſe is to be of the King's Religion; the reaſoning of the Philoſophers (that the Reſurrection of the Body is but another ſleep) the reaſoning of the Jews and Heathens, that it is abſurd to believe a crucified Man to be God, that the Son of God ought to have appear'd like the Sun in the Firmament, and that the Chriſtians were mad in ſuffering Martyrdom. Hath not God made fooliſh the Wiſdom of this World? Worldy Religioniſts have a Faith, which is an human Affection and a regard to the human Intereſts, they have a reſpect for their Country, the Laws and Faſhions of it, for their Anceſtors and their Education, and for the (Human) Authority of the great and learned, have any of the Phariſees believed on him? Joh. 7. 48. (t) Carnal Chriſtians have ſuch an honourable reſpect for Chriſt, as the Jews and Heathens had for their deceas'd Worthies (Men of Fame) their Benefactors and Saviours, and (in the main) are Unbelievers as well as they; for God's Believers act from diviner Principles, and are ſway'd by higher Motives and Intereſts. They that in the times of the Old Teſtament forſook their Fathers Houſe and their Country in queſt of an Heavenly, and confeſſed, that they were Pilgrims and Strangers on the Earth, ſurmounted the human Affections and Intereſts (which are uſually the great Impediments to Faith, as well as the origin of a counterfeit kind of Faith;) and the Believers in thoſe times alſo ſurmounted the human Confidences and Reliances, Gold, Wealth, the Arm of Fleſh, ſecular Policy and Prudence, Military Puiſſance and Preparations, the multitude of Mountains that ſurrounded their Cities and were a defence to them. There is therefore a Sublimity and Tranſcendency in the Faith of God's Believers, their believing is the practice of believing divinely, an honourable and noble Practice, which is a doing to God the greateſt Honour and Credit (and therefore he doth the greateſt Honour and Credit to Faith) and it is alſo at the greateſt rate honourary and ennobling to themſelves. But Infidel Conceits and Diſtruſts are baſe and vile; how baſe is it to diſcredit God, to blemiſh his unſtain'd Veracity and Faithfulneſs (Numb. 20. 12.) to disbelieve him, to ſuſpect him, to think him ſo poor a Patron, that we dare not venture our All in his Service? There is an immenſity of baſeneſs in being an Infidel.

(r) S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. λογ. η.

(s) Idem in Hebr. λογ. κϛ.

1 Cor. 1. 20.

(t) Dr. Jackſon of Juſtif. Faith. ch. 13, 14.

Job 21. 34. Pro. 3. 5. and 10. 15. Pſal. 33. 16. and 44. 6. and 52. 7. and 118. 9, 10. Iſa. 10. 13. Jer. 17. 5. Habak. 1. 16.

IV. The nature and nobleneſs of the Faith of God's Believers appeareth from a Third eminent Ingredient of it; they ſo believe the matters of God as to give them their due preheminence in goodneſs and importance. For their Faith conſiſteth not in believing meerly their Verity and Reality, but alſo their tranſcendent Worth and Concernment (which is a right judgment touching the Rate and Value of things) that their preſent Sufferings are not worthy to be compar'd with their future Glory, nor the things that are ſeen with the things that are not ſeen, nor their earthly All with the Kingdom, nor all the natural Man's gainful admir'd things with the Excellency of the Knowledge of Chriſt. When Moſes by Faith fear'd not the Wrath of a King as ſeeing him who is inviſible, he believ'd an immenſe diſproportion between a ſecular Grandee and the great God; and when he choſe rather to ſuffer Affliction, than to enjoy the Pleaſures of Sin, he believ'd that was the far better part which he choſe, and this was his Faith. (u) Even to rebuke or reproach for Chriſt's ſake be aſſented as good to him, yea better than all the treaſures of Egypt. The price of the World's Felicities is fallen very low in the Eyes of Divine Believers; for they believe the Account, which true Religion giveth of them, and their Faith in the Nature of it is a believing and thinking divinely (which is a right and godly perſwaſion) of the worth and importance of Goods and Evils, Viſible and Inviſible, Preſent and Future, of Man and of this Life, and of the human Goods and Excellencies, of the World, its Wants and Plenty, its Pleaſure and Pain, its Honour and Ignominy, of Afflictions, of Death and Judgment, of God and Religion, of Chriſt and his Kingdom, of Sin and Holineſs, of the Soul, of Life eternal and the ſecond Death. They that Believe and think divinely of the Worth and Importance of the Kingdom of God, prize it at the higheſt rate of prizing, and ſubject all things thereunto; they count it an infinitely valuable and deſireable Condition, abſolutely and indiſpenſably neceſſary, to be his Saints and Servants, and that nothing elſe is greatly valuable or deſireable; they reckon the Goods of the Kingdom the true ineſtimable Goods and the only true Goods, that muſt be gain'd at any rate; that Hardſhips and Afflictions are light and Loſſes are Gain for the Kingdom God's Sake; that his Favour is infinitely of more worth and advantage than all the World (which is as nothing in compariſon) that his loving kindneſs is better than Life (for which Life it ſelf is to be forſaken) and that a day in his Courts is better than a thouſand elſewhere. They ſet up God in that Sovereignty of eſteem and regard, which belongeth unto him, and as they do not diſcredit the truth of God in his Promiſes, ſo they do not baſely diſcredit him in their value and compute of things, by vilifying and undervaluing the infinite Good that he is in himſelf and Rom 8. 18. 2 Cor. 4. 18. Math. 13. 46. Phil. 3. 8.

(u) Dr. Jackſon ſupr. c. 7. p. 59.

and to his People, or by undervaluing his kind of Goods and Excellencies. They believe, that there is no compariſon, no proportion between gaining the World and ſaving the Soul, nor between the common mundane Goods and Excellencies and the ſaving Saint of God-kind of Goods and Excellencies; that this World is a Region of Vanity and Sin, Snares and Calamities (enough to denominate it an evil World and a World of Evils) and accordingly they depreciate it, vilifie it, nullifie it; they believe † that Sin is no underling Evil, Holineſs no underling Good; that Life eternal immenſly tranſcendeth this Life, and that Death eternal is an unfathomable Evil, both for weight and duration (the fulneſs and extremity of all Evil, as Life eternal is the fulneſs of all Good) ſo that in their reckoning of things the matters of God's Kingdom, their Sanctity and their Salvation have the duly paramount, the incomparably Peerleſs and Sovereign eſteem. (w) Cùm omnia quæcunque Deus non ſunt, præ Deo putent vilia & contemnenda, ſeipſos quoque inter cætera quæ Deus non ſunt, habent deſpicatui. Time was, when they ſet ſo highly by themſelves, that a diſparagement done to them was as a piece of Sacriledge, when they counted mundane Applauſe and a Preferment an Heaven upon Earth; thought it a ſuperlative Felicity, to flow in Wealth, to live in ſecular Splendor and Gallantry, and were dreadfully afraid of Poverty, Diſgrace and the Croſs; when they idoliz'd the gay and ſpecious things of the World and counted the Pleaſures of Sin better than an Holy Life: But when they become Divine Believers, their Bill of Rates is chang'd, they count themſelves leſs than the leaſt of God's Mercies, they believe a Conformity to Chriſt Crucify'd is their Nobilitation and Perfection, that all worldly Glory is Pageantry and Phantaſtry, all ſenſitive Delights are Dreams and Gulleries, the Pleaſures of Sin are mortiferæ ſuavitates (deadly Sweets, as Lactantius calleth them) the World's Gallantry and Honour is a puff and flaſh of Vanity, its Treaſure is gaud and trifle, its Furniture is not ſubſtantial Realities, but certain Phænomena, its Greatneſſes are light and little things, its Enjoyments are Bitter-ſweets (vexatious delectables) its Riches are as Cyphers in their Arithmetick (things very vain and unprofitable) an human Body they account a vile Body, and all the Concerns of this Life they reckon not worth any more than a mean concern and regard, that there is no very valuable Felicity but the Heavenly, which they ſhall fully enjoy, when they obtain their heavenly Bodies and arrive at the heavenly State of Life; and this their believing and judging of things ſo divinely, is their Holy Perſwaſion and their Faith. The view that they have of the great unſeen things, that are now exiſtent, and of the unſeen Rewards and Puniſhments which are to come (which far over-ballance all this World's Enjoyments and Sufferings) preſented to their Minds by Faith, maketh them ſeriouſly minded, daſheth out of countenance the World's Temptations, ſheweth them Reaſon to ſet light by it, Reaſon to be contented in a mean Station and a low Condition (when others are highly elevated) Reaſon to be ſeriouſly and ſtrictly Religious, Religious at any rate, to hope for a joyous and happy Iſſue, Reaſon to have no dealings with Sin upon any terms, and to reſiſt even unto Blood ſtriving againſt it.

They are of this Belief (x) that there is no compariſon between the evil of ſuffering and of ſinning againſt God. Clemens ſpeaketh the Sence of a Divine Believer. (y) He contemneth all the Gold that is upon the Earth, and under the Earth, and the Kingdom of the World from one end of the Ocean to the other (not accounting theſe mundane things the valuable conſiderable things, but nihileitates, as Tertullian calleth them) ſo to adhere to the alone Service of God. A wide difference therefore Faith maketh between a Worldly Man and a Divine Believer; for what the one counteth all, the other counteth as nothing. What the one maketh an Idol of, the other calleth Nehuſhtan. What the one calleth Home, the other calleth a ſtrange Land. What the one counteth gallantry, the other counteth baſeneſs; what the one magnifieth, the other vilifieth and trampleth on what he adoreth. Unuſquiſque ut affectus eſt, ita judicat. The one maketh light of Sin and Sanctity, which with the other infinitely preponderate and weigh down all. Heaven is with them no leſs than Heaven, and Hell is no leſs than Hell. The one maketh light of God and the things of his Kingdom and magnifieth the (ſorry ſordid) mundane things, the other maketh light of the World and magnifieth the great eternal things. The one maketh light of God's Favour and Frowns, the other maketh light of the World's Favour and Frowns; and it is not hard to ſay, on which part the nobleneſs lieth. For Virtue (as Lactantius inculcateth) conſiſteth in contemning thoſe things, that are the Portion of the wicked. To be a Divine Believer (z) is the work of a great and heavenly Mind (the Mind becometh ſuch by Faith) that is no longer inveigled with our things, as Philo ſaith of truſting to God alone. (a) Abraham (ſaith a Father) following God becauſe of the generoſity of his Faith became a Friend of God. Diogenes being ask'd, who were the nobleſt of Men? Made anſwer (b) the contemners of Riches, Glory, Pleaſure, Life, that conquer alſo the contrary things, Poverty, Diſgrace, Labour and Death.

V. The nature and nobleneſs of the Faith of God's Believers appeareth from a Fourth eminent Ingredient of it; they are Believers, his Believers, ſo as to be the true and faithful, which is their uſual Name in Scripture. So in the ancient Writers of the Church they are ſtiled (c) Fideles (contradiſtinguiſh'd to the Catechumeni) and ſo Sovereign Princes call their Liege-people (d) ſuos Fideles. The Name uſually occurreth in Feudal Law and Cuſtoms, which are of Affinity with the matters of Religion; for the Kingdom of God is of Affinity (as with other Kingdoms and Governments, ſo) with Feudal Kingdoms and Governments. Feudum, Fief or Fee, properly denoteth ſuch Lands and Tenements (e) that are given to a Man and his Heirs by a ſuperiour Lord as a Benefit (prædium beneficiarium) for which he oweth the Lord Fealty and Service, and he is ſaid, to hold them in Fee. He is the Client and the Feudatary, his Benefactor is his Patron and Lord-protector; and to each other they owe the Affection and are to do the Offices of Patron and Client. The Feudatary hath an Inveſtiture or Introduction into the Poſſeſſion of the Fee upon his taking an Oath of Fealty and Homage, wherein he ſweareth, to be true and faithful to his Lord and Patron; and in making Homage (which is Fides clientularis) the words are, Here venio in tuum hominium & fidem, & homo tuus fio; and they that by doing Fealty and Homage to a ſuperiour Lord become his Men (f) are in Feudal Law called Fideles, and till they openly prevaricate, are look'd upon as Fideles homines. Theſe Feudal Tenures ſeem to have been begun by Seſoſtris or his Father in Egypt; (g) for Seſoſtris granted to his Soldiers, Feuda militaria à vectigalibus immunia & jure hæreditario tenenda: But the Goths and Vandals introduc'd them into theſe parts of Europe, where they took ſuch place, that formerly in our Nation all the Subjects by Feudal Tenures held their Lands of the King, who was their Liege-Lord, and they were his Liege-Men and Fideles. (h) For all with us that have Fee, hold per fidem & fiduciam, that is, by Fealty. In the ſame manner the Subjects and Citizens of the Kingdom of God (in this World) have and hold their Spiritual Eſtates, and have an Inveſtiture in the Sacraments of the Chriſtian Religion, and conſequently they muſt be look'd upon as his Fideles in the Notion of Feudal Law. But not only in Feudal Law, but in other Governments alſo where Feudal Law hath no place, (i) the Subjects becauſe of their Allegiance to the King (their Sovereign Leige-Lord) are look'd upon as his Fideles and Liege-people. And for the ſame reaſon God's Believers and Liege-people (the Subjects and Citizens of his Kingdom) are called and counted Fideles, his Fideles; for they are denominated the Faithful (partly at leaſt) upon account of their Faithfulneſs. Their Faith therefore conſiſteth in believing God and the matters of God, ſo as to be the true and ſincere, the loyal and faithful, and it muſt neceſſarily involve and comprehend in it the Moral Virtue of Faithfulneſs. For to be unfaithful and perfidious, Children wherein there is no Faith, is a grand inconſiſtency with Faith and incompetible to the Faithful. (k) Quid facit in domo Fidei perfidum Pectus? As the Eſſence and Being of the King's Fideles (as ſuch) conſiſteth in being true and faithful: So doth the Eſſence and Being of Chriſt's Fideles. Counterfeit Money (that is but a ſhew and ſemblance of Money) is not Money, and counterfeit Helmets (that are but a falſe and fallacious appearance) are not Helmets. To be a Friend and to be a true Friend, is but the ſame thing: So to be a Believer (one of Chriſt's Friends) is nothing leſs than to be a true Believer. And as the Eſſence of a true Friend conſiſteth in being true and faithful: So doth the Eſſence of a true Believer; for this is that which conſtituteth and diſtinguiſheth a true Believer as contradiſtinct to an Hypocrite or Cheat-religioniſt. Faith without faithfulneſs (unfaithful and faithleſs Faith) is the counterfeit of true Faith, oppoſite to the Nature and Eſſence of it, as counterfeit Humility is to the true Humility. No other Faith is God's Believers believing, no other Faith can conſtitute God's Believers, but that which conſtituteth his Liege-people, who cannot be conſtituted ſuch but by their Faithfulneſs. (l) Faith muſt be conſider'd as the buſineſs of being God's Believers. To believe, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, that he is the Son of God, that he is the Lord (which is the Chriſtians juſtifying and ſaving Faith, Joh. 20. 31. 1 Joh. 5. 5. Rom. 10. 9. Phil. 2. 11.) is ſo to believe theſe things of him, as to be his Believers, who are his faithful People, and are conſtituted ſuch by their Faith, which is incluſively and comprehenſively their Faithfulneſs. To believe on his Name is (in the ſenſe of Scripture) duly to believe on his Name, which is duly to receive him, and duly to receive him, is to receive him as our Divine Sovereign Liege-Lord and Saviour-King. Luk. 2. 11. Joh. 1. 12. and 4. 42. therefore to believe on his Name, is to become his faithful People, which is of the Nature and Eſſence of the Chriſtians Faith. Their Faith is Faith unfeigned, 1 Tim. 1. 5. a believing in the Heart. Rom. 10. 9. A believing with all the Heart. Act. 8. 37. And with a true Heart. Heb. 10. 22. The Jews ſay of their Cabala (which is their Faith objectively underſtood) it profiteth not, unleſs it be receiv'd with a good Heart: Nor will the Chriſtian Faith objectively underſtood profit any, if they receive it not into an honeſt and good Heart, Luk. 8. 15.

---

† V. S. Chryſoſt. Ἀνδριαντ. i. p. 492. & l. 5. λογ. 3. ſub. fin.

(w) Viv. Not. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 9. c. 22.

(x) Quas non oportet mortes præ eligere, quod non ſupplicium potiùs ferre, imò in quam profundam inferni abyſſum non intrare, quàm contra conſcientiam atteſtari? Zuinglius Ep. 3.

(y) Χρυσὸν μὲν πάντα τὸν ἐπὶ γῆς καὶ ὑπὸ γῆν καὶ βασιλείαν τὴν ἀπὸ περάτων ἐπὶ πέρατα ὠκεανοῦ ὑπερορῶν, ὡς μόνης τῆς τοῦ κυρίου ἀντέχεσθαι θεραπείας. Strom. l. 7. p. m. 536.

(z) Μεγάλης καὶ ὀλυμπίου διανοίας ἔργον ἐστι, πρὸς οὐδενὸς οὐκέτι δελεαζομένης τῶν παρ' ἡμῖν. Philo. Quis rer. div. hær. p. 335. Ed. Gr. Paris.

(a) Abraham propter generoſitatem fidei ſequens, amicus factus eſt Dei. Iren. adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 27.

(b) Οἱ καταφρονοῦντες πλούτου, δόξης, ἡδονῆς, ζωῆς, τῶν δὲ ἐναντίων ὑπεράνω ὄντες, πενίας, ἀδοξίας, πόνου, θανάτου. Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 46.

(c) Tertull. de præſcript. c. 41. de exhort caſtit. c. 4.

(d) Seld. Titles p. 569. Ed. 3.

(e) Cowell Interpret. in voce Fee & Homage.

Faith juſtifieth Men, becauſe they are conſtituted God's Believers by it, but they muſt be ſincere Believers, whom God approveth of and juſtifieth. Act. 15. 8. It is a marvellous Irreligionizing the Chriſtian Religion, to ſuppoſe, that Men are juſtified by Faith only without any conſideration of their Sincerity and Faithfulneſs. For as that is not Faith indeed, which doth not involve in the Nature and Eſſence of it Sincerity and Faithfulneſs: So it is impoſſible, but that in God's Juſtification of Men the Sincere muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the Hypocrites, and conſequently they muſt be juſtified as the Sincere. To whom is it that God doth not impute Iniquity, but to thoſe (only) in whoſe Spirit there is no guile? Pſal. 32. 2. Men become Chriſt's People by Faith, but their Faith muſt be the Chriſtian Believers Faith (or Believing) which is not meerly an interiour Aſſent to the Verities of the Chriſtian Religion, but this Faith muſt be profeſs'd in Baptiſm, and therefore muſt be not meerly Faith, but Faith profeſs'd. Rom. 10. 9, 10. And the Covenanting on our part which is in Baptiſm, is alſo the Chriſtian Believers Faith (or Believing;) for their believing on Chriſt is a believing on him, ſo as to be his Fideles, which is of the Nature and Eſſence of their (Faith or) believing as it is ſuch. They have their Juſtification by the new Covenant, the Benefits whereof they cannot poſſibly be Partakers of otherwiſe than by entring into this Holy Covenant (by being faithful new Covenanters;) if therefore they are juſtified by (Faith or) Believing, this Chriſtian Covenanting the ſtipulation of a good Conſcience towards God (whereby they are ſaved, 1 Pet. 3. 22.) muſt be their Faith as being of the Nature and Eſſence of their Chriſtian Believing as it is ſuch. The buſineſs of their believing on Chriſt is their faithful Conſent (as well as Aſſent) whereby they are joined unto the Lord, 1 Cor. 6. 17. eſpouſed to him, 2 Cor. 11. 2. give themſelves unto the Lord, 2 Cor. 8. 5. are brought into the Bond of his Covenant, Ezek. 20. 32. and become his Liege-people, Heb. 8. 10. For none but his Fæderati (the People of the Holy League and Covenant) are his Liege-people,

(f) Calvin. Lex. in voce Fideles.

(g) Marſham Can. Chr. p. m. 391.

(h) Cowell in voce Fealty.

(i) Calvin. ſupr.

(k) S. Cypr. de op. & Eleem.

(l) Moſe manni Et mologiam habet à verbo Ala ma, quod ſe dedit, obtemperavit ac Fidelis fa ctus e, denotat. Hotting. H. O. p. 3 ed. 1.

People, none but they are in the State of Society with him and his People, and none but they are his Allies; for the French rightly call the new Covenant the new Alliance. Their ſubjection to the Goſpel of Chriſt (and conſequently their ſubjection to Chriſt himſelf) 2 Cor. 9. 13. their coming to Chriſt as to their Celeſtial Sovereign, Joh. 6. 35. their taking upon them his Yoke, or their faithful undertaking Chriſtianity, Matth. 11. 29. their forſaking all things ſo far as they come in compariſon and ſtand in competition with Chriſt and ſaving Chriſtianity, Luk. 14. 26, 33. are included in their believing. Which therefore involveth and includeth their abandoning and caſhiering all things on this ſide the Kingdom of God (this Life and all its Accommodations) ſo far as not to make them the matters of their great Affection and Concern (m) ἀπροσπαθῶς βιῶν, to live without inordinate Affection; their abandoning all worldly Hopes and Deſires (for the Hope that is laid up for them in Heaven) to make an heavenly Intereſt the care and buſineſs of their Life (I have relinquiſh'd all worldly Deſires, ἐφ' ᾧ Χριστῷ συνεταξάμην, ever ſince I made my Covenant with Chriſt, ſaith Gr. Naz.) their chuſing the good part (the Holy Life) though it bringeth a Croſs with it, and diſcarding the Pleaſures of Sin and the Vanities of the World, and their becoming the faithful Friends to God and Holineſs and the faithful Enemies to Sin and Wickedneſs. Salvian therefore had Reaſon to ſay (n) cùm hoc ſit hominis Chriſtiani fides, fideliter Chriſti mandata ſervare. So Gaudentius Brixianus ſaith, fidem Dei ſervat, qui mandati ejus jura non violat. Was not Abraham found faithful in Temptation, and it was imputed to him for Righteouſneſs? 1 Macab. 2. 52. True Believers are faithful to their Principles of Faith, and their Elections and Affections, their Care and Endeavour are agreeable to what they believe touching the immenſe diſproportion (in Worth and Importance) between God and Men, the World and the Soul, Earth and Heaven, things Temporal and Eternal, and touching the abſolute indiſpenſable neceſſity of ſecuring their Sanctity and Salvation. As one of their great Principles of Faith is the tranſcendent Excellency and Concernment of Chriſt and Chriſtianity above all human Goods and Excellencies and all worldly Intereſts: So in Will and Affection, in Care and Endeavour they ſerve him (as his faithful Friends and Adherents) not in the underling unfaithful way, but with their beſt and their all and at any rate, never denying him, nor being traiterouſly undutiful to him, nor taking part with his Enemies, befriending his Intereſt and Service, relieving him in his Members, conforming themſelves to his Precepts and Pattern, and adhering to him to the Death. And this their Faithfulneſs is of the Nature and Eſſence of their Faith, as it is their Faith (of which Temptations are the Trial, 1 Pet. 1. 7.) and it is alſo the great ennoblement of their Faith. For what is it, that commendeth and ennobleth a Servant, a Steward, a Soldier, a Wife, a Friend, a Subject, but their unſtained Loyalty and Faithfulneſs? There is no greater nobleneſs of Diſpoſition and Practice than unblemiſh'd Faithfulneſs, which Plato calleth the greateſt of Virtues, and is the Eſſence and ſummary of Virtue. 1 Pet. 2. 22. Apoc. 14. 5. Nor is there any greater baſeneſs and villainy of Diſpoſition and Practice than Unfaithfulneſs (Pſal. 5. 9.) which is the Eſſence and ſummary of Wickedneſs. The Romans built Temples to Faith (Fidelity) and were taught by Numa to Swear by it; for he ſuppos'd Unfaithfulneſs ruinous to Society, (o) τὸν δὲ πιστὸν εἰς φιλίαν ἐνάρμοστον, but a faithful Man to be fit for Friendſhip. A faithful Man (whom the Jews call bar Samcha, filius baſis, filius ſuſtentaculi, one whoſe Fidelity you may build upon) is according to the Poet Theognis more precious than Gold and Silver. Πιστὸς ἀνὴρ χρυσοῦ τε ϗ ἀργύρου ἀντερύσασθαι Ἄξιος.

(m) Clem. Str. l. 4. p. 351.

(n) Petav. T. 4. l. 9. c. 3.

(o) Procl. Plat. Theol. l. 1. c. 25. p. 62. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 12. c. 2. Clem. Str. l. 2. p. 270.

VI. The nature and nobleneſs of the Faith of God's Believers appeareth from a Fifth eminent Ingredient of it; they believe Divine Matters ſo affectively and effectually, as to practice divinely. For they love and live divinely, becauſe they believe divinely. Their Faith is of this Nature (although this is no adequate definition of it) it is the Subſtance of things hoped for, the Evidence of things not ſeen. Heb. 11. 1. (p) The great unſeen things ſeem to have no Subſiſtence, but Faith giveth them a Subſiſtence. (q) And it ſheweth thoſe things as Subſiſtent, which are yet to come to paſs. (r) In ſome ſort it maketh them to be and to be preſent. A certain undoubted perſwaſion (ſaith the Chriſtian Proclus) maketh that which is abſent in time, to be to our Cogitation as preſent, and the things that are expected and look'd for σχεδὸν ὑπ' ὄψιν ἄγει, it almoſt ſetteth before our Eyes. Faith therefore maketh abſent things as preſent, things remote as nigh at hand; it realizeth things that do not appear to have any Subſiſtence, and maketh evident the things unſeen, as if we ſaw them with our bodily Eyes. And this view of the great unſeen things preſented to Believers Minds by Faith maketh (in great degree) the ſame impreſſion upon their Souls, which the ſight of them would make, and exciteth in them thoſe Affections, which would be excited, if they ſaw them with their Eyes. They have ſuch a reverential regard for the Divine Majeſty, as if they ſaw him that is inviſible. An unſeen Heaven enkindleth their Deſires, exciteth their Endeavours, animateth them in their Labours and Sufferings ſo potently and vigorouſly, as if they had look'd into Heaven, and had ſeen the inexpreſſible Glories and Felicities that are there. The glorious and terrible Phænomena of the day of Judgment awaken them now, as all Men will be awakened by them, when they ſee them. The Conflagration of the Earth and an unſeen Hell, influence their Minds, affect their Souls, govern their Lives, and they concern themſelves to eſcape the fiery Indignation (that will devour the Adverſary) as if the flames were now enkindling about their Ears. As their Faith is built upon ſolid Grounds, ſo they have ſolid Apprehenſions and a ſound Belief of the great inviſible things, and are deeply and ſolidly affected with them. They are lively and ſolidly perſwaded of their reality and importance, as if they were matters of Sence; and they have an operative force upon them, as if they ſaw them and look'd on them (for their Faith is a kind of (s) Eye-ſight and Fore-ſight, and the true θεῖον ὄμμα, Divine Eye:) But vulgar Minds are not better'd by thoſe ſlight Notices and that ſuperficial Belief, which they have of the great unſeen things. God and his adorable Attributes are as light things with

(p) Ἀνυπόστατα εἶναι δοκεῖ, ἡ πίστις ὑπόστασιν αὐτοῖς χαρίζεται. S. Chryſoſt.

(q) Καὶ δείκνυσιν ὡς ὑφεστῶτα τὰ μηδέπω γεγενημένα. Theodoret.

(r) Εἶναι αὐτὰ ϗ παρεῖναι τρόπον τινὰ παρασκευάζουσα. Oecumen.

Heb. 11. 27.

(s) V. S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. λογ. 3.

them as the Aerial Meteors, they toſs his Name in their Mouths at pleaſure, his preſence doth not awe them from perpetrating Wickedneſs (not ſo much as the preſence of a Child) they ſlight his Service, and fear not to provoke his Sovereign Juſtice and Power. Heaven maketh no more impreſſion upon their Minds, than if it was a Fairy Iſland or Land of Utopia, that hath no exiſtence. Hell is to theſe ſuperficial Believers but as a Poetick Fable, and hath not ſo much power and prevalency with them, as a Mawkin hath with the Crows, that frighteth them from the Corn. For all the Horrours of Eternity do not reſtrain their ravenous Luſts, nor damp their extravagant Mirth, nor make them ſeriouſly concern'd for their future State: but their All is to make their preſent Markets, and they live, as if there was nothing to come hereafter.

(t) Claudian. l. 2. in Eutrop.

(t) Sed quàm cœcus ineſt vitiis amor? omne futurum
Deſpicitur, ſuadentque brevem præſentia fructum.

As this World is a World of unholy Unbelievers, ſo that part of it which is called Chriſtian muſt be look'd upon as (in great degree) immers'd in Infidelity; for Hypocrites are not in the Faith, 2 Cor. 13. 5. they are a ſort of Unbelievers, Matth. 24. 51. compar'd with Luk. 12. 46. their cuſtomary, ſlight and dead opinionative Belief ſaveth them not from the Sin, and Vices, and Diſeaſes of Infidelity, nor from the ſtate of Infidels, nor do they believe the holy Faith, or believe in Chriſt, any otherwiſe than ſo as in the main to deny him, and to be worſe than Infidels, which is not Faith, but want of Faith. To believe, that God is, and yet to be audacious ungodly Sinners, and to live without God in the World; to believe, that the Soul is of more concernment than all the World, yet to be little concerned what becometh of the Soul; to believe the Heavenly Realities, yet to neglect them and purſue Worldly Vanities; to believe, that there is an Hell for the Ungodly, and that Sin will make them caſt-aways, yet not to caſt away their Sins; to believe the Chriſtian Religion, and that it conſiſteth in living ſoberly, righteouſly and godly, yet like the (u) ancient Aſcrogodytæ to introduce the Bacchanalia into the Church; to pretend to a Religion, the only ſaving Religion, yet to deſtroy the Eſſence, Buſineſs and deſign of it; to believe a great Day of Accounts, yet to make no recknoning of it; to believe, that they muſt be happy or miſerable for ever, as they live here, and yet to be regardleſs how they live, to be careful for a Moment and careleſs for Eternity: This is a monſtrouſly wild and abſurd, not a reaſonable and religious kind of believing, not God's Believers believing. Their Faith is the archical and radical part of their Holineſs, as the Philoſophers Decreta or Dogmata (w) were archical and radical to their inſtitution of Virtue) it repreſenth to their Minds the nature, neceſſity and reaſons of Holineſs, the mighty motives and obligations, helps and aſſiſtances thereto, and becauſe of their lively Faith they live the life of Faith, Gal. 2. 20. Their Faith is cauſal and productive of all Holineſs of Soul and of Life, purifieth their inward Man, produceth Love (an appreciative and affectionate love to him in whom they believe) Charity is from a pure Heart and Faith unfeigned. By Faith they ſucceſsfully manage their holy warfare againſt Sin and Temptations, 1 Tim. 6. 12. reſiſt the Devil and repell his fiery Darts, 1 Pet. 5. 9. Eph. 6. 16. And this is the victory that overcometh the World, even our Faith, 1 Joh. 5. 4. As Infidelity is the Root and Source of all Sin and Wickedneſs and want of Godlineſs: So the Faith of God's Believers is the Source and Origin of all Piety and Divine Virtue, 2 Pet. 1. 5. Act. 26. 18. They believe that the Fruit of Holineſs is the Favour of God and Life Eternal, and that the neglect of it is the forfeiture of all their ineſtimable Goods, and they believe it ſo effectually, that they willingly undergo any labour, hardſhip or ſufferings in an holy courſe of life, and they will be holy, (x) μετὰ πολλοῦ δρόμου καὶ ἀγῶνος, though it coſteth them a great conflict, ſtriving and agony. They believe, that Sin is now deadly, and will iſſue in the ſecond Death, and they believe it ſo effectually, that their great care is to kill that which is killing to the life of God and to the Soul, they flee from Sin as from the Face of a Serpent (Eccluſ. 21. 2.) and will rather venture into the Fire than venture upon ſinning againſt God. They believe the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and believe it ſo effectually, that they are dreſſing their Lamps with Oyl, to meet the Heavenly Bridegroom, Matth. 25. 7. They believe the World to be ſo vain and vile as it is, and that they have no very valuable poſſeſſions or accommodations of life on this ſide Heaven; and they believe it ſo effectually, that their Souls are alienated from the World, and they are heavenly affected and addicted, Phil. 3. 20. By Faith Heaven becometh the Object of their Eſteem, Love and Deſire, and they ſojourn here on Earth as in a ſtrange Country. Faith baniſheth their puſillanimous Fears, withereth this World's Gayeties in their Eyes, vanquiſheth Adverſities, inſpireth them with Fortitude and Magnanimity, and maketh them ſtrong and invincible in their Piety, able to do and bear and ſuffer all things. By Faith (the Comforts and Supports which it affordeth) the hardeſt and nobleſt duties of Godlineſs become eaſie to them, they run the Chriſtian Race with patience, it putteth fervour into their Prayers and vigour into their Piety, and by Faith they live and die in peace and joyous hopes, Rom. 15. 13. Heb. 6. 12. and 10. 37. Faith is the Leader in an holy Converſation (Heb. 13. 7.) and the holy motions and operations of a Divine Believer (all his good works) are from Faith, as the motion of a Watch is from the Spring, (y) operatur quia credit, he worketh, becauſe he believeth. By Faith he doeth the greateſt and ſuffereth the heavieſt things. (z) Laus eſt fidei, fiducia futurorum mundi adverſa tolerare: This is a noble Faith, from a perſwaſion of things to come to bear the World's Adverſities. (a) The Primitive Chriſtians and the Saints of the Old Teſtament (their Heroical Virtues) are great Inſtances of the noble iſſues and productions of Faith; whence Daniel could not be frighted from his Devotions by a Lion's Den, and the three Hebrew Youths his Companions were (b) in fide fortes, in captivitate victores, ſtrong in Faith, victorious in Captivity. The doings of the Men of Faith are ſo highly noble and excellent, that Clemens muſt be impeach'd as guilty of a groſs extravagance in making God's Believers undergraduates to his Phantaſtick Gnoſtick. (c) Every practice of a Gnoſtick is well-doing in perfection; but the practice of one that is meerly a Believer may be ſaid to be of a middle rank, as not being freed from imperfecti-

(u) Baron. ad an. 373. n. 34.

(w) Lipſ. Manud. l. 2. diſſ. 12.

Act. 15. 9.
1 Pet. 1. 22.
Gal. 5. 6.
1 Pet. 1. 7.
1 Joh. 4. 10, 19.

(x) Max. Hom.

(y) S. Cypr. de op. & eleem.

(z) Idem de Zel. & Liv.

(a) Idem ad Demetr.

(b) Idem de orat. domin.

(c) Καὶ πᾶσα πρᾶξις, γνωστικοῦ μὲν κατόρθωμα· τοῦ δὲ ἁπλῶς πιστοῦ, μέση πρᾶξις λέγοιτ᾽ ἂν, μηδέπω κατὰ λόγον ἐπιτελουμένη, μηδὲ μὴν κατ᾽ ἐπίστασιν κατορθουμένη. παντὸς δὲ ἔμπαλιν τοῦ ἐθνικοῦ, ἁμαρτητική. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 48 on by Reaſon, nor rais'd to perfection by Science: on the other hand, the practice of every Pagan is ſinful.

VII. It appeareth from this account of Juſtifying Faith (of which it is very difficult to repreſent a juſt Idea) that it muſt not be counted the Aggregate of all Divine Graces (although it virtually containeth them) but a diſtinct particular Virtue. And if it muſt be ſo conſider'd, it is reaſonable to ask the reaſon of its peculiar juſtifying Virtue, why Men are juſtify'd by Faith rather than by any other Divine Virtue? Many reaſons of this difference are plain and obvious; for it is Faith peculiarly that ſymbolizeth with God, that maketh the alliance which his Divine People have to him, that conſtituteth them a Divine People in Mind and Life, that is archical and radical to all Godlineſs, and it is by the Religion of Saving Grace (ſupernatural and ſuperlegal Grace) that Men muſt be juſtify'd; for which reaſons they muſt have their Juſtification as God's Believers. Upon their becoming ſuch and as ſuch they are juſtify'd by a creative Act as to the having the ſtate of the Righteous, which is S. Paul's Notion of Juſtification. But they that are thus juſtified by a creative Act as to the having the ſtate of the Righteous, are juſtified alſo by a judicial-ſentential Act as to the being counted the really Righteous in diſpoſition and practice (God judgeth them that are the ſincere Believers the really Righteous in diſpoſition and practice) and this is S. James's notion of Juſtification. Theſe two Apoſtles do not ſpeak of the ſame kind of Faith; for the one ſpeaketh of the Saving, the other of the Hiſtorical kind of Faith. Nor do they ſpeak of the ſame kind of Works; for the one ſpeaketh of the Law-religioniſts Works, and the other ſpeaketh of the Works of Faith. But both of them ſpeak of one and the ſame Juſtification conſider'd under two different Notions: For S. James ſpeaketh of it, as it is the judging and counting a Man one of the really Righteous in diſpoſition and practice; and how can he be ſo juſtified by God, as to be judged and counted one of the really Righteous in diſpoſition and practice (a Doer of Righteouſneſs) but by his Works? For he that doeth Righteouſneſs is Righteous, 1 Joh. 3. 7. God's Believers may be conſider'd meerly as they are God's Believers. So S. Paul conſidereth them: and they may be conſider'd, as they are God's Believers in their Works and Doings, and ſo S. James conſidereth them. For Abraham was God's Believer in offering up his only Son, Jam. 2. 21. Rahab was God's Believer, and as ſuch preſerved the Spies, Jam. 2. 25. Both were great works of Faith, both were eminently God's Believers in their doings. And both they and all others that are God's Believers, are ſo juſtify'd by God, as to be judged and counted the Righteous in diſpoſition and practice, becauſe they are God's Believers in their doings, which is their Juſtification by Works. All that become God's Believers neceſſarily become God's Believers in their (internal and external Converſation) Works and Doings. (d) Ψεύδεται τὸν θεὸν, ὃς οὐ πιστεύει τῷ θεῷ· οὐ πιστεύει δὲ, ὁ μὴ ποιῶν ἃ ἐνετείλατο· He falſifieth God, who doth not believe God; and he doth not believe him, who doeth not the things that he hath commanded. (e) Fidei noſtræ veritatem in vitæ noſtræ conſideratione debemus agnoſcere. The truth of our Faith appeareth from the conſideration of our Life. They that are God's Believers indeed, are God's Believers in their Works and Doings. As God's Believers they are ſo juſtify'd, as to have the ſtate of Righteouſneſs given them, as S. Paul affirmeth; as God's Believers in their Works and Doings they are ſo juſtify'd, as to be judged and counted the Righteous in diſpoſition and practice, as S. James affirmeth. And thus it appeareth, that there is no diſagreement between theſe two Apoſtles.

SECTION III.

Of the Religion of the Holy Men of the Old Teſtament-times, and how far they were Chriſtians.

I. THE Hypotheſis of Pelagius that in the times of the Old Teſtament Men were ſaved by Nature and by the Law, (f) is well refuted by the Anti-pelagian Fathers; whence ſome modern Writers of Inſtitutions of Theology appear, to have committed a foul miſtake, in conſidering the Ancient Times of the Old Teſtament, which are called the Times of Natural Religion, as in ſuch Senſe the Times of Natural Religion, that the Chriſtian Religion was not in thoſe Times. For this World never ſaw any Church of God, or any Saints of God that were made ſuch meerly by Natural Religion. Ever ſince there hath been a Church on Earth, there hath been a Religion of Saving Grace. The ancient Saints conſtituted the Church, and ſo ſoon as any Saints were in the World, the Church was in the World, (g) Ex quo vocantur Sancti Eccleſia eſt in terrâ: but to ſuppoſe, that there were real Saints in this degenerate World without the Religion of Saving Grace is a contradiction. This Religion therefore (although it had not a plenary Introduction till our Saviour's coming, yet) had an initial Introduction in the Old Teſtament-times, and throughout thoſe times (from the beginning of the World) there was The initial Religion of Saving Grace, An initial Chriſtianiſm, which was the Religion of Holy Men in the Old Teſtament-times, who may be called Chriſtians but not without ſeveral Limitations.

Firſt, They were ſo far Chriſtians, their Religion was that Religion of Saving Grace, which was in the times of Judaiſm. For not only in the times of the Moſaic Law, but all along from the beginning of the World throughout the times of the Old Teſtament the Religion of Saving Grace was complicated with ritual and typical Judaiſm, elſe it had not been initially, but plenarily introduc'd in the Old Teſtament-times; elſe the Old Teſtament had not been one continu'd Prophecy (in Types as well as Words) of our Lord Chriſt and his Religion; elſe there would not be always a due difference between the Old and New Teſtament, nor would the New Teſtament be always involv'd in the Old; nor is this queſtionable without queſtioning the Scriptures Hiſtorical account of ancient times. For as Circumciſion was not of Moſes, but of the Fathers; ſo the Judaical Sacrifices and Oblations, were not of Moſes, but of Cain and Abel. And if theſe Typical Judaical Rites (with ſome other) were introduc'd from the beginning of the World, ſhall it not be thought, that Typical and Ritual Judaiſm was introduc'd ſo early as well as Chriſtianity? and ſhould not the times of the Law of Nature commonly ſo called, be ſtil'd the times of Initial Judaiſm? There is therefore a great miſtake in the more ancient Writers of the Primitive Church, who (diſputing againſt Judaiſm and Judaizers) aſſert, that in the eldeſt times of the World, (h) ὁ Ἰουδαϊσμὸς οὐκ ἦν, Judaiſm was

(d) Clem. Str. l. 4. p. m. 358.

(e) Greg. M. Hom. 29. in Evang.

(f) Voſſ. Hiſt. Pel. l. 3. par. 2. Antith. 10.

(g) S. Aug.

Joh. 7. 22. Gen. 4. 3, 4.

(h) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 6.

was not (i) that they liv'd and were Religious according to the Goſpel of Chriſt, Χριστιανικῶς, ἀλλ' οὐχ ἰουδαϊκῶς, Chriſtianly but not Judaically. So in the Epiſtles of Ignatius the Magneſians are exhorted, to live according to Chriſtianiſm, not according to Judaiſm for this reaſon; οἱ γὰρ θειότατοι προφῆται, for the moſt Divine Prophets liv'd according to Chriſt Jeſus, for which cauſe they were perſecuted. As if the Prophets did not live according to the Rites of Judaiſm, as if they rejected God's Inſtitutes of Religion, which were of obligatory force in their time; for ſo Ignatius addeth, μηκέτι σαββατίζοντες, they ceas'd to obſerve the Sabbath. J. Mart. ſaith of Abel, Enoch, Noah, Lot, Melchizedek, (k) All the forenamed juſt Men pleaſed God without obſerving the Sabbath, and ſo did Abraham after them, and all his Children until Moſes. And thus he argueth againſt the Jews: (l) If before Abraham there was no need of Circumciſion, nor any need of obſerving the Sabbath and of Feaſts and Oblations before Moſes, neither is there now. (m) Irenæus and Tertullian call Abel, Enoch, Noah, Melchizedek, each one of theſe incircumciſum nec ſabbatizantem, but they do not forget with J. Mart. that the Judaical Oblations were of far greater ſtanding than Moſes, as old as the beginning of the World. But theſe Epiphanius forgetteth; for ſpeaking of the times before the Flood he ſaith, (n) Judaiſm then was not, nor other Hereſie, but as I may ſo ſpeak, the Faith which now is, this being from the beginning in the Holy Catholick Church of God, and again revealed in after-times. Euſebius without any exception or limitation reporteth of Melchiſedek, that he was the Prieſt of the moſt high God, yet not circumcis'd, nor anointed, nor did he know what the Sabbath is, (o) nor was he at all acquainted with any of thoſe Rites, which after theſe were injoyned the whole Jewiſh Nation: but on the contrary he liv'd according to Chriſt's Goſpel. Of Noah he ſaith, (p) He was not acquainted with any of the Judaical Rites, nor with Circumciſion of the Body, nor any other of the Inſtitutes of Moſes. Who could imagine, that Men of Learning ſhould thus contradict the Scriptures (in plain matters of fact) and themſelves alſo? For within a few Pages Euſebius betaketh himſelf, to aſſign the reaſons, why we do not offer Sacrifices to God ὁμοίως τοῖς παλαιοῖς, as thoſe Ancients did, that were ſo highly beloved of God. The Religion of Judaical Sacrifices (and the differencing clean from unclean Animals, Gen. 7. 2.) was their Religion, which is a demonſtration, that their Religion was (initial) ritual Judaiſm, and that theſe are extremely falſe and injudicious Conceits, (q) that all who from the beginning of Mankind are famous for Juſtice and Religion, as Moſes the great Servant of God and Abraham before him and his Sons, and ſo many righteous Men and Prophets as were afterwards, ſaw the Divine Logos with the pure Eyes of their Mind, and knew him, and gave him due worſhip as to the Son of God. (r) That out of great love to Mankind the Divine Logos ſometimes by Viſions of Angels appear'd to his Subjects, ſometimes by himſelf (as being the ſalutary power of God) in the form of a Man he appear'd to one and another of the ancient beloved Men of God. (s) that before the Law of Moſes there were νομίματε ἄλλα καὶ ἐντολαὶ Χριστοῦ, δι' ὧν ἐδικαιώθησαν, other Laws and Commandments of Chriſt, whereby the Ancients were juſtify'd, the New Teſtament being no other than that way of Piety and pious Converſation, which was more ancient than the times of Moſes, which was hidden as it were from Men, when the Law of Moſes was introduc'd, but was reviv'd and reſtor'd by the Diſcipline of our Saviour.

This Scheme of Theology affirmeth, that God hath not only in theſe laſt Days ſpoken unto us by his Son, but that in the firſt and eldeſt times the Son of God appear'd, and gave his Law, Religion and Teſtament to the Fathers, who obſerv'd it and liv'd according to it, and did not only as Prophets ſee Chriſt's Day, but they ſaw him with their Eyes, convers'd and were acquainted with him, and therefore had no reaſon, to long for his coming in the Fleſh, nor had the Pagans any reaſon, to demand the cauſe of his coming ſo late, for according to this Hypotheſis he came very early, and long before the time of his coming which the Scripture ſpeaketh of (and conſequently his coming in the Fleſh was his ſecond coming) nor could the end of his coming (in Fleſh) be a new Creation of what was not before, but a reviving and reſtoring of what had been long before, but had ſuffer'd a great interruption. Accordingly this is ſaid to be our Saviour's Language, (t) I recall all Men to the pious and godly life of the Men, that were of old time beloved of God, without excepting their Polygamy and Sacrifices, which ſurely are not ſuch a way of Life and Religion, as is according to Chriſt's Goſpel. If the Ancients before the Law had the New Teſtament, as we have, how are the Imperfections of their Life and Religion excuſable from the Imperfection of their Inſtitution? how is it, that without us they could not be made perfect? how was the Goſpel a Secret from the beginning of the World, and but then made manifeſt, when Paul preach'd it? Rom. 16. 25, 26. That Chriſtianity in the Senſe of the Fathers is more ancient than Judaiſm, is a celebrated Aſſertion, (u) which ſome blindly follow, but it is not to the honour of their Underſtanding. For it maketh the Antitype to be before the Type, the thing propheſied of, to be before the Prophecy, and this is the plain Senſe of it, The times of Chriſtianity are the ancient times and the times of Judaiſm are the later times, Chriſtianity is the Old Teſtament and Judaiſm the New; The New Teſtament is the Old and the Old Teſtament is the New, which is more than one Contradiction. You muſt not think (ſaith Euſebius) that the Teſtament of the Men beloved of God that were before Moſes, is called the Old Teſtament: but that which was given by Moſes himſelf to the Jewiſh Nation. But if the Religion of theſe Ancients was, not the Law of Moſes or any part of it, but only the New Teſtament, the New Teſtament ought to have the Name of the Old Teſtament, and one part and the more ancient part of the Old Teſtament-times muſt not be counted ſuch, but the times of the New Teſtament. The New Teſtament in the Old Teſtament-times muſt be ſuppos'd, not to have been veiled, but revealed; thoſe muſt be counted the times of Chriſtianity, when no Law for Chriſtianity was made or publiſh'd; and the Inſtitution of Chriſtianity muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been in the

(i) Idem Dem. Ev. l. 1 c. 6.

(k) Dial. cum Tryph. p. 236.

(l) Εἰ γὰρ πρὸ τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ οὐκ ἦν χρεία περιτομῆς, οὐδὲ πρὸ Μωϋσέως τοῦ σαββατισμοῦ καὶ ἑορτῶν καὶ προσφορῶν, οὐδὲ νῦν. Ibid. p. 241.

(m) Adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 30. adv. Jud. c. 2, 4.

(n) Οὐκ Ἰουδαϊσμός, οὐχ αἱρέσις τις ἑτέρα, ἀλλ' ὡς εἰπεῖν, ἡ νῦν πίστις, ἐν τῇ ἄρτι ἁγίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ καθολικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς οὖσα, καὶ ὕστερον πάλιν ἀποκαλυφθεῖσα. Panar. l. 1. T. 1. n. 5.

(o) Οὐ δ' ὅλως τι τῶν μετὰ ταῦτα τῷ παντὶ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἔθνει διὰ Μωσέως παρηγγελμένων ἐποιοῦντα· ἄντικρυς δὲ κατὰ τὸ Χριστοῦ εὐαγγέλιον βιοῦντα. Dem. Ev. ſupr.

(p) Οὐδὲν γοῦν οὗτος τῶν Ἰουδαϊκῶν ἐθῶν ἐπιστάμενος, οὔτε ἐν περιτομῇ σώματος, οὔτε ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις τοῖς ὑπὸ Μωσέως διατεταγμένοις. Ibid.

(q) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. c. 4.

(r) Ibid.

(s) Dem. Ev. ſupr.

(t) Ἐγὼ δὲ ἐπὶ τὸν παλαιῶν θεοφιλῶν ἀνδρῶν εὐσεβῆ καὶ θεοφιλῆ βίον ἀνακαλοῦμαι τοὺς πάντας. Euſeb. ibid.

(u) Mr. Thorndike Epil. B. 1. c. 12. B. 2. c. 19.

proper ſtate of the Inſtitution of Chriſtianity, the Religion of Chriſtianity in the proper ſtate of the Religion of Chriſtianity, before it was plenarily introduc'd by our Saviour. The Law of Moſes is ſuppos'd to have been not a continuation of the Chriſtianity of the Old Teſtament-times, but a grand Interruption thereof; and after God had manifeſted the New Teſtament in the more ancient times of the Old Teſtament, he is ſuppos'd, to have eclips'd it by the Moſaic Law; which are abſurd Suppoſitions. And it is alike abſurd, to ſuppoſe, that the Holy Men and Prophets who liv'd in the times of the Moſaic Law, were not the ſame ſort of Chriſtians with thoſe Ancients, that liv'd before the times of the Law, whoſe Religion was not meer Chriſtianity, but Chriſtianity as involv'd in Judaiſm; and conſequently, as they are ſaid to have been (w) in reality Chriſtians although not in Name, ſo it ought to be ſaid, that they were Jews in reality although not in Name; for they were Spiritual Jews (as Chriſtians are) and in reſpect of external Rites they were Judaical Religioniſts. It is not abſolutely certain, that they obſerv'd the Judaical Sabbath: But moſt are of Opinion, that the Patriarchs before and after the Flood did obſerve every Seventh Day as a day ſet apart for God's Service, and think it reaſonable, that God ſhould ſet apart that day (for his Worſhip and to continue the Memory of his Creation) and that if God had not ſet apart that day, Men of themſelves would have agreed to ſet apart ſuch a day. Which Opinion is countenanced by ſeveral places of Scripture, Gen. 2. 3. and 8. 16. Exod. 16. 23, 25, 26. But a late learned Aſſerter of this Opinion doth not think (x) that the Patriarchs kept ſuch a Reſt on the Seventh Day as God injoin'd the Iſraelites; for (as he ſuppoſeth) that was proper to them for a peculiar Reaſon, becauſe they had been Slaves in Egypt. Whereas the principal Reaſon of the Judaical Sabbatic Reſt was not their Slavery in Egypt, but God's reſting the Seventh Day from all his Works. And if the Patriarchs did Sabbatize (of which there is no reaſon to doubt) ſhall it not be thought, that they Sabbatiz'd Judaically, ſeeing they Sacrific'd Judaically?

II. They kept the Law of Nature in the State of Grace (as regenerate Chriſtians do) but ſo as to have the Prophetic Inſtitution of their time. Tertullian diſcourſeth (y) that before the Law of Moſes written in Tables of Stone, there was an unwritten Law, which was naturally underſtood, and was kept by the Fathers. For whence was Noah found Juſt, if the Juſtice of the Law of Nature was not before him? Whence was Abraham reputed the Friend of God (that is Righteous) if not from the Equity and Juſtice of the Law of Nature? (z) By the Law of Nature (ſaith S. Hierom) which ſpeaketh in our Hearts, that all Good muſt be done, and all Evil muſt be eſchew'd, we have reported Abraham, Moſes, and the reſt of the Saints, to have been made Righteous. The Patriarchs were (a) adorn'd with a Life that is according to Nature, by right Reaſonings they were adorn'd with the Virtue of Religion, by natural Reaſonings and unwritten Laws ſteering the right courſe of Virtue they paſs'd beyond fleſhly Pleaſures into an every way wiſe and religious Life. Thus far the ancient Writers Elogies of the Law of Nature are allowable: But they are not ſo, when they proceed, to ſay, that (b) Abel, not having learn'd of any, nor heard of any Law touching Firſt-fruits, of himſelf and being taught by his own Conſcience, offer'd that Sacrifice. (c) The Law of Nature which God implanteth without teaching the Underſtanding or Knowledge of the Creator, called them (Cain and Abel) to offer Sacrifice to God; for all good things are inſeminated and implanted by Nature. But (as will hereafter appear) the Sacrifices and Oblations of the Ancients are not probably deriv'd from Nature or the Law of Nature. Although the Scripture doth not report to us any general Laws or Precepts given to Mankind before the Flood ſave only the Law of Nature, yet it appeareth from the Scripture, that the Religion of the Church or People of God from the beginning of the World had always in it ſomething that was of poſitive Inſtitution; and that the Holy Men of the eldeſt Times of the Old Teſtament were Prophets of God, and conſequently they had ſupernatural Revelations. Noah and Abraham (mention'd by Tertullian and S. Jerom as meer Obſervers of the Law of Nature) were Prophets of God. Reſtore the Man his Wife, for he is a Prophet. Gen. 20. 7. The Pſalmiſt calleth the Patriarchs Prophets. Pſal. 150. 15. Touch not mine anointed and do my Prophets no harm. 'Αποκάλυψις 'Ενώχ, the Revelation of Enoch ſheweth, that he hath been accounted a Prophet, and the Apoſtle affirmeth, that he was a Prophet indeed. Jude 14. Euſebius that aſcribeth the Virtues of the Patriarchs (before and after the Flood) to Natural Reaſon and the Law of Nature, yet uſually diſcourſeth, that they had the extraordinary appearances of God and converſe with him (d) and that they were φίλοι Θεȣ̃ ϗ προφῆται, the Friends of God and Prophets. S. Cyril that ſaith of Abel, he was called by the Law of Nature to offer Sacrifice (e) diſcourſeth, that Abel (the Righteous Abel and a Shepherd) was a Type and Fore-runner of Chriſt (the Juſt one and the great Shepherd) which implieth, that he was a Prophet. Our Saviour reckoneth him in the Catalogue and Succeſſion of Prophets. Matth. 23. 34,--- 37. And according to (f) Origen (g) and Tertullian, Adam was a Prophet. All that have written of theſe ancient times have obſerv'd (h) the appearances of God (by Angels) were then frequent. An ancient Writer ſaith (i) when I conſider the Fathers of the Old Teſtament, I find in Scripture, that many of them ſaw God. They had ſuch an appearance of God to them, and ſuch converſe with him, as conſtituteth Prophets, and therefore muſt not be look'd upon meerly as Holy Men, but as extraordinary Miniſters of Religion in their time. Much leſs muſt they be look'd upon as meer Obſervers of the Law of Nature; for although this in the eldeſt times was the only general Law, yet the Religion of thoſe times was in part the Religion of Prophets as ſuch, and conſquently was of poſitive Inſtitution; and this part of it was Chriſtiano-judaical, which muſt be diſtinguiſh'd from the Law of Nature. The Law of Nature alſo muſt be conſider'd, as it is meerly the Law of Nature, and as it is from (ſupernatural Revelation) Prophetick Inſpiration. Job ſaith Ch. 23. 11, 12. My foot hath held his ſteps, his way have I kept, and not declined, neither have I gone back from the Commandment of his Lips; I have eſteemed the words of his Mouth more than my neceſſary Food. Which words ſome will have (k) to be meant of the Law of Nature, as it is meerly the Law of Nature, which is extremely abſurd. They are neceſſarily meant of ſome Law or Doctrine that is God's word by his Prophets, of which number

---

(w) Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. c. 4.

(x) Bp. Patrick on Gen. 2. 3.

(y) Adv. Jud. c. 2.

(z) S. Hieron. Com. in Gal. 3.

(a) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 6, 7, 8.

(b) S. Chryſoſt. 'Ανδριάντ. 12.

(c) S. Cyr. in Joann. p. 561.

(d) Pr. Ev. l. 7. c. 5, 7. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. c. 4. Dem. Ev. l. 1. c. 6.

(e) In Joan. p. 562. Glaphyr. in Gen. l. 1. p. 19.

(f) Hom. 2. in Cant.

(g) De Anim. c. 11.

(h) Epiſcop. Inſt. l. 1. c. 10.

(i) Greg. M in Job l. 18. c. 37.

(k) Seld. de J. Nat. & G. l. 1. c. 8.

Job himſelf was one. And of the ſame Notion is that Divine Character of Abraham's Piety. Gen. 18. 19. I know him, that he will command his Children and his houſhold after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord. Such Prophetick Doctrine the Church and People of God were never unfurniſh'd with, of this they were the Believers, and thereby they were in the State of Grace. Their obſervance therefore of the Law of Nature was of the ſame kind with that of regenerate Chriſtians, the Spiritual-religious (l) οἱ πνευματικῶς αὐτὸν ἐκτελοῦντες ϗ τῆς χάριτος μετέχοντες, they are ſuch as partake of Grace and ſpiritually fulfil the Law.

III. They were therefore God's Believers as Chriſtians are, and obtain'd the State of Righteouſneſs by Faith (in the Chriſtian way) but ſo that their Faith muſt be denominated the Iſraelitical Theiſm of God's Believers. They were God's Believers both as to the matter and kind of their Faith, their works were the works and doings of Faith, and they did the Heroic Deeds of the Men of Faith. Noah became a Preacher of Righteouſneſs in an Age of profligate Wickedneſs againſt the Humour and Faſhion of the World (not regarding what Sufferings he might incur thereby;) by Faith Abraham forſook his Country and his own Bowels, and ſacrific'd his only Son; and by Faith Moſes forſook the Honour and Grandeur of a Court with its appendent Opulency and Pleaſure, and choſe the Lot of God's People, Poverty, Reproach, Slavery and a Brick-kiln. The Reproach which he choſe (the Reproach of God's People) was the ſame thing then, which the Reproach of Chriſt is now, and therefore the Apoſtle calleth it by that Name. Heb. 11. 26. Eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches then the treaſures in Egypt. Great and Heroic things theſe Ancients did by Faith, which is the Duty-part of Religion, and thereby they obtain'd the Benefit-part of it, the State of Righteouſneſs. For ſuch was God's way of juſtifying Men from the beginning of the World. Hab. 2. 4. The Juſt ſhall live by his Faith. That is, by that Faith whereby he is Juſt, he ſhall have Life and Happineſs. So Noah obtain'd the Righteouſneſs which is by Faith, and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, he became an Heir of the Righteouſneſs which is by Faith; for in his Language and in the Hebrew way of ſpeaking, to be an Heir and a Poſſeſſor, are identical Expreſſions. There is a great appearance of Chriſtianity therefore in the Religion of theſe ancient Divine Believers, which yet muſt not be denominated the Goſpel Theiſm which is of the New Teſtament, but the Iſraelitical Theiſm which is of the Old Teſtament, and accordingly their Faith muſt be denominated the Iſraelitical Theiſm of God's Believers. Which Name involveth in it a threefold Notice of their Faith.

(1.) They were Believers (godly noble Believers) as to God and his Word (in their time) and the Matters of Theiſm. Infidelity as to God and his Word and the Matters of Theiſm is diſtinguiſhable from Infidelity as to Chriſt and Chriſtianity. Of this Nature was the Unbelief of Moſes and Aaron, Numb. 20. 12. Becauſe ye believed me not, to ſanctifie me in the Eyes of the Children of Iſrael. And that of the Children of Iſrael, Pſal. 106. 25. They believed not his word, nor hearkned to the voice of the Lord. And ſuch was the Infidelity of the Old World that derided Noah's Preachment of Righteouſneſs, Matth. 24. 38. To this Infidelity the Faith of God's Believers in the Old Teſtament-times ought to be confronted and oppos'd. For their Belief and Perſwaſion was according to God and his Word againſt the preſent appearances in Nature and to human Sence, againſt all human Probabilities and Poſſibilities, againſt human Reaſonings and Conceits, againſt human Affections and Intereſts, human Confidences and Reliances; and this their Godly noble ſymbolizing with God in their Sentiment and Perſwaſion (their going beyond Nature, human Sence and Appearances, human Probabilities, Inclinations and Intereſts ſo as to Conſort with God) was the Faith that made them Godly noble in their Spirits, Practices and Atchievements, the Faith that recommended them to God, and whereby they were juſtified, and which renowneth them in Holy Scripture and to all Ages. Such was the Faith of Abraham who believ'd God that quickneth the dead. Rom. 4. 17, 22. Such was the Faith of Noah, who being warned of God prepar'd an Ark. Heb. 11. 7. Such was the Faith of Rahab the Harlot, who believed in the God of Iſrael (ſhe believ'd the Promiſes that God had made to his People Iſrael, and reſolv'd thereupon to become one of them, and to embrace the Iſraelitical Theiſm) whence ſhe receiv'd the Spies in Peace and preſerv'd them, and by this Faith ſhe was juſtified, Jam. 2. 25. Heb. 11. 31. So thoſe of the noble Army of Martyrs endured tortures not accepting deliverance by the Faith of a better Reſurrection, and this was their ſaving Faith. Heb. 11. 35. At the ſame rate the Apoſtle deſcribeth the juſtifying and ſaving Faith of all the reſt of the Divine Believers in his Catalogue, Heb. 11. Neither he in this Catalogue nor any other place of Scripture ever mentioneth their Faith touching the Meſſiah as their juſtifying Faith, either as the whole of it or as any conſtitutive Ingredient thereof. Which is the more ſtrange, becauſe the ancient Writers of the Church inſiſt upon their Faith touching the Meſſiah (which they ſometimes over-amplifie) as the whole of their juſtifying Faith obſcuring and overlooking the nobleneſs of their Faith as to God and his Word and the Matters of Theiſm. (m) One Faith juſtifieth the Saints of all times, and to the ſame hope of the faithful all that belongeth, which by the Mediator of God and Man Chriſt Jeſus, either we confeſs to be done, or our Fathers wiſh'd to be done. (n) The ancients were healed (or ſaved) by the ſame Faith that we are, the Faith of the Mediator of God and Man the Man Chriſt Jeſus, the Faith of his Blood, the Faith of his Croſs, the Faith of his Death and Reſurrection. (o) They liv'd by one and the ſame Faith whereby we live, believing the Incarnation, Paſſion and Reſurrection of Chriſt to come, which we believe to be paſt. That the Ancients diſtinctly underſtood and believ'd the Oeconomy of our Salvation by Chriſt and the ſeveral Articles thereof, his Incarnation, Paſſion, Reſurrection (and the very time of his riſing, as S. Auſtin ſuppoſeth, Ep. 89.) is not credible. Nor is that Story credible, which the Apoſtolic Clemens mentioneth, (p) They hanged a ſcarlet Thread

(l) Macar. Hom. 37.

Heb. 11. 7.

(m) Una Fides juſtificat univerſorum temporum ſanctos, & ad eandem ſpem fidelium pertinet quicquid per mediatorem Dei & hominum Jeſum Chriſtum, vel nos confitemur factum, vel patres noſtri adoptavere faciendum. Leo. M. Ser. 14. de Paſſion.

(n) Ea fides ſanavit antiquos, quæ ſanat & nos, id eſt, mediatoris Dei & hominum hominis Jeſu Chriſti, fides ſanguinis ejus, fides crucis ejus, fides mortis & reſurrectionis ejus. S. Aug. de Nat. & Gr. c. 44.

(o) Ex fide qua nos vivimus, una eademque vixerunt, incarnationem, paſſionem, reſurrectionemque Chriſti credentes futuram, quam nos credimus factam. Idem contr. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 3. c. 4. & vid. contr. Pelag. & Celeſt. l. 2. c. 24. & Ep. 89.

(p) Ep. ad Corinth p. 17.

Thread by the Wall of Rahab's Houſe, thereby ſignifying, that by the Blood of the Lord there ſhould be Redemption to all that believe and hope in God. But,

(2.) They were Chriſt's Prophetick Believers, the Meſſiah and his coming to be a Saviour-king being a principal Article of the Iſraelitical Theiſm of God's Believers. (q) Hæc fuit omnium prima Cabala, this was the true ancient Cabala amongſt the People of God in the Old Teſtament-times. It was a Branch of their Faith alſo as they were Prophets, Matth. 13. 17. Joh. 8. 56. (r) Viderunt Prophetæ aliquid magni in noſtra ſera tempora reſervari; ſed quale id eſſet, non potuerunt pervidere. The Prophets ſaw, that ſome great thing was reſerv'd to our late times, but what it was they could not throughly diſcern. But by the Spirit of Chriſt which was in them, they underſtood and believ'd, that Salvation was to come by Chriſt, and diligently ſearch'd and inquir'd into it. 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11. The Patriarchs ſaw the heavenly Promiſes (as well as their earthly) afar off, becauſe they looked upon them as a Branch of their promis'd Salvation by Chriſt. Heb. 11. 13, 39, 40. David in Spirit (by the Spirit of Prophecy) calleth Chriſt his Lord (owneth him for his Lord) and therefore was nothing leſs than one of Chriſt's (Prophetick) Religioniſts. All the ancient Prophets, and Patriarchs were his Types, Fore-runners, Expectants, and as Divine Religioniſts near of Kin to him, and therefore muſt be denominated his Prophetick Believers, Religioniſts and Relatives. But they did not underſtand (and therefore could not explicitly believe his Oeconomy of our Salvation at the rate of Chriſtians: Nor were they Believers of his Doctrine (or Revelation) as Chriſtians are: Nor were they (as Chriſtians are now) the federal Believers and Religioniſts of his Government. They were of the Faith of Chriſt initially introduc'd, and ſo far as it was introduc'd in their time. (s) Many Prophets and Righteous Men foreſeeing by the Spirit his coming prayed to come to that time, when they might ſee their Lord face to face. (t) The Prophets obſcurely, darkly and tenuiouſly in ſome ſort ſaw and manifeſted the coming of Chriſt. Νεφέλαι γὰρ οἱ προφῆται, for there is a cloudineſs in the Prophets, and although ſome of them probably had clearer Revelations of Chriſt than others, yet neither they nor others from them had any thing more than a Prophetick Inſtitution to the Faith of Chriſt, which could amount to nothing more than an initial Introduction of it. It was not then in the ſtate of Evolution but of Involution, as being involv'd in the Theiſm of the Old Teſtament. Nor was it then the direct immediate way to Righteouſneſs and Salvation, but by way of σύγκλωσις καὶ ἐπιπλοκή, Intertexture and Implication, as being involv'd and comprehended in the Faith of God's Believers in the Old Teſtament-times. So the Apoſtle to the Hebrews (in his Catalogue of Divine Believers) looketh upon it, and therefore doth not openly inſiſt upon it, as it was not to be openly inſiſted on in the Old Teſtament-times. (u) Prophetæ licet occultius tamen Dominum prænunciabant. But the Apoſtle not only reckoneth theſe Ancients as one Race and Succeſſion of Believers with Chriſt's People of the New Teſtament-times; but he affirmeth, that theſe all having obtained a good report through Faith, received not the Promiſe: God having provided ſome better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be made perfect. Heb. 11. 39, 40. In which words the Apoſtle looketh upon the promiſed heavenly Felicity as a Branch of the promiſed Salvation by Chriſt. This Salvation the ancient Saints could not receive as actually done and accompliſh'd in their time, and conſequently they could not ſo receive that eminent Branch of it the promiſed heavenly Felicity: But God hath provided this better thing for us, to have the promis'd Redemption and Salvation by Chriſt actually done and exhibited in our time; the conſequent whereof is this, the ancient Saints otherwiſe than in Conjunction with us cannot attain the Perfection and Conſummation of their Happineſs, which is an heavenly Immortality. If this be the Apoſtle's Senſe (and no other is probable) this place was not impertinently alledg'd (w) by the ancient Writers of the Church, to prove, that the ancient Saints did not enter into Heaven ſtrictly ſo called before our Saviour's Aſcenſion.

(3.) The Unity of their Faith with Chriſt's Believers of the New Teſtament is ſuch as the Iſraelitical Theiſm importeth. For as to God and his Word and the Matters of Theiſm the Chriſtian Believers Sentiment agreeth with theſe ancient Saints; and as to Chriſt and Chriſtianity they were Prophetick Believers and more than meer Prophetick Believers. For Hiſtory is the reverſe of Prophecy, and conſequently a meer Prophetick Faith is but an Hiſtorical kind of Faith, and is meerly an Act of the intelligent Mind, which may be in the Devils themſelves. Prophecy is a ſupernatural Gift, but not a ſupernatural Grace or Virtue. It recommendeth no Man to God or Chriſt. 1 Cor. 13. 2. Matth. 7. 22. Nor could a meer Prophetick Faith touching the Meſſiah to come incumber the Ancients with any Severities, Difficulties and Hardſhips, or make them Holy and Godlike; and therefore it could not be of any great Virtue or Value. But their Prophetick Faith was animated by an affectus pius credendi (whence it became ſaving Faith, a Divine Grace and Virtue) and therefore conſtituted them Chriſt's Believers and ſo far Chriſtians. (x) Although occultly yet then they were Chriſtians. But with this difference (y) what was to them foretold, is told to us. What was then veiled is now revealed. Such is their Unity of Faith with ours. (z) The Fathers who believ'd, that Chriſt ſhould come, are in the Society of the Faith with them, who have believed, that he is come. By which ſameneſs of Faith they are conjoined. (a) Our Head is Chriſt, and we are the Body of that Head. Are we alone ſo, and not thoſe alſo that were before us? All the Juſt that were from the beginning of the World have Chriſt their Head. For they believ'd his future coming, whom we now believe to be come; and as we are, ſo they were, healed by the Faith of him: that he might be the Head of whole Jeruſalem, counting together all the faithful from the

(q) Reuchlin. de Art. Cab. l. 1. fol. 9.

(r) Grot. Not in 1 Pet. 1. 10.

Pſal. 110. 1.

(s) Prophetæ & juſti multi præſcientes per ſpiritum adventum ejus, oraverunt in illud tempus venire, in quo facie ad faciem viderent Dominum ſuum. Iren adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 24.

(t) Οἱ προφῆται ἀμυδρῶς πως καὶ σκοτεινῶς καὶ λεπτῶς πως τὴν παρουσίαν τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἔβλεπον καὶ ἐδήλουν. S. Athan. Dict. & Interpr. parab. Qu. 85.

(u) S. Aug. in Pſal. 104.

(w) Montacut. Appar. 1. S. 116, 165.

(x) Etiamſi latenter jam tamen Chriſtiani. S. Aug. in Pſal. 104.

(y) Illis futura prænunciabatur, quæ jam facta à nobis annunciatur. Et tempore veteris teſtamenti velabatur, quæ tempore novi teſtamenti revelatur. Idem Ep. 89.

(z) Eadem fides utroſque conjungit, & eos qui venturum eſſe, & eos qui eum veniſſe crediderunt. In ejus ſunt fidei ſocietate nobiſcum & illi patres. Idem in Joan. Tr. 45.

(a) Caput noſtrum Chriſtus eſt: Corpus capitis illius nos ſumus. Nunquid ſoli nos, & non etiam illi qui fuerunt ante nos? Omnes qui ab initio ſeculi fuerunt juſti caput Chriſtum habent. Illum enim venturum eſſe crediderunt, quem nos veniſſe jam credimus, & in ejus fide & ipſi ſanati ſunt, in cujus & nos: Ut eſſet & ipſe totius caput Hieruſalem, omnibus connumeratis fidelibus ab initio uſque in finem, adjunctis etiam legionibus & exercitibus angelorum, ut fiat illa una civitas ſub uno rege. Idem in Pſal. 36. Conc. 3.

beginning to the end, adjoining alſo the Legions and Hoſts of Angels, that ſo there may be one City under one King. (b) We ſay, that the ancient and Catholic Church is one and alone in Subſtance and Notion, in Origin and Excellence, by the Will of one God and by one Lord collecting them that are ordain'd, whom God predeſtinated (having known before the Foundation of the World that they would become Righteous) into the Unity of one Faith according to their proper Teſtaments, or rather according to one Teſtament in ſeveral times. As if the two Teſtaments were but one, in ſome inſtances the Chriſtian Believers Faith is of identity with theſe ancient Believers Faith. Both are heavenly Believers, and Chriſtians ſay of the things that are here, as theſe ancient Saints are ſuppos'd to ſay (c) πάντα ξένα καὶ ἀλλότρια, all things are ſtrange and alien. In ſome inſtances the Chriſtian Believers Faith is a lively reſemblance of theſe ancient Believers Faith. For (d) τῇ ὁμοιότητι τῆς πίστεως, by a like Faith unto Abraham we come into the Adoption of Abraham. For it is alike incredible amongſt Men, to raiſe one from the dead, as for Children to be generated ἐκ νενεκρωμένων πρεσβυτῶν, from dead aged People: But Chriſt being preach'd to us that he was crucify'd and dead, and raiſed again, this we believe, which is ὁ τύπος τῆς ἐκείνου πίστεως, a likeneſs of the Faith of Abraham.

IV. They were truly Righteous and Holy and genuin Religioniſts as regenerate Chriſtians are, yet not only Judaiz'd in their Rites, but were in other reſpects the Judaical kind of Pietiſts. (e) Quis ignorat ſub altera diſpenſatione Dei, omnes retrò ſanctos ejuſdem fuiſſe meriti, cujus nunc Chriſtiani ſunt? Who doth not know, that under the other diſpenſation of God all the ancient Saints were of the ſame Merit with Chriſtians? They were the true Saints of God, and their Religion was not only the Religion of the true God, but that Religion of the true God, whereby Men become the true Saints of God. They were of the Church of the firſt-born which are written in Heaven, not Aliens or thoſe that are without (not the profane and mundane People, nor the mundane Theiſts, ſuch as the Heathen and the carnal Iſrael were) but thoſe that are within as to the Chriſtian Church and Religion, and therefore are neceſſarily his People, who is the Head of the Church, which is of this definitive Notion (f) This City of God is as it were a certain Land and Legion of the ſanctify'd. (g) The ſame Church brought forth Abel and Enoch and Noah and Abraham, Moſes and the Prophets and our Apoſtles and Martyrs and all good Chriſtians. They were born indeed in different times, but are all contained in the Society of one People, and are the Citizens of the ſame City. (h) The Catholic Church was in Holy Abel and in Noah and in Abraham and the reſt till the coming of our Lord and Saviour. They were one genuine People and Church of God, one Generation of the Righteous with regenerate Chriſtians, that are of their Race and Succeſſion.

They were Holy in Life and Practice, and (although the Sanctity of moſt of them hath a dark ſide of bleiniſh as well as a bright ſide) are propos'd to Chriſtians as Patterns of Holineſs. (i) They that Sail on the great Sea, Steer their Courſe looking at certain Stars: But the Church's Sea-faring Men, not looking at certain Stars, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας τὸ ὄμμα τῆς διανοίας τείνοντες, but directing the Eye of their Mind to the Fathers, and in the deſire of their Souls following their Steps, Sail to the ſame Port of the Kingdom. —— The beſt Teacher of Patience is the Life of bleſſed Job, of tolerance of Injuries that of Moſes, of Mildneſs that of David, of Faſting and Prayer that of Daniel, of Chaſtity that of Joſeph. (k) That three Hebrew Youths in the midſt of the Babylonian Furnace remain'd untouch'd by the fire, is not to me ſo ſtrange and wonderful, as that this juſt Man having fallen into a worſe than Babylonian Furnace, the laſciviouſneſs of an Egyptian Woman, yet remain'd untouch'd, and having kept the Garments of his Chaſtity pure, ſo came forth. (l) The Fathers were Righteous Men having the Virtue of the Decalogue written in their Hearts and Souls, as loving God that made them, and abſtaining from Injuſtice towards their Neighbour.

They were genuin Religioniſts (m) veraces Dei cultores, the true Worſhippers of God as regenerate Chriſtians are. For Cain and Abel were two oppoſite kind of Religioniſts, the one the Carnal, the other the Spiritual kind of Religioniſt; which was the Reaſon, why God had reſpect unto Abel and to his offering. Gen. 4. 4. It is not certain, in what way God teſtify'd his acceptance of Abel's Sacrifice; it might be by granting his Requeſt, or by an Angel's Voice, as God teſtify'd his acceptance of Abraham's Sacrifice and of Cornelius's Alms and Prayers. But the Jews and the ancient Writers of the Church think, that Fire came from Heaven, which burnt up his Sacrifice. And this account is hugely probable; both becauſe (n) it is God's uſual way in Scripture, to ſend Fire from Heaven, to burn the Sacrifice to Aſhes, thereby teſtifying his acceptance of it and of him that offereth it; and alſo becauſe the Hebrew Verb דשן which ſignifieth, to turn into Aſhes, is us'd to ſignifie receiving or accepting. Pſal. 20. 3. The Lord accept (in the Hebrew turn into Aſhes) thy burnt Sacrifice. This account of God's teſtifying his acceptance of Abel's Sacrifice is much more probable than this of a late learn'd Expoſitor (o) that it was done by a ſtream of Light from the Schecinah, as Homer repreſenteth Jupiter lightning or ſending forth flaſhes of Lightning upon his Pagan Sacrificers. For (beſides that it doth not appear, that Abel's Sacrifice was offer'd to any Schecinah) this lightning or ſending forth flaſhes of Lightning upon the Sacrificers is not a Scriptural, but a purely Paganical Rite peculiar to the Pagan Deities, that by lightning and thundring about the Sacrifices conciliated to themſelves a great veneration from their Worſhippers. But of theſe Deities neither Cain nor Abel were the Worſhippers, both worſhipp'd the true God, but with this difference, the one was a Carnal Worſhipper, as the Carnal Jews were, the other was a Spiritual Worſhipper, as regenerate Chriſtians are. (p) Cain's perſecution of Abel prefigured the carnal Jews perſecution of Chriſt and Chriſtians, and from this Epocha Perſecution beareth date, which hath its origin from Men of no worſe a Character than Religioniſts. For it is not meer Irreligioniſts, that are the great Perſecutors, but the Carnal and Mundane Family of Religioniſts perſecuteth the Spiritual and Divine Family, Cain will kill Abel to the World's end, as Luther ſaith. * From Abel the Church in Pilgrimage runneth on inter perſecutiones mundi & conſolationes Dei. In theſe (Cain and Abel) the two oppoſite Cities began the World and the Church.

(b) Κατά τε οὖν ὑπόστασιν, κατά τε ἐπίνοιαν, κατά τε ἀρχὴν, κατά τε ἐξοχὴν, μόνην εἶναι φαμὲν τὴν ἀρχαίαν καὶ καθολικὴν ἐκκλησίαν, εἰς ἑνότητα πίστεως μιᾶς τῆς κατὰ τὰς οἰκείας διαθήκας, μᾶλλον δὲ κατὰ τὴν διαθήκην τὴν μίαν διαφόροις τοῖς χρόνοις ἑνὸς τοῦ θεοῦ βουλήματι, δι' ἑνὸς τοῦ κυρίου, συνάγουσαν τοὺς ἤδη κατατεταγμένους οὓς προώρισεν ὁ θεὸς, δικαίους ἐσομένους πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου ἐγνωκώς. Clem. Str. l. 7. p. m. 549.

(c) S. Chryſoſt. in Hebr. Hom. 24.

(d) Idem in Epheſ. Hom. 4. p. 782.

(e) S. Hieron. adv. Jovin. l. 2. c. 3.

(f) Αὕτη δὴ οὖν ἡ τοῦ θεοῦ πόλις γῆ τις ὥσπερ ἐστὶ καὶ χώρα τῶν ἡγιασμένων. S. Cyr. in Mich. p. 438.

(g) Quæ autem peperit Abel & Enoc & Noe & Abraham, ipſa peperit & Moyſen & Prophetas tempore poſteriores ante adventum Domini: Et quæ iſtos ipſa & Apoſtolos & Martyres noſtros & omnes bonos Chriſtianos. Omnes enim diverſis quidem temporibus apparuerunt, ſed ſocietate unius populi continentur & ejuſdem civitatis cives ſunt. S. Aug. de Bapt. c. Donat. l. 1. c. 16.

(h) In ſancto Abel Eccleſia Catholica fuit, & in Noe & in Abraham & in reliquis uſque ad adventum Domini Salvatoris. Idem de Temp. Ser. 217.

(i) S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. λογ. ρα. p. 655.

(k) Idem in Gen. λογ. μδ. p. 365.

(l) Juſti autem patres virtutem Decalogi conſcriptam habentes in cordibus & animabus ſuis, diligentes ſcilicet Deum qui fecit eos, & abſtinentes erga proximum ab injuſtitia, Iren. adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 30.

(m) S. Aug. Ep. 157.

(n) Lev. 9. 24. Judg. 6. 21. 1 King. 18. 38. 1 Chron. 21. 26. 2 Chron. 7. 1.

(o) Bp. Patrick Gen. 4. 4.

But although the ancient Saints were ſuch as a Father calleth, (q) Ἰσραηλιτικὸν τὸ ἀληθινὸν, πνευματικὸν, the true Spiritual Iſrael, yet their Inſtitution of Sanctity was but initial Spiritual Judaiſm, as the Inſtitution of thoſe of them that liv'd before the Moſaic Law, was but initial literal Judaiſm. Thoſe of them that liv'd in the time of the Moſaic Law, were the Holy Land kind of Pietiſts, ſuch in a leſſer degree were the Patriarchs Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and in all reaſon the more ancient Saints their Predeceſſors muſt be thought no other than ſuch as they, whoſe Virtue, Duty and Felicity, was ſuch as ought to be in the Old Teſtament-times, but was in ſeveral reſpects ſo peculiar to thoſe times, that to imitate it, is ſuch ſinful Judaizing, as ſome of the Eaſtern Churches are guilty of (r) that religiouſly abſtain from eating unclean Animals. The Holy Land kind of Pietiſts in the time of the Law were themſelves and their Virtue of the martial genius agreeably to the Apoſtles deſcription of them, Heb. 11. 32, 33, 34. which martial or military kind of Virtue (that was and ought to be in theſe Judaical Pietiſts) brancheth it ſelf into that martial zelotick Spirit, that curſing Spirit, that Spirit of revenge which breatheth in the Old Teſtament (in Holy Men and Prophets) and which are ſo many Branches of that Elias-like Spirit, which our Saviour rebuketh, Luk. 9. 55. Elias zeal'd a Zeal for the Law, he had a martial kind of fiery zeal for eradicating and deſtroying Idolaters (ſuch as Phinehas alſo had, and ſuch as the Iſraelites were bound to have, when they invaded the Land of Canaan) and this Warlike kind of Zeal was in thoſe times his Virtue and his Righteouſneſs. Notwithſtanding our non-imitation of it therefore he muſt be allow'd to be, what an eloquent Father ſtileth him, (s) that Prophet, that Earthly Angel, that Heavenly Man, that went on the Earth but ſway'd the things of Heaven, that tricubital Man, that reach'd on high in his goings, and that flew to the very Summities of Heaven, the diſpenſer of the Waters, whoſe Tongue was a Treaſure of the Waters and the Key of the Heavens. The ancient Saints were the Judaical Pietiſts, as they were Polygamiſts; for ſuch were that ſort of Pietiſts in all times, and thereby they are diſtinguiſh'd from the Chriſtian. If we conſider them as the Holy Land kind of Pietiſts, this account may be given of their Polygamy; that the Land of Canaan with the Secular Felicity thereof being ſettled or intended to be ſettled upon Abraham's Seed, it was requiſite, that the Judaical Pietiſts ſhould not be abridg'd of Polygamy, which the oriental parts are not a little fond of unto this Day. As the ancient Saints were Judaical Pietiſts in reſpect of their typical and ſymbolical Sanctity (they were converſant in Types and Shadows) So living under the Old Teſtament-diſpenſation of things (which is ſparing in Spirituals and aboundeth with Secular Promiſes and Bleſſings) ſuch a ſtrain of Secularity as diſtinguiſheth them from Chriſtians, pervadeth their Piety in the Old Teſtament.

V. They had the Lot and Portion of Chriſtians in this World, which is Affliction and Sufferings for Righteouſneſs ſake (ſo far they were Chriſtians) but ſo as far to tranſcend them in Temporal Promiſes. The Righteous were then promis'd the largeſt Secular Felicities, but it was never intended, that they ſhould enjoy them without a mixture of the Croſs. (t) If when we undertake the matters of Spiritual Life and Practice, we foreſee, that we ſhall be ſecur'd from hardſhip and ſufferings, we cannot be thought to do any great thing, having ſuch a ſecurity: but hence it is, that the doers of thoſe virtuous things are chiefly to be admir'd, becauſe they decline them not, ϗ κινδύνους ϗ ζημίας, ϗ θανάτους ϗ μυρία κακὰ προορώμενοι, foreſeeing dangers, and loſſes, and deaths, and innumerable evils, nor are deterr'd from them by the fears of ſlaughter. Thou therefore when thou art about to do any of thoſe things that are according to God, πολλοὺς προόρα κινδύνους, πολλὰς ζημίας, πολλοὺς θανάτους, foreſee many dangers, many loſſes, many deaths, and think it not ſtrange, nor be troubled, if theſe things befall thee: (u) For thus God hath inſtituted all the Saints by afflictions, ſtraits and diſtreſſes. (w) The Combatant doth not gain his Crowns, nor the Souldier his Trophies, nor the Shipmaſter his Port, nor the Husbandman his full Floor, by Sleep, Sloth and deliciating. Now and of old ever ſince there were Men, a Life afflictive and of Labours and full of innumerable hard things, hath been the lot of all that were or are Friends of God. The firſt of them was not only afflicted, but perſecuted, and is juſtly ſtiled, (x) τὸ ἀρνίον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the Lamb of Chriſt; for he died a Martyr for true Religion. (y) The Sufferings of the Church began from the Blood of Abel, who was ſucceeded by the Prophets, that wore the Badge of the Chriſtian Family according to our Saviour's Parallel, ſo perſecuted they the Prophets which were before you. Theſe were in their Lives oppoſite to the Guize and Humour of the World, and ſharp reprovers of the prevailing Sins of the times wherein they liv'd (as became the Miniſters of true Religion) whence they were hated, malign'd, abus'd and murder'd (z) by that evil World which they oppos'd. Which of the Prophets have not your Fathers perſecuted? Act. 7. 52. (a) Noah therefore a Man of Righteouſneſs, a preacher of Righteouſneſs, living in an Age of the moſt outragious Wickedneſs, in a Wilderneſs of barbarous Senſualiſts and Savages, conteſting the whole World of the Ungodly alone and unaſſiſted with any Companion, and for a much longer time than any other Prophet, conflicting with two Deluges (of Wickedneſs and of Waters) could not but ſuffer Hardſhips innumerable. Abraham by Divine Command wandred from his Home and Country into the wide World (he knew not whither) was exercis'd with ſevere trials (the Jews reckon nine of his tentations) liv'd a travelling life all his days, ſojourning as a Stranger (having no fix'd dwelling-place) which was alſo the caſe of Iſaac and Jacob, Heb. 11. 9. Jacob ſpent a conſiderable part of his life in toilſome Servitude (in the

---

(p) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 15. c. 7.

* Ibid. l. 18. c. 51. & l. 15. c. 1.

(q) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 228.

(r) Brerewood Enquir. of Armen.

1 Maccab. 2. 58.

(s) Τὸν προφήτην ἐκεῖνον, τὸν ἐπίγειον ἄγγελον, ϗ ἐπουράνιον ἄνθρωπον, τὸν χαμαὶ βαδίζοντα ϗ τὰ οὐράνια ἡνιοχοῦντα, τὸν τρίπηχυν ἄνθρωπον ϗ ὑψηλοβατοῦντα, ϗ εἰς αὐτὰς ἀναπτασθέντα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τὰς ἀψῖδας, τὸν τῶν ὑδάτων ταμίαν, οὗ ἡ γλῶττα θησαυρὸς ἐγένετο τῶν ὑδάτων καὶ κλεὶς τῶν οὐρανῶν. S. Chryſoſt. T. 8. p. 20.

(t) S. Chryſoſt. Ἀνδριαντ. p. 459.

(u) Idem in 2 Cor. Hom. 27.

(w) Idem T. 5. λογ. ογ. p. 522.

(x) Idem. T. 6. λογ. 1. p. 107.

(y) Greg. M super Ezech. l. 2. Hom. 15.

(z) 1 King. 19. 10. 2 Chron. 16. 10.

(a) Vid. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. λογ. 1. p. 108, &c. & in Gen. λογ. κγ. p. 166.

Day the Drought conſum'd him and the Froſt by Night, and the Sleep departed from his Eyes) and upon a review of the whole of it (which was a ſucceſſion of troubles, he found, that he had reaſon to ſay, Few and evil have been the Days of my Pilgrimage, Gen. 47. 9. Moſes after his Court-education was forc'd to become a Fugitive (to flee for his life) to tent Sheep for his living, forty Years being expir'd he undertook the care of a much more troubleſome Flock, was imploy'd in conducting through a vaſt howling Wilderneſs a frantick untoward People, that made him weary of his Life by their monſtrous Sins and ſeditious Murmurs and the Plagues which their Impieties procured; and after all his immenſe Pains and tedious Travels he was deny'd entrance into Canaan. Job was a Prodigy of Affliction and of Patience. David's Afflictions and Perſecutions for Righteouſneſs ſake (for he was made the Drunkard's Song) are deſcrib'd by himſelf in an accent ſo tragical, as ſpeaketh them ſuperlative; (b) πάντα γὰρ μῦθον καὶ τραγῳδίαν πᾶσαν ἐνίκησε τὰ τοῦ βασιλέως τούτου πάθη, for the Sufferings of this King ſurmount all Fable and all Tragedy. Such was the courſe of things even in the Old Teſtament-times, which were not without a zealous and faithful love to God and true Religion; for in the caſe of the three Hebrew Youths, (c) πῦρ ἐκράτει πυρὸς, τὸ πνευματικὸν τοῦ φυσικοῦ, one Fire prevailed over another, the Spiritual over the Natural. Nor were the Faithful in thoſe times without their fiery trial eſpecially the Maccabees, that were expos'd to the utmoſt outrages of a barbarous Perſecution, to which the Apoſtle hath reſpect in his tragical account of the Sufferings of God's Believers, Heb. 11. 35,----38. (d) and is there any thing more glorious? τί τὸ ἰσάμιλλον εἰς φαιδρότητα τῶν ἐξ ἀρετῶν; is there any ſo mighty an illuſtriouſneſs of Virtue? Such are the Church's Glories, that are made illuſtrious by their Sufferings.

VI. They belong'd to the New Teſtament, which is the Chriſtian Religion, but ſo that they belong'd alſo to that Religion (the Judaical Religion) which was the Religion of the Old Teſtament-times. They are therefore of Character Chriſtiano-Judaical, and ſo far theſe ancient Saints were Chriſtians, They were made Saints by the Grace of Chriſt. For the New Teſtament (although not properly made till the death of the Teſtator, yet) being made in the purpoſe of God, provided and promis'd by God, the Church having an Inſtitution to the Religion of it from the beginning, and the matters of it being prefigured in the Religion of the Times of the Old Teſtament, things in thoſe times were initially diſpens'd according to it. Converting Grace was diſpens'd, to bring Men to perform the Condition of it (as was requiſite in thoſe times,) and to all that ſo perform'd the Condition of it the ineſtimable Benefits of it did belong, and they were the Children of the Promiſe and of Grace. Proviſion was then made by the Grace of the New Teſtament, that God's Believers ſhould be in the ſtate of Righteouſneſs,(e) quia nec fides ſine gratia, nec gratia ſine fide, Juſtifying Faith and the Grace of the New Teſtament are inſeparable. All the Church of the Regenerate (of ancient and later times) belongeth to the New Teſtament. (f) Novum Teſtamentum quo renovatur homo ad novam hæreditatem, that is the New Teſtament, whereby we are renew'd to a new Inheritance. All the truly holy and ſpiritual kind of Men and Religioniſts from the beginning of the World did belong to the New Teſtament. (g) To ſuch Men and Religioniſts that are no better than Animal the Old Teſtament belongeth, to ſuch as are Spiritual the New Teſtament belongeth. As in the Inſtitutions of the Old Teſtament there were ſome ſpiritual livers, ſuch as belong'd to the New Teſtament that was then veiled: ſo now that the New Teſtament is revealed, in the Inſtitutions of it the moſt live Animal and carnal. All that were of old in the ſtate of Grace neceſſarily belong'd to the Religion of Saving Grace, which was provided for them and diſpens'd unto them. (h) For God's care of Humane Concerns is not a new conſult, nor a late mercy: but from the Creation he appointed one and the ſame cauſe of Salvation to all. The Grace of God, whereby the Univerſality of the Saints was always juſtify'd, had an increaſe, not a beginning at Chriſt's birth. And this great Myſtery of Godlineſs, which hath now filled the whole World, was ſo potent even in the ſignifications of it, that they gain'd no leſs, who believ'd it, when it was only promis'd, than they that have receiv'd it, now it is actually given. Great reaſon there is therefore, that Chriſt ſhould own the ancient Saints for his; for they were not only the Religioniſts of his Perſon and his kind of Religioniſts, but they were Saints of his making, as he is the maker of the New Teſtament, whereby he hath aboliſh'd Death, and brought Life and Immortality to light, 2 Tim. 1. 10. The Pagans underſtood and hop'd for Life and Immortality in their Religion, and ſo did the Jews in their Religion, Joh. 5. 39. Yet the Apoſtle had reaſon to ſay, that Chriſt hath aboliſhed Death, and brought Life and Immortality to light: becauſe there is no other available ſettlement or promiſe of Life and Immortality but only the New Teſtament. The promiſe of Life in the original Law or in any other Religion is unto us of no avail; without a redemption-liberation by Chriſt Mankind had remain'd in the ſtate of death everlaſtingly. But by the New Teſtament which he hath made (and by no other Religion) Life is to purpoſe brought to light, it is the available ſettlement of Life and Immortality. All the Heirs of Life therefore belong to the New Teſtament. And ſuch were thoſe ancient Saints, who ſaw through the Veil of Earthly Promiſes and faithfully embrac'd the Heavenly; (i) they adminiſtred the Old Teſtament, but were the Heirs of the New Teſtament. As Abraham from his Faith in God's promiſe, that his Poſterity ſhould have the Land of Canaan, left his own Country, to live as a Stanger in it; and while he was doing this, he liv'd as a Pilgrim in this World from Faith in God's promiſe, that thereby he ſhould obtain a better World.

VII. It appeareth, that the Religion of the ancient Saints was an initial Chriſtianiſm and that they were Chriſt's Believers and Religioniſts, ſo far as the being God's Believers and Religioniſts doth import, which was the way to Righteouſneſs and Salvation in their time. Their Caſe and Character therefore doth not ſuit with the Opinion of S. Chryſoſtom and Epiphanius, that the acknowledgment

(b) S. Chryſoſt. ſupr. λογ. ια. p. 129.

(c) Idem T. 5. εἰς τοὺς Μακκαβ. λογ. 6. p. 639.

(d) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 189.

(e) Hypognoſt. ſcrip. l. 3. c. 14.

(f) S. Aug. in Pſal. 88. Con. 1.

(g) Ad animales pertinet vetus teſtamentum, ad ſpiritales novum ſicut in ſacramentis veteris teſtamenti vivebant quidam ſpiritales, ad novum ſcilicet teſtamentum quod tunc occultabatur pertinentes: ſic & nunc in ſacramento novi teſtamenti, quod jam revelatum eſt, plerique vivunt animales. Idem de Bapt. c. Donat. l. 1. c. 15.

(h) Non enim novo conſilio Deus rebus humanis, nec ſera miſeratione conſuluit: ſed à conſtitutione unam eandemque omnibus cauſam ſalutis inſtituit. Gratia autem Dei, qua ſemper eſt Univerſitas juſtificata ſanctorum, aucta eſt Chriſto naſcente, non capta. Et hoc magnæ pietatis ſacramentum, quo totus jam mundus impletus eſt, tam potens etiam in ſuis ſignificationibus fuit, ut non minus adepti ſint, qui in illud credidere promiſſum, quam qui ſuſcipere donatum. Leo M. Ser. 3. de Nativ.

(i) S. Aug. Ep. 120. c. 2. & contr. 2. Ep. Pelag. l. 3. c. 4.

ment and ſervice of Chriſt was not required before his coming; it was ſufficient, to relinquiſh the worſhip of Idols, and to acknowledge one only God the Creator. For theſe ancient Saints were God's Believers according to the Iſraelitical Theiſm, wherein a prophetick Faith touching the Meſſiah was involv'd and comprehended. But on behalf of this Opinion (of S. Chryſoſtom and Epiphanius) it may be argued, that if there were in the World any ſuch genuine Theiſts as theſe ancient Saints, which yet were wholly unacquainted with the knowledge and faith of Chriſt's Perſon, ſuch genuine Theiſts could not fail of Salvation. The Religion of ſuch genuine Theiſts might be called, The more imperfect initial Chriſtianiſm, and the Religion of the Saints of the Old Teſtament might be called for diſtinction ſake The more perfect initial Chriſtianiſm. Both being God's Believers and Religioniſts (truly Godly Believers and Religioniſts) the genuine People and worſhippers of God, and truly Righteous and Holy, they muſt neceſſarily be ſuch as belong to the Religion and Diſpenſation of Saving Grace, which is the New Teſtament; their Religion muſt be initial Chriſtianiſm and themſelves Heirs of Salvation. (k) Thoſe only will have the bleſſed life to come, that have receiv'd the Religion according to Jeſus, and Piety towards the Creator of all things ſincere and pure and unmix'd as to any thing created. To Chriſtians plenarily ſuch Origen confineth Salvation in the New Teſtament-times; and by parity of reaſon it muſt be confin'd to Chriſtians at leaſt initially ſuch in all Times and Ages. But ſeeing none that are truly godly Believers and Religioniſts, can be reaſonably ſuppos'd, to miſs of Salvation, therefore all that are of that Character, muſt be counted at leaſt initially Chriſtians. (l) S. Auſtin excludeth all from Salvation, to whom Chriſt is not revealed, and therefore confineth it to thoſe that have the knowledge and faith of Chriſt's perſon; yet himſelf ſaith, (m) ubicunque timetur Deus & laudatur, ibi eſt Eccleſia Chriſti, whereſoever God is feared and praiſed, there is the Church of Chriſt. It may ſeem therefore, that if there were any ſuch genuine Theiſts, that are truly godly Believers and Religioniſts, although they had no acquaintance with the knowledge and faith of Chriſt's perſon, yet theſe muſt be reputed initially Chriſtians, ſuch as come to God believing that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him. Heb. 11. 6. Such as in every Nation fearing God and working Righteouſneſs are accepted with him. Act. 10. 34. But it is moſt reaſonable and agreeable to the Scriptures to ſuppoſe, that there never were, nor ever will be any ſuch genuine Theiſts (the σεϐόμενοι that imperfectly belong'd to the Jewiſh Church, were not ſuch Theiſts;) that ſince the Fall there is no ſaving Theiſm on this ſide the Iſraelitical Theiſm (that involv'd the Faith of Chriſt:) that if the Gentiles had not alienated themſelves from God, but duely ſought after him, He would have been to them a God, but no otherwiſe than he was to his ancient People, and their Theiſm ſhould have been the ſame with the Iſraelitical Theiſm. So that although the acknowledgment and ſervice of Chriſt ſhould not have been formally and explicitly requir'd of the Gentiles before his coming, yet the acknowledgment of Chriſt ſhould have been comprehended in their Theiſm, as it was in God's ancient Peoples. But the Gentile World alienating themſelves from God at a prodigious rate, it was an Act of great ſeverity in God, to ſuffer them for many Ages, to wander in the darkeſt Night and to wallow in the fouleſt Mire; and an Act of great goodneſs in God, to raiſe up and preſerve a Church on Earth and a ſaving Religion, which was introduc'd from the beginning of the World, and is continu'd unto this Day. For it appeareth from the Character of the ancient Saints, that the Chriſtian Religion (together with Judaiſm) had an initial introduction from the moſt ancient Old Teſtament-times; and it appeareth alſo from the Religion that was introduc'd in theſe remarkable Succeſſions of Old Teſtament-time, the time of Adam, Noah, Abraham and Moſes, in which four Succeſſions of time Irenæus thinketh, (n) quatuor data ſunt teſtamenta, four Teſtaments were given.

Section IV.

Of the Ante-Moſaical Inſtitutions Adamical, Noachical, Abrahamical.

I. In the Adamical Inſtitution (beſides the illuſtrious Types of Adam and his Paradiſe and the doom of the Serpent, which are a great Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion) the origin of Sacrifices muſt be conſider'd, which in all reaſon ought to be deriv'd from divine poſitive Inſtitution, not from Nature, not from Humane Arbitrary Inſtitution, nor as ſome derive them, (o) from rude ſimple Antiquity. S. Chryſoſtom ſaith, The offering Sacrifices was (p) when as yet there were no Letters, nor any written Law, nor any Prophets, nor any Judges, there was only Adam with his Children. If theſe things were ſo, Sacrifice muſt be of Humane Origination; but if things are quite otherwiſe, if Sacrifice had its origin in a Family of Prophets (no leſs than Prophets) ordinary Reaſon will derive it from divine poſitive Inſtitution. There is great reaſon, to think Abel one of the Rank and Succeſſion of Prophets. Adam was not a Prophet, as that name ſignifieth an extraordinary Agent or Miſſionary ſent from God, or an inſpir'd Teacher of Mankind; but he ſpake ſomething prophetical, had an extraordinary intercourſe with God and the appearance of Angels as well as the Prophets, and the Bath Col which he had in Paradiſe, is one degree of Prophecy. In reſpect of Supernatural Revelation therefore he was no leſs than a Prophet. And if either himſelf or Abel introduc'd the rite of Sacrifice (and there is no probability, that Cain introduc'd it) it was introduc'd by one of ſuch a Character, as is not wont to inſtitute things in God's ſervice without underſtanding the Mind of God. It hath the faireſt pretenſion imaginable to Divine Inſtitution, being introduc'd and continu'd in after-times by the eminent Saints and Prophets of God, (q) that were pious in their life and near to God, and had their Souls illuminated by the D[illegible] Spirit. This I do not think a fortuitous buſineſs, or of humane motion, but of Divine Suggeſtion and Cogitation. The rite of Sacrifice was not only continu'd by Prophets, but was publickly inacted by God in his written Law to the Jews; which is an Indication, that it was originally of his appointment. For let us ſuppoſe, that Cain and Chanock his Son were Prophets of the God Jupiter Hammon, that theſe Pagan Prophets introduc'd the ſacred veſtal Fire, and that a long time after this God Jupiter Hammon publiſh'd by his Servant Numa a Pandect of his Laws (containing univerſal Paganiſm) wherein he publickly inacted the ſacred veſtal Fire. No Man that conſidereth this antecedence and conſequence of things, that the Veſtal Fire was at firſt introduc'd by the Prophets of Jupiter Hammon, and afterwards this God publickly own'd it, and inacted it in his written Law, would make any doubt touching the origin of it; he would ſuppoſe, that this Heathen God firſt appointed it, and that his Prophets underſtood his Mind; for the ſame reaſon the rite of Sacrifice muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been originally, not meerly of Humane Suggeſtion, but of Divine Inſtitution. In Nature there is not any Suggeſtion, to offer Animals in Sacrifice to God: but S. Auſtin mentioneth a Saying of Socrates as a Suggeſtion of Natural Reaſon, (r) unumquemque Deum ſic coli oportere, quomodo ſe ipſe colendum eſſe præceperit, every God muſt be worſhipp'd according to his own appointment. Following the Suggeſtion of Nature therefore Adam and his Children muſt have abſtain'd from ſacrificing without a Divine Inſtitution; nor is it likely, that upon their own Heads they would venture upon inventing a Religious Worſhip, and ſuch a Religious Worſhip, which the Church of Rome maintaineth, to be of all other Worſhip moſt peculiar and appropriate to God. Nature would rather have ſuggeſted to them that of Plato in his Epinomis, οὐ δυνατὸν εἰδέναι τῇ θνητῇ τῶν τοιούτων πέρι, it is not poſſible for our mortal nature, to know any thing about theſe matters. (s) The Heathen therefore buſied themſelves in Divination, to know the Mind of their Gods touching their Worſhip. Neither Cain nor Abel could have had any tolerable aſſurance, that their Sacrifices and Oblations were an acceptable ſervice, if they had had no notice of the Mind of God concerning them: nor could the offering Sacrifice concern Abel as one of God's Believers (and therefore he could not offer it by Faith as he did, Heb. 11. 4.) nor was there any ground for Faith in the caſe, if there was no Divine Inſtitution concerning it. When Abel had offered his Sacrifice, Mankind had abundant aſſurance, that God approv'd this mode of Religious Worſhip, which Approbation was equivalent to an Inſtitution. From his great approbation of Abel's Sacrifice it appear'd, to be his Will, that this mode of Worſhip ſhould be inſtituted in thoſe times; and if it was his Will, that it ſhould be inſtituted, how could it be unreveal'd to his Prophets? Amos 3. 7. It is granted, (t) that in theſe eldeſt times they did offer Expiatory and Propitiatory Sacrifices. (u) They judg'd it needful for the expiation of the Sins of Men, to offer to the donour of their Life and Soul their welfare's price of Redemption. They offer'd Propitiatory Sacrifices, with reſpect thereto God pardon'd the Sins of Me[illegible]is they knew and underſtood: but it is impo[illegible]e, that they could know this, that God would accept the Life of the Sacrifice inſtead of the Sinners, or that holy Men ſhould have any ſuch conceit in their Heads, if they had no notice of the Mind of God, no revelation from him about it. Beſides, the Divine Wiſdom determin'd, that the Old Teſtament ſhould be a continu'd Prophecy of the New, and that in the Old Teſtament-times Men ſhould have by Types and Shadows an Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. This was deſign'd in the Moſaic Inſtitution, and there is the ſame reaſon, that it ſhould be deſign'd from the beginning; and that it was deſign'd from the beginning, is manifeſt from thoſe Types and Shadows that were inſtituted in the time of Man's Innocency. In thoſe Branches of the Adamical Inſtitution an adumbration of the Meſſiah was deſign'd; and if the Meſſiah muſt be typify'd and adumbrated from the beginning of the World, his ineſtimable Sacrifice muſt be typify'd, and conſequently the rite of Sacrifice muſt be inſtituted from the beginning, to typifie and adumbrate his Sacrifice.

(k) Ἡ μέλλουσα μακαρία ζωὴ μόνοις ἔσαι τοῖς κατὰ τὸν Ἰησοῦν θρησκεύσασιν, καὶ τὴν εἰς τὸν τῶν ὅλων δημιουργὸν εὐσέβειαν εἰλικρινῆ καὶ καθαρὰν καὶ ἄμικτον πρὸς ὁτιποτοῦν γενητὸν παραδεξαμένοις. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 160.

(l) De C. D. l. 18. c. 47. c. Pelag. & Celeſt. l. 2. c. 24.

(m) In Pſ. 21. Expoſ. 2.

(n) Adv. Hær. p. m. 287.

(o) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 3. diſſ. 2. c. 4.

(p) Ὄτε οὔπω γράμματα, ὄτε οὔπω νόμος, ὅτε οὔπω προφῆται, καὶ δικασταὶ, ἀλλὰ μόνος ὁ Ἀδὰμ μετὰ τῶν παίδων ἦν. Ἀνδριαντ. 12. p. 543. Οὐ γραμμάτων ὄντων, οὐ προφητῶν, οὐ νόμου γραπτοῦ ἐνηχοῦντος. T. 7. p. 13.

(q) Ἅτε τὸν τρόπον εὐσεβεῖς, καὶ θεῷ προσῳκειωμένοι, θείῳ τε πνεύματι τὰς ψυχὰς πεφωτισμένοι. Τοῦτο δὲ τὸν λογισμὸν ἡγοῦμαι εἶναι οὐ τὸν τυχόντα, οὐδ' ἀνθρωπίνως κεκινημένον, κατὰ θείαν δὲ ἐπίνοιαν ὑποβεβλημένον. Euſeb. Dem. Ev. l. 1. c. 10.

They that are otherwiſe minded, do not deny, that the Moſaic Sacrifices were Types and Adumbrations of Chriſt's Sacrifice: (w) but they will not acknowledge, that the Patriarchal Sacrifices were ſuch, becauſe (ſay they) ſome Emphatick Circumſtances of the Moſaic were wanting in the Patriarchal Sacrifices. But this is a little Artifice to evade the force of an Argument. As if one ſhould argue, the Moſaic Sabbath was a Type of the Chriſtians Sabbatiſm, but it doth not thence follow, that the Patriarchal Sabbath (Gen. 2. 3.) was ſo, becauſe an Emphatick Circumſtance which was in the Moſaic Sabbath, was wanting in the Patriarchal Sabbath. The Moſaic Propitiatory Sacrifices were Types of Chriſt's Sacrifice as ſuch, and becauſe they were Propitiatory Sacrifices; from whence it followeth, that the Patriarchal Sacrifices becauſe they were Propitiatory Sacrifices, were alſo Types of Chriſt's Sacrifice. And if they were Types of Chriſt's Sacrifice, they were unqueſtionably of Divine Inſtitution, and a Branch of the Patriarch's Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. The Religion of the moſt ancient Saints of the Old Teſtament was an initial Chriſtianiſm. The Inſtitutes of their Religion therefore were (according to the mode of the Old Teſtament) the Inſtitutes of this their initial Chriſtianiſm. Of theſe Inſtitutes the rite of Sacrifice in the eldeſt times of the World was the principal; therefore it was a Rite of Divine Inſtitution introductory to the Religion of Chriſtianity. (x) They that aſſert the humane arbitrary Inſtitution of Sacrifice, have nothing to ſay (that is of weight) on behalf of their Hypotheſis ſave only the ſilence of Moſes touching the origin of Sacrifice (but he is not ſilent touching the frequent intercourſe Men had with God, when Sacrifices began, from which intercourſe they had their Inſtitutes of Religion) and the words of the Prophet to the Jews, Jer. 7. 21, 22. Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, the God of Iſrael, put your Burnt-offerings upon your Sacrifices and eat Fleſh. For I ſpake not unto your Fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the Land of Egypt, concerning Burnt-offerings or Sacrifices. From thence they argue, that in the beginning of the World God did not give Men any command touching Sacrifices; for if he had done ſo, this could not at all have abated the Jews high Opinion of thoſe Rites, to tell them, I gave no command touching Sacrifices to your Fathers, when I brought them out of the Land of Egypt. For was not a Command in the beginning of the World of as great account as a Command given to their Fathers, when they came out of Egypt? But how little force there is in this Argumentation, will appear by conſidering, that the Prophets words plainly reſpect the groſs materiality of Sacrifice (the giving God Fleſh) which God never had regard to, neither in the beginning of the World, nor when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt; and this he declareth to the Jews, to abate their high Opinion of thoſe Ritualities. They might not eat of their Burnt-offerings as of their other Sacrifices, yet God ſaith, put your Burnt-offerings upon your Sacrifices and eat Fleſh. Which words with due Reſtriction and Limitation muſt be thus underſtood; ſo far as concerneth the groſs materiality of Sacrifice, you may feed your Corps with the Burnt-offerings as well as other Sacrifices, take and devour all. When the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, they ask'd leave of Pharaoh, to go and Sacrifice to their God, he gave them a written Law touching Sacrifices, yet neither in the beginning of the World, nor when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, did God give any command touching Sacrifices, as having any regard at all to the groſs materiality of Sacrifice. Therefore he telleth the Jews, that when their Fathers came out of Egypt, he did not ſpeak unto them, nor command them touching Sacrifices, that is, touching thoſe groſs material Rites as ſuch; for they were not acceptable to God but as inſtances of dutiful Obedience and conjoin'd therewith, as it immediately followeth in the Prophet, V. 23. But this thing commanded I them, ſaying, obey my voice, and I will be your God. From this place of the Prophet thus clearly explain'd and which might be explain'd (y) from many other places of Scripture, it is impoſſible to draw any inference to the prejudice of the Divine Inſtitution of Sacrifice: But on the contrary, hence ariſeth a mighty Argument for the Divine Inſtitution of Sacrifice. For if Sacrifices were not acceptable to God but as inſtances of dutiful Obedience (and conjoin'd therewith) then the Sacrifice of Abel which was ſo highly acceptable to God, was an inſtance of his dutiful Obedience to the Divine Inſtitution of Sacrifice.

(r) De Conſenſ. Evang. l. 1. c. 18.

(s) Jambl. de vit. Pythag. c. 28. p. 129.

(t) Spencer. ſupr.

(u) Δεῖν εἰς ἀποκάθαρσιν τῶν θνητῶν πλημμελημάτων, λύτρον τῆς αὐτῶν σωτηρίας τῆς καὶ ζωῆς καὶ ψυχῆς χορηγῷ προσφέρεσθαι ἡγοῦντο. Euſeb. ſupr.

(w) Spencer. ſupr.

(x) Vid. Spencer. ſupr. Outr. de Sacrific. l. 1. c. 1.

II. The Adamical Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion was ſo far and to ſuch effect propagated, the Moſaic Hiſtory mentioneth a Succeſſion of Holy Men, who were of this Inſtitution in the Ante-diluvian times. More of them might be Holy Men than the Scripture particularly remarketh for their Holineſs (as Enos, Mahaleel, Jared) and ſome of them being certainly Prophets, who probably had their Hearers and Followers, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that theſe were imbodied into Religious Societies, and held their Aſſemblies for publick Religious Worſhip, which is thought, to be the meaning of the ſacred Hiſtorians Character of the days of Enos, Gen. 4. 26. Then began Men to call on the Name of the Lord. But this Expoſition of the Text (that publick worſhipping of God began in the days of Enos) wanteth probability. For God was publickly worſhipp'd by Cain and Abel, their Sacrifices were Rites of publick Worſhip, and how could either of them be truly Religious, if he took not care that his Family (ſuch as he had) ſhould join with him in Religious Worſhip? Many of the Hebrew Writers (with whom ſome of the learned Writers of the Chriſtian Church join) will have the Text to ſpeak of the riſe of Idolatry, and thus they render the words of it; tunc profanatum eſt invocando nomen Domini, then was there Profanation by invoking the Name of the Lord. But this Expoſition is incongruous. (z) For Moſes is not ſpeaking of the Family of impious Cain, but of the Religious Family of Seth; and the Hebrew words will not bear this rendring. For although the word Huchal ſignifieth Profanation as well as Beginning, yet it doth not ſignifie Profanation, when the Prepoſition le immediately followeth in the next word, and the next word is לקרא which may not be rendred by invoking. Others therefore diſallowing both theſe Expoſitions (and ſome others which are ſo improbable, that they need not a confutation) approve the marginal Tranſlation of our Bible, then began Men to call themſelves by the Name of the Lord (to call themſelves the Servants or Worſhippers of the Lord in diſtinction from the Canites and profane Perſons;) which Tranſlation of the words would have been unexceptionable, if our Tranſlators in their marginal Verſion had not inſerted this word themſelves, which is not in the Hebrew. The Hebrew words are אז הוחל לקרא בשם יהוה which are thus exactly rendred into Engliſh. Then it was begun, to call by the Name of the Lord. The ſenſe of this Verſion is imperfect, but the way to make it compleat and full, is not to inſert this word themſelves, but things and perſons. Moſes is treating about the origin of things, and agreeably to his purpoſe he telleth us, that in the days of Enos this Religious Cuſtom and Uſage was begun, to call Things and Perſons by the Name of the Lord. As the People of God, the Servants of God, the Men of God, the Church of God, the Angels of God, the Houſe of God (and the like) which is the Scriptural and Religious way of ſpeaking. If this be the ſenſe of the place (which is moſt probable) it importeth the making a Diſcrimination between the Holy and Profane, the Introduction of this way of ſpeaking in the days of Enos recommendeth the Piety that was in thoſe times in the Family of Seth; and it importeth, that the then People of God deſired, to be known as ſuch, and to diſcriminate themſelves from the World of the Ungodly, as the Apoſtle ſtileth the Ante-diluvian Age.

III. In this Age Noah liv'd, whoſe Inſtitution was an initial Judaiſm, which is a Religion that was gradually introduc'd, as Maimonides repreſenteth it. (a) Six of the Precepts of the Sons of Noah were given to Adam, to Noah a Seventh was added, and ſo things ſtood through the whole World till the time of Abraham. Over and above theſe Abraham receiv'd the Precept of Circumciſion, and inſtituted Morning Prayers, Iſaac ſet apart the Tenths, and added Afternoon Prayer. An addition was made by Jacob touching not eating the Nerve of Oblivion and of Evening Prayers: And in Egypt more and other Precepts were given to Abraham, until Moſes our Maſter came, and by him the Law was conſummated. The Seven Precepts of the Sons of Noah, (the Firſt touching ſtrange Worſhip or renouncing idolatrous Worſhip; the Second touching the malediction of the Name of God or of Blaſphemy; the Third touching ſhedding of Blood or againſt Homicide; the Fourth touching diſcloſing Nakedneſs or ſetting bounds to Luſt and Marriage; the Fifth touching Theft and Rapine; the Sixth touching Magiſtrates and Civil Government; the Seventh touching not eating the Member of a living Animal) are Six of them certain Precepts which the Jews have collected out of their own Law with the addition of a Seventh

(y) 1 Sam. 15. 22. Pſal. 50. 8,--13. Prov. 21. 3, 27. Iſa. 1. 11, 13. and ch. 65. 3. Jer. 6.20. Hoſ. 6. 6.

(z) Bp. Patrick in loc. Dionyſ. Voſſ. in Maimon. de Idol. c. 1.

(a) Ap. Hoornbeek c. Jud. l. 7. c. 1. Coſri p. 42.

Precept out of their own Imagination. For that theſe Precepts were given either to Adam or to Noah in a way of ſupernatural Revelation, as the Jews ſuppoſe (b) is a groundleſs Conceit, of which the Scripture ſaith nothing, and Joſephus knoweth nothing, but it is purely a Rabbinical and Talmudical Tradition (groundleſs and fabulous) and accordingly Jeſephus Albo ſpeaking of theſe Precepts ſaith, he ſpeaketh of them according to the Tradition of our Rabbins. Six of them are Precepts of the Law of Nature, as it is a Civil-religious Inſtitution (and as ſuch they were given to Adam and to Noah) accordingly the Jews account them (c) certain Rules of Juſtice neceſſary for human Life, compel Men to undertake the obſervance of them, put to Death ſuch as know them not, and ſuch as refuſe to take upon them the obſervance of them; ſo making them a Civil-religious Inſtitution. But they alſo ſuppoſe that the obſervance of them conſtituteth Men חסידי אומות the pious of the Gentiles; of theſe they require an interiour ſort of Religious Worſhip, they acquaint them with higher Puniſhments than thoſe of their Law-courts, and they alſo allow them a part in the World to come: But how little the Piety which they require amounteth to, and how undiſcerning theſe Night-birds are in matters of Piety, may appear from this nefarious Licence which the ancient Talmudiſts allow. (d) When one of the Sons of Noah is forc'd to the Tranſgreſſion of a Precept, that bindeth him, that very Tranſgreſſion is lawful to him, although it be Idolatry, that he is forc'd to. For to ſuch the Sanctification of the Name of God is not injoined.

As the Jews diſtinguiſh themſelves from the Sons of Noah, ſo in Noah's Inſtitution their Precepts of the Sons of Noah are diſtinct from the ritual Inſtitutes of Judaiſm. Of which (beſides the Rite of Sacrifice) the firſt is God's Command touching the making a difference between clean and unclean Animals. Gen. 7. 2. Of every clean Beaſt thou ſhalt take to thee by ſevens, the Male and his Female: And of Beaſts that are not clean by two, the Male and his Female. It is not probable, that this difference betwen Animals in the days of Noah had any relation to Mens Food; both becauſe Animals were not eaten before the Flood, and becauſe after the Flood God granted Licenſe to Noah and his Sons, to eat Animals without making any difference between the Clean and Unclean. It muſt be ſuppos'd therefore, that in the days of Noah, thoſe were counted Clean Animals, which were allow'd to be offer'd to God in Sacrifice, and thoſe were counted Unclean, which might not be offer'd in Sacrifice, as we read, Gen. 8. 20. Noah builded an Altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean Beaſt, and of every clean Fowl, and offer'd burnt Offerings on the Altar. This difference between Animals is (in all probability) as old as the Rite of Sacrifice, was a Branch of the Diſcipline of Sacrifice, and deriv'd from the ſame Original. For ſeeing God did own and appoint it in the days of Noah, and afterwards did imbody it in the Moſaic Law, it is utterly unreaſonable, to ſuppoſe it of human arbitrary Inſtitution. It is ſo apparently of Divine Inſtitution, that it proveth the Divine Inſtitution of Sacrifice. And it muſt be look'd upon as a Branch of Judaiſm, in which as plenarily introduc'd the difference between clean and unclean Animals had relation both to Food and Sacrifice, but not ſo in Judaiſm initially introduc'd. Another Branch of Judaiſm (manifeſtly ſuch) appeareth, to have been introduc'd in the days of Noah, which is the prohibition of eating Blood. Gen. 9. 3, 4. Every moving thing that liveth, ſhall be meat for you: But fleſh with the life thereof, which is the Blood thereof, ſhall you not eat. (e) The Arabians are obſerv'd, to be Ferine and Sanguinary in their Diſpoſition, which ſome of their Phyſicians look upon as (in ſome degree) an effect of their Diet; for they ſuppoſe, that the Diſpoſition and Temperament of Men is agreeable to their Diet; whence they commend the Fleſh of Sheep for Food, but the Fleſh of Camels and of Lions (as they ſay) maketh Men of hurtful Qualities. Something of this Philoſophy may be in this Preſcript of Diet to the Sons of Noah; for the deſign of it is to inure them to Humanity, and to alienate them from the ferity and barbarity of the Ante-diluvian times. God having granted them a Licenſe to eat the Fleſh of Animals, maketh an exception from that general Grant, they may not eat the Fleſh with the Blood; and the Prohibition expreſſeth the reaſon of it, the Blood thereof is the Life thereof, which upon that account they may not eat. The thing intended therefore in this Prohibition is the not eating the Blood, as the Iſraelites in the Moſaic Law are prohibited to eat any manner of Blood upon this account; for the Life of the Fleſh is in the Blood. Lev. 17. 11. If any of them therefore did hunt or catch any Beaſt or Fowl that may be eaten, he muſt pour out the Blood thereof and cover it with Duſt, becauſe it is the Life of all Fleſh. V. 13, 14. And the reaſon of the Law is again repeated. V. 14. The Iſraelites as well as Noah and his Sons, are prohibited to eat the Fleſh of Animals with the Blood; they are prohibited it for the very ſame reaſon; the mind and intention of the Law-giver therefore in both theſe Prohibitions is the very ſame, namely, the not eating the vital Blood, and ſo Joſephus underſtandeth the Precept to the Sons of Noah. The Moſaic Law granteth the ſame Licence, to eat Fleſh, and maketh the very ſame exception from that general Grant, which this Precept to the Sons of Noah doth, Deut. 12. 15, 16. The Scripture therefore is its own Interpreter, and ſufficiently expoundeth this Precept to the Sons of Noah, that it prohibiteth the Sin, which the Iſraelitiſh Army committed, 1 Sam. 14. 32. And is it not marvellous, that Men of Learning can be unſatisfied with ſo eaſie, ſo natural, ſo ſcriptural an Interpretation of the Precept, and prefer before it the Rabbins Interpretation, who underſtand it to be (their Seventh Precept of the Sons of Noah) a Prohibition to eat the Member or Fleſh of a live-Animal, while the Blood is palpitating in it? Which is purely a Rabbinical Crotchet, not at all pointed at in the Precept, and which ſuppoſeth the whole deſign of the Precept to be (f) to prohibit ſuch a nauſeous barbarous Ferity, as the Scripture knoweth nothing of, which few Men can find in their Heart to practiſe, and which was never practis'd in theſe parts of the World ſave only in the Bacchanalia and ſome other few and rare inſtances. The Precept therefore ought to be look'd upon as a Branch of Judaiſm initially introduc'd. And if Judaiſm was initially introduc'd in the days of Noah, his Inſtitution muſt be thought initial Judaiſm; his Rite of Sacrifice muſt be thought a Branch of initial Judaiſm; and conſequently it muſt be thought

---

(b) Hoornbeek ſupr. Spencer. Diſſert. in Act. 15. 20. c. 2.

(c) Seld. de J. Nat. & G. l. 2. c. 3. Cunæus de Rep. Hebr. l. 1. c. 1.

(d) Seld. ſupr. l. 2. c. 11.

Gen. 9. 3.

(e) Pocock. Spec. p. 87, 88.

(f) V. Curc. de Eſu ſanguin. c. 4.

of Divine Inſtitution, typical and adumbrative of Chriſt's Sacrifice (as the Sacrifices in Judaiſm were) and he muſt be ſuppos'd, to have been thereby inſtituted to the Chriſtian Religion, as Men were inſtituted thereto in the times of the Judaical Commonwealth. And if Noah's Inſtitution was an initial Judaiſm, the Inſtitution of Abel and of Enoch muſt be thought ſuch. Judaiſm therefore was initially introduced, and conſequently Men were inſtituted to the Chriſtian Religion, from the beginning of the World.

IV. The Water in Noah's Deluge ſeemeth hugely remote from the matters of the Chriſtian Religion, yet according to the Apoſtle they are of the near Affinity of Type and Antitype, and he findeth a lively correſpondence between them. In the Ark few, that is, eight Souls were ſaved by Water. The like Figure whereunto (in the Greek it is, the Antitype whereto) Baptiſm doth alſo now ſave us. 1 Pet. 3. 20, 21. The Waters of the Deluge as they overwhelmed and drowned the World, are far from anſwering to the Chriſtian Baptiſm; nor doth the Apoſtle compare it to the overwhelming Deluge as ſuch: But this is the Compariſon that he maketh. Our being ſaved by Water (the Chriſtian Baptiſm) now in the times of the Goſpel, anſwereth by way of Antitype to Noah's and his Family's being ſaved by Water. (g) They that believe not the Goſpel, are like them that believed not in the days of Noah. They that believe and are ſav'd by Baptiſm, are like them that were ſaved in the Ark by Water. (h) The Myſtery of the Men that are ſaved (of us Chriſtians that are ſaved by Baptiſm) was in the Deluge. (i) So that we Chriſtians are often called the Ark of Noah, which alone have eſcap'd the deluge or drowning of the whole World. Noah and his Family were ſaved, by Water they were ſav'd from the overwhelming Deluge (as it was ſuch) this was the Type; and conſequently the Water (not as an overwhelming Deluge, but) as Salutary and Salvifick this was the Type. The correſpondence therefore conſiſteth in our being ſaved by Water now, and their being ſaved by Water in old time. As Water was Salvifick to Noah and his Family (bearing up the Ark and carrying it on high) they were ſaved by it from being drowned in the Deluge: So we are ſaved by Water now from being drown'd in the Deluge of the World's Wickedneſs and by the Deluge of Divine Vengeance that will flow in upon it. (k) Τὸν ἐπηρτημένον τῷ κόσμῳ διαδράσκομεν ὄλεθρον, we eſcape the Perdition that is impendent upon the World. The matters of the Chriſtian Religion were typify'd and prefigur'd in Noah's Deluge, and this all Chriſtians aſſert; it ſeemeth ſtrangely incongruous therefore, that any of them ſhould deny that they were typify'd and prefigur'd by his Sacrifice (l) which was Propitiatory (m) and Joſephus accounteth it ſuch.

Noah was perfect (unſtain'd with any heinous Vice and Crime) in his Generation (the moſt corrupt and vicious imaginable) Gen. 6. 9. His genuine Righteouſneſs of Life approv'd and commended by God, Gen. 7. 1. and his walking with God, Gen. 6. 9. ſpeak him to have been a true Saint of God and one of God's Believers (whom Chriſtianity accounteth ſuch) antecedently to his Faith touching the Deluge and the preparing his Ark. Heb. 11. 7. It cannot be ſuppos'd therefore, that by his Faith touching the Deluge he firſt obtain'd Righteouſneſs with God: But it muſt be ſuppos'd (the like is obſervable touching Abraham) that having obtain'd it before, he then obtain'd it more eminently and at an higher rate by being ſo eminently one of God's Believers throughout his whole Carriage in the matter of the Deluge. For as before, ſo at that time more eſpecially there is great reaſon to admire his ſuperlative Virtue, (n) how he was able, to deſpiſe and carry himſelf above ſo great a multitude of People deriding, inſulting, mocking and taunting. This Holy Man in ſeveral reſpects practis'd (o) the things that Chriſt coming afterwards taught. In ſuch ſenſe his Religion was the Chriſtian initially introduc'd.

V. In the ſame Senſe the Religion of the Patriarch Abraham was the Chriſtian Religion initially introduc'd; and it was alſo the Chriſtian Religion initially introduc'd, as it was (Ritual) Judaiſm initially introduc'd. In great part his Inſtitution was a plain Inſtitution to an eximious Faith and Piety (which gain'd him thoſe Spiritual Honours and Advantages, which theſe afford unto Chriſtians;) for the purpoſe of God then was, to raiſe up and ſelect to himſelf the Church of Iſrael (both of the Literal and Spirltual Iſrael) of which Abraham muſt be the Father. And if he muſt be the Father of the People of God, he muſt be a great illuſtrious Hero, and grand Senior for Faith and Piety, and ſuch as the Jews call Abraham (p) עמוד של עולם Columna mundi, the Pillar of the World, whereby they intend, to denote his eminency for Righteouſneſs, according to that Maxim of theirs juſtus eſt fundamentum ſeculi. So in the Prophet (as many underſtand him) Abraham is ſtiled the Righteous Man from the Eaſt, the illuſtrious and famous Man for Righteouſneſs. Iſa. 41. 2. The Apoſtle ſtileth him the Father of the Faithful, which is a great honourary Attribute. For the Jews ſay of the word Abba (Father) it is לשון כבוד a word of Honour and importeth venerable Dignity; whence the Rich Man in the Parable uſeth this Compellation Father Abraham, Luk. 16. 24. The Jews alſo conceiv'd of Abraham, that he hath a parental place and dignity in Paradiſe, and thoſe who are there may lye in his Boſom, which they ſuppoſed the deſirable place of Reſt and Repoſe and delicious Entertainment. Whence our Saviour (in compliance with their Notion) ſaith of Lazarus, He was carried by the Angels into Abraham's Boſom. Luk. 16. 22. Howſoever theſe things are in the Life to come, Abraham hath the venerable Dignity of a Father amongſt the Faithfull in this Life, and for this Reaſon; becauſe in all Families and Kindreds the Grand Senior is look'd upon as the Father, and the Juniors that reſemble him, are counted the Sons and Children. As in the Family of Martial Perſons Mars (the Grand Senior) is counted the Father, and Martial Men (the Juniors that reſemble him) are called υἱοὶ

Ἄρεως,

(g) Illa quippe res geſta forma fuerat futurorum, ut ii qui modo non credunt Evangelio, dum in omnibus gentibus ædificatur Eccleſia, illis intelligantur eſſe ſimiles, qui tunc non crediderunt, cùm fabricaretur arca. Illi autem qui crediderunt, & per Baptiſmum ſalvi fiunt, illis comparentur, qui tunc in eadem arca ſalvi facti ſunt per aquam. S. Aug. Ep. 99.

(h) Τὸ μυστήριον τῶν σωζομένων ἀνθρώπων ἐπὶ τοῦ κατακλυσμοῦ γέγονεν. J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 367.

(i) Ὥστε δὲ καὶ τὴν Νῶε κιβωτὸν πολλάκις ὀνομασθῆναι, μόνην διαφυγοῦσαν τὴν τοῦ κόσμου παντὸς ἐπίκλυσιν. Gr. Naz. Or. 12. p. 196.

(k) S. Cyr. Glaphyr. in Gen. p. 35.

(l) Seld. de J. Nat. & G. l. 3. c. 8.

(m) Antiqu. l. 1. c. 4.

(n) Πῶς ἴσχυσε τοσούτου δήμου καταγελῶντος, ἐπεμβαίνοντος, χλευάζοντος, κωμῳδοῦντος, ὑπεριδεῖν καὶ ἀνώτερος γενέσθαι. S. Chryſoſt. in Gen. λογ. κγ.

(o) Ἅπερ ὁ Χριστὸς ὕστερον παραγενόμενος ἐδίδασκε. Ibid.

(p) Maim. de Idol. c. 1.

Rom. 4. 11, 16.

Ἄρεως, Sons of Mars. So Phyſicians are the Sons of Æſculapius. So Abraham is the Grand Senior in the Family of God's Believers, and they are (q) Ἀβρααμιαῖοι, Abrahamitæ, (r) τέκνα τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ διὰ τὴν ὁμοίαν πίστιν ὄντες, being the Children of Abraham becauſe of their like Faith. God called him (as J. Mart. diſcourſeth) bidding him go out of the Land wherein he dwelt; and us all he hath called by that voice, and we are gone out of that Converſation wherein we liv'd, κτ̀ τὰ κοινὰ τῶν ἄλλων τῆς γῆς οἰκητόρων, at the common rate of other Inhabitants of the Earth living wickedly; and with Abraham we ſhall inherit the Holy Land, and receive the Inheritance to eternal Ages, being the Children of Abraham by a like Faith. For as he believ'd the voice of God, and it was imputed to him for Righteouſneſs: in the ſame manner we alſo believing the voice of God, which was preached to us by the Prophets, and is again ſpoken to us by the Apoſtles of Chriſt, μέχρι τοῦ ἀποθνήσκειν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἀπηλαξάμεθα, have ronounc'd all things in the World even to the Death. His Heavenly Call and prompt Obedience thereto (which was one Branch of his Inſtitution) ſpeaketh him a Chriſtian kind of Religioniſt; for Chriſtians renounce the World and come out of it, duly forſake their earthly All, and are commanded, as Abraham was, (s) to prefer things unſeen before thoſe that appear, and things to come before thoſe in hand, which is the Faith of God's Believers, the Dictate and Life of Faith. His Faith was a believing hard and great things and almoſt incredible. And an hard and great thing it was to forſake all that was dear to Fleſh and Blood (his Country, Kindred and Father's Houſe) to be abſolutely reſign'd to God's conduct and diſpoſal, to budge at no hardſhips, and to expoſe himſelf to all the incommodations of an Exile and a Pilgrimage. So ſtrong was his Faith and ſo faithful was his Obedience, as that in one of the hardeſt trials imaginable and moſt againſt Nature (the ſacrificing his only Son) nothing in Nature could prevail againſt it (t) τὴν φύσιν ῥίπτει, ϗ φιλοθεΐαν ἀσπάζεται, he caſteth away Nature and embraceth Love and Obedience to God. Theſe things were hugely Divine and Chriſtian, and ſuch was his Devotion, his interceſſion for Sodom, his care of his Family and Poſterity, his Hoſpitality, his peaceable Temper, Gen. 13. his generous Friendſhip, Gen. 14. the main of his Practice, and that great rule of his Practice, walk before me and be thou perfect. His State and Condition was as high and divine, as Chriſtianity affordeth (that height of Honour and Happineſs to be called the Friend of God) which he obtain'd as a divine Believer of the matters of his Inſtitution. In the Promiſſory part whereof one Branch is ſo highly Evangelical and Chriſtian, that the Apoſtle ſaith, the Goſpel was before preach'd unto Abraham. Gal. 3. 8. It was foreſignify'd to him by this Prophetick Promiſe, In thee ſhall all Nations be bleſſed: Or as it is elſewhere Gen. 22. 18. In thy Seed ſhall all Nations of the Earth be bleſſed. The bleſſed Seed of Abraham is of a twofold Notion, That which maketh bleſſed and that which is made bleſſed. Of his bleſſed Seed in this latter Notion the Apoſtle ſaith; They which be of Faith are bleſſed with faithful Abraham. Gal. 3. 9. Of his bleſſed Seed in the former Notion the Apoſtle ſaith, Gal. 3. 16. Now to Abraham and his Seed were the Promiſes made. He ſaith not, and to Seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy Seed, which is Chriſt. Which Apoſtolic Argumentation muſt be explained and juſtify'd by conſidering, that τὰ σπέρματα, Seeds in the Plurality of number, and τὸ σπέρμα, Seed in the Plurality of Notion are identical. It is not ſaid, that the Promiſes were made to Abraham ϗ τοῖς σπέρμασιν, and to Seeds, that is, ϗ τῷ σπέρματι, and to Seed in the Plurality of Notion. To Abraham and his Seed the Promiſes are ſaid to be made: But (ſpeaking of the Promiſe of making bleſſed) it is not ſaid to his Seed in the Plurality of Number or of Notion as of many; but to his Seed in the Singular Number and Notion, as of one, that is, Chriſt. The Promiſe made to Abraham's Seed of making bleſſed, muſt be meant and underſtood in the Singular Number and Notion (as of one;) for it is a Prophetick Promiſe of ſuch a Seed, in whom all Nations (Jews and Gentiles) ſhould obtain Bleſſedneſs.

VI. The Abrahamical Inſtitution was in part (Ritual) Judaiſm initially introduc'd; and as ſuch it was a typical Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. So the earthly Canaan promiſed to Abraham and his Seed (after the Fleſh) was a Type of that heavenly Canaan and better Country, to which Abraham and the Patriarchs travell'd in their Pilgrimage. A vaſtly numerous poſterity (according to the Letter) God promiſed to Abraham, which he alſo promis'd to take for his Select peculiar People (and to be related to them as their God, Gen. 17. 7.) But this Carnal Seed of Abraham were a Type of the True and Spiritual; (u) for Chriſtians are the Nation, that God of old promiſed to Abraham, ſtyling him the Father of many Nations. So Iſaac upon the Altar was a Type of Chriſt's Sacrifice and Circumciſion (a principal Rite of Judaiſm) was a Type (w) ad ſignificandam regenerationem quæ fit in Chriſto, to ſignifie the Regeneration which we have in Chriſt. Chriſtianity therefore contradiſtinguiſheth two kinds of Circumciſion in the perſonal acceptation (as Circumciſion ſignifieth the Perſon circumciſed) we are the Circumciſion, which worſhip God in the Spirit, the true and ſpiritual, not the literal and carnal Circumciſion. Phil. 3. 3. And as Circumciſion ſignifieth in the real acceptation, Chriſtianity contradiſtinguiſheth the Literal and Spiritual (Spiritual-vital) Circumciſion, the Circumiſion in Type and in Truth. (x) Οἱ τύποι ἐν τῷ νόμῳ ἦσαν, ἡ δὲ ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. The Types were in the Law, but the Truth is in the Goſpel. (y) Ἡ μὲν περιτομὴ σημεῖον ἦν, τὸ δὲ λουτρὸν τῆς παλιγγενεσίας τὸ σημαινόμενον, Circumciſion was the Sign, but the Laver of Regeneration was the thing ſignified. From the Analogy between theſe two kinds of Circumciſion (for there muſt be an Analogy and Correſpondence between the Type and the Antitype) we may infer, that the literal and ritual Circumciſion was of a ſanctificative Nature and Notion, thereby that which ſignifieth the vicioſity and foulneſs of Man's Nature was taken away. The Chriſtian Circumciſion (or Regeneration) is a taking away the vicioſity and foulneſs of Man's Nature in the Heart and in the Spirit, Rom. 2. 29. and in ſubſtantial Truth and Reality (a putting off the whole Body of the Sins of the Fleſh, Col. 2. 11.) The ritual Circumciſion was a Type and Adumbration of this Spiritual Circumciſion; therefore it was of a ſanctificative Nature and Notion.

And this appeareth from the conſtant Language of Scripture, in which to Circumciſe any thing, is always of a ſanctificative Notion, and denoteth a taking away the vicioſity and foulneſs of it,

(q) Epiphan. adv. Hær. l. 1. c. 1.

(r) J. Mart. Dial. cum. Tryph. p. 347.

(s) Τὰ μὴ φαινόμενα τῶν φαινομένων προτιμᾷν, καὶ τὰ μέλλοντα τῶν ἐν χερσὶν ὄντων. S. Chryſoſt. in Gen. λογ. λα.

(t) Idem T. 5. p. 654.

(u) J. Mart. Dial cum Tryph. p. 347.

(w) S. Aug. c. Jul. l. 6. c. 7.

(x) Epiphan. l. 1. Hær. 8.

(y) S. Athanaſ. de Sab. & Circumciſ.

it, and things and perſons are ſaid to be uncircumcis'd, to ſignifie, that their vicioſity and foulneſs is untaken away. For this is the meaning of uncircumcis'd Lips, uncircumcis'd Ears, uncircumcis'd Hearts, uncircumcis'd in Heart and Ears, Exod. 6. 12. Jer. 6. 10. Lev. 26. 41. Act. 7. 51. So the uncircumcis'd and the unclean are terms ſynonymous. Iſa. 52. 1. 1 Sam. 17. 26. Ezek. 44. 7. The Fruit of Trees is ſaid to be (z) as uncircumcis'd, to denote the impurity of it, that it may not be eaten, Lev. 19. 23. The uncircumcis'd Perſons in Ezek. 28. 10. and 31. 18. are in the Chaldee wicked and ſinners. The Jews look'd upon all Perſons as unclean and not to be convers'd with, till they were circumcis'd, Act. 10. 15. and 11. 3. Jacob's Sons pretended that they could not give their Siſter to one of the uncircumcis'd, becauſe of the Pollution of that People. And the Apoſtle deſcribeth us Gentiles as dead in Sins and the Uncircumciſion of our Fleſh, which is our vicioſity and foulneſs of Nature and Practice. Col. 2. 13. (a) Circumciſion metaphorically denoteth the purging from Vices (as Circumciſe the Fore-skin of your Heart, Circumciſe your ſelves to the Lord, Deut. 10. 16. Jer. 4. 4.) and Gnorlah or the Fleſh of our Fore-skin denoteth all vicioſity and is ſometimes rendred Uncleanneſs. Agreeably whereto R. Menahem ſaith (b) the Fore-skin ſignifieth the ſtrength of Uncleanneſs. Gerundenſis ſaith (c) in a perfect human Body nothing is ſuperfluous except the Gnorlah. But we are not ſo much to conſider what the Gnorlah is, as what it denoteth and ſignifieth. (d) A wild Olive-tree is good in Nature, but it ſignifieth that which is Evil : So do Wolves and Foxes, a Sow wallowing in the Mire and a Dog return'd to his Vomit : The Gnorlah as it is a Particle of an human Body, is good by Nature, but it ſignifieth that which is evil by a Figure. The Fore-skin is not Sin, but it ſignifieth Sin, and chiefly original Sin, becauſe the Origin of them that are born is by that very Member. The Rite of Circumciſion was of a ſanctificative Nature and Notion, becauſe it was an amption of that which ſignifieth Sin and chiefly original Sin. Which the Gnorlah fitly ſignifieth, both becauſe it is a Native and Original to us, and becauſe it adhereth to the Member of Propagation, as original Sin adhereth to the Propagation of our ſinful Fleſh. And this is one true and great Reaſon, why God deſigning to imprint a Mark and Character upon his People, would not have it imprinted upon any other part of the Body, but only that which ſerveth for the Propagation of Mankind. Some ſay that (e) Circumciſion ſignified nothing elſe but the putting off that vicioſity and foulneſs, which adhereth to us from Generation. Agreeably whereto a Philoſophic Pagan ſpeaketh of (f) the Circumciſion of the things cognate to Generation. The Jews ſay, that Circumciſion was ordained (g) to break the force of that Uncleanneſs, which the Old Serpent introduc'd (agreeable whereto is their Cuſtom, when they cut off the Fore-skin of a Child, they throw it into a Veſſel filled with Duſt which is hard by, and this they do, to ſignifie that they give it for Meat to the Old Serpent, who muſt eat Duſt:) They alſo tell us, that in the Days of the Meſſiah God will Circumciſe their Heart and in thoſe days the evil Figment will ceaſe, and their Hearts ſhall cleave unto the Lord their God according to Deut. 30. 6. (h) The Cabaliſts ſay, all evil Concupiſcence will be eradicated in the days of the Meſſiah. So far they agree with Chriſtianity; and agreeably to their Sence it is moſt reaſonable and Chriſtian, to ſay, that Circumciſion was deſign'd to ſignifie the cutting and putting off that foulneſs and vicioſity of Nature which is in Man's Unregeneracy. Col. 2. 11.

VII. The Rite of Circumciſion (beſides that it was of a ſanctificative Nature and Notion) was a federal marking the Holy People that were the Holy Seed. For God gave to Abraham the Covenant of Circumciſion (a Covenant the confederating Rite whereof was Circumciſion) Act. 7. 8. The Iſraelites therefore were circumcis'd, to enter them into the Abrahamical Covenant, and in Sign and Token thereof, Gen. 17. 11. So the Hebrew Doctors commonly ſay, (i) By three things did Iſrael enter into the Covenant, by Circumciſion and Baptiſm and Sacrifice. And as in ancient times their way was, to ratifie and eſtabliſh their Leagues and Covenants by Blood (their ſacred ſolemn Leagues and Covenants were eſtabliſh'd by Blood:) So the Blood that cometh forth in circumciſing a Perſon the Jews call דם ברית the Blood of the Covenant. A Child on the day of his Circumciſion was called חתן Sponſus, becauſe he was then (as it were) betrothed and eſpouſed to God; and ſeveral learned Men think, that Zipporah uſing the ſolemn words of Circumciſion ſaid to her Child, when ſhe circumcis'd him חתן דמים Sponſus ſanguinum tu es. But there is no probability, that theſe words were ſpoken to the Child, or that they were the ſolemn words of Circumciſion; they carry an air of Feminine Paſſion, and it is moſt probable, that Zipporah upon making her Child a חתן or Sponſus by Circumciſion, took occaſion to call her Husband Sponſus Sanguinis becauſe of the Circumciſion. A bloody Rite Circumciſion muſt be, that it may be federal; whence the Jews ſay, that if one that becometh a Proſelyte to their Religion, was before circumcis'd according to the Cuſtom of ſome Heathen Nations, yet it was neceſſary that the דם ברית Blood of the Covenant be let out of the Scar of his former Circumciſion. Such Proſelytes that by Circumciſion were initiated into the Abrahamical Covenant (k) had the Name of Jews, were of the ſame Condition (in the main) with the Jews Native; and as they by Circumciſion became Judaical Religioniſts (undertaking the obſervance of the Moſaic Law, Act. 15. 15. Gal. 5. 3.) So thoſe that relinquiſh'd the Jews Religion, us'd certain Artifices (l) whereby they became uncircumcis'd, obliterating their Circumciſion, which was ſuppos'd, to conſtitute, denominate and diſtinguiſh Jews, and to be the Bond and Badge of their Judaiſm. By Circumciſion they were in a State of diſtinction and ſeparation from all other People (as profane) ſelected and ſegregated from them, and appropriated to God, as the conſecrated Holy People. Lev. 20. 24, 26. (m) R. Levi Barcinonenſis after he hath told us of I know not what perfection of Body and Soul, which is either ſignified or conferr'd by the Jewiſh Circumciſion, addeth this as his laſt and ſtrongeſt Reaſon, that God for ever bleſſed hereby diſtinguiſheth his ſelect People from o- (z) Ainſworth on Gen. 17. 11.

(a) Sicut purgatio à vitiis per μεταφορὰν vocatur circumciſio, ita ſtatus vitioſus ἀκροβυστία, quo nomine Hebræi appellant omne id quod amputandum eſt. Quare ערלה quod ἀκροβυστίαν ſign. Lev. 19. 23. Vertitur ἀκαθαρσία. Grot. Not. in Col. 2. 13.

(b) Ainſworth ſupr.

(c) Munſter on Gen. 17. 11.

(d) S. Aug. c. Jul. l. 6. c. 7.

(e) Ἡ γὰρ περιτομὴ οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἐδήλου ἢ τὴν τῆς γενέσεως ἀπέκδυσιν. S. Athanaſ. ſupr.

(f) Εἰ ἐκ παιδὸς εὐθὺς κοπτόμενον περιεκόπτη τὰς τῆς γενέσεως ξυγγενείας. Jambl. προτρεπ. p. 100.

(g) Hoornbeek c. Jud. p. 354.

(h) Helvic. proteuang. n. 35.

(i) Seld. de J. Nat. & G. l. 2. c. 2.

Exod. 4. 25.

(k) Seld. ſupr. l. 2. c. 4.

(l) Buxt. Lex. Talm. Col. 1275.

(m) Le Clerk on Gen. Diſſ. 7.

thers, by ſetting a mark on their Bodies. Hence the Rite of Circumciſion was omitted all the time that the Iſraelites were in the Wilderneſs; for they were then ſufficiently ſeparated from other People by being alone in the Wilderneſs.

God would have them mark'd by Circumciſion as being his peculiar People; as all Families and Tribes of Men have their Badges and Cogniſances, whereby they diſtinguiſh themſelves from others. Such are the Coats of Arms which are now in uſe in the European parts. (n) The Spartans had the picture of a Lance impreſs'd upon their Bodies, the Pelopidæ had a whitiſh Shoulder like Ivory, whereby they were known and diſtinguiſh'd from others. Servants and Souldiers in the elder times had a mark in their Foreheads, Hands or Arms, whereby they were diſcriminated, and were known to whom they belong'd. Several Families had Badges of their Noble Deſcent: (o) A radiatum Caput was an enſign of thoſe deſcended from Phœbus, a Lion's Skin of thoſe deſcended from Hercules. (p) The worſhippers of Bacchus were mark'd with the enſign of an Ivy-leaf (to ſignifie what they were) and they that were initiated into the Heathen Myſteries were mark'd with certain dots burnt in their Fleſh called σφραγῖνδες, whence they were ſaid to be conſignati & σφραγιδωτὲς, conſign'd and ſealed. The Heathen burnt certain marks in their Children's Bodies, whereby they were conſecrated to their Idols. In like manner God would have his Religioniſts marked by Circumciſion as their diſtinctive Badge and Cogniſance, which ſhew'd, whoſe they were, and whereby they were known and joyned to one another without the mixture of any other. Nor were they only marked by Circumciſion as the Holy People, but as the Holy Seed (the Seed of Abraham) touching whom God covenanted to be to them a God, and that they ſhould be to him a People: which was one reaſon, why God would have his mark and character imprinted upon that part, which ſerveth for the propagation of Mankind, becauſe his great regard was to the Holy Seed; their mark of Circumciſion denoted the People of the God of Abraham, to be the Holy Seed, upon which account (as alſo becauſe it was a mark of the Holy People) it was a very honourary Badge, and the Jews gloried in it as the Character of their Illuſtrious Deſcent and Genealogical Sanctity. One ſort of it was at a great rate honourary, as appeareth from Joſ. 5. 9. The Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you: therefore the Name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day. Joſhua's Circumciſion was not a meer Circumciſion (ſuch a Circumciſion the Iſraelites had in Egypt) but ſuch a Circumciſion which initiated the Children of Iſrael into their Canaan-condition, and therefore to be an Holy Nation and Commonwealth, which was a taking away the Reproach of their being Egyptian Slaves. But the uſual Circumciſion of the Jews was very honourary upon this further account; as Merchants and others ſet their Property upon their Goods, ſo God would have his mark of Property ſet upon his Religioniſts in the Old Teſtament by Circumciſion (and in the New Teſtament by the Holy Spirit called by S. Auſtin Egregius character, and Regenerate Chriſtians are ſaid to be ſealed with it, Eph. 1. 13.) thereby owning them for his. To Abraham Circumciſion is ſaid to be a Seal of the Righteouſneſs of the Faith, Rom. 4. 11. becauſe God's taking him and his Seed into covenant by Circumciſion, and the making him Heir of the Promiſes of it by that ſolemn Rite, did ſolemnly aſſure and aſcertain him, that he had Righteouſneſs and Acceptance with God by that Faith, which he had and exercis'd in his uncircumciſed condition. For obſignare is (q) ſigno appoſito declarare, to ſeal a thing is by a ſolemn mark to atteſt to it. The common uſe of ſealing is, ſolemnly and publickly to ſignifie our owning any thing. Circumciſion therefore was a Seal to Abraham and his Poſterity, as being a ſolemn teſtification, that God (by ſetting his mark upon them) own'd them for his People in Covenant. The Federal Nature of this bloody Rite is the reaſon of that bloody Sanction of it, Gen. 17. 14. The uncircumciſed Man-Child, whoſe Fleſh of his Foreskin is not circumciſed, that Soul ſhall be cut off from his People, he hath broken my Covenant. (r) Many mitigate or alleviate the Senſe of this Cereth or Exciſion, and will have it ſignifie ſomething leſs than the puniſhment of Death. But there is no reaſon, that the phraſe ſhould be otherwiſe underſtood in this place, than as it uſually ſignifieth in the Books of Moſes, which is the Puniſhment of Death by the Hand of God or of the Magiſtrate. And there is greater reaſon, that it ſhould be ſo underſtood in this place than in any other; for it muſt be ſuppos'd, that a capital puniſhment is allotted to a capital crime. And the crime of an uncircumciſed Man-Child that wilfully and contemptuouſly neglecteth to be circumcis'd (of ſuch the Text muſt be underſtood) can be no leſs than capital, as the Text repreſenteth it. For a deſtroying the Covenant of God is like the deſtroying Allegiance, which is a deſtroying the Sovereignty.

(n) Grot. Not. in Rom. 8. 16. Hamm. on Apoc. 13. 17.

(o) Selden Titles, p. 120, 125.

(p) Herald. in Arnob. p. 129, 130.

The Jews conceit, that they have a different ſort of Souls from other People. V. Hotting. de Jur. Hebr. Lex. 2. p. 10.

(q) Grot. Not. in Joh. 3. 33.

(r) Selden de Synedr. l. 1. c. 6. Hotting. de Jur. Hebr. Lex 227.

VIII. The Egyptians us'd a ſort of Circumciſion as well as the Seed of Abraham; and it is not eaſie to ſay, whether this Rite was originally Abrahamical or Egyptian, (s) as Herodotus, Diodorus and Celſus affirm. It ſeemeth not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that God in the Abrahamical Inſtitution of Circumciſion had regard to any paganical obſervance of it (the Abrahamical Circumciſion is founded upon its own Reaſons:) nor on the other hand is it probable, that Circumciſion was (immediately or mediately) propagated from the Jews to the Egyptians, but it was an humourſom Rite of their Paganical Purity, as Herodotus ſaith, (t) the Egyptians us'd it καθαρειότητος ἕνεκεν, for cleanlineſs ſake. They had too great a contempt and hatred of the Jews, to entertain any Rite which they underſtood to be theirs; they were tenacious of their own Cuſtoms and would not entertain any other; and they were ſo idiotical, that they would not have converſe or correſpondence with Strangers, ſhunning all exotick uſages. They are ſaid, to have adminiſtred their Circumciſion to Perſons at the age of fourteen, to Women alſo, it was not amongſt them a National Rite, (u) as appeareth from Joſephus againſt Apion, and Epiphanius ſeemeth to ſay, that it was peculiar to their Prieſts. The Rite of Circumciſion was in uſe (w) not only amongſt the Egyptians, Colchians, Ethiopians, Arabians, Homerites, Troglodytes, Nigrites and other Heathen Nations of our Continent, but amongſt the Americans, who cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd, to have deriv'd their Rite of Circumciſion (immediately or mediately) from the Jews. (x) Circumciduntur Mexicani Infantes, Jucatanenſes & alii: (y) what is admirable, in Coluacane, as alſo in Jacatan, Uraba and Dariena there are many circumcis'd. The Circumciſion therefore which was in uſe in ſeveral

(s) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 4.

(t) L. 2. c. 37.

(u) L. 2.

(w) Ludolph. Hiſt. of Ethiop. B. 3. c. 1.

(x) Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 4. c. 7.

(y) Le Blanc Travails, par. 3. c. 2.

Heathen Nations, ſeemeth to have been ſuch as their Baptiſm was, originally nothing elſe but a Rite of Paganical Purity. And as the Baptiſm which the Pagans us'd in their initiations into their Myſteries, was a different kind of thing from the Chriſtian Baptiſm, and therefore was not Baptiſm, but by equivocation of words: ſo the Circumciſion which the Egyptians and other Heathen Nations (in ſome degree) us'd, was not Circumciſion but by equivocation of words; for it was a different kind of thing from the Federal Circumciſion of the Seed of Abraham. Upon which account (as alſo becauſe Circumciſion was not a National Rite amongſt the Egyptians and other Heathen Nations) thoſe Nations are juſtly counted uncircumcis'd Nations: as the Chriſtian Church counteth the Pagan Nations unbaptiz'd, notwithſtanding the Baptiſms which they us'd in their Myſteries. So we read in the Prophet, Jer. 25. 26. Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will puniſh all them that are circumcis'd with the uncircumcis'd. Egypt and Judah and Edom, and the Children of Ammon and Moab, and all that are in the utmoſt corners, that dwell in the Wilderneſs: for all theſe Nations are uncircumciſed, and all the Houſe of Iſrael are uncircumciſed in the Heart. Egypt and the other Heathen Nations here enumerated are not counted circumciſed Nations (ſo to underſtand the Prophet is to contradict common ſenſe) but they are counted the Nations uncircumciſed in Fleſh, and are conſorted with the Houſe of Iſrael, that were uncircumciſed in the Heart. Notwithſtanding therefore that ſort of Circumciſion which was in uſe among the Heathen Nations, yet they ought to be reckon'd the uncircumciſed Nations: which may reaſonably incline us to think, that a ſort of Circumciſion might be in uſe amongſt the Philiſtins notwithſtanding that uſual Character of them in the Bible uncircumciſed Philiſtins. At leaſt it cannot be inferr'd from this their Character, that a Rite of Circumciſion never was in uſe amongſt them; for at the time when they were ſo characteriz'd, they might have left off all uſe of it; as Grotius thinketh, (z) that in the time of the Prophet Jeremiah, the Idumeans and Arabians had left off all uſe of it. Upon which account (and ſeveral others) there is an uncertainty and infirmity in this Argument. (a) The Philiſtim were not circumciſed; the Philiſtim in the more ancient times came from the Caſluchim (the Colchians, Gen. 10. 14.) therefore in the more ancient times Circumciſion was not in uſe amongſt the Colchians; for if it had been in uſe amongſt them, they would have propagated it to the Philiſtim. And if it was not in uſe amongſt the Colchians in the more ancient times, it was not in uſe amongſt the Egyptians (in thoſe times) of whom the Colchians were a Colony.

Section V.

Of the Moſaical Inſtitution.

I. THE Moſaic Inſtitution muſt be conſider'd as it is no more nor better than the Law-religioniſts Religion, and as it is (like the Ante-moſaical Inſtitutions) the Chriſtian Religion initially introduc'd. So far as it is on this ſide the Chriſtian Religion initially introduc'd, it may be ſeparate from the Goſpel, and is but the Law-religioniſts Religion, which is oppos'd to the Religion of Chriſtianity. And ſo the Moſaic Inſtitution muſt be oppos'd, as it is the Moſaical Covenant, as it is a Civil-religious Inſtitution, and as it is the Settlement of the Holy Spiritual Law. For although the Covenant of Grace was hidden and veiled in and under the Moſaical Covenant, and in the times of the Moſaic Covenant (or Teſtament) there was an adminiſtration or diſpenſation of the Covenant of Grace, ſo that in ſome ſenſe (incluſively and comprehenſively) the Moſaic Inſtitution may be ſaid, to have been the Covenant of Grace, yet if we inquire, what is that Covenant, which is ſtrictly and properly the Moſaic Covenant, it muſt be anſwer'd, The Covenant of Grace is not that Covenant, but another and an oppoſite kind of Covenant, which muſt be duely diſtinguiſh'd from it, not confounded. The Covenant of Grace is commonly ſuppos'd, to have been made with Adam immediately after his Fall (as the Covenant of Works is ſaid, to have been made with Adam in Innocency) afterwards to have been repeated to Abraham (and ſome ſay, it was made with Noah) and at length to have become Fœdus gratiæ Moſaicum, the Moſaic Covenant of Grace. The Moſaic Covenant is ſuppos'd to have been a Covenant of Grace, The Covenant of Grace of the firſt Edition, Adminiſtration and Diſpenſation, The old Covenant of Grace, ſo making the old and new Covenant, not two Covenants of oppoſite kind and quality, but two oppoſite Adminiſtrations of one and the ſame Covenant of Grace, which is diſtinguiſh'd into the old and new Covenant of Grace. But thus to make the Old and New Covenant, the Moſaic Covenant and the Covenant of Grace, the ſame in ſubſtance: This making the Moſaic Covenant the Covenant of Grace, ſo as not duely to diſtinguiſh them, not to make them two oppoſite kind of Covenants, is a great miſtake in Theology, and a contradiction to the New Teſtament. In which Grace ſignifieth Saving Grace, the ſettlement and diſpenſation whereof is always oppos'd to the Moſaic Law or Covenant, Joh. 1. 17. The Law was given by Moſes, but Grace and Truth came by Jeſus Chriſt, (b) χάριν ϗ ἀλήθειαν ἀντιθεὶς τῷ νόμῳ, oppoſing Grace and Truth to the Law, Rom. 6. 14. Ye are not under the Law, but under Grace. Gal. 5. 4. Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, whoſoever of you are juſtify'd by the (Moſaic) Law, ye are fallen from Grace. Gal. 2. 21. I do not fruſtrate the Grace of God: for if Righteouſneſs come by the (Moſaic) Law, Chriſt is dead in vain. The Moſaic Law therefore in the Senſe of the New Teſtament is ſo Law, as not to be ſaving Grace, it affordeth Men no ſaving Benefits (which the Religion of Saving Grace affordeth;) for it is not the miniſtration of Righteouſneſs, 2 Cor. 3. 9. No Man is juſtify'd by the Law of Moſes, Act. 13. 39. Gal. 3. 10, 11. Nor is there any attaining the Life of Righteouſneſs (or of Sanctification) by it: (c) οὐ γὰρ πνεῦμα ἐκόμισε Μωϋσῆς ἀλλὰ γράμματα, for Moſes did not bring to us the Spirit (by his Covenant) but Letters, Stones and External Scripts only, 2 Cor. 3. 6, 7. A liberation from ſervitude under Sin is not attainable by the Law (that Covenant and Diſpenſation of things) Rom. 6. 14. and ch. 7. 5. Gal. 4. 23, 24. Nor a regeneration into the Holy Life, Rom. 8. 2. Nor is it the Religion of making Sinners the Righteous in ſtate and condition, in life and practice, Rom. 3. 20. and ch. 5. 20. Nor is the Inheritance (of Life Eternal) by the Law, Gal. 3. 18, 21. Nor is it the Religion of being juſtify'd by Faith and by Grace; for the Law is not of Faith; but the Man that doeth them, ſhall live in them, Gal. 3. 12. Moſes deſcribeth the Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, that

(z) Not. in Jer. 9. 26.

(a) Witſii Ægypt. l. 3. c. 6.

(b) S. Chryſoſt. in loc.

(c) Idem in 2 Cor. λογ. ς.

that the Man which doeth theſe things, ſhall live by them, Rom. 10. 5. The Moſaic Law or Covenant doth not juſtifie and ſave Men, as they are God's Believers according to Chriſtianity, and by their Faith; but the proceedings of it are Law-proceedings (ſo as not to be the proceedings of Supra-legal Grace) the tenour of it runneth in form of Law, and according to it the way to obtain Life and Happineſs, is not the Faith of God's Believers (according to Chriſtianity) but the doing the Works of the Law. The Moſaic Law or Covenant therefore is the Covenant of Works an oppoſite kind of Law to the Chriſtian, Rom. 3. 21. The Law or Covenant of Grace and of Works are two Covenants ſpecifically diſtinct and oppoſite; for the unbelieving Jews way of obtaining Righteouſneſs (which is the Covenant of Works) and the Chriſtians way of obtaining Righteouſneſs (which is the Covenant of Grace) are two Religions ſpecifically diſtinct and oppoſite, Rom. 9. 30, 32. If we aſk, which of theſe two oppoſite kind of Covenants is the Moſaic Covenant? the Apoſtle anſwereth, It is the Covenant of Works. So the new Law, Covenant or Teſtament, and the old Law, Covenant or Teſtament are ſpecifically diſtinct and oppoſite; for the one is the unbelieving Jews Religion, the other is the Chriſtians. The New Law, Covenant or Teſtament is the Religion of our Newneſs and Regeneracy; all that belong to it, are made by it the new kind of Men and the new kind of Religioniſts; and it is a new creation or conſtitution of things, whereby all old things (proper to our Unregeneracy) are done away, and all things that are introduc'd, are of a new nature and excellency, Rom. 7. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Apoc. 21. 5. It is ſpecifically therefore diſtinct from and oppoſite to the old Law, Covenant or Teſtament. And if we aſk, which of theſe two Covenants or Teſtaments is the Moſaic? The Apoſtle anſwereth, It is the old, the firſt Covenant and Teſtament, of which Moſes was the Mediator, Heb. 8. 7, 13. and ch. 9. 18, 19, 20.

As Hagar muſt not be ſaid to be Sarah, nor Iſhmael Iſaac, nor Bondage Freedom, nor Fleſh Spirit, nor Shadow Subſtance, nor Condemnation Juſtification; ſo the Moſaic Law or Covenant muſt not be ſaid, to be the Covenant of Grace, but an oppoſite kind of Covenant, as the Prophet oppoſeth the new Covenant to that which was made with the Houſe of Iſrael, when they came out of Egypt, which Covenant they brake, Jer. 31. 31, 32. The Moſaic or Judaical Covenant is the Covenant that God made with Iſrael in Horeb, Deut. 5. 2. whence we read of the words of the Covenant, Exod. 34. 28. the Tables of the Covenant, Deut. 9. 11. and the Ark of the Covenant, Deut. 10. 8. If the Covenant that God made with old Iſrael in Horeb was the ſame with the Covenant of Grace, then it was the Covenant of writing his Law in their Hearts: but this (ſaith the Prophet) is another Covenant, and it muſt be another kind of Covenant; for a dead external Covenant which is but a writing in Tables of Stone (and therefore eaſily broken) is not of the ſame kind with an interiour vital and vivificative Covenant, that writeth the Divine Laws in the Heart, and is the Spirit that giveth Life, 2 Cor. 3. 6. But the Jews diſpute, (d) that this new Covenant (which writeth the Divine Laws in the Heart) is no other than that which was given on Mount Sinai. To ſuppoſe therefore the Covenant of Grace, to be the ſame with the Moſaic Covenant, is one of the Jews Errors, and a principal Branch of their Infidelity. Chriſtian Divines that diſpute againſt them maintain, that the New Covenant is not (e) redintegratio fœderis carnalis & legalis (quod volunt Judæi) ſed aliud naturâ & ſpecie differens fœdus, a reſtoring the carnal and legal Covenant, but another Covenant different in nature and in kind. The Moſaic Covenant is neceſſarily that carnal legal Covenant, and therefore is not the ſame with the Chriſtians Covenant of Grace. To call it the old Covenant of Grace, is contradictory to the nature and notion of the Covenant of Grace, which is eſſentially the new and everlaſting Covenant, and that which extendeth to all Nations: (f) ὁ δὲ ἐν Χωρὴβ, παλαιὸς ἤδη νόμος, καὶ ὑμῶν μόνον, But the Covenant in Horeb is now the old Law, and is yours only, ſaith J. Mart. to Trypho.

II. The Moſaic Inſtitution muſt be conſider'd as a Civil Religious Inſtitution (whereby the Seed of Abraham vaſtly multiply'd was inſtituted into a Commonwealth:) The Moſaic Law was a Political or Civil-religious Law (rightly diſtributed into Moral, Ceremonial, Judicial) and the Moſaic Covenant was a Civil-religious Pact or Covenant between God and the People of Iſrael, whom God inſtituted into ſuch a Commonwealth, as was a Theocracy, in purſuance of his Covenant made with Abraham, to be a God to him and his Seed, and to give them the Land of Canaan for their Inheritance. If this Inheritance is the Heavenly Inheritance, then the Abrahamical Covenant may be called A Covenant of Grace for Eternal Life and Salvation. But Divines in their Diſputes with the Jews have given it another Name, and rightly call it, (g) fœdus illud carnale cum Abrahamo initum cujus ſacramentum erat circumciſio, that carnal Covenant made with Abraham whoſe Sacrament was Circumciſion, which they contradiſtinguiſh to the Covenant of Grace made in Chriſt. A carnal Covenant made with Abraham and his Carnal Seed was the only Covenant between God and Abraham, that was made by an expreſs mutual confederating. For as to the Covenant of Saving Grace there was no expreſs mutual confederating between God and Abraham, nor in all the times of the Old Teſtament. Abſolute promiſes were made to Abraham, that are called God's Covenant: but an abſolute promiſe is only fœdus μονόπλευρον, a Covenant of one Party, not a mutual confederative Covenant. As to ſuch Covenant-making the Covenant of Grace was not made with Adam, or with Noah, or with Abraham, or with any other in the Old Teſtament-times, nor could it be ſo made, till it was made as to its conſtitutive Nature and Eſſence, which was not till the Death and Sacrifice of the Meſſiah, whoſe Bloodſhed was the making the New Teſtament or Covenant, Matth. 26. 28. Heb. 9. 16. When our Saviour was here on Earth (by the miniſtry of others) he baptized many Diſciples, but as a Prophet and Doctor only, and ſo far only he then confirm'd the Covenant with many, Dan. 9. 27. But ſeveral of the ancient Writers of the Church are of opinion, (h) that this Baptiſm of his antecedent to his Paſſion and Reſurrection did not confer the remiſſion of Sins and the Holy Spirit: whereby they mean (doubtleſs) that it was not in the proper plenary ſenſe an entring into the new Covenant, and therefore the benefits of it were not conferr'd by it: or at moſt it conferr'd thoſe benefits of the Covenant but in a degree proportionate to Mens entring into it. And if this was the caſe of our Saviour's own Baptiſm, it cannot reaſonably be ſuppos'd, that by the car-

nal

(d) Hulſ. Theol. Jud. par. 1. l. 1. p. 148.

(e) Ibid. p. 75.

(f) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 228.

(g) Hulſ. ſupr. p. 145.

Luk. 1. 72, 73. Act. 3. 25. Gal. 3. 15, 17.

(h) Ap. Maldonat. in Joh. 3. 22.

nal Rite of Circumciſion Abraham's carnal Seed confederated with God in the Covenant of Grace. It entred them into a gracious Covenant; for ſuch was the Covenant of Circumciſion, that God gave unto Abraham: But every gracious Promiſe or Covenant (although it relateth to the Meſſiah) muſt not be counted the Covenant of Grace, which was a ſecret in the Old Teſtament-times. But by a carnal Covenant and the Promiſes of ſecular Honours and Advantages Abraham was inſtituted to the Knowledge and Belief of thoſe ſpiritual and heavenly Honours and Advantages that are the premiant part of the Covenant of Grace (which God had provided) and which proceeding according to it God diſpens'd to him and to all Divine Believers in the Old Teſtament-times. And of the ſame Nature is the premiant and promiſſory part of the Moſaic Civil-religious Law (being a Donation of the Land of Canaan and the Felicities thereof to the carnal Seed of Abraham typically and figuratively) yet the Holy Writers are ſo far from ſuppoſing it, to be upon this account the ſame with the Covenant of Grace, that they oppoſe theſe two Covenants, looking upon the one as earthly and ſecular, the other as ſpiritual and heavenly in its Promiſes. For the one promiſeth all ſpiritual and eternal Benefits, the other (in the Letter of it) promiſeth nothing more than ſecular Bleſſings and Proſperities (for theſe Old Iſrael covenanted with God and God with them) as appeareth all along in the treating of this Covenant. Exod. 23. 25, 26. Levit. 26. 3, 4. Deut. 6. 17, 24. and Ch. 7. 12, 13. and Ch. 28.

Our Saviour's Prieſthood therefore, his Covenant and his Mediatorſhip far tranſcendeth the Moſaic. Heb. 8. 6. He hath obtained a more excellent Miniſtery, by how much he is the Mediator of a better Covenant, which was eſtabliſh'd upon better Promiſes. The better Promiſes are not thoſe of the Moſaic Covenant, but of that which Chriſt hath mediated for us. For the Moſaic Covenant was extremely faulty and defective, elſe it had not been abrogated, and a new one had not been made. Heb. 8. 7. There is verily a diſanulling of the Commandment going before, for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof. For the Law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did. Heb. 7. 18, 19. The Law (Civil-religious) was an impotent ineffectual Inſtitution to the purpoſe of juſtifying, ſanctifying and ſaving Men, it made nothing ſo perfect, but that the Subſtance of the thing was wanting, as remarkably appeareth in its Expiations of Sin, which did not make the Worſhippers perfect, ſo as not to need another kind of expiatory Sacrifice and Expiation. Heb. 9. 9. In preſcribing expiatory Sacrifices this Religious Inſtitution (i) reckoneth Perjury with the legal Defilements, and ceremonial Offences, and preſcribeth the ſame Expiation for the moſt monſtrous Immoralities and for Trifles. Which plainly argueth, that the expiatory Sacrifices of it were thoſe of a Civil-religious Inſtitution (k) and that they expiated Sin only in reſpect of Temporal Puniſhment. If the Moſaic Covenant in the Letter of it had not been meerly a Civil-religious Inſtitution, the Goſpel could not have been the bringing in a better Hope: Nor could the Apoſtle have ſaid, that Chriſt is the Mediator of the New Teſtament, that by means of Death for the Redemption of the Tranſgreſſions that were under the firſt Teſtament, they which are called might receive the Promiſe of eternal Inheritance. Heb. 9. 15. Chriſt died for our Liberation from thoſe Tranſgreſſions that prevail'd under the firſt Teſtament, that they which are called might be Heirs of Life eternal by the new Teſtament. None were made Heirs of Life eternal therefore by the Moſaic Teſtament: Nor had the Moſaic Covenant an expreſs Sanction by ſuch Penalties as the Covenant of Grace threatneth. For when the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 10. 28, 29. He that deſpiſed Moſes Law, died without Mercy, under two or three Witneſſes. Of how much ſorer puniſhment, ſuppoſe ye, ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath troden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the Blood of the Covenant, wherewith he was ſanctified, an unholy thing? He confronteth and oppoſeth Chriſt to Moſes, his Covenant to the Moſaic Covenant; and looketh upon that Temporal Death which it threatneth, as Typical of the penal Sanction of the New Covenant, as the reſt which the Moſaic Covenant promis'd, was Typical of the reſt, which the Covenant of Grace promiſeth. Heb. 4. Chriſtianity every where proclaimeth the Typical Nature of the Moſaic Covenant; which ſheweth, that the Matters of it in the Letter of it are only things Civil-religious, Secular and Temporal, that typifie and adumbrate things Spiritual and Eternal. So far the Covenant of Grace is different from the Moſaic Covenant, which was a Figure for the time then preſent. Heb. 9. 9. (l) Τὰ μὲν Ἰουδαϊκὰ πάντα τύποι ἦν. All the Judaical things were Types. (m) Befell them τυπικῶς, typically. (n) Omnia hæc in figura veniebant illis. 1 Cor. 10, 11.

(i) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex 121, 124. Outram. de Sacrif. l. 1. c. 12, 13.

(k) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 1. c. 41.

(l) S. Chryſoſt. in Joh. Hom. νδ.

(m) Orig. Philocal. p. 10.

(n) Iren. adv. Hær: l. 4. c. 28.

III. The Moſaic Law is not an expreſs Covenant with Iſrael touching the future Rewards and Puniſhments. This the Schoolmen in conſort with ſeveral of the ancient Writers of the Church affirm. (o) God would have the ſecond Death hidden and a ſecret (as to the inſiſting upon it in the Old Teſtament) the Letter of the Goſpel and of the Law are different, becauſe the Promiſes are different: there things Terrene, here things Celeſtial are promis'd. Between the Law and the Goſpel there is this difference: There the Kingdom of Canaan and the Promiſes of things Temporal are contained; here Life eternal and the Kingdom of Heaven is promiſed. The Hebrew Doctors that believe ſome ſuch thing as a Reſurrection (p) yet know not what to make of it, and they ſay (q) that in the Scripture in the Prophets there is not ſo clear and frequent mention of the Promiſes of eternal Life, as in the Writings of our wiſe Men. They make the excellency of their Religion, to conſiſt, not in a Promiſe of Immortality, but in a conjunction with the Divine Majeſty, whereby they are above being hurt by Death. And thus they argue againſt the Karraites, that do not admit of their Oral Law, nor the Traditions and Sayings of their Rabbins. (s) Let them ſhew us, whence they are bound, to make Prayers unto God; and whence is it, that they believe a Meeting-place of all living (Paradiſe and Hell) Reward and Puniſhment after death? If the Law had been a Covenant with the Iſraelites touching ſpiritual and eternal Life and Death, it could not have been ſo ſparing as it is in the great Precepts which concern an holy Life (the Hebrew Doctors are at a loſs (t) to find in their Law a Precept againſt Drunkenneſs) nor in the great Articles of Religion, ſome of which the Rabbins cannot find in it, or deduce from it (u) but by their Faculty of deducing quidlibet ex quolibet. Such are

(o) Vid. Voſſ. Reſp. ad jud. Ravenſperg. c. 23.

(p) Pocock. Not. Miſc. p. 88.

(q) Coſri p 71, 187. 63.

(s) Ibid. p. 203.

(t) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex 252.

(u) L'Emper. Not. in Jacchiad. p. 200, 201. Abrav. ap. Vorſt. de cap. Fid. p. 71, 103.

their Proofs of Hell-torments, Proofs of nothing but their own Folly. And although it is an Article of their Faith, that the Reſurrection of the Dead is contained in their Law, yet the moſt of the Proofs which they bring for it are confuted by themſelves, and they are ſo manifeſtly weak, as gave occaſion to the Samaritans, to brag of an Advantage, which they had above the Jews, that in their Pentateuch eternal Life and the Reſurrection are clearly recorded, which are not ſo in the Jewiſh. (w) Themſelves acknowledge (although they are hugely concern'd for the Reputation of their Law) that there is no mention of the Article of the Reſurrection in their Law גלוי ובביאור openly and expreſly, but only by obſcure Indication. Abarbenel counteth the Article of the Reſurrection and another Life, to be of the number of סתרי תורה the hidden things of the Law. Our Saviour proveth the Reſurrection out of the Law, but not by any thing clear and expreſs, but by ſuch an Inference, as no meer Man could have made, nor doth he make his Inference from any Promiſe of the Moſaic Covenant to its Obſervers. In the Law, the Prophets, the Hagiographa, no place ſeemeth ſo clear a Proof of the Reſurrection, as that of the Prophet Daniel, ch. 12. 2. Many of them that ſleep in the Duſt of the Earth ſhall awake. And this the generality of the Jews account a valid Proof. If it is ſo, yet it is no Promiſe of the Moſaic Covenant to its Obſervers; but ſeveral good Interpreters are otherwiſe minded, (x) they expound this Paſſage of the Prophet, to be meant of the Liberation of the Jews from the Miſeries that befel them in the Perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. A like account they give (y) of that Paſſage in the Book of Job, which ſome of the Hebrew Doctors refer to the Reſurrection, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the Earth. But R. Saadiah Gaon alledgeth this Argument. (z) We have found Moſes our Maſter the principal Perſon amongſt juſt Men, and the Worſhippers of God, to have received none of thoſe things, which make up a Reward in this World mention'd in a Section of the Law, Lev. 26. Nor did Moſes ſo much as enter into the Land of Canaan. But if there is no Reward of juſt Men beſides thoſe that are enumerated in that Section of the Law, the greateſt ſhare of them ought to have been given to Moſes. And if this Retribution in this World was all, he was no fit Perſon, to make others Partakers of it, who enjoy'd none of it himſelf. This he calleth הטענה גדולה the great Argument; and a great Argument it is indeed, that the Portion of Moſes and the truly pious Jews was an inviſible recompence of reward, that they expected it and were entitled to it though not by the Moſaical Law or Covenant, which induc'd none to undertake the obſervance of it by a Promiſe of eternal Life and a better Reſurrection made to the obſervance of it, although the undertaking and obſervance of it was to thoſe whom it concern'd a Condition of Life eternal. Which is a ſufficient Anſwer to an Objection, which a learned Man maketh (a) that if the Law did not Covenant for Life eternal, there could be no ſufficient reaſon, why any ſhould embrace and undertake it. For as the Heathen World and Balaam the Soothſayer (whoſe Saying, Let me die the death of the Righteous is one of the cleareſt intimations of a future Happineſs in all the Pentateuch) ſo the ancient People of God were not without the Notice of future Rewards and Puniſhments; there was alſo amongſt the ancient People of God a Cabala of the Reſurrection, as appeareth from the Intimations of it and Alluſions to it in the Old Teſtament. Let us ſuppoſe now, that to a People furniſh'd with theſe Notices a meerly Civil-religious Law is promulgated by God and impos'd upon them by his Command. Although this Law is meerly a Civil-religious Law for a Nation (ſuch as our Engliſh Nation) yet ſeeing it is impos'd upon them by Divine Command, they muſt neceſſarily look upon Obedience to it and the faithful Obſervance of it as a condition of obtaining the Favour of God and Life eternal, although no ſuch Retribution is promis'd in this Civil-religious Law. (b) Some think, that the Promiſe of ſuch a Retribution was by God's intention included in this general Promiſe, I will be to thee a God. If this be granted, yet it is very remote from an expreſs Covenant with Iſrael touching the future Rewards and Puniſhments. Such general Terms may include and involve in them the being a God to his genuin People according to a different Covenant from the Moſaical; and this importeth nothing more than that the Goſpel was veiled under the Law. Matth. 22. 31, 32. 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17. and 7. 1. Heb. 11. 16. Apoc. 21. 3, 7.

IV. The Moſaic Law is oppos'd to the Covenant of Grace, not only as it is a Civil-religious Law (which it is plainly and expreſly) but as it is the Settlement of the Holy Spiritual Law (the Original Law and Settlement of Soul-intereſts) which is covertly contained in it and ſignified by it. (c) For this great and admirable Law compriſeth πᾶσαν δικαιοσύνην, all Righteouſneſs, and therefore is of Spiritual-religious obſervance. In the preceptive part this Divine Moral Law is the rule of Righteouſneſs: But if it was meerly ſuch, it could not have the whole Nature of a Law, it muſt be a Settlement of Rights and Dues and have a Sanction of Reward and Puniſhment, and therefore muſt be a premiant and penal Law. The penal Sanction of the Law is viſible in the Apoſtle's account of it, that it worketh Wrath, is the Law of Death, the ſtrength of Sin, the miniſtration of Condemnation. And touching the premiant Sanction of this Spiritual-religious Law it muſt be ſaid (d) God gave unto us a Law and Holy Commandments, ἃς πᾶς ὁ ποιήσας δύναται σωθῆναι, which every one that doeth, may be ſaved. But ſome ſuppoſe, that the premiant or promiſſory Sanction of the Law is ceaſed ceſſante conditionis poſſibilitate (becauſe the poſſibility of the Condition is ceaſed) ceſſante ſubditi capacitate, becauſe the capacity of the Subject is ceaſed. It is unworthy of God, to ſay, that he doth ever ſince the Fall tell the World, if you are not fallen, nor ſinners, you ſhall be juſtify'd; or on condition, that you be ſuch as never did Sin, you ſhall live. This (ſay they) were to condemn us ironically. Therefore the promiſſory covenanting part of the Law (the Promiſe and the Condition) is ceaſed. It is no Promiſe nor Covenant of God. To which I anſwer, that the Original Law is not indeed ſuch a Covenant as requireth a mutual Stipulation, nor did it ever perhaps require expreſs Covenanting (although ſome are prone to think (e) that the Angels at their Creation were required to enter into an expreſs Covenant of Subjection, Allegiance and Fealty:) But that

it

Hotting. Diſſ. de Reſur. p. 10. Pocock. ſupr. p. 98. Lightfoot Hor. in Joh. 4. 15. Men. ben Iſr. de Reſur. l. 1. c. 1. Coch. c. 11. n. 2, 3. 9.

(w) Pocock ſupr. p. 99.

(x) Hulſ. Theol. Jud. Par. 1. p. 572.

(y) Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 7. S. 13.

(z) Pocock ſupr.

(a) Pocock.

(b) Epiſcop. Inſtit. l. 3. S. 4. c. 1.

(c) Theophil. ad Autol. l. 3. p. 127.

(d) Ibid. l. 2. p. 104.

(e) Mr. Lawſon Theopolit. B. 1. c. 10.

it always was ever ſince the Creation, and ever will be a Settlement, Conſtitution, premiant or promiſſory Law (and in ſuch ſenſe a Covenant) will appear by conſidering the neceſſary indiſpenſable Obligation of the Condition, and the neceſſary eternal truth of the Promiſe. For the hardeſt condition of this Original Law that can reaſonably be imagin'd, is only ſinleſs Obedience, to which all Rationals are neceſſarily and indiſpenſably oblig'd; for to ſuppoſe, that they may Sin, is a contradiction. And as the Condition is of neceſſary indiſpenſable Obligation, ſo the Promiſe is a neceſſary eternal Verity. For it always was, and ever will be true, that he who performeth unſinning Obedience δύναται σωθῆναι, may be ſaved, yea ſhall be ſav'd. The premiant or promiſſory part of the Law therefore is not ceaſed, nor ever can ceaſe, although it is ceaſed as to any availableneſs to our Benefit; upon which account it would be a thing unreaſonable and unworthy of God, to make this Original Law a mutual confederative Covenant with fallen Mankind. This is not that mutual confederative Moſaic Covenant, the propoſal whereof was made by Moſes to the Children of Iſrael, but this is covertly contain'd in and ſignify'd by the Moſaic-civil-religious Law. As the Apoſtle interpreteth Moſes, Rom. 10. 5. Moſes deſcribeth the Righteouſneſs which is of the Law, that the Man which doeth thoſe things, ſhall live by them. In the firſt and literal Senſe of the Law Vivere and the legal promiſe of Life denoteth the enjoyment of Life in this World, which repreſenteth and covertly ſignifieth Life eternal and the legal Promiſe thereof. In the Moſaic Law therefore Life eternal and the legal Promiſe thereof is repreſented and covertly ſignified, elſe the Allegation of the Text of Moſes would be impertinent to the Apoſtle's buſineſs; for he is diſcourſing, not of Secular, but of Soul-intereſts. Righteouſneſs alſo (a term which the Apoſtle uſeth) denoteth Salvation in the Apoſtle's Senſe. Who in another place alledgeth this ſame Moſaic Text, Gal 3. 12. The Law is not of Faith: but the Man that doeth them, ſhall live in them. He had before proved, that as many as are of the Works of the Law, are under the Curſe. This he proveth from the Tenour of the Moſaic Law (the Letter of it) wherein the Tenour of the Original Law of Soul-intereſts is repreſented and covertly ſignified. As therefore the legal, ſpiritual and eternal Malediction is repreſented and covertly ſignified in one Text of the Law: So the legal, ſpiritual and eternal Benediction is repreſented and covertly ſignified in this other Text of the Moſaic Law, the Man that doeth them ſhall live in them. The ſame Apoſtle ſaith of the Commandment of the Moſaic Law conſidered as Spiritual-religious, it was ordained to Life, which muſt ſignifie Life Spiritual and Eternal. Rom. 7. 10. The Commandment of the Moſaic Law therefore as it is in the Law, was ordained to Life eternal, and the keeping it as the Law requireth, intituleth to Life eternal by the Law; therefore ſome ſort of legal Promiſe of Life eternal is in the Moſaical Law; and conſequently the legal Promiſe of Life eternal is covertly ſignified in it. Agreeably to the Apoſtle our Saviour interpreteth the Moſaic Law; for to him that ask'd him, What good thing ſhall I do, that I may have eternal Life? Our Saviour anſwer'd, Matth. 19. If thou wilt enter into Life, keep the Commandments. The other reply'd, all theſe things have I kept from my Youth. From whence it is apparent, that our Saviour ſhap'd his Anſwer to this young Religioniſt according to his own Religion. For as keeping the Commandments is really conditio ſine qua non of entring into Life, ſo it was the ſenſe of this ſtrict Judaical Pietiſt's Religion. And if in his Religion a condition was requir'd in order to the entring into Life, there was in his Religion a Promiſe of entring into Life upon Condition, ſuch a Condition as the Apoſtle citeth from the Law, The Man that doeth them, ſhall live in them. This appeareth alſo from our Saviour's Diſcourſe with a capricious Lawyer, Luk. 10. 25. who to try his Law-skill (tempting him, ſaith the Text) ask'd him, Maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal Life? Our Saviour asketh him again, what the Law requir'd? And he rehearſing the great Commandments (of the love of God and of Man) our Saviour replieth, Thou haſt anſwer'd right: this do and thou ſhalt live. Which words of our Saviour are not meant as a ſufficient directory to Life and Salvation, but as a ſufficient Anſwer to a capricious Queſtioniſt in matters of Law-skill. They rightly repreſent therefore the ſenſe of the Law; and conſequently they infer, that a Righteouſneſs of Life and Practice is requir'd by the Law in order to Life eternal (which is the love of God and of Man) and that the Law (in ſome ſort) promiſeth Life eternal to the Righteouſneſs which it requireth. Both Jews and Gentiles look'd for Immortality and eternal Life, the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life are the great Principles of Natural Religion, and could not be wholly wanting in the Moſaic Law, if the Preceptive part of the Holy Spiritual Law was imbodied in it. They are therefore covertly imbodied in the Moſaic Law, and ſo as to conſtitute Law-religion, which is oppoſite to the Religion of Saving Grace.

Gal. 3. 19. Wherefore then ſerveth the Law? It was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions. To reſtrain Men from Wickedneſs and to convict them of their Tranſgreſſions. Petav. T. 1. L. 10. c. 25.

V. 10.

V. But it muſt be acknowledg'd, that in Notices of the Soul's Immortality, the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life, and in Arguments drawn from thence to ingage Men to virtuous Practice, the Pagan Theology tranſcendeth the Moſaic Law and the Prophets; which muſt neceſſarily be matter of admiration to them, that conſider not the Cauſes and Reaſons of it. One principal Reaſon why the Moſaic Inſtitution is ſo ſparing in Notices of future Rewards and Puniſhments, is, becauſe it was to be a Civil-religious Inſtitution, ſuch an one as was oppoſite to the Gentiles Idolatry and alſo Typical of the Chriſtian Religion. Another Reaſon was, becauſe the Moſaic Law could not be an expreſs Covenant touching the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life. For the Original Law touching Soul-intereſts could not be a mutual confederative Covenant with fallen Mankind. And the Moſaic Law could not be plainly and expreſly the New Covenant antecedently to the times of Chriſtianity. It could not be therefore an expreſs Covenant touching the future Rewards and Puniſhments, which in this Oeconomy and Diſpenſation of things, and conſequently throughout the whole Old Teſtament, are but obſcurely taken notice of. Which Character of the Books of the Old Teſtament implieth, that they are of a very different Nature from the Books of the New Teſtament, that they ought to be duely diſtinguiſh'd from them, and not confounded with them, as is too uſually done both by Ancient and Modern Writers. When the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh of Hell (f) the Hebrew Doctors underſtand thereby the Hell of the damned (whereas Hell is of no ſuch ſignification in the Old Teſtament) and Chriſtian Divines have ſymboliz'd with them in their Folly, whence a mighty pother has been rais'd in the Church about Chriſt's deſcent into Hell. (g) Some have ſaid, that Chriſt deſcended thither, that all ſuch as confeſs'd him there, might be ſaved: But Philaſtrius ſaith, this is contrary to that of the Prophet David, in Inferno quis confitebitur tibi? (h) J. Mart. accuſeth the Jews of diſmembring the Prophet Jeremiah, and taking out of him a place, which ſpake of Chriſt's Deſcent to thoſe of Iſrael which were dead, that he might Evangelize to them his Salvation, whereas no ſuch Language as this could ever be in the Old Teſtament. When the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The juſt ſhall inherit the Earth (i) Origen expoundeth this Saying, to be meant of Plato's pure Earth in a pure Heaven, whereby he meaneth the heavenly Beatitude, which the Pſalmiſt doth not mean by the Earth, nor can the Earth in the literal Senſe ſignifie it. (k) S. Auſtin confuteth ſome that were ſo unwiſe, as to interpret God's breathing into Adam the Breath of Life from Chriſt's breathing upon his Diſciples (l) yet ſeveral of the ancient Writers of the Church underſtand this breathing the Breath of Life into Adam, to ſignifie the breathing into him the Holy Spirit. So the Image of God wherein the Terreſtrial Adam was created, we commonly ſuppoſe, to be the Divine Vital Image of Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs, which is not the Old Teſtament-notion of the Image of God. So by the Sons of God that ſaw the Daughters of Men, Gen. 6. 2. Moſes is thought to mean Pious Men (of the Family of Seth:) But this is not the Old Teſtament-notion of the Sons of God. Such Interpretations of the Old Teſtament are as incongruous, as Tertullian's Phancy (m) that the Light which was produc'd in the Moſaic Coſmopœia, was Chriſt the true Light, that enlightneth every Man coming into the World. (n) So the appearances of God in the Old Teſtament are ſuppos'd, to be Chriſt the Son of God, although we have many plain Notices in Scripture, that they were Angels. And in expreſs contradiction to Scripture Chriſt is ſuppos'd alſo, to have been the Legiſlator that gave the Moſaic Law upon Mount Sinai. So one of the Reliques of Holy Rome is ſaid to be (o) the Tables of Stone with the Ten Commandments that our Lord (Chriſt) gave to Moyſes on Mount Sinai. But the foul-mouth'd Celſus may be allow'd to throw Dirt upon ſo abſurd a Story. (p) How could he be a Legiſlator by Moſes for the getting of Riches and Power and filling the Earth, the ſlaughtering Enemies without ſparing the young, and killing them univerſally? In the Book of Pſalms we read, have I not hated them that hate thee, O Lord? And perhaps ſuch old Teſtament Language was not unapplicable to the Apoſtate Julian: But the Alexandrian Cyril citeth it (q) as the Saying of the Prophet David to Chriſt, who muſt not be thought a Teacher of the antiquated Zelotick Piety and Elias-like Spirit. The putting Hereticks and Idolaters to Death ſome of the Chriſtian Church plead for, and would put in Practice, if it was in their Power (agreeably to that Conceit that Chriſt was the Legiſlator of the Moſaic Law) although it is plainly (r) a Branch of the antiquated Zelotick Piety. Pope Adrian endeavour'd to perſwade the Princes of Germany, to cut off Luther, becauſe God caſt Corah and his Company down to Hell, and commanded, that thoſe who would not obey the Prieſt, ſhould be put to Death. (s) All the Power and Juriſdiction that was granted to the High Prieſt in the Old Teſtament, is ſaid to be promis'd to the Pope in the New Teſtament. (t) And the Pontificians defend their Incenſe, their Holy Water, their Chriſm, their Conſecration of Altars, and the uſe of Lights in time of Divine Service with other Ritualities by the Moſaic Law: (u) As the Muhammedans defend the Thefts, Devaſtations and Rapines of their Prophet by the Example of Joſhua.

VI. But in the Law and the Prophets the Piety, Virtue and Righteouſneſs (of Life and Practice) of Saints and Prophets in the Old Teſtament-times (who were God's Believers and initially Chriſtians) is contain'd. Their Inſtitution of Piety, Morality and Righteouſneſs (Spiritual-religious) is in this Moſac Inſtitution; which therefore in reſpect of theſe Contents of it ſo conſider'd was the Chriſtian Religion (the matters of it) initially introduc'd in thoſe Old Teſtament-times. Moſes and the Prophets were the Holy Men of thoſe times and the Doctors, Teachers and Miniſters of true Religion and Righteouſneſs (which Chriſtianity counteth ſuch) for ſuch our Saviour accounteth them. Luk. 16. 29. They have Moſes and the Prophets. Matth. 5. 12. So perſecuted they the Prophets which were before you. Matth. 7. 12. Whatſoever ye would that Men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them, for this is the Law and the Prophets. Our Saviour recommendeth his Precept as being a Summary of that Equity and Righteouſneſs (as to what concerneth the ſecond Table) which was taught by Moſes and the Prophets, who were, and were accounted the Divine Teachers of Duty and true Virtue and the Law thereof. And whoſe Doctrine is a Syſtem of what is Moral and Spiritual-religious Law (the Preceptive part of it) as our Saviour intimateth alſo, Matth. 22. 40. On theſe two Commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets. It is a great recommendation of theſe two Commandments, that the whole Doctrine of Godlineſs and Righteouſneſs as taught by Moſes and the Prophets is but theſe two Commandments expanded. By their Inſtructions, Precepts, Exhortations, Reproofs (and Devotions alſo) Moſes and the Prophets taught the Spiritual-religious Law, and that Spiritual-religious truth of Piety which is the due obſervance thereof, and which is manifeſtly requir'd by thoſe two great Commandments of the Law (touching the love of God and of Man) which are a Summary and Abridgment of the ancient Rule of Duty and Virtue, of Religion and ſubſtantial Righteouſneſs. For Moſes and the Prophets (in the main) taught the ſame Life of Righteouſneſs, that conſtituteth regenerate Chriſtians, to whom the Law is a Rule of Life. Jam. 2. 8, 10. Gal. 5. 13, 14. Eph. 6. 2. who muſt have it fulfilled in them and by them, Rom. 8. 4. and 13. 8, 9. and ſo fulfilled it is Righteouſneſs and true Holineſs. It is old Spiritual-religious Law as written only outwardly in Tables of Stone, and it is new Spiritual-religious Law as written (f) Ap. Petav. T. 4. Par. 2. l. 13. c. 15.

(g) Ibid. c. 18. c. 10.

(h) Ibid.

(i) C. Celſ. l. 7. p. 351.

(k) De C. D. l. 13. c. 24.

(l) Petav. de Trin. l. 8. c. 5. & 7.

(m) Adv. Prax. c. 12.

(n) Tertul. Paradox. 19.

(o) The Romiſh Horſleach. p. 59.

(p) Πῶς ἐκεῖνος διὰ Μωϋσέως νομοθετεῖ πλȣτεῖν, ϗ δυναστεύειν, ϗ καταπιμπλάναι τὴν γῆν, ϗ καταφονεύειν τȣ̀ς πολεμίȣς ἡβηδὸν, ϗ παγγενεὶ κτείνειν. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 7. p. 343.

(q) C. Jul. l. 1. p. 2.

(r) Eſto idololatras in Theocratiâ Judaicâ capite plexos: at minimè hinc conficitur, quod voluit Pamelius, hæreticos ex Cypriani ſententia in republicâ Chriſtianâ morte plectendos. Ep. Fell in Cypr. p. 173.

(s) Anſw. to Philan. Angl. p. 120.

(t) Spencer. de Leg. Hebr. Proleg. c. 3. S. 2.

(u) Hotting. Hiſt. Or. l. 1. c. 3. p. 47. Ed. 1.

written inwardly on the fleſhly Tables of the Heart, Heb. 8. 10. 2 Cor. 3. 3. Moſes and the Prophets were inſtituted themſelves and their Doctrine was an Inſtitution of others (an effectual Inſtitution of God's Believers in the Old Teſtament-times) to that Spiritual-religious truth of Piety, which is the Chriſtian's Life of Righteouſneſs; this Moſaic Inſtitution therefore was an initial Introduction of the Chriſtian Religion. The many Injunctions in the Old Teſtament to fear God, and depart from Evil, to hate the Evil and love the Good, to have clean Hands and a pure Heart, to keep the Heart with all diligence, to do juſtly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God, to Judgment, Mercy, Faith and the love of God (magnalia legis, or weightier matters of the Law) are Branches of this Moſaic Inſtitution; and ſuch are the many Sermons of the Prophets, wherein they ſharply rebuke the Jews Superſtition and Hypocriſie in over-placing their Religion and Righteouſneſs in Sacrifices and Ceremonial Inſtitutes, with deſign to bring them to the Spiritual-religious practice of the ſubſtantial Duties of Religion. The Book of Proverbs (of ſage Sentences and Aphoriſms) is an illuſtrious Inſtitution to Piety, and ſuch is the Book of Pſalms, of which S. Baſil giveth this high Elogy, (w) all things appertaining to Divinity are treaſur'd up in the Book of Pſalms, ὥσπερ ἐν μεγάλῳ τινὶ ϗ κοινῷ ταμιείῳ, as in a certain great and common Repoſitory. From the Pſalmiſt's high Elogies of the Moſaic Law and his conſtant imploying his Meditation therein, it appeareth, that this Old Teſtament Moral Law as it is Spiritual-religious (an authoritative Doctrine inſtituting to holy ſpiritual living and the various duties thereof) is of ſuch ſuperlative excellency, (x) that J. Mart. ought not to find fault, if this honourary Attribute be given to it, The Law of the Lord is perfect. For it was perfect as being right and without Iniquity, (which is the Pſalmiſt's ſenſe, Pſal. 19. 7.) and it was perfect as not being culpably defective; for it had all the perfection which ſuch an Inſtitution ought to have, and was an Inſtitution to the perfect way of living without Vice or Crime, (y) ſo far as was requiſite in thoſe times, reclaiming from all Vice and Crime, or as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, converting the Soul. But if it had been ſo perfect, as that nothing could be added to it, Swearing, Curſing, Revenge, ſome Uncharitableneſs, Unmercifulneſs, Untruth (beſides Polygamy) had not been ſo uſual as they were with Holy People in the Old Teſtament-times; which Imperfections are not excuſable but from the Imperfection of their Inſtitution. If it had been ſo perfect, as that nothing could be added to it as to the inſtituting us, there could have been no place for a new Law and Lawgiver, a new Commandment; nor could the new Law be a clearer Revelation, (z) a Diſpenſation of more abundant Grace and Aſſiſtance, and more full of Love and Goodneſs than the Moſaic Inſtitution, nor could it require of us another Spirit; nor could the ſtate of God's People be more Son-like leſs Servile, more Heavenly and leſs Secular and Earthly in the times of the New than in thoſe of the Old Teſtament. In thoſe times holy Men were inſtituted to ſuch a goodneſs of Diſpoſition and Practice, as was in the main an holy ſpiritual Life, but ſo as not to be forbidden many things, which are hugely alien from that goodneſs of Diſpoſition and Practice, which is in Chriſt's Inſtitution. The great Law of the due and ordinate love of God and Man is a Moſaic Law; but all the Contents of it (all things that are imply'd in it) were far from being clearly and diſtinctly explicated in the Moſaic Inſtitution. It injoyned a true and ſaving goodneſs of Diſpoſition and Practice, but this injoyned Goodneſs (this due and ordinate love of God and of Man) as the Jews were inſtituted to it, is not to be extended any further than the Moralities in the Law and the Prophets reach (Matth. 22. 40.) which are very much ſhort of that vaſtly extenſive goodneſs of Diſpoſition and Practice, which the Chriſtian Inſtitution requireth, to conſtitute a more divine and child of Godlike, gracious and benign, ſpiritual and heavenly ſort of Religioniſts. Irenæus obſerveth, that there is a due agreement complicated with a due difference between the Moral Precepts of the Old and New Teſtament. (a) The Precepts of perfect life being the ſame in both Teſtaments, demonſtrate the ſame God of both, who commanded (indeed) particular Precepts ſuitable to both, but the more eminent and chief without which Salvation cannot be had (in any times) are the ſame in both. The Moſaic Inſtitution in the Old Teſtament was ſuitable to the time and that ſtate of things, which then was; and in the New Teſtament there are particular Precepts ſuited to theſe times and that ſtate of things which now is, which are peculiar to the New Teſtament. If the Moral Diſcipline of the Old Teſtament had not been in the ſtrein and tenour of it much more mundane than is agreeable to the New Teſtament, the Jews had not ſo much abominated their Meſſiah becauſe of his mean appearance and afflicted ſtate.

Math. 23. 23. Luk. 11. 42.

(w) Hom. in Pſal. 1. p. 127.

Pſal. 19. and Pſal. 119.

(x) Dial cum Tryph. p. 251.

(y) Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 9. c. 107.

(z) V. Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 1. c. 1. in fine.

(a) Conſummatæ vitæ præcepta in utroque Teſtamento cùm ſint eadem, eundem oſtenderunt Deum, qui particularia quidem præcepta apta utriſque præcepit, ſed eminentiora & ſumma, ſine quibus ſalvari non poteſt, in utroque eadem ſuaſit. Adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 12.

VII. But although the Moral Diſcipline of the Old Teſtament was the Chriſtian Religion initially introduc'd, yet the common Opinion is, (b) that thoſe Moral Precepts do not oblige Chriſtians, as they are delivered by Moſes and the Prophets, but only as they are the Law of Nature, and as they are reinforc'd and confirm'd by Chriſt's Authority. The reaſon of this Opinion is, becauſe Moſes was not ſent or authoriz'd, to be our Lawgiver (to deliver a Law to any but the Jews) all his Laws are one Body of Political Laws (of which the Decalogue is a part) peculiarly given to one People or Political Body (the Hebrews,) which in the making and promulgation of them were not directed to, or deſign'd for, any other People, and therefore could not bind them. How much of force there is in this great Argument, will appear by diſtinguiſhing between Spiritual-religious and Civil-religious (or Political) Law; and between inſtituting the Jews as Men (to the Virtues and Duties that belong to them as ſuch) and as Judaical Men. If God ſhould inact and promulgate an authoritative Inſtitution of Judaical Judges, in terms directed to them only; this would be in part an Inſtitution of them as Judaical Judges, and in part it would be an Inſtitution of them as Judges, to the Virtues and Duties that belong to them as ſuch. So when God inacted and promulgated an authoritative Inſtitution of Judaical Men, in terms directed to them only, this was in part an Inſtitution of them as Judaical Men, and in part it was an Inſtitution of them as Men, to the Virtues and Duties that belong'd to them as ſuch. And as if God ſhould promulgate an Inſtitution of Judaical Judges, every Judge that cometh to the knowledge of it, would have the preceptive Will of God notic'd to him therein, touching his Duty as a Judge (for what God requireth of one Judge as ſuch, he requireth of all:) So in the Inſtitution of Judaical Men which God promulgated, every Man that came to the knowledge of it, had therein the preceptive Will of God notic'd to him touching his Duty as a Man; for what God requireth of one Man as ſuch, he requireth of all Men. So in a Divine Inſtitution of Judaical Fathers, Children, Kings, Maſters, Neighbours, Religious Worſhippers and People of God, the preceptive Will of God is notic'd touching all that are theſe Relations; for à quatenus ad omne valet conſequentia. From whence it appeareth, that the preceptive part of the Old Teſtament is far from being abrogated, that the Moſaic Inſtitution to Piety is far from being ſo narrow and reſtrained, as to concern only the Jews (or Iſraelites;) for the Nature and Notion of it ſheweth it, to be vaſtly extenſive in its uſe and authority. It inſtituteth Judaical Men as Men, to the Virtue and Duty which concerneth them as Men; to fear God and keep his Commandments, which is the whole duty of Man. Unto you, O Men, do I call, and my Voice is to the Sons of Men. He hath ſhewed thee, O Man, what is good. Unto Man he ſaid, Behold the fear of the Lord, that is Wiſdom, and to depart from evil is Underſtanding. Come ye Children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord. What Man is he that deſireth Life, and loveth many Days, that he may ſee good. Keep thy Tongue from evil, and thy Lips from ſpeaking guile. God in delivering the Moral Precepts of the Moſaical Inſtitution doth as good as ſay to the Jews, Theſe are Virtues and Duties that belong to you as Men, theſe things I require of you and command you, as you are Men; whereby he plainly ſignifieth, that he requireth them of all Men, virtually and equivalently he thereby commandeth them unto all Men; thus far therefore the Moral Precepts of the Old Teſtament are of a preceptive nature unto all Men that come to the knowledge of them. In publiſhing theſe Precepts Moſes and the Prophets did publiſh what was Divine Law and Commandment to the Jews primarily, directly, formally and expreſly by their Legiſlation; and ſo far and in ſuch ſenſe they are not Divine Law and Commandment unto us: but thereby the Mind and Will of God concerning us is made known and declared equivalently to ſuch a primary, direct, formal and expreſs Legiſlation (as if it was made unto us) and as deliver'd by Moſes and the Prophets they have virtually ſuch a Legiſlation to us; and ſo far Moſes and the Prophets are Promulgers of Law unto us, both as we are Men, and as we are the People of God. For the Virtues and Duties that did belong to the Jews as Men, did belong to them alſo as they were the People of God, and belong unto us for the ſame reaſon, and for greater reaſon, as having greater obligation to Sanctity and Goodneſs than they. Thoſe Moſaic Precepts which are Holy Spiritual Law, are manifeſtly Univerſal Law.

(b) Suarez de Leg. l. 9. c. 11. Grot. de J. B. ac P. l. 1. c. 1.

Eccl. 12. 13.
Prov. 8. 4.
Mic. 6. 8.
Job 28. 28.
Pſal 34. 11, 12, 13.

It is a poor buſineſs, to allow God's Word in the Old Teſtament, to be a true Expoſition of the Law of Nature; for ſuch is every Orthodox Lecture of a Moral Philoſopher. The Law and the Prophets are deſtroy'd materially, if their Doctrine is deſtroy'd; and formally, if their Authority is deſtroy'd. If they are to us of no preceptive Authority, if they do not bind us at all ratione miniſterii, they are formally deſtroy'd, and are not unto us the Law and the Prophets. (c) The whole Law of Piety, Sanctity, Humanity, Verity, Chaſtity, Juſtice, Mercy, Benevolence, doth remain, ſaith Tertullian. But it cannot be ſaid, to remain, if its obligatory Nature and Authority as a Law deliver'd by Moſes and the Prophets is totally deſtroy'd. The Apoſtle conſidereth God as Legiſlator of the Moſaic Moral Law, ſaying, Do not commit Adultery, Do not kill, Thou ſhalt love thy Neighbour as thy ſelf. This Moral Law as publiſh'd in the Scripture of the Old Teſtament the Apoſtle looketh upon as Law unto Chriſtians; for he urgeth it upon them, as that which is unto them Law upon the account of its promulgation as Law in the Scripture of the Old Teſtament. He that ſaid, Do not commit adultery, ſaid alſo Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a tranſgreſſor of the Law. S. Paul looketh upon Chriſtian Children as bound to honour their Parents, not only by the Law of Nature, and the Law of Chriſt, but by the preceptive Authority of God's Commandment in the Moſaic Inſtitution, Eph. 6. 2, 3. Honour thy Father and Mother (which is the firſt Commandment with promiſe) that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayeſt live long on the Earth. The Apoſtle looketh upon the premiant temporal Promiſes annex'd to the Precepts of the Moſaic-moral Law as not wholly ceas'd, but continuing in force in ſuch a Senſe as is agreeable to the ſtate of Chriſtians; therefore thoſe Moſaic-moral Precepts to which they are annex'd are as ſuch of preceptive Authority unto Chriſtians. They are bound to the Duties of a Spiritual-religious Life by a threefold Cord, Eccl. 4. 12. the Law natural, the Moſaic-moral and the Chriſtian-moral Law; which Obligations are not deſtructive of each other, but accumulative.

Jam. 2. 8,—11.

VIII. The Moſaic Inſtitution is both the Doctrine of true Religion and Righteouſneſs and alſo a Prophetic and Typical Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. Upon theſe, two accounts ſocially conſider'd and becauſe of the latter of them ~~is~~ ſingly conſider'd, It was the Chriſtian Religion initially introduc'd. Under theſe two Notions (as the Doctrine of true Religion and Righteouſneſs and in conjunction therewith a Prophetic and Typical Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion) it is conſider'd by the ancient Writers of the Church and by our Saviour alſo. Of the Jews an ancient Writer ſaith, (d) The Law was to them both a Diſcipline of Life and a Prophecy of things to come. (e) It conſiſteth of two ſorts of Precepts, præcepta vitæ agendæ, the Precepts of a Life that is to be liv'd; & præcepta vitæ ſignificandæ, and the Precepts of a Life that is to be ſignify'd. (f) To a Jew that asketh me, why I hold in my Hand the Old Teſtament, whoſe Precepts I do not obſerve? I make anſwer, that Chriſtians obſerve the Precepts of the Life that is to be liv'd out of thoſe very Books (as deliver'd there, acknowledging their preceptive Authority:) but the Precepts of the Life to be ſignify'd, were then rightly obſerv'd, when thoſe things were foretold, which are now reveal'd. Our Saviour conſidereth the Moſaic Inſtitution under theſe two Notions, Matth. 5. 17. Think not, that I am come to deſtroy the Law or the Prophets: I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfill. The Law and the Prophets were the ancient authoritative

(c) Manet lex tota pietatis, ſanctitatis, humanitatis, veritatis, caſtitatis, juſtitiæ, miſericordiæ, benevolentiæ, pudicitiæ. Tertull. de pudicit. c. 6.

(d) Lex & diſciplina erat i lis & prophetia futurorum. Iren. adv. Hær. l. 4. c. 28.

(e) S. Aug. c. Fauſt. l. 6.

(f) Judæo dicente mihi, cur tenes vetus Teſtamentum, cujus præcepta non ſervas? Reſpondi, ſervari à Chriſtianis etiam ex ipſis libris præcepta vitæ agendæ, præcepta verò vitæ ſignificandæ tunc rectè obſervata, cùm prænunciabantur iſta, quæ nunc revelata ſunt. Ibid.

thoritative Teachers of true Religion and Righteouſneſs, and are ſo conſider'd by our Saviour in delivering his Law of Righteouſneſs. As they were ſuch, he came not to do any thing, that may be juſtly called a deſtroying them in any reſpect; not to deſtroy their preceptive Authority, nor to cancel Mens obligation to obſerve their Precepts of true Godlineſs and Righteouſneſs, nor to thwart their End and Deſign, which was to make Men really Righteous. And that our Saviour conſidereth the Law and the Prophets under this Notion (as the ancient Teachers of true Religion and Righteouſneſs towards God and Man) appeareth from the words that he ſubjoyneth, v. 19. Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of theſe leaſt Cammandments, and ſhall teach Men ſo, he ſhall be counted the leaſt (he ſhall be the leaſt ſet by, and conſequently ſhall be of no account) in the Kingdom of Heaven. But our Saviour conſidereth the Moſaic Inſtitution under a ſecond Notion, as prophetic and typical of the Chriſtian Religion; for thus Clemens expoundeth his words (and undoubtedly this Senſe is included in them) I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfill: (g) τὰς κατὰ νόμον προφητείας ἐπιτελῶς γενέσθαι κατὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ παρουσίαν, the Prophecies of the Law were perfectly fulfilled in his coming. And that this is our Saviour's Senſe, appeareth from the words immediately following, v. 18. Verily, I ſay unto you, till Heaven and Earth paſs, one jot or one tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the Law, till all be fulfilled. Every thing predicted in the Old Teſtament which is here called the Law (and which comprehendeth the Law ſtrictly ſo called and the Prophets) muſt infallibly be fulfilled, and cannot poſſibly fail of a due completion. And conſequently the main of thoſe Predictions (relating to the Meſſiah and his Religion) muſt have their due completion in Chriſt, as our Saviour often diſcours'd to his Diſciples, that all things muſt be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moſes and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalms concerning me, Luk. 24. 25, 26, 27, 44, 45. ch. 18. 31. ch. 22. 37. Joh. 5. 39, 45, 46, 47. Agreeably to our Saviour's Diſcourſes, the Apoſtles in their Diſcourſes, Diſputations and Sermons uſually alledge and inſiſt upon (h) the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, to demonſtrate the Truth and Divinity of the Chriſtian Religion. Mightily convincing the Jews ſhewing by the Scriptures that Jeſus was the Chriſt: reaſoning out of the Scriptures, perſwading them concerning Jeſus both out of the Law of Moſes and out of the Prophets; for to him give all the Prophets witneſs, Joh. 1. 45. Act. 3. 18, 22, 24. ch. 10. 43. ch. 13. 47. ch. 15. 11. ch. 17. 2, 3. ch. 18. 28. ch. 26. 22, 23. ch. 28. 23. Rom. 16. 26. 1 Cor. 15. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11. The ancient Scriptures are able to make us wiſe unto Salvation, becauſe they teach the Faith of Chriſt (which was intimated in the Converſe between our Saviour and Moſes and Elias upon the Mount,) 2 Tim. 3. 15. The founders of our Religion look upon the Chriſtian Church as founded upon the Prophets (Eph. 2. 20.) and upon a more ſure word of prophecy (more ſure than that it can be a cunningly deviſed Fable) to which we do well to take heed as unto a Light that ſhineth in a dark place, which is a place not well illuminated, and ſuch are we, till it be day-time with us, 2 Pet. 1. 19. The ſhining Light that is in the ancient Scriptures, implieth, that there are in them (conſidering the time) illuſtrious Notices of the Chriſtian Religion; and becauſe they are a more ſure word of prophecy, thoſe illuſtrious Notices are alſo illuſtrious and uncontroulable atteſtations to the Truth and Divinity thereof. For the Chriſtian Religion being amply foretold by ancient Prophecy, and plainly correſponding thereto, there can be nothing of fiction or fallacy in the caſe, (i) whence Origen rightly calleth the Prophets Predictions, ἰσχυροτάτην ἀπόδειξιν, the ſtrongeſt demonſtration. The Prophets and Evangeliſts, the Prediction and the Hiſtory, exactly agree; and the Evangeliſts are curious in obſerving the accompliſhment of ancient Prophecy in the paſſages of our Saviour's Life and Paſſion, to which they uſually ſubjoyn, This was done, that the Scripture might be fulfilled. Thoſe ancient Scriptures acquaint every one that will look into them, with the Idea of a certain ſuper-eminent Perſonage, whom God had deſign'd to ſend into the World, known amongſt God's People by the Name of Meſſiah the Prince; they predict the time of his coming, and amply characterize and deſcribe him, his Country, Tribe, Family, the place and manner of his Birth, the quality of the Perſon that he ſhould be born of, his external ſtate and condition, his high and holy Offices, Qualities, Endowments, Deportments, his great Performances and Succeſſes, his tragical Sufferings and the ineſtimable Benefits conſequent thereupon, his kind of Death and Burial, his Reſurrection, Aſcenſion, Seſſion at the Right Hand of God and everlaſting Prieſthood, the Nature of his Religion and Kingdom and the Extent of it; by all which deſcriptive and characteriſtick Notices of the Meſſiah recorded in ancient Prophecy, the Moſaic Inſtitution appeareth to be, unto them that live in the times of the New Teſtament, an ample Prophetick Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. For the Meſſiah is therefore ſo illuſtriouſly characteriz'd in ancient Prophecy, that he might be certainly known and diſtinguiſh'd from other perſons, when he appear'd in the World. But the Goſpel had not its firſt riſe from his appearance: (k) it was radically in the Books of the Prophets, but budded forth in the preaching of the Apoſtles. Whence S. Paul (that it might not be counted a meer novel thing) ſaith, That God had promiſed it before by his Prophets in the Holy Scripture, Rom. 1. 2. It was amply foreſignify'd by Moſes and the Prophets, and the many prophetick and promiſſory Notices of it that were in thoſe ancient times ſhew, that in ſuch a degree as was competible to them that liv'd in thoſe times, the Moſaic Inſtitution was a Prophetic Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. Having Moſes and the Prophets they had the lively Oracles of God; for the Prophetic Oracles inſtituted them to the Religion of Saving Grace, which is Life Eternal to its Religioniſts.

IX. Moſes and the Prophets are not meerly a Prophetic but a Typical Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion. (l) The way of prophecying in the Old Teſtament is both by Words and by Types. (m) In ſeveral of the ancient Prophecies touching the Meſſiah there is nothing of the Veil or Coverture of a Type: Nor is there any prefigurative Type in Iſaiah's illuſtrious Prophecy of Chriſt's ſuffering: Nor is there in the Contexture of the Prophecy any occaſion to ſpeak of the Meſſiah under the Coverture of a Type. But the Prophet having repreſented the Jews Captivity under the Chaldeans (which

(g) Strom. l. 3. p. m. 325.

(h) V. S. Aug. c. Fauſt. l. 12. c. 45.

(i) Huet. Dem. Ev. Prop. 7. S. 5.

(k) Ἀλλ' ἐῤῥιζώθη μὲν ἐν ταῖς βίβλοις τῶν προφητῶν, ἐβλάστησε δὲ ἐν τῷ κηρύγματι τῶν ἀποστόλων. S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 641.

Act. 7. 38. Rom. 3. 2.

(l) Scimus ut vocibus, ita & rebus prophetatum. Tertull. Τὰ μὲν διὰ ῥημάτων, τὰ δὲ διὰ τύπων. S. Chryſoſt. Grot. Not. in Matth. 1. 22.

(m) Gen. 3. 15. and 49. 10. Pſal. 110. 1. Dan. 7. 13 and ch. 9. 26. Hagg. 2. 7, 9. Zech. 12. 10. and ch. 9. 9. Malach. 3. 1.

(which was their Humiliation) and their Liberation from it, which was their Exaltation, a Type of their Spiritual Redemption and Liberation, and which the Prophets uſually connect and complicate with their Prophecies of the Meſſiah, he had great reaſon and occaſion without any Veil or Coverture to repreſent the Meſſiah and his Humiliation and Exaltation (which were of affinity with the things he had been ſpeaking of) and accordingly he maketh theſe great things his Theme, Iſa. 52. 13, 14. Behold my Servant ſhall proſper, he ſhall be exalted and extolled and be very high. As many were aſtoniſhed at thee (his Viſage was ſo marred more than any Man and his Form more than the Sons of Men) ſo ſhall he ſprinkle many Nations, the Kings ſhall ſhut their Mouths at him. Which Prediction of the Meſſiah's Exaltation is follow'd in the Prophet with a large pathetical deſcription of his Humiliation and Sufferings, ſuch a deſcription which in the main Strokes of it is unapplicable to any Type, Iſa. 53. But the greater number of Prophecies touching the Meſſiah are complicated with Types, and the general way of Inſtitution (to the Chriſtian Religion) in the Old Teſtament is by Types. (n) By things typical inſtituting to the things that are true, by Temporal to Eternal, by Carnal to Spiritual, by Earthly to Heavenly. (o) Στοιχειωτὴς ὁ νόμος, The Law is a certain elementary Teacher, that ſoweth in us (as it were) by Enigms and Shadows the knowledge of the Myſtery of Chriſt. By this elementary (which is alſo a cryptick) way of teaching the Jews were inſtituted, agreeably to the ancient learned Nations whoſe way of Inſtitution was by Hieroglyphicks, Symbols, Emblems, Fables, Allegories and Parables, that at once hide and veil, and yet (in ſome degree) reveal the truth of things. (p) For all that have Theologiz'd, both Barbarians and Greeks, have in this way of Doctrine deliver'd the truth of things, by Enigms and Symbols, Allegories and Metaphors, and certain ſuch ways. As this way of Inſtitution was agreeable to the Genius of ancient times, ſo it was adapted to the Old Teſtament; for Sciagraphy ought to precede Zoography, nor could the matters of Chriſtianity (till the fulneſs of time was come) exiſt in this World out of the Involutions and Shadows of literal Judaiſm. Whence the City of God in thoſe ancient times, (q) non in lumine, ſed in umbra concurrit, paſſed along, not in the Light, but in the Shade. Such was the ſtate of the Church under the Moſaic Inſtitution, which is a vaſt congloremation of Types, that may be conſider'd as of theſe ſeveral kinds. The Political-hiſtorical, the Promiſſory, the Perſonal-hiſtorical, the Characteriſtical and the Ceremonial; with all which ſorts of Types the Prophecies of the Meſſiah are complicated.

X. The Political-hiſtorical Types are ſuch as belong to the Hiſtory of the Polity of old Iſrael (the Body of that People;) for old Iſrael and their holy Commonwealth was a Type and Figure of the new and Chriſtian Iſrael; their redemption from the Egyptian Thraldom, their paſſing out of Egypt into Canaan, their paſſing through the Red Sea, their conduct through the Wilderneſs, their Brazen Serpent, their Manna and the Rock that follow'd them, the giving of their Law from Mount Sinai, their Mount Sion and Jeruſalem, their Canaan-condition and Theocracy, their Prophets, Prieſts and Kings, their Wars and Victories, their adoption and ſeparation from the World, their liberation from the Babylonian Captivity, their new Political World (Polity or Republick) that ſucceeded it, called new Heavens and a new Earth, were all of them myſterious Types of the Chriſtian Meſſiah and of the Chriſtian Church and Religion. (r) The Hebrews Commonwealth was in ſome ſort ſacrated, to be a foreſignifying Type of the City of God to be gather'd out of all Nations. The Hebrew Nation was deputed to foreſignifie Chriſt: (s) The whole Adminiſtration of which Republick ſhould be a Prophecy of the King that was to come, and to build the Celeſtial City out of all Nations. With theſe illuſtrious political Types the Prophecies of the Meſſiah are uſually complicated, whence his ſtate of things is in thoſe Prophecies of Typical Repreſentation and Deſcription. For they uſually repreſent him as the King of the Jews, the King of Iſrael ſitting on the Throne of David his Father, having Mount Sion for his Regial Seat, reigning over the Houſe of Jacob, feeding them as their Shepherd and Saviour-King, and eſtabliſhing his Kingdom with Judgment and Juſtice; as a Sovereign Friend to the Righteous in his Government, an Iron-rod to the Wicked, a deſtroyer of Idolatry, a protector of the Poor, an hugely peaceable Prince, under whoſe Government the Engines of War ſhould be broken, and the ferine Animals become tame and placid, Pſal. 2. 6. and 72, 4, 7, 12. Iſa. 2. 4. and 9. 6. and 11. 4, 6. Jer. 33. 15, 16. Ezek. 34. 33. and 37. 24. Mic. 5. 2. Zech. 9. 9, 10. and 13. 2. Luk. 1. 33, 34. In his Days a new Covenant is made with Iſrael and Judah, Judah is ſaved and Jeruſalem dwelleth ſafely, the Daughter of Sion hath the firſt dominion, the Mountain of the Lord's Houſe is exalted above the Hills, and all Nations flow unto it; his Dominion is from Sea to Sea, and from the River to the end of the Earth; and he is ſaid, to ſet up an Enſign, to aſſemble the Nations, the outcaſts of Iſrael and the diſperſed of Judah, and to gather them from the four Corners of the Earth, Jer. 31. 31. and 33. 16. Mic. 4. 1, 2, 8. Pſal. 72. 8. Iſa. 2. 2. and 11. 11, 12. Zech. 9. 10. If theſe Prophetick Deſcriptions of the Meſſiah be underſtood according to the literal ſound of them, we have ſuch a kind of Meſſiah and ſuch an Idea of the Meſſiah, which is in great degree coincident with the Meſſiah, that the Jews fancy, and call Ben David (a mundane kind of Saviour-king to the Jews) and ſuch an Idea of the Meſſiah is a typical kind of Repreſentation and Deſcription of the true Meſſiah. For theſe Prophetick Deſcriptions import (according to their genuine meaning) that the Throne of the Meſſiah is the Antitype to the Throne of David, that he ſhall be King of the new and Chriſtian Iſrael and Judah, the myſtical Sion and Jeruſalem; yet they import alſo, that the Meſſiah with his eximious Benefits was primarily intended for, and ſhould (in ſome degree) be primarily entertain'd by the literal Iſrael and Judah. And according to the Apoſtle's method of interpreting Prophecies they import alſo, that the Meſſiah with his eximious Benefits ſhall be entertain'd by the literal Iſrael and Judah, initially and very imperfectly at firſt, and in proceſs of time more plenarily and generally, Rom. 9. 27. and 11. 26. In theſe Prophecies therefore there is a complication of (n) Per ea quæ erant ſecunda ad prima advocans, hoc eſt per typica ad vera, & per temporalia ad æterna, & per carnalia ad ſpiritualia, & per terrena ad cæleſtia. Iren. l. 4. c. 28.

---

(o) S. Cyr. de Adorat. l. 2. p. 78.

(p) Clem. Str. l. 5. p. m. 405, 406.

(q) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 18. c. 1.

Iſa. 65. 17.

(r) In Hebræa gente, erat ipſa quodammodo ſacrata Reſpublica in prophetationem & prænunciationem civitatis Dei ex omnibus gentibus congreganda. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 10. c. 32.

(s) Cui prophetando venturo, gens una deputata eſt, cujus Reipublicæ tota adminiſtratio prophetia eſſet illius Regis venturi, & civitatem cæleſtem ex omnibus gentibus condituri. Idem de conſenſ. Evang. l. 1. c. 11.

of the Literal and Spiritual Iſrael, as there is alſo in one Prophets Prediction of the vaſt numeroſity of Iſrael (meaning the Spiritual Iſrael, which in part conſiſted of the Literal Iſrael) Hoſ. 1. 10. The number of the Children of Iſraal ſhall be as the Sand of the Sea, which cannot be meaſured nor numbred; and it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, ye are not my People, there ſhall it be ſaid unto them, ye are the Sons of the living God. In this Prophecy there would be nothing of difficulty, if the Prophet did not obſcure it by ſubjoining immediately, V. 11. Then ſhall the Children of Judah and the Children of Iſrael be gathered together, and appoint themſelves one head, and they ſhall come up out of the Land. This part of the Prophecy had manifeſtly a Literal-typical Completion in the reduction of the Jews (in conſort with ſome of the Ten Tribes) from the Babylonian Captivity under the conduct of Zorobabel, Jer. 30. 18---21. and ch. 33. 22, 26. Ezek. 37. 16. and conſequently a meer myſtical Interpretation of it cannot be genuin and legitimate. It muſt be conſidered therefore as a complex Prophecy (that compriſeth both Type and Antitype;) the Prophet predicteth, that at ſuch time, when the Children of Iſrael are to begin, to multiply into a vaſt numeroſity, this Prediction ſhall be fulfilled, firſt in the Type and afterwards in the Antitype, when the Converts to the Meſſiah emerge out of their Spiritual Captivity. So this Prophecy of Iſaiah hath a twofold Completion (one in the Type, the other in the Antitype) a Virgin ſhall conceive and bear a Son. So there are two Completions of the Prophecy of Amos, wherein he predicteth the Kingdom of the Meſſiah and the calling of the Gentiles into it under this Type, the raiſing up the Regial Houſe of David to its former magnificence and domination. Amos 9. 11, 12. In that day will I raiſe up the Tabernacle of David that is fallen, and cloſe up the Breaches thereof, and I will raiſe up his Ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old. That they may poſſeſs the remnant of Edom and of all the Heathen upon whom my Name is called, ſaith the Lord that doth this. In Prophecies therefore relating to the Meſſiah his State of things is predicted, by predicting Types and Typical Repreſentations thereof, as appeareth from the Political Types.

XI. The promiſſory Types are the promiſſory part of the Moſaic Inſtitution, which is earthly Felicities figurative of the heavenly Promiſes of the Chriſtian Religion. (t) The Old Teſtament hath terrene Promiſes, a terrene Jeruſalem, a terrene Paleſtine, a terrene Kingdom, a terrene Salvation, the Subjugation of Enemies, abundance of Children, plenty of Corn and Wine; which are ſpiritually underſtood, as the earthly Jeruſalem was a ſhadow of the heavenly. And this is the Myſtery of the Old Teſtament, which was underſtood by them that were Intelligennt and Spiritual. For even Maimonides ſaith of the Land of Canaan (u) it ſignifieth ארץ החיים the Land of the Living which is the World to come. And if the carnal Jews that are mainly intent upon the earthly Felicities, yet underſtand better things, no doubt Holy Men that liv'd in the Old Teſtament-times ſaw through the Veil of earthly Promiſes, although they were ſo far from declaring the better Promiſes, that the Prophecies of the Meſſiah are uſually complicated with the earthly Promiſes (which are a Typical Repreſentation of his felicitative State of things, and the Prophecies of them uſually are Complex) ſuch as external Peace and Solace, Safety and Liberty, Riches, Honour, Power and Dominion, Victory over Enemies, Proſperity and Plenty of accommodations of Life. Pſal. 72. 7, 16. In his days ſhall the righteous flouriſh, and abundance of peace ſo long as the Moon endureth. There ſhall be an handful of Corn in the Earth, upon the top of the Mountains; the fruit thereof ſhall ſhake like Lebanon, and they of the City ſhall flouriſh like Graſs of the Earth. Malach. 4. 2, 3. Unto you that fear my Name, ſhall the Sun of Righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his Wings; and ye ſhall go forth and grow up as Calves at the Stall. And ye ſhall tread down the wicked; for they ſhall be Aſhes under the Soles of your Feet. Ezek. 34. 24,--29. I the Lord will be their God, and my Servant David a Prince among them. And I will make with them a Covenant of Peace, and will cauſe the evil Beaſts to ceaſe out of the Land: and they ſhall dwell ſafely in the Wilderneſs and ſleep in the Woods. And I will make them and the places round about my Hill a Bleſſing: and I will cauſe the ſhower to come down in his ſeaſon: there ſhall be ſhowers of Bleſſing. And the Tree of the Field ſhall yield her Fruit, and the Earth ſhall yield her Increaſe, and they ſhall be ſafe in their Land, and ſhall know that I am the Lord, when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and deliver'd them out of the hand of thoſe that ſerved themſelves of them. And they ſhall no more be a prey to the Heathen, neither ſhall the Beaſts of the Land devour them; but they ſhall dwell ſafely, and none ſhall make them afraid. And I will raiſe up for them a plant of renown (my Servant David ſhall feed them and he ſhall be their Shepherd, V. 23) and they ſhall be no more conſumed with hunger in the Land, neither bear the ſhame of the Heathen any more. Iſa. 49. 8, 9, 10. I will give thee for a Covenant of the People, to eſtabliſh the Earth, to cauſe to inherit the deſolate Heritages. That thou mayeſt ſay to the Priſoners, go forth; to them that are in darkneſs, ſhew your ſelves: they ſhall feed in the ways, and their paſtures ſhall be in all high places, they ſhall not hunger nor thirſt, neither ſhall the Heat nor Sun ſmite them: for he that hath Mercy on them ſhall lead them, even by the Springs of Water ſhall be guide them. Iſa. 45. 13, 14. I have raiſed him up in Righteouſneſs, and I will direct all his ways: he ſhall build my City, and he ſhall let go my Captives, not for price nor reward, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Thus ſaith the Lord, the labour of Egypt and merchandiſe of Æthiopia and of the Sebeans, men of ſtature ſhall come over unto thee, and they ſhall be thine, they ſhall come after thee, in chains they ſhall come over. Pſal. 45. 16. Inſtead of thy Fathers ſhall be thy Children, whom thou mayeſt make Princes in all the Earth. Hagg. 2. 9. In this place will I give peace, which in the ſtile of the Old Teſtament ſignifieth omnia fauſta & proſpera, all Proſperity.

XII. The Perſonal-hiſtorical Types belong to the Hiſtory of particular Perſons, and have therein (more or leſs) an Hiſtorical Verity and Completion. Such were Adam and Eve, their Paradiſe and Tree of Life, Abel, Noah and the Waters of his Deluge, Melchiſedec, Iſaac, Moſes, Joſhua, Samſon, David, Solomon, Iſaiah, Jonah, Zorobabel,

---

(t) Vetus Teſtamentum promiſſiones habet terrenas, terrenam Hieruſalem, terrenam Palæſtinam, Regnum terrenum, Salutem terrenam, hoſtium ſubjugationem, abundantiam filiorum, fecunditatem frugum; omnia iſta promiſſiones ſunt terrenæ. In figura ſpiritaliter intelliguntur, quomodo Hieruſalem terrena umbra erat regni cœleſtis, & regnum terrenum umbra erat regni angelorum. S. Aug. in Pſal. 119. Et hoc eſt Sacramentum veteris Teſtamenti, ubi occultum erat novum: Quod illic promiſſa & dona terrena ſunt intelligentibus & tunc ſpiritalibus, quamvis nondum in manifeſtatione prædicantibus, & quæ illis temporalibus rebus ſignificaretur æternitas, & in quibus Dei donis eſſet vera felicitas. Idem de C. D. l. 4. c. 33

(u) L'Emper. Not. in Jacchiad. p. 188. & in Cod. Midd. p. 133.

robabel, Eliakim, Cyrus, Iſaac and Iſhmael, Jacob and Eſau, Hagar and Sarah, (w) ô res geſtas, ſed prophetice geſtas! Prophecies that are complicated with theſe Hiſtorical kind of Types are complex Prophecies, which in the next immediate Senſe are meant of the Type, but in a more remote retir'd Senſe are meant of the Antitype, wherein they have their perfect Completion; for in the Type they have but an initial imperfect Completion. (x) The Seventy firſt Pſalm (with us the Seventy ſecond) is according to the Title of it in the next immediate Senſe meant of King Solomon: But the Predictions there (touching the vaſt amplitude and endleſs duration of his Empire in Righteouſneſs, Peace and Proſperity, as alſo touching his noble Acts) were accompliſh- in Solomon in a very ſlender degree and meaſure, as in an imperfect ſhadow, which in the Lord Meſſiah have their more perfect Accompliſhment. In the ſame manner the Forty fifth and Eighty ninth Pſalm are meant of Solomon, as alſo that Prophetick Promiſe by Nathan, I will be his Father and he ſhall be my Son. 2 Sam. 7. 14. So the Second Pſalm is meant of David as (imperfectly) a Type of Chriſt, and this Prophetick Promiſe to Abraham was a Promiſe of the Meſſiah, In Iſaac ſhall thy Seed be called. Gen. 21, 12. Several Hiſtorical Paſſages in the Book of Pſalms are in the New Teſtament interpreted, to be meant of the Meſſiah (as the Zeal of thine Houſe hath eaten me up; the Stone which the Builders refus'd, is become the head Stone in the Corner) in which Hiſtorical Paſſages the Pſalmiſt was deſign'd to repreſent the Meſſiah, as the Virgin-propheteſs in Isa. 7. 14. Iſaiah's time, in bearing a Son and calling him Immanuel, was deſign'd to repreſent and foreſignifie his Nativity. With theſe Hiſtorical kind of Types the Prophecies of the Meſſiah are uſually complicated, eſpecially with that eminent Hiſtorical Type Zorobabel, under whoſe conduct the Jews were reduc'd from their Babylonian Captivity, which was a Type and Pledge of their ſpiritual Redemption and Liberation by the Meſſiah. For the moſt part the Prophets were ſuch as liv'd about the time of the Babylonian Captivity, the Jews deliverance from it is a principal Subject of their Prophecies (which they exaggerate to the Skies by their lofty Schemes of Speech) in expounding their Prophecies (y) it muſt be look'd upon as preludious to, and Typical of that Liberation which is by Chriſt. For a voice crying in the Wilderneſs preceded both, Iſa. 40. 3. and the voice crying in the Wilderneſs that preceded the former, was preludious and typical to that voice crying in the Wilderneſs, which preceded the latter, Matth. 3. 3. The Prophet comforting Zion's Mourners by the glad Tydings of a Liberation from the Babylonian Captivity, was preludious and typical to the great Evangelical Prophet preaching the Goſpel to the Poor, and deliverance to the Captives, Iſa. 61. 1--4. Luk. 4. 18. The raiſing up the Tabernacle of David in Zorobabel at the Reſtauration from the Babylonian Captivity was preludious and typical to the magnificent raiſing it up in the Kingdom of the Meſſiah, Amos 9. 11. This method of expounding Prophecies (by a correſpondence between the matters of the Old and New Teſtament, between the Old and New Iſrael, between Literal and Myſtical, Type and Antitype) is certainly Genuin and Legitimate, but may be carry'd on further than it will fairly go; whence the learned Grotius hath made very foul work with many Prophecies. On the other hand they that recede over-far from his method, come near him in the number and greatneſs of his Miſcarriages; they deſtroy the plain ſenſe of Words and Language, they fear not expreſly to contradict the ſacred Text, to gratifie their own Prejudices; they deſtroy the contexture and coherence of Prophecies and render them untelligible; they confound the Type and the Antitype, and make the Old Teſtament, not to be the New Teſtament involv'd, but reveal'd. To theſe it will ſeem little leſs than Blaſphemy, to affirm, that Zorobabel is in the ſtile of the Prophets called the Branch and my Servant David, yet there is nothing in the Bible more expreſs and palpable, as will appear to any that can read Engliſh with unprejudic'd Eyes.

The days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will bring Jer. 30.
again the captivity of my people Iſrael and Judah, 3, 8, 9, and I will cauſe them to return to the land that I 10.
gave to their fathers, and they ſhall poſſeſs it. Strangers ſhall no more ſerve themſelves of him, but they ſhall ſerve the Lord their God and David their King, whom I will raiſe up unto them. Therefore fear thou not, O my ſervant Jacob, for lo, I will ſave thee from afar, and thy ſeed from the land of their captivity, and Jacob ſhall return and be in reſt and quiet, and none ſhall make him afraid. Behold, the Jer. 23.
days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will raiſe unto 5, 7, 8.
David a righteous Branch; in his days Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely: they ſhall no more ſay, the Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt: but the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the ſeed of the houſe of Iſrael out of the North-country, and from all countries whither I had driven them, and they ſhall dwell in their own land. In thoſe days and at that time will I cauſe the branch of Righteouſneſs to grow up unto David; for David ſhall never want a man to ſit upon the throne of the houſe of Iſrael: Neither ſhall the Prieſts and Levites want a man before me, to offer burnt-offerings. Behold, I Jer. 33.
will take the children of Iſrael from among the Hea- 15, 17, 18.
then whither they be gone, and will gather them on Ezek. 37.
every ſide, and bring them into their own land. 21, 24, 25.
And David my ſervant ſhall be King over them; they ſhall have one ſhepherd, and they ſhall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my ſervant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they ſhall dwell therein, even they and their children and their childrens children for ever, and my ſervant David (one of the Houſe of David) ſhall be their Prince for ever. I Ezek. 34.
will ſeek out my ſheep and will deliver them out of 12, 13, 22, all places, where they have been ſcattered in the 23, 29.
cloudy and dark day. And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them into their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Iſrael by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country. I will ſave my flock and they ſhall be no more a prey, and I will judge between the fat cattel and the lean cattel. And will ſet up one ſhepherd over them, and he ſhall feed them, even my ſervant David. I the Lord will be their God, and my ſervant David a Prince

---

(w) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 16. c 37.

(x) Hic eſt mos ſcripturæ ſanctæ, ut futurorum veritatem præmittat in typis, junta illud quod de Domino ſalvatore in ſeptuageſimo primo pſalmo dicitur, qui prænotatur Salomonis, & omnia quæ de eo dicuntur, Salomoni non valent convenire. Nec enim permanſit ille cum ſole, & ante Lunam generationis generationum, neque dominatus eſt à mari uſque ad mare, & à flumine uſque ad terminos orbis terrarum, nec omnes gentes ſervierunt ei, neque ante ſolem permanſit nomen ejus, nec benedictæ ſunt in ipſo omnes tribus terræ, neque omnes gentes magnificaverunt eum. Ex parte autem, & quaſi in umbra & imagine veritatis in Salomone præmiſſa ſunt, ut in Domino ſalvatore perfectius implerentur. S. Hieron. Com. in Dan. 11. 12.

(y) Quia reditus ille ac reſtitutio populi quoddam fuit regni Chriſti præludium, ideo ſemper incipere convenit à tempore illo quoties vaticinantur Prophetæ de nova Eccleſia. Calvin. prælect. in Jer. 3. 17, 18.

among them. I will raiſe up for them a plant of renown, and they ſhall be no more conſumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the ſhame of the heathen any more. I will raiſe up the tabernacle of David Amos 9. 11, 14. Zech. 3. 8. that is fallen, and I will bring again the captivity of my people. Hear now, O Joſhua the high prieſt: behold I will bring forth my ſervant the branch. For behold the ſtone that I have laid before Joſhua: upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes. They Zech. 4. 10. ſhall rejoice and ſee the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with thoſe ſeven, they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth. Zech. 6. 12-15. Behold the man whoſe name is the branch, and he ſhall grow up out of his place, and he ſhall build the temple of the Lord: even he ſhall build the temple of the Lord, and he ſhall bear the glory, and ſhall ſit and rule upon his Throne, and he ſhall be a Prieſt upon his throne, and the counſel of peace ſhall be between them both. And the crowns ſhall be to Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the ſon of Zepheniah, for a memorial in the temple of the Lord. And they that are far off ſhall come and build in the temple of the Lord. If we cannot underſtand plain Engliſh, it is a vanity, to pretend to underſtand Prophecies. If the ſenſe of Language is intelligible, that Branch of the Regial Houſe of David which was Governour of the Jews at the time of their return from their Captivity is ſtiled in the Prophets a Righteous branch, a branch of righteouſneſs raiſed up unto David, my ſervant David, David their King, their Prince and their Shepherd, a plant of renown. In him the fallen Houſe of David was (preludiouſly) raiſed up, and therefore he was a Branch raiſed up unto David. He was the Builder of the ſecond Temple, that like an Architect held in his hand the Plummet or Plumb-line (the Globular part whereof, which was a Stone, had ſeven Eyes engraven upon it;) therefore in the Prophet Zechary he is meant by this Name My Servant The Branch. Accordingly, upon the engraving the ſeven Eyes upon the Globular part of Zerrubbabel's Plumb-line, the Text ſaith, I will remove the iniquity of that Land in one day. In that day ſhall ye call every Man his Neighbour under the Vine and under the Fig-tree. This was done at the time, when God brought forth his Servant The Branch. Zech. 3. 8, 9, 10. Difficulties and Objections are raiſ'd againſt this ſound and ſure Interpretation of Prophecy, but they that make them (againſt plain and expreſs Texts of Scripture) might better imploy themſelves in Salving them: Nor is it any great difficulty to anſwer theſe Objections. That Zorobabel was not a King, nor did his Government continue for ever, nor had the Jews ſuch Peace and Safety under it, as the Prophecies mention, nor did they poſſeſs their Land or enjoy their Sanctuary for ever. For every one knoweth how variouſly this Phraſe for ever is us'd in the Old Teſtament, and theſe words of the Prophecy My Servant David ſhall be their Prince for ever, may relate both to the Type and Antitype. Zorobabel was a King, and the Jews enjoy'd Peace and Safety under his Government in the ſame degree, that he was a Type of the true Branch and David, which was very imperfectly, and in the uſual manner of umbratile Types. (z) Grot. Not. in Deut. 17. 9. & cap. 33. 5. There are ſubordinate Kings (z) and unſubordinate Kings in Reality, that are not Kings in Name. And doubtleſs in reſpect of Kingſhip Zorobabel is a parallel for Moſes, who was not uſually ſtiled King, yet in the ſtile of a Prophetick compoſure he is ſaid to be King in Jeſhurun. With great aſſurance therefore we may pronounce, that the ancient Prophecies in great part ought to be interpreted by a correſpondence between Literal and Myſtical (Type and Antitype) that a conſiderable number of Prophecies relating to the Meſſiah are of this Interpretation, and conſequently have a twofold Completion, and ſome of them have a threefold Completion, as that in Hoſ. 3. 4, 5. The Children of Iſrael ſhall abide many days without a King and without a Prince, and without a Sacrifice, and without an Image, and without an Ephod, and without Teraphim. Afterward ſhall the Children of Iſrael return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their King, and ſhall fear the Lord and his Goodneſs in the latter days. For in ſome degree the Children of Iſrael did ſeek David their King (one of the Houſe of David and a typical David) when they were commix'd with the Jews in their Reſtauration from the Captivity, and had a great inſtance of God's Goodneſs to them in their ſecular Concerns. In ſome degree they did ſeek David their King, when any of them (ſince the times of Chriſtianity) were converted to the Faith of Chriſt. And (according to the Apoſtle's method of interpreting Prophecies) we are yet to expect, that they will be more ſignally and generally converted unto the true David their King.

XIII. Some Perſons that in ſome degree are Hiſtorical Types, are in great part Types, not Hiſtorically, but only Characteriſtically and Deſcriptively, which may be called Characteriſtical Types. For the underſtanding of which let us ſuppoſe the Paſchal Lamb, to have been a Perſon Rational and Prophetical, and that ſpeaking in the Perſon of his Character he thus deſcrib'd his Condition. " I am a perfect unble-
" miſh'd Lamb ſet apart on the Tenth Day of " the Month Niſan, put to a cruentous Death
" on the Fourteenth Day between the two E" venings; I am ſacrific'd, my Fleſh is roſted,
" my Blood is ſprinkled, and I am the Lord's Paſ-
" ſover. They pierce my Hands and my Feet
" (although a Bone of me is not broken) Dogs
" have compaſs'd me, the aſſembly of the wick-
" ed have encloſ'd me, they look and ſtare up-
" on me. All they that ſee me, laugh me to " ſcorn; they ſhoot out the Lip, they ſhake
" the Head ſaying, he truſted on the Lord that
" he would deliver him; let him deliver him,
" if he will have him. They gave me Gall to " eat, and in my thirſt they gave me Vinegar
" to drink. They part my Garments among " them, and caſt lots upon my Veſture. I am a " Worm and no Man, a reproach of Men and
" deſpiſed of the People, and thou haſt brought " me into the Duſt of Death. But thou wilt
" not leave my Soul in Hell; neither wilt thou
" ſuffer thine Holy One to ſee Corruption. If the Paſchal Lamb had made this deſcription of his Condition, there would have been nothing of incongruity in it; for all this he might juſtly have ſaid ſpeaking characteriſtically and in the Perſon of his Character (the Paſcal Lamb:) But in one part of the deſcription he would have ſpoken in the perſon both of the Typical and Antitypical Paſchal Lamb; and in the other part of it he would have ſpoken only in the perſon of the Antitypical Paſchal Lamb. In the matters of the one part of the deſcription he would have been an Hiſtorical Type; and in the matters of the other part of it he would have been only a Characteriſtical Type of the Antitypical Paſchal Lamb. So in ſeveral paſſages of the Book of Pſalms (which have no place in the Hiſtory of the Pſalmiſt) the Typical and Prophetical David is only a Characteriſtical Type of the Antitypical David. The Second Pſalm ſpeaketh of David as a Type of Chriſt; David therein ſpeaketh characteriſtically and in the Perſon of his Character (which is David the Lord's anointed;) in one part of it he is an Hiſtorical Type of Chriſt, ſpeaketh both of the Perſon of the Typical and Antitypical David; but in the other part of it the words are ſpoken of him as a Type of Chriſt only characteriſtically and deſcriptively (a Type under which is exhibited the ſole characteriſm and deſcription of the Antitype) they are meant only of the Antitypical David. So in thoſe Pſalms, Pſal. 45. and 72. which deſcribe the condition of King Solomon as a Type of the Meſſiah, Solomon is in ſome degree an Hiſtorical Type, but in great part he is only a Characteriſtical Type of the Antitypical Son of David. Such a Type of Chriſt he was, as the literal Jeruſalem was of the New and Chriſtian Jeruſalem; for under the Type of the literal Jeruſalem the Prophet Iſaiah maketh a large Prophetick deſcription of the Holineſs and Peace, of the amplitude and glory of the Chriſtian Church, Iſa. 60. In which Prophetick deſcription the literal Jeruſalem is in ſome degree an Hiſtorical, but in great part only a Characteriſtical Type of the New and Chriſtian Jeruſalem. Such a Type of Chriſt is Zorobabel in the Prophecies, and ſuch a Type of Chriſt is the Prophet Iſaiah ch. 49. where he ſpeaketh of himſelf characteriſtically and in the Perſon of his Character (which is the Evangelical Prophet) and in the deſcription of his Condition he is in part an Hiſtorical Type (and ſo far ſpeaketh both in the Perſon of the Type and the Antitype) but in great part he is only a Characteriſtical Type of the great Evangelical Prophet, and ſo far ſpeaketh only in the Perſon of the Antitype. Liſten, O Iſles, unto me, and hearken ye People from far, the Lord hath called me from the Womb, from the Bowels of my Mother hath he made mention of my Name. And he hath made my Mouth like a ſharp Sword, in the ſhadow of his Hand hath he hid me, and made me a poliſh'd Shaft, in his Quiver hath he hid me. And ſaid unto me, thou art my Servant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified. Then I ſaid, I have laboured in vain, I have ſpent my ſtrength for nought and in vain, yet ſurely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God. And now, ſaith the Lord, that formed me from the Womb, to be his Servant to bring Jacob again to him, tho' Iſrael be not gathered, yet ſhall I be glorious in the Eyes of the Lord, and my God ſhall be my ſtrength. And he ſaid, it is a light thing, that thou ſhouldeſt be my Servant to raiſe up the Tribes of Jacob, and to reſtore the preſerved of Iſrael: I will alſo give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayeſt be my Salvation unto the end of the Earth. Thus ſaith the Lord the Redeemer of Iſrael, and his Holy One, to him whom Man deſpiſeth, to him whom the Nation abhorreth, to a Servant of Rulers, Kings ſhall ſee and ariſe, Princes alſo ſhall worſhip. In the Forty ſecond Chapter of this Prophet throughout the whole of it and the whole Contexture of the Prophecy there is not any Indication of a prefigurative Type of the Meſſiah; conſider'd therefore ſingly and alone it would be reaſonable, to affirm, that there is not in it any ſuch prefigurative Type. But becauſe it is of the very ſame Nature and Compoſure with this other (in the Forty ninth Chapter) it is reaſonable, to ſuppoſe, that there is the ſame prefigurative Type in it, not meerly Hiſtorical, but Characteriſtical. Behold my Servant whom I uphold, mine Elect in whom my Soul delighteth. I have put my Spirit upon him, he ſhall bring forth Judgment to the Gentiles. He ſhall not cry nor lift up, nor cauſe his voice to be heard in the Streets. A bruiſed Reed ſhall be not break: and the ſmoking Flax ſhall be not quench: he ſhall bring forth Judgment unto truth. He ſhall not fail, nor be diſcourag'd, till he have ſet Judgment in the Earth: and the Iſles ſhall wait for his Law. It would be reaſonable alſo, to ſuppoſe, that Hezekiah (a Branch of the Regial Houſe of David) is in ſome eminent Prophecies of this Evangelical Prophet ſuch a Type, as Zorobabel is in other Prophecies, if this great Objection did not lie againſt it; that Hezekiah was Nine or Ten Years Old, when his Father Ahaz began to Reign, and conſequently was born a conſiderable time before theſe Prophecies. Iſa. 9. 6, 7. For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the Government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder: and his Name ſhall be called Wonderful, Counſellor, The mighty God, The everlaſting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increaſe of his Government and Peace there ſhall be no end, upon the Throne of David and upon his Kingdom to order it, and to eſtabliſh it with Judgment and Juſtice from henceforth even for ever: the Zeal of the Lord of Hoſts will perform this. Iſa. 11. 1. And there ſhall come forth a Rod out of the Stem of Jeſſe, and a Branch ſhall grow out of his Roots. And the Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, the Spirit of Wiſdom and Underſtanding, the Spirit of Counſel and Might, the Spirit of Knowledge and of the Fear of the Lord. The Wolf alſo ſhall dwell with the Lamb. As Hezekiah's age and time of Life agreeth not to theſe Predictions, ſo the ſublime Attributes of the Perſon predicted in one of them ſeem not applicable to any meer Child of Man. But on the other hand it muſt be conſider'd; that theſe Predictions were utter'd upon occaſion of the King of Aſſyria's afflicting the Jews and their deliverance from him; that this is a Subject of his Prophecy in his Eighth, Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh Chapters; that the Coherence and Contexture of his Prophecy is quite ſpoiled and the ſenſe of it is utterly unintelligible, unleſs we ſuppoſe, that in theſe Predictions Hezekiah is comprized as a preludious Type of the Meſſiah. It ſeemeth therefore but reaſonable and neceſſary, to ſuppoſe theſe Predictions to compriſe both that which is in part and that which is perfect. The ſublime honourary Attributes that are in them, are in part competible to Hezekiah. And notwithſtanding his age and time of Life, yet (being but a Child) it may be truly and congruouſly predicted of him, that in part he ſhall come forth of the Stem of Jeſſe, and ſhall grow out of his Roots. And as being ſuch an one it may be ſaid of him Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given.

XIV. The Ceremonial Types (famouſly known) belong to the Moſaic Ceremonial Law, which the Hebrew Doctors ſuppoſe, to conſiſt of Symbols; for one of them ſaith (a) All things in the Law, the Prophets and the Hagiographa רומזים אל החכמה have reſpect to a recondite Wiſdom. Abarbinel ſaith (b) the Tabernacle and the other things were principally intended to be כספר חכמה עליונה as a Book of higher Wiſdom. And another Hebrew Doctor ſaith, The Tabernacle and its Veſſels now they are deſtroy'd, bring this utility to a pious Man, he embraceth that which they indicate והחכמה הרמוזה בהם and the Wiſdom intended tended in them. R. Alſchech affirmeth, that the Temple of the Meſſiah will be Spiritual; which is an acknowledgment, that the Inſtitutes of the Moſaic Ceremonial Law are not only Symbols, but Types. They were Symbols of things Celeſtial, Shadows, Examples and Patterns of Heaven and heavenly things, as the Apoſtle ſtileth them. They were Hiſtorical and Commemorative Symbols; for the Egyptian Servitude and the Iſraelites Liberation from thence, and their wandring in the Wilderneſs were ſymbolically repreſented and commemorated in their Feaſt of Paſſover and of Tabernacles. Many of their Inſtitutes were Ethical kind of Symbols and of moral ſignification; for ſuch were their Circumciſion, their Waſhings, their Incenſe and Salt, their diſcarding Leaven, their offering unblemiſh'd Sacrifices, their abſtinence from unclean Animals, their pollution by the Dead. (c) A dead Body in the Moſaic Inſtitution is a Symbol of the bodily cadaverous kind of things, from which they muſt be more eſpecially withdrawn, that are eſpecially devoted to God and his Service, and which are to all that are not duely alienated from them, a deadly defilement.

(a) Dr. Caſtel. Ep Lex. Heptaglott. Præmiſ. Huet. Dem. Ev. pr. 7. S. 1.

(l) L'Emper. Not. in Jacch ad. p. 1[illegible]. & Cod. Mid. p. 132, 133.

But the Moſaic Ritual Inſtitutes were not only Symbols, (d) they were Types alſo (Symbols inſtituted and intended by God, to prefigure things to come) as the Apoſtle ſtileth them σκιὰ τῶν μελλόντων, a ſhadow of things to come, Col. 2. 17. If he had meerly ſtiled them a Shadow, his meaning might have been, as a late Learned Writer will have it, (e) not that they had the relation of a Type to things to come, but that they were only umbratile evanid Inſtitutes compar'd with things to come. But ſeeing the Apoſtle ſtileth the Judaical Inſtitutes (for of thoſe he ſpeaketh) a ſhadow of things to come, he manifeſtly attributeth to them the Nature and definitive Notion of a Type, and withall diſparageth them as umbratile and evanid compar'd with the things to come. They ſtood only in Meats and Drinks and divers Waſhings and carnal Ordinances, Heb. 9. 10. The Law having a ſhadow of good things to come, and not the very Image of the things (the things themſelves in their likeneſs) Heb. 10. 1. When the Apoſtle ſaith, The Law had a ſhadow of good things to come, his words are certainly of this meaning, that the Judaical Inſtitutes were Types; therefore his words are of the ſame meaning, when he ſaith of the ſame things the ſame words, They were a ſhadow of things to come. (f) The Apoſtle (ſaith Origen) in few words ſheweth the meaning of the whole (Ceremonial) Law, when he ſaith, Let no Man judge you in Meat or in Drink, or in reſpect of an Holy Day, or of the New Mooon, or of the Sabbath Days: which are a ſhadow of things to come. The Ceremonial Law therefore muſt be conſider'd as introductory to the Chriſtian Religion, and a typical Inſtitution thereto: but it muſt be conſider'd alſo as remedying of Idolatry, which is one of the great Ends of this Ritual Law; and ſome ſay, (g) it is finis primarius (the primary end of it) and that the adumbrating and typifying the Chriſtian Religion is but the ſecondary end of it, and that the Moſaic Evangelical Types were inſtituted only obiter & ex intentione quâdam ſecundariâ, by the by and from a certain ſecondary intendment. Which is an Hypotheſis that tendeth to make as foul work with the Ceremonial Law, as ſome have made with the Prophecies, and cannot rationally be entertain'd by any but a Jew, who preferreth Judaiſm before Chriſtianity. For the meer remedying groſs Heathen Idolatry, amounteth to nothing more than Literal Judaiſm, which cannot be the primary end of God in the Moſaic Inſtitution. As the Ceremonial Law was remedying of Idolatry, it was but Civil-religious and ſalutary to the Secular Eſtate: but as it was introductory to the Chriſtian Religion, it was Spiritual-religious and ſaving to the Souls of Men. Ritual Judaiſm was initially introduc'd from the beginning of the World, not primarily for its own ſake, nor as remedying of groſs Idolatry, but chiefly for the ſake of the Chriſtian Religion; therefore Ritual Judaiſm plenarily introduc'd (or the Moſaic Ceremonial Law) was primarily inſtituted for the ſake of the Chriſtian Religion. All Chriſtians look upon the Inſtitutes of Judaiſm as ſubſerving the Chriſtian Religion. (h) For the legal worſhip by Figures and Types is of a ſervient condition to the Evangelical Doctrines, ſhewing in it ſelf an obſcure pulchritude of truth. In this reſpect (as in other) the Law was to the Jews a pedagogue unto Chriſt (Gal. 3. 24.) who was the End of it in more Senſes than one (Rom. 10. 4.) a far greater End, and an End which God deſign'd (from Eternal Ages) at a far higher rate than the meer remedying groſs Idolatry. The principal End of the Ritual Law and the Prophets is the ſame, and they are of like (general) nature. (i) Omnia illa præcepta carnali populo impoſita futuram diſciplinam ſpiritalis populi prophetabant. All thoſe Precepts impos'd upon a Carnal People were Prophetical of the future Diſcipline of a Spiritual People. The Ceremonial Law was a Prophecy of the Chriſtian Religion; and as the Miniſtry of the Prophets and their Predictions were for various Ends, but their chief End was the Meſſiah: So the Ceremonial Law was for other Ends, but the chief and primary End of it was the Chriſtian Religion, which far tranſcendeth all other Ends imaginable. For it was in order to the introducing the Chriſtian Religion, that the carnal Seed of Abraham was choſen to be God's People; and were inſtituted into a literal and typical Iſrael; old Iſrael (the Judaical Commonwealth and Religion) were not primarily inſtituted for their own ſake, but with reſpect to the Meſſiah, the Chriſtian Church and Religion. The Moſaic Ritual Inſtitutes therefore refer to the Chriſtian Religion, not only as they were typical Inſtitutes, but as they were Remedies againſt Idolatry. For as ſuch they were ſubordinate and ſubſervient to the weal of the Iſraelitical Polity, which Polity was inſtituted in ſubordination and ſubſerviency to the deſign of introducing the Chriſtian Religion. Let us conſider them as Inſtitutes of the Jewiſh Church, and the End of them ſo conſider'd was, that God and his People might live in Society for the Ends of Society: But this Society was typical, the Jews holy Commonwealth was a grand Type of the Chriſtian Church and Religion, was deſign'd for the Introduction of it, and conſequently it was not of primary Intention and Deſign, nor were the Inſtitutes intended for the common good of it (as ſuch) of primary Intention and Deſign, but mediately and remotely at leaſt they were ſubordinate to the Introduction of Chriſtianity. So the Moſaic

(c) Lex tum pontifici maximo, tum Nazaræo præſcripta erat, nè quantumvis proximorum exequiis intereſſent. Nam corpus animi caſſum ut Philo explicat ſignificat res eas omnes quæ corporales ſunt, & ad animum nihil pertinent. Ab harum rerum cura abſtrahere ſe debent, qui Deo inſerviunt. Grot. Not. in Matth. 8. 22.

(d) V. Outram de Sacrif. c. l. 1. c. 18.

(e) Spencer de Leg. Hebr. l. 1. c. 11. S. 2.

(f) Origen. Philocal. p. 10.

(g) Dr. Spencer. ſupr. S. 4.

(h) Ἡ γὰρ διὰ νόμου λατρεία, διὰ σχημάτων οὖσα καὶ τύπων δουλεύει τρόπον τινὰ τοῖς Εὐαγγελικοῖς παιδεύμασιν, ἀμυδρὸν τῆς ἀληθείας τὸ κάλλος ἐφ' ἑαυτῇ δεικνῦσα. S. Cyr. Glaphyr. in Gen. l. 3. p. 79.

(i) S. Aug. c. Adimant. c. 15.

Judicial Law was ſubordinate to the Introduction of the Chriſtian Religion; and if it had been typical of the matters of Chriſtianity, it would have been both remotely and proximately ſubordinated to the Introduction of the Chriſtian Religion; remotely as being an Inſtitution ſubordinate to the weal publick (which was ſubordinate to the deſign of introducing Chriſtianity;) and proximately, as being typical and adumbrative of the matters of the Chriſtian Religion. And this muſt have been the primary end of the Judicial Law (to introduce Chriſtianity, as a typical Inſtitution thereunto) becauſe the Introduction of Chriſtianity is the primary and general End of the Iſraelitical Polity, and a more primary End than the civil publick weal, which is ſubordinate to the Introduction of Chriſtianity. The ſame judgment muſt be made touching the primary End of the Moſaic Ceremonial Law; for it was neceſſary, that the Carnal Seed of Abraham ſhould have a Religion conſiſting of abundance of Ceremonies remedying of Idolatry, but this was in order to the making them a Literal Iſrael; and the making them a Literal Iſrael was ſubordinate to the deſign of introducing the Chriſtian Religion, which was the primary and general deſign of God in the inſtitution of the Hebrew Commonwealth and Religion, a more primary and principal deſign than the meer making a Literal Iſrael by remedies againſt Idolatry. Therefore the Inſtitution of ſuch Ceremonies as were typical of the Chriſtian Religion, was a Branch of the primary deſign of God.

Agreeably whereto the Schools ſay, (k) Caeremonialia eſſe figuralia primò & perſe, quia ſunt principaliter inſtituta ad aliquid praeſignandum: which Maxim of the Schools is not nicely to be extended to all the little Ceremonials (many of which were not prefigurative Types:) but the Ceremonial Law in the main of it was typical. For the main of the Jews inſtituted Religion conſiſted in Sacrifice, their Sacred Perſons, Places, Times, and many of their Sacred Ritualities, were chiefly inſtituted for Sacrifice, of which there were ſeveral kinds, (l) but all of them are juſtly reputed Types of Chriſt's Sacrifice. Some of them were more eſpecially and eminently ſuch, (m) as the Paſchal Lamb (the Iſraelites Paſſover) the Red Heifer, all thoſe ſacrific'd Animals whoſe Bodies were burnt without the Camp and their Blood was brought into the Sanctuary by the High Prieſt for Sin, Heb. 9. 7, 8. Into the ſecond Tabernacle went the High Prieſt alone once every Year not without Blood, which he offered for himſelf and for the Errors of the People. The Holy Ghoſt this ſignifying, that the way into the Holieſt of all was not yet made manifeſt, while as the firſt Tabernacle was yet ſtanding, v. 9, 10, 11. The Apoſtle goeth on making a compariſon between the Jews High Prieſt and our High Prieſt; between the Blood of Bulls and Goats that were ſlain on the Day of Expiation, and the Blood of Chriſt; between the Earthly Holy of Holies and the Heavenly; and the High Prieſts entring into the Earthly Holy of Holies with the Blood of his Sacrifices, this he compareth with our Saviour's entring into Heaven by his own Blood, thoſe legal things being Types and Adumbrations of the Evangelical. The Aaronical High Prieſt with his ſumptuous Veſtments (rich beyond all Parallel) his Oracle of Urim, his peculiar office of making Expiation, his ſole entring into the moſt Holy Place with the Blood of his Sacrifices, his ſprinkling it and burning Incenſe there, and his preſenting himſelf before God, was a marvellous expreſs and lively typical reſemblance of our Immortal High Prieſt and of his Sacrifice. So was the Scape-goat and the Propitiatory (or Mercy-ſeat) the Tabernacle (or Temple) was both a Type of the Chriſtian Church and of the Godhead tabernacling in our Fleſh in the Perſon of the Meſſiah. The Jews Circumciſion was (not only a Symbol, but) a Type of the Chriſtian Regeneration; the purgation of a Leprous Perſon typify'd the Chriſtian Expiation of Sin; and the Ritual Sanctity and Ritual Religious Worſhip of the Moſaic Inſtitution was a Type of that real Sanctity and real Religious Worſhip which is in the Chriſtian Inſtitution. (n) Interpretatur Apoſtolus Sabbatum ad Hebraeos, cùm dicit, Remanet igitur Sabbatiſmus populo Dei. As the Writers of the New Teſtament interpret the Jewiſh Sabbath by the Chriſtian Reſt which it typify'd; ſo they interpret Incenſe by the Prayers of Saints, Apoc. 5. 8. the Jewiſh Sacrifices by Spiritual Sacrifices, by the Sacrifice of our Bodies, by good Works, and by the Fruit of our Lips, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Rom. 12. 1. Heb. 13. 15, 16. and in like manner they interpret the Jewiſh Prieſts, when they ſtyle Chriſtians an Holy Prieſthood, 1 Pet. 2. 5. Agreeably to which Interpretation of the Ceremonial Law the Prophecies of the Meſſiah muſt be interpreted; for they are complicated with theſe Ceremonial Types, Mal. 3. 3, 4. He ſhall ſit as a refiner and purifier of Silver: and he ſhall purifie the Sons of Levi, and purge them as Gold and Silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an Offering in Righteouſneſs. Then ſhall the Offering of Judah and Jeruſalem be pleaſant unto the Lord, as in the Days of Old. Mal. 1. 11. From the riſing of the Sun even unto the going down of the ſame my Name ſhall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place Incenſe ſhall be offered unto my Name and a pure Offering. Iſa. 19. 19, 21. In that Day there ſhall be an Altar to the Lord in the midſt of the Land of Egypt, and a Pillar at the Border thereof to the Lord. And the Lord ſhall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians ſhall know the Lord in that Day, and ſhall do Sacrifice and Oblation. Chriſtians that miniſter the Divine Service, are in ancient Prophecy ſignify'd by the Sons of Levi; Incenſe and a pure Meat-offering, Sacrifice and Oblation (wherein the Judaical Worſhip conſiſted) denote the Chriſtians Religious Worſhip, but under a Veil of the Moſaic Inſtitution, which was a Type of it, as Noah's Water typify'd the Chriſtian Baptiſm. So the Iſraelites being baptiz'd in the Cloud and in the Sea unto Moſes conducting them out of the literal Egypt through the Wilderneſs into the literal Canaan, was a Type of our being baptized into Chriſt conducting us out of the Spiritual Egypt through the Wilderneſs of this inhoſpitable World into the Heavenly Canaan. And the drowning the Egyptians in the Sea typify'd the drowning our Sins in Baptiſm. (o) There the Egyptians were ſuffocated, here the old Man of Sins is buried. 1 Cor. 10. 2, 3.

CHAP.

(k) Aquin. ap. Suarez. de Leg. l. 9. c. 3. n. 10.

(l) Outram. de Sacrif. l. 1. c. 18.

(m) Bochar. de Animal. par. 1. l 2. c. 50. Huet. Dem. Ev. pr. 9. p. 136. & 170.

(n) S. Aug. c. Adimant. c. 16.

(o) Ἐκεῖ Αἰγύπτιοι ἀπεπνίγοντο, ἐνταῦθα δὲ ὁ παλαιὸς ἄνθρωπος τῶν ἁμαρτημάτων κατορύττεται. S. Chryſ. T. 5. λόγ. ν. p. 348.

CHAP. V.

1. Of the Chriſtian Religion as it is the new Settlement of Saving Grace. Of ſeveral Settlements, a Teſtament, a Covenant and a Law. 2. Of a Teſtament. 3. Of a Covenant. 4. Of a Law. How honourary theſe Names are. 5. Of the Covenant as the Foundation of God. 6. Of the excellency of Chriſtianity as a preceptive Law. 7. Of Antiquity and Newneſs. 8. Of Chriſt's Seniority to Abraham. 9. Of Newneſs as a principal Attribute of the Chriſtian Religion and why it is called New. 10. Of a Chriſtian Religioniſt as a new Covenanter. 11. Of the many differences between the new Settlement of Religion and the old Settlement of the Law-religion. 12. Of Regeneration in Judaiſm, Paganiſm and Profane Authors. 13. Of Regeneration real and as to State and Condition. 14. Of the entrance into Chriſtianity. 15. Of the Chriſtian Method of bringing Men to good Life. 16. Chriſtianity deſigneth a change of Man's Nature. 17. Of the Life of Grace as it is a Nature. 18. Of the Life of Grace as it is The Divine Nature.

I. TO make a due Illuſtration of the Chriſtian Religion it muſt be conſider'd under four definitive Names and Notions (which it hath in the Holy Scriptures) The new Settlement of Saving Grace, The new Kingdom of God, The great Myſtery of Godlineſs, The new Creation. We have conſider'd this Religion, as it was provided and promis'd in the Old Teſtament-times: But as it was properly made into a Settlement of Saving Grace, it belongeth to the conſideration of the New Teſtament-times, and commenc'd from the making the New Teſtament, by which Name our Religion is commonly called and the Books alſo that contain it. For ſo we (following the Latin Chriſtians) tranſlate the Greek Name of our Religion ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη, Novum Teſtamentum (the New Teſtament:) but the Greek Name is beſt render'd The new Settlement. For διαθήκη properly ſignifieth a Diſpoſal, an Ordination, a Conſtitution, a Settlement of things. And ſo doth the Hebrew word ברית which anſwereth to it; for it is deriv'd from ברא which ſignifieth, to make, ordain or conſtitute. The Chriſtian Religion therefore, which in the ſpecial nature of it is Saving Grace, in the general nature of it is a Settlement of things that God hath made. And ſuch a Settlement it is, that hath the Name and Nature of a Teſtament, a Covenant and a Law; which ſeveral ſorts of Settlements the Name of our Religion, (p) Διαθήκη ſignifieth. It ſignifieth a Teſtament, and accordingly the Chriſtian Religion is ſometimes called a Teſtament. For the Greek word which the Apoſtle uſeth, may not be otherwiſe render'd, Heb. 9. 16. Where a Teſtament is, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death of the Teſtator. Sometimes the Greek Name of the Chriſtian Religion muſt be render'd (not a Teſtament, but) a Covenant. For ſo it neceſſarily ſignifieth, when the Apoſtle oppoſeth it to that which the Iſraelites brake (for it is not proper to ſpeak of breaking a Teſtament;) the Iſraelites brake the old Covenant, and conſequently the Chriſtian Religion, which ſtandeth oppos'd thereto, muſt be called The new Covenant, as our Tranſlation ſtileth it, Heb. 8. 8, 10, 13. And becauſe the Chriſtian Religion is a ſettlement of things, that is, of authoritative Obligation and alſo a ſettlement of Rights and Dues, it is neceſſarily a Law, The Law of Chriſt, The Law of Faith, The Law of Liberty, The Law of the one Lawgiver, The Law of the Spirit of Life, Gal. 6.2. Rom. 3.27. and 8.2. Jam. 2. 12. and 4.12. Theſe ſeveral ſorts of Settlements, although they have their proper diſtinctions from each other, yet all of them agree in one general Nature (they are all Settlements) and in other reſpects they are of ſo great affinity, that it is not ſtrange, that they are all called by one common Name (διαθήκη) or that one Settlement (the Chriſtian Religion) hath the Name and Nature of them all. For a Law and a Teſtament are of ſuch affinity, that the Civilians ſay, Voluntas Teſtatoris pro lege habetur, The Will of the Teſtator is accounted as Law; and hence came the uſe of the Latin word legare, to bequeath. A Law and a Covenant are ſo near of kin, that a mutual Covenant is a Law to the Parties contracting, and the terms of a Contract are called the Laws of it, the publick Law in a Commonwealth is call'd by Ariſtotle and Demoſthenes συνθήκη τις, a certain Agreement or Compact of the People, and in a Law the nature of a Covenant is involv'd becauſe it promiſeth a Reward. Laws alſo and publick Leagues and Covenants agree in having Sanction (which is à Sanguine) for publick Leagues and Covenants had anciently a Sanction by the Blood of a Sacrifice, and Laws have their Sanction from the penal part of them, which conſecrateth the Blood of the Tranſgreſſor to the Law. Teſtaments alſo ſo far agree with Laws and public Covenants, they have an eſtabliſhment by the death of the Teſtator. But the principal thing remarkable touching theſe ſeveral ſorts of Settlements is their creating Rights and Dues, Claims and Titles. All of them are Settlements of Rights and Dues. For Rights and Dues accrew to a Legatary by a Teſtament, to a Covenantee by a Covenant, and by the Law of every Polity the Rights and Dues of Men are ſettled and determin'd.

II. A Teſtament and an Heir are of like Explication. For in the ſtrict Notion of the Law-courts an Heir is one (q) that hath right to ſucceed in the room of a perſon deceas'd (whence they ſay, nemo eſt hæres viventis) and by Inheritance they underſtand the Patrimony or whole Rights of a Perſon deceas'd together with the Right of ſucceeding thereto. At which rate of defining things neither Chriſt nor Chriſtians can be the Heirs of God, nor can they have any Inheritance from him of right thereunto. Nor can God make a Teſtament, if nothing can be a Teſtament, (r) but (in the Civilians Notion) ſuch a diſpoſal of things as one will have to be valid after his death, whence it is commonly called (as Quintilian defineth it) the Will of the Dead. In which ſtrict Law-ſenſe the Old Teſtament could not be a Teſtament (for God could not die, yet a Teſtament it was, and muſt be ſo called in a large popular ſenſe. For if one will be a great Benefactor to others, and as ſuch doth make and publiſh an irrevocable Settlement of his Eſtate, giving

(p) Grot. Proleg. in Evang. S. Matth.

(q) Vinn. Com. in Inſtit. l. 2. Tit. 2. Corvin. de Verb ſignif. Lex. 24.

(r) Vinn. ibid. Tit. 10.

giving them the right of Heirs, beſtowing on them the right of Inheritance, and deviſing his Goods to them, which they muſt receive after a certain time; by ſo doing (although he dieth not) he maketh his Will and Teſtament. This Act and Deed of his is his Settlement, ſo as to be his Teſtament; for although Legacies belong not to the Eſſence of a Teſtament, yet the giving to others the right of Heirs and of Inheritance; is ſo much the Eſſence of a Teſtament, that a Teſtament is defin'd by ſome Civilians (s) hæredis inſtitutio, the inſtituting an Heir. When therefore God made a diſpoſal of his Eſtate to Abraham and his Seed, making them the Heirs of God, Gen. 15. 18. Rom. 4. 13. when he made this diſpoſal of it irrevocable (certain Beaſts and Birds being ſlain, and the Beaſts being divided in the midſt, and the Pieces laid one againſt another, a burning Lamp paſſed between the Pieces, Gen. 15.) this ſolemn Act and Deed of God was a making and confirming his Abrahamical Teſtament. To this Teſtament complicated with the Moſaical the Apoſtle alloweth the Name of a Teſtament; for he calleth it The firſt Teſtament, Heb. 9. 18. It cannot be his meaning therefore, that in every Teſtament, V. 16. in any acceptation ſuch, there muſt of neceſſity be the Death of the Teſtator: but that where a Teſtament is ſimply ſo called and without limitation of Senſe, there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the Death of the Teſtator. And this is ſo requiſite in Teſtaments, that even the firſt Teſtament (which was but a Teſtament with limitation of Senſe) was not dedicated without Blood, without ſomething of Death and of Blood. Teſtaments therefore (according to this Apoſtle) in this agree with Covenants and with Laws, they are made and eſtabliſh'd by Death and by Blood, and this he diſcourſeth, to ſhew the neceſſity of Chriſt's death for making and eſtabliſhing the New Teſtament. For this cauſe he was the Mediator of it, that by means of death (for the making the Teſtament) they which are called might receive the pro- V. 15. miſe of Eternal Inheritance. Chriſt in the New Teſtament is not of the Party of the Legataries, but of the Teſtator-party, Luk. 22. 29. But this is not the Apoſtle's buſineſs, to ſhew, that in making and confirming the New Teſtament there muſt be a Death of the Teſtator (which is a general miſtake:) but his buſineſs is, to ſhew, that Chriſt as Mediator by means of death made and confirm'd the Teſtament, and this was neceſſary, becauſe a Teſtament muſt be made and confirm'd by Death and by Blood. Whereupon neither the firſt Teſtament was dedicated without Blood. A Teſtament is a noble deed of Settlement, becauſe it inſtituteth Heirs. The Chriſtian Settlement muſt be of this noble Nature, that they which are called might receive the promiſe of Eternal Inheritance. It muſt be made therefore and confirm'd by means of Death. If by the death of the Teſtator (as Humane Teſtaments are) it is a Teſtament ſimply ſo called: If otherwiſe, it is a Teſtament that is ſuch with limitation of Senſe. But it may be and is a mixture and complication of both theſe ſorts of Teſtaments. For in good degree it is made and confirm'd by the death of the Teſtator (it is Chriſt's Teſtament) and in part it is a Teſtament, that is only ſuch with limitation of Senſe; for it is God's Teſtament, who cannot die in his own perſon. Yet there is great analogy between this Divine Teſtament and Humane Teſtaments: For the Goſpel is teſtatio mentis, whence (as Juſtinian ſaith) a Teſtament hath its Name. And it is ſufficiently teſtify'd, to be the Will of God by the moſt creditable Witneſſes that ever were, as Humane Teſtaments (according to the Civil Law) 1 Joh. 5. 8. Apoc. 3. 14. muſt be witneſs'd by divers well-qualify'd and teſtable perſons. And as Humane Wills and Teſtaments are confirm'd by Death, and in ſome ſort made by it (for they are made irrevocable and made the Will of the Dead by it:) So this Divine Teſtament was made and confirm'd by the Death of Chriſt, who is the Lord the Son, and in this Divine Teſtament is Hæres ex aſſe, Heir of the whole Patrimony or Inheritance (which he is to diſtribute to the younger Children) and is Executor of this Divine Teſtament, who is to ſee, that all the Legacies therein bequeath'd be diſcharg'd, and the Goods deviſ'd muſt be receiv'd from his Hands. But Chriſt's Believers are inſtituted alſo by this Teſtament, to be the Sons and Heirs of God (having right to poſſeſs their Father's Eſtate) and they are the Legataries, to whom all the ineſtimable ſaving Benefits of the Goſpel are bequeath'd (God maketh to them a Grant and Donation of them) and here is no place for a Querela inoſſicioſi Teſtamenti, complaint of an inoſticious Teſtament, wherein there is unjuſt Partiality. Humane Teſtamens are regiſtred and enrolled (for which purpoſe there are publick Scribes and Notaries:) So this Divine Teſtament is now regiſtred and enrolled in Scripture (by Divine Scribes) but for ſome time it was like a nuncupative Will and Teſtament.

(s) Calvin. Lex. in voce Teſtamentum. Vinn. ſupr.

III. The Covenant of God ſometimes ſignifieth meerly his promiſſory Settlement of things, and ſometimes ſuch a promiſſory Settlement of things, which is in the nature of it a mutual Covenant. His meerly promiſſory Settlement of Day and Night, of not drowning the World any more, of the Affairs of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, of the Houſe of David, of Phinehas's everlaſting Prieſthood, is called his Covenant, and ſo are his ancient Promiſes concerning the Meſſiah. Jer. 33. 20. Gen. 9. 9. Exod. 2. 24. Pſal. 89. 28. Numb. 25. 12, 13. Luk. 1. 72. Act. 3. 25. Gal. 3. 15, 17. In theſe Promiſes God took upon himſelf an Obligation or binding Ingagement to others, whence they are called his Covenant, and ſo the word Covenant muſt be interpreted his promiſſory Settlement, 2 Chron. 13. 5. Ought ye not to know, that the Lord God of Iſrael gave the Kingdom over Iſrael to David for ever, even to him and to his Sons by a Covenant of Salt? Numb. 18. 19. All the Heave-offerings of the holy things, which the Children of Iſrael offer unto the Lord, have I given thee (Aaron) and thy Sons and thy Daughters with thee, by a Statute for ever: it is a Covenant of Salt for ever. A Statute, Appointment, Conſtitution or Settlement of things which was of a promiſſory Nature, is called God's Covenant, and his Covenant of Salt, becauſe Salt was uſual in making Covenants and making them firm. So Lev. 24. 8. Aaron is appointed to ſet in order the Shew-bread before the Lord continually by an everlaſting Covenant. Nehem. 13. 29. They have defiled the Prieſthood and the Covenant of the Prieſthood and of the Levites. But God's Covenant in the Senſe of Eminence (both the Moſaic and the Chriſtian) although it may be conſider'd abſtractedly from actual mutual covenanting; yet it cannot be conſider'd abſtractedly from the Precept and Condition, the Duty and Obligation of actual mutual covenanting; for ſo far it is eſſentially a mutual Covenant and Contract between God and Man. His Covenant is the ſame with his Inſtitution of Religion, and is a comprehenſion of Precepts and Penalties as well as of Promiſes; and his Teſtament is not only an Inſtitution of Heirs but of Piety. Such was the Old Teſtament of Moſaic Miniſtery, whoſe Precepts were ingraven in Stones; and ſuch is the New Teſtament of the Apoſtolic Miniſtery, which writeth its Precepts in the Heart. Such was the Covenant from Mount Sinai which gendreth to Bondage; and ſuch is the Covenant from Mount Sion, which ſetteth free from the Servitude of Sin. Both theſe Covenants are a Conſtitution and Settlement of things of God's making and ordaining. And as the Moſaic Covenant is a Settlement of the Benefit-part of the Covenant upon the Iſraelites upon Condition of their performing the Duty-part of it: So the Chriſtian Covenant is upon Condition of performing the Duty-part of it, a Settlement of the Benefit-part of it upon all Mankind. The Preachers of Chriſtianity tender unto Mankind the Chriſtian Covenant with all the ineſtimable Benefits of it and the infinite Obligations that are upon them, to enter into it and live accordingly, and manage a Treaty with them, to bring them into the Bond of this Covenant, as Moſes managed a Treaty with the Iſraelites, to bring them into the Bond of his Covenant, Deut. 29. 12, 13. Act. 2. 38. and Ch. 22. 16. 2 Cor. 5. 19, 20. As God taketh a binding Ingagement upon himſelf, to be unto them a God: So he requireth, that they take a binding Ingagement upon themſelves, to be unto him a People, Iſa. 44. 5. Hoſ. 2. 23. Zech. 13. 9. Pſal. 119. 106. 2 Cor. 8. 5. and 11. 2. Gal. 3. 27. Col. 3. 9, 10. Their Converſion to Chriſtianity and their becoming God's People conſiſteth in becoming his mutual Covenanters and Confederates, Ezek. 16. 8. So Prince and People Confederate with each other, and by becoming the Men of his Confederacy they become his Liege-people. Obad. 7. Deut. 26. 17, 18. Ezek. 16. 8.

IV. The Law is a Name that properly belongeth to the Settlement of the Law-religion (and denoteth the whole Body of it) the Chriſtian Conſtitution and Settlement of Matters of Religion (conſiſting of Doctrines, Precepts, Promiſes, Conditions, Penalties) is called by the Holy Writers The Goſpel, which they uſually oppoſe to the Law. But as Divinity is oppoſed to Philoſophy, yet is a Philoſophy ſui generis; and the Chriſtian Life is oppos'd to Morality, yet is a Morality ſui generis (Divine Morality:) So the Goſpel which is oppos'd to the Law, is yet a Chriſtian and Goſpel-kind of Law. It is Law, as it is an Inſtitution, which all the World, to whom it is promulg'd, are bound to entertain and obey (ſo far it is Law to the World;) and it is an Inſtitution, Doctrine and Diſcipline, which is Law to our Faith and Practice. Such a Law of Doctrine, Diſcipline and Inſtitution the Hebrew word תורה properly ſignifieth, and ſuch a Law the Prophets mean, when they call the Evangelical Doctrine Law. Iſa. 2. 3. Mic. 4. 2. Out of Zion ſhall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jeruſalem. Iſa. 51. 4. A Law ſhall proceed from me, and I will make my Judgment to reſt for a light of the People. Iſa. 42. 4. The Iſles ſhall wait for his Law. His Leſſons are virtually his Laws, his Instructions are his Edicts (who is Lord of our Faith and Practice) and his teachings are his Commands. But the Prophets alſo repreſent him as a Sovereign Lord and Law-giver (reigning over the Houſe of Jacob, having the Government upon his Shoulder) exerciſing his Legiſlative Authority and Power. Iſa. 33. 22. The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King, he will ſave us. If Chriſt is our Sovereign Lord and King, Maſter and Governour, it is incumbent upon him, to make and publiſh his Laws (Government principally conſiſteth in Legiſlation) it belongeth to him, to give Commandments, to thoſe that are of Right and by Obligation his Subjects and Servants, and upon them it is incumbent, to obey his Laws and keep his Commandments. Religion is matter of Law and Obligation (bounden Duty and Service to God) and ſuch is the Chriſtians Religion. If Duty and Obligation is incumbent upon them, they are under a Law (every Man's Duty is matter of Law to him, and Sin is the Tranſgreſſion of the Law, becauſe it is the violating Duty and Obligation;) if Chriſt hath impoſed Duty upon them, they are neceſſarily under his Law. The Subjects and Citizens of his Kingdom have the Rights and Priviledges of Subjects and Citizens, and are bound to do the Duties of Subjects and Citizens by the Settlement of their Polity, (which ſettleth the Rights and Dues of Men as to Salvation and Damnation, and) which is the Law of it. Without a Settlement of Rights and Dues (what ſhall be due from us and what ſhall be due to us) there can be no Polity, no City of God, nor can Chriſt have a Kingdom without a fundamental Law. The Chriſtian Religion therefore is rightly called by the Jews (t) Lex Chriſtianorum, the Chriſtians Law.

Each one of theſe Names a Teſtament, a Covenant and a Law are alike honourary to the Chriſtian Religion. For as a Teſtament is a noble Settlement, ſo is a Law (the Lawyers ſay, Lex eſt Sanctio Sancta) and ſo is a Covenant. For a Covenant of the People is the Settlement and grand Charter of their Liberty and Immunity; which is ſo eminently the Nature of thoſe Covenants, upon which Polities are founded, that in the Prophets a Covenant of the People, ſignifieth The inſtrument of their Liberty and Immunity. Iſa. 42. 6, 7. I will give thee for a Covenant of the People, for a light to the Gentiles. To open the blind Eyes, to bring out the Priſoners from the Priſon, and them that ſit in darkneſs out of the Priſon-houſe. Ch. 49. 8, 9. I will preſerve thee and give thee for a Covenant of the People, to eſtabliſh the Earth, to cauſe to inherit the deſolate Heritages; that thou mayeſt ſay to the Priſoners go forth; to them that are in darkneſs ſhew your ſelves. But although theſe Names of the Chriſtian Religion are alike Honourary to it, and expreſſive of the Nature of it, yet not without this diverſity of Notion. The Name Teſtament peculiarly repreſenteth the Chriſtian Settlement as a diſpoſal of the Eſtate of God, and (as to Spirituals) of his whole Eſtate. For a Will is a Deed, which giveth away all (all that is deviſable) Men by their Wills and Teſtaments give away their whole Eſtate to their Heirs and Legataries. So by this Divine Settlement Chriſt's Believers have Right and Priviledge to be the Sons and Heirs of God, and to them he giveth and deviſeth his whole Eſtate of Bleſſedneſs, to inherit all things as joint-heirs with Chriſt. Apoc. 21. 7. Rom. 8. 17. The Apoſtle ſaith of God, Eph. 2. 6. He hath raiſed us up together, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus. God in raiſing Chriſt granted unto him the ſtate of Life, and in granting it unto him he gave and granted unto Chriſt's People the ſtate of Life (which they now enjoy in Chriſt) ſo that they were all put into a raiſed Condition together with Chriſt. Which raiſed Condition (the State of Life and Salvation) is the Condition of being Free Citizens of Heaven (of having their Names written there) and of having a right to ſit in the heavenly places. They are therefore ſaid, to ſit in them, becauſe they have jus ad rem, a preſent Right to the future Poſſeſſion of the heavenly Places, and in the ſame Senſe they are ſaid, to have obtained an Inheritance, Eph. 1. 11. They are Heirs by this Divine Settlement, as it is a Teſtament; and as it is a Law and Covenant, it is the Charter of their Rights, Immunities and Priviledges, whereby they are exempted from the deadly Evils, and the Domination of their deadly ghoſtly Enemies. And ſo large is their Charter, that all things are theirs, 1 Cor. 3. 21. All things that are incident to them in this World, are ſo far theirs, as to be ſubſervient to their Welfare.

(t) Buxt. Lex. Talm. Col. 587.

V. In an Inſtitution to the Chriſtian Religion the Covenant muſt be laid as the Foundation (which is of principal Weight and Importance) the Apoſtle therefore with great reaſon calleth it by that Name. 2 Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this Seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the Name of Chriſt, depart from Iniquity. But Learned Men are not agreed touching the meaning of the word, which is here rendred Foundation. For ſome ſay, it cannot ſo ſignifie in this place, becauſe a Seal doth not agree to a Foundation, to which Men do not uſe to affix a Seal. In anſwer whereto ſome ſay, that the word which is rendred a Seal, may be rendred an Inſcription, and that anciently there were Inſcriptions upon Foundation-ſtones (for good Luck ſake) as in our times Sentences are written or ingraven upon Rings. And ſo the Senſe of the Apoſtles words will run thus; The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this Inſcription, the Lord knoweth them that are his. But to this Anſwer ſome reply, that although the word σφραγὶς, which is here rendred a Seal, may ſignifie an Inſcription, yet it only ſignifieth ſuch an Inſcription, which is upon a Seal, and which hath no relation to a Foundation. They are therefore of Opinion, that the word here rendred a Foundation, ought not to be ſo rendred in this place, but that it ought to be rendred a Covenant or Contract, a Bond or Bill Obligatory, whereby two Parties mutually oblige themſelves to each other. So the Hebrew word עיקר ſignifieth amongſt the Rabbins, not only a Root or a Foundation, but an inſtrument of Contract, a Bond or Bill Obligatory. And becauſe the Greek word which is here rendred Foundation, anſwereth to that Hebrew word, therefore they ſuppoſe, the Apoſtle here uſeth it in an anſwereable and agreeable Signification, and that it ought to be rendred, not the Foundation of God, but his Covenant or his Inſtrument of Contract. And this ſignification of the word (as they obſerve) agreeth mighty well with what followeth concerning the Seal affix'd to it, which is very ſuitable to a Contract or mutual Obligation, but not to a Foundation. The Apoſtle mentioneth a Seal, which is uſually affixed to Contracts and Covenants, and in ancient times thoſe Seals had an Inſcription on both ſides agreeable to the Condition of the Perſons contracting: So the Apoſtle mentioneth a Seal, that hath an Inſcription on both ſides agreeable both to God and to us. On God's part it hath this Inſcription, The Lord knoweth them that are his: And on our part of it hath this Inſcription, let every one that nameth the Name of Chriſt, depart from Iniquity. They are of Opinion therefore, that theſe words contain the terms of the Covenant between God and us. Here is God's part of the Covenant, The Lord knoweth them that are his, he will own them and ſave them. And here is that of the Covenant, which is on our part, Let every one that nameth the Name of Chriſt, depart from Iniquity. This Expoſition of the Apoſtle's words is doubtleſs the true meaning of them: But there is no Reaſon why there ſhould be any Diſpute touching the ſignification of the word here rendred Foundation; becauſe both ſignifications of it are hugely agreeable to the meaning of the place, and hugely conſiſtent with each other. They ought not to be ſeparated and oppos'd, but conjoin'd; the Apoſtle's ſenſe includeth and comprehendeth both of them. For his words plainly relate both to a Foundation that ſtandeth ſure, and to a Contract which is ſealed. The one of theſe is the bare ſignification of the word, the other is the thing ſignified (the one is the verbal, the other is the real ſignification) the one is the immediate, the other is the remoter Senſe. If we ask, what the Greek word θεμέλιος, here uſed by the Apoſtle ſignifieth? It muſt be anſwer'd a Foundation, which is not only the ordinary ſignification of it, but it never ſignifieth otherwiſe. Our Tranſlators therefore have rightly rendred the word: But we muſt not content our ſelves with the bare Notion of the word; we muſt inquire, what is the thing or reality, to which the Name and Notion of a Foundation belongeth? And the Anſwer muſt be, It is God's Covenant or Contract, and this the Apoſtle calleth The Foundation of God, for this really is the Foundation of God. So that his Senſe is, The Foundation of the Lord, that is, his Covenant, ſtandeth ſure, having a Seal with an Inſcription upon it. That which is the Foundation of God ſtandeth ſure; the Covenant of God is that which is his Foundation; and this Covenant or Contract hath a Seal affix'd to it with this Inſcription upon it containing the terms of the Covenant on God's part and ours; The Lord knoweth them that are his; and let every one that nameth the Name of Chriſt, depart from Iniquity. This aſſuredly is the Apoſtle's Senſe and the full meaning of his words.

The Covenant of God is the Foundation of all Claims and Titles to the ſaving Goods and Bleſſings, and of all reaſonable and religious Hopes and Expectations; for God doth not adminiſter the Affairs of Religion arbitrariouſly, but agreeably to the Tenour of his Covenant, which is the Settlement of his Soul-Sovereignty and Government, and of the Rights and Dues of Men as to their Soul-intereſts. He is immenſly merciful in making this Divine Settlement of Grace and Mercy, in diſpenſing things according to it, and in bringing Men to perform the Terms and Conditions of it. But it muſt not be ſuppos'd, that he can be mercifully ſaving to the Souls of Men otherwiſe than in his Soul Sovereignty and Government, in this Divine Settlement thereof the Settlement of Saving Grace and Mercy, and according to the Tenour thereof; nor otherwiſe than as the holy kind of Imperial Eſtate of Saving Grace and Mercy, according to his kind of Saving Mercy, according to the Nature of Saving Mercy, according to the Religion and Government of Saving Mercy, and the neceſſary Terms and Conditions thereof. His Saving Mercy is a merciful method of ſaving Men from their Sins: But if Men would be ſaved from the Puniſhment without being ſaved from their Sins, God neither hath nor can have any ſuch Saving Mercy. If Children then Heirs: οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ πάντες ἔςωσάν μοι ἀποκληρονόμοι, (which are Gr. Naz. words in his Laſt Will and Teſtament, but ſpeak the Senſe of God's Will and Teſtament) but let all the reſt be to me no Heirs, but diſinherited Perſons. They that are no Children of God, but (in the main) Aliens and Enemies muſt not hope, to inherit his Eſtate of Bleſſedneſs. For his Covenant is מוסד מוסד fundamentum fundatum, a Foundation ſurely founded, and ſuch is Faith and Hope that is founded upon it: But Hope not founded upon the Covenant of God, but groſly repugnant to the Tenour of it, is fond Credulity, blind Self-deceiving, irreligious Preſumption, diſhoneſt Lying and Impoſture, that will be ruinous in the Iſſue; for they will not ſtrive, to enter in at the ſtrait Gate, that Hope to go to Heaven in the broad Way; nor will they change their Condition, that conceit themſelves in good Eſtate already (u) as Plotinus ſaith, what doth he deſire to receive, who is well already? They may be the Sons of God and Heirs of Salvation, if they will accept ſo Divine a Condition and live accordingly: But carnal Security will not ſecure them, groundleſs hopes of Salvation will not ſave them. (w) Vain Hopes are big, but empty in the iſſue.

VI. The Chriſtian Religion as a Law is, what Heathen Mankind (in general) ardently wiſh'd for, and that which they call (x) ῥοδόκολπον εὐνομίαν, the Conſtitution of good Laws that hath a Roſie-boſom, to which they allot two Siſters Juſtice and Peace. (y) By the Juſtice and Tranquillity of Numa's Government, not only the Roman People were mitigated and became placid, but their melioration of Temper diſpread it ſelf (like a ſanative Air) to the Neighbour-people, and they alſo did διψᾶν τὴν εὐνομίαν, thirſt after a good Conſtitution of Laws. Good Laws and Government are a Branch of the deſire of all Nations, Mankind generally have a Senſe of their Excellency and Neceſſity; the Chriſtian Religion therefore (which is the true εὐνομία, Conſtitution of good Laws) is ſuited to their own Hearts deſire. For as a Law it directeth and obligeth to the Life of Bleſſedneſs, and is a Legiſlative Inſtitution to the Eſtate of Bleſſedneſs and the Inheritance of Bleſſedneſs, which is πρῶτον ὀρεκτὸν, ἔσχατον ὀρεκτῶν, the firſt and laſt of deſirables. The Goſpel is (the word of Salvation) the Legiſlative Will and Word of God touching the way of Salvation, which bringeth Life and Salvation to Men, and is as needful and deſireable as Life and Salvation it ſelf. It is a Legiſlative Inſtitution of their Sanctity, that are natively ungodly Sinners, an Inſtitution of the genuine Saints and Servants of God, of their divine Graces and Virtues, of their holy Duties and good Works, of their Services and their Rewards, of their preſent State of Salvation and their future eternal Salvation. None were more renown'd among the Heathen than their Lawgivers (Numa, Solon, Lycurgus, Zaleucus, Charondas) whoſe Laws were only the Laws of Civil Government and the Rules of Civil Life (which Humane Life cannot be without:) But Chriſt's Religion is the Law of his Soul-ſovereignty and Government, of loyal Affection and dutiful Subjection thereto; the Law of his Service and Society, of his Holy Life and ways, of living ſpiritually and eternally, and of diſpenſing the ſpiritual and eternal Goods and Evils. The knowing and obeying his Law is Chriſtianity and Godlineſs (the Eſſence of it and the whole of it) which is the whole of Man, of his Intereſt and Concern, of his Duty and Virtue, of his true Excellency and Felicity (his Holineſs and Happineſs) which bringeth him all the valuable, needful and deſireable Gains and Advantages, all the true Goods (the Goods which muſt not be loſt) ſuperlative and immenſe. The Law of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs is the true dux vitæ & magiſtra officiorum, (which is Chryſippus's Notion of a Law) it guideth in the perfect way (where there is nothing of Sin and Folly, nor any thing to cauſe Sorrow) in the right and ſtraight, the ſafe and the pure Paths (that ſhine as the Light) and into all amiable and virtuous Living in all Circumſtances and Conditions. It preſcribeth (as to our ſelves) all true excellency of Diſpoſition and Practice, all the beauteous-beneficial Duties and Virtues towards Men, and the moſt eximious Piety towards God, which is μακάρων ὁδός, the way of the bleſſed Livers, as the Oracle calleth Piety. To this Law all the Pſalmiſts Elogies of the Divine Law of right do belong, and that honourary Name which the Jews give to their Law כלי חמדה a Veſſel of Deſires.

VII. The Chriſtian Religion is not only God's Teſtament, his Covenant and his Law, but his New Teſtament, his New Covenant and his New Law. Which hath been (ever ſince the riſe of it) a principal Objection againſt it and a principal Reaſon of that courſe uſage, which it hath met with in the World. For Galerius perſecuted the Chriſtians (z) becauſe they forſook the ancient Religion, the Religion of their own Parents. Suetonius in the Life of Nero ſaith, the Chriſtians were puniſh'd; A ſort of Men of a new and maleficient Superſtition. To this Nero had regard in his Perſecutions, as appeareth from an Inſcription (a) which in Memory of him was found in Spain, wherein he is ſaid to have purg'd the Province of Robbers, and of thoſe that obtruded a new Superſtition upon Mankind. So the Pagans uſually reproach'd Chriſtianity as new Doctrine, Act. 17. 19. a new Superſtition, the new Religion, that was but of Yeſterday, deſtitute of antiquity, and the adverſary to the ancient Religion. (b) You uſually object to us (ſaith Arnobius) that our Religion is novel. So Lucian reproacheth Chriſt as the great Man crucified in Palæſtine who introduc'd the new Religion. S. Paul was counted (c) the inventor of new Laws alien from Nature. (d) The Chriſtians introduce among us (ſaid the Pagans) a new and ſtrange Religion. —— (e) ſeris novellum commenti genus. Although there are ſome that affect innovation (f) and deſpiſe antiquity (like the Epicureans, who boaſted, that they walked in an untrodden Path, and trod not in the Foot-ſteps of the Philoſophers

---

Is. 28. 16.

(u) Ὡς πλωτῖνός φησι· τί ζητήσαι λαβεῖν εὖ ἔχων. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 8. p. 280.

(w) Κενεῶν δ' ἐλπίδων χαῦνον τέλος. Pindar. Nem. Od. 8.

(x) Stob. Ecl. Phyſ. l. 1. c. 9.

(y) Plutarch. in Num.

(z) Euſeb. E. H. l. 8. c. 17.

(a) Ob provinciam latronibus & his qui novam generi humano ſuperſtitionem inculcabant, purgatum.

(b) Nobis objectare conſueſtis novellam eſſe religionem noſtram. Elmenh. in Arnob. p. 19. & in Min. Fel. p. 43.

(c) Τῶν καινῶν καὶ ἀλλοτρίων τῆς φύσεως νόμων εὑρετής. Vita S. Thecl. p. 239.

(d) Ξένην τινὰ καὶ καινὴν εἰσάγουσιν ἡμῖν θρησκείαν. Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 1.

(e) Prudent. in agon. Fructuos.

(f) H. Stephan. Apol pro Herod. initio. Phot. Cod. 243. Col. 1083.

Philoſophers that were before them) yet the generality of Men have a great (if not an extravagant) regard for Antiquity, they glory in it and are govern'd by it. In Humane Societies thoſe of the Elder Age are thought fitteſt to Govern, and their Elder Age carrieth with it a Venerableneſs and Authority, whence the Names that properly ſignifie Elder Age, are become Names of Authority, and ſignifie thoſe of greater Rank, that bear Rule over others. (g) As πρεσβύτεροι, Elder, Senior (the Jewiſh Sanherdrim were called Seniores, and Abraham's chief Servant the Elder of his Houſe) the Arabick Sheich or Cheque and our Engliſh Ealderman. In ſecular Nobility-Learning Antiquity ennobleth Nobility it ſelf (h) for recent Nobility is not counted plenary Nobility, novus homo, importeth an ignobleneſs and diſparagement, there muſt be a competent Antiquity of riches and ſplendour of Family, to conſtitute plenary Nobility. In the account of Holy Scripture Ancientry is honourable; for the Ancient is the honourable, Iſa. 9. 15. and with honourable reſpect the Scripture ſpeaketh of ancient things, 1 Chron. 4. 22. ancient People, Iſa. 44. 7. an ancient Nation, Jer. 5. 15. ancient Land-marks, Pro. 22. 28. an ancient River, Judg. 5. 21. ancient Paths, Jer. 18. 15. ancient Mountains, Deut. 33. 15. ancient Kings, Iſa. 19. 11. ancient Men, Lev. 19. 32. Amongſt the Sons of the ſame Father the eldeſt is counted moſt worthy and honourable; divers Nations have contended for Antiquity, and the Arcadians would be before the Moon, ſo highly did they affect Seniority and Antiquity. Both Jews and Chriſtians have been ſeveral times put upon it, to prove the Antiquity of their Religion and Records; and becauſe Moſes appeareth, to have been the moſt ancient Law-giver, this hath gain'd him no ſmall Honour and Authority. Cuſtoms gain Credit and Authority by their Antiquity, the more ancient they are, the more inviolable. By their Antiquity they gain in the minds of Men a Sanctity and Authority, and ſeem (as Quintilian ſaith of the Salian Verſes) longo conſecrata tempore, ſacrated by length of time. Men are diſpos'd to reverence thoſe things, that have ſtood the ſhock of Ages, which have an Affinity with the ancient of Days, and a Priority, Precedence, Paternity or Father-hood, of which Juniors muſt be obſervant. (i) For ancient Doctrines as by an hoary Ancientry having a Reverendneſs, in ſome ſort command Ingenuity to aſſent. Antiquity therefore is (in ſome degree) honourary, according to that of Ariſtotle (k) τιμιώτατον μὲν γὰρ τὸ πρεσβύτατον, that which is moſt ancient is moſt honourable. The old Paths ought to have been of great regard with the Jews, Jer. 6. 16. they are reproached for ſacrificing to new Gods whom their Fathers knew not. Deut. 32. 17. Judg. 5. 8. and in a controverted Caſe our Saviour appealeth to true Antiquity (ævi melioris conſuetudo) from the beginning it was not ſo. Matth. 19. 8.

Antiquity is Honourary, but complicated with badneſs it is a diſparagement, and the attribute of Antiquity complicated with an Idea of badneſs (although not expreſly) uſually ſignifieth in a Senſe of diſparagement. (l) So ἀρχαῖος, (old) ſignifieth inept and fooliſh. (m) Clemens compareth the Sophiſts unto τὰ παλαιὰ ὑποδήματα, old Shooes. The oldneſs of the Letter is not commendable. Rom. 7. 6. Nor are things which decay and wax old and are ready to vanquiſh away. Heb. 8. 13. When our Saviour ſaith, Matth. 5. Ye have heard, that it was ſaid by them of old times, he intendeth to diſparage Antiquity becauſe of its imperfection; and the Heathen Writers call the ancient times τὸ μυθικὸν, the fabulous age. (n) You (Pagans) ſay, that our things are more ancient and therefore moſt true and creditable. As if Antiquity was not the teeming Mother of Errour. (o) παλαιὰ δὲ ἡ πλάνη· καινὸν δὲ ἡ ἀλήθεια φαίνεται. Becauſe Errour is old, Truth ſeemeth to be new. Errour is the worſe for being old, and ſo are all Evils, an old Leproſie Lev. 13. 11. the old hatred, Ezek. 25. 15. to be old in Adulteries, Ezek. 23. 43. the old Serpent and the old Man. But if an evil Man be reform'd and meliorated, he becometh a new Man in an honourary Senſe, and his newneſs is his excellency, as the Philoſophic Emperour ſuppoſeth in his Precept. (p) Ἀνανέου σεαυτὸν, renew thy ſelf or make thy ſelf new. A new Song is ſo called in a Senſe of excellency, Pſal. 40. 3. Apoc. 14. 3. the new Edition of a Book is the beſt Edition, a new Garment tranſcendeth an old one, and old Trees bring forth but little Fruit ſmall and ſour, and at length ceaſe bearing, till they be good for nothing but fewel for the Fire. Things that are not otherwiſe bad become ſuch by being old (Vetuſtas oleo tædium affert) many and great are the imperfections of old Age, and to be old in reſpect of theſe imperfections, is not an excellency but a diſparagement. Antiquity therefore is Honourary, if not combin'd with badneſs, and newneſs is a diſparagement, if goodneſs and excellency doth not accompany it, and recommend it. But things and perſons may be either of an honourable or a diſhonourable Antiquity: And they may be of an honourable as well as a diſhonourable newneſs. The Taunts therefore of the Pontificians that call us Novelliſts, New Goſpellers, New Reformers (and think to ſilence us with deſinat inceſſere novitas vetuſtatem) are of no regard; for our Reformation was nothing elſe but a dutiful and virtuous Ἀνανέωσις, making our ſelves new. Themſelves will have new things (q) if received by the Church, had in Honour and Veneration, as much as if they were ancient: But we condemn their exotick Novelties. (r) Nos nova omnia quæ Chriſtus non docuit, jure damnamus, quia fidelibus via Chriſtus eſt. For the ſame reaſon we condemn their blind and ſtupid adherence to bad Antiquity (ſaying with Ignatius (s) ἐμοὶ δὲ ἀρχεῖα ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστός, Chriſt Jeſus is to me all Antiquity) wherein they ſymbolize with the Pagans, who thought it an impiety to queſtion Antiquity, whoſe beſt plea for the Inſtitutes of their Religion was their great Antiquity, (t) the Tradition of their Anceſtors and a great Conceit which they had of their Anceſtors Wiſdom, ſuppoſing with Plato, that οἱ παλαιοὶ κρείττονες καὶ ἐγγυτέρω τῶν θεῶν οἰκοῦντες, the Ancients were better and nearer the Gods than we. The Jews have (u) a like Conceit of the Wiſdom of their Fathers (or wiſe Men) and are not leſs zealous for the Religion and Traditions of their Fore-fathers. Gal. 1. 14. So that Chriſtianity at its firſt planting had this great difficulty to grapple with, an extravagant regard for Antiquity both in Jews and Pagans. The Martyr Antipas being carried before the Prefect, he would have perſwaded him (w) ὅτι τὰ πρεσβύτερα τιμιώτερα ἦν, that the old Religion of Gentiliſm was

(g) Seld. Titles p. 36, 502.

(h) Tiraquell. de Nobil. c. 19.

(i) Δυσωπητικὰ γάρ πως τὰ παλαιὰ τῶν δογμάτων, οἱονεὶ πολιᾷ τινι τῇ ἀρχαιότητι τὸ αἰδέσιμον ἔχοντα. S. Baſil. de ſp. ſanct. c. 29.

(k) Metaph. l. 15. c. 3.

(l) H. Stephan. ſupr.

(m) Str. l. 1. p. m. 205.

(n) Antiquiora, inquitis, noſtra ſunt, ac per hoc fidei & veritatis pleniſſima. Quaſi vero errorum non antiquitas pleniſſima mater ſit. Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1. p. 34.

(o) Clem. προτρεπτ. p. m. 4.

(p) M. Ant. l. 4. S. 4

(q) Baron. ad an. 363. n. 104.

(r) S. Ambroſ. de Virgin. l. 3.

(s) Ep. ad Philadelph.

(t) Lactant. l. 2. c. 7. & 5. c.

(u) Hornbeek c. Jud. Proleg. S. 3.

(w) Dr. Ham. in Apoc. 2.

was more venerable than Chriſtianity, which began but of late. The Pagan Prieſthood were for preſerving their Rites, (x) ὥσπερ ἱερὰ ἄσυλα, ſacred and inviolate, and recommended τὸ ἀμετάπτωτον, a conſtancy and unchangeableneſs in their Religion: of which the Roman Senate was a great inſtance, (y) of whom not a Man would be perſwaded by an Oration of Theodoſius (which he made a little before his death) to relinquiſh their ancient Rites, which they had retain'd from the beginning of their City, and which are called by Zoſimus, (z) τὰ ἐξ αἰῶνος πάτρια, their Country-rites without a beginning. (a) Both by the Greek and Roman Laws it was death κινεῖν τὰ ἀκίνητα, to move theſe immoveables, and to introduce any new Religion.

(x) Jambl. de Myſt. S. 7. c. 5.
(y) Baron. ad an. 395. n. 24.
(z) P. 324.
(a) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 4. c. 1. S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 6. p. 189.

VIII. But the Chriſtian Religion muſt have ſuch a Name (b) as the Athenians gave to the thirtieth Day of the Month (on which Day the Moon was both old and new) which they call'd Ἔνη ϗ νέα, old and new. For this Religion was ordained before the World, in reſpect of an initial Introduction of it and Inſtitution to it, it is coeval with the World, for the holy Men of the eldeſt times were of this Religion. Upon which account our Saviour hath a Seniority and Ancientry before Abraham (the grand Senior of the Faithful) and before all the Saints of the Old Teſtament-times, Joh. 8. 56, 57, 58. Your Father Abraham rejoyced to ſee my Day: and he ſaw it and was glad. Then ſaid the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty Years old, and haſt thou ſeen Abraham? Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Before Abraham was, I am. The carnal Jews had a great honour for Abraham, and our Saviour telleth them, that Abraham had a great honour for him, and rejoyced to ſee his Day. This the Jews underſtood as an affirmation, that Abraham had ſeen him and he had ſeen Abraham, and that they were Contemporaries; which the Jews could not but think extravagantly ſtrange and impoſſible. But our Saviour not content, to amuſe them with ſuch a ſtrange Propoſition, addeth another, which in the ſound of it ſeem'd more ſtrange and impoſſible; for he telleth them (with a repeated aſſeveration) before Abraham was, I am. If by theſe words he had meant to ſignifie his Exiſtence from Eternity, he would have ſaid, before Abraham was, I was, not I am. His ſaying I am, certainly meaneth I am as being the Meſſiah; for this is the meaning of I am (ſo it is in the Original) in theſe following Diſcourſes of our Saviour, Joh. 4. 26. ch. 8. 24, 28. ch. 13. 19. This was agreeable to our Saviour's Buſineſs (which was to be known and owned as the Meſſiah) to ſpeak of his being the Meſſiah, and accordingly he ſpeaketh of his Exiſtence in his Day, which is to ſpeak of his being the Meſſiah. He cannot mean therefore his Exiſtence from Eternity: nor can he mean (as the followers of Socinus interpret his words) I am the Meſſiah before Abraham be or be made (the Father of many Nations;) for Abraham is manifeſtly conſider'd in this Diſcourſe as a grand Senior in reſpect of Time, and the Contexture of it ſheweth, that our Saviour's Intention is, to aſſert his own Seniority and Ancientry; and conſequently the Greek words cannot fairly be rendred otherwiſe than they are in our Tranſlation, Before Abraham was. The Learned Grotius interpreteth the words to mean, that Chriſt was before Abraham by Divine Conſtitution or Appointment, againſt which Interpretation Placæus hath made ſeveral Objections, the principal of which would ſignifie nothing, if Grotius had thus clearly and fully expreſs'd his Senſe; In the order and ſucceſſion of things in the Divine Conſtitution before Abraham was, I am. In the Divine Conſtitution of things the Meſſiah is firſt, before all and ſenior unto all; Abraham and his Affairs were in order to the Meſſiah, and conſequently our Saviour might juſtly ſay, In the Divine Conſtitution I am Abraham's Predeceſſor. But it muſt be acknowledg'd, that our Saviour is not ſpeaking only of his Exiſtence in the Divine Conſtitution, but of his real Exiſtence in his Day; and his words muſt be underſtood to ſignifie, Before Abraham was, I am in real Exiſtence in my Day. Which cannot be true, if it be underſtood touching the Order and Succeſſion of time: but is moſt true, if it be underſtood touching the Order and Succeſſion of things. For the real Exiſtence of the Meſſiah in his Day (as maker of the New Teſtament) is the antecedent and procuring cauſe of all ſaving Benefits (which the ancient Saints had) and the Conſideration whereupon they are granted. As to the Order and Succeſſion of things therefore his real Exiſtence in his Day is before Abraham was Abraham, before he was juſtify'd, before he became the Father of the Faithful, or was made the Father of many Nations. And conſequently our Saviour might juſtly affirm, Before Abraham was as Abraham, I am in my Day. As if Will. the Conquerour of an hundred Slaves ſhould make an hundred Free-men in conſideration of a great payment, which Queen Elizabeth ſhould make in her Day; it is manifeſt, that Queen Elizabeth might juſtly ſay, Before thoſe Free-men were, I am in my Day, as being the antecedent cauſe of their Freedom. As Chriſt was Abraham's Senior and Anteceſſor, ſo John the Baptiſt owneth him for his Senior and Anteceſſor, Joh. 1. 15. He that cometh after me, ἔμπροσθέν μȣ γέγονεν, was before me, ὅτι πρῶτός μȣ ἦν, for he was my pre-eminent. Our Saviour came after John the Baptiſt in one ſenſe, but not in another; was his follower in one ſenſe, but not in another. (c) He did not lacky after John as his Junior, but was before him and his Senior in the order of Divine Deſtination, as being his pre-eminent in worth and dignity, deſign and deſerved regard, and in the buſineſs of the Baptiſts miſſion and coming. His Senſe is, He that cometh after me, was ὁ ἐρχόμενος (He that cometh) before me; for in this buſineſs of my miſſion and coming He was my pre-eminent: which implieth, that he that cometh after me, is mightier (or greater) than I, as the Baptiſt ſaith in the other Evangeliſts, Matth. 3. 11. Mark 1. 7. Luk. 3. 16. In order of time the Baptiſt came before Chriſt, but in the order of things he was after him; for in this œconomy of things John was not the primary perſon or of primary deſign, but as he ſaith, Chriſt was πρῶτός μȣ, I was inferiour and ſubſervient to him in my miſſion and coming, and am in my Miniſtry and Quality an Undergratuate unto him. (d) According to which Expoſition of the Text the laſt words of it (ὅτι πρῶτός μȣ ἦν) do not expreſs the cauſe or reaſon of the thing before aſſerted (our Saviour's prelation before John) but they are only an explanatory cauſe or reaſon of the foregoing Aſſertion and obſcure Saying (ἔμπροσθέν μȣ γέγονεν, was before me:) as if the Baptiſt had ſpoken thus; I ſay, he was before me, becauſe in this divine œconomy of things he was my pre-eminent. In ſuch ſenſe Chriſtianity is of Seniority and Ancientry to all things in the World.

(b) Leo Allat. de menſur. temp. c. 12. p. 147.
Muhammed ſaid, Fui ego propheta, cùm Adamus adhuc inter aquam & lutum eſſet. Pocock. ſpec. p. 158.
(c) Vid. Petav, T. 4. par. 1. p. 570.
(d) Vid. Heinſ. Ariſtarch. ſac. p. 282, 300, &c.

IX. Yet Newneſs is a principal Attribute of the Chriſtian Religion and of the things that are of kind and quality Chriſtian. For the Chriſtian Religion diſtinguiſheth things into Old and

New, confronteth and oppoſeth the old things (as diſſonant and heterogeneous) to the New and Chriſtian. The Chriſtian Birth is the New Birth, the Chriſtian Life is the New Life, the Chriſtian Man is the New Man (of new kind and quality) the Chriſtian Church is a New Man (as being the Church of Regenerate Chriſtians) her care muſt be, to purge out the Old Leaven (that ſowreth and defileth) and to be a New Lump. The Chriſtian Iſrael is the New Iſrael and the Chriſtian Jeruſalem the New Jeruſalem, the Chriſtian Doctrine is New Doctrine, the Chriſtian Name is a New Name, the Chriſtian Inſtitutions are compar'd to New Cloath and New Wine (that would not fadge with the Old) the Chriſtian God-ſervice is in newneſs of Spirit, the Chriſtian way of addreſſing and approaching to God is a new and living way, the great Chriſtian Commandment is a New Commandment, the Chriſtian Creation is the New Creation, and the Chriſtian Teſtament or Covenant is the New Teſtament or Covenant. (e) Chriſtianiſm is neither Helleniſm nor Judaiſm, ἀλλά τις καινὴ ϰ̀ ἀληθὴς θεοσοφία, but a certain new and true Theoſophy, and the Name ſheweth its newneſs. The Emperour Conſtantine called it, (f) νέαν παιδείαν, the new Diſcipline. Chriſtians call themſelves and their Religion, (g) καινὸν γένος ϰ̀ ἐπιτήδευμα, a new Generation and Inſtitute. The newneſs of it appeareth in the Title, which our Holy Books carry in the Front of them ἡ καινὴ Διαθήκη, The New Teſtament, Law or Covenant. Of which Name of the Chriſtian Religion there are various Reaſons. For, (1.) It denoteth, that the Chriſtian Religion is a Settlement or Conſtitution of things but * newly made and publiſh'd, ſince the fullneſs of time pre-ordain'd of God was accompliſh'd. Agreeably whereto Celſus (truly enough but maliciouſly) calleth Chriſt τὸν ἔναγχος φανέντα, He that appear'd but of late time. The laſt times are a Phraſe, which the Scripture uſeth, to denote the Times of Chriſtianity, as ſome ſuppoſe: but more probably it denoteth, the laſt Times of the Judaical Commonwealth, which are co-incident with the Times of the Meſſiah, Act. 2. 17. Heb. 1. 2. Until the laſt times the Judaical Settlement of things continu'd in force, and ſo long the New Settlement was not made, Col. 2. 14. Heb. 8. 13. The New Teſtament is (h) τελευταῖος νόμος, the laſt Law of God. (2.) The Name denoteth, that it is a Settlement of a new Nature and of oppoſite kind and quality to the Old Settlement of things. For the Settlement of Saving Grace and the Settlement of the Law-religion, The Covenant from Mount Sion and the Covenant from Mount Sinai, are of oppoſite kind and quality. (i) Moſes delivered a Law in Mount Sinai, which is called The Old Teſtament, becauſe it hath Earthly Promiſes: and by Jeſus Chriſt a New Teſtament was to come, in which the Kingdom of Heaven ſhould be promiſed. (3.) The new Settlement is ſo denominated, becauſe it is the Settlement of new matters. The matters which Publick Settlements are converſant about, are the matters of this Divine Settlement, but they are new matters of Dominion and Property, of Society and Government, of Sovereignty and Subjection, of Loyalty and Virtue, and the matters of a new kind of Life and Learning, Warfare and Confederacy, Freedom and Nobility, Citizenſhip and Inheritance: (k) καινῶς τουτέστι ξένως, that which is new, is ſtrange and unuſual. Thou bringeſt certain ſtrange things to our Ears, Act. 17. 20. (l) God made a new Teſtament; for the matters of the Jews and Greeks are old; but we of a third kind that worſhip newly are Chriſtians. The matters peculiarly Chriſtian ſo far as they are peculiarly Chriſtian, are new: but many matters of this Inſtitution are not new, ſave only as they are made the matters of Chriſtian Inſtitution. For the Notices and Laws of Nature and the laudable Moralities of Jews and Heathens are parts of the Chriſtian Inſtitution, and muſt not only be obſerv'd by Chriſtians, but they muſt Chriſtianize in the obſervance of them; and this Chriſtianizing in the obſervance of them is a new matter. To do good and to communicate, is no new matter, but ſo to communicate, as to chriſtianize in doing it, is a new matter. (4.) The Chriſtian Settlement is called The new Settlement, to ſignifie, that it is of new and unuſual goodneſs and excellency. For ſo in good Authors (m) things are denominated New, ſometimes to ſignifie, that they are of an unuſual greatneſs (as Servius upon Virgil ſeveral times expoundeth novus by magnus:) ſometimes they are denominated New, to ſignifie, that they are of an unuſual goodneſs and excellency. Pollio & ipſe facit nova carmina, Pollio maketh new Verſes, that is, eximious mirandous Verſes, which are of an unuſual goodneſs and excellency. (n) Novum dicitur, quod ob excellentiam habet admirationem, That is called New, which is had in admiration for its unuſual goodneſs and excellency. In ſuch ſenſe the Scripture ſpeaketh of new Heavens and a new Earth, the new Jeruſalem, and a new Name, which no Man knoweth, ſaving he that receiveth it. It is a Name therefore of new, unuſual and unheard-of Excellency. So the new Song, Apoc. 14. 3. None could learn, but they which were redeemed from the Earth. It is a Song therefore of new and unheard-of Excellency. So that immortal Joy which is the Wine of the Kingdom, our Saviour calleth New Wine, Matth. 26. 29. to ſignifie, that it is of new and unheard-of Excellency. The New Teſtament is of this nature, whence Gr. Naz. calleth it, (o) τὴν μεγάλην διαθήκην, the great Teſtament. For the Promiſes of God in this New Teſtament (ſaith his Commentator Elias Cret.) exceed all that Ear can hear, or Mind can conceive. (5.) The Chriſtian Settlement is called The New, to ſignifie, that it is always New, as always retaining the freſhneſs of its Beauty and Vigour, without any thing of oldneſs in a ſenſe of diſparagement. Arnobius, to wipe off the reproach of Novelty from Chriſtianity, telleth the Heathen, (p) quandoque & ipſa vetus fiet, in proceſs of time it will become old, as the Heathen Religion was once new, and was now become old. It muſt be acknowledg'd, that this new Religion in proceſs of time becometh of long ſtanding in the World and in ſuch ſenſe old; but becauſe it will be always new to Mankind (who are not born Chriſtians) becauſe it will never be antiquated, and becauſe it will always retain the Virtues and Excellencies of Newneſs, therefore it will always continue the New Religion; as S. Chryſoſtom ſaith of the Church, (q) οὐδέποτε γηρᾷ, ἀεὶ δὲ ἀκμάζει, it never waxeth old, but is always in vigour, or like an Houſe, that without any ſullying or decay always continueth a new Houſe, according to that in the Book of Job, Gloria mea nova erat mecum, my Glory was new or freſh in me. (r) Novo non aliud ſuccedit, No Teſtament ſucceedeth the New Teſtament: but (s) ideò vetus Teſtamentum vocatur, quia per novum aboletur, therefore the Old Teſtament is ſo called, becauſe it is antiquated by the New.

---

1 Pet. 2. 2. Rom. 6. 4. Eph. 4. 24. and 2. 15. 1 Cor. 5. 3. Gal. 6. 16. Apoc. 3. 12. Mar. 1. 27. Apoc. 2. 17. Matth. 9. 16, 17. Rom. 7. 6. Heb. 10. 20. Joh. 13. 34. 1 Joh. 2. 8. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Matth. 26. 28. Heb. 8. 13. and 9. 15. and 12. 14.

(e) Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 1. c. 5.

(f) Dr. Ham. pract. cat. B. 2. S. 3.

(g) J. Mart. Ep. ad Diognet. p. 492.

* S. Aug. c. duas Epiſt. Pelag. l. 3. c. 4.

(h) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 228.

(i) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 18. c. 11.

(k) S. Chryſoſt. in Matth. Hom. πϛ.

(l) Νέαν ἡμῖν διέθετο διαθήκην· τὰ γὰρ Ἑλλήνων ϰ̀ Ἰουδαίων παλαιά· ὑμεῖς δὲ, οἱ καινῶς αὐτὸν τρίτῳ γένει σεβόμενοι, Χριστιανοί. Clem. Strom. l. 6. p. m. 458.

(m) Martin. Lex. in voce Novus.

(n) Cameron in Mat. 26. 29.

(o) Or. 4. p. 124.

(p) L. 2. p. 93.

(q) T. 5. p. 93.

(r) S. Hier. Com. in Eſai. c. 54.

(s) S. Aug. in Pſal. 104.

X. The Name of the Chriſtian Religion (ἡ καινὴ Διαθήκη) implieth, that to be a Chriſtian Religioniſt, is to be a Religioniſt of the new Covenant an holy new Covenanter. As the Jews were the Holy People, in the ſtate of Society with God as their God, and they became ſuch by being the People of the holy Covenant, Dan. 11. 28, 30. So the Religion of Chriſtians is their Covenant, and they become Chriſtians by being Parties in it, (t) καθομολογήσαντες ἑαυτοὺς τῷ Θεῷ, profeſſing themſelves to God, that they will no more live to themſelves, but to him that died for them. His Name is Sponſus Eccleſiæ, which importeth, that the Church is joyned to him by a Marriage-covenant. Nor are any called by his Name, but they that profeſs, (u) that Chriſt is their Lord, which is their common Faith, Profeſſion and Covenant, Rom. 10. 9. ch. 14. 9. 1 Cor. 1. 2. ch. 8. 6. ch. 12. 3. 2 Cor. 4. 5. Eph. 4. 5. Phil. 2. 11. If Chriſt was meerly a publiſher of Doctrines, it might be ſufficient, to believe his Sayings; if he was meerly a Expiator of Sin, it might be ſufficient, to rely upon his great Propitiation; but ſeeing He is eſſentially and eminently an Eſtate of Sovereignty and Government, therefore to be one of his Relatives and Religioniſts, neceſſarily importeth ſuch a due acknowledgment of his Sovereignty as that of the Prophet, Iſa. 44. 5. One ſhall ſay, I am the Lord's, and another ſhall call himſelf by the Name of Jacob, and another ſhall ſubſcribe with his Hand unto the Lord, and ſurname himſelf by the Name of Iſrael. So we Chriſtians (w) ὥσπερ ἔγγραφον ὁμολογίαν κατεθέμεθα, have made a Bond or written Contract as it were, to be dead unto Sin and the World and live unto Righteouſneſs: (x) οἱ Χριστοῦ Χριστιανοί, Chriſtians are thoſe that are Chriſt's People (in contradiſtinction to Aliens) his Citizens and Societiſts; they are to him in the ſtate and relation of Servants to a Lord, Diſciples to the Maſter of their Inſtitution, Clients to a Patron, Subjects to a Sovereign; into which ſtate and relation they cannot enter but by their expreſs Conſent and ſolemn Baptiſmal Covenant, wherein they undertake (y) in Society with Chriſt and in conformity to him, to be crucify'd, to die, to be buried, to be planted, raiſed. By way of Covenant and Profeſſion they become dead unto Sin (utterly parted from it, never to live in it, nor to ſuffer it to live in them any more) ſo that the ſinning life is gone with Chriſtians by their utter renouncing it, undertaking, promiſing, profeſſing to eſchew and mortifie it, 1 Pet. 4. 1. For as much then as Chriſt hath ſuffered for us in the Fleſh, arm your ſelves with the ſame mind; for he that hath ſuffered in the Fleſh, hath ceaſed from Sin. Chriſt became dead (ſuffered in the Fleſh) and thereby was freed from the puniſhment of Sin: So Chriſtians muſt be ſuch as are become dead (ſuch as have ſuffered in the Fleſh) and thereby ceaſe from the life of Sin; for he that is become dead (hath ſuffered in the Fleſh) hath ceaſed from Sin. To be a Chriſtian, is a matter of covenanting, God covenanteth for the Benefit-part of the new Covenant, and Man covenanteth for the Duty-part, the ſummary whereof is to ceaſe from the life and practice of Sin, and from the Vices and Vanities of the World, and never to look back to them any more. Agreeably to the Pythagoreans Precept, (z) Having gone into the Temple turn not back; whereby they ſignifie, that he who betaketh himſelf to God, ſhould not be double-minded, nor adhering to humane things. But the Chriſtians Covenant is alſo of great affinity with the Roman Souldiers military Oath, (a) that ſwear to follow their Leaders, whitherſoever they led them. Cæſaris milites patrem & matrem ejurabant & omnem proximum: They renounc'd Father and Mother and every one that was next to them, Luk. 14. 26, 27, 33.

XI. That there are differences between the Old Settlement of the Law-religion (meaning thereby both the Political Law of the Jews and the Settlement of the Holy Spiritual Law) and the New Settlement of the Goſpel, is viſible from the Names of them: but how great and manifold theſe differences are, and wherein they conſiſt, is not ſo viſible. Theſe differences have been glanc'd at in ſeveral foregoing Diſcourſes: but becauſe they are of great importance and greatly illuſtrate the new and marvellous goodneſs and excellency of the Chriſtian Religion (according to its Name ἡ καινὴ Διαθήκη) we will here repreſent a ſummary account of them at one view.

(1.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppoſite in reſpect of their Religioniſts. For the Chriſtian Religioniſts are an oppoſite kind of Religioniſts to the Law-religioniſts. (b) Our hope is not by the Law. Gal. 2. 20. I through the Law am dead to the Law (parted from it, ſo as not to be a Law-religioniſt) that I might live unto God, as one of his kind of Religioniſts. The Law-religioniſts ought to be divorced from it and married to another, their Religion ought to be of kind and quality Chriſtian, Rom. 7. 4. My Brethren, ye are become dead to the Law by the Body of Chriſt, that ye ſhould be married to another even to him who is raiſed from the dead, that we ſhould bring forth fruit unto God. Expoſitors (to clear the meaning of this place) ſollicitouſly inquire, in what ſenſe Chriſtians are freed from the Dominion of the Law? (c) They have excogitated various Senſes, but have generally overlook'd the Apoſtle's Senſe. For his deſign is, to alienate the Jews from the Law-religion, and to confirm them in Chriſtianity. They were ſometimes the Law-religioniſts, and then the Law-religion was their Husband. Now a Woman which hath an Husband, is bound by the Law to her Husband, ſo long as he liveth: but if the Husband be dead, ſhe is looſed from the Law of her Husband. If while her Husband liveth, ſhe be married to another Man, ſhe ſhall be called an Adultereſs: but if her Husband be dead, ſhe is free from the Law; ſo that ſhe is no Adultereſs, though ſhe be married to another Man, Rom. 7. 2, 3. The Jews therefore who ſometime had the Law for their Husband, were yet at liberty to be married unto Chriſt, becauſe the Law (their firſt Husband) was in this ſenſe dead by the Body of Chriſt, It had loſt its power of obliging them to be its Religioniſts. God's new Settlement of things was made by the death of Chriſt, whence both Jews and Gentiles are obliged, to become his Religioniſts, and not to live any longer to the Law as its Religioniſts. So far the Law is dead, and they are dead to the Law. If the Chriſtian Settlement ought to take place, the other is neceſſarily out of date, Heb. 7. 12, 18. ch. 8. 13. Eph. 2. 15. Col. 2. 14. Gal. 3. 19, 25. ch. 6. 15.

(2.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppos'd in reſpect of Excellency, Perfection and Duration. (d) Quamvis vetera priora ſint tempore, nova tamen anteponenda ſint dignitate. So the Holy Writers diſcourſe, that the Moſaic (Ritual) Law was but an adumbration of the Divine and Heavenly things of the New Teſtament, that the New is the better Covenant, that the Commandment going before is diſanull'd for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs thereof, that the Law was delivered by Angels, but the Goſpel by the Son of God (and it is but reaſonable (f) to ſuppoſe, that the new Law is tranſcendently excellent, ſeeing the perſon imploy'd to deliver it, is tranſcendently excellent) that the Law was to the Jews a pedagogue unto Chriſt, that his Sacrifice maketh Reconciliation for Iniquity, his Teſtament bringeth in everlaſting Righteouſneſs, is the everlaſting Covenant, and if that which was done away was glorious, that which remaineth excelleth in glory, 2 Cor. 3. 10, 11.

(t) S. Baſil. de Bapt. l. 1. p. 652.

(u) Qui Chriſtianus dicitur, Chriſtum ſe habere Dominum profitetur. De vit. Chriſtian. lib. inter oper. S. Aug. T. 9.

(w) S. Baſil. ſupr. p. 670.

(x) Clem. ſtr. l. 1. p. m. 258.

(y) Συνεσταυρῶσθαι τῷ Χριστῷ, συντεθνηκέναι, συντετάφθαι, συμπεφυτεῦσθαι, συνεγηγέρθαι. S. Baſil. ſupr. p. 662.

(z) Εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν ἀπερχόμενος μὴ ἐπιστρέφου· ἐνδεικνύμενοι, ὅτι τὸν εἰς Θεὸν ὁρμηθέντα οὐ χρὴ διγνώμονά τι ἔχειν καὶ τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ἀντεχόμενον. Simplic. in Epict. Ench. c. 74.

(a) Herald. in Arnob. p. 65, 131. Elmenhorſt in Arnob. p. 61.

(b) J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 228.

(c) V. Suarez de Leg. l. 9. c. 13.

(d) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 20. c. 4.

(3.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppoſite in their Promiſes; for in the Law-religion there is either no Promiſe, or no available Promiſe of Life Eternal or of any Spiritual Benefit; and there is a meaſurable oppoſition in their Doctrine and Precepts. For the Doctrine concerning Chriſt and Salvation by him is oppoſite to the Law-religioniſts Religion, which (as preceptive) is not of Faith, that is uſually oppos'd to the Law-religion. (g) Non Lex Eccleſiam congregavit, ſed Fides Chriſti, The Church of God was not gather'd by the Law, but by the Faith of Chriſt (on which ſhe is founded) which is not old but new Law. The great Commandment whereof is not any part of the Law-religion (This is his Commandment, that we ſhould believe on the Name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Joh. 3. 23.) Nor is there any Commandment in the Law touching the New Society Love as ſuch (which is the Chriſtian kind of Love and the Love of Chriſtians as Chriſtians) it is contradiſtinguiſh'd to the Commandment of Charity in the old Law, Joh. 13. 34.

(4.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppos'd as Law and Grace; for the Law-religion is ſo Law, as not to be Saving Grace, and the Goſpel is the Law (the Settlement and Diſpenſation) of Saving Grace. The one is the Settlement of what is matter of Law-juſtice, the other is (h) Grace juſtifying the Ungodly and freeing thoſe polluted by Sins from all Criminality. They are not meerly pardon'd, but dignify'd and preferr'd to an high and honourable eſtate of alliance with God (far beyond what any merits of Man can pretend to) not only without any antecedent merits, but againſt their demerits. His Sovereign Grace and Kindneſs was the ſupreme cauſe, that mov'd him to make this Divine Settlement, and in the ſeveral Branches of it tranſcendent and exuberant Grace appeareth (as in forgiving all Treſpaſſes, receiving returning Prodigals with the greateſt expreſſions of Endearment, predeſtinating us to the adoption of Children, not ſparing his own Son, but giving him to death for us all, and giving us with him all things) the Glory of his Grace, the Riches of his Grace, the exceeding Riches of his Grace (Grace to a Pleonaſm and the height of miracle) the abundance of Grace, and not only the abundance, but ſuperabundance. For the Law entred, and Sin abounded: but when Sin had abounded, Grace over-abounded (abounded above the abounding of Sin) by a vaſt overflowing abolition of it, Rom. 5. 20. In the Law-religion there is an unpleaſing harſhneſs and rigour: but the Religion of Chriſtianity is the Goſpel (good tydings that ought to be receiv'd with joy) the Goſpel of the Grace of God, the Law of Kindneſs that is not to be called The Law but with ſome term of abatement (as the Law of Grace, the Law of Liberty) it is not a Code and Pandect of Impoſitions (a Bundle of harſh and rigorous Precepts) it bindeth no heavy Burdens grievous to be born, it breaketh not the bruiſed Reed, nor quencheth the ſmoaking Flax: but it is riches to the poor in Spirit, eaſe and refreſhment to the weary and heavy laden, a Balſam for the wounded Soul, a Magazine and Store-houſe of Conſolation for the penſive and afflicted. It doth not imperiouſly and minaciouſly command, but graciouſly invite, beſeech and perſwade Men, the Life and Spirit of it is a gracious Benignity, an Heavenly Sweetneſs and Graciouſneſs breatheth in the Style and Language of it, and the Terms of it are Terms of Sovereign Grace.

(5.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppos'd as the Law of Works and the Law of Faith, Rom. 3. 27. (i) What is the Law of Faith? to be ſaved by Grace. Works are thus far diſcarded in the Chriſtian Religion, in ſettling the ſtate of Righteouſneſs upon Men it hath no regard to any of their Works (whether better or worſe) antecedent to the Faith of Chriſt. Whether they have been of civil Converſation and laudable Humane Morals, or ſmooth external Religioniſts (as the carnal Jews were) or lewd and diſſolute Drunkards and Whoremongers (as the Sinners of the Gentiles were) none of theſe differences in their Morals create any difference in their method of obtaining Righteouſneſs; for all muſt obtain it in the ſame way and on the ſame terms; all muſt begin the world anew, and if they have any Heathen Virtues or Judaical Prerogatives and Law-religious practices, they muſt relinquiſh them, ſo as to become Chriſt's Believers, for whom the ſtate of Righteouſneſs and Salvation is provided in the Chriſtian Settlement by the Grace of God in Chriſt. But this is not the method of obtaining Righteouſneſs in the Law-religion. (k) Lex merita examinat, Gratia fidem quærit. The Law examineth Humane Merits (whether we have done the Works of the Law) the Religion of Grace inquireth, whether we are Chriſt's Believers or not?

(6.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppos'd as Life and Death, Juſtification and Condemnation; for the one is the Settlement of Death and Condemnation, the other of Righteouſneſs and of Life. (l) Eſt in lege juſtitia, ſed non per legem juſtitia: Righteouſneſs is in the Law, but cometh not by the Law. It is ſo far from affording Righteouſneſs to its Religioniſts, that by accident through their Carnality (not through any fault in the Law) it affordeth them their criminal and penal Evils. For Sin occaſionally operateth in them by the Law, it convinceth them of Sin, when they commit it, it maketh their Sin to be Sin (for if they had no Law, they could have no Sin) maketh them guilty and condemneth them for their ungodly ſinning againſt it, and ſo all the World is become guilty, in the ſtate of Condemnation and under the Divine Wrath. (m) The Law is the accuſer of Sin, the miniſtration of Condemnation, whereby God hath ſhut up all in Sin, that he might have Mercy upon all. The Law of Nature (natural Religion) is of this Nature; for thereby much of the truth of God and of their Duty is notic'd to Mankind, but they are improbous

(f) Suarez de Leg. l. 10. c. 8.

(g) S. Ambroſ.

(h) Χάρις δικαιοῦσα τὸν ἀσεβῆ καὶ παντὸς αἰτιάματος ἀπαλλάττουσα τοὺς ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις μεμολυσμένους. S. Cyr. in Eſai. l. 3. T. 6. p. 759, 916.

Eph. 1. 6, 7. ch. 2. 7. Rom. 5. 17.

(i) Τίς ὁ τῆς πίστεως νόμος; διὰ χάριτος σώζεσθαι. S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. λογ. 3. p. 47.

(k) S. Ambroſ. in Pſ. 43.

(l) Idem Com in Luk. l. 5. p. m. 52.

(m) Ὁ νόμος, ὁ τῆς ἁμαρτίας κατήγορος, ἡ τῆς κατακρίσεως διακονία, δι᾽ οὗ τὰ πάντα συνέκλεισεν εἰς ἁμαρτίαν ὁ Θεὸς, ἵνα τοὺς πάντας ἐλεήσῃ. S. Cyr. Glaph. in Deuter. p. 430.

improbous Sinners againſt it (living in Ungodlineſs and Unrighteouſneſs) whence the Apoſtle perſwadeth all Men to become Chriſtians, and to enter into that State of Righteouſneſs, which God in Chriſt had provided for them, becauſe they were under Condemnation and Divine Wrath by ſinning againſt natural Religion.

(7.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppoſed as The Letter and the Spirit; for the Law-religion is the diſpenſation of the Letter and the Goſpel is the diſpenſation of the Spirit. (n) The New Teſtament differeth from the Old, becauſe by the New the Law of God is written in the Heart of the faithful, which by the Old was written in Tables. The Old Covenant therefore was meerly a diſpenſation of the Letter of the Divine Law (an external diſpenſation) but the New Covenant affordeth its Religioniſts vital Sanctity (the Law written in the Heart) which ſpeaketh it a diſpenſation of the Spirit and of ſanctifying Grace. Which Specific difference of the two Covenants equally concerneth the Law of Nature and the Moſaic Moral Law; for the Law of Nature being written only in the notional Mind, is (as it were) written only in external Tables. So that the Law-religion is no accommodate Religion for ſaving lapſed Sinners; for becauſe it affordeth no ſpiritual Life to its Religioniſts, it maketh them not truly Holy and Righteous, and not being ſuch they are ſubjected to Death and Condemnation by it, becauſe of their ungodly ſinning againſt it. It is weak and impotent, unable to prevail againſt the reigning of Sin; and becauſe it is meerly an external dead diſpenſation of the Letter, all the Law-religioniſts (Nature's Religioniſts) are the dead-formal Religioniſts (their Piety is dead, cadaverous, unholy and illegitimate) whereas the Religioniſts of the New Covenant are the true vital kind of Religioniſts. (o) Δικαιοῖ ἐν χάριτι ϗ ἁγιάζει τοὺς πεπιστευκότας, by Grace it juſtifieth and ſanctifieth thoſe that have believed, and planteth the Holy Life (not in the Surface only but) in the inmoſt Conſtitution of their Souls. Whence this Covenant is not eaſily broken, for this living Principle is a laſting Principle, Jer. 31. 32.

(8.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppoſed as Bondage and Freedom; for the one is the Religion of our Spiritual Servitude, Thraldom and Bondage, the other of our Spiritual Freedom. Joh. 8. 34, 35, 36. Gal. 4. 24, 25, 26. The Jews ſay (p) The bleſſed God redeem'd us from Servitude, and we were made Free (בני חורין filii ingenuorum vel nobilium) and worthy of the Kingdom and the Majeſty. At this day they ſwell with the Conceit of that mighty Honour and Happineſs, to which they were advanc'd by their liberation from the Egyptian Bondage; in their Paſchal Solemnity they phancy themſelves Princes (that have been Bond-ſlaves, but by Redemption are in a State of Freedom) they behave themſelves as Kings or Sons of Kings, aſſume Grandeur to themſelves, feaſt like Princes (eating Roaſt-meat) drink themſelves drunk, and are ſo highly elevated in their Cups, that (conceiting themſelves Princes) they glory over the Chriſtians as Slaves. Without ſymbolizing with them in their delirous extravagances Chriſtians may learn from them, that their Spiritual Freedom is their Ennoblement and their Happineſs (oppoſite to the baſeneſs and miſery of their Spiritual Servitude) that antecedently to their Redemption they are in the myſtical Egypt, that this their Redemption implieth, that Chriſt's Believers have a State of Freedom provided for them and ſettled upon them in his New Teſtament, and that becoming ſuch they ceaſe to be of vile and ſervile Condition (in reſpect of Spirituals) and paſs out of the State of Bond-ſlaves into a noble and happy Condition of Freedom, which compriſeth all Spiritual Immunities, Rights and Priviledges, and anſwereth to the Canaan-condition of Old Iſrael. (q) Being juſtified we paſs into the true Freedom. When upon believing an Idolater was juſtified, that is, when he ſhook off his former ignobleneſs contracted by Sin, then he appear'd ſplendid and noble and of unſervile Condition. The juſtifying Sinners is manumiſing them, unſervilizing and unſlaving them, thereby they are unſordify'd and ennobled, and are no more of ſervile quality and condition (improbous Villains and vile Miſcreants) but the Elect of God, his Sons and Heirs (which is the higheſt remove from Servitude) the Free Citizens of his Kingdom, Freeholders and Owners of a bleſſed Eſtate in it, and they are in reality, what Old Iſrael was in Type a Royal Prieſthood. Their Juſtification is of ſuch Affinity with their Freedom, that ſometimes δικαιῶσθαι, (to be juſtified) ſignifieth to be freed, yet not without reſpect to the Chriſtian Juſtification. Act. 13. 39. By him all that believe are juſtified (freed) from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the Law of Moſes. Rom. 6. 7. He that is dead δεδικαίωται, is juſtified (freed) from Sin. As he that is literally dead, ſo he that is dead according to Chriſtianity, ſerveth Sin no more. His ſtate of Sanctification is a ſtate of Freedom (from under his Egyptian Task-maſters, the reign of indwelling Sin) and the Spirit of the adopted Sons of God is a Child of God-kind of Spirit, which begetteth in them a ſenſe of God's Paternal Relation and Diſpoſition towards them, and a Child of God-kind of Diſpoſition and Behaviour towards God again. And they move in the Holy Paths from Judgment and Choice and from an unforc'd Inclination and Propenſion towards them; upon all which accounts they are not baſe Serviliſts, but Filialiſts in Religion. (r) We Chriſtians ſay, that what the Jews (the Law-religioniſts) do out of fear, we do out of love. That they are Slaves, we are Sons; that they are conſtrain'd to good, we ſpontaneouſly embrace and practiſe it.

(9.) Theſe Settlements of Religion are oppos'd as the Fleſh and the Spirit, Unregeneracy and Regeneracy, Gal. 3. 3. ch. 4. 23. Rom. 7. 5, 6. For the Law-religioniſts are in the ſtate of Unregeneracy and their Religion is to them the ſtate of Unregeneracy: The genuine Chriſtian Religioniſts are in the ſtate of Regeneracy, and their Religion is to them the ſtate of Regeneracy. The one the Apoſtle calleth the Fleſh, the other he calleth the Spirit. For the Fleſh denoteth Unregeneracy, as it ſignifieth Carnality of Religion (Carnal Judaiſm the oppoſite to Spiritual Judaiſm) If any other Man thinketh, that he hath whereof he might truſt in the Fleſh, I more. Circumciſed the eighth day, of the ſtock of Iſrael. Phil. 3. 3, 4. What ſhall we ſay then, that Abraham our Father as pertaining to the Fleſh hath found?

(n) Diſtat à vetere Teſtamentum novum, eò quòd per novum ſcribitur Lex Dei in corde fidelium, quæ per vetus in tabulis ſcripta eſt. S. Aug. de Sp. & Lit. c. 28 Rom. 2. 29. and 7. 6. and 8. 2, 9. 2 Cor. 3. 6, 8. Gal. 3. 14. ch. 5. 18. Jer. 31. 33. Heb. 8. 10.

(o) S. Cyr. Glaphyr. in Deuter. p. 428.

(p) Hotting. de jur. Hebr. Lex 13, 14, 19, 20. Buxtorf. Synag. c. 13.

(q) Δικαιούμενοι πρὸς ἐλευθερίαν τὴν ἀληθῆ διαβαίνομεν. Ὅτε πιστεύσας ἐδικαιώθη, τοῦτ' ἐστὶν, ὅτε τὴν ἐκ τῆς ἁμαρτίας δυσγένειαν ἀπεσείσατο, τότε πέφηνε λαμπρὸς ϗ εὐγενὴς ϗ ἐλεύθερος. S. Cyr. in Joan. l. 5. p. 537.

(r) Dicimus quod Judæi propter metum faciunt, id nos facere propter charitatem. Illos ſervos eſſe, nos filios: illos cogi ad bonum, nos bonum ſponte ſuſcipere. S. Hieron. Com. in Galat. c. 3.

Rom. 4. 1. (s) Carnem dicens circumciſionem ſignificavit, by the Fleſh the Apoſtle meaneth (a Rite of carnal Judaiſm) Circumciſion. The Fleſh denoteth Unregeneracy, as it ſignifieth vital Carnality. Rom. 8. 8. They that are in the Fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. Theſe are (t) in ſtatu carnali, they are the carnal kind of Men and the carnal kind of Religioniſts, and ſuch are the Law's Religioniſts. For the Apoſtle calleth (u) ſtatum ſub lege (the ſtate of Man under the Law) ſtatum carnalem, the ſtate of Carnality. The Family of Nature's and the Law's Religioniſts therefore are thoſe that are in the Fleſh; the genuine Chriſtian Family are thoſe that are in the Spirit. The new Settlement of Chriſtianity is the Religion of our Newneſs or Regeneracy. (w) For this is the difference between the Law and the Goſpel, the Goſpel bringeth with it, gratiam regenerationis, regenerating Grace. (x) Chriſt is the Mediator of the New Teſtament, καινῆς δὲ φημὶ τῆς εἰς καινότητα ζωῆς ἁγίας ἀναμορφοῦσης τὸν ἄνθρωπον, I ſay of the new, which reformeth a Man into the newneſs of an Holy Life. This the Chriſtian Religion affordeth, this it ſtrictly requireth, the ſtreſs of Man's Salvation it layeth upon his Regeneration (which in the Chriſtian Notion was never requir'd in any other Philoſophy or Inſtitution) all the Regenerate and none but they belong to the Chriſtian Settlement, the being a genuine Chriſtian conſiſteth in Regeneracy, and none that are totally Unregenerate, can duly like or affect Chriſtianity. Upon all which accounts the Chriſtian Religion is peculiarly the Religion and Inſtitution of Man's Regeneration.

XII. But the term Regeneration and many little Reſemblances of the Chriſtian Regeneration may be found in Judaiſm, Paganiſm, and in profane Authors. (y) For the Jews look'd upon their Proſelytes of Juſtice (whom they Baptiz'd) as new-born, as Infants newly come into the World; whence they ſuppos'd, that all their former Kindred ceas'd (their Father, Mother, Children, Brothers and Siſters were ſuch no more) together with their former Gentiliſm they were ſuppos'd, to put off all their former Kindred either by Conſanguinity or Affinity (Blood or Marriage) ſo that none of their former Kindred could inherit their Eſtate when they dy'd. Nor did they only put off their former Kindred, but their Country alſo; and the Jews were of Opinion, that at that Moment, when one of theſe Proſelytes ceas'd to be a Gentile, and became a Jew, a Soul from Heaven entred into his Body, his former Soul removing or vaniſhing away. And as the Jews had a ſort of Regeneration amongſt them, ſo of the Eleuſinian Myſteries and an Initiation thereinto it muſt be ſaid (z) Hæc eſt nationum παλιγγενεσία, this is the Gentiles Regeneration. They that were initiated into theſe Myſteries (after many Purgations and Expiations and five Years Preparatory Trial) relinquiſh'd that wild kind of Life which they liv'd before, and took up another form and way of living, and bound themſelves thereto (to an eximious Piety towards their Gods, and great Humanity, to exceed others, to eſchew Sins and live a better Life than other Men) whence theſe Myſteries were called principia vitæ, which Name ſpeaketh them a Regeneration. So certain Traditions concerning Bacchus are called by Plutarch (a) μῦθος εἰς τὴν παλιγγενεσίαν, a Fable for Regeneration, which he interpreteth the caſtigation and ſubduing of the brutal and inordinate part. A naſty Ceremony the Gentiles in latter times had called Tauropolia, which they alſo called Regeneration. (b) A Perſon ſate in a Pit under Ground (or the like place) which was cover'd with Boards, and then they ſacrific'd a Bull or Ram upon the top of the Pit, and his Blood dropt through the Boards upon the Perſon, and beſprinkled and bedaub'd him, and this Perſon was look'd upon as hereby conſecrated and regenerated, and was ſaid to be Taurobolio Criobolioque in æternum renatus. (c) They are ting'd at certain ſacred times (ſaith Tertullian of the Gentiles) idque in regenerationem & impunitatem perjuriorum, and that for Regeneration and impunity of their Perjuries. Many Regenerations are attributed to Pythagoras; for his Tranſmigration of Souls was called Regeneration; and amongſt the Greeks when thoſe that had been long abſent and were thought dead unexpectedly return'd Home, (d) they were look'd upon as ex orco reduces and δευτερογενεῖς, born a ſecond time. If when the funeral Rites had been perform'd for a Man as for one dead, and he came to life again, or if a Man had been ſaid to be dead in a far Country or in the Wars, and came Home again, ſuch an one was ſaid, to be born again. Amongſt the Philoſophers παλιγγενεσία, (Regeneration) ſignifieth the Reproduction, Renaſcence and Reviviſcence of things (e) τὴν φθορὰν ἐπανάγειν εἰς τὴν γένεσιν, to reduce that which is corrupted into Generation. The Stoicks thought, that the World would be deſtroy'd and reproduc'd, and this Reproduction of it is called by them (f) παλιγγενεσία τῶν ὅλων, the Regeneration of the Univerſe. So the Reſurrection of the Body (being our Reproduction and Reviviſcence) is called by the Fathers Regeneration agreeably to the Apoſtle, Heb. 1. 5. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Phyſicians uſe the term Regeneration; for if any Fleſh be loſt from any part of the Body the Reſtauration of it they call the Regeneration of it. (g) And Cicero calleth his Reſtauration to his Country and his Honours his παλιγγενεσία, Regeneration. They that are delivered from the danger of Death, let them look upon themſelves as renati born again (ſaith Jul. Firmicus;) becauſe they have a new Life (as it were) they are in ſome ſort born again. So any ſolemn day of eximious Joy and Gladneſs was called by the Ancients Natalis, a Birth-day; and Hegio in Plautus ſaith, Dii immortales, iterum natus videor. I ſeem to be born again (to have a new Life) becauſe he heard that his captive Son was come Home. Amongſt the Lawyers there is a ſort of Regeneration, which is of great Remark. (h) For if a Bond-ſlave amongſt the Romans was totally manumis'd and unenſlav'd (plenâ donatus ingenuitate) if he was ſo fully ſet at Liberty that he became a Roman Citizen, and was as fully Free, as if he had been Free-born, this the Law calleth the Regeneration of him, and he is ſaid to be Regenerate, becauſe he is made Free-born and hath the Birth-right given him; whereas he was a Slave before, he was now (as it were) new Born, becauſe he was as one Free-born, which the Law calleth regenerationis jus. In exotick Learning therefore ſuch Notices there are of Regeneration, which conſiderably illuſtrate the Regeneration that is in Chriſt's Religion, and which is ſo much the ſame thing with (Saving) Chriſtianity, that it may juſtly be counted but another Name of it.

XIII. For

(s) S. Ambroſ. in loc.

(t) Cajetan. in loc.

(u) Idem in Rom. 7. 5.

(w) Calvin. in Jer. 31. 33.

(x) S. Cyr. in Eſai. p. 542.

(y) Seld. de J. Nat. & G. l. 2. c. 2. Marſham. Can. Chr. p. 199. Ed. Lipſ.

(z) Herald. in Arnob. p. 84.

(a) Grot. Not. in Joh. 3.

(b) Seld. de Synedr. l. 3. c. 13. Van. Dale Orac. p. 162, 175.

(c) Tertull. de Bapt. c. 5.

(d) Marſham. ſupr.

(e) Procl. in Tim. p. 313. Eugubin. de Per. Phil. p. 234.

(f) Gat. in Ant. p. 385.

(g) Liber. de S. Amore Ep. Theol. p. 307, 308.

(h) Seld. ſupr Calvin. Lex. in voce Natali

XIII. For Regeneration denoteth and compriſeth both Regeneration of State and of Nature, both the Chriſtian State and the Chriſtian Life. If the waſhing of Regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. denoteth and compriſeth the Remiſſion of Sins (as it certainly doth and none can doubt of it that conſult Act. 22. 16.) then the State of Remiſſion of Sins and conſequently the State of Adoption and Divine Citizenſhip ought to be called in Theology Regeneration of State, as reſtitutio natalium (the ennobling a Slave with plenary ingenuity) is called by the Imperial Lawyers Regeneration. If the new Eſtate of things under Chriſt (i) is called the Regeneration, Matth. 19. 28. ſhall not that new Eſtate of Rights and Relations, which the Slaves of Sin becoming Divine Believers enter upon at their admiſſion into the Kingdom of God be look'd upon as part of their Regeneration? The Ancients thought ſo, as appeareth from their Phraſeology (k) cùm ille nos in regnum ſuum per adoptionem ſacræ regenerationis aſſumpſerit. Seeing he hath taken us into his Kingdom by the Adoption of ſacred Regeneration. His Kingdom is conſtituted by Regeneration of State (as well as Nature) for therein conſiſteth his manumiſing and infranchiſing Slaves, his naturalizing and endenizing Aliens, his making them Citizens and Sons of his divine and heavenly Family, and nigh that were far off. S. Auſtin ſaith of the predeſtinated (l) regenerationis adoptione naſcuntur ex Deo. By the Adoption of Regeneration they are Born of God. The Grace of Adoption is conferr'd upon a Chriſtian in his ſecond Nativity, and it muſt be conſider'd as a principal part of his Regeneration, becauſe it is a principal part of his ſecond Nativity; for it is his (m) adoptiva nobilitas, ennoblement of State and Condition. His Regeneration is nothing leſs than a paſſing out of one oppoſite State into another, out of the State of ſpiritual Servitude and Condemnation (the natural and legal Condition) into the State of Grace and Salvation, a paſſing from Death to Life, whence the word Reſurrection (n) ſometimes ſignifieth Regeneration. In Heathen Language it may be called à Tartaro ad Tarteſſum migratio (a paſſing out of the worſt into the beſt Eſtate;) and what Pindar ſaith of the Gods, is applicable to all regenerate Souls (o) they have eſcaped the big-ſounding current of the Waters of Acheron. Upon account of which happy change of State they may juſtly be look'd upon as a Son that was dead and is alive again, as ex orco reduces and δευτερογενεῖς, born a ſecond time.

With this Regeneration of State (which is relative) a real Regeneration of Life and Nature is complicated, in reſpect whereof there is great Analogy and Correſpondence between natural and ſpiritual Generation, the firſt Birth and the new Birth. For Generation is definitively (p) a Production of that which hath Life (every Fœtus is a living Creature;) and in like manner (q) the Generation from above and from God is Life. All that produce a thing from Non-exiſtence into Exiſtence are ſaid ποιεῖν to make or effect, (r) but one that produceth his Productions with Life is a Father. There is a Father (who begetteth into Life) both in the firſt and the ſecond Birth; and the Sons of the new Birth as well as thoſe of the natural Birth, have a Mother alſo. For they are Sion's Children, who travaileth to bring forth Children unto God. Lam. 4. 2. Iſa. 66. 8. Apoc. 12. 1. Jeruſalem which is above, is the Mother of them all. Gal. 4. 26. (s) Fathers are the cauſes of living Beings and project Seed with Life. A Child is begotten by the vigour of the Seed of his Father, which is a vital Principle, and thereby he is alive and hath a vital Nature: So the regenerate Children of God are begotten by the vital Seed of God in them (by an holy vital Principle) and have an holy vital Nature (the holy Love-nature) which is abhorrent from all filthineſs, and deadly repugnant and inimical to all Wickedneſs. Whoſoever is born of God his Seed remaineth in him, and he cannot Sin (it is intolerably frightful and painful to him, wounding and deadly to his inward Life and Nature) becauſe he is born of God. 1 Joh. 3. 9. They are born of the Seed of the Word, but ſo as to be born of God by his Spirit, which giveth Life and reneweth them into his living Image, ſo that he is their Father and they are his Children, not meerly by Similitude and Imitation, but by ſupernatural Generation (t) as the Children of this World that are generated and generate others διὰ τὴν γένεσιν υἱοὶ ὄντες, are Sons and Children becauſe of their Generation. But becauſe they are regenerated into the Image of God, this their Generation from him is a cauſe and reaſon of their reſembling him (in all Purity and Sanctity, Grace and Goodneſs) the holy Life which is planted in them is a Child-like reſemblance of God, which conſtituteth them his living Images, as Children amongſt Men naturally reſemble their Parents, by whom they were generated. The forming the Divine Image in the Soul is analogous to the forming and ſhaping the Fœtus in the Womb in natural Generation (Gal. 4. 19.) and as by our natural Birth we are brought into the World, and born of a certain Stock and Family, but are not born without pangs and throws: So by the new Birth regenerate Chriſtians are born into a better World (the Kingdom of God) are born of the Divine Family, but (u) μετὰ τὸν λόγον τῶν τραυμάτων, not till after the Divine Word hath wounded the Soul and cauſed compunction there. Natural Generation is a Propagation of the Species (unleſs the Generation is equivocal) and the ſpiritual Generation is thus far a Propagation of the Species, the new Birth is the Saint of God-kind of Birth, the Holy God begetteth the Holy Kind, that are the Off-ſpring of the King of Saints as he is ſuch, and are Holy by Birth and by Kind. They are God-like (and therefore King-like) the Divine Image is the ennoblement of their Mind and Life, and they derive from their Birth and Parentage which is the truly noble (w) vigore cœleſti ſublime pectus, a breaſt ſublime by celeſtial vigour, a Mind too high for theſe low things, and too Holy to wallow in the defilements of Senſuality. (x) For we, that having rejected our terrene Nativity are re-created and renew'd in Spirit (or by the Spirit) do not now live to the World, but to God. The Chriſtian Life together with the Chriſtian State is compriſed in Regeneration, and it compriſeth alſo the Sanctification of the Body as well as that of the

---

(i) V. Grot. Not. in loc.

(k) S. Ambroſ. de Sp. ſanct. l. 2. c. 9.

(l) Tract. in Joban. 42.

(m) Leo M. Ser. 6. de Nativ. c. 3.

(n) Hotting. Diſſ. de Reſurr. p. 4.

(o) Βαρυβόαν πορθμὸν πεφευγότες Ἀχέροντοι. Ap. Plutarch. de ſuperſtit. p. 167.

(p) Productio viventis à vivente ſimilis producenti in ſubſtantia & natura. Luc. Holſten. Diſſ. 2. in loca quædam Con. Nic.

(q) Ζωὴ δέ ἐστιν ἡ ἄνωθεν ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ γέννησις. Macar. Hom. 30.

(r) Ὡς δὲ μετὰ ζωῆς παράγων ἀπεργάζει πατήρ. Procl. in Tim. p. 91.

(s) Ζώων εἰσὶν οἱ πατέρες αἴτιοι καὶ ζώντων τινῶν καὶ προετικοὶ σπερμάτων μετὰ ζωῆς. Procl. Ibid.

Jam. 1. 18. 1 Pet. 1. 23.

(t) Clem. Str. l. 3. p. m. 338.

(u) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 6. p. 281.

(w) S. Cypr. Ep. 8.

(x) Nam qui expoſita nativitate terrena, ſpiritu recreati & renati ſumus, non jam mundo ſed Deo vivimus. S. Cypr. ad Demetr.

Soul. (y) The Body alſo (having the Sanctity of a Temple) is ſanctified, in which ſuch a Soul dwelleth. (z) The Spirit being ſanctified the Body muſt neceſſarily be Holy, which the ſanctified Spirit uſeth.

Gal. 4. 27. Eph. 4. 24. XIV. The entrance into Chriſtianity and Godlineſs is Regeneration, which is a putting on the new Man in the new Covenant and the new Birth. It denoteth and compriſeth both the Fact of Man and the Grace of God. As it is a putting on the new Man in the new Covenant (and a putting off the old Man) it is the Fact of Man, Col. 3. 9, 10. as it is a putting on the new Man in the new Birth, it is the Grace of God. Tit. 3. 5. The Habits or Qualities of a Perſon the Scripture looketh upon as his Veſtment or Garment, and what any Perſon adjoineth to himſelf (as it were) in the Phraſe of the Orientals he is ſaid to be cloathed with and to put it on. So the Samaritans ſay of him, that doth not rightly obſerve the Sabbath (a) non induit Sabbathum, he doth not put on the Sabbath. One that is Religious is called by the Syrians Indutus Deo; a Follower of Chriſt is called Indutus Chriſto, Indutus Meſſia. So when the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah, becauſe it was adjoined to him, he is ſaid to be cloathed with it. 2 Chron. 24. 20. And the Hebrew Book Coſri ſaith of the Prophets (b) induuntur ſpiritu ſancto, they are cloathed with the Holy Spirit. Agreeably to which oriental Phraſe Chriſtians ſpeak (c) Chriſti nomen induere. In their Baptiſm they are ſaid, to put on Chriſt, and to put on the new Man, which is the ſame thing; for the new Man ſignifieth that Perſon of Quality, as the Apoſtle's words imply, Gal. 2. 20 I am crucified with Chriſt: nevertheleſs I live; yet not I; or as our former Engliſh Tranſlation hath it, not I any more. It is not I that now live, that Perſon of Qualities and Properties, nor that kind of Man (that Man of Carnality and Judaiſm) which was before; not the old Man which is homo carnalis homo terrenus, (d) hominis terreni vetuſtas (the carnal earthly Man) for I have put off the old kind of Liver and the old kind of Religioniſt, and it is not I that now live (ſaith the Apoſtle) but Chriſt (that Perſon of Quality, the new and Chriſtian kind of Man) liveth in me. Chriſt is the new Man in himſelf. Et Deus & renovatus homo miſcetur in unum. And unto us he is the new Man. (e) He became the origine of another kind, that which is regenerated by him by Water and by Faith. (f) He is the Image and Character of God, by whom all that partake of him are made the Images of God. In the deſign of his coming he is unto us the new Man. (g) He would become the Son of Man, that he might make us the Sons of God. God was born of Man, that Men might be born of God. Chriſt redeem'd us and made us his Members (h) that in him alſo we might be Chriſt's. (i) Chriſt would be what Man is, that Man might be what Chriſt is. (k) Chriſt came to make the Mind new, the Soul new, and new Eyes, new Ears, a new ſpiritual Tongue, and to ſpeak ſummarily, to make his Believers new Men. So that a genuine Chriſtian is (l) a new Man transformed by the Spirit of God. So by the ancient Writers of the Church a μετάπλασις, μεταστοιχείωσις, μεταποίησις, Change and Transformation of the Soul is attributed to Baptiſm, and they have ſtiled it φωτισμὸς, Illumination, θάνατος ἁμαρτίας, the death of Sin, ψυχῆς κάθαρσις, the purgation of the Soul, ſacramentum ſanctificationis (the Sacrament of Sanctification) lavacrum vitale (the vital Laver) The ſecond Nativity, The ſalutary Nativity (m) nativitas Chriſtianorum in Baptiſmo eſt, the Chriſtians Nativity is in Baptiſm. Which is not ſo to be underſtood, as if the external Rite of Baptiſm was the whole or the main of the Chriſtian Regeneration: But Regeneration is the buſineſs of Baptiſm, of which the new Covenant is the Subſtance. 1 Pet. 3. 21. By faithful entring into the new Covenant a Chriſtian by way of Covenant and Profeſſion putteth on (n) τὸν ἐπουράνιον ϗ καινὸν ἄνθρωπον, ὅς ἐστι χριστός, the heavenly and new Man, which is Chriſt; and upon his performing this Duty-part of the new Covenant (and in conjunction therewith) this Benefit-part of the Covenant accrueth to him in Baptiſm, The renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. But the external Rite of Baptiſm devoid of theſe is only an Image of Regeneration; and they that think otherwiſe, are like the Trojans (o) that held the Image of Helena as her ſelf. (p) They are all but Images (without Subſtance) that Men have. Notwithſtanding the external Rite of Baptiſm the generality of pretending Chriſtians are in the main too viſibly in their Unregeneracy, if a Father hath rightly defin'd Regeneration, (q) By a ſpiritual Nativity to be made truly and indeed the Children of God. (r) What doth it profit any, that he is baptized, if he is not juſtified (ſanctified?) He that is not in the Spirit (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) which is the State of Regeneracy, muſt not pretend, to be born of the Spirit: Nor can the ſign be of avail to him without the thing ſignified. (s) When in a time of great Mortality many betook themſelves to Baptiſm for fear of Death, an Angel is ſaid to have appear'd to Peter Biſhop of Alexandria, and to have given him this Reprimand, Quamdiu huc mittis marſupia iſta inania? How long wilt thou continue to ſend hither thoſe empty Bags that have nothing in them? Such there are many Baptized, yet devoid of all Divine Grace, and though waſh'd in that ſacred Laver yet not cleanſed from their filthineſs.

It appeareth from the entrance into Chriſtianity, that it may be defin'd The Inſtitution and Diſcipline of the new Man (the Man of Regeneracy) that the Kingdom of Chriſtianity is the Region and Specific comprehenſion of Regeneracy, and that all things properly Chriſtian and all the Chriſtian kind of things are the things of Regeneracy. By divine Appointment all old things (the things of Unregeneracy) are paſt away, all things are become new. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Nothing now is to take place, but what is of Kind and Quality new, divine and Spiritual, the matters of Regeneracy. Such is the Benefit-part and the Duty-part of Chriſtianity; ſuch is the Chriſtian

---

(y) Ἁγιάζεται δὲ ϗ τὸ σῶμα ἐν ᾧ οἰκεῖ. Clem. Str. 6. p. m. 464.

(z) Fieri non poteſt, ut ſanctificato ſpiritu, non ſit ſanctum etiam corpus, quo ſanctificatus utitur ſpiritus. S. Aug. de bono viduit.

(a) Hotting. Diſſ. de Reſur. p. 27.

(b) P. 372.

(c) S. Cypr. de Zel. & Liv.

(d) Petav. T. 4. l. 13. c. 16.

(e) Ἀρχὴ πάλιν ἄλλου γένους γέγονεν τοῦ ἀναγεννηθέντος ὑπ' αὐτοῦ δι' ὕδατος ϗ πίστεως. J. Mart. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 367.

(f) Petav. de Trin. l. 6. c. 5.

(g) Hominis filius eſſe voluit, ut nos Dei filios faceret. Quare filius Dei factus eſt homo, niſi ut homines faceret filios Dei? Deus natus eſt ex homine, ut ex Deo homines naſcerentur. Ibid. T. 4. l. 2. c. 7, 8. & l. 12. c. 12.

(h) Ut in illo & nos Chriſti eſſemus. S. Aug.

(i) Quod homo eſt, eſſe Chriſtus voluit, ut homo poſſit eſſe quod Chriſtus eſt. S. Cypr. de Idol. van.

(k) Καινὸν νοῦν, ϗ καινὴν ψυχὴν, ϗ καινοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς, καινὰ ὦτα, καινὴν γλῶτταν πνευματικὴν, ϗ ἁπαξαπλῶς καινοὺς ἀνθρώπους τοὺς πιστεύοντας αὐτῷ ἦλθεν ἀπεργάσασθαι. Macar. Hom. 44.

(l) Clem. προτρεπτ. p. m. 52.

(m) S. Cypr. Ep. 2, 7, 74.

(n) Macar. Hom. 42.

(o) Οἱ τὸ τῆς Ἑλένης εἴδωλον ἔχοντες ὡς αὐτήν. Pho. Cod. 247. Col. 1251.

(p) Πάντα εἴδωλά ἐστι τῷ ἀνδρί. Ibid. Col. 1270.

(q) Nativitate ſpiritali vere Dei filios fieri. S. Cypr. de op. & Eleemos.

(r) Quid cuiquam prodeſt, quod baptizatur, ſi non juſtificatur? Quiſquis cupit pœnas evadere ſempiternas, non ſolùm baptizetur, verùm etiam juſtificetur. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 21. c. 27. & c. 16.

(s) Baron. ad an. 310. n. 13.

Covenant, the Chriſtian Birth, the Chriſtian State, the Chriſtian Life, the Chriſtian Family and Kindred (ἀδελφοῖ ἡ γέννησις ἡ διὰ πνεῦμα, (t) Regeneration maketh Brethren) the Chriſtian's Virtues (the Fruits of the Holy Spirit, Gal. 5. 22.) his Religious Worſhip and God-ſervice, Phil. 3. 3. his Righteouſneſs, Peace and Joy, which are the proper Goods of the Kingdom, Rom. 14. 17. Such are the Honours and Nobilitations, the vaſt Immunities, Rights and Priviledges, that are in Chriſtianity, the Chriſtian Riches and hidden Treaſures, the Chriſtian Manna and living Waters, the Chriſtian Citizenſhip, Freedom, Warfare, Sabbath, Prieſthood, (u) Temple, Sacrifices and Images. (w) The Chriſtians World is another, their Table is other, their Garments are other, their Fruition is other, their Society and Communion is other, and ſo is their Sentiment; therefore they tranſcend all Men. The Goſpel is (x) a form of living from our Reſurrection.

XV. In bringing Men to the good life this is the peculiar method of Chriſtianity, It beginneth with renewing their Souls into it. (y) For the Jews know no other method of acquiring Virtue but by cuſtomary practice. The Philoſophic Pagans were unacquainted with any ſuch thing as the Chriſtian Regeneration, although they ſpeak of a vertuous change in a Man. (z) Shew us a change made in thy Mind the leading part of thy Soul. (a) Thou ſhalt be another Man and enter into another Life, (b) being chang'd from a Belluine into a Divine Life. But they that aſpire after a Divine Life, ought to bethink themſelves in the firſt place of entring into Life, that they may be (c) אומה החיה a People of Life (as the Jews falſly call themſelves) ſpiritually alive to do the Functions and Operations of Spiritual Life. Dead Seeds (as Naturaliſts ſay) are not prolifick. And it is a Canon, (d) ex infectâ radice fructus non producitur, good Fruit is not produc'd from a corrupt Root. So the Jews have an univerſal Canon, as they call it, (e) Quicquid promanat ab immundo immundum eſt. If they may not eat of an unclean Beaſt, they may not eat of the Fat of it; and they may not eat the Egg of an Owl, becauſe the Owl is an unclean Creature. Unſanctify'd Mankind therefore whoſe Vicioſity and Foulneſs is not taken away by Spiritual Circumciſion, offer no pure Oblations, Mal. 3. 3. nor do any holy kind of good Works, Eph. 2. 10. but (unleſs it be in order to their cleanſing) every work of their Hands and that which they offer is unclean, Hagg. 2. 14. The counterfeit Dionyſius defineth Regeneration, (f) the making us Divine. We cannot know Divine Things without it (ſaith he) nor do Divine Works, unleſs we be Divine: as we muſt firſt be Men, before we do the things of Men; for as every thing is, ſo it acteth. δεῖ πρῶτον ὑπάρξαι εἰς τὸ εἶναι, καὶ τότε ἐνεργῆσαι, a thing muſt firſt be (ſaith Maximus the Scholiaſt) and then operate: ἀκολουθεῖ τῇ κατὰ φύσιν ὑπάρξει τὸ κατ᾽ αὐτὴν ἐνεργεῖν, the operation according to nature followeth the being according to nature. In the regular order of things therefore the Chriſtians Inſtitution to a good Life ought to begin with θεογενεσία, the Divine Generation (as the counterfeit Dionyſius calleth Regeneration) whereby they are enlightned, inclin'd and inabled to live the truly good Life, and have the Virtues which conſtitute it (in ſome degree) wrought in their Souls. Which method of Inſtitution is neceſſary in a Religion of Saving Grace, if the genuine and ſaving Virtue is in them only, (g) qui de ſpiritu Dei virtutes habent, that have their Virtues from the Spirit of God. If (h) the Law cannot be fulfilled by any but by them that are Spiritual, who are not made ſuch but by Grace. And it is neceſſary in an Inſtitution of Holy Vitaliſts, which the Chriſtian Religion is as its peculiar Excellency.

(i) Every one is originated from one dead, before and by his Sins: and being cut off from the Root of his former Life now by the Word of God and the Sacrament of Baptiſm the vital Waters he liveth again. (k) We have reflouriſh'd in Chriſt unto newneſs of Life, and the time of his coming is as a Spiritual Spring, that maketh the Nature of Man ἐνανθῆ καὶ ἔγκαρπον, florid and fruitful. Chriſtianity therefore tranſcendeth all Humane Inſtitutions to Virtue, becauſe it affordeth a new Birth, which is the production of a new Life in Men, whereby they become by genius and temper Holy-virtuous, as ſome are ſtirpe & ingenio bellicoſi, warlike by innate diſpoſition. Their new Life is (l) an holy Diſpoſition, a juſt Diſpoſition. (n) That which is occult within a Man, that is the Life (Men live as it impelleth them) that is the Man, it ſwayeth and governeth them. A Regenerate Soul therefore without any exteriour conſtraint or compulſion liveth a godly life, having an interiour ſtable and permanent diſpoſition to all the Duties thereof, which he performeth with great eaſe and facility, with great freedom and alacrity, with delight and complacency (becauſe agreeable to his innate Inclination and Diſpoſition) and with livelineſs, vigour and ſtrength; for the Spirit of Life from God is entred into him. (o) Nunc alia mentem vis agit, major Deus. (p) The Tartars (ſaith a late Writer) muſt be born again, before they can be brought to the neatneſs of the Chineſes, which requireth a long application to it, before they can practice it. But if they could be born again things alien and extremely difficult might become eaſie and agreeable.

XVI. Regeneration is deſign'd to change Man's Nature by introducing a New and Child of God-kind of Nature. Whence it is defin'd, (q) generare filios Deo, to generate Children to God, (r) τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως νεουργία, the new making Man's Nature, (s) ἡ πρὸς τὸ θεῖον μεταποίησις, a change or tranſmutation into that which is Divine. Our Saviour according to his undertaking (t) ἀνακαινίζει καὶ ἀνορθοῖ τὴν φύσιν, reneweth and reſtoreth Nature. So the Chaldee Paraphraſts ſay, (u) In the Days of the Meſſiah Mankind will be cured of the biting of the Serpent (whereby Humane Nature was impoyſon'd with Pravity) which implieth, that his deſign is to alter Man's Nature, and (as the Prophets repreſent it) to change Wolves into Sheep, poyſonous Animals into innocuous and ſalutary, Thorns of the Wilderneſs into Plants of Paradiſe, Senſualiſts into Saints, the wicked ſinning kind into the holy kind, which is a great change of Nature. (w) By the Word the Apoſtles chang'd the dead into living, Sinners into Righteous, the Blind into Seeing, profligating

(t) S. Baſil. Hom. in Lacizis p. 537.

(u) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 389, 390, &c.

(w) Χριστιανῶν γὰρ κόσμος ἕτερός ἐστι, καὶ ἄλλη τράπεζα, καὶ ἄλλα ἐνδύματα, καὶ ἄλλη ἀπόλαυσις, καὶ ἄλλη κοινωνία, καὶ ἄλλο φρόνησις· διὸ καὶ κρείττους πάντων ἀνθρώπων τυγχάνουσι. Macar. Hom. 5.

(x) Τοῦ ἐξ ἀναστάσεως βίου προδιατύπωσις. S. Baſil. de Sp. Sanct. c. 15.

(y) Hottin. de Jur. Hebr. Lex 20, 40, 213.

(z) Δεῖξόν τινα ἡμῖν μεταβολὴν τοῦ ἡγεμονικοῦ τοῦ σεαυτοῦ. Epict. diſſ. l. 3. c. 21.

(a) Ἔσῃ ἕτερος, καὶ εἰς βίον εἰσελεύσῃ ἕτερον. M. Ant. l. 10. S. 8.

(b) Μεταβαλὼν εἰς θεῖον ἐκ θηριώδους βίον. Plutarch. de profect. virt. p. 75.

(c) Coſri, p. 108.

(d) Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 106.

(e) Hottin. Jur. Lex 159.

(f) Eccleſ. Hierarch. c. 2.

(g) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 5. c. 19.

(h) Idem ad ſimplic. l. 1. Qu. 1.

(i) Oritur ex mortuo quiſque antea peccatis aridus: & ab anterioris vitæ radice deciſus, nunc eloquio Dei & ſacramento baptiſmi aquis vitalibus reviviſcit. S. Hilar. in Pſal. 135.

(k) Ἀνεθάλομεν ἐν Χριστῷ πρὸς καινότητα ζωῆς. S. Cyr. Glaphyr. in Exod. p. 314.

(l) Διάθεσις ὁσία, διάθεσις δικαία. M. Ant l. 6. S. 30. & l. 5. S. 34. Gat. Not. p. 382. 284.

(n) Τὸ ἔνδον ἐγκεκρυμμένον, ἐκεῖνο ζωή, ἐκεῖνο ἄνθρωπος. M. Ant. ibid.

(o) Paulin. ap. Baron. ad an. 394. n. 84.

(p) Palafox, p. 562.

(q) S. Cypr. Ep. 74.

(r) Theodor. ad Pſ. 29.

(s) Gr. Nyſſen.

(t) S. Chryſoſt. ap. Phot. cod. 277. col. 1555.

(u) Helvic. protevang. par. S. 26, 35.

(w) S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 627.

τὰ νοσήματα τ̃ φύσεως, the Diſeaſes of Nature and the Vicioſity of the Soul. A Man is not healed, if his Nature is not healed; he is graceleſs and wicked, or truly Virtuous and Holy, as he is in his inward Nature; and as he is in his inward Nature, ſuch will his Practice be. For both ſalutary and poyſonous Plants bring forth Fruit after their kind, Thorns do not bring forth Grapes, nor do Men gather Figs of Thiſtles. The Evil that is done in the World is firſt in the Evil Nature of Man, and floweth from that Fountain of bitter Waters. A good Man out of the good Treaſure of his Heart bringeth forth good things, and an evil Man out of the evil Treaſure of his Heart bringeth forth evil things. Out of the Heart proceed evil thoughts, Murders, Adulteries, Fornications, Thefts, Falſe-witneſs, Blaſphemies. To change an evil Man therefore, and to make him truly good and holy (which he cannot be ſo long as Vital Carnality and Wickedneſs liveth and reigneth in him, and is his animative Nature) there muſt be a change of his inward Nature. As no Man can be of the Humane Kind and Family, unleſs he is of the Humane Nature: ſo none can be of the Holy and Divine Kind and Family, unleſs he is of the Divine Nature. The Divine Nature is the Holineſs and Happineſs, the only Sanctity and Felicity of the Soul, her proper Life and Light, her Purity and Tranquillity, her Freedom and Reſt and a Divine Kingdom; the cure of all her deadly Evils, of all her vile and loathſome polluting Vices (which are the Fountain of unſpeakable pain and trouble) the true vita beata, her preſent Bleſſedneſs, and her qualification for the future Bleſſedneſs; for they muſt be Godlike in Nature and Practice, that live with God for ever. The Priviledge which the Pope hath granted to the Church of S. Sebaſtian at Rome, certainly belongeth to the Divine Nature. In that Church there is to be got true Remiſſion of Sins, Brightneſs and Life everlaſting, Joy and Gladneſs without end. What is it that maketh the Children of God, the Elect of God, the Saints of God but the Divine Nature? What is it that maketh the Peace of God, the Reſt of God, the City of God, the Heaven of God, but the Divine Nature? What is it that conſtituteth the Chriſt of God, the Spirit of God, the ever-bleſſed God himſelf, but the Divine Nature eſſentially and in infinite fulneſs? The deſign of Chriſtianity is not any common mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies (to make us rich, and learned, and great in the World) but to make us partakers of the Divine Nature, which is Man's aſſimulation to God and the Saint of God-kind of Good and Excellency, 2 Pet. 4. 4.

*Matth.*12. 35.

*Matth.*15. 19.

Quæ gloria eſt ſimilem Deo fieri? S. Cypr. de Bono patient.

XVII. The Life of Grace (into which Souls are regenerate) muſt be conſider'd as a Nature. Such it is, as Nature ſignifieth The Specific Nature of Beings, that conſtituteth, diſtinguiſheth and denominateth them, which is defin'd by Boethius, cujuſlibet ſubſtantiæ ſpecificata proprietas, the ſpecific Propriety of every Subſtance. All Species of Beings have their ſeveral Specific Natures (which are common to the whole kind) and one of theſe Specific Natures is the Life of Grace, which is The Child of God-kind of Nature. It is a Nature alſo, as the word ſignifieth, An Innate Diſpoſition and Conſtitution, which is commonly called Nature. As ſome Plants are ſaid to be wild by Nature, and for ſuch to be grafted into a good Olive-tree is contrary to nature, Rom. 11. 24. (x) Singulis ſua eſt natura, All things have their proper Conſtitution, which is a Nature, and the courſe of things which is according to it, is according to the courſe of Nature. Vulturs are of a ravening, Monkeys of a luſtful, Tygers of a fierce and ſavage, Vipers of a venenate Nature; for ſuch is their conſtitutive Nature, their innate Qualities and Properties. Tiberius the Emperour had ſuch Eyes, that he could ſee in the dark time of the Night, and this innate Property of his is called (y) by Pliny Nature; and the Philoſopher Stilpo's vicious Inclination to Wine and Women is called in Cicero his Vicious Nature, which he is ſaid, to have ſo ſubdu'd, that none ever ſaw him Drunk, or diſcern'd any Footſteps of Luſt in him. But the Life of Grace is a Nature in another and ſtrict acceptation; as Nature ſignifieth ſuch a Nature (or comprehenſion of innate Qualities and Properties) which is meerly vital and animative, and is found in natural Agents, that do not act by Choice and Deliberation but by inſtinct. In ſuch a Nature there are Sympathies and Antipathies, that prevent Reaſon and Deliberation. Such a Nature is animative principium motus intrinſecum (as Nature is commonly defin'd) a live Impetus and innate Propenſion that is ſelf-moving without being externally driven and impell'd, as the Heart moveth, dilateth and contracteth it ſelf, and poureth out Blood throughout the whole Body, and as a Serpent hiſſeth and ſtingeth. Such a Nature is a Principle of free motion and action (for a natural motion is free and unforc'd, not violent, as a Fountain poureth out Water with a free current) it acteth with delight and pleaſure what is connatural and agreeable to it, as Men eat and drink and do the Functions of Natural Life; and their Nature is a fix'd and permanent principle of action; for to change Nature is (z) παγχαλεπὸν, extremely difficult, ſuch a Nature is the Life of Grace in regenerate Souls (at leaſt it comprehendeth and includeth ſuch a Nature;) for as Bees and Ants are taught of God, to do after their kind, in like manner his regenerate Children are taught to love one another, 1 Theſſ. 4. 9. (a) αὐτοδιδάκτῳ τῇ φύσει, by natural inſtinct they are carry'd to the Duties of Godlineſs, to hate Sin and Wickedneſs, to love God and Holineſs, to do good and to communicate; the bent and byaſs of their Nature ſtandeth that way. They have a Nature that carrieth them to be heavenly-minded and to contemn the World, Sin is painful and intolerable to them, as being contrary to their new and divine kind of live-nature, which hath an horrour againſt it, and riſeth againſt it, as a Lamb hath a dread of the Wolf by nature (natural Antipathy:) but they have a Sympathy with what is good and holy, ſavour the things that are of God, and diſcern an enraviſhing Amiableneſs, and feel a tranſporting pleaſure in all the ways of Goodneſs, Purity and Righteouſneſs, which are to them connatural and agreeable. They walk in the ways of God from a free and genuine propenſion, and to them his Commandments are not grievous, (b) οὐδενὶ γὰρ τὸ κατὰ φύσιν ἐπίπονον, for what is according to nature is not uneaſie and laborious to any, as it is not laborious to the Fire to burn. As the Fleſh is an inward vital nature ſpontaneouſly parturient of Sin and Wickedneſs, and the ungodly are carry'd on in the ways of Wickedneſs by a live-impetus and propenſion (the Spirit of Whoredom is in them:) So the Life of Grace in the Regenerate is an inward vital Nature, which ſetteth them in motion towards God and Piety, and inclin- them to all holy virtuous Practices, which they perform,

(x) Coſri, p. 254, 255.

(y) L. 11. c. 37.

(z) Celſus ap. Orig. l. 3. p. 152.

(a) Philo περὶ ιωδ[illegible], p. 164. ed. Gr. Pariſ.

(b) Proc. Plat. Theol. l. 1. c. 15.

perform, (c) naturaliter & connato ingenio, naturally and by an innate genius, as a great Naturaliſt ſpeaketh. A Chriſtian's Regeneration, eſpecially if he is arriv'd at a confirm'd ſtate maketh him Χριστιανὸν βαθέα, one that is more than Skin-deep a Chriſtian, (d) δικαιοσύνῃ βεβαμμένον εἰς βάθος, not only ſlightly ting'd, but deeply imbu'd with Righteouſneſs, or dy'd in grain with it. (e) If any one hath an habit of good (ſaith Gr. Naz.) and he be throughly imbu'd with it, it is harder for him to fall to Vice, than at firſt to become Good, becauſe Good in him confirm'd by Time and Reaſon φύσις καθίσταται, is become a Nature. Such is the new Nature in confirm'd regenerate Chriſtians, a throughly permanent Principle, that maketh Holineſs the Life and Breath, the Pulſe and Conſtitution of their Soul, the Soul of their Soul, and as near to them as they are to themſelves. Their new Nature by degrees worketh out Corruption, as according to Hypocrates, (f) Nature is a cure for Diſeaſes and worketh out what is againſt it. And as the ſeveral Species of Animals are by their inſtinctive Nature fitted for their proper work and uſe: So by their holy vital Nature regenerate Chriſtians are qualify'd for their holy work and uſe, according to the Stoicks definition of Virtue, which is, (g) to be naturally adapted or well qualify'd for our proper work. With great reaſon therefore Chriſtianity beginneth its Inſtitution to a Life of Holineſs and good Works with Regeneration and a change of Nature. (h) For Men will not uſually betake themſelves to an Imploy to which their Nature is not adapted, (i) τῆς φύσιος ἀντιπρηττούσης κενεὰ πάντα, if Nature be repugnant, all is in vain.

XVIII. The Life of Grace in regenerate Souls muſt not only be conſider'd as a Nature, but as the divine kind of Nature, which is contradiſtinct to common Nature, common good Nature and the evil or diabolical Nature. For ſuch was the efficacy of Chriſtianity at the riſe of it, (k) ἀπὸ δαιμόνων ἀγγέλους τοὺς ἀνθρώπους εἰργάσατο, Men that were Devils it made them Angels. Theſe were of the Diabolical Kind and Family by their Diabolical Nature, which was ſo their Nature, as to be only the Vicioſity and Corruption of their Nature, in the ſtrict notion of Philoſophy, that conſidereth the Natures of things as antecedent to their Vicioſity and Corruption, and rightly affirmeth, (l) that every Nature is good, that every Vice is hurtful to Nature (as the Vicioſity of the Eye hurteth the Nature of the Eye) whereby it is contrary to Nature. As Nature is rightly conſider'd antecedently to its Vicioſity and Corruption, ſo it muſt be conſider'd antecedently to Saving Grace, and ſo conſider'd it is common unholy Nature, to which the Divine Nature is oppos'd as tranſcendent thereto; for it is of another and higher kind than Humane Nature, as the Divine Birth and Family far tranſcend the Humane Birth and Family, and there is no compariſon between the common Humane Goods and Excellencies (Wit, Parts, Mundane Riches and Power) and the divine kind of Goods and Excellencies. Theſe we ſhould diſtinguiſh as the precious from the vile, (m) and venerate theſe as being the divine things, but depreciate thoſe and account them contemptible as being the humane things. Amongſt the meer Humane Goods a principal one is the common kind of Good Nature, whereby in the uſual Senſe is meant That which is good as to natural Diſpoſition and Temper. So it ſignifieth in Plato: (n) It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the better Natures are in thoſe that are of the Noble Families. Good Nature in this uſual acceptation is not a little valuable and deſirable (Humane Nature if devoid of it, would be as bad as the Atheiſts repreſent it, unregenerate Mankind would be θηρία ἀνθρωπόμορφα, ferine Animals in the ſhape of Men, Foxes and Fire-brands, Cut-throats and Cannibals, as wild Boars and ravening Bears to one another, and the Earth would be no better than a Wilderneſs of wild Beaſts) it deſerveth commendation, but not without a mixture of great diſparagement. For it is no better than common Nature, a bad and vile kind of thing, that is uſually found in wicked Men, is not at all Religious or Conſcientious, is on this ſide true Goodneſs and Righteouſneſs, conſtituteth none truly good, nor good in God's account, nor of a good nature and diſpoſition towards God and Holineſs, nor of a good nature and diſpoſition in the main; for Men that are well-natur'd and of good humour towards one another, yet are Rebel-ſinners againſt God, and have not the love of God in them. But good Nature is an ambiguous expreſſion, and if it be underſtood to ſignifie in a large acceptation good Diſpoſition and Temper, in ſuch Senſe the Divine Nature is Good Nature, the truly Good Nature (and alone ſuch) as being the holy kind of Good Nature. For,

(1.) The Divine Nature (the Saint of God-kind of Good-nature) is the Divine kind of Love, the holy Love Nature and Practice, which is neceſſarily the true goodneſs of Nature and Practice, and the ſame with vital Grace and Holineſs. Vital Sanctity is nothing elſe but the holy Love (Divine Charity which is the Nature of God and of his Children) as Vital Carnality and Wickedneſs is nothing elſe but the inordinate carnal ſelf-love, 1 Cor. 13. Gal. 5. 6. 1 Joh. 3. 23. ch. 4. 7, 16. (2.) In the Divine Nature there is no want of Goodneſs, but whatever is true goodneſs of Nature is in the Divine Nature. Innocence, Self-denial, Humility, Meekneſs, Manſuetude, Benignity, Magnanimity, Juſtice, Mercy, Liberality, Fidelity, a patient Spirit, a ſympathizing with the Goods and Evils of others (making them as our own) a loving Enemies, forbearing and forgiving others, a ſeeking the good of others and not any carnal ſelfiſh Intereſt of our own; all which Branches of true goodneſs of Nature (and what is repugnant thereto is wretchedly baſe and evil Nature) are illuſtrious and ſhining (o) in the Divine Nature, and this ſinleſs Love cannot live but in Temperance and Chaſtity. The Divine Nature is the truly and eximiouſly benevolent Nature, that ardently deſireth, to do good to all (and hurt to none) is concern'd for their weal and wo, maketh Men have the ſame cares and fears, the ſame deſires ſorrows and joys for others as for themſelves, exerteth it ſelf in all Acts and Offices of ardent and affectionate Benevolence, maketh the glorious Angels willingly to wait upon us, brought down the Son of God from Heaven, to help us in our Needs, and to ſave us from our Evils, made him become Poor to make us Rich, to undergo Agonies for our Eaſe, Chains for our Liberty, Stripes for our Healing, Buffeting and Mockeries for our Honour, Wounds for our Cure, and Death for

(c) Harvey de Generat. p. 145.

(d) Caſaub. in Perſ. p. 224. Gat. in Ant. p. 55.

(e) Gr. Naz. or. 13.

(f) Νόσων φύσιες ἰητροί.

(g) Εὖ πεφυκέναι πρὸς τὸ ἴδιον ἔργον. Laert. in Zenon.

(h) Gr. Naz. Ep. 63.

(i) Hippocrat.

(k) S. Chryſoſt. T. 6. p. 348.

(l) S. Aug. de C. D. l. 12. c. 1.

(n) Καὶ τὰ μὲν ὡς θεῖα ἀποσεμνύνειν, τὰ δ' ὡς ἀνθρώπινα ἡγεῖσθαι εὐκαταφρόνητα. Jambl. de Myſt. S. 1. c. 21.

(n) Εἰκὸς ἀμείνους γίγνεσθαι φύσεις ἐν γενναίοις γένεσι. Ap. Tiraquell. de Nobil. p. 138.

(o) 1 Tim. 6. 1. Luk. 6. 32. Joh. 1. 14. Gal. 6. 10. Heb. 13. 16. Matth. 5. 44. Job 31. 29. Eph. 4. 2.

for our Life (like a magnanimous and wondrous lover of Souls) ſuch amazing goodneſs of Nature there is in the Divine Nature. Rom. 13. 10. The Divine Love is the ſumm of the Divine Law, and therefore is univerſal Righteouſneſs and the ſumm of all true Goodneſs. (p) Charity begun is Righteouſneſs begun, Charity perfected is Righteouſneſs perfected. (3.) In the Divine Nature there is no mixture of Evil Nature (it is perfectly oppoſite to the foul and hurtful Vices of Man's Nature) no vile villainous Selfiſhneſs (the Principle of all Wickedneſs) no envying the good 1 Cor. 13. 4, 5. Gal. 5. 22. Eph. 4. 32. 1 Cor. 10. 32. Rom. 15. 2. 1 Cor. 13. 4. of others (but a rejoycing in their Honour and Proſperity) no Malignity or ſpiteful Miſchievouſneſs, no Haughtineſs, Inſolence or Arrogance, no vaunting or fleſhly Gloriation, no malign Cenſoriouſneſs nor contempt of our Brother, no Unmercifulneſs or Hard-heartedneſs (all that partake of it are Men of Bowels) no crooked Partiality or Injuſtice, no wronging or defrauding any, nor doth it allow the cauſeleſs offending diſcontenting and diſquieting any, it ſeeketh not the Sorrow and Moleſtation of others, but their Happineſs and their Joy, maketh us accommodate our ſelves to their good, beareth Injuries and Indignities, and is not apt to inkindle into Flames. No Nigardlineſs or baſe Penurioùſneſs, or churliſh Strait-heartedneſs is in the Divine Nature; no unſeemly Harſhneſs, Roughneſs or Sourneſs, no diſtaſtful bitterneſs of Spirit (but on the contrary, a gracious ſweetneſs of Temper) nothing of Frowardneſs or bad Humour, no Surlineſs or Imperiouſneſs (but condeſcending Goodneſs) no ſqueezing and grinding others, no want of kindneſs is in the Divine Nature, but theſe harſh and 1 Cor. 13. 4. hurtful Vices as are alien from it, as the Waters of Marah are from the Waters of Life. It ba- 1 Pet. 2. 1. 1 Cor. 13 5. niſheth Frauds, Guiles, Hypocriſies, Evil-ſpeakings, and is ſo far from working ill to its Neighbour that it thinketh no Evil. If it took place in the World, it would be a cure for Evil Nature and the multifarious Evils that iſſue from it (a Panacæa and Catholicon) for Debates, Envyings, Wraths, Strifes, Backbitings, Whiſperings, Swellings, Feuds, Brawlings, Seditions, Schiſms, Wars and deſolations of Countries, killing and deſtroying by Sea and Land, contention for Honour and Preferment, deceit in Traffick, unchriſtian Law-ſuits, Cruelty, Treachery, Perfidiouſneſs, Robbery, Bribery, Oppreſſion and Perſecution. That is the true and genuine good Nature, which is diametrically oppoſite to the God-hating and Man-hating and hurting Nature; and ſuch is the Divine Nature. (4.) The Divine Nature is the pure goodneſs of Nature (like pure refin'd Gold) a Rom. 12. 9. Jude 23. Apoc. 2. 2. Benignity that is Vital Purity and Sanctity, a cleanneſs, brightneſs and luminouſneſs of inward Life and Nature, pure and refin'd from all mixture of Vileneſs and Villainy (Light wherein there is no Darkneſs at all) the immaculate and unvile kind of Love and Goodneſs, that is abhorrent from all Filthineſs, will endure no Turpitude or Defilement, nor any thing bordering upon it (not Wantonneſs in Dreſſes and Attire, in Geſture and Motion, not the Eye of Adultery, not any Impurity by Meats or Drinks or any defiling Senſuality, not any ſordid Selfiſhneſs, nor any droſſy polluting love of the World) that hath an horrour and averſation againſt all Sin and Wickedneſs, baniſheth it from all Lines of Communication, and cannot endure the ſight, company and preſence of it. All Animals are affected and addicted according to their kind. Can a Swine be cleanly or a Lion cowardly? it is contrary to their kind: ſo is ſinning againſt God to a regenerate Child of God. It is contra-natural againſt his holy Vital Nature, which abhorreth, reſiſteth and oppoſeth it, and hath a deadly enmity and antipathy againſt it, (r) having got to himſelf ſomething that is pure, and which will not endure to be defiled. He cannot ſin (do any heinous ſin) he cannot endure it nor diſpenſe with ſinning againſt God. (5.) The Di- 1 Joh. 3. 9. vine Nature is the beauteous and lovely Nature. For as Sin and Wickedneſs is a foulneſs, uglineſs and horridneſs of Nature and Practice: So the Divine Nature as it is in God is the Divine Beauty, and as it is in holy Souls it is the Pulchritude of the Soul and the Beauty of Holineſs, wherein there is nothing of unlovely diſpoſition, nothing that is inimical and injurious, nothing but what is ſalutary, innocuous and beneficent, nothing of deformity, nothing to diſfigure or diſcolour, it is Purity without Defilement and Lovelineſs without any Odiouſneſs. Thou art all fair my Love, and there is no ſpot in thee. Nothing is ſo lovely as Love is, (s) which according to the Poet is the moſt beauteous of all the Gods. All Men think a Friend amiable, and it is the Divine Love-nature that maketh them the Friends of God and of Men: but Pride, Envy, Malevolence make them Fiends not Friends. (6.) The Divine Nature is the peaceable Nature (the Mother and Nurſe of Peace) as Peace ſignifieth freedom from Variance and Diſſention (for Love is ἑνωτικὸν, Unitive, and Amity is Peace) as Peace ſignifieth freedom from diſturbance of Mind (for to dwell in Purity, is to dwell in Peace) as Peace ſignifieth freedom from all Trouble and Infelicity (for it is Life and Peace, Rom. 8. 6.) as Peace ſignifieth the Virtue and Duty of Peaceableneſs; for it is firſt pure then peaceable, Jam. 3. 17. The Diſcipline of the Divine Nature is (t) εἰρηνικὴ διδασκαλία, the pacifick Diſcipline, the Peace-making Religion, a Vein of Peace runneth through the whole of it, the Pulſe, the Breath, the Voice of it is Peace. When the Paſtour of the Church entreth, preſently he pronounceth εἰρήνη πᾶσιν, Peace be with you all. (u) When he preacheth, his beginning is, Peace be with you all; when he bleſſeth the People, his Bleſſing is, Peace be with you all; when he injoyneth the Chriſtian Salutation, it is with this clauſe, Peace be with you all; when the Chriſtian Sacrifice was conſecrated, this form was uſed, Peace be with you all; and again at intervening times, Grace and Peace be with you. (7.) The Divine Good Nature is ineffably joyous and comfortable, not only to the poſſeſſours of it, but to others, whoſe Peace and true Joy and Comfort it promoteth (not their Grievance and Calamity;) for in ſuch Senſe the Rom. 14. 17. Apoſtle ſaith of the Kingdom of God, It is Righteouſneſs, Peace and Joy. Charity will not needleſly diſpleaſe, grieve and afflict any, but is to others in its nature and effects like the benign light and influence of the Sun joyous and comfortable. (w) It cauſeth a marvellous gentleneſs and reſtriction of Manners, and Philanthropy and Benignity and Manſuetude. It ſuppreſſeth cauſleſs Jealouſies and Suſpicions, beareth with Infirmities, extinguiſheth thoſe furious Paſſions, that are the Incendiaries of the World, and thoſe hurtful Luſts that are the Plagues and Calamities of the Life of Man. It tameth and ſoftneth and ſweetneth Man's Nature, is compaſſionate, courteous, tender hearted, beateth Swords into Plough-ſhares, yet breaketh not (but cheriſheth and ſtrengtheneth) the bruiſed Reed, healeth the broken hearted, comforteth the feeble minded, ſupporteth the weak, and like Cicero's excellent Man taketh a courſe (x) qui conſolari poſſit afflictos, whereby to comfort the afflicted. The Divine Nature forbiddeth vain Sorrows and Diſcontents as well as vain and ſinful Pleaſures, maketh it unlawful for us to be miſerable, and requireth us to live a Life of the higheſt and divineſt Joy. So divine a felicitative Nature (to our ſelves and others) is certainly the true and genuine kind of good Nature. (8.) The Divine Nature is the moſt noble Nature and of the moſt noble Goodneſs poſſible or conceivable. For as no Creature can be worſe than the Devil, nor any Nature worſe than the Diabolical: So no Being can be better than God, nor any Nature more excellent than the Divine Nature, nor any Goodneſs more noble than the Divine Love and Charity. Nothing is ſo high, nothing ſo deep, nothing ſo large, nothing ſo noble, nothing ſo free and generous, nothing ſo couragious and valiant, nothing ſo ſtrong and invincible, nothing ſo Heroical (in doing and ſuffering for the Welfare of others) as the Divine Love. As it ſent down Chriſt from Heaven (the nobleſt Lover that ever was, whoſe Hiſtory is embelliſh'd with all the Wonders of amazing Love and Goodneſs) ſo it ſent his Apoſtles to wander about the World, and to undergo the greateſt Labours and Sufferings in it for the Converſion and Salvation of Men, without propoſing any worldly advantage to themſelves. And Charity obligeth all Chriſtians to be good to their Brethren at an unparallel'd rate, not only to part with their Eſtates for them, but (in conformity to their Maſter) to lay down their lives for them. (y) Amor vaſtat lineam, Love exceedeth bounds (as the Hebrews ſay) and ſo the Divine Love exceedeth the ordinary bounds of Love. The World is acquainted with no ſuch good Nature as the eximious Love and Goodneſs of the Divine Nature. The admirers therefore of good Nature ſhould not content themſelves with a counterfeit ſhew and reſemblance thereof, but ought in Congruity, to become the faithful Admirers and Lovers of the Divine Nature, which appeareth, to be the true and genuine good Nature. Nor may the proud and ignorant and cenſorious Pretenders to Chriſtianity father their ill Nature upon a Religion of the divine good Nature.

(p) Charitas inchoata inchoata juſtitia eſt, charitas perfecta perfecta juſtitia eſt. S. Aug. de Nat. & Gr. c. 70.

(r) Καθαρεύοντι κηλῖδος ἑαυτῷ, ϗ ὐδ' ὁπωσῦν ἀξιῶν ἐμπαίνεσθαι. Plutarch. de profect. virt. p. 85.

(s) Theoph. ad Autol. p. 84.

(t) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 2. p. 79.

(u) Ὅταν ὁμιλῇ, εἰρήνη πᾶσιν· ὅταν εὐλογῇ, εἰρήνη πᾶσιν· ὅταν ἀσπάζεσθαι κελεύῃ, εἰρήνη πᾶσιν· ὅταν ἡ θυσία τελεσθῇ, εἰρήνη πᾶσι· ϗ μεταξὺ πάλιν, χάρις ὑμῖν ϗ εἰρήνη. S. Chryſoſt. in Coloſſ. λογ. γ.

(w) Ἐμποιεῖ δὲ θαυμαστήν τινα πρᾳότητα, ϗ καταστολὴν τὸ ἦθος, ϗ φιλανθρωπίαν, ϗ χρηστότητα ϗ ἡμερότητα. Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 53.

(x) De Leg. l. 1. ſub fin.

(y) Buxt. Inſtit. Ep. Hebr. p. 270.

CHAP. VI.

1. Of the various Significations of the Kingdom of God. 2. Of the Kingdom of Chriſtianity under ſeveral Conſiderations. 3. Of a mundane Kingdom as oppoſite to the Kingdom of God. 4. Of ſymbolizing with the Jews touching a mundane Kingdom of the Meſſiah. 5. Of the Kingdom of Darkneſs as oppoſite to the Kingdom of God. 6. Of the Kingdom of God in the Senſe of the New Teſtament as oppoſite to a threefold Kingdom of God. 7. What the making the new Kingdom of God compriſeth. 8. Inferences from the making the new Kingdom of God. 9. The Kingdom of God is propounded to our purchaſe.

I. THE Chriſtian Religion which hath been conſider'd as it is The Settlement of Saving Grace, muſt be alſo conſider'd, as it is The Kingdom of God, or The Kingdom of Heaven, which is an uſual Name of it in the New Teſtament. For as Heaven is a known Name of God amongſt the Jews and in Scripture: (z) So the Kingdom of God and the Kingdom of Heaven is in the New Teſtament the ſame Name. The Kingdom of Heaven (regnum cœlorum) frequently occurreth in the Jewiſh Writers (they often ſpeak of taking upon them jugum regni cœlorum) and ſome think, that by the Kingdom of Heaven they mean the internal Love and Fear of God; ſome others (as Grotius and Selden) are of Opinion, that our Saviour in the New Teſtament followeth their Phraſeology, and that they mean by the Kingdom of Heaven התורה their Law. But theſe are great miſtakes; for by taking upon them jugum regni cœlorum (the Yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven) the Jewiſh Writers plainly mean receptionem imperii divini, the reception of the divine imperial Authority (as Abarbinel ſpeaketh;) and they diſtinguiſh between jugum regni cœlorum (the Yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven) and jugum precepti, the Yoke of the Precept (of particular Precepts) of which their Law conſiſteth. In our Saviour's Diſcourſes and the reſt of the New Teſtament all the ſignifications of the Kingdom of Heaven (or the Kingdom of God) are extremely alien and remote from the Jewiſh Law, wherein the Kingdom of Heaven is not ſo much as once named (a) as the Fathers obſerve. In the New Teſtament it is of various ſignifications, but thoſe various ſignifications are not ſuch, or ſo many, as is commonly thought; they are not more, nor any other than the various ſignifications of the word Kingdom in common Language, when we ſpeak of a mundane Kingdom. For in ordinary Language The Kingdom ſignifieth in a threefold Senſe, The Region or Territory, the reigning Eſtate, and the Polity. So the Kingdom of Heaven (or the Kingdom of God) ſometimes ſignifieth Heaven locally underſtood (called by Plato ὁ τῶν κακῶν καθαρὸς τόπος, the place free from all Evils) the celeſtial Paradiſe, the better Country, the Region of Immortality and Beatitude; as the Kingdom of Perſia ſometimes ſignifieth the Country and Territory ſo called. Matth. 5. 10, 20. ch. 7. 21. ch. 8. 11. Marc. 9. 47. ch. 14. 25. Luc. 13. 28. ch. 14. 15. ch. 18. 24, 25. Act. 14. 22. 1 Cor. 6. 9, 10. ch. 15. 50. Gal. 5. 21. Eph. 5. 5. 1 Theſſ. 2. 12. 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. But as in Scripture and common Language The Kingdom often ſignifieth The reigning Eſtate (the Kingdom-eſtate:) So the Kingdom of God often ſignifieth his reigning or eſtate of reigning: As we are told of (z) Grot. Not. in Matth. 3. 2. Lightf. Hor. in loc. & in Joh. 3. 3.

(a) Grot. Not. in Matth. 5. 20.

a certain Aſtrological Book in great Vogue amongſt the Perſians (b) called regnum Dei (the Kingdom of God) which ſignifieth his Eſtate of reigning in the Sovereign adminiſtration of things. In our Saviour's Diſcourſes the Kingdom of God ſeveral times ſignifieth his reigning in the powerful and puiſſant deſtroying his Enemies. Matth. 16. 28. There be ſome ſtanding here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the Son of Man coming in his Kingdom. Marc. 9. 1. There be ſome of them that ſtand here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they have ſeen the Kingdom of God come with Power. Luc. 21. 31. When ye ſee theſe things come to paſs, know ye that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand. The Kingdom of God ſignifieth in the ſame Notion as in theſe Diſcourſes (which relate to the deſtruction of the Temple and of Jeruſalem) when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of Chriſt's final coming to Judgment. 2 Tim. 4. 1. I charge thee before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his Kingdom. So Apoc. 12. 10. Now is come Salvation and Strength, and the Kingdom of our God, and the Power of his Chriſt. A Third Signification there is of the Kingdom of God (or the Kingdom of Heaven;) for moſt uſually in the New Teſtament it ſignifieth That Holy Polity which God and Chriſt is of as the Regent Party thereof; which is the Kingdom of God and his People, the City of God and his Saints, the Holy Empire, Sanctorum Reſpublica, the Kingdom of Chriſtianity and Sanctity. Which muſt be conſider'd under a twofold Notion: As it is The Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity and Sanctity (which is diſtinguiſhable into the Kingdom of Grace and of Glory) and as it is The viſible Chriſtian Church. As it is the viſible Chriſtian Church, it is compar'd to a Knot of wiſe and fooliſh Virgins, a Field of Wheat and Tares, a Net repleniſh'd with good and bad Fiſh, a Family of Servants ſome good and faithful, others wicked and ſlothful, and οἱ πλῆκται, the ſtrikers that beat their Fellow-ſervants and eat and drink with the drunken. As it is the Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity and Sanctity, the comprehenſion of the ineſtimable Goods thereof (the State, Life, Inheritance and Society of real Saints of God) the Apoſtle ſaith of the conſtitutive Eſſence of it, It is Righteouſneſs and Peace and Joy in the Holy Ghoſt. Our Saviour compareth it to a treaſure hid in a Field and a goodly Pearl; which is not to be purchas'd but by duly parting with our earthly All. He allotteth it and confineth it to thoſe only that are of a diſpoſition ſuitable and agreeable thereto (little Children and the poor in Spirit) telleth a Scribe, that he was not far from it, injoineth all Men to ſeek it and the Righteouſneſs that is in it in the firſt place, recommendeth an holy Violence in the taking of it, and this Notion of the Kingdom muſt expound a Petition in our Lord's Prayer Thy Kingdom come. But the Kingdom of God cometh not with Obſervation (it is not of ſuch a Nature, as to come in an exteriour ſolemn and pompous manner) neither ſhall they ſay, lo here, or lo there: for lo the Kingdom of God (the due erecting of it which he requireth) is within you. Luc. 17. 20, 21. Some of our Saviour's Diſcourſes touching the Kingdom of God are beſt interpreted by ſeparating the two diſtinct Notions of it: But as thoſe two diſtinct Notions are in the Nature of the thing conjoin'd and complicated (for the Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity and the viſible Chriſtian Church are really conjoin'd and complicated:) So ſeveral of our Saviour's Diſcourſes are beſt underſtood by conjoining and complicating them in our conſideration, and ſo the Kingdom of God muſt be expounded to ſignifie (in general) the Kingdom of Chriſtianity, which is both the viſible Church and the Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity. In reſpect of both theſe Notions of the Kingdom (conjunct) with a quick and mighty Progreſs it diſpread it ſelf over the World, whence it is compar'd to a Grain of Muſtard-Seed, that is of a mighty growth, and to Leaven that quickly leaveneth the whole lump. Matth. 13. 31, 32. The Scribes and Phariſees ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven (the Kingdom of Chriſtianity) againſt Men. Matth. 23. 13. Our Saviour gave to his Apoſtles the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven (of the Kingdom of Chriſtianity) Matth. 16. 19. and the Affairs of it he compareth to a certain King, which would take account of his Servants, one of which would not forgive his Fellow-ſervant. Matth. 18. 23. When he ſaith, Joh. 3. 5. Except a Man be born of Water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God (the Kingdom of Chriſtianity) his Senſe is; that none can enter into the viſible Church, but he that is born of Water, and none can enter into the Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity, but he that is born of the Spirit.

(b) Huet. Dem. Ev. prop. 4. c. 5.

*Matth.*13. 30, 48. ch. 25. 1, 14.

Rom. 14. 17.
*Matth.*13. 44, 45, 46.
Matth. 5. 3. and 18. 3.
Marc. 12. 34.
Matth. 6. 33. ch. 11, 12.

II. In many places of the New Teſtament The Kingdom of God (or the Kingdom of Heaven) muſt be expounded by The Kingdom of Chriſtianity under ſeveral conſiderations. As when Paul is ſaid, to have diſputed and perſwaded the things concerning the Kingdom of God, to have preach'd the Kingdom of God, and to have teſtified of the Kingdom of God; the Senſe is, that he taught and preach'd the Kingdom (or Religion) of Chriſtianity as being the Kingdom of God. So our Saviour preach'd the Kingdom of God, and ſent out his Diſciples to preach it; and he told them, Unto you it is given to know the Myſtery of the Kingdom of God, which is the Myſtery of the Kingdom (or Religion) of Chriſtianity as being the Kingdom of God. To the Jewiſh Builders he ſaith, The Kingdom of God (which is the Kingdom of Chriſtianity) ſhall be taken from you. The Kingdom of God is the Kingdom of God and his People; therefore a taking away the Kingdom of God from them is a diſcarding them from being his People. The Kingdom of Chriſtianity is the Kingdom of God, as it is the Goſpel-kingdom; whence we read of ſhewing the glad Tydings of the Kingdom of God, of preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdom of God. When our Saviour ſaith, If I with the Finger of God caſt out Devils, no doubt the Kingdom of God is come upon you; the Senſe is, his Kingdom of Chriſtianity is come upon you, as to his ſupernatural Means of erecting it. His Kingdom of Chriſtianity as to his way of adminiſtring the Affairs of it, is not in Word but in Power. So the Apoſtle's Text muſt be expounded; and when our Saviour ſaith of John the Baptiſt, he that is leaſt in the Kingdom of God is greater than he: the Kingdom of God is generally expounded, to ſignifie his Kingdom of Chriſtianity, the meaneſt Chriſtian being in ſeveral reſpects ſuperiour to John the Baptiſt. The meaneſt genuine Chriſtian is a Member of the Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity, wherein the ſpurious illegitimate Chriſtians have no Memberſhip; and in this Senſe the words of our Saviour are moſt probably to be underſtood. Matth. 5. 19 Whoſoever ſhall break one of theſe leaſt Commandments, and ſhall teach

Act. 19. 8. ch. 20. 25. ch. 28. 23, 31.
Luc. 4. 43. ch. 9. 2.
Marc. 4. 11.

Matth. 21. 43.

Luc. 8. 1. ch. 11. 20.
Marc. 1. 14.

1 Cor. 4. 20.

Luc. 7. 28.

Men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven (they muſt not be owned for Chriſtians, that are licentious in their Principles and Practices:) But whoſoever ſhall do and teach them, the ſame ſhall be called great in the Kingdom of Heaven, he ſhall be no under Graduate in Chriſtianity. Some few places there are of the New Teſtament, which yet remain to be conſider'd, in the expounding of which ſome affix to the Kingdom of God (or the Kingdom of Heaven) a ſingular Interpretation. (c) For they are of Opinion, that the Kingdom of Heaven mentioned in John the Baptiſt and our Saviour's preaching, and urg'd by them as a mighty motive to Repentance, ſignifieth the fatal deſtruction of the Jews. And it may be ſuppos'd, that the fatal deſtruction of the Jews is intimated in thoſe places, but it is not ſignified ſave only conſequentially by the Kingdom of Heaven mentioned by John the Baptiſt and our Saviour. Matth. 3. 2. ch. 4. 17. Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Marc. 1. 15. The time is fulfilled and the Kingdom of God is at hand: Repent ye, and believe the Goſpel. Our Saviour ſaith, The time is fulfilled; therefore the Kingdom of God which he ſpeaketh of, is the Kingdom of Chriſtianity. And there is no reaſon, to ſuppoſe, that the Kingdom of Heaven in John the Baptiſt's and our Saviour's preaching ſignifieth otherwiſe than in the Apoſtle's preaching to the Cities, who were commanded to ſhake off the Duſt of their Feet againſt the Unbelieving and Impenitent, ſaying, Be ye ſure of this, that the Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you, Luc. 10. 11. So John the Baptiſt and our Saviour inculcate the approach of the Kingdom of Heaven as a mighty Motive to Repentance, becauſe it would be ruinous to the Impenitent and Unbelieving Jews, and not only in reſpect of their ſpiritual, but ſecular Concerns. For if they remain'd unconverted, the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven would be to them an horrendous aggravation of Sin and Puniſhment, and would iſſue in a tremendous temporal deſtruction of their Nation.

III. From a careful ſurvey of the New Teſtament it appeareth, that uſually The Kingdom of God ſignifieth, that Holy Polity his Kingdom of Chriſtianity and Sanctity, which ſtandeth oppos'd and muſt be contradiſtinguiſh'd to the humane mundane Kingdoms, the Kingdom of Darkneſs and to a threefold Kingdom of God. (d) All the things of this Kingdom being ſpiritual and heavenly, it is rightly called Cæleſtial and the Kingdom of Heaven. The Name of this Republick (the Kingdom of Heaven) denoteth it, to be originally and of Kind and Quality a ſpiritual, divine and heavenly Republick, of kind different from and tranſcendent to the humane and mundane kind of Kingdoms. For ſuch it is in reſpect of the Sovereign of it (who was not of this World, when he was in the World) and in reſpect of the genuine Subjects of it (regenerate Chriſtians called out of the World) whoſe State and Condition is divine and heavenly, as alſo their Life and Laws. All the genuine Citizens of this Divine Kingdom are Citizens of Heaven (peregrini deorſum, Cives ſurſum) the ſtate of Sanctity which they are in, is a lower Room of Heaven (e) εἰκὼν δὲ τῆς οὐρανίου ἐκκλησίας, ἡ ἐπίγειος, and the Church on Earth is an Image of the Church in Heaven. Not ſuch an Image of the heavenly Kingdom as a mundane Kingdom is, which only containeth certain umbratile Reſemblances of the heavenly Kingdom, that are of another kind: But ſuch an Image of Heaven as an Holy Man is of God, whoſe Holineſs is a Child-like reſemblance of God: So Grace is (as the Schools ſay) ætas infantilis gloriæ, Glory in its infancy and inchoation. As the Kingdom of Glory therefore, ſo the Kingdom of Grace, is immenſly diſtant from the terrene and mundane Kingdoms, wherein there is nothing higher and better than the humane and mundane kind of Goods and Excellencies; for the Kingdom of God and his Saints according to Chriſtianity is neceſſarily the Kingdom of the Saint of God-kind of things according to Chriſtianity, (f) wherein there is no lineament of the World or of any mundane Promiſe (ſave only of Food and Raiment) it ſetteth forth nothing but what is worthy of Heaven, and nothing elſe it offereth to its Religioniſts. The Kingdom of Chriſtianity is not a Kingdom of mundane Riches, but of divine Graces; a Kingdom without any Military Forts or Caſtles to fortifie it, without any Armies or Navies to defend it, without any worldly Wealth to ſupport it, without any external Splendor and Magnificence to adorn it. Mundane Wealth and Pomp abound in mundane Kingdoms, but this Kingdom is regnum crucis (whence it ſometimes ſeem'd forlorn and deſolate in the Eye of the World) the Honours, Riches, Immunities and Priviledges of it are the ſpiritual, divine and heavenly, and ſuch is the Peace of it, the War that it manageth, and the Fortitude that it exerciſeth. (g) The Fortitude of the Gentiles is from mundane Cupidity, but the Fortitude of Chriſtians is from divine Charity, which is the Virtue of this City of God, a Virtue that none vanquiſheth, the Fire of it no Waves of the World, no Floods of Temptation extinguiſh. A mundane Kingdom is an external Domination over the Bodies and Eſtates of Men, and the main concern of Civil Government is for their ſecular Weal and Proſperity; its Rewards and Puniſhments are meerly ſecular, and it is managed by external Force and Coaction: But this Kingdom is a Soul-ſovereignty (a Sovereignty over the Territory of the Soul) which demandeth the Soul-honour and Service, is for the Holineſs and Happineſs of Souls, beſtoweth the Soul-goods and inflicteth the Soul-evils, its Rewards and Puniſhments are the Spiritual and Eternal; it pretendeth not to any ſecular Proſperities, nor any ſecular Power, nor any coercive force over the Bodies and Eſtates of Men, is not a Government adminiſtred by external force and the power of the Sword, nor was it planted or propagated by the Arm of Fleſh: But it began in the form of a Servant and the ignominy of the Croſs, without the power or learning of the World to countenance it (whence it ſeem'd fooliſh in the Eye of the World) and in its Virtue, Genius and Spirit was not a little unlike the World, nor a little diſlik'd by the World.

The Civil Government in mundane Kingdoms is in a Lordly way (h) not ſuch as that of a Wife,

nor

(c) Dr. Hamm. on Matth. 3.

(d) Ut omnia hujus regni ſpiritalia & cæleſtia ſunt, jure cæleſte & cælorum regnum appellatur. Bucer. Enarrat. in Mat. 3. 7.

(e) Clem. Str. l. 4. p. 384.

(f) In quâ nullum vel mundi vel mundani promiſſi occurrit lineamentum, nil niſi cælo dignum ea pandit, atque cultoribus ſuis offert. Vorſt. Not. in Maimon. de fundam. leg. p. 139.

(g) Fortitudinem gentilium mundana cupiditas, fortitudinem autem Chriſtianorum Dei Charitas facit. S. Aug. contr. poſt. reſp. Julian. l. 1. c. 81. Qui vult intelligere virtutem hujus civitatis, intelligat vim charitatis. Ipſa eſt virtus quam nemo vincit. Hujus ignem nulli fluctus ſeculi, nulla flumina tentationis extinguunt. Idem in Pſal. 47.

(h) Οὐ πιςτὸς οἷος ὁ τῆς γυναικὸς, οὐδὲ πιςτὸς οἷος nor as that of Servants, but much more formidable; for we ſee every where ſharp Swords, Executioners, Pains, Baſtiles, Puniſhments. But the Government in the Kingdom of Chriſtianity is the holy happy Government, Government without any Miſgovernment, and wherein there is nothing of harſhneſs and arrogance (that of a Shepherd over his Sheep, of an Husband over his Spouſe) the Government of the Lamb of God and of the Son of Man, which denoteth the Humanity and Benignity, the Manſuetude and Graciouſneſs of his Government. In his Kingdom thoſe that have the greater places in it, muſt not be like the ſecular Grandees in their Temper and Behaviour, nor muſt they be like them in external State and Condition (for State, Splendor and Riches accrue to ſecular Grandees by their great Places:) But they that have the greater Places and Offices in Chriſt's Kingdom, muſt be as the Servants of all in virtuous Temper and Behaviour, and in their external State and Condition they muſt have nothing of Secular-like State and Greatneſs (that gratifieth worldly Pride) by their great Places, only greater Service, Miniſtery, Hardſhip and ſecular Inconveniences will accrue to them in this World. Matth. 25. 20---28. Te know, that the Princes of the Gentiles exerciſe dominion over them, and they that are great exerciſe authority upon them. But it ſhall not be ſo among you: But whoſoever will be great among you, let him be your Miniſter. And whoſoever will be chief among you, let him be your Servant. Even as the Son of Man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter. (Not to aſſume to himſelf or enjoy State and Greatneſs in this World.) Luk. 22. 26. He that is greateſt among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth ſerve. For whether is greater, he that ſitteth at meat or he that ſerveth? Is not he that ſitteth at meat? But I am among you as he that ſerveth. Not any place in Chriſt's Kingdom is a place of ſecular-like State and Greatneſs. (i) When the Apoſtle ſaith, he that deſireth the Office of a Biſhop, deſireth a good Work, his intent is, to explain, what Epiſcopacy is, which ſignifieth the taking care and overſight of others, and is the Name of a Work and Labour, not of an Honour. (k) He that deſireth the Office of a Biſhop, deſireth a good Work; a Work, not a Dignity; Labour, not ſenſitive Delight and Pleaſure; a Work whereby he may decreaſe in Humility, not ſwell with Sublimity. Chriſt hath not annex'd any thing of ſecular-like State and Greatneſs to the chief Places and Offices in his Kingdom, and it is againſt his mind, that any thing of that Nature (which is incongruous and extravagant) ſhould be annex'd thereto by others. Non his delectatur Chriſtus, quæ miratur mundus. The World's Pomps and Vanities are out of faſhion in Chriſt's Kingdom. The World is for Preferment, and Chriſt is for a virtuous Self-abaſement. The World is for (l) πλουσιακὴ διαγωγή, the rich and opulent way of living, and to be λαμπρόβιοι, great and ſplendid (in Houſe and Garb, Port and Proviſion) and Chriſt is for a Croſs and the meanneſs of Service. He was not one of the World's Grandees or gay Gallants, he neither affected nor enjoy'd its ſplendid Gauds and Braveries of high living (nor is it Chriſt-like Virtue to affect them, or a Chriſt-like Condition to enjoy them:) His reigning Condition was not of this World, and that which is meant of his reigning Eſtate and Condition, is fitly applicable to his Polity, My Kingdom is not of this World, Joh. 18. 36. If the Temperament and Conſtitution of it was not alien from the World, it could not be of Kind and Quality Chriſt's Kingdom.

IV. Yet in the Chriſtian Church in great part and from ancient time the mundane Spirit hath prevail'd and reign'd to the height of wonder and aſtoniſhment (ſymbolizing with the carnal Jews, their ſecular Meſſiah and his mundane Kingdom;) and ſo far as it hath prevailed and reign'd, the Church hath not been of Kind and Quality Chriſtian, but a mundane Republick. Such a Kingdom of Chriſt which is a Kingdom of mundane Pomp and Felicity, and ſhould continue a Thouſand Years after the Reſurrection, the ancient Chiliaſts dream'd of; and ſuch a Kingdom of Chriſt the Church of Rome is, that is no Chiliaſt, nor dreameth of a Thouſand Years ſecular Felicity after the Reſurrection; for ſhe more than dreameth of a worldly kind of Kingdom and Monarchy, a Polity of ſecular State and Grandeur maintain'd by worldly Craft, the power of the Sword and a barbarous Inquiſition; a Kingdom of mundane Eccleſiaſtic Bravery, of Ambition and ſecular Preheminence, of all imaginable mundane Pomp, her pretended Vicar of Chriſt (who hath his Kingdom in this World though Chriſt had not) preſiding in excelſo Eccleſiæ militantis throno ſuper gentes & regna conſtitutus (as he ſaith in his Bulls) diſpoſing of the Crowns and Kingdoms of the World, beſtowing the Titles of mundane Honour and Dignity, and treading on the Necks of Kings. At this day the Patriarch of Alexandria giveth himſelf the Title of τῆς οἰκουμένης κριτής, Judge of the World, and he of Conſtantinople will be Oecumenical Patriach. Τὸ μεγαλεῖον τοῦ πατριαρχικοῦ θρόνου, is an expreſſion of Balſamon upon the Ninth Canon of the Second Council of Nice: Nor is it only to Patriarchs that ſuch ſuperlative Magnificence is attributed, but (m) the Dignity of every Biſhop is ſaid to be equal to the Imperatorial, and in ſacred places to be preferr'd before it. (n) Euſebius the Empreſs ſent for Leontius Biſhop of Tripolis to come to her. He made anſwer, that if ſhe would have him to come to her, the Reverence due to Biſhops muſt be preſerv'd. When I enter, you muſt come down from your ſublime Throne, and reverently come to meet me, and put your Head under my Hands, to receive my Benediction. Then I muſt ſit, you muſt modeſtly ſtand and not ſit, till I give you a ſign (ſo the Biſhops at the Council of Nice beckned to Conſtantine, to ſit down) if you like theſe Conditions, I will come; if otherwiſe, you can do nothing for me, that will countervail the neglect of the Honour due unto Biſhops and the violation of the divine Inſtitute of the Prieſthood. By C. Borrhomeus and his Milan Council Biſhops are forbidden to ſtand, when Princes ſit, even for ſaying Grace at Meat, or otherwiſe to depreſs and abject themſelves to Princes. By theſe Inſtitutes of the Prieſthood the Princes became humble, but the Biſhops (profeſſing the Diſcipline of Humility) became enormouſly proud (not ſo humble and ſober as thoſe Rabbins, ὁ τῶν δούλων, ἀλλὰ πολλῷ φοβερώτερος. Ξίφη γάρ ἐστιν ἰδεῖν ἠκονημένα πανταχοῦ, δημίους, κολάσεις, βασανιστήρια, τιμωρίας. S. Chryſoſt. T. 5. p. 13.

---

Dan. 7. 13.

(i) Qui Epiſcopatum deſiderat bonum opus deſiderat. Exponere voluit Apoſtolus, quid ſit Epiſcopatus: quia nomen eſt operis, non honoris. S. Aug. de C. D. l. 19. c. 19.

(k) Si quis Epiſcopatum deſiderat, bonum opus deſiderat; opus non dignitatem; laborem non delicias; opus per quod humilitate decreſcat, non intumeſcat faſtigio. S. Hieron. ap. Grot. Not. in Matth. 20, 22.

(l) M. Ant. l. 1. S. 3.

(m) Petav. T. 4. l. 14. c. 12.

(n) Baron. ad an. 325. n. 16.

bins, who ſay (o) we do not expect great Revenues and Riches, to be carry'd in Chariots, and to drink Wine with various ſorts of Muſick, in the Kingdom of our Meſſiah) as appeareth from the ancient complaints (p) of their tyrannical Domination, their ἐξουσίας κοσμικῶς τῦφος, fumoſus ſeculi typhus, puffy Grandeur and Magnificence of the World, (q) their φιλονεικίαι ϗ φιλαρχίαι, outragious Contentions and Ambitions, (r) their λύσσα φιλαρχίας, madneſs of Ambition, ὑπὲρ θρόνων ἔρις, Contention for their Thrones, for the extent of their Dioceſes, for Preheminence and Grandeur (who ſhould be greateſt) the bloody Conteſts that were at their Elections, their furious and bloody Contentions and Perſecutions for their Opinions, their lordly Superiority over the Presbyters, and their diſcarding them from the Government of the Church (who are really their Collegues) their depriving the Church of due Paſtoral Government (for want of which ὑλομανεῖ, it is as a Wilderneſs or as the Field of the Sluggard) and adminiſtring their kind of Church-government, which in the main of it is not the Chriſtiano-paſtoral kind of Government and Diſcipline (that is now loſt out of the Church) but a mundane and ſecular kind of rule and way of procedure in Government, which ſignifieth nothing to the promoting Saving Chriſtianity and the real Holineſs of the Church. What a marvellouſly mundane Spirit of pride prevailed in the Guides of the Church, when many Canons were made for preſerving the Grandeur of Biſhops, Metropolitans and Patriarchs, and that leſſer Cities ſhould have no Biſhops, ne vileſcat nomen Epiſcopi? When in the Council of Chalcedon the Phraſe was, that Biſhops taught Men by the Magnificence of their Footſteps? The Government of the Church ought to carry the Marks and Signatures of the Divinity and Sanctity of our Religion and its due alienation from the World (as a Chriſtians Habit according to S. Baſil ſhould lively expreſs the meekneſs and humility of his Mind:) But they that have modell'd Eccleſiaſtical Government, have proceeded by other Rules, they have deſignedly made it conformable to the World. (s) As all mundane Power is differenc'd by theſe degrees of Dignities, firſt there is the Emperour, then the Cæſars, then Kings, Dukes and Counts and Tribunes, ſo Eccleſiaſtical Dignity is found to be ordinated by the Holy Fathers. But thus to conform the Church to the World is humanam Eccleſiam facere, to make the Church Humane (which ſeem'd to S. Cyprian a Crime of a ſtrange Nature) and to deſtroy her Divine Nature and Excellency. Which is ſo entirely deſtroy'd in the Church of Rome, that there is great cauſe to complain (t) It is no more a Church, but a certain human Republick. To be a Biſhop, is no more a Service and Miniſtery, but a mundane Honour and Dignity. If the Guides of the Church be of this Character, their Inſtitutes of Religion will be mundane in the deſign of them (mainly for the Honour and Profit of the Prieſthood) by their Artifices they will make the Church a Kingdom of mundane Riches and ſecular Pomp, they will accommodate Religion to their own Genius, and dreſs up their Godſervice with a phantaſtick Bravery of pompous Ceremony, which is as alien from the Spouſe of Chriſt, as the ſecular Gauds are from Chriſtian Women. (u) Mulierem ornari ſeculariter non oportare, a Chriſtian Woman ought not to be adorn'd with ſecular Bravery. So to maintain Chriſtianity by the Methods deſtructive to the lives of Men, as worldly Kingdoms muſt be upheld and maintain'd, is at a great rate mundane and unchriſtian. (w) Abſit ut igni humano vindicetur divina ſecta. Far be it from us, that the Divine Sect be vindicated by Humane Fire. Our Saviour argueth, If my Kingdom were of this World, then would my Servants fight. And the Argument may be thus inverted; if his pretended Servants be a furious fighting Generation, their Kingdom is of this World; for they are Aliens from Chriſtianity. Such were the Monks of ancient times, a Zealotick Generation of Warriours (like the Jewiſh Zealots) and ſuch were their nominal Chriſtians at Alexandria (x) who murder'd that excellent Mathematician Hypatia the Daughter of Theon, tore her to pieces and burn'd her Members. (y) On the Sacrament-day they kill'd Proterius Biſhop of Alexandria in the Baptiſtery (by the inſtigation of Timotheus his Corrival) his dead Body torn in pieces they drew through the City, afterwards burn'd it (throwing the Aſhes into the Air) and ſo barbarous was their rage, that they tore in pieces his Bowels and ate them. Pretending Chriſtians (more like the Fiends of Hell than the Citizens of the Kingdom of Heaven) by their fierce and furious Contentions, Seditions and Tumults, Slaughters, Perſecutions and bloody Wars have made the viſible Church called the Kingdom of Heaven, to reſemble that mundane City, to which Heaven ſtandeth oppos'd in Philoſophy as well as Chriſtianity. For ſo Philoſophy confronteth two Cities the Terreſtrial and Celeſtial (ſuppos'd to be repreſented in Vulcan's Shield) and thus deſcribeth the Terreſtrial. (z) In this there are Wars, Seditions, Rapines, Fightings, Cryings, Wailings and Lamentations.

V. The Kingdom of God that in the New Teſtament is oppos'd to the mundane humane Kingdoms, is much more eminently oppos'd to Satan's Kingdom. For the Summary of Chriſtianity is compris'd in the knowledge of the two oppoſite Religions, the Law and the Religion of Saving Grace, the two oppoſite Lives of Fleſh and Spirit (vital Carnality and vital Sanctity) the two oppoſite Eſtates of Life and Death, the two oppoſite Kingdoms, the Kingdom of God and of Satan. (a) For there are two Nations and two Kingdoms, the one of Chriſt, the other of Satan: Of which it might be ſaid, Nation ſhall riſe againſt Nation, and Kingdom againſt Kingdom: and this doth not ceaſe to be ſo from the time that it was ſaid, Repent for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Then God began, to ſet up his Kingdom, which was the raiſing up Kingdom againſt Kingdom, a Kingdom that both in the nature and deſign of it is oppoſite to Satan's Kingdom, the one being the Kingdom of Darkneſs (of the darkneſs of Ignorance, Sin and Miſery) the other the Kingdom of Light (the light of Saving Knowledge, Grace and Comfort;) for Chriſt both in himſelf and to us is Light. (b) We (regenerate Chriſtians) are in Chriſt, that is, in the true Sun and the true Day. When is he without Light, (o) Vorſt. Not. in Abravan. de cap. Fid. p. 63, 60.

(p) Grot. de Imp. ſum. poteſt. p. 360.

(q) Gr. Naz. Ep. 55.

(r) Idem Carm. de vit. ſua p. p. 25.

(s) Sicut omnis mundana poteſtas his gradibus dignitatum à ſe invicem diſtat, id eſt, ut primus ſit Auguſtus vel Imperator, deinde Cæſares, deinde Reges, Duces & Comites atque Tribuni, ita & Eccleſiaſtica dignitas ordinata à ſanctis Patribus invenitur. Selden Titles of Hon. p. 232. Ed. 3.

(t) Spalat. de profect. ſuâ.

(u) S. Cypr. Teſtim. ad Quirin. l. 3. n. 36.

(w) Tertull. Apol. c. 37.

(x) Socrat. Hiſt. l. 7. c. 15.

(y) Petav. T. 4. l. 1. c. 16.

(z) Ἐν δὲ τῇ, πόλεμοι καὶ στάσεις, ϗ ἁρπαγαὶ ϗ μάχαι, ϗ ὀλολυγαὶ, ϗ οἰμωγαὶ, ϗ γόοι. M. Tyr. Diſſ. 27.

(a) Duæ quippe gentes ſunt, & duo regna, unum ſcilicet Chriſti, alterum Diaboli: de quibus dici potuit; Exurget gens contra gentem, & regnum ſuper regnum: quod non deſinit fieri, ex quo dictum eſt; Agite pœnitentiam, appropinquavit enim regnum cœlorum. S. Aug. Ep. 80.

(b) In Chriſto, hoc eſt, in ſole & die vero ſumus. Quando ſine lumine eſt, cui lumen in corde eſt? Aut quando ſol ei & dies non eſt, cui ſol & dies Chriſtus

Light, that hath Light in his Heart? or when is the Sun and the Day wanting to him, to whom Chriſt is both Sun and Day? We that are in Chriſt, that is, always in the Light, let us not ceaſe from Prayer even in the Night-time. In the ſtate of Chriſtian Regeneracy the Darkneſs is paſt and the true Light now ſhineth (1 Joh. 2. 8.) which ſtate of Regeneracy is the Kingdom of God and the Kingdom of Light. If thou haſt entred into it, (c) the Darkneſs is departed from thy inward Man; the Night that was there is diſſipated; the caliginouſneſs is done away; the Splendor of the Day hath enligtned thy Senſes; thou haſt begun to be a Man of Light; for Chriſt is Light and the Day. (d) He is Light, we without him are Darkneſs. Recede from him, thou wilt remain in thy Darkneſs: Come to him, thou wilt have Light, but not thine own. For ye were ſometimes Darkneſs, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Faithful, that were ſometimes Infidels. Ye were ſometimes Darkneſs; but now Light in the Lord. If Light in the Lord, they were Darkneſs without the Lord. (e) All the Saints are Lights, but through believing they are illuminated by him, from whom if one departeth, he will be darkned. But when he ſaith, that every one who believeth in me, may not remain in Darkneſs, It is plain from his words, that he found all in Darkneſs. All Mankind therefore in their Unregeneracy (Jews as well as Gentiles) are called Darkneſs by the Evangeliſt, Joh. 1. 5. The Light ſhined in Darkneſs, and the Darkneſs comprehended it not. (f) Mundus enim Tenebræ: The World is that which is fitly ſignify'd by Darkneſs; for the Life of all unregenerate Mankind is (g) ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ σκότους, the Life of Darkneſs (the Darkneſs of reigning Carnality and Wickedneſs:) but the Gentiles more eſpecially and eminently were invelop'd in Darkneſs, and with reſpect to them more eſpecially the Apoſtle confronteth and oppoſeth the Kingdom of Darkneſs to the Kingdom of God, Col. 1. 13. Who hath delivered us from the power of Darkneſs and tranſlated us into the Kingdom of his dear Son. Chriſtianity is (as Jamblichus ſaith of Philoſophy) ἡμεροειδὴς, like unto the Day, Heatheniſm is of the Night and of Darkneſs in matters of Religion, whence the Apoſtle to the Gentiles was ſent, to turn them from Darkneſs to Light and from the power of Satan unto God. Chriſt's deſign was againſt Satan as having a Kingdom in the World (which is the Kingdom of Darkneſs) he reign'd, and Sin and the Law reign'd over the World of benighted Mankind: but theſe Chriſt deſpoil'd of their Regnancy by his Paſſion, whence he is ſaid to have ſpoiled Principalities and Powers, Col. 2. 15. which Divine Victory was follow'd by a triumph over them; for having aſcended he led captivity captive, and made ſhew of them openly (in the Apoſtles caſting out Devils and in their ſucceſsful preaching whereby Demonolatry fell) θριαμβεύσας αὐτοὺς ἐν αὐτῷ, there was a triumphing over them in him. His Kingdom was ſet up in oppoſition to Satan's Kingdom, and between theſe two Kingdoms there is the greateſt Hoſtility and Contrariety imaginable. If therefore in a Polity which calleth it ſelf Chriſt's Kingdom and the Catholick Church, there is no ſuch contrariety, if inſtead thereof it groſly ſymbolizeth with Satan's Kingdom in the main and principal Properties of it, if it be a Kingdom of the Darkneſs of Ignorance, a Kingdom of horrid Superſtition and Idolatry, a Kingdom of Luciferian Pride, a Kingdom of Uncleanneſs (as Satan is the unclean Spirit) a Kingdom of Worldlineſs (as Satan is the Prince of this World) a Kingdom of Lyes (as Satan is a Lyar, whoſe lying is ſelf-originated, his own kind of thing, and the Father of the Fact and Family) a Kingdom of barbarous Perſecution, Homicide and Murder (as Satan was a Murderer from the beginning) a Kingdom of Profaneneſs and of all outragious Wickedneſs (as Satan and his Angels are πνεύματα πονηρίας, Spirits of Wickedneſs) ſuch a pretended Kingdom of Chriſt is neceſſarily a grand Myſtery of Iniquity as being at leaſt in great degree Satan's Kingdom.

VI. The Kingdom of God in the Senſe of the New Teſtament (beſides that it is oppos'd to the Humane Mundane Kingdoms and to the Kingdoms of Darkneſs) is oppos'd to a threefold Kingdom of God. For the whole Univerſe is his Poſſeſſion and Dominion, is govern'd by his Providence and ſubjected to his irreſiſtible authoritative Power: but it is not the Holy Polity, which is his Kingdom. His Univerſal Dominion and Sovereignty over the Creatures the Scripture uſually calleth his Kingdom: but this Kingdom is extrinſick and extra-ſocietive, whereas in his Church and Kingdom God is an intrinſick imperial Head and Sovereignty. Such he was in ſome degree in the Church of old Iſrael, which was a Theocracy; yet the Church of old Iſrael was not that Holy Polity, which is his Kingdom: but this Kingdom is (in the ſecond place) oppos'd to his Kingdom over old Iſrael. In Solomon's time (h) the Theocracy was in great degree diminiſhed, yet Solomon is ſaid to ſit upon the Throne of the Kingdom of the Lord over Iſrael. And in the laſt times of the Judaical Polity God is called the King of Iſrael, and Jeruſalem the City of the great King. The Jews ſeem to think, that their Theocracy in ſome degree ſtill continueth; for thus they continue to pray; Let thy Kingdom reign over us for ever. God did reign over them peculiarly (they were in Covenant and the ſtate of Society with God as a People with their God, in the eldeſt times of their Commonwealth he made Laws for them peculiarly, govern'd them by his Oracles, appointed their Magiſtrates, receiv'd their Tribute, fought their Battels, dwelt amongſt them and walk'd in the midſt of their Camp:) but this Kingdom of God over Iſrael did not make them a Kingdom much leſs the Kingdom of God. For till the time of the Judges was expir'd, and their Kings were conſtituted, there was no ſuch thing as the Kingdom of Iſrael. Before that time they might be called a Kingdom of Prieſts, Exod. 19. 6. but a Kingdom there doth not ſignifie politically (that Species of Polity contradiſtinct to a Commonwealth) it ſignifieth only a Regial Sacerdotal Syſtem (regale ſacerdotium) in reſpect of the Iſraelites Nobilitation of Eſtate; that obeying God they ſhould be ſuch as are of regial, ſublime, unſervile condition. But as they were not a Kingdom, till their Kings were conſtituted notwithſtanding their Theocracy; ſo if their Kings had been remov'd, they would have been a Commonwealth, not a Kingdom, although the eſt? Qui autem in Chriſto, hoc eſt, in lumine ſemper ſumus, nec noctibus ab oratione ceſſemus. S. Cypr. de orat. domin. ſub fin.

Theocracy

---

(c) Receſſerunt de pectore tuo tenebræ, nox inde diſcuſſa eſt, caligo deterſa eſt, illuminavit ſenſus tuos ſplendor diei, homo lucis eſſe cœpiſti, quia lux & dies Chriſtus eſt. Idem de Zel. & Liv.

(d) Ille lumen, nos ſine illo tenebræ. Si receſſeris, in tuis tenebris remanebis: Si acceſſeris, non de tuo lucebis. Fuiſtis enim aliquando tenebræ, ait Apoſtolus fidelibus ex infidelibus. Fuiſtis aliquando tenebræ: nunc autem lux in Domino. Si ergo lux in Domino, tenebræ ſine Domino. S. Aug. de Temp. Ser. 256.

(e) Lumina ſunt omnes ſancti, ſed credendo ab eo illuminantur, à quo ſi quis receſſerit, tenebrabitur. Cùm autem dicit, ut omnis qui credit in me, in tenebris non maneat; ſatis manifeſtat, omnes ſe in tenebris inveniſſe. Idem in Joann. Tr. 54.

(f) Idem ibid. Tr. 3.

(g) Macar. Hom. 1.

Act. 26. 18.

Eph. 4. 8.

Joh. 8. 44.

(h) Spencer. Diſſ. de Theocr. Jud. c. 4. ſ. 2.

1 Chron. 28. 5.

Zeph. 3. 15.

Matth. 5. 15.

Theocracy remain'd, and God continu'd, to be their King. For God was their King but in a certain ſenſe and degree, he did never take upon him, to be abſolutely the Eſtate of their Civil-ſovereignty (or Civil-political King) ſo to conſtitute them a Kingdom. (i) Diſcourſes therefore of their Theocracy muſt be underſtood with limitation of ſenſe, for God was ſo their King (Civil-political) as not to be their King; they ſo elected him to be their King, as not to elect him for their King; and ſo took an Oath of Allegiance to him, as not to take an Oath of Allegiance to him. For they entred into Covenant with him as a People with the Lord their God, and this was the only Oath of Allegiance, which they took; which is a plain intimation, that although God did in many reſpects exerciſe a Regial Civil Government over them, yet he was not properly and plenarily their (Civil-political) King, that conſtituted them properly and plenarily a Monarchy and a Kingdom. But as if the Pope ſhould in many reſpects exerciſe a Regial Civil Government over the Commonwealth of Venice, yet without conſtituting them properly and plenarily a Monarchy and a Kingdom; ſuch was the caſe of old Iſrael, before their Theocracy was diminiſh'd by conſtituting their King. A third Kingdom of God to which his Kingdom in the ſenſe of the New Teſtament is oppos'd, is his Original Kingdom; for the New Teſtament-kingdom of God is of late creation, and muſt be called, The new Kingdom of God, as Tertullian ſtileth it. (k) We ought chiefly to inquire, whether a new Lawgiver is not to be expected, and the Heir of a new Teſtament, a Prieſt of new Sacrifices, and a purger by a new Circumciſion, and the obſerver of an Eternal Sabbath: who cometh to reſtrain the Old Law and to make a New Teſtament, to offer new Sacrifices, and to repreſs the old Ceremonies, and the old Circumciſion with its Sabbath, and to publiſh a new Kingdom not ſubject to Corruption. As the new Teſtament is the new Law of God, ſo the Kingdom of the new Teſtament is the new Kingdom of God, which cannot be oppos'd to an old Iſraelitical Kingdom of God; for there was no ſuch Kingdom. Although ſome ſay, (l) that the Hebrews being deliver'd out of Egypt transferr'd their own right upon God, and ſo he became their King (or ſumma poteſtas) and had a Kingdom ex vi pacti, by their Election and Covenant. And theſe ſuppoſe, that (m) by Religion the Kingdom of God is conſtituted, ſo that Religion is almoſt nothing elſe but the Conſtitution of the Kingdom of God. But it ought to be conſider'd, that not every Religion, nor every Religion of the true God conſtituteth the Kingdom of God, but only ſuch a Religion which is Sanctity as to the Soul-intereſts, which conſtituteth the genuine Saints of God (the Citizens of Heaven and the Heirs of Salvation;) for in the ſame Senſe that Chriſt is the Imperial Eſtate of Chriſtianity Imperial, God is the Imperial Eſtate of Sanctity Imperial. If the Theocracy had conſtituted old Iſrael a Kingdom, that Kingdom would have been a Polity of different kind and quality from the Kingdom of God; for it would have been but an earthly and mundane kind of Kingdom, a Polity of kind and quality Civil-religious (in reſpect of its Laws, Virtue, Sanctity, Rewards and Puniſhments;) whereas the Kingdom of God is the Kingdom of Heaven, of a Spiritual, Divine and Heavenly Nature, and of kind and quality the Spiritual Religious Polity (elſe it could not be the oppoſite both to the Kingdom of Darkneſs and the Humane Mundane Kingdoms) The genuine Saint of God-kind of Kingdom. No other Polity can be the Kingdom of God (which is the Kingdom of God and his Saints in truth ſuch) but the Kingdom of real and ſaving Sanctity, which is peculiar to the genuine Saints of God; whereas old Iſrael were the Saints of God, the holy People, and the holy Commonwealth, but in the ſame ſenſe as they were Jews, not thoſe that are in truth ſuch but in Type, and their Religion, Polity and Theocracy was but a typical adumbration of the Kingdom of God.

VII. The new Kingdom of God is made by making the new Settlement and Diſpenſation of things (which maketh it to be the new Kingdom of God:) but the making this new Settlement is not meerly the making a new Law, it compriſeth the making a new Lord, a new Law, and the general Peace; upon all which accounts it is the making a new Kingdom of God. The making a new Lord was the making a new Mediatory Saviour-King in his Kingdom-eſtate, which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, Act. 2. 36. Let all the Houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt. Act. 5. 31. Him hath God exalted with his Right-hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour. He was originally deſign'd, to be a Saviour-prince (to Mankind and to his People) the whole of his Mediation or Inter-agency here on Earth was deſign'd, to render him ſuch a Saviour-prince: but he was only ſuch a Prince in fieri, till he was raiſed to the eſtate of the Divine Sovereignty and became a Saviour-King in reigning Eſtate. When he was raiſed to this magnificent and creature-tranſcendent Eſtate of Sovereignty (which he could not poſſeſs without his Father's donation or collation) he was made plenarily in State and Condition (inaugurated and inthron'd) the Saviour-Prince, Meſſiah the King (the King of God's People) or The Chriſt, which ſignifieth the Lord's Anointed that is anointed to be the Lord, the (Mediatory) Divine Sovereign Lord. His Eſtate of Sovereign Lordſhip and Dominion was inherited, merited, imparted. For he was the Heir, Matth. 21. 38. ch. 22. 2. as in Humane Governments the eldeſt Son is Heir of the Crown (of the Imperial Dignity:) So the Son of God was Heir apparent of the Supreme Sovereignty (of the Heavenly Royal Dignity) the Rights and the whole Eſtate of God. With this his juſt Title the Will of his Father did concur, who appointed him Heir of all things, Heb. 1. 2. which may ſignifie inheritor or poſſeſſor of all things; and it may ſignifie Lord of all things; for the word Heir in ancient times ſignify'd Lord. (n) Hæres apud antiquos pro Domino ponebant, ſaith Feſtus. He might have claim'd the Heavenly Sovereignty by right of Inheritance, but he ſo far diveſted

---

(i) Deum regem politicum fuiſſe, regis politici locum in gente Iſraelitica tenuiſſe, regis officio functum fuiſſe, Deum gentis totius regem eſſe, Regis aut Imperatoris civilis nomen & officium gerere, Deum in regem ſuum junctis ſuffragiis elegit populus, ab iiſdem eligi in Imperatorem, Deus ad munus regium electus erat, Deum in Regem & Imperatorem ſuum eligente populo, Regum & ſubditorum ritu mutuo fœdere & promiſſione ſibi invicem aſtringebantur, poſtquam Iſraelitæ Deum ad officium Regium elegiſſent, Deus jure regio uſus, Legibus politicis Remp. munivit, Tabernaculum tanquàm mobile palatium parari voluit, ut inter ſubditos Ejus habitaret; Deus regis politici nomen & officium ſumere non dedignatus eſt. D. Spencer. ſupr. c. 1. S. 2. & c. 2. & c. 4. S. 1. & c. 5. S. 1.

(k) Et quidem in primis quærendum, an expectetur novæ legis lator, & novi Teſtamenti hæres, & novorum ſacrificiorum ſacerdos, & novæ circumciſionis purgator, & æterni ſabbati cultor: qui legem veterem compeſcat & novum Teſtamentum ſtatuat, nova ſacrificia offerat, & ceremonias antiquas reprimat, & circumciſionem veterem cum ſuo ſibi ſabbato compeſcat, & novum regnum, quod non corrumpatur, adnunciet. Adv. Judæos, c. 6.

(l) Spinoza Theologopol. c. 17.

(m) Per religionem conſtituitur regnum Dei, nihilque ferè adeo ſit religio, quàm regni Dei conſtitutio. Ibid.

(n) *Vinnius Com in Inſtit. p.*411.

diveſted himſelf of this claim for our ſakes, that he choſe to have the Heavenly Sovereignty as a Mediatory Sovereign Lord rather than as meer Lord the Son, and upon another ſcore than as meer Heir, namely, as a reward of his Obedience and Sufferings for our Redemption; whereby he not only merited for us, but he merited us (to have us for his Subjects and Servants) and highly merited at our Hands, that we ſhould own him for our Sovereign Lord; and he alſo merited at the Hands of God his high advancement to the Heavenly Sovereignty, which was the juſt reward of his Humiliation. For to this end Chriſt both died and roſe and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living, Rom. 14. 9. The end of his dying and riſing again was, that he might be in the ſtate and place of Lord of all (which is the Heavenly Sovereignty or the Imperial Eſtate of God) and exerciſe Lordſhip and Dominion over all. By his dying he merited it, and he became poſſeſs'd of it by his riſing again, When the Lord ſaid unto my Lord, ſit thou at my right hand, gave him a Name, which is above every Name, gave all things into his Hand, committed all Judgment unto the Son, gave him power over all Fleſh, and all power in Heaven and Earth; gave him to be head over all things to the Church, ſubjected unto him the World to come, Angels, Principalities and Powers, crown'd him with Glory and Honour, and put all things under his Feet. As he is poſſeſs'd of the Heavenly and Divine Sovereignty, ſo all the Prerogatives of a Divine King, all the Branches of Sovereign Dominion and Power appertain to him (power to inact and abrogate Laws, to remit and retain Sins, power of Life and Death;) and becauſe he is rightfully poſſeſs'd of the Divine Sovereignty, all Potentates are Underlings to him, all Creatures are ſubjected to his diſpoſal (ſo far as is needful for the Intereſts of his Kingdom) and all capable Creatures are (remotely at leaſt) his Liege-ſubjects. So many of them as duely own him for their Sovereign Lord, conſtitute his Church and Kingdom (the new Kingdom of God) wherein he exerciſeth all Kingly Power, doth all Kingly Offices, and enjoyeth the Homage and Service due to a Divine King. His Government of his Kingdom is that of a Divine King; for it is not meerly in a political, but alſo in a ſpiritual way; his genuine Subjects are govern'd by his Laws (by his Officers alſo) and by his Holy Spirit; he reigneth over them and reigneth in them, his Throne is ſet up in their Hearts, as having the Supremacy in their inward Man, the Subjection and Service of their Souls, and they ſerve him with all their Heart and Soul.

The Meſſiah was deſign'd to have a Kingdom upon his great Undertaking; and his great Undertaking was, to make the new Law or Settlement for the new Kingdom of God, that thereby it might be a Kingdom of the Saints of God, although it muſt neceſſarily conſiſt of lapſed miſerable Sinners. Accordingly by this new Law (or Settlement) ungodly Sinners (in their original ſtate ſuch) become the Saints of God in State and Condition, in Life and Practice. Becoming Chriſt's People they have the State and Condition of the Saints of God, that is provided for them, ſettled upon them, the State of Remiſſion of Sins and of Righteouſneſs, of Reconcilement and Favour with God, of Adoption and Heavenly Citizenſhip. God is ſo free to them, as to make them free Citizens of the Supernal City; ſo kind to them as to make them his neareſt Kindred; and ſo fatherly unto them, as to make them his Sons and Heirs. But the Citizens of this Divine Polity muſt be the Saints of God in Life and Practice (as well as in State and Condition) in order whereto our Saviour hath made this new Law an Inſtitution of Chriſtian Sanctity of Life, compriſing the Doctrines and Precepts of it (with Admonitions, Reproofs, Exhortations and Examples adjoyned) propoſing the faireſt Patterns of it, enforcing it with the mightieſt Motives and Inducements, furniſhing the greateſt helps and aſſiſtances thereto, and not only externally teaching it (like Humane Inſtitutions of Virtue) but vitally begetting it in the Souls of his Religioniſts; for his Religion is an Inſtitution of Sanctification as well as of Sanctity. The entrance into Chriſtianity is by Sanctification and an initial Sanctity (denying all Ungodlineſs and Worldly Luſts) and the Eſſence of Chriſtianity perſonal conſiſteth therein; for none are genuine Chriſtians but the ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus. 1 Cor. 1. 2. In his Inſtitution Sin and Wickedneſs is of the blackeſt Character, Holineſs hath the higheſt Elogies, immenſe Felicities are promis'd to the one, and as immenſe Penalties are denounc'd againſt the other; his deſign in his Inſtitution and in his whole Undertaking is for Holineſs and againſt Sin and Wickedneſs. Nor is it only a ſlender degree of Holineſs, which his Inſtitution deſigneth and requireth, but the exacteſt and moſt elevated pitch of Sanctity, to keep a clear and pure Conſcience, to keep the Heart pure (that nothing of an evil Tincture be there) not to defile our Garments, to keep our ſelves unſpotted from the World (any Worldly Luſts) and that the wicked one touch us not, to purifie our ſelves as our Lord is pure, to give diligence, to be found of him in peace without ſpot and blameleſs, to perfect Holineſs, to be holy and unblameable and unreprovable in his ſight, that there be no Blot in our Eſcutcheon and none may juſtly ſay, black is our Eye. His deſign is, to make us God-like in Holineſs and Happineſs; agreeably to which deſign the minimum quod ſic of a true Chriſtian, is faithfully to endeavour all immaculate Sanctity of Soul and Life, to be no committer of Sin, not to live in any known Sin (the habitual practice of any) not to do any act of deliberate heinous Sin, but (as being faithful to God and Holineſs, to God and his Duty) to live the holy ſinleſs Life in the utmoſt ſtrictneſs and purity thereof. (o) For as we do not admire the Creator only in the Heavens, the Earth, the Sun, the Ocean, Elephants and Camels, but in minute Animals: ità mens Chriſto dedita æquè & in majoribus & in minoribus intenta eſt, ſo a mind piouſly affected and addicted to Chriſt is ſolicitous in leſſer matters of Duty and Sin as well as in greater. But the new Law of our Saviour is not to be conſider'd only as an Inſtitution of Sanctity for particular Chriſtians as ſuch, but as combin'd in Societies, eſpecially as Members of the Univerſal Church and of particular Churches. For by the Chriſtian Sacraments they become συνωμόται, Men of a Confederacy (they confederate not with Chriſt only but with his Liege-people) they are oblig'd to aſſociate and aſſemble for the Chriſtian Religious Worſhip (the matters whereof with the kind and quality of it are preſcrib'd in this new Law) under the preſidency of Spiritual Guides and Paſtours, who have their Office appointed by our Saviour, and are oblig'd and authoriz'd to exerciſe an holy Diſcipline for the Sanctity of theſe Chriſtian Societies, which the Holy Nation (the Communion of Saints) muſt conſiſt of, and which muſt

be

(o) S. Hieron. Ep.

be holy in Doctrine, Worſhip, Diſcipline and Life.

The making this new Kingdom of God compriſeth the making the general Peace, whereby the Church above is now one Family, one City and one Kingdom with the Church below, and both are one new Kingdom of God. Our Saviour's Mediation for Pacification principally relateth unto God, his principal Buſineſs was, to mediate and negotiate a Peace with God, to procure for us the State of Remiſſion of Sins (the Donation and Settlement thereof) to make this Peace, to purchaſe this Peace (procuring it by a price) and to publiſh this Peace. The making whereof implieth a certain reconciliation and recollection of the Angels in Heaven and Mankind on Earth into one Body, and healing in great degree the divided State of the Univerſe, which was alſo part of his Deſign and Buſineſs. Eph. 1. 10. That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of times he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt, both which are in Heaven and which are on Earth, even in him. The Angels in Heaven and Chriſtians on Earth are now under one Imperial Head (p) collected and combin'd into one illuſtrious Syſtem and Republick The new Kingdom of God. So the Jews and Gentiles are collected into one Body (the new Kingdom of God) and therefore are reconciled to one another being both reconciled to God by the Croſs. Eph. 2. 16. But the Holy Angels cannot be ſuppos'd, to have needed a reconcilement, as the Jews and Gentiles did; for they were not in the State of Variance and Hoſtility with God; yet the Apoſtle ſaith, Col. 1. 20. And having made peace by the Blood of his Croſs, by him to reconcile all things unto himſelf, by him I ſay, whether they be things in Earth or things in Heaven. To aſſoil the difficulty that is in this place (which ſpeaketh of reconciling the Holy Angels) it muſt be conſider'd, that the great effect of the Blood of the Croſs is our Peace and Reconciliation with God, the conſequent whereof was the Exaltation of the Meſſiah, to be the Imperial Head of the Church conſiſting of Chriſtians below and the Holy Angels above. The Holy Angels are Citizens of the Kingdom of God, but of no other ſave only the new Kingdom of God, the Settlement whereof is the new Law of our Peace and Reconciliation, which maketh the new Kingdom of God. And becauſe it is ſuch, the Holy Angels are not Citizens of it, nor have they a Being or ſtanding in it by the old Settlement of the Kingdom of God, nor are we made Citizens with the Holy Angels by that Settlement (which may be called their Settlement) or by coming into their Kingdom of God: But they are made Fellow-citizens with us by our Settlement of Peace and Reconciliation, and by coming into our Kingdom of God. The new Conſtitution and Settlement of the Kingdom of God hath this advantage above the old, it is deſign'd and accommodate for the reconciling all things to himſelf (things in Earth and things in Heaven) which is a bringing them into the deſign'd and propos'd State of Agreement with himſelf, which is to live as his Liege-people in one Syſtem. This Reconciliation God effecteth as the great Reconciler and Peace-maker of the Univerſe, this Reconciliation the univerſal good requireth, and therefore all have need of it (even the Holy Angels who are not capable of Reconciliation in every ſuch ſenſe as Sinners are) and this Reconciliation the Apoſtle meaneth in this place. For (as ſeveral Interpreters have obſerv'd) it is a parallel place to Eph. 1. 10. (q) For that which the Apoſtle here calleth reconciling, writing to the Epheſians and treating of the ſame decree of God, he calleth recapitulating, recollecting, gathering together into one. As Jews and Gentiles were by Chriſt reconciled to God, and reconciled to one another, to live as his Liege-people in one Body: So Angels and Men were thus far reconciled to God and to one another, they were brought into the deſigned and propoſed State of Agreement with himſelf, which is to live as his Liege-people in one Polity and Catholic Church, one new Kingdom of God. Men were at a greater rate reconciled to God, but thus far the Angels are reconciled to God in common with Men, and ſo far Homer's Wiſh is accompliſh'd, that diſcord might periſh from amongſt the Gods and Men.

Ὡς ἔρις ἔκ τε θεῶν ἔκ τ' ἀνθρώπων ἀπόλοιτο.

VIII. The making the new Kingdom of God is not a barren Theory, it affordeth ſome valuable Concluſions, that naturally iſſue from it. For (1.) It inferreth, that there is no ſuch thing as one way to Salvation by Nature another by Grace; one way to Salvation by the Law another by the Goſpel; an Heathen way and a Chriſtian way to Salvation, and that Men may be ſav'd in any Religion: But as there is one only God, ſo there is but one Kingdom of God, which is the one only Religion of Salvation. There is no State of Righteouſneſs, but to be a Subject and Citizen of the Kingdom of God: Nor is there any other way, to be one of the People of God; for they that are totally Extrinſicks to it, are neceſſarily Aliens, and as far diſtant and remote from God, as they are from his City and Kingdom. The Kingdom of Darkneſs and of Light ſhare the Univerſe of Rationals between them; not to be a Citizen of the Kingdom of God, is to be a Subject of the oppoſite Kingdom, which is not conſiſtent with a State of Salvation. The making the new Kingdom of God implieth, that Salvation is not to be attain'd by the Law-religion, and if not by the Law-religion, much leſs by a Lye-religion, that in the main ſubſtance of it is an abominable Lye, which maketh Ungodlineſs a Religion, deadly Impiety a Saving Religion. Salvation it ſelf cannot ſave Men without true Sanctity (of Soul and Life) which is not to be found out of the Kingdom of God, the comprehenſion of Sanctity Imperial. (2.) It inferreth, that the Souls of Men are in a lapſed Condition; for it ſheweth, that Mankind are now no Natives of the Kingdom of God, that all the Citizens of it in this World are factively ſuch, that in their now Original State are Foreigners not Citizens. But ſuch they were not in their firſt Native State, they were made, to be and live in the State (of Religion) of Society and Citizenſhip with God, to live the Life of knowing him, loving and enjoying him, which is their Holineſs and their Happineſs. They are now therefore in the State of lapſed Revolters from God; and if they were not ſuch, there would have been no need, that a new Kingdom of God ſhould be made, that they might be in the State of Society and Citizenſhip with God. (r) The Holy Scripture (ſaith Origen) will not call any of thoſe things that are evil κτῆμα θεοῦ, the Poſſeſſion of God: But evil Men are called ἄνθρωποι ἁμαρτίας, υἱοὶ λοιμοί, ἢ υἱοὶ ἀδικίας, the Men of Sin, Sons that are Peſtilences, or Sons of Unrighteouſneſs. Of the Supernals it muſt

---

(p) Petav. T. 4. l. 2. c. 7. S. 5.

(q) Quod enim hic ait ἀποκαταλλάξαι, ad Ep. 1. Ubi de eodem decreto patris agit, vocat ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι. Grot. & Zanch. in loc.

(r) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 394.

be ſaid (s) φαύλȣς μὲν ὄντας ȣ̓ θεμιτὸν εἰς συγγένειαν συνάπτειν, with them it is not lawful to reckon our ſelves joyned in Affinity, if we are wicked. But ſuch are all Men, before they are made Righteous, in their now original Condition they are of the wicked and mundane Kind and Party, Aliens from the State and Life of Sanctity (which maketh the City and Kingdom of God) they are now therefore natively Aliens from God and from his Kingdom. As Founder and providential Governour of this lower World he maketh none the Subjects and Citizens of that Holy Polity which is his Kingdom. None are actually ſuch, but they that are entred into federal Society with God as his Subjects and Citizens, and multitudes of theſe are none of his Subjects in the ſenſe of Alliance (nor without a nullifying abatement and limitation of ſenſe) they are but ſuch Fideles which deny the Faith, ſuch Believers that are worſe than Infidels, and like Cateline and Cethegus at Rome are Cives non Cives, Citizens no Citizens. (3.) It inferreth, that the State of Mankind muſt be chang'd as well as their Nature (t) Strangers and Foreigners muſt be made Fellow-citizens with the Saints and of the Kingdom of God; by which happy change in their Condition they are brought unto God (in State and Condition) made nigh, that were ſometime far off; and made Free, that were ſometime (mancipia peccati & diaboli) vile infamous Slaves. Job. 8. 36. If the Son ſhall make you free, ye ſhall be free indeed. The carnal Jews were the Servants of Sin and ſtood in need to have their Freedom given them by Chriſt, as a Bond-ſlave in a Family hath need to have his Freedom given him by the Son. For a Bondſlave in a Family is not of its Kindred, but is as an extraneous Perſon and a Foreigner, that hath no right of Inheritance, nor any right or intereſt in the Family, but ſtayeth in it only durante Domini bene placito, during the Pleaſure of his Lord, who may ſell him, turn him out of the Houſe or diſpoſe of him at his Pleaſure. The Servant abideth not in the Houſe for ever: but the Son abideth ever, as being Lord of the Family. As in humane Families it belongeth to him, to make his Liberti or Liberati (freed Men) ſo they that are called to the State of Chriſtianity, are the Lord's Freemen. 1 Cor. 7. 22. They are Deniſons and Free Citizens of God's Kingdom, and as Cicero ſaith, omnibus municipibus duas eſſe patrias, unam naturæ, alteram juris, all that are taken into the number of the Roman Citizens, have two Countries, the one Natural the other Jural: So all that become the Citizens of God's Kingdom have a Jural Country beſides their Natural; for Heaven is jurally their Country, where they have the right of Commerce now, and they will be called to Offices and Honours there. (4.) It inferreth, that the prime leading Duty of Mankind in the Chriſtian Religion is, to become Subjects and Citizens of the Kingdom of God. As in an humane City and Kingdom Men are firſt made Citizens in State and Relation, and then they obſerve the Laws of it; they firſt confederate with a Prince and take him for their Sovereign, and then they yield him Obedience (ſo humane Societies are conſtituted;) and as an Husband and Wife firſt enter into that conjugal Relation, and then they perform conjugal Duties; one Man taketh another for his Maſter, and then ſerveth him; a Soldier is firſt liſted, and then he liveth the Life and doth the Work of a Soldier: So in the Chriſtian Religion the firſt Duty of Man to God is, to become a Subject of his Kingdom in State and Relation (ſo to take him for his God) to confederate with Chriſt, to own him for his Sovereign Lord, and then to obſerve his Laws. Col. 2. 6. As ye have receiv'd Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, ſo walk ye in him. As in Schollars Studies, ſo in the Duties of Piety a Priority of Order is to be obſerv'd; Subjection in State is the prime fundamental Duty, that muſt precede Subjection and Service in Fact. Firſt be in Chriſt, then live godly in Chriſt Jeſus; ſeek thoſe things that are above, but firſt be riſen with Chriſt; do the things which he ſaith, but firſt call him Lord and acknowledge his Sovereignty. They that duly practiſe Religion, muſt be in the State of Religion, as the People of a ſtrange God are in the State of Society with their God. That they may be God's Servants, they ought to be conſecrated to his Service; and they ought to be cleans'd and purg'd, to be fit, to have dealings with an Holy God. Heb. 10. 22. Let us draw near with a true Heart in full aſſurance of Faith, having our Hearts ſprinkled from an evil Conſcience, and our Bodies waſhed with our pure Water. Sincere Believers (of a true Heart) are devoid of any preſent heinous Sinfulneſs and Criminality; and by the Blood and Sacrifie of Chriſt they are cleans'd from a Conſcience ſinful, guilty and criminal by their heinous Sins lying upon it. Their Conſcience is purged from dead (deadly) Works, to ſerve the living and true God. Heb. 9. 14. They are cleans'd from a Conſcience ſinful, guilty and criminal by deadly Sins, and conſequently are freed from the deadly condition of being deadly Sinners, that ſo they may be in the ſinleſs condition of the Saints and Servants of God and have the Saint of God-kind of good Conſcience. By duly entring therefore into the new Kingdom of God they are qualified for his Society and Service, and they enter into the State and Relation of his Saints and Servants, which muſt be the Law of their Life and Practice. For every one is obliged (u) to act the part of the perſon that he is rightfully ſuſtaineth, and his State is the Law of his diſpoſition and Practice. So the Children and Saints of God are obliged to be ſuch in Life and Practice, becauſe they are ſuch in State and Condition. And as all the Ten Commandments are virtually and radically contain'd in the Firſt Commandment of taking God for our God (as Luther ſaith:) So to become a Subject of the Kingdom of God, virtually and radically compriſeth all Obedience, the whole Duty-part of Religion, which intitleth to the Benefit-part of it. In reſpect of both theſe (both as it is the Summary of the Duty-part and the Benefit-part of Chriſtianity) S. Baſil ſaith of Baptiſm (which is the initiating or entrance-Duty into the Kingdom of God) ἀρχή μοι ζωῆς τὸ βάπτισμα, Baptiſm is to me the beginning of Life.

IX. The Kingdom of God (as it is the Kingdom of Saving Chriſtianity) is not only propounded to our acceptance, but to our purchaſe and acquiſition, to be ſought in the firſt place, to be taken with an holy violence, and to be purchaſed by parting with our earthly all. And not without great reaſon; for one Adrianus (as ſome ſay) an Officer under Maximianus the Tyrant beholding the Fortitude of the Chriſtian Martyrs (in undergoing their Torments) was very inquiſitive to know, what was the cauſe of it? And one of them thus anſwer'd him. Eye hath not ſeen, Ear hath not heard, nor hath it ever entred

(s) Plotin. En. 2. l. 9. c. 18.

(t) Eph. 2. 13, 19. 1 Pet. 3. 18.

(u) Gat Ant. p. 438.

Matth 33. ch 15. ch. 44, 4

tred into the Heart of Man to conceive, what God hath prepared for them that love him. Such are the Goods of the Kingdom of God above, of which the Kingdom of Grace below is an Inchoation. (w) Tertull. (w) Bonorum quorundam (ſicut & malorum) intolerabilis eſt magnitudo, ſome Goods (as well as ſome Evils) are intolerably great. They are immenſe and immeaſurable, and of kind and quality tranſcendent to all that Man is acquainted with. No Time can Bound them, no Cogitation can Fathom them, no Arithmetick can Number them, no Geometry can Meaſure them, no Rhetorick can Declare them, no Words can reach the ſize or ſuit the Dimenſions of them. Who can ſay, what this amounteth to, to be a Son and Heir of God, Co-heir with Chriſt, a Citizen of the Kingdom of Heaven? Theſe are matter for Extaſies, fervour and flames of Affection; and to exerciſe Violence (which in other Caſes is extravagance and indiſcretion) in taking the Kingdom, is but neceſſary Wiſdom and Virtue. (x) S. Hieron. (x) Niſi vim feceris, regnum cœlorum non capies. There is no entring into the State of Saving Chriſtianity by cold and careleſs Endeavours, without an agoniſtical ſtriving (ἀγωνίζεσθε εἰσελθεῖν, ſaith our Saviour) there Luk. 13. 34. 2 Cor. 7. 11. ch. 8. 16. Heb. 2. 1. Eccl. 9. 10. muſt be an earneſt and vehement deſire, an earneſt care and taking heed, an earneſt breaking with Sin (to the cutting off the Right-hand and plucking out the Right-eye) a vehement hating Sin and Wickedneſs (not enduring to ſee or hear it or to have any dealings with it) an oppoſing it with all our Might and a reſiſting it even unto Blood (all ſinful Thoughts, Motions and Inclinations) an earneſt bridling our Appetites, Luſts and Paſſions (a doing violence to our ſelves) a violent ſtruggling with unruly Luſts and violent Temptations, a ſtriving for the Maſtery and Victory (as when Men wreſtle or fight with an Enemy, that ſeeketh their Life, or ſtretch their Sinews to run a Race) an earneſt praying, and an earneſt fleeing from the Baits of Sin (as when Joſeph left his Garment with his Miſtreſs and ran away) a reſolute undertaking the Duties of Godlineſs though never ſo hazardous, coſtly, diſgraceful and fleſh-diſpleaſing 1 Tim. 6. 12. Phil. 3. 14. (whatever we loſe or ſuffer) a laying hold on eternal Life (which is a violent taking it) a reaching forth unto thoſe things which are before (as the Race-horſes ſtretch themſelves) a preſſing toward the Mark. Eluctamur per obſtantia, we muſt violently break through all Obſtacles and Difficulties, like that young Man, who deſigning (according to the Religion of his times) to retire from the World and betake himſelf to a ſevere Life, and his Relations being extremely importunate with him, to diſſwade him from it, he threw them all off with this violent Reſolution, volo ſervare animam meam, I am reſolv'd to ſave my Soul. It is not reaſonable, to be earneſt and violent about trivial Matters (which is beyond the ſize and proportion of them) but the Kingdom of God is the one thing neceſſary, the Goods of it are of infinite precioſity, worth and importance, and muſt be gain'd, or we are loſt, and therefore muſt be gain'd at any rate (whatever they coſt us;) they challenge the beſt of our Affections, the prime and chief of our Care (all things elſe being as nothing in compariſon) they ought to be deſir'd as much as any thing can be deſir'd, and ſought as much as any thing can be ſought, the utmoſt labour and diligence is not too much for them, nor are the beſt of our endeavours more than needeth, to gain and ſecure them. For the things tranſcendently excellent muſt be hardly come by, to make them cheap and eaſie to be had, is to make them vile, to depreciate and diſparage them. They are nefariouſly vilify'd, if they are not tranſcendently valu'd, if they are not in our Minds as they are in themſelves, of the Sovereign peerleſs eſtimation; and we are the carnally minded, if we make them not the Goods of the Throne, placing all things elſe at the Footſtool, abandoning them as to any inordinate Eſtimation, Affection and Adherence, which alienateth the Soul from Piety and from the Goods of the Kingdom. Theſe muſt be taken with all the Hardſhips and Incumbrances that accompany them as inſeparably, as the ſhadow doth the Body (as the Lawyers ſay omne commodum ſuo cum onere pertranſire) one of the principal of which Incumbrances is an actual parting with all things for them, when Tribulation or Perſecution ariſeth. Theſe Difficulties are not to be vanquiſh'd but by a virtuous Violence; without it there is no doing or ſuffering the great things which Chriſtianity requireth. As Cicero ſaith; ſine ardore quodam mentis nihil fit egregium, without a certain ardour of Mind nothing eximious can be done.

CHAP. VII.

1. Of the Notion of Greatneſs, which is an attribute of the Myſtery of Godlineſs. 2. Of the Greatneſs of Things and Perſons. 3. Of the uſual diſtribution of Nobility. 4. Of the Greatneſs of God. 5. Of Greatneſs as attributed to the Myſtery of Godlineſs. 6. Of the Pagans Popular-myſtic-religious Inſtitutions. 7. Of their Deities. 8. The Chriſtian Religion is a Popular-religious Myſtery. 9. Trinitarians ought to be of the Holy-popular, not the Scholaſtic kind. Of the Inconſiſtency of Scholaſtic Trinitarians. 10. The Reaſons why the Chriſtian Religion is called a Myſtery. 11. The Name Myſtery implieth a great Obligation upon profeſſing Chriſtians to great Sanctity. 12. The Name Myſtery implieth, that Chriſtianity is of a mean outſide. 13. The Name Myſtery inplieth, that the Chriſtian Religion is reaſonably Myſterious. 14. The Name Myſtery implieth, that the Chriſtian Religion is a Knowledge and Wiſdom, and of the excellency of the Knowledge of Chriſt. 15. The Name Myſtery implieth, that the Chriſtian Religion is duly intelligible, and of the many ways whereby the Scholoſtic Theology may be deſtructive to the due Intelligibleneſs thereof. 16. The Name Myſtery implieth, that the Matters of Chriſtianity are extraordinary mirandous things.

1. THE Chriſtian Religion that hath been conſider'd as The new Settlement of Saving Grace and as The new Kingdom of God, is of another Name The great Myſtery of Godlineſs; of which illuſtrious Name one part is the attribute of Greatneſs, which ought to be taken into conſideration, ſideration, becauſe ſcarce any one hath attempted a definition of it (or to ſay what it is) and they that attempt it, will find it of greater difficulty than at firſt ſight is imaginable. It is commonly ſaid (y) Magnum & parvum non dicitur niſi cum reſpectu. The different bounds of Great and Little cannot be determin'd but by their References. The leaſt Body that is, is not little in reſpect of the ſeveral little parts, whereinto it may be divided. No part can be ſaid Great in reſpect of the whole whence it is taken. Of the largeſt Country in Europe we may ſay, Quota pars terrarum? Little England is a competent ſtile for our native Country compar'd with France, Spain or Germany. And yet Armorica with reference to England is truly inſtiled Little Britain. Within the leſs of theſe two Provinces, it would be matter of no long ſearch, to find huge Mole-hills and ſuch petty Hills as cannot deſerve the name of Mountains. (z) There is no right nor left, nor upper hand in Nature; every thing is little or every thing is great, as it is diverſly compared. (a) Whatever is eminent among its Neighbours, is there great, where it is eminent. For greatneſs hath no certain meaſure, compariſon either elevateth or depreſſeth it. The Ship which is great in the River, is little in the Sea: The Rudder which to one Ship is great, is to another ſmall. Thou art now in thy Province great, although thou thinkeſt meanly of thy ſelf. But this uſual Maxim (that nothing is great or little but as it is compar'd) is manifeſtly falſe, unleſs it be limited to finite Beings. For God who is infinite and unlimited in Preſence, Duration and in all Perfection, cannot be ſmall or little howſoever compar'd, but is neceſſarily great without any Relation or Compariſon. Wherefore the Ideas of great and little are not neceſſarily ſuch as the Ideas of like and unlike, equal and unequal, which are neceſſarily relative and comparative Ideas. But the greatneſs of finite Beings is different from the greatneſs of God in a threefold reſpect. For all finite Beings are great but to a certain degree and meaſure; they are great but in ſome reſpect (as a Prince of great Authority is of ſmall natural ſtrength) and the greateſt of them may be outvy'd and tranſcended, and therefore may be comparatively ſmall; all which imperfections are incompetible to God. Which yet doth not hinder Plato's Notion of Greatneſs (in his Hippias major) from being alike applicable both to God and the Creatures. (b) All great things are great by ſurmounting (or exceeding;) for hereby they are conſtituted great. And although they are not ſeen, yet if they ſurmount, they are neceſſarily great. Which Notion of Greatneſs confuteth an ill natur'd Dogmatiſt, who cannot deny, that God the Father is greater than God the Son, yet falleth foul upon Calvin for attributing to God the Father an ὑπεροχὴ, (ſurmounting) in reſpect of the Son. And by this only Argument he pretendeth, to refute Calvin (c) intereſt inter τὸ μεῖζον & τὸ ὑπερέχον, ut indicat Chryſoſtomus, there is a difference between being greater and ſurmounting, as Chryſoſtom intimateth. But Plato (who is at leaſt as good Authority as Chryſoſtom for ſettling the Notion of Greatneſs and the ſignification of a Greek word) is ſo far from acknowledging any ſuch difference, that he maketh the Nature and Notion of the one, to conſiſt in the other, τὸ μεῖζον, that which is greater is therefore ſuch, becauſe it is τὸ ὑπερέχον, that which ſurmounteth. So all things that are relatively and comparatively great, are therefore ſuch, becauſe they ſurmount; for their ſurmounting is their amplitude (they are of ſuch amplitude, that they ſurmount) which is their greatneſs.

II. Things and Perſons are denominated great in manifold Reſpects and in diſhonourary as well as honourary Reſpects: But they are not greatned (really or reputatively) by being great in any thing that is diſhonourary. Sometimes things are ſaid, to be great in reſpect of their difficulty (wherein there is an amplitude) as the magnanimous Man is ſaid, to perform hard and great things. Magnum eſt in Rep. tueri perſonam principis. It is a great thing, to expreſs and maintain the Perſon of the Prince in every thing. S. Cyprian's Phraſe is (d) glorioſè & granditer operati ſunt, they did what was glorious and grand. Such are the Atchievements that are of great Difficulty and Coſt, of great Virtue and Excellency. Sometimes things are donominated great with reſpect to their weight and importance; for that is (e) grande officium, and a great Commandment, which is of great importance, and great ſtreſs is laid upon it. With reſpect to their weight, worth and value the things of this Life are called the ſmalleſt matters, and the promiſes of the Goſpel are ſtiled exceeding great Promiſes, as being Promiſes of the true and great Goods, unfathomable and ineſtimable. With reſpect to our Eſtimation Philoſophy ſaith (f) Animo magno nil magnum, to one of great Mindedneſs none of the external things are of great conſideration; and with reſpect to Mens conſideration and regard Eaſter-week was called Hebdomada magna, as the Jews Preparation for the Paſſover is called an high Day. What is in Mens account of great conſideration and regard is commonly called a great matter; what is of ſmall conſideration and regard a ſmall matter; what is of no conſideration or regard is called nothing or no matter. (g) Magna & excedentia ſolitum ac vulgarem modum, thoſe are great things that exceed the vulgar and ordinary meaſure. Such is the great Day (in reſpect of the Occurrences of it) ſuch are the great Works of God (the Works of Creature-tranſcendent Agency) the Miracles of Prophets, Act. 6. 8. 2 King. 8. 4. And oftentimes in Scripture a great thing ſignifieth an extraordinary mirandous thing. 2 King. 8. 13. Eccl. 9. 13. 1 Cor. 9. 11. 2 Cor. 11. 15. So the Philoſopher having compar'd the ſlaughter of Men and the deſtruction of Cities to the death of Sheep and the burning of Swallow-neſts, asketh (h) τί μέγα ἔχει ταῦτα, what is there great in theſe things? (i) Aaron's making the Calf is in our Eyes a very great thing, becauſe in moſt Nations Images are not now worſhipp'd: But at that time it was counted a light thing, becauſe all Nations then made Images to Worſhip them. In this Notion evil things which are diſhonourary may be denominated great things, and by being diſhonourary they may be ſo far great, as to be extraordinary mirandous things, but ſo as withall to be extremely diſparag'd, to be ignoble and baſe, vile and villainous things, which is not to be truly greatned, but to be leſſen'd more than greatned. 2 King. 8. 13. Is thy Servant a Dog, that he ſhould do this great thing? Joel. 2. 20. His ill ſavour ſhall come up, becauſe he hath done great things, but ſo as to

(y) Dr. Jackſon B. 11. ch. 35. initio.

(z) Cowley.

(a) Quicquid inter vicina eminet, magnum eſt illic, ubi eminet. Nam magnitudo non habet certum modum: Comparatio illam aut tollit aut deprimit. Navis quæ in flumine magna eſt, in mari parvula eſt: Gubernaculum quod navi alteri magnum, alteri exiguum eſt. Tu nunc in provincia, licet contemnas ipſe te, magnus es. Sen. Ep. 43.

(b) Πάντα τὰ μεγάλα ἐςὶ μεγάλα τῷ ὑπερέχοντι· τέτῳ γὸ πάντα μεγάλα ἐςι, κἂν μὴ φαίνηται, ὑπερέχη δὲ ἀνάγκη ἀυτοῖς μεγάλοις εἶναι.

(c) Petav. de Trin. l. 2. c. 2. S. 12. & l. 5. c. 4. S. 13.

(d) P. 55. Ed. Oxon.

(e) Tertull.

1 Cor. 6. 2. 2 Pet. 1. 4.

(f) Sen. Ep. 8.

(g) Idem de conſt. ſap. c. 7.

(h) Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 28.

(i) Coſri p. 58.

to be evil things, the worſe for being great.

Men may be great in manifold reſpects; in corporeal dimenſions (as other bodily things are) and in their mental Abilities and Virtues. (k) Think not, that Hereſies could be made by ſome little Souls. They were not made but by ſome great Men, ſuch great Men that were no leſs evil Men than they were great. The Mountains ſignifie certain great but bad Souls. Some Souls as being of an Amplitude in reſpect of their Faculties and Comprehenſion are denominated great Souls, and others becauſe they are diminutive in reſpect of their Faculties, ſee but a little way, and look but at a few things, are denominated little narrow Souls. So Minds and Souls are diſtinguiſh'd into great and little in reſpect of their Bounty and Strenuity, by the Virtue of Magnanimity and Vice of Puſillanimity. To be heroically minded, is ſublime and great Mindedneſs (that ſurmounteth and is of an honourary amplitude) as the Poet ſaith: (l)

(k) Non putetis, quia potuerunt fieri hæreſes per aliquas parvas animas. Non fecerunt hæreſes niſi magni homines, ſed quantum magni, tantum mali homines. Montes ſignificant magnas quaſdam animas, ſed malas. S. Aug. Enarr. in Pſal. 124.

(l) Ovid. de Triſt. l. 3. Eleg. 5.

Quo quiſque eſt major, magis eſt placabilis iræ.
Et faciles motus mens generoſa capit.

In Fame and Reputation Men may be great: (m) Cicuta Socratem magnum fecit, the Hemlock made Socrates great. In the Old Teſtament Men are uſually ſaid to be great in reſpect of Riches and Worldly Poſſeſſions; ſo Iſaac waxed very great and Barzillai was a very great Man: Abner was a great Man both as the Chieftain of a great Hoſt (a Prince) and as being great in Military Conduct, Valour and Atchievements, 2 Sam. 3. 38. The Perſian Magi were in their own Country great in Authority and were had in great Honour, whence they are ſtiled (n) μέγα ϗ σεβάσμιον γένος, a great and venerable kind of Men. As by Superiority of Relation, by Seniority, by Primogeniture, one Man may be greater than another, and to be a Son, is greater than to be a Servant, becauſe more unſubject: So in Cities and Kingdoms the more unſubject Eſtates as ſuch are intituled the great Men. Theſe have their officiary and honourary Dignities of ſeveral Ranks (which are called Dignities, becauſe Men are dignify'd by them) and they may be called their Eminences and Sublimities, their Honours and Nobilitations, their Greatneſſes and Magnificences as to worldly Eſtate and Condition: which are nothing elſe but their more unſubject and unabject Eſtates as to the World (for as to the World they are unmean and unabject, not ignoble, and therefore unplebeian) whereby they ſurmount thoſe of the more ſubject, mean and underling Eſtate. In many reſpects theſe μεγιστᾶνες, or Magnates (the Grands) are great in the World; for they move in an Orb of Secular Rule and Prefecture, are great in Worldly Poſſeſſions, in the valuation of the Commonwealth, in regard and honour with the People, in Enſigns of their Honour, in Rank and Precedence, in Titles and Attributes (whence ſome have called them the Men of Bulk and Title) in Attendance, port and ſplendid Circumſtances (they live great) in Parentage and Deſcent, in Prerogatives, Rights and Priviledges (called by the Lawyers Dominium Nobilium) and this whole is their Mundane Illuſtriouſneſs and Nobleneſs, Greatneſs and Magnificence. The great Men of the World that are celebrated by that Name and Attribute were ſuch in many reſpects; as Alexander the Great, Antiochus the Great, Pompey the Great, Herod the Great, Charles the Great, and now we have Lewis the Great.

(m) Sen. Ep. 13.

Gen. 26. 13. 2 Sam. 19. 32.

(n) Porph. de Abſt. l. 4. S. 16.

A great Man (as alſo a great Family) is great as being of eminency above the generality of Men in ſome reſpect, but not in reſpect of any thing that is diſhonorary. It is not to be ſuppos'd, that there are (o) tàm vitiis quàm virtutibus Nobiles, Nobles by Vices as well as by Virtues. For this is not the ennobling but the ignobling Nobleneſs, to be nobile ſcelus, nobile ſcortum: nor is this the greatning, but a leſſening greatneſs, to be of eminency above the generality of Men, in reſpect of Vice and Wickedneſs. Degenerant homines vitiis fiuntque minores. A late Philoſopher ſaith of his minima corporalia, they are infinitæ exilitatis, which ſpeaketh them greatly little. Holy Men ſay, omnia præter Chriſtum ingenti laborant parvitate, all things beſides Chriſt are hugely little. There is therefore an huge and great Littleneſs: but this is not the greatning Greatneſs: nor is this the greatning Greatneſs, to be a great Infidel, a great Rebel againſt God; for this is to be greatly vile and baſe by Vice and Wickedneſs. The great ones of the World that are wicked, are infinitely more leſſen'd by their Wickedneſs, than they are greatned by all their Mundane Magnificence. So a great Fame that is αἰσχρὸν κλέος, or infamous (ſuch as the Founder of the Sect of the Jacobites (p) is ſaid to have) is not the greatning Greatneſs, which is, (q) αὔξησίς τις ϗ ἄδρυνσις ἐπὶ προσλήψει τινὸς ἀγαθοῦ, a certain incraſſing and aggrandizing by the acceſſion of ſome good.

(o) Ritſchel. Metaph. par. 1. c. 8. n. 27.

(p) Petav. T. 4. l. 1. c. 17. S. 6.

(q) Simplic. in Epict. c. 11. Jambl. de vit. Pythag. p. 50.

III. Greatneſs is of the ſame diſtribution with Nobility, which is uſually diſtributed into the Civil, the Eccleſiaſtical, the Philoſophical and the Celeſtial. (1.) The Civil-mundane Greatneſs is that which taketh place in Civil Societies, and which in ſome degree is neceſſary to their Subſiſtence, Order and Government; it is an encouragement to civil Virtues and great Actions, and they that enjoy it (as Seneca ſpeaketh) Hoc habent magnificum & ingens, have this great and magnificent power or priviledge, they may do a great deal of good having a large Sphere of Ability and Influence: otherwiſe theſe great things of the World are extremely little, no conſiderable good is to be found in them, but Vanity, Fallacy and Enmity to the Holy Life muſt be written upon the Forehead of them. They are deadly to the (r) admirers and lovers of them, to all that are not duely out of love with them, that affect Mundane Greatneſs (ſo as not to be duely diſaffected thereto) which hath no ſuch conformity to the State and Life of Chriſt (who preferr'd a Croſs before a Throne here) nor to the State and Life of Chriſtians (the Diſciples of Humility and of the Croſs, the Aliens from the World) as may invite and ingage their Affections; nor is it ſuitable to the ſad and ſinful ſtate of Man in this World, to affect to be a Mundane Bravo, and to entertain Ideas of his Secular Grandeur. Wiſdom and Virtue conſiſteth in low and undervaluing thoughts of it, and in alienating the Soul from it. (s) Μηδὲν μέγα φαντάζου, account nothing great but to be virtuous (be ſo diſſonant from Marius, who never regarded to be a good Man, if he was but a great Man, as Plutarch relateth) all things elſe are νεκρὰ ϗ καπνός, cadaverous things and Smoke. (2.) It was God's Inſtitution, that in the Church of the Jews (which was Mundane and Typical) there ſhould be an Eccleſiaſtical Mundane Greatneſs (for ſuch was the Honour of Aaron, and beſides all the Prieſts were Noble:)

(r) Solos ſe homines eſſe arbitrantur, cæteros fœnum eſſe oportere. Voſſ de Nobil. de Idol. l. 3. c. 53. v. Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 18. c. 23.

(t) M. Ant. l. 12. S. 32, 33.

but in the Chriſtian Church our Saviour hath forbidden, not all Eccleſiaſtical Greatneſs, but an Eccleſiaſtical Mundane Greatneſs, Matth. 20. 25, 26. His Church muſt conſiſt of the Rulers and the Ruled, ſome of his Diſciples muſt be in place and office great, and therefore great Church-men, but according to Chriſt's Inſtitution, they muſt be in place and office great and chief only Chriſtian-miniſterially and ſerviently, not Mundane-imperially; for thus the Church is different from the World. They have not imperium, the Imperial kind of rule over Chriſtians (ſuch as ruling Potentates have) and therefore muſt be ſaid, to have an authoritative miniſterial rule, as only having and exerciſing a Chriſtian Miniſtry (as Stewards in a Family) and as being great and chief in being greatly and chiefly ſerviceable to the Salvation of all. They have not this Greatneſs and Chieftainſhip as an Honour, but only Greatneſs and Chieftainſhip of Miniſtry and Service; for thus alſo the Church is different from the World. A Magiſtrature is a Greatneſs and Chieftainſhip as an Honour: (t) τιμὰς λέγομεν τὰς ἀρχὰς, we call Magiſtratures Honours. Such therefore as are priviledg'd from publick Service (ſaith the Law) may not on that account refuſe Magiſtracy, (u) magiſtratus non munus ſed honos. But in Chriſt's Church they that are great and chief in place and office, have not (by his Inſtitution) any greatneſs or chieftainſhip as an Honour, but only the great and chief Miniſtry and Service; and in this Senſe it may be ſaid, (w) Honours had their riſe with Gentiliſm, there they ought to be bury'd, and may not live in the Church.

(3.) That great mindedneſs which is in Secular Philoſophy (a ſpecies of Mundane Greatneſs) at a great rate contemneth the Civil-mundane Greatneſs. Socrates perſuaded Alcibiades, that notwithſtanding his illuſtrious Birth, (x) there was no difference between him and a Porter. The Stoicks Wiſe Man is with them the only Noble Man, a Man of their generous Virtue is uſually intituled Vir magnus, they eſtimate the Greatneſs and Nobleneſs of Men by the Mind only, (y) Animus facit nobilem. (z) The Cynicks utterly contemn'd Riches, Glory and Nobility (commonly ſo called) and the Poet agreeably to their ſenſe taketh away from Alexander the Name of Great and beſtoweth it upon Diogenes. Senſit Alexander teſtâ cum vidit in illâ Magnum habitatorem. —— The Platoniſts do not at ſo great a rate boaſt of their Philoſophical Greatneſs and contemn the Civil-mundane Nobleneſs (Plato is ſaid, (a) to have worn a Golden Ear-ring in token of his Nobility) but their Philoſophy valueth no Nobility (b) in compariſon of the ennoblement of the Mind, profeſſeth a great vilipendency of the Body and of all Bodily Excellencies, reckoneth ten thouſand Acres of Land, πάνυ σμικρὰ, very little things (no wondrous great Eſtate) and counteth them ridiculous, that celebrate their Parentage, and think, that one is Noble, becauſe he hath ſeven Grandfathers, that have liv'd in Riches and Affluence; for ſuch ſee but a very little way, elſe (looking at the Univerſe) they would reckon, that they have Progenitors innumerable, of which ſome were rich, ſome poor, ſome were Kings, ſome were Slaves. (4.) The Celeſtial Greatneſs belongeth to the Science of Sanctity, which (c) judgeth Men Slaves or Noble by their Manners. The only freedom with God is not to be a Servant of Sin. To ſhine with Virtues, is with God the height of Nobility. I only regard (ſaith Gr. Naz.) ἢ δίκαιος ἢ κακὸς, whether thou be Righteous or Wicked. The Clay is equally the origin of us all, we have all the like Skins, all one Duſt, the Off-ſpring of one Potter. (d) Omnes pari ſorte naſcimur, ſolâ virtute diſtinguimur. Philoſophy and Religion agree, that Virtue maketh truly Noble: but Philoſophy is a ſtranger to true Piety, which Religion accounteth the only true Virtue and Nobility. (e) So Flavianus accounted Piety the only Nobility. Philoſophy and Religion agree, that all Men are in ſome ſort born Noble; (f) omnes ſi ad primam originem revocentur, à Diis ſunt (all are the Off-ſpring of God:) but Philoſophy is a ſtranger to the new Birth, which Chriſtians account the only noble Birth. (g) For none of the Saints ever celebrated their Birth-day, but their new Birth-day. Philoſophy and Religion agree, that the true Ennoblement of a Man is, to be a Son of God: but Philoſophy ſuppoſeth, (h) that every Man hath the Honour and Nobilitation of a Son of God by nature, whereas Religion ſuppoſeth Men vile in their Naturaliſm and Unregeneracy, that none are Sons of God but by regenerative Grace, (i) fiuntque filii Dei, de paupertate divites, de humilitate ſublimes, ſo they are made the Sons of God, from Poverty Rich, from Meanneſs Sublime. By Chriſtianity vile infamous Sinners become of high eſteem with God, of the illuſtrious divine Family, of truly noble Extraction, of ſacred royal Condition, of a truly noble Country, and the Heirs of ſuch a Patrimony, of Immunities and Priviledges, of Office and Imployment, of Enjoyments and Atchievements truly great and honourable, of the honourable and truly noble Qualities and Virtues, of honourable Attendance (that of Angels) and notwithſtanding the Contumelies they meet with in the World, their Memory will be honourable, and they ſhall live nobly and honourably now and for ever. Their Sanctity is their true Nobility, the ennoblement of their State and Relation, and of their Nature and Practice. For (k) magni & excelſi animi eſt, deſpicere & calcare mortalia, to deſpiſe and trample on the things of Mortality, is the property of a great and ſublime Soul. (l) If a Chriſtian Philoſopher be ignobly born as to the Statue and the Clay (if Clay can very much differ from Clay) he will confront to it the Spiritual Nobility, according to which every one formeth himſelf, to the worſe, or to the better: but that other which is by Humane Propagation or Writing he ſetteth aſide as counterfeit and nothing worth. For there are three kinds of Nobility: One is that which is originated from above, whereby we are all alike noble, as being made after the Image of God. The other is that which cometh by the Fleſh; and I do not know, that any one is noble by this, which conſiſteth of Corruption. A third is that which is notic'd by Vice and Virtue, of which we partake leſs or more, as we retain the Divine Image or deſtroy it. He that is indeed wiſe and a Philoſopher, will love this Nobility; for as for the fourth kind of Nobility, which is by Parchment and Letters Patents, I will then think it worth the mentioning, when I entertain Beauty in Paint, and revere an Ape, that is bid, to be a Lion. In this ſtrain Philoſophers and the Fathers vilifie that Mundane Nobility, which vulgar Conceit magnifieth; which yet muſt be acknowledg'd to be a ſort (the meaneſt ſort) of Nobility; for the Scriptures acknowledge it, ſpeak of it with reſpect, and frequently

(t) Ariſtot. Polit. l. 3. c. 10.

(u) C. 12. H. de muner. & honor.

(w) Honores cum gentilitate ortos eſſe, ibi ſepeliri debere, in Eccleſia vivere nefas eſt. Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 17.

(x) Idem in l. 14. c. 8.

(y) Sen. Ep. 44. de Beneſ. l. 3. c. 28.

(z) Tiraqu. de Nobil. p. 192.

(a) Abul Pharag. Hiſt. Dynaſt. p. 58.

(b) Boeth. de Conſol. Phil. p. 128. Jambl. Προτρεπτ. p. 87. vid. Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 14.

(c) Servum & nobilem de moribus pronunciat. Sola apud Deum libertas eſt, non ſervire peccatis. Summa apud Deum nobilitas eſt, clarum eſſe virtutibus. Ap. Tiraquell. ſupr. p. 54, 58.

(d) Min. Fel. p. 343. Lactant. l. 5. c. 15.

(e) Theodor. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 4. c. 25.

(f) Sen. Ep. 44.

(g) Origen. Hom. 8. in Levit.

(h) Epict. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 3.

(i) S. Ambroſ. Ep. 33.

(k) Lactan. l. 6. c. 12.

(l) Gr. Naz. or. 28. p. 480.

ly mention many Ranks of it. (l) Philoſophers alſo acknowledge it and ſo do the Fathers, that yet diſparage it at a great rate. So the Martyr Romanus (m) contemn'd his Mundane, and valu'd no other but his Chriſtian Nobility.

(l) Voſſ. Inſtit. or. l. 2. c. 14. 8. Tiraquell. ſupr. c. 21. La- ant. de Mort. perſec. p. 41. An- t. in Min. Fel. p. 343.

(m) —abſit ut me nobilem, anguis parentum præſtet, aut ex curiæ. Generoſa Chriſti ſecta bilitat viros.

IV. Greatneſs is attributed to God upon account of his Holineſs of Name (for He is magnificent in Holineſs, Exod. 15. 11.) it may be attributed to Him upon account of his Goodneſs (as being the great and only Benefactor, to whom all are related as Dependents and Beneficiaries) upon account alſo of his Eternity, All-ſufficiency, Immutability, Immortality, Immenſity (or Omnipreſence) and his Incomprehenſibleneſs by our Underſtandings, Job 36. 26. Behold, God is great and we know him not: neither can the number of his Tears be ſearched out. Ch. 11. 7, 8. In our Inveſtigation of God the Object is of the vaſteſt dimenſions, that which is as high as Heaven, deeper than Hell, that which is longer than the Earth and broader than the Sea; ſuch is the Divine Greatneſs, which is unſearchable, Pſal. 145. 3. Agreeably whereto an Apocryphal Book deſcribeth the vaſt Expanſum of the corporeal Univerſe. O Iſrael, how great is the Houſe of God, and how large is the place of his Poſſeſſion? Great and hath none end, high and unmeaſurable. But chiefly Greatneſs is attributed to God upon account of his Imperial Eſtate, as being The Creature-tranſcendent Potentate. For thus the Orator diſtinguiſheth Cæſar's Greatneſs and Goodneſs. (m) They that dare ſpeak before thee, know not thy Greatneſs; they that dare not, know not thy Goodneſs. Servius noteth, (n) every God ſeemeth great to his Devotioniſt, although Jupiter alone is great, as being alone the Imperial Eſtate amongſt the Heathen Gods. Anſwerably to which Heathen Notion the Scripture muſt be underſtood, when it ſaith of the true God, Great is our God above all Gods. I know, that the Lord is great, and that our God is above all Gods. I know, that the Lord is greater than all Gods. The Lord your God is a God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God. The Lord is a great God, and a great King above all Gods. Thou Lord art high above all the Earth, thou art exalted far above all Gods. All thoſe honourary Names which denote his tranſcendent Imperial Eſtate (ſuch as The moſt high, the Lord of Hoſts, the great King, All-imperial) and all the Scriptural Attributions of Majeſty and Dominion, denote his Greatneſs; and with reſpect to his Imperial Eſtate King David ſaith, 1 Chron. 29. 11, 12. Thine, O Lord, is the Greatneſs, and the Power, and the Glory, and the Victory, and the Majeſty; thine is the Kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as Head above all. Both Riches and Honour come of thee, and thou reigneſt over all, and in thine Hand is power and might, and in thine Hand it is, to make great. Greatneſs is primarily attributed to God, to denote him the Creature-tranſcendent Potentate: but his being ſuch importeth his Creature-tranſcendence in Wiſdom, Power and Operation, which are ſo many Branches of his Greatneſs, Pſal. 147. 5. Great is our Lord and of great power, his Underſtanding is infinite. 1 Joh. 3. 20. God is greater than our Heart (in reſpect of Science) and knoweth all things. Jer. 32. 19. Great in Counſel and mighty in Work. Nahum 1. 3. Slow to Anger and great in Power. So Cicero ſaith, (o) that Jupiter was called optimus propter beneficia, maximus propter vim, the beſt becauſe of his Benefits, the greateſt becauſe of his (executive) Power. Such is the Power and Agency of the great God who formed all things, as ſpeaketh his Greatneſs, for it is no leſs than Miraculous and Creature-tranſcendent, and this Creature-tranſcendent Power is infinitely and unboundedly in Him. But his Creature-tranſcendence implieth alſo ſome other Attributes of Compariſon (his paramount and peerleſs Singularity and the comparative nothingneſs of Creatures) upon account of which the Scripture attributeth Greatneſs unto God, 2 Sam. 7. 22. Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God, and there is none like thee, neither is there any God beſide thee. Iſa. 40. 15, 17. All Nations before him are as nothing, as a drop of a Bucket, and as the ſmall duſt of a Ballance.

Baruch 3. 24, 25.

(m) Qui audent dicere, magnitudinem tuam ignorant, qui non audent, humanitatem.

(n) Omnem Deum videri cultori ſuo magnum, tametſi ſolus Jupiter magnus ſit. Gale in Jambl. p. 222.

2 Chron. 2. 5. 1 Chron. 16. 25. Exod. 18. 11. Deut. 10. 17. Pſal. 95. 3. and 97. 9.

(o) De N. D. l. 2.

His Greatneſs may be further underſtood by conſidering his Glory, which muſt be conſider'd as in Himſelf and coming from Himſelf, And as in us and coming from us. For the Glory that He is and manifeſtation thereof is that which is called his Glory; as Maimonides obſerveth, (p) the Shecinah is called his Glory and the Divine Eſſence (which compriſeth his Eſſential Excellency and Perfection) is alſo called his Glory, Exod. 23. 18, 20. So Greg. M. ſaith; Non aliud claritas, aliud natura, the Nature and the Glory is the ſame thing. Accordingly we read of The God, the King, the Lord, the Father of Glory, the excellent Glory, the preſence of his Glory, the Glory of the incorruptible God, the Glory of his Majeſty, the Habitation of his Holineſs and his Glory, the Brightneſs of his Glory, the Cherubims of Glory, of provoking the Eyes of his Glory, of the Houſe of his Glory, of the knowledge of the Glory of God, that we ſhould be to the praiſe of his Glory, the Glory of God did lighten it, bleſſed be the Glory of the Lord, Glory and Honour are in his preſence, the Throne of Glory, my People have chang'd their Glory (their God) the Heavens declare the Glory of God, Chriſt was raiſed from the dead by the Glory of the Father (the Glory of his Power) the whole Earth is full of his Glory (the Glory which his glorious Perfections and Operations are) the riches of his Glory (his glorious Virtue and Power) declare his Glory among the Heathen, his marvellous Works among all Nations. His Glory muſt alſo be conſider'd as in us, and coming from us. And ſo Man is ſaid, to be the Glory of God, as being the Glory of God repreſented (a Repreſentation of the Majeſty of God) as the Image of God in regenerate Souls is the vital Glory of God repreſented. His Glory as coming from us is a Reputation-kind of Glory (ſuch a giving unto God the glory of his Glories) which is the due honouring and glorifying God in our Souls and by our Tongues and Lives: Which right and due of the Godhead that he muſt be honour'd and glorify'd by us, magnify'd and prais'd, made aſcriptively and in reputation great, is his Greatneſs jurally underſtood. For becauſe of his Greatneſs he ought to be ador'd: Humilitas amplitudinem venerari debet; Meanneſs ought to venerate Greatneſs. His Greatneſs is an Awfulneſs (He is intituled great and dreadful, Dan. 9. 4.) whence he ought to be feared. (q) The true praiſing and celebrating Him is the apprehending (and ſpeaking forth) his Greatneſs. So the Philoſopher praiſeth God; (r) μέγας ὁ Θεός, great is God that gave us theſe Inſtruments, whereby we till the Earth; great is God, that gave us Hands, a Throat, a Ventricle, to grow by inſenſible degrees, to breath when we ſleep, a power to underſtand theſe

(p) Mor. Nev. par 1. c. 64.

1 Cor. 11. 7.

(q) Maimon. ſupr.

(r) Epictet. Diſſ. l. 1. c. 16.

things and to uſe them aright. So the Pſalmiſt praiſeth God, Pſal. 145. 3,—6. Great is the Lord and greatly to be praiſed, and his Greatneſs is unſearchable. One Generation ſhall praiſe thy Works to another, and ſhall declare thy mighty Acts. I will ſpeak of the glorious Honour of thy Majeſty and of thy wondrous Works. And Men ſhall ſpeak of the might of thy terrible Acts: and I will declare thy Greatneſs. Becauſe of his greatneſs God muſt not be meanly and diminutively thought of, priz'd and praiſed, but at the higheſt rate tranſcendently and incomparably, agreeably to the only Creature-tranſcendent Potentate, whoſe Name alone is excellent and whoſe Praiſe is above the Earth and Heaven. Whence the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Praiſe him according to his excellent greatneſs.

V. Greatneſs that is an Attribute of God, is alſo an Attribute of the Myſtery of Godlineſs, 1 Tim. 3. 16. Great is the Myſtery of Godlineſs: God was manifeſt in the Fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit, ſeen of Angels, preach'd unto the Gentiles, believed on in the World, received up into Glory. The words are, Evangelii encomium & compendium, an Elogy and Summary of the Chriſtian Verity. The Attribute Great therefore which is part of this Elogy, ſignifieth as a μεγαλυσμὸς, and muſt be underſtood in a laudatory ſenſe, as it ſignifieth in the Religion and Myſteries of the Gentiles, wherein there is frequent mention of (s) magni Dii, magni Dea, μεγάλαι Θεαὶ, magna Juno (great Gods and Goddeſſes) and great is Diana of the Epheſians, Act. 19. 28. It is not only with reſpect to our Underſtanding, that the Myſtery of Godlineſs is denominated great, as if it was deſign'd only to ſignifie, that it is greatly myſterious and recondite; for ſuch is the Myſtery of Iniquity, and ſuch were the trifles of the Gentiles Myſteries. But a Myſtery truly great (t) μέγα ἐστὶ τὸ πρᾶγμα, μυστικόν ἐστι, is not only greatly myſterious, but the myſterious things of it are great things, and (great things ſo as to be good) truly great things. So the Hiſtory of Adam and Eve is a great Myſtery, Eph. 5. 32. not only as being greatly myſterious, but (u) ὅτι μέγα τι ϗ θαυμαστὸν ᾔνιξατο, becauſe it ſignify'd that which is great and wonderful. So the Myſtery of Godlineſs is a Syſtem, not only of the moſt myſterious things, but of things truly great and wonderful, which are alſo of greateſt weight and worth, excellency and importance, the great things of God and of ſaving Religion, which therefore ought to be greatly heeded and regarded, greatly eſteem'd and magnify'd, and becauſe of the Deity that is in them, they ought to be entertain'd with great veneration. (w) For they are great things indeed and beyond expreſſion, which God hath ſhew'd to us. Other Magnitudes are comparatively little (as the great things of the World, Jer. 44. 5.) theſe are in juſt eſtimation great, that are as high as the Deity, as vaſt as Immenſity, as boundleſs as Eternity, that ſwell beyond all Dimenſions, Eph. 3. 18. which therefore ought to gravitate upon the Mind, and to attract the Eyes and Hearts of all Men, as Moſes turn'd aſide, to ſee a certain great ſight, Exod. 3. 3. (x) For it is a great thing indeed, and wondrous, and full of aſtoniſhment, that our Fleſh ſhould ſit above, and be ador'd by Angels and Archangels, Seraphim and Cherubim. No Religion pretendeth to ſuch great things as the Chriſtian; for they are not ſorry mean things, which the Adverſaries of it have objected againſt it, (y) that the Son of God ought to have appear'd as the Sun, which ſheweth it ſelf by its own light, (z) that it is a fabulous buſineſs, ὑὸν τε ἔχειν τ̃ Θεὸν ϗ δὴ ϗ πεπονθέναι, both for God to have a Son, and that he hath ſuffered, (a) how could we think, Jeſus to be a God, that was compounded of a mortal Body? (b) It is not to be believ'd, that God would expoſe his Son to the death of the Croſs, (c) Quale cor habetis, qui Deum colitis crucifixum? Of late in China the Heathen were at their old cant: (d) What kind of Law is that of yours, which holdeth forth for a God a Man who was executed as a Malefactor? If Chriſtianity pretendeth to ſuch things as theſe, it muſt be acknowledg'd, that it pretendeth to great things beyond all parallel; ſo great is the Myſtery of Godlineſs, that it ſeem'd incredible in the Eyes of Unbelievers, who ſuffer'd themſelves, to be impos'd upon by fallacious external ſhews and appearances; whereas they might have learn'd from Heraclitus ſitting in his Cottage Etiam hic Dii ſunt.

VI. The Apoſtle denominating Chriſt's Religion The Myſtery of Godlineſs alludeth (as is generally ſuppos'd) to the Heathens Popular-religious Myſteries, The Iſiac, Mithraic, Eleaſinian, Samothracian and ſuch more. Theſe have ſo great a correſpondence to the Myſtery of Godlineſs, that the Apoſtle may reaſonably be thought to allude to them, and to oppoſe them to the Myſtery of Chriſtianity. For Men were not natively Intrinſicks of theſe Myſtick-religious Inſtitutions, but became ſuch by an Initiation as they are not born Chriſtians, but are made ſuch by being initiated into Chriſtianity. As they are initiated into Chriſtianity by Baptiſm, ſo the Gentiles, (e) ſacris quibuſdam per lavacrum initiantur, are initiated into ſome of their Sacra by Waſhing. (f) Ilyſſus a River of Attica was made uſe of in this Rite, there a luſtration was wont to be made in the leſſer Eleuſinian Myſteries, by which they paſs'd into the greater. Καθαρμὸς was a principal part of theſe Religions (uſually a very operoſe and tedious one, a Shop of Purgations) whereby they acknowledg'd the Impurity of Mankind in their now natural ſtate. They ſuppos'd alſo (in conſort with Chriſtianity) that thoſe who were not initiated, were in the ſtate of Profaneneſs; for with them (g) βέβηλοι ϗ μηδέπω κεκαθαρμένοι, the Profane and the Unpurg'd were the ſame. Chriſtianity initiateth Men by teaching them a certain Doctrine of Fundamentals: So the leſſer Eleuſinian Myſteries had (h) διδασκαλίας τινὰ ὑπόθεσιν, a certain Foundation of Doctrine (to prepare them for things to come after) but in the greater Myſteries Men were learners no more. They were ſuppos'd to be Converts to God, Piety, Humanity, and good Life, from their evil Opinions and evil Life, upon account of which Converſion (anſwerably to the Chriſtian Baptiſm) they had their Luſtration, (i) as thoſe that did what they ought, relinquiſh their atheous Opinion, and turn to the true Tradition. (k) They relinquiſh'd the wild kind of Life which they liv'd before, and when they were initiated into theſe Myſteries, thought themſelves bound to eximious good life, to eſchew Sins and to exceed other Men. They were a Generation of Pagan Saintiſts, and their Inſtitution a Myſtery of Pagan Sanctity and Godlineſs; for upon their Initiation they were ſaid εἰς εὐσέβειαν ἥκειν, to come into Godlineſs, their Myſteries were inſtituted ἐπὶ παιδείᾳ ϗ ἐπανορθώσει τοῦ βίου, for Diſcipline and amendment of Life, they were called τελεταί, as bringing Men to perfection of Life, and Cicero ſaith of them. (l) Athens ſeemeth to me, to have produc'd and introduc'd into human Life many eximious and divine things, but nothing better than thoſe Myſteries (the Eleuſinian) by which from a wild and ferine Life we are poliſh'd and mitigated to Humanity; and which as they are called Initia, ſo we have known them indeed the beginnings of Life. (m) This is the Gentiles Regeneration. But in the Mithraic Sacra Water was not us'd, inſtead thereof Honey was poured upon the Hands of the initiated, with a Charge (n) καθαρὰς ἔχειν τὰς χεῖρας ἀπὸ παντὸς λυπηροῦ ϗ βλαπτικοῦ ϗ μυσαροῦ, from all that is Evil, Miſchievous and Flagitious.

(s) Gothofred. Exercit. in loc.

(t) Epictet. Diſſ. p. 307

(u) S. Chryſoſt. in Epheſ. Hom. 20.

(w) Ὄντως γὰρ μεγάλα ἀνεκδιήγητα τὰ παρὰ Θεοῦ εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐπιδεδειγμένα. Idem in 1 Tim. Hom. 7.

(x) Καὶ γὰρ ὄντως μέγα ϗ θαυμαστὸν ϗ ἐκπλήξεως γέμον. Idem in Hebr. Hom. 5.

(y) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 2. p. 78.

(z) Clem. Str. l. 1. p. m. 229.

(a) Orig. Philocal. p. 49.

(b) Tertull. c. Jud. c. 10.

(c) S. Aug. de Verb. Apoſt. ſer. 8.

(d) Semedo par. 2. c. 3.

(e) Tertull. de Baptiſm. c. 5.

(f) Marſh. can. Chron. p. 201. Ed. Lipſ.

(g) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 1. p. 8. Herald. in Arnob. p. 87.

(h) Clem. Str. l. 5. p. m. 424.

(i) Ὡς δέον τὴν ἄθεον ἀποθεμένους δόξαν, ἐπὶ τὴν ἀληθῆ τρέπεσθαι παράδοσιν. Clem. ibid. l. 7. p. m. 513.

(k) Gothofred. ſupr. col. 3775, 3789.

The Eleuſinian Rites were not only the beginning of Life, but (o) expiatio cædis an Expiation of Guilt (like the Chriſtian Baptiſm) the Eleuſinian Luſtration was a Preparation to the Sacra (as the Chriſtian Baptiſm is;) and as Baptiſm is called by the ancient Writers φωτισμός, Illumination: (p) So by the Eleuſinian Luſtrations Souls were ſuppos'd to be purg'd from the Contagion of things Mortal, and to be qualified for the Contemplation of divine things. As by entring into Chriſtianity and Godlineſs Men become near unto God, his Domeſticks, Societiſts and Citizens: So theſe Religious Myſtic Inſtitutions of the Pagans were for God-ſociety, the Intrinſicks of them were look'd upon as God-ſocietiſts, that had more eſpecially the Preſence, Converſe and Society of their Gods, and were made nigh unto them. As Apuleius ſpeaking of his Initiation ſaith (q) Deos Inferos & Deos ſuperos acceſſi coram & adoravi de proximo, I came into the Preſence of the Infernal and Supernal Gods and moſt nearly ador'd them. The Intrinſicks of theſe Paganical Inſtitutions were ſuppos'd, to be in the State of Holineſs and Happineſs, of Sanctity and Beatitude, as Chriſtian Believers really are. (r) Initiati credebantur Deos habere in periculis præſentiſſimos, & ipſos fieri Sanctiores & Juſtiores. The initiated into the Samothracian Myſteries were ſuppos'd, to have the Gods moſt nigh unto them in Dangers, and themſelves were ſuppos'd to be made more Holy and Juſt, upon account of which mighty advantages many great Men of ancient times deſir'd to be initiated into theſe Myſteries; and the like advantages were ſuppos'd to accrue from the Eleuſinian. From thoſe Myſteries ſaith Cicero (s) We have not only the benefit of living joyouſly, but of dying with better Hope. It was thought, that the Myſticks of this Inſtitution were abſolved from their Sins after Death, that they liv'd with thoſe Gods whoſe Religioniſts they were, and that they were more honourable and happy than others in the other World. By Sophocles theſe Myſteries are repreſented (anſwerably to Chriſtianity) as Saving to Mankind. (t)

In Hades they have Life, theſe
Sacra that have ſeen,
With others all is bad, theſe are the happy Men.

They that ſaw theſe Sacra, are ſaid to have ſeen (u) πολλὰ μυστικὰ θεάματα, many arcane Sights, the appearances of the Gods; to which the Apoſtle may reaſonably be thought to allude, when he ſaith, God was manifeſt in the Fleſh.

VII. His alluſion to the Popular-pagan Myſteries, not to the Philoſophic, is of great remark, both for the right underſtanding the Deities of theſe Pagan Religious Myſteries and for right underſtanding the Chriſtian Religion and the Deity thereof. For it ſheweth, that the Demiurgus in the Eleuſinian Myſteries was the Popular Pagan Jupiter, not the Platoniſts Νοῦς, or Logos (w) as ſome ſuppoſe. For this Platonic Deity is not a Popular Pagan Deity (a Deity of the Pagans Religion and Laws) but is an arcane Philoſophic Deity, and therefore could not be the Demiurgus in the Eleuſinian Myſteries, which are far more ancient than the humour of Philoſophizing amongſt the Greeks. Much of Nature (probably) there was in theſe Myſteries, becauſe the ſupreme Deity of the Popular Pagans was univerſal mundane animated Nature: But the Platoniſts Logos is tranſcendent thereto, and therefore tranſcendent to the Eleuſinian Inſtitution, which if it was a Traduction from Egypt, yet it was nothing more than a Popular-pagan Traduction (of which Nature there were many Traductions from Egypt:) But according to Homer, the Founders of this Inſtitution that learn'd the Myſteries of it from the Goddeſs Ceres, were poor Country-Swains, far from being acquainted with the Platoniſts Acroamatical Logos. The Men that manag'd theſe Myſteries, were not train'd up in the Schools of Philoſophers (x) but the Hierophantes, Daduchus, Hierocéryx, and Ceryx, were Men choſen by the Athenian People out of the number of the Athenian People; the Deities therefore of their Inſtitution (and conſequently their Demiurgus) were not the Philoſophic-pagan. The Deities of the Samothracian Myſteries according (y) to the Scholiaſt on Apollonius and Artemidorus were the ſame with the Eleuſinian, at leaſt they were of the ſame Character Popular-pagan. For (z) according to Servius, Macrobius and Varro they were Dii Penates (a) they were certainly Dii Patrii, the Country-gods (the Deities of their Religion and Laws) the Romans had them (not from the Philoſophic, but) from the Popular Pagans. (b) For they had them from the Albani, thoſe had them from the Trojans (that fled out of their Country) and by King Dardanus they were brought from Samothrace into Phrygia. And as thoſe Phrygian Deities Cybele and Attis, ſo theſe Samothracian Deities were called (c) Dii magni, the Prieſts alſo of theſe Samothracian Deities and the Prieſts of Cybele (d) were called by the ſame Name, which ſpeaketh a great Affinity between theſe Samothracian Deities and the Mother of the Gods. (e) To the Deities of theſe Samothracian Myſteries Orpheus (who was initiated into them) pray'd in a Tempeſt for a Calm (as the Popular Pagans pray'd to their Deities) theſe Myſteries were for the uſe and benefit of the Popular Pagans, and all the great Men of ancient times, of whom we read (f) that they were initiated into them, were Popular Pagans (unleſs Orpheus may be counted a Philoſophic Pagan) Jaſon, Caſtor & Pollux, Hercules & Orpheus, Cadmus, Ulyſſes, Agamemnon, Tarquinius Demarathi Corinthi fil. and Philip the Father of Alexander. We will ſuppoſe, that theſe Samothracian Deities were (g) three in number, and the ſame with that Ternary of Deities in the Capitol at Rome, Jupiter, Minerva and Juno:

(l) Nam mihi cum multa eximia divinaque videntur Athenæ peperiſſe, atque in vitam hominum attuliſſe, tum nihil melius illis myſteriis, quibus ex agreſti immanique vita exculti ad humanitatem, & mitigati ſumus; initiaque ut appellantur, ita re vera principia vitæ cognovimus.

(m) Herald. in Arnob. p. 84.

(n) Porph. de Antro, p. 260.

(o) Marſham ſupr. p. 264.

(p) Ibid. p. 266.

(q) Metamorph. l. 2. prope fin. v. Voſſ. de Idol. l. 5. c. 39.

(r) Marſham. ſupr. p. 126.

(s) Non ſolum cum lætitia vivendi rationem accepimus, ſed etiam cum ſpe meliore moriendi. Marſham. Ibid. p. 266. Gothofred. ſupr. col. 3789.

(t) ——ὡς τρισόλβιοι
Κεῖνοι βροτῶν, οἳ ταῦτα δερχθέντες τέλη.
Μόλωσ' ἐς ᾅδου· τοῖς δὲ γὰρ μόνοις ἐκεῖ.
Ζῆν ἐστι, τοῖς δ' ἄλλοισι πάντ' ἐκεῖ κακά.

(u) Marſh. p. 267.

(w) Idem p. 262.

(x) Ibid. p. 261.

(y) Bochart. Canaan l. 1. c. 12. & 39.

(z) Elmenhorſt. in Arnob. p. 125.

(a) Macrob. Sat. l. 3. c. 4.

(b) Voſſ. de Idol. 8. c. 12.

(c) Pignor. p. 9, 24.

(d) Arnob. c. Gent. l. 3. p. 124.

(e) Voſſ. de Idol. 9. l. c. 35.

(f) Marſham. ſupr. p. 125.

(g) Tertull. de Spectac. c. 8.

But is it reaſonable, to infer from thence (h) with ſome learned Men, that the Samothracian Deities were the three Divine Hypoſtaſes of Pythagoras and Plato, and that they were originally an Hebrew Tradition touching the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghoſt? So ſome ſuppoſe (i) that the old Germans worſhipp'd one and the true eternal God in Trinity under the Names and Deities of the Sun, Moon and Fire, and that by Caſtor and Pollux was meant the Logos and the Holy Ghoſt. Which are as likely Conceits as theſe other, the Samothracian and Capitoline Deities were the Trinity, Jupiter being God the Father, Minerva the Logos, and Juno the Holy Ghoſt. For it is certain, that the Capitoline Jupiter was no other than the Popular Pagan Jupiter, Minerva is a Parallel for the Pontificians Virgin-Goddeſs, but not for the Logos, and is there any thing like the Holy Ghoſt in Juno? But becauſe theſe Samothracian Deities are called by an Hebrew Name Cabiri (the mighty Gods) for this only Reaſon ſome learned Men are prone to think theſe Deities of the Pagan Polytheiſm an Hebrew Tradition of the Trinity. But this is a weak Surmiſe; for there is a Traduction and Derivation of Hebrew Words and Names into the Language of Pagan Nations, although the things which thoſe Pagan Nations ſignified by thoſe Names were not deriv'd from the Hebrews. As Adonis is an Hebrew Name, yet the Perſon ſignified by that Name is no Tradition from the Hebrews. So in the War between Lucullus and Mithridates there is mention (k) of the City of the Cabiri (l) certain Mountains in Phrygia were called Cabiri, and the Prieſts of Cybele were called Cabiri, yet theſe things were no Traditions from the Hebrews. But thus far we ought to acknowledge an Hebrew Original of theſe Samothracian Deities, that had the Name of Cabri or Divi potes (m) probably they were originally Phœnician Deities worſhipped at Berytus, whence their Name Cabiri was propagated to Samothracia. Agreeably to this their Origin a certain Cave (called Zerynthus) was ſacred unto them, wherein Dogs were ſacrific'd to Hecate; and like other Phænician Deities (n) they requir'd humane Sacrifices, which ſpeaketh them not divine Hypoſtaſes but Diabolical.

VIII. For the right underſtanding the Chriſtian Religion it is of great uſe, to obſerve, that the Apoſtle in ſtiling it The Myſtery of Godlineſs alludeth to the Popular Pagan Myſteries. For if in this Deſcription of the Chriſtian Religion he had alluded to the Myſtical and Acroamatical Theology of the Philoſophic Pagans, this would have inferr'd, that the Chriſtian Religion is a Myſtery of Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical Theology: But ſeeing that in ſtiling the Chriſtian Religion a Myſtery he hath no reſpect at all to the Myſteries of the Philoſophic Pagans, not to their Myſtic-metaphyſical and Scholaſtic Theology (which is unpopular and unholy) not to any thing of that Nature, but only to the Religious Myſteries of the Popular Pagans, this plainly inferreth, that the Chriſtian Religion is no Myſtery of Scholaſtical and Metaphyſical Learning, but that this is the true Nature and Notion of it, it is a Popular-religious (or Holy-popular) kind of Myſtery. Excepting only the difference between true and falſe Religion it is of the ſame Nature with the Popular Pagans Religious Myſteries; for it is the Chriſtians Science of Sanctity and Saint of God-kind of Learning, which concerneth them and is their Buſineſs, as they are the Holy People (whereas Scholaſtic and Unpopular kind of Learning concerneth them not as Chriſtians, but is Exotick and Exoterical) the comprehenſion of (o) τὰ παραδιδόμενα μυστήρια τῆς κατ' Ἰησοῦν θεοσεβείας, the delivered Myſteries (or myſterious things) of Godlineſs according to Jeſus. A Philoſophy it is, but no other Philoſophy than ſuch as is the Diſcipline of Sanctity and Piety, which is a Popular-religious Philoſophy. Such is Chriſtianity and Godlineſs, and ſuch therefore is the Myſtery of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs. And ſuch is the Truth which is after Godlineſs (the Truth which is the true and Saving Religion) for this kind of Truth is the Saint of God-kind of Learning and Philoſophy (p) τοῦ λαοῦ φιλοσοφία, the Philoſophy of the People (as Chriſtianity is fitly ſtiled) the Truth of which the Church (that is, Populus Chriſtianus) is the Pillar and Fulciment, which ſhe ſuſtaineth, exhibiteth, and propoſeth to the World. 1 Tim. 3. 15. The Names of this Myſtery ſpeak it the Holy Popular kind of Myſtery; for they plainly ſignifie the Chriſtian and the Evangelical kind of Myſtery (q) The Myſtery of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs, the Myſtery of the Goſpel, the Myſtery of Chriſt (the Myſtery of his being Chriſt and our being Chriſtians) the Myſtery of God and of the Father and of Chriſt, the Myſtery of Faith and of his Will, the Myſtery of the knowledge of Chriſt, the Myſteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, this Myſtery among the Gentiles which is Chriſt in you the hope of Glory. The Chriſtian Religion in the Deſign of it is Popular; for the End and Buſineſs of it is the Salvation of all People. Luk. 2. 10. The great Author of it founded it from this Principle, Amor erga populum, (Love to his People) and it muſt be ſaid of him, as S. Hierom ſaith of the Jewiſh High Prieſt, Quicquid agebat, quicquid loquebatur, doctrina erat populi, whatever he did and ſpake was inſtructive to the People. He taught no Unpopular kind of Learning, nor did he teach in the Schools of it. His Apoſtles were Teachers of the People, their buſineſs was, to gather and to feed the Flock of God's People (r) inſtituting Women and Children and the multitude of the common People to a godly Life. Which is analogous to the Buſineſs of Civil Life; for Holy People manage themſelves in Religion by the ſame Rules of Prudence, whereby Men ordinarily manage human Affairs; whence it appeareth, that Religion is an Holy Popular Buſineſs. And ſuch are the Myſteries which conſtitute the Chriſtian Religion as parts of it; they are plainly Holy-popular-kind of Myſteries. For ſuch is the Myſtery of two oppoſite Religions of Law and Saving Grace, two oppoſite Kingdoms of Darkneſs and Light, two oppoſite Potentates a Saviour-king and an Abaddon, two oppoſite Creations old and new, two oppoſite Eſtates of Regeneracy and Unregeneracy, Juſtification and Condemnation, two oppoſite Lives of Sin and Sanctity, of the old and new Man, the Myſtery of the new Jeruſalem, of the hidden Manna, of the Holy Euchariſt, the Myſtery of Chriſt and his Church and their Union, the Myſtery of their Rejection of the Jews and of calling the Gentiles, the Myſtery of a Reſurrection to Life and Death eternal. All which Evangelical Myſteries are extremely remote from and oppoſite unto the Unpopular and Scholaſtic kind of Myſteries. If therefore the Chriſtian Religion is of one piece, if it is not (as Methodius calleth Origen) a Centaur, if it doth not

---

(h) Intell. Syſt. p. 450. Voſſ. ſupr. l. 8. c. 12. H. Mori op. T. 2. p. 587, &c.

(i) Voſſ. Ibid. l 1. c. 37, 38.

(k) Phot. cod. 224. Col. 741.

(l) Voſſ. de Idol. l. 2. c. 53.

(m) Bochart. ſupr. c. 12.

(n) Voſſ. ſupr. l. 1. c. 35.

(o) Orig. c Celſ. l. 3. p. 148.

Tit. 1. 1.

(p) Clem. Str. l. 6. p. m. 497.

(q) Eph. 3. 4. and 6. 19. Matth. 13. 11. Mark 4. 11. 1 Cor. 2. 7. and 4. 1. Col. 1. 26, 27. and 2. 2. 1 Tim. 3. 9.

(r) Γύναια καὶ παῖδας, καὶ τὸ τῶν ἀγελαίων πλῆθος ἐπὶ τὸν εὐσεβῆ βίον χειραγωγοῦντες. Euſeb. pr. Ev. l. 1. c. 5.

(s) Miſcere tenebroſa lucentibus, combine things together as Heterogeneous as Light and Darkneſs, we may ſafely pronounce, that not any part of the Chriſtian Religion is an Unpopular Scholaſtic kind of Myſtery.

IX. The genuine Trinitarians therefore muſt be The Holy-popular (or the Chriſtian) not the Scholaſtic kind of Trinitarians, elſe the Chriſtian Religion will be in the main and principal Articles of it and in the Summary of it not an Holy-popular but an Unpopular and Unholy kind of Myſtery. For the Scholaſtic Theology to initiate us into the Myſtery of the Trinity (t) beginneth with the Philoſophy of Ens and the Metaphyſical Definition thereof (which yet is not capable of a perfect Definition) and then it proceedeth to the diviſion of Ens into Subſtance and Accident, defining the latter a Being inherent in another as in a Subject ſupporting it, and the former it defineth a Being not inhering in another. But beſides Subſtance and Accident (which yet are an adequate Diviſion of real Beings) there is a Mode of Being, which is not a meer Nothing, nor Ens rationis, nor being added to a Being doth it make any addition to it of another Being, or degree of Being, but it is an Affection or Habitude of a Being, whereby it is determin'd to ſome particular State or Condition. From theſe Appendages of Being reſulteth the difference called Modal; and from this Branch of the Philoſophy of Ens the Scholaſtick Theology proceedeth, to define and diſtinguiſh Eſſence, Exiſtence, Nature, Subſiſtence and Perſonality. As Ens or Being may be defin'd That which is, ſo Eſſence may be defined That by which a thing is what it is. Exiſtence is that Mode or Affection of Being, by which a thing (if it hath any cauſe) ſtandeth actually produc'd out of the Power of its Cauſes. Subſiſtence is a Mode of Being by which a thing exiſteth by it ſelf without exiſting in another either as a part in the whole, or as an Adjunct in the Subject. Exiſtence and Subſiſtence really differ; for one and the ſame undivided Exiſtence, as well as one and ſame Eſſence, belongeth to all the three Divine Perſons equally, whereas yet every Perſon hath his own proper diſtinct Subſiſtence. To whatſoever Being or Nature this Mode of Subſiſtence belongeth, that is a ſuppoſitum, as being a thing which by no means exiſteth in any other, but as a Baſis or Foundation ſupporteth ſuch Things or Beings as exiſt in it; whence it is named ὑφιϛάμενον. And the conſequence of this is, that as Subſiſtence maketh a thing a Suppoſitum, ſo Suppoſitality maketh it incommunicable; ſince that which is incapable of exiſting in another, muſt alſo hinder it from being communicated to another. And another conſequence of the ſame is; that every Suppoſitum or Being thus ſubſiſting by it ſelf, is a compleat Being, that is, ſuch an one, which is not made for the Completion of any other; for whatſoever is ſo, muſt naturally exiſt in it, as a part doth in the whole, or at leaſt be originally deſign'd ſo to do. Hence it is eaſie, to give an account what a Perſon is; for Suppoſitum is ſubſtantia ſingularis completa per ſe ſubſiſtens, and a Perſon is Suppoſitum rationale. The Ratio intellectiva being added to Suppoſitum maketh it a Perſon, which is a further Perfection of Suppoſitality, and the utmoſt Perfection of Subſiſtence. Which Subſiſtence or Suppoſitality added to Nature maketh a Compoſition in created finite Perſons, but not in the uncreated and infinite; for in them the divine Nature and the perſonal Subſiſtence coaleſce into one by an incomprehenſible ineffable kind of Union and Conjunction. Of this difference between Perſons created and uncreated this Theology pretendeth not to give any Account.

But having acquainted us with theſe Logical and Metaphyſical Terms and Notions it proceedeth, to teach us, that there is one and but one Self-exiſting, infinite, eternal Being, Nature or Subſtance, which we call God. And that this infinite, eternal Self-exiſting Being, Nature or Subſtance, exiſteth in and is common to three diſtinct Perſons, Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt. Of which the Son eternally iſſueth from the Father by way of Generation, and the Holy Ghoſt jointly from both by way of Spiration; which three Divine Perſons ſuperadd to this Divine Nature or Deity three different Modes of Subſiſtence, founding ſo many different Relations, each of them belonging to each Perſon in a peculiar uncommunicable manner; ſo that by Virtue thereof each Perſon reſpectively differeth and ſtandeth diſtinguiſh'd from the other two: And yet by reaſon of one and the ſame numerical Divine Nature or Godhead equally exiſting in and common to all the three Perſons, they are all but one and the ſame God. They are conſtituted three Perſons by three different Modes of Subſiſtence, which alſo as Properties diſtinguiſh the Perſons from each other, and as Relations cauſe them to be referred to one another; and as objective Conceptions they are called Notiones, but as ſuch they are four in number, Paternity, Filiation, Spiration and Proceſſion, all of them importing Relation. To expreſs therefore the diſtinction and difference of the divine Perſons theſe following Terms are uſed; Perſonæ Subſiſtentiæ, modi Subſiſtendi, Proprietates, Relationes, Notiones ſeu Notionalia. To expreſs their Unity and Agreement in one and the ſame Nature theſe Terms are uſed, ὁμȣσιότης, Conſubſtantiality, μία ȣ̓σία, one Eſſence, ’Εμπεριχώρησις, Circumminceſſion or mutual In-being. This is the beſt account, which the Scholaſtic Theology giveth of the Trinity, and is generally receiv'd by School-Divines (yet not without contradicting this Account in ſome Inſtances) whence it is manifeſt, that this Theology's account of the Trinity is nothing better than a Syſtem of common Logicks and Metaphyſicks, of Kind and Quality it is Unholy and Unpopular, and conſequently it maketh the Myſtery of the Trinity of a contrary Nature and Character to the Myſtery of Godlineſs. Many School-divines ſuppoſe, that there is an Impreſſion of the Trinity upon created things in Nature, an Image of it in the natural Faculties of the Soul of Man; by which Hypotheſis it is made a Myſtery on this ſide the Myſtery of Chriſtianity and Godlineſs.

Upon which account there is too much Reaſon to ſay (as a great Prelate of our Nation many Years agone is reported to have ſaid) there hath not been a greater Plague to the Chriſtian Religion then School-divinity. Proteſtant Divines in great numbers have thus declaim'd againſt the School-divinity, not conſidering, that this was their own Theology, and that retaining the Scholaſtic Trinity, the Scholaſtic Logos and the Scholaſtic Incarnation, they retain'd the main Subſtance of School-divinity, and the prime Articles of it. It fareth therefore with the School-divinity as with Aſtrology at Rome, which (as Tacitus ſaith) was always prohibited, yet always retain'd: So the Scholaſtic Theology is always declaim'd againſt, and yet the main of it is always retain'd. But there is this prejudice

(s) Jul. Firmic. de error. p. 19.

(t) Animadverſions upon Dr. Sherlock c. 2. and 8.

prejudice againſt the prime Articles of it, That its Trinity, Logos and Incarnation, is not of the Chriſtian (the Holy-popular) kind, but is manifeſtly of Kind and Quality Unpopular and Scholaſtical, which is not tolerably intelligible by any, but thoſe that have learned a Syſtem of School-Logicks and Metaphyſicks (u) Few can have any diſcernment of it, none but thoſe that are ſomewhat learned in Philoſophy. And there is a further prejudice againſt the prime Articles of it; The Trinity, the Logos, the Incarnation, if they are of Kind and Quality Scholaſtic Myſteries, they are of Scholaſtic Explication. But they are ſo far from being of Scholaſtic Explication, that the Scholaſtic Theology after all its Subtilties of Notion, Speculation and Diſtinction, pronounceth them at a great rate Unintelligible and Inexplicable. Such a Theology is not accommodate either for the Schools or for the Church. Not for the Schools (although it is Scholaſtical;) for it intricateth what it undertaketh to Explicate. Not for the Church; for it ſpoileth the plain Man's Path-way to Heaven.

X. To define a Myſtery with reſpect to the Scholaſtick rather than to the Popular kind of Myſteries, is moſt accommodate to the purpoſe of brangling Schoolmen, but not to the Nature and Intereſts of Chriſtianity, which knoweth not Scholaſticiſm, nor hath any deſign, to recommend Metaphyſical Speculations to the World under the Name of Myſteries; for in the Nature and definitive Notion of it, it is an Holy-popular Inſtitution, and as ſuch is a Myſtery. A Myſtery therefore muſt not be defin'd a revealed Truth that tranſcendeth and ſurpaſſeth all human Comprehenſion (which is neither the Pagan nor the Chriſtian Notion of a Myſtery, no adequate Notion of a Myſtery in general, nor of a Religious Myſtery in general, nor of a truly Religious Myſtery:) But a Myſtery muſt be defin'd agreeably to the Nature of the Popular-religious Myſteries and to the Senſe of the People, who call a thing a Myſtery (w) to ſignifie, that it is of an abſtruſe, arcane and recondite Nature. In the Book of Daniel and the Apocrypha (the Book of Tobit, Judeth, Eccleſiaſticus, and the Second of Macchabees) the Secrets of Men are called Myſteries, agreeably whereunto in the New Teſtament the Secrets of God as ſuch are called Myſteries, and not becauſe they ſurpaſs all human Comprehenſion. Myſteries there are many, that tranſcend all human Comprehenſion, and they are therefore Myſteries (as being myſterious and recondite) becauſe they tranſcend all human Comprehenſion. But upon other accounts and in other reſpects things may be of an arcane and recondite Nature, and theſe are Myſteries, although they tranſcend not all human Comprehenſion. Such Myſteries there are in an ordinary Senſe, and ſuch Myſteries there are in a magnifying laudatory Senſe, which are called Myſteries, to denote, that they are arcane and recondite, ſo as to be of ſupravulgar Excellency, choice Arcana. Common Myſteries, as Myſteries of State, Trade, Art and Philoſophy. Myſteries of Religion (reputatively ſuch) as the Myſteries of the Gentiles, whoſe Language was (x) Religionis ſcereta perdidici, I have throughly learn'd the Myſteries of Religion. So the Seven Stars and the Seven Golden Candleſticks are a Myſtery. Apoc. 1. 20. Babylon is a Myſtery. Apoc. 17. 5. And ſuch is the calling of the Gentiles, the Rejection of the Jews and their future Converſion. Rom. 11. 25. The Name Myſtery here ſignifieth (y) That which was unknown and arcane, and which is mighty ſtrange and wonderful, as the Apoſtle ſaith elſewhere; behold I ſhew you a Myſtery, we ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed. Which change of an earthly into an heavenly Body is of as eaſie apprehenſion as the Phænomena of Nature, and doth not more than they ſurpaſs all humane Comprehenſion. So the Myſtery of the Will of God which is made known, is not incomprehenſible ſince it is made known, as the Prophetick Myſtery of God when it is finiſh'd, is not likely to ſurpaſs all humane Comprehenſion. The Writers of the Church indeed call the Chriſtian Religion a Myſtery with reſpect to their Scholaſtick Myſteries, which are ſuppos'd, to ſurpaſs humane Comprehenſion: But they are of no Authority, if they come in Competition with the Holy Writers of Scripture, nor are they of ſuch narrow Minds, as to confine the Name Myſtery to the Scholaſtic Myſteries: For they ordinarily call the Sacraments Myſteries, and the Wane of the Moon is called (z) magnum myſterium (a great Myſtery) as being of arcane Signification and denoting the Diſſolution of all things. This therefore is no eſſential Ingredient of a Myſtery of true Religion, to ſurpaſs all human Comprehenſion: Nor is the Chriſtian Religion called a Myſtery (by the Holy Writers) meerly or primarily upon this account. But

(1.) The Chriſtian Religion is called a Myſtery as being a Secret (a moſt ancient Secret, not known, nor poſſible to be known) till revealed, and of a Nature hugely Alien from what is uſual and from our natural Notices. In this Senſe the Goſpel-Oeconomy of things is ſtiled The Revelation of the Myſtery, which was kept ſecret ſince the World began, the Wiſdom of God in a Myſtery, even the hidden Wiſdom, which God ordained before the World; the Myſtery of Chriſt, which in other ages was not made known unto the Sons of Men, as it is now revealed; the Myſtery which from the beginning of the World hath been hid in God; the Myſtery which hath been hid from Ages and Generations, but now is made manifeſt. The Goſpel is a free determination of the Wiſdom and Will of God, which is purely of ſupernatural Revelation, nor could any Wit or Reaſon of Man ever have dream'd of any ſuch things as the Matters of Chriſtianity (a) οὕτω ξένα ϗ ἀλλότρια, ſo ſtrange and alien, (b) ξένα τινὰ ϗ παράδοξα ϗ ὑπὲρ τοὺς οὐρανοὺς πράγματα, certain ſtrange things and remote from our Conceits, and beyond the Heavens.

(2.) The Chriſtian Religion is called a Myſtery as being in great degree not vulgarly known ſince it is revealed. For God hath made fooliſh the Wiſdom of this World (their multijugous Erudition and Prudence) in appointing a way to Salvation extremely diſſonant from their apprehenſion, which they cannot like or reliſh, and which is hid from Rabbinical Grandees and Philoſophic Gallants and revealed to Babes, hid from Princes and revealed to Peaſants, hid from Phariſees and revealed to Publicans, to rightly prepared Souls, Matth. 13. 11. to the Saints that are duely initiated, Col. 1. 26. to the Holy Apoſtles and Prophets, Eph. 3. 5. but not to the worldy States-men and Politicians, 1 Cor. 2. 8. not to many wiſe Men after the Fleſh. 1 Cor. 1. 23, 26. Matth. 11. 25. The Heathen Myſteries were concealed from thoſe that were not duly prepared and initiated, nor is it otherwiſe with this great Myſtery the Kingdom of God

(u) Petav. de Trin. l. 6. c. 3. S. 1.

(w) See Pool's Synopſ. on Rom. 11. 25. and on Eph. 1. 9.

(x) Jul. Firmic. de error. p. 36.

(y) Τὸ ἀγνοούμενον ϗ ἀπόῤῥητον, ϗ πολὺ μὲν τὸ θαῦμα, πολὺ δὲ παράδοξον ἔχον. S. Chryſoſt. in Rom. λόγ. ιθ.

Eph. 1. 9. Apoc. 10. 7.

(z) S. Ambroſ. Hexaem. l. 4. c. 8.

Rom. 16. 25. 1 Cor. 2. 7. Eph. 3. 4, 5, 9. Col. 1. 26.

(a) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 8. p. 408.

(b) S. Chryſoſt. T. 3. p. 762.

God. For although Chriſtianity muſt be publiſh'd upon the Houſe tops (whereas the Heathen Myſteries muſt not be told abroad) yet being ſo publiſh'd it is like Ariſtotle's Acroamaticks, publiſh'd not publiſh'd, or like a Bee incloſ'd in Gumm, & lucet & latet, it ſhineth and yet is arcane and recondite. For as to the matters of Sanctity and Saving Religion Mankind in their Graceleſſneſs and Wickedneſs are marvellouſly undiſcerning, and indiſpos'd to diſcern them, and theſe are (penally) hid from the Eyes of the unmeet and unworthy. For many are in high place and in renown: but Myſteries are revealed unto the Meek, Ecclus. 3. 19. To the one it is given to know the Myſteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but to the other it is not given, Matth. 13. 11. Chriſtianity is alſo not only or chiefly a Myſtery of Notion, but of Life, and of the Goods and Enjoyments of a myſterious recondite Life (the choice arcanum thereof) which none knoweth, but they that have it. No natural Man hath any Imagination or Conceit of it, but as a Treaſure hid in a Field it is extremely remote from vulgar Notice and Apprehenſion.

Matth. 13. 44.

(3.) The Chriſtian Religion is called a Myſtery as being in part hid from the knowledge of the Chriſtians; and in part and in ſeveral reſpects it is to them incomprehenſible. The greateſt proficients in Chriſtianity pretend not, to be like the Pagan ἐπόπται (to be Learners no more) to underſtand all Myſteries and all Knowledge. They know but in part, their Underſtandings cannot graſp the greatneſs and vaſtneſs of all things, that are in their Religion, and they have but glimpſes of the great things to come. They cannot reach the cauſes and reaſons of all things that are in it, which they contemplate with great admiration, Rom. 11. 33. They are at a loſs ſometimes, to give a clear account of the Modus of things (which is in all caſes difficult) and they pretend not clearly and fully to aſſoil all difficulties that incumber Religion; as how the Divine Preſcience of all future Events can conſiſt with the liberty of the Will of Man and the Contingency of his Actions. And as the Chriſtian Religion is in part and in ſome reſpect incomprehenſible and unfathomable by Chriſtians: ſo they attain the knowledge of it by degrees, whence the Apoſtle conſidereth ſome Myſteries as (in part at leaſt) hidden from the knowledge of the Chriſtians, Rom. 11. 25. I would not, that ye ſhould be ignorant of this Myſtery. 1 Cor. 15. 51. Behold, I ſhew you a Myſtery. Col. 2. 2. Grow unto all riches of the full aſſurance of underſtanding, to the acknowledgment of the Myſtery of God, and of the Father, and of Chriſt. As the holy Writers therefore, when they ſpeak of Myſtery Babylon and the Myſtery of Iniquity, conſider thoſe things as concealed from the knowledge of Men: as our Saviour, when he expoundeth to S. John the Myſtery of the ſeven Stars and the ſeven Golden Candleſticks, conſidereth this Myſtery as a thing hidden from his knowledge, and therefore expoundeth it unto him, Apoc. 1. 20. and as the Apoſtle conſidereth the Chriſtian Religion as concealed from the knowledge of Men, when he ſtileth it the Wiſdom in a Myſtery, the hidden Wiſdom, which none of the Princes of the World knew: ſo he conſidereth ſome Myſteries as (in part at leaſt) hidden from the knowledge of the Chriſtians.

(4.) The Chriſtian Religion is called a Myſtery as being in the Introduction of it, The grand Myſtery of Providence. For as a principal thing that Providence concerneth it ſelf about in this World, is the raiſing up new Empires and Monarchies: ſo the Introduction of the Chriſtian Religion was the erecting a new Divine Empire and Monarchy. And as (c) the Counſels of Princes and Affairs of State (Ragioni di ſtato) when they are purpoſely carried on in a Cloud of Secrecy, that the Reaſons and Ends of the Actions may be hidden from the Eyes of Men, are therefore called the Myſtery of State: ſo in the ſeemingly mean and obſcure Birth and Life and tragical Sufferings of the Son of God there was this grand deſign, the new founding and making the Kingdom of God; and the carrying it on and accompliſhing it by ſeemingly weak and ignoble means with wonderful ſecrecy (concealedly and myſteriouſly) was the greateſt Myſtery of State that ever was. To this account of the Name Myſtery the Apoſtle (doubtleſs) hath reſpect, when he ſaith, Great is the Myſtery of Godlineſs, God was manifeſt in the Fleſh, juſtified in the Spirit: (d) τουτέςιν ἡ οἰκονομία ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, hereby is meant the œconomy that was for us.

(c) Biſhop Sanderſon Ser. on 1 Tim. 3. 16.

(d) S.Chryſoſt. in loc.

XI. The Name Myſtery implieth a great obligation upon profeſſing Chriſtians to great Sanctity of Life; for to this their Initiation into the Chriſtian Myſtery obligeth them at a ſuperlative rate, and they are monſtrouſly inconſiſtent with their Inſtitution, if they have not actually relinquiſh'd the wild kind of Life and begun a new life; if they live not a better life than others in the practice of eximious Piety and Humanity. They muſt look upon themſelves (correſpondently to the Pagan Myſticks) as a Populus alius, a People ſeparated and diſcriminated from the World, that muſt not live according to the ſinful guiſe and faſhion of it, nor immerſe themſelves in the Pollutions of it, but obſerve a form and way of living different from it, contrary to the Rules and Maxims, the Vices and Vanities of it, muſt be unlike the World of Ungodly Sinners, and in their Spirit and their Lives muſt tranſcend the vulgar and common level: (e) τὸ πανταχοῦ τῆς οἰκουμένης ἐκλάμψαν ἔθνος, the Nation illuſtrious and reſplendent every where in the World, is the Character of the Chriſtians and their Churches, (f) whoſe way of living is contrary to the Superſtitious, Intemperate and unjuſt, and which compar'd with the common Societies of Men are as Lights in the World. Such they were in the better times of Chriſtianity, and ſuch they are oblig'd to be in all times by their Inſtitution as the God-ſocietiſts, whoſe way of living muſt be the God-ſociety way of living (not the Mundane and Profane) that muſt not live as aliens from God and Piety. They are the conſecrated People, ſelect and appropriated to God (and therefore ſacred) ſet apart to be a People for his uſe and ſervice, and it is Sacriledge added to Perfidiouſneſs and Diſloyalty, for them to be nefarious Children of Diſobedience, to vulgarize and profane themſelves, to pollute an holy Prieſthood and that Soul and Body which is conſecrated unto God. They are Dei Secta, God's Sect of Religioniſts, the Intrinſicks of his Inſtitution, which is an Inſtitution of far higher Sanctity than any other, and therefore no ſmall meaſure of it can be anſwerable to their Religion and Obligation, but they muſt be eximiouſly holy, as the Pagan Myſticks pretended to be, who counted Sanctity their Nobilitation and Perfection, their Honour and their Glory, and the Profane and Polluted they ſhut out from their Communion. So amongſt the Philoſophers Sanctity was thought their Excellency (Vir Sanctus was one of their honourary Titles) and their

(c) Gr.Naz. or. 3. *p.*63.

(f) Orig. c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 128.

Philoſophy was an Inſtitution of (illegitimate) Sanctity. So amongſt the Jews and Phariſees their eximious Sanctity was their Glory, as it is alſo amongſt the Turks, who uſually reproach the Chriſtians and the Perſians as polluted. But in degenerate Chriſtendom Sanctity is ſunk in its Reputation, few in compariſon pretend to any Sanctity, much leſs aſpire after an eximious Sanctity; the generality are openly a foul and improbous, a leud and flagitious Generation, that pour their Hatred, Contempt and Contumelies upon Sanctity of Life. Inſomuch that the grand impediment that detaineth Men from it, is the diſhonourable uſage that attendeth it; it would ſpoil their Faſhion and leſſen their Figure in the Nations that are called Chriſtian; for to be truly Holy, is not the way to gain their Eſteem and Applauſe, but rather to be Vile in their Eyes.

XII. The Name Myſtery implieth, that Chriſtianity is of a mean outſide; for it would not be a Myſtery, if its Internal Greatneſs was not complicated with External Meanneſs; if magnalia Dei, the great things of God were not ignobilia Mundi, of mean appearance in the Eye of the World. In the holy Founder of it there was a Saint of God-kind of Myſtery; for in humilitate latuit majeſtas, his Majeſty divine was vailed by a mean outſide appearance, whence he was deſpiſed and rejected of Men. They could not believe, that one ſo meanly born and bred, ſo homely attended, that liv'd in mean Circumſtances, without any worldly Splendor, and deſtitute of all Humane Excellencies, was the Son of God and the Saviour of the World. They were offended in him, ſtumbled at theſe things, ſo as to contemn and diſguſt the Chriſtian kind of Chriſt. And this himſelf foreſaw, that it would be the great ſtumbling-block, and therefore when he had wrought many Miracles, to ſhew that he was the Meſſiah, he addeth, Matth. 11. 6. Bleſſed is he, whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me. He knew, that his mean appearance in the World would be a more prevalent Argument againſt him, than all his Miracles were for him, that one ſo abject and ignoble in worldly reſpects ſhould be the promis'd Meſſiah, this would ſeem a greater Prodigy than curing the Blind and the Lame and raiſing the Dead. Nothing ſeem'd ſo incredible to the Jews (and many of the Gentiles) as that the Meſſiah ſhould be externally a mean abject Perſon: but in Myſteries (g) ἕτερα ὁρῶμεν, ἕτερα πιστεύομεν, we ſee one thing and believe another, whence touching theſe things I and an Unbeliever are differently affected. For an Unbeliever diſcerneth no Form nor Comelineſs in him, in whom a Divine Believer diſcerneth the Glory of the only begotten Son of God. So the Treaſures of Nature are hid under Ground, the excellent things are not the outſide things, nor things of vulgar notice and appearance (but the vile vulgar things which have nothing within, are the overly things, that make a gaudy ſhew, whereby the World's admirers are impos'd upon;) ſo Chriſt's Religion is a Myſtery of the ſame nature with his Divine Perſon. (h) For the Philoſophy of Chriſt is of this nature; nothing is more mean in the outſide, nothing is more divine in the inſide. Chriſtianity bringeth us Honour and Riches, Treaſures and Pleaſures and fine Raiment, but all in a Myſtery, without any thing taking and glorious in the outſide. (i) οὐκ ἔστιν ἓν τὸ τυχὸν ὁ χριστιανισμός· τὸ γὰρ μυστήριον τοῦτο μέγα ἐστιν, Chriſtianiſm therefore is not a vulgar thing; for this is a great Myſtery, Joh. 4. 32. I have Meat to eat, that ye know not of.

Matth. 13. 57.

XIII. The Name Myſtery implieth, that the Chriſtian Religion is reaſonably myſterious, abſtruſe and obſcure to the Underſtanding. For it muſt be ſuch, ſo far as there is cauſe and reaſon for it; and there is great reaſon, that it ſhould be ſuch in a competent meaſure, whether we conſider Reaſons of natural or of legal neceſſity. For there is a natural neceſſity, that it ſhould be abſtruſe and obſcure to the Underſtandings of Men becauſe of their natural Imperfection and moral Indiſpoſition; and becauſe of the vaſtneſs, depth and difficulty of the things themſelves which it revealeth. In ſeveral Inſtances it ſo ſparingly revealeth them, that they ſtill remain abſtruſe, intricate and complicated with knotty difficulties. And ſo the knowledge of things in general is involv'd, lieth deep and remote, and it is not a ſlight ſuperficial glance, that will penetrate to the underſtanding them. If no part of common Learning (which is the knowledge of various things beyond vulgar notice) is attainable without aſſiduous ſtudy and exerciſe, it muſt be ſuppos'd, (k) τὸ μὴ σαφὲς τὸ σοφόν, that what is wiſe, is not manifeſt and obvious, nor attainable (ordinarily) but by ſerious ſtudy and meditation, by conſidering, weighing and carefully obſerving things, by ſearching and diving deep and going to the bottom of them. δυσθήρατος ἐστι σοφία, Wiſdom is hardly inveſtigated, and ſo (l) Clemens interpreteth that of the Prophet, Iſa. 45. 3. I will give unto thee the hidden Treaſures of Darkneſs; for the Treaſure of God, the never-failing Riches is Wiſdom hardly to be attained. So things excellent (by a legal neceſſity) ought to be hardly come by, they are the more valued, becauſe they are hardly come by, and to make them cheap, is to make them vile. (m) That which is got by labour is valued at a great rate, but lightly come, lightly go. Virtue therefore muſt be of difficult acquiſition (whereas Vice is eaſie) and the Treaſures of Wiſdom muſt be the hidden Riches of ſecret places; they that enjoy them, muſt ſeek them as Silver and ſearch for them as for hid Treaſures. They muſt be vailed with obſcurity, both to excite and reward Induſtry; for Induſtry would want its reward, if all things were alike plain to the Careleſs and the Induſtrious. And the Reward of Induſtry is that which exciteth Induſtry, which is alſo excited by the abſtruſeneſs of the matters of Wiſdom. For the generality of Men have an earneſt deſire, to underſtand Myſteries and Secrets, they are willing to ſweat for them, and have a great deal of pleaſure in finding them. And as Virgins ought to be vailed (whence they have the Name of עלמה) and their being vailed exciteth Men's deſire of ſeeing their Faces; ſo the reconditeneſs of the matters of Wiſdom exciteth their deſires of acquaintance with them.

> Καὶ πλέον ἱμείρουσι καλυπτομένοιο προσώπου. Nonnus.

Religion and the holy Records thereof ought to be ſo temper'd, that (as it is ſaid of Homer's Writings) read them over never ſo often ſomething always appeareth new. A competent obſcurity is requiſite in them, to keep holy things at a due diſtance

(g) S. Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. Hom. 7.

(h) Habet hoc utique Philoſophia Chriſti, nihil primo aſpectu contemptius, nihil in receſſu divinius. Maffeius Indic. l. 12 p. 497. Chriſti ſapientia ſtultitia eſt apud mundum. Herman. Hamelman. de Trad. Apoſt. p. 26.

(i) Macar. Hom. 27.

(k) Niceph. in Syneſ. p. 356.

(l) Strom. l. 5. p. m. 406.

(m) Τὸ πόνῳ κτηθὲν περισπούδαστον· ὃ δὲ ῥᾳδίως λαμβάνεται, καὶ ῥᾳδίως ἀποβάλλεται. Phot. cod. 222. col. 629. Gr. Naz. or. 34. p. 544.

diſtance from the Wicked, to keep the Faithful in due dependence upon God (ut difficultas intellectus gratiam Dei quæreret, Greg. M.) and to keep off Contempt and conciliate Veneration. For which reaſon the Pythagoreans (n) wrapp'd up their Wiſdom in Symbols. And the Popular Pagans conciliated Veneration to their fooliſh and filthy Myſteries by Secrecy and Silence, by making them opertanea ſacra, ἀπόῤῥητα σύμβολα, ἱερὰ ἄῤῥητα, τελετὰς μυστικὰς, κρύφια μυστήρια, tacita ſacra, arcane, hidden ſacra, under covert and not to be divulg'd. So a diſcreet reſervedneſs is found to conciliate reſpect amongſt Men, who are apt to ſlight and contemn what is of obvious notice. And Darkneſs is ſaid, to increaſe Devotion, whence the Heathen made their Temples dark, and ſhady Groves were the places, wherein they worſhipp'd their Gods. The Night alſo, the Fountains and the Groves were the Objects of their Religious Veneration becauſe of their ſhadineſs and ſolemnneſs (they worſhipp'd lucos & ſilentia, ſaith Pliny) a Cave alſo ſhaded with Leaves (o) was in great veneration amongſt them. A Shadineſs and Abſtruſeneſs therefore is requiſite, to make Religion venerable, and conſequently there ought to be a competent obſcurity in the Chriſtian Religion and the holy Records thereof.

Which reaſonable Obſcurity is a great reaſon for Modeſty and Moderation. Not for ſottiſh Superſtition, or believing with an implicit Faith, or following the Herd, but for Modeſty and Self-ſuſpicion in ſearching into and treating of Divine Matters (not too boldly and raſhly rejecting every thing that is diſſonant from our private Reaſon) both becauſe they are Divine Matters, which require a becoming Modeſty (for we ſhould never be more modeſt than when we deal with the Buſineſs of the Gods, ſaith Ariſtotle) and becauſe theſe Divine Matters are incumbred with Obſcurity, and great is the imperfection of Humane Underſtanding. Chriſtians alſo that are of different Apprehenſions in matters of Religion, ought to exerciſe great Moderation, and not fall into Parties, Sects, Seditions, Bloody Wars, Perſecutions, malign cenſuring and reviling one another; for ſuch is the weakneſs and corruption of Mankind, their diſproportion of Parts, their different Education, Temper and Inclination, and the matters of their Religion are (in ſeveral Inſtances) ſhaded with ſuch Obſcurity, that diverſity of Opinions is unavoidable, not only amongſt profeſſing, but ſincere Chriſtians, that are ſound in the Faith. Unbelievers alſo have great reaſon, to be moderate in their cenſures of the profeſſors of Chriſtianity, and have no reaſon to be ſcandaliz'd at the diverſities of Opinion amongſt them; for they are a natural conſequence of the obſcure Theories of their Religion, (p) there are the like diverſities of Opinion in all Religions, and amongſt the Lawyers and Naturaliſts, Phyſicians and Philoſophers, that are converſant about Nature's Myſteries, which are far from being ſo myſterious and profound as ſome Myſteries of the Chriſtian Religion. Diviſions in the Church that always were, and always were great Scandals, occaſion'd this Saying of old time, I would be a Chriſtian (ſed neſcio cui parti adhæream) but know not what Party to be of. But it muſt be thought the Language of Folly and Profaneneſs. As they that will not take Phyſick, till all Phyſicians are agreed, muſt die of their Diſeaſes; ſo they that will not be Religious, till all Religioniſts are agreed, muſt die in their Profaneneſs.

XIV. The Name Myſtery implieth, that the Chriſtian Religion is not ſo obſcure, but that it is a Knowledge, Science and Wiſdom, The excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt. For that it may be a Religious Myſtery (a Divine Myſtery revealed) it muſt be a matter arcane and abſtruſe, ſo as to be the knowledge thereof. Accordingly it is defined The knowledge of the Myſtery of Chriſt, of the Son of God, of the Truth, the knowledge of God, the Savour of the good knowledge of God made maniſeſt (by his Miſſionaries) in every place, the light of the knowledge of the Glory of God in the Face of Jeſus Chriſt; which is in plain Engliſh, The knowledge of God in Chriſt, as our Saviour defineth it, when he ſaith, This is Life Eternal, that they might know thee the only true God and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent. He is made unto us of God Wiſdom objectively; his Religion as it is the knowledge of him, is the Chriſtians Wiſdom and Philoſophy; they contemplate the Wiſdom of God in a Myſtery, which is the œconomy of Chriſt for our Salvation, and the marvellous Tranſactions of God about him, whence he is called The Wiſdom of God. The Chriſtian Religion therefore is a Wiſdom objective and ſubjective, inſtitutive and conſtitutive; and as the Science of Aſtronomy is the comprehenſion of what is to be known of the Stars: So the Religion of Chriſtianity conſiſteth in knowing Chriſt as we ought, which is Scientia Scientiarum, a Science of tranſcendent Excellency (Phil. 3. 8.) A knowledge that muſt be known, and which is infinitely worth the knowing. For the matters of this divine kind of Learning are not like the things of the World, that are meer ſhews and fallacious appearances, which although they look gay and goodly at a diſtance, yet when we come to the handling them, they are no better than a Feather and a Shadow: but the matters of Saving Chriſtianity having their Glory and Excellency on the inſide, by acquaintance with them we find them of infinite worth and precioſity, and the more we are acquainted with them, the more we prize and admire them. Hæc & nos riſimus aliquando. Time was when we thought them ſilly, frivolous and ridiculous, σκύβαλα, worthleſs and refuſe: but finding in them a Treaſure in compariſon whereof all worldly Riches are but riff raff ſtuff; an enraviſhing Pleaſure in compariſon whereof all Mundane Delights are dull and inſipid; a Glory that turneth all Earthly Glory into Darkneſs and Deformity; and a Wiſom in compariſon whereof all ſecular Learning is but a ſounding Braſs and a tinkling Cymbal, we have great reaſon (with the Apoſtle) to attribute a τὸ ὑπερέχον, tranſcendent excellence to the knowledge of the Son of God. This Attribute belongeth to the Chriſtian Learning. Which is,

(1.) A vaſt comprehenſion of Divine Knowledge, that conſtituteth (q) τοὺς φιλοσόφους τοῦ Θεοῦ, God's Philoſophers, (r) ſeeing therefore the Logos himſelf hath come to us from Heaven, it ſeemeth to me, we ſhould not go to Humane Diſcipline, buſying our ſelves to go to Athens, and the reſt of Greece or Ionia. The Maſter now inſtituteth all, and by the Word (or Logos) the Univerſe is now made Athens and Greece. (2.) The tranſcendent excellency of Wiſdom and Knowledge, which is the primary Good and the Fountain of Goods (as Ignorance and Folly is the Evil of Evils and the Fountain of Evils) the great Ornament and Accompliſhment

(n) Lil. Gyrald. de Pythag. Symbol. Clem. Str. l. 5. p. m. 405.

(o) Sen. Ep. 41.

(p) Clem. Str. l. 7. p. m. 541. Orig c. Celſ. l. 3. p. 118.

Joh. 17. 3. 1 Cor. 1. 24, 30. ch. 2. 7. 2 Cor. 2. 14. ch. 4. 6. Eph. 3. 4. ch. 4. 13. Col. 1. 10. Heb. 10. 26.

(q) Clem. Str. l. 6. p. 481.

(r) Διό μοι δοκεῖ, ἐπεὶ αὐτὸς ἧκεν εἰς ἡμᾶς οὐρανόθεν ὁ λόγος, ἡμᾶς ἐπ᾽ ἀνθρωπίνην ἰέναι μὴ χρῆναι διδασκαλίαν ἔτι, Ἀθήνας καὶ τὴν ἄλλην Ἑλλάδα, πρὸς δὲ καὶ Ἰωνίαν πολυπραγμονοῦντας. πάντα νῦν ὁ διδάσκαλος κατηχεῖ καὶ τὸ πᾶν ἤδη Ἀθῆναι καὶ Ἑλλὰς γέγονεν τῷ λόγῳ. Idem προτρεπτ. p. m. 51.

ment of Man, which maketh him amiable and uſeful, valuable and honourable (as Ignorance and Folly maketh him ſapleſs and uſeleſs and is his great blemiſh and Reproach) is the proper Riches of the Mind, her immortal and invaluable Treaſure and Pleaſure, her Beauty and Brightneſs, her Light and Guide, her good government and management of things, the cure for her Evils, her ſafety and rectitude in Judgment and Practice. (3.) All the Wiſdom which true Piety is, which is a vaſt comprehenſion of what is matter of Wiſdom. For to diſcern the true nature, worth and uſe of things, to eſtimate them aright, not to be deluded by ſhews and appearances, to be well adviſed and underſtand what we do, to chuſe a right end and ſuit the means thereto, to be intent upon our true Good, and to make our chief and only Intereſt our chief and only Buſineſs, to have a care of the main, to be provident and foreſeeing, wary and circumſpect, to be ſober minded and not carry'd away with extravagant Fancies, Appetites and Paſſions, to do our work and act our part well, to walk in the ſafe Paths, to prefer neceſſaries before unneceſſaries, to endure a little inconvenience to avoid a far greater, not to loſe an Hog for an half penny worth of Tarr, not to barter away a precious Commodity for a Trifle, not to doat upon fantaſtick nothings, nor to buy them at too dear a rate, not to ſell our All for nothing, our Salvation for an old Song, nor to run into the horrours of Eternity for a moments foolery and gullery, but to make the wiſe choice and the wiſe bargain: All this Wiſdom (and ſuch more) true Piety is. (4.) The tranſcendent kind of Knowledge. For to know the Son of God as we ought (duely Chriſtianizing) is the Saving or Saint of God-kind of Knowledge, the diſcriminative Excellency whereby the Divine Family is diſtinguiſh'd from the Unholy Atheous Family. It is with Knowledge as with the Waters, there are upper and nether Springs of it; for common Science is from beneath, and a graceleſs kind of thing: but (s) Fleſh and Blood revealeth not the knowledge of the Son of God, which is ſo of God, as not to be of Man (or of the Humane Kind and Family) as Grotius thus well expoundeth a Saying of our Saviour. (t) No Man can acknowledge the Heavenly Excellency that is in me, except the Father which hath ſent me draw him. Into this divine kind of knowledge Souls are renewed, the Children of Light have it by Divine Illumination; for to them (u) φῶς ὁ κύριος ϗ γνῶσις ἡ ἀληθὴς, our Lord is light and the true knowledge: which is of invaluable Excellency; for (w) he is happy (according to Empedocles) that poſſeſſeth the Riches of a Divine Mind. (5.) The knowledge of the tranſcendent kind of Goods and Excellencies: for ſuch are the Chriſtian and Divine, the Saving and Saint of God-kind of Goods and Excellencies (the Goods of the Kingdom) which are of ineffable Pulchritude and Precioſity, and the whole of Man. For Man hath no other great concern, but to be a Saint of God, and without being ſuch he is viler than the vileſt Leper and the vileſt Animal notwithſtanding all his common and external Goods and Excellencies. All things on this ſide the Goods of Saving Chriſtianity are ſorry vulgar kind of things, and are good to be deſpiſed; as one ask'd another, What Nobility was good for? the other anſwer'd, It is good to be deſpiſed, as Wealth is. What are Riches to Righteouſneſs? Wealth to the Pearl of price? the Sciences to Sanctity? and what is all that the World counteth great and excellent, Wit, Learning, Parts, Power, Honours, Riches, Philoſophy and Humane Virtue in compariſon of the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt? The Gleanings of the Grapes of this Ephraim are better than the Vintage of Abiezer. Chriſtus & Cœlum non patitur hyperbolen. Who doth not value a little Diamond above a Mountain of common Stone and Rubbiſh? ſo ſaith Ariſtotle, (x) to know a little of the things divine and excellent, if we can reach it, is more delicious, than to know all things that we converſe with. (6.) The knowledge of the tranſcendent things in worth, weight and importance; for ſuch are the matters of the Kingdom of God and of the Soul, of ſpiritual and eternal living and dying.

Fundamenta quibus nixatur vita ſaluſque.

That is not Wiſdom, which provideth not for Eternity, nor is Eternity to be provided for otherwiſe than by the Chriſtian Wiſdom. By other knowledge Men may gain a Name in the World, but it muſt be by the knowledge of the Son of God that their Names are written in Heaven: which if they neglect, they are no better proficients in Wiſdom than Antonius was, of whom Cicero ſaith, that he gave his Maſter a great reward, to teach him, to be never the wiſer. (7.) The knowledge that is infinitely profitable and beneficial (and therefore infinitely needful) as being illuminative and ſanative to the Soul, an Antidote againſt all her Vices, a Cure for all her deadly Diſeaſes, a Medicine for all her Maladies, that affordeth her eaſe and relief in all her Fears and Sorrows, Peace and Contentment in all Adverſities and Afflictions, giveth her a joyous foretaſt of her Eternal Joys, transformeth and changeth the Soul into the likeneſs of the things known, informeth and regulateth her, to behave her ſelf aright in all Conditions and Relations, maketh her wiſe to Salvation, directeth her to ſteer her courſe aright to the Haven where ſhe would be; and by this knowledge ſhe overcometh the World, eſcapeth the Inveiglements of it, and the Snares of Sin and Death everlaſting. There are not ſuch noble Theories of Knowledge any where to be found as in the Chriſtian Religion; and (which is their Excellency) they are not Scholaſtick Theories of barren Speculation, but (y) μάθημα θεῖον ϗ βιωφελὲς τῆς ἀληθείας ἡ γνῶσις, the knowledge of the Truth is a Divine Diſcipline profitable to Life. It bringeth the Remiſſion of all Sins, the Favour of God, the Honour and Happineſs of his Saints, all the Benefits, Promiſes, Priviledges and Immunities of his Covenant and Kingdom, and is not only a Tree of Knowledge, but the Tree of Life. For we have all things that pertain unto Life and Godlineſs, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to Glory and Virtue. 2 Pet. 1. 3. This only I found the true and profitable Philoſophy, ſaith J. Martyr. (8.) The Godly People's kind of myſterious knowledge, which is ſavoury and ſubſtantial, certain and ſatisfactory. (z) Μυστικὸν ἐστὶν, οὐχ ὡς ἔτυχεν, It is myſterious, not what is vulgar and obvious. For Chriſt is the things of regeneracy in himſelf and to us, Chriſtianity is the Science and Diſcipline of the new Man, the new Life and the new ſtate of Life, which are Secrets, of which Nature diſcerneth nothing, and to the meer natural Man they are hugely unimaginable and unaccountable. But becauſe the knowledge of Chriſt is the Godly Peoples kind of myſterious knowledge (not a Scholaſtick or Philoſophick kind of Myſtery, but that which Godlineſs is, and which is Godlineſs) therefore all that are capable of Divine

(s) V. Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 8. c. 23.

(t) Not. in Joh. 6.44.

(u) Clem. Str. l. 6. initio.

(w) Ibid. l. 5. in fin.

(x) De par. Anim. l. 1. c. 5.

(y) S. Cyr. c. Jul. l. 5. p. 182.

(z) Epict. Diſſ. l. 3. c. 21.

Illumination and of underſtanding the matters of Sanctity and Salvation, are capable of underſtanding the Chriſtian Myſtery, the Contemplation whereof is ineffably pleaſant and delightful (a kind of beatific Viſion) and the more enraviſhingly delightful, becauſe it is a Myſtery. For (a) theſaurum inveniſſe gratuitum eſt. He that findeth hidden Treaſure, is affected with an extraordinary Joy, (b) as Pythagoras and Archimedes were tranſported and enraviſh'd by their Mathematical Inventions, which yet were meerly entertainment for the Theoretic Mind, whereas the Chriſtian Learning is converſant about the Objects of Divine Affection, whence the knowledge of them is ſavoury and ſubſtantial (an ἡδυπάθεια) which filleth the Soul with ineffable Complacence and Delight. And having this oracular Learning, which is (not a glimmering imperfect Notice, not a fallible Conjecture, nor ſlippery Ratiocination, but) a Divine Revelation conjunct with Life and Experience, therein ſhe acquieſceth and ſetteth up her reſt. (9.) All the tranſcendent Excellency of being a Chriſtian. For Chriſtians as ſuch have no other Learning, pretend to no other but the knowledge of Chriſt. And as Piety is the Buſineſs of knowing God as we ought: So Chriſtian Piety (the Eſſence of it and the Summary of it) is the learning and knowing Chriſt as we ought, ſo to learn Chriſt, as to be really Chriſtianiz'd (to be of the Chriſtian Birth, of the Chriſtian Life, of the Chriſtian State, of the Chriſtian Family) to unlearn all Ungodlineſs, to be his Holy new Creatures, to Conſort and Symbolize with him (as his genuine Followers) and to be aſſimilated to him in Diſpoſition and Practice. As the learning Philoſophy and Aſtronomy is the ſame thing, as to be a Philoſopher and an Aſtronomer: So the learning and knowing Chriſt as we ought, is the ſame thing as to be a Chriſtian, which is matter of immenſe and boundleſs Excellency and Felicity. (c) Ἡμῖν καὶ μέγα πρᾶγμα καὶ ὄνομα, to us it is a great thing and a great Name, to be and be called Chriſtians.

XV. The Name Myſtery therefore implieth, that the Chriſtian Religion is duly intelligible, and is not unintelligible inconſiſtently with the Science of Chriſtianity and Sanctity. As a Religious Myſtery it muſt be an arcane matter of knowledge, and therefore knowable and intelligible (apt and agreeable to be underſtood;) and it muſt be ſuch an arcane matter of Knowledge, that muſt be taught, learn'd and believ'd, and therefore muſt be intelligible. A principal Benefit that true Religion affordeth, is Knowledge and good Underſtanding; all Irreligion is want of Underſtanding; to be Religious, is Wiſdom and Underſtanding; the buſineſs of Religion is a matter of good Underſtanding, and the honourary Names of it are Wiſdom, Knowledge and Underſtanding. This being the great Excellency and recommendation of Religion no greater Injury can be done to the Chriſtian Religion, than to make it in whole or in part ſuch an Unintelligible and Super-intelligible as the Platoniſts firſt Principle, or as the Myſticks Inſtitution of the Church of Rome, or as the Talk of thoſe who decry Reaſon as a low thing, and ſpeak ſo ſublimely (ſuch unintelligible Non-ſenſe) that no Man can frame a Notion or Conception of their Talk, nor do themſelves underſtand what they ſay. 1 Tim. 1. 17. If Chriſtianity was in whole or in part ſuch a Nonſenſical or Myſtic-platonical Super-intelligible, it would be unintelligible in a diſgraceful Senſe, which loathſome Unintelligibleneſs can be no attribute of ſo Divine a Religion. It is certain therefore, that Chriſtianity in the whole of it is of an intelligible Nature, an intelligible Theory of rational Apprehenſion and Conception. But it is one thing, to ſay, that the whole of it is of an intelligible Nature, and another thing to ſay, that the whole of it is intelligible by us in this imperfect State. In every Science and in thoſe mean things Time and Motion, a Spike of Graſs, a Bubble of Water, there is ἀκατάληπτόν τι, ſomething that our Underſtandings cannot reach, and which perplexeth and baffleth them. To pretend therefore to an adequate comprehenſive Knowledge of all things in the Chriſtian Religion, would be a deliration, a vanity like that of R. Samuel, who is noted for this arrogant Saying (d) Notæ mihi ſunt viæ cæli, ſicut ſemitæ Nabardeæ. But notwithſtanding this acknowledg'd Unintelligibleneſs in the Chriſtian Religion it muſt be ſaid, that the Scholaſtic Theology is culpably deſtructive to the due Intelligibleneſs thereof, and maketh it unintelligible inconſiſtently with the Science of Chriſtianity and Sanctity. As will appear from ſome inſtances that ſhall here be produc'd, and as will further appear from many Objections, that will be hereafter produc'd againſt this Theology. For,

(1.) This Theology is deſtructive of the due Intelligibleneſs of the Chriſtian Religion by extravagant Harangues touching the Unintelligibleneſs of its Articles and Myſteries. In the elder times of the Church (as is before diſcours'd) there was a Scholaſtic Theology, which tranſcrib'd the Platoniſts Myſtic-metaphyſical Conceits touching their Super-intelligible Henotety, that took a pride and pleaſure in teaching, not the knowledge of God, but Ignorance and Neſcience of God, and made Myſtic-metaphyſical Riddles of God. Agreeably whereto the Myſtery of the Trinity is called by ancient Writers (e) ἄῤῥητος, ἀκατάληπτος, ἀκατανόητος, ἀπερίληπτος, ὑπερούσιος, ὑπέρθεος, ὑπὲρ νοῦν ϗ ὑπὲρ λόγον, ὑπὲρ ἀνθρωπίνους λογισμοὺς ϗ ὑπὲρ ἔρευνσιν, Unſayable, Unconceivable, Unintelligible, Incomprehenſible, Super-ſubſtance, Super-God, Supermind, Super-reaſon, above humane Ratiocination and Scrutiny. Athanaſius ſaith (f) theſe things that are delivered by Faith, are not to be perceiv'd by humane Wiſdom, but by the hearing of Faith. For what Speech can worthily interpret thoſe things that are above created Nature, or what Hearing can at all underſtand ἃ μὴ ἔξεστιν ἀνθρώποις μήτε ἀκούειν μήτε λαλεῖν, thoſe things which Men may neither hear nor ſpeak? Such things S. Paul heard in his Rapture into the Third Heaven, and if the Chriſtian Trinity had been one of theſe grand Secrets, he muſt have ſaid of it, as ſome do (g) credamus & taceamus, teneamus & non inquiramus, let us believe it and keep ſilence, hold it, not inquire into it. It muſt be an Acroamatical Deity, to whom Secrecy and Silence belongeth, and a Myſtery (that like the Muhammedan Religion) refuſeth inquiry, if it is the Scholaſtic Trinity. (h) Τὰ γὰρ ὑπὲρ νοῦν ϗ σύνεσιν τὴν ἐν ἡμῖν, for thoſe things that are above Mind and our Underſtanding, are to be venerated by Faith only and admit not any curioſity. I am initiated and have believed, but why do I not learn the Nature of him whom I Worſhip? Ἄπαγε τοῖς ὑπὲρ νοῦν ϗ λόγον τὴν ἄκαιρον ἐπιφέρων ζήτησιν, away with unmannerly inquiry touching things above Mind and Reaſon. Such were the thoughts of elder times

---

(a) S. Hilar.

(b) Plutarch. c. Epicur. p. 1094.

(c) Gr. Naz.

(d) Cosri p. 319.

(e) Animadverſ. upon Dr. Sherlock p. 237.

(f) Τὰ πίστει παραδοθέντα ταῦτα, οὐκ ἐν ἀνθρωπίνῃ σοφίᾳ, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀκοῇ πίστεως διανοεῖσθαι πρέπει. T. 1. Ep. ad Serap. p. 357, 358. Com.

(g) Viv. in S. Aug. de C. D. l. 11. c. 24.

(h) S. Cyr. Paſch. Hom. 8. p. 103. & Hom. 12. p. 169.

